

22

237

ICELANDIC-ENGLISH DICTIONARY

London

HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE

7 PATERNOSTER ROW

262331

AN

ICELANDIC-ENGLISH DICTIONARY

BASED ON THE MS. COLLECTIONS OF

THE LATE RICHARD CLEASBY

ENLARGED AND COMPLETED

BY

GUDBRAND VIGFUSSON, M.A.

WITH AN INTRODUCTION AND LIFE OF RICHARD CLEASBY

BY GEORGE WEBBE DASENT, D.C.L.

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

M.DCCC.LXXIV.

PD
2379
C5
1874

5615
29/9/00

P R E F A C E.

THIS work is a Dictionary of the Old Icelandic Language, or (as it may be called) the Classical Language of the Scandinavian race.

The history of the preservation of this language in its ancient form is remarkable.

The Icelandic language, in old writers also called the Norse or the Danish (Noræna or Dönsk tunga), was spoken by the four great branches of the Scandinavian race who peopled the countries abutting on the Baltic, the Norsemen or Northmen, Swedes, Danes, and Goths (Norðmenn, Svíar, Danir, and Gautar), as well as by the inhabitants of those parts of Northern Russia which were then known by the name of Gardar*.

At the beginning of the 9th century the growing population of these countries, together with political changes and the naturally enterprising character of the people, caused a great outward movement of the race. Under the leading of their chieftains they set forth to seek for homes in other lands; and thus the 9th century came to be known by the name of the Age of the Vikings (Vikinga-Öld). The stream of emigration increased in volume, as tidings of the successes of the first adventurers reached the northern shores. The Swedes continued to press eastward into the countries beyond the Baltic, while the Danes and Norsemen steered boldly to the south and west, and chiefly to the shores of the British Isles.

Two main currents of this emigration by sea may be traced. First, the Danish, which directed its course to the north-east of England, and at length occupied that district so completely that it received the name of the Dena-lagu. The Saxon Chronicle is the chief authority for this part of the subject†; the only old Icelandic works which touch on it being the Egils Saga, which says that in the reign of Athelstan almost every family of note in Northern England was Danish by the father's or the mother's side; and the Ragnars Saga, which professes to give an historical account of the great Danish invasion, but is almost as mythical as the Iliad.

The second migration was Norse. These settlers gradually peopled the coasts of Ireland, the Isle of Man, the Orkneys and Shetland, and the northern counties of Scotland, Ross, Moray, and especially Caithness. In the year 852 A.D. the Norse sea-king Olave the White reached Ireland with a large fleet, and founded a Norse principality at Dublin: the foremost man among the Norsemen in Scotland was Earl Sigurd, uncle of Göngu-Hrolf. It is probable that to this same emigration must be referred the conquest and occupation of Normandy.

* See the word Gardar in the Dictionary.

† The Saxon Chronicle under the year 787 states that in that year Danish ships first came to England. The Annales Cambriae record the same fact with regard to Ireland under the year 795: so also the Irish Annals, see Dr. Todd's Introduction to 'The War of the Gaedhill with the Gaill,' p. xxxii (Rolls' Ed.)

With this stream of Norsemen the colonisation of Iceland also is closely connected. That island had already been discovered by a Viking named Naddodd, who called it Snowland (Snæland); it was next seen by Gardar, a Swede, after whom it was named Gardarsholm; and lastly, the Viking Flóki gave it the name of Iceland, from seeing the Isafjörd covered with polar ice. But the first settlers were Ingolf, son of Örn, and his foster-brother Leif, who set sail about A.D. 870, and reached Iceland; they soon however passed on to Ireland, whence after a few years they returned to Iceland, taking with them some Irish slaves. The year 874 is fixed by the chroniclers as the date of this final settlement. Leif was soon after murdered by his unwilling Irish colonists; Ingolf remained alone and is regarded as the first settler in the island. About the same time Harold Fair-hair had seized the throne of Norway, and, by the establishment of despotic power, had become unbearable to the high-spirited and independent chiefs; and therefore the newly-discovered island, bleak and desolate as it was, offered a welcome home to men who had hitherto lived in the possession of equal and undisputed rights. Again, the Norsemen in the British Isles became unsettled after the death of King Thorstein, Olave the White's son (the Oistin Mac Amlabh of the Irish Annals), in the year 874 A.D.; and they seem from that time to have begun to migrate to Iceland. Conspicuous among these emigrants was Queen Auðr Djúpauðga, King Olave's widow, who set forth with almost all her kinsfolk and followers. It is probable that the number of Norsemen who sailed from Ireland to Iceland was about equal to that of those who had gone thither from Norway. They carried with them their families and such cultivation as they possessed. They spoke that form of the Scandinavian tongue which prevailed on the western coast of Norway; and as time went on, while new dialects formed themselves throughout Scandinavia, in Iceland the old tongue rose to the dignity of a literary language, and thereby retained its original form. It has thus been preserved to our days*.

The first settlers formed an independent aristocracy, or republic, which continued for nearly four hundred years. Up to the end of the 10th century they held the heathen faith and practised the rites of heathen worship: Christianity was accepted as the faith of the island in the year 1000 A.D. Two centuries and a half after this change of faith (A.D. 1262) the Icelanders made willing submission to the king of Norway, that is, as has been said, about four hundred years after the first discovery of the island.

It was during this period that the Laws and Sagas of Iceland were written. Some idea of the extent and variety of this literature may be formed from the compendious account which is subjoined to this Preface. Tales of an historical and mythological character were committed to writing, being for the most part narratives of the feats of heroes abroad and at home, and belonging to the times before the year 1030 A.D., which may fairly be called the patriarchal age of Icelandic history; and in these tales, with poems, laws, and documents of various kinds, the old Scandinavian tongue, as spoken and written by the Icelanders in the period ranging from 900 to 1262 A.D., has been handed down to us in a form which may justly be called classical. In Sweden and Norway the old Scandinavian tongue is preserved in writing only on the scanty Runic monuments. The earliest Danish and Swedish written laws are believed not to be earlier than the middle and end of the 13th century, by which time the common language in these lands had already undergone great changes, although the modern Danish and Swedish were not yet formed. In Norway, however, a considerable literature of the 13th century survives; and the old language lasted longer there than in the sister countries. This literature consists of laws, diplomas, homilies, and translations of French romances; and these works are quoted in this Dictionary together with the Icelandic. These documents belong to the period embraced by the reign of King Hakon, A.D. 1216–1263; but, though valuable, they do not make an original literature. Only in Iceland did a living literature spring up and flourish; there alone the language has been handed down to us with unbroken tradition and monuments, from the first settlement of the island to the present day.

* See the Landnáma, the Laxdæla Saga, and the Irish Annals; and, for details, Mr. Dasent's Paper in the Oxford Essays for 1858, pp. 176 sqq., and his Introduction to 'The Story of Burnt Njal,' Edinburgh 1861.

It is believed that the present Dictionary will furnish not only a complete glossary of the words used in this old classical literature, but also a full account of the forms and inflexions of the verbs, with copious citations of passages in which each word occurs, with references carefully verified, and explanations given whenever they seem to be required; and, at the same time, though the Dictionary is mainly intended for the old authors, both in prose and poetry, it endeavours to embrace an account of the whole language, old and new.

A few words must be added to explain the origin and history of the work.

Many years ago, RICHARD CLEASBY projected a General Dictionary of the Old Scandinavian Language; and in 1840 he left England to settle in Copenhagen, the chief seat and centre of Scandinavian learning and the home of the best collection of Icelandic MSS., for the purpose of preparing himself for his work and of obtaining the assistance of Icelandic students in collecting materials; among these Mr. Konrad Gislason's name ought especially to be mentioned. Mr. Cleasby was a man of independent means, an excellent scholar, held in high esteem by foreign scholars, devoted to his work, and shunning no labour to make it perfect. He reserved for himself the old prose literature; while Dr. Egilsson was engaged on the poetical vocabulary, towards the expenses of which Mr. Cleasby promised to contribute, so that he may be said to have been the chief promoter of that work also. The MS. of the Poetical Dictionary was ready for publication in the year 1846. In the following year Mr. Cleasby caused five words—bragð, bíla, at (conjunction), af (preposition), and ok (conjunction)—to be set up in type as specimens of the projected Prose Dictionary. These he sent to several foreign friends, and among others to Jacob Grimm, who returned a most kind and friendly answer, warmly approving of the plan as indicated in the specimens, and adding many good wishes that Mr. Cleasby might have health and life to complete the work. Unhappily these wishes were not to be realised. In the autumn of the same year he was taken ill, but was in a fair way to recovery, when, by resuming work too soon, he suffered a relapse. His illness took the form of typhus fever, and he died insensible, without being able to make any arrangements respecting his papers and collections.

Mr. Cleasby's heirs, anxious that his labours should not be thrown away, paid a considerable sum of money to certain persons in Copenhagen, for the purpose of completing the book. But in 1854 came a demand for more money; and as it seemed doubtful whether the work was likely to be finished in any reasonable time, and on any reasonable terms, it was determined that the whole of the MSS. should be sent to England. It seems, however, that none of Mr. Cleasby's original slips were included in the papers sent. These papers consist of rough transcripts, made after Mr. Cleasby's death by various students in Copenhagen, whereas his original papers have not to this day come over to England.

It is clear, from an examination of these transcripts, that scarcely any part of the Dictionary, with the exception of the words sent to Grimm, had been completed during Mr. Cleasby's lifetime or by him. The letters D, F, J, K, N, O, P, S, U, V, and H (partially), were worked out after his death by the Copenhagen editors, but in such a manner that it would have been much better to have had Mr. Cleasby's papers in their original form. In his collections he appears to have been accustomed to write out in full the references taken from MSS., while he made but a brief note by page or otherwise of words drawn from printed books. This he probably did, both to save labour and also because he may have looked forward to being able to complete his book in England, where the printed editions, but not the MSS., would have been within his reach. The editors have simply copied out these references, adding and explaining little or nothing.

The MSS. in this state were placed at the disposal of the well-known Icelandic scholar, Mr. G. Webbe Dasent, and in the year 1855 he proposed to the Delegates of the Clarendon Press at Oxford to undertake the publication of the Dictionary under the belief that the collections left by Mr. Cleasby would not require much revision to fit them for publication. A specimen was set up in type, and Mr. Dasent himself undertook to see the book through the Press.

The matter, however, remained in abeyance till the year 1864, when Mr. Dasent again brought it before the Delegates. They, having taken into consideration the great value of a complete and accurate Dictionary of the old classical Scandinavian language, and the great interest this language has for students of Old English, were persuaded to renew their engagement with Mr. Dasent and to undertake the publication of the work. Mr. Dasent consented, as before, to revise the proof-sheets, to correct the English explanations and translations, and to add parallel words and usages from the Old English and Scottish dialects. He also stated to the Delegates that the papers were left in an imperfect state, and asked them to grant a sum of money, for the purpose of securing the services of an Icelandic scholar in completing the work. This was also agreed to; and Mr. Dasent, in the course of the same year, secured the services of Mr. Gudbrand Vigfusson, a born Icelander, already well known for his learning, and for his labours in the field of his native literature.

Mr. Vigfusson's report of the papers handed over by Mr. Cleasby's heirs shews that they contained copious materials for a Dictionary, but required much labour and research to work them into a form fit for publication. Mr. Cleasby's were the first large and comprehensive collections ever made, and are particularly valuable in that they were all taken from the documents themselves. The words of varied construction, such as the chief Verbs and Prepositions, are very rich, and taken from the best writers. But the words relating to Antiquities are left in a meagre condition; and there are many omissions of a kind which shew that Mr. Cleasby kept much of the matter in his head, and intended carefully to revise the whole. He intended no doubt to have worked out every word with the same conscientious accuracy which is shewn in the completed articles,—a task which would have occupied years of labour; and had life been granted him, it is certain he would have fulfilled this self-imposed task well and thoroughly. These circumstances have rendered the business of completing the book very arduous, and must account in a great measure for the delay which has occurred in the publication of even a part of the work.

Unfortunately also, Mr. Dasent's incessant and various occupations have prevented him from carrying his promised supervision beyond the first two sheets. The task of revising the English part of the work has fallen into hands far less competent, not only in respect to knowledge of the Scandinavian language and literature, but also in respect to acquaintance with those archaic and provincial dialects of the British Isles, which have special affinities to the Scandinavian tongue.

The Delegates however have reason to hope that a fuller account of Mr. Cleasby's life and labours, as well as a general introduction to the whole work, will be written by Mr. Dasent and prefixed to the Dictionary when it is completed.

Mr. Vigfusson takes this opportunity of acknowledging the help and advice he has received from the officials at the British Museum and the Bodleian Library, and particularly to express his many obligations to the Rev. H. O. Coxe, librarian of the Bodleian. He also desires to render his personal thanks to the following Icelandic scholars,—Mr. Dasent, Dr. John Carlyle, Prof. Konrad Maurer of Munich, Prof. C. R. Unger of Christiania, and last, not least, to his friend and countryman Mr. Jón Sigurdsson of Copenhagen.

H. G. L.

OXFORD, June 10, 1869.

The sources for the Icelandic part of this work are the following.

1. Mr. Cleasby's collections, which have in words, phrases, and references supplied about one-half of the materials for the present work.
2. The Lexicon Poëticum, by Dr. Sveinbjörn Egilsson, born 1791, died 1852, a most excellent work, which has served as a chief guide in references from the old poetical language.
3. Fritzner's Dictionary, by Johan Fritzner, a Norse clergyman, begun shortly after the year 1850, and completed in 1867. It is a very rich and good collection, entirely independent of Mr. Cleasby, and has afforded much valuable assistance throughout.
4. Björn Halldórsson's Dictionary, Icelandic and Latin. The author, an excellent Icelandic clergyman, was born about 1715, and died 1794, and his work was published in 1814 by Rask, who also translated the original renderings into Danish: it is well known from the fact that Grimm in his Grammar has taken from it almost all his collection of the vocabulary of the Icelandic language.
5. Alt-Nordisches Glossar, by Theodor Möbius, 1866, a limited but independent collection, which has afforded many happy references.
6. The Dictionary published in Copenhagen in 1860 (Old-Nordisk Ordbog). This book has evidently been compiled from Cleasby's papers in Copenhagen: it omits all references. It has been of some use, as it has here and there shewn where words have been omitted in the transcripts now at Oxford.
7. Earlier Glossaries: α. Specimen Lexici Islandici, by Magnús Ólafsson, an Icelandic clergyman, died 1636, published under the name Specimen Lexici Runic in 1650 by the Danish scholar Ole Worm, who also wrote it in the Runic character. This is the first Icelandic Glossary alphabetically arranged, and contains from 1200 to 1500 words with references. Hence the word 'Runick,' as applied to Icelandic, in Hicckes and Johnson. β. Lexicon Islandicum, by Gudmundus Andreae, an Icelander, died 1654, published by Resen in 1683; it derives all words from Hebrew: not very interesting and without references. γ. Monosyllaba Islandica, by Rugman, an Icelander, 1676; it contains about 1400 such words. δ. Index Linguae Veteris Scytho-Scandicae sive Gothicae, by Olaf Verelius, a Swedish scholar, died 1682, published by Rudbeck in 1691; a fairly done work, containing about 12,000 words with references from MSS. ε. Lexicon Islandicum, a large collection made by Jón Ólafsson, born 1705, died 1779; it has not been published but is preserved in MS. in Copenhagen and has therefore not been within reach, but illustrations from it are now and then given from memory. ζ. Skýringar, by Pál Vídalín, died 1727; a commentary on obsolete law terms, published at Reykjavík in 1854.
8. Indexes along with Editions, etc., e.g. the 12th volume of Fornmanna Sögur: Lexicon Mythologicum, by Finn Magnusen, affixed to the large edition of Sæmundar Edda: Indexes to Njála, Grágás, Annálar, etc.: Indexes along with Chrestomathies, e.g. Dieterich, a German scholar; as also Dieterich's Runic Glossary (Runen-schatz), 1844: Physical Index in the Itinerary or Travels of Eggert Ólafsson, Copenhagen 1772: Index on Medical Terms in Félags-rit, 1789, 1790: Botanical Index in Hjaltalin's Icelandic Botany, 1830: Indexes of Proper Names in Landnáma, 1843; in Fornmanna Sögur, vol. xii, and Flateyjar-bók, vol. iii; in Munch's Beskrivelse over Norge (Geography of Norway), 1849.
9. Mr. Vigfusson's own collections and such additions and illustrations as he has been enabled to make through his knowledge of his own mother-tongue.

The sources for the etymological part are chiefly the following.

Jacob Grimm, Deutsche Grammatik, a work which embraces all Teutonic languages.

For Gothic, the Glossary to Ulfilas, by Gabelenz and Loebe, 1843.

For Anglo-Saxon, Dr. Bosworth's Anglo-Saxon Dictionary; as also Grein's Poetical Glossary (Sprach-schatz), 1861 and 1864.

For Early English, the Ormulum, an old gospel paraphrase by Orm or Ormin (a Scandinavian name), published by Dr. White in 1852; it affords many illustrations of Scandinavian words, but it is chiefly curious for philological purposes because of the careful distinction it makes between short and long vowels.

For Northern English and Scottish, Jamieson's Dictionary.

For Old Saxon, Schmeller's Glossary to Heliand, an Old Saxon gospel harmony, 1840.

For Old and Middle High German, Graff's Sprach-schatz, and Mittelhoch-Deutsches Wörterbuch, 1854 sqq.

CLASSIFICATION OF WORKS AND AUTHORS

CITED IN THIS DICTIONARY.

N. B.—The authors of most of the Icelandic Sagas are unknown; the works are therefore cited, not the authors, even where they are known.

- A. POETRY.—Kviða generally denotes a narrative poem; mál a poem in dialogue or didactic; ljóð, söngur a lay, song; tal a genealogical, drápa a laudatory heroic poem; ríma a rhyme or rhapsody.
- I. MYTHICAL POEMS:—Völu-spá, Háva-mál (mythical-didactic), Grímnis-mál, Vafþrúðnis-mál, Skírnis-mál, Alvis-mál, Loka-senna, Harbarðs-ljóð, Vegtams-kviða, Þryms-kviða, Hýmis-kviða, Hyndlu-ljóð, Forspjalls-ljóð (mod.) 2. Poems in the form of a 'drápa,' but upon mythical subjects:—Haustlóng, Hús-drápa, Þórs-drápa, Ragnars-kviða.
- II. HEROICAL:—Fáfnis-mál, Sigdrífur-mál, Hamðis-mál, Sigurðar-kviða (in three poems), Guðrúnar-kviða (in three poems), Brynhildar-kviða, Atla-kviða, Atla-mál, Völundar-kviða, Rígs-mál, Helga-kviða Hjörvarðs-sonar, Helga-kviða Hundings-bana (in two poems), Helreið Brynhildar, Oddrúnar-grátr, Guðrúnar-hefna, Grotta-söngur, Gró-galdr, Þjólsvinnis-mál, Ynglinga-tal, Háleygja-tal, Bjarka-mál, Getspeki Heiðreks, and other poems in Hervarar Saga, Darraðar-ljóð. Most of these poems (in I. II) are contained in the old collection commonly called Sæmundar Edda: the various editions differ in the distribution of the verses; in this Dictionary references are made to the edition of Möbius, Leipzig 1860; that of Sophus Bugge, Christiania 1867, has now superseded all former editions, and is cited in special instances.
- III. HISTORICAL:—Höfuð-lausr, Sona-torrek, Arinbjarnar-drápa (all published in the Egils Saga), Hákonar-mál (published in Hkr. i), Vell-ekla, Darraðar-ljóð, Rekstefja. 2. Poems later than the middle of the 12th century:—Kráku-mál (published in Fas. i), Hugsvinnis-mál (paraphrase of Cato's Disticha), Sólar-ljóð (published along with Sæmundar Edda), Háttatal (published along with the Edda), Jónsvíkinga-drápa, Íslendinga-drápa, Merlinus-spá (an Icelandic metrical paraphrase of Geoffrey of Monmouth), Málshátta-kvæði (collection of proverbs in a MS. Cod. Reg. of Edda), Konunga-tal (published in Flateyjar-bók ii. 520 sqq.), Placidus-drápa, Harm-sól, Leiðar-vísan, Líkna-braut (religious poems, edited by Dr. Egilsson, published 1833 and 1844), Geisli (published in Fb. i. beginning), Guðmundar-drápa (published in Bs. ii. 187 sqq.), Lilja or the Lily (published in H. E. ii. 398 sqq.), both poems of the 14th century. 3. Olafs-ríma (published in Fb. i. 8 sqq.), Skáld-Helga-rímur (published in Grönl. Hist. Mind. ii), Þrymlur, Völsungs-rímur (edited by Möbius), Skíða-ríma (a satirical poem of the 14th or 15th century), etc.
- IV. POETS CITED:—Bragi (9th century); Hornklofi, Þjóðólfr Hvinverski (9th or 10th century); Egill, Kormakr, Eyvindr Skálda-spillir (all of the 10th century); Hallfreðr (born 968, died 1008); Sighvatr, Arnórr (both of the 11th century); Einarr Skúlason (12th century), etc.
- B. LAWS.—The Icelanders and Norsemen first began to write their laws at the end of the 11th and the beginning of the 12th century; before that time all laws were oral.
- I. LAWS OF THE ICELANDIC COMMONWEALTH:—Grágás (vide that word), a collection of the laws of the Commonwealth, published in two volumes by the Arna-Magnaen Legate, Copenhagen 1829. Parts or sections of the law are, Kristinna-laga-páttur, Þingskapa-páttur, Vig-slóði, Bauga-tal, Tiundar-lög, Landbrigða-páttur, Arfa-páttur, Ómaga-bálkr, Festa-páttur, Lögrétta-páttur, Lögsgumanns-páttur, etc. These laws are chiefly contained in two private collections or MSS. of the 12th century, called Konungs-bók (marked Grág. Kb.) and Staðrhóls-bók (marked Grág. Sb.); the new edition (Copenhagen 1853) is a copy of the Konungs-bók; but the Arna-Magn. edition, which is cited in this Dictionary, is a compilation from both MSS., having however Staðrhóls-bók as its groundwork. The Kristin-réttr Þorláks ok Ketils (K. p. K.) is cited from a separate edition (Copenhagen 1775).
- II. LAWS OF NORWAY contained in a collection in three volumes, called Norges Gamle Love (published by Munch and Keyser, Christiania 1846, 1847). The 1st vol. is most frequently cited, and contains the laws of Norway previous to A. D. 1263; the 3rd vol. contains Réttar-bætr or Royal Writs, cited by the number. The Gulapings-lög or Lands-lög, = the Code of King Magnus (died 1281), is contained in the 2nd vol. of this collection, but is cited from a separate edition (Copenhagen 1817).
- III. ICELANDIC LAWS, given after the union with Norway:—Kristin-réttr Arna biskups (published at Copenhagen in 1777); Járn-síða (Copenhagen 1847), the Law of Iceland from A. D. 1272–1280; Jóns-bók (Hólum 1709) is the Icelandic Code of Laws of A. D. 1280 (still in use in Iceland).
- C. HISTORIES OR TALES OF A MYTHICAL CHARACTER.
- I. EDDA OR SNORRA EDDA:—In this Dictionary only the prose work of Snorri Sturluson (born 1178, died 1241) is cited under this name; the poems of the so-called Sæmundar Edda are all cited separately by their names (vide A.). The Edda consists of three parts, the Gylfa-ginning or Mythical Tales (pp. 1–44), Skáldskapar-mál or the Poetical Arts and Diction (pp. 45–110), Háttatal (marked Edda Ht.) = a poem on the metres, and lastly, Þulur or Rhymed Glossary of Synonymes (marked Edda Gl.) The edition cited is that of Dr. Egilsson, Reykjavík (1848) in one vol.; the Arna-Magn. (1848 sqq.) in two vols. (the 3rd is still in the press) is now and then referred to. The Edda is chiefly preserved in three vellum MSS., the Konungs-bók (Kb.), the Orms-bók (Ob.), and the Uppsala-bók (Ub.), which is published in the Arna-Magn. Ed. ii. 250–396. 2. The prose parts of the Sæmundar Edda (here marked Sæm.)
- II. MYTHICAL SAGAS OR HISTORIES:—Fornaldar Sögur, a collection published in three volumes by Rafn, Copenhagen 1829, 1830: the 1st vol. contains Hrólf's Saga Kraka (pp. 1–109), Völsunga Saga (pp. 115–234, again published by Bugge, Christiania 1865), Ragnars Saga (pp. 235–299 and 345–360), Sögu-brot or Skjöldunga Saga (a fragment, pp. 363–368), Hervarar Saga (pp. 411–533), Norna-Gests Saga (pp. 319–342): the 2nd vol. contains Hálfs Saga (pp. 25–60), Friðþjófs Saga (pp. 63–100 and 488–503), Örvar-Odds Saga (almost wholly fabulous): the 3rd vol., Gautreks Saga (pp. 1–53): the rest are mere fables, and belong to G below. Hemings-páttur, from the Flateyjar-bók, 3rd vol., partly cited from MSS.; this tale contains a myth parallel to that of William Tell. 2. Ynglinga Saga by Snorri Sturluson, containing lives of the mythical kings of Sweden from Odin down to the historical time, cited from Heimskringla, 1st vol.
- D. ÍSLENDINGA SÖGUR OR HISTORIES referring to the ICELANDIC COMMONWEALTH and the time following the union with Norway.
- I. SAGAS OR HISTORIES OF THE GENERAL HISTORY OF ICELAND:—Landnáma or Landnáma-bók, a History of the Discovery and Settlement of Iceland, originally written by Ari Fróði (born 1067, died 1148), but worked out into its present form by Sturla Þórðarson (born 1214, died 1284); this important work is cited from the Copenhagen Ed. of 1843, where the figures are separated with a (·); the first figure marks 'a part' (þáttir), the second a chapter. Landnáma (Hb.) denotes the text of the vellum MS. Hauks-bók. Landnáma Mantissa means an appendix affixed to the book in the printed editions. Íslendinga-bók by Ari Fróði, from the Ed. of 1843 (published along with Landnáma). Kristni Saga (Introduction of Christianity), cited from Biskupa Sögur, vide below. Sturlunga Saga or Íslendinga Saga hin mikla by Sturla Þórðarson, relates the history of Iceland, especially of the 13th century up to the union with Norway, cited from the Ed. of 1817-1820, in four volumes; the last volume however, containing the Arna biskups Saga, is quoted from the Biskupa Sögur below. The chief MS. of this work is in the British Museum, 11,127; the letter C after the figures denotes the vellum MS. Arna-Magn. 122, fasc. A.

- II. SAGAS OR LIVES OF MEN OR FAMILIES referring to the Icelandic 'Saga time,' i. e. the 10th century down to about A. D. 1030 or 1050, properly called Íslendinga Sögur.
1. The Larger Sagas:—Njála or Njáls Saga, published at Copenhagen in 1772; the Latin translation by Johnsonius, Copenhagen 1809 with Icelandic various readings, is cited now and then; cp. Burnt Njal by Mr. Dasent. Laxdæla Saga, Copenhagen 1826; the later part of Laxdæla also exists in a better form in a vellum MS. Arna-Magn. 309, but is not as yet published. Egils Saga or Egla, Copenhagen 1809. Eyrbyggja Saga or Eyrbyggja, Ed. 1787, and Leipzig 1864, where the pages of the old Ed. are marked in the margin.
 2. The Smaller Sagas:—Ljósveitninga Saga, Valla-Ljóts Saga, Svarfdæla Saga, Reykdæla Saga, Víga-Grúms Saga, all five cited from the octavo volume called Íslendinga Sögur, 2nd vol., Copenhagen 1830: Harðar Saga (pp. 1-118), Hænsa-Þóris Saga (pp. 121-186), Gunnlaugs Saga (pp. 189-276), Heiðarvíga Saga (pp. 320-392), all four cited from the collection called Íslendinga Sögur, 2nd vol., Copenhagen 1847: Gísla Saga Stúrssonar, Bjarnar Saga Hitdæla-kappa, Hrafnkels Saga, Droplaugar-Sona Saga, Vápnfirdinga Saga, Þorsteins Saga hvíta, Þorsteins-þáttir Stangar-höggs, all seven cited from the small editions, 1847, 1848; the chapters in Gísla Saga, when quoted, refer to the old edition, Hólum 1756: Kormaks Saga, edited separately, Copenhagen 1832: Vatnsdæla Saga (pp. 1-80), Flóamanna Saga (pp. 117-161), Hallfreðar Saga (pp. 83-115), all these three Sagas are published and cited from a collection called Forn-sögur, Leipzig 1860: Bandamanna Saga, Hávarðar Saga, Grettis Saga (an A after the figures denotes the vellum MS. Arna-Magn. 556 A), Ólkofra-þáttir, all these four Sagas are cited from the quarto volume Margfróðir Sögu-þættir, Hólum 1756 (of Grettis Saga a new edition appeared in 1853, and of Hávarðar Saga in 1860; of Bandamanna Saga an earlier and better text is preserved in a vellum MS. 2845 Royal Libr. Copenhagen, cited Band. (MS.)), but is not published): Þorfinns Saga Karls-efnis, cited from Grönlánda Historiske Mindesmærker i. 352-442, a part is also published in Antiquitates Americanae: Þorsteins Saga Síðu-Hallssonar, cited from Analecta, by Möbius, Leipzig 1860, pp. 169-186: Gull-Þóris Saga by Maurer, Leipzig 1857, cited by the pages of the MS. which are marked in the margin of the Ed.: Fóstbrœðra Saga, Ed. 1822, new Ed. 1852: Njarðvíkinga Saga or Gunnars-þáttir Þiðrandabana, published at the end of Laxdæla, pp. 363-384: Þorvalds Saga Víðförla, published in Biskupa Sögur i. 33-50. Many of these Sagas were undoubtedly written in the 12th century, although preserved in later MSS.; some, although old, have been worked out into their present shape by historians of the 13th century (e. g. Eyrbyggja, Laxdæla, and Njála); some few of them have only reached us in the more modern and artificial style of the 13th or 14th century.
- III. SAGAS OR LIVES OF THE ICELANDIC BISHOPS from A. D. 1056-1330, collected and edited under the title of Biskupa Sögur:—Vol. i, Copenhagen 1858, contains Kristni Saga, pp. 1-32, vide above; Hungr-vaka or Lives of the First Five Bishops of Skalholt, pp. 59-86; Þorláks Saga, pp. 89-124, 263-332; Jóns Saga, pp. 151-260; Páls Saga, pp. 127-148; Guðmundar Saga, pp. 407-618; Árna Saga, pp. 679-786 (bishop Arne died 1298); Laurentius Saga by Einar Hafidason, the last Icelandic historian of the olden time, born 1307, died 1393, pp. 789-914 (bishop Laurentius died 1330); Rafns Saga and Arons Saga are printed as an appendix, vol. i, pp. 639-676, 619-638. Vol. ii, pp. 1-230, contains another recension of Guðmundar Saga, written by Abbot Arngrim, who died 1361: the following pages (ii. 230 sqq.) are lives of the bishops of the Reformation period.
- IV. ANNALS:—Íslenzkir Annálar or Annals of Iceland, containing Konungs-annáll or Ann. Regii, an important vellum in Gamle Kongel. Saml., 2087, 4to, published in Langebek's Script. rerr. Dan. vol. iii; cp. also the Hauks-annáll, Hóla-annáll, Flateyjar-annáll, Lögmanns-annáll, etc. A collection of Annals embracing the time from the settlement of Iceland up to A. D. 1430 was published at Copenhagen in 1847, and is cited by years.
- V. SKRÖK-SÖGUR OR FABULOUS SAGAS:—Bárðar Saga, from Ed. Hólum 1756, new Ed. 1860; Víglundar Saga, Ed. 1756, new Ed. 1860; Þórðar Saga hreðu, Ed. 1756, new Ed. 1848, and 1860 (partly); Kjalnesinga Saga, cited from Íslendinga Sögur, Ed. 1847; Króka-Refs Saga, Ed. 1756; Finnboaga Saga, Ed. 1812, along with the old Ed. of Vatnsdæla: Þorsteins-þáttir uxafóts, Orms-þáttir Stórolfssonar, Þorleifs-þáttir Jarlaskálds, all three in Fb. i. and in Fms. iii: Brandkrossa-þáttir, Ed. 1847: Bolla-þáttir, published along with the Laxdæla: Stjörnu-Odda Draumr, Ed. 1780, new Ed. 1860.
- E. KONUNGA SÖGUR OR LIVES OF KINGS, PRINCES, AND EARLS OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES, etc.
- I. SAGAS OR LIVES OF THE KINGS OF NORWAY AND DENMARK, contained in a great collection published in twelve volumes, Copenhagen 1825-1837, under the title of Fornmanna Sögur:—Vols. i-v contain the lives of the kings of Norway from the end of the 9th century to A. D. 1030: vol. vi contains Magnús Saga Góða and Haraldar Saga Harðráða (died 1066); vol. vii goes down to A. D. 1176; the best text of both vols. vi and vii are contained in a great Icelandic MS. called Hulda (cited now and then): vol. viii contains the Sverris Saga by Karl Ábóti (Abbot Carle), who died 1213; the king Sverrir died 1202; vol. ix, pp. 229-535, and vol. x, pp. 1-154, contain the Hákonar Saga by Sturla Þórðarson, king Hacon died 1263; vol. xi contains the lives of the kings of Denmark, viz. Jónsvíkinga Saga (pp. 1-162, a shorter recension of the Saga is preserved in an Icelandic MS. at Stockholm, and cited from the Ed. 1824); Knytinga Saga (pp. 179-402)=lives of the Danish kings from king Canute down to the end of the 12th century: in the 10th vol. there are besides, Ágrip (pp. 377-421), a compendium of the lives of the kings of Norway; Olafs Saga Tryggvasonar by Oddr Munkr, who lived in the 12th century (pp. 216-376), another recension of the same work is edited by Munch, Christiania 1853 (and here marked Ó. T.): vol. xii contains registers, etc. Heims-kringla, vols. i-iii, cited from the folio edition, Copenhagen 1777-1783, contains the lives of the kings of Norway in a text mostly identical with Fornmanna Sögur vols. i-vii, and is therefore sparingly cited; but the Heimskringla alone gives the Ynglinga Saga, vide C. II: a new edition by Unger has been published, Christiania 1868. Codex Frisianus, a vellum MS. of the Heimskringla, fasc. 1, Christiania 1869. Olafs Saga Helga by Snorri Sturluson, who died 1241, cited Ó. H., Christiania 1853, is identical with Fornmanna Sögur vols. iv, v, and Heimskringla vol. ii, but contains the best text of this Saga. Fagrskinna, Christiania 1847, contains a short history of the kings of Norway down to the end of the 12th century. Morkinskinna, an old vellum containing the lives of king Harald Harðráði and the following kings, by C. R. Unger, Christiania 1867. Ingvars Saga by Brocman, Stockholm 1762. Eymundar Saga, cited from Fb. ii. and Fms. v; the Saga is given in Antiquités Russes. Olafs Saga Helga (O. H. L.), a legendary life of St. Olave, Christiania 1849. Flateyjar-bók, edited in three volumes, Christiania 1860-1868, contains the text of Fornmanna Sögur, besides many other things, and is often cited (Fb.). Here may also be mentioned Skálda-tal or Catalogue of Ancient Poets and Kings, published by Möbius in his Catalogus, Leipzig 1856; but again edited by Jón Sigurdsson in Edda iii. pp. 251-286 (still in the press).
 - II. SAGAS referring to other countries:—Orknöyinga Saga, also called Jarla Saga, the Lives of the Earls of Orkney from the earliest time down to the end of the 12th century, cited from the new edition of Mr. Dasent, not yet issued, the old Ed. A. D. 1780; the whole Saga is given in the Flateyjar-bók. Magnús Saga Eyja-jarls, the Life of St. Magnus, Ed. 1780. Færeyinga Saga, the History of the Faro Islands, Copenhagen 1832, from the Flateyjar-bók. Grænlandinga-þáttir or Einars-þáttir Sokka-sonar, cited from Flateyjar-bók iii. 445-454. Játvarðar Saga, the Life of Edward the Confessor, Ed. 1852, also contained in Flateyjar-bók iii. 463-472. Ósvalds Saga, the Life of King Oswald, Ed. 1854. Thomas Saga Erkbiskups, the Life of Thomas à Becket, cited from a MS. 5311 in the British Museum, a transcript of an Icelandic vellum MS. called Thomas-skinnna; another recension of this Saga is in an Icelandic MS. at Stockholm: it is now in the press under the care of Unger, Christiania, whose edition is now and then cited (Thom. Ed.), vide e.g. gjafmildi. Rómverja Sögur, edited in Prøver, pp. 108-386, is a paraphrase of Sallust's Bellum Jugurt. and Lucan's Pharsalia. Veraldar Saga, a short Universal History, 'Sex Aetates Mundi', cited from Prøver, pp. 64-103. We may also here record the Þorfinns Saga (vide above, D. II. 2) and Vínlands-páttir, from Flateyjar-bók vol. i, wrongly inserted in the editions of the Heimskringla vol. i, published by Rafn in Antiquitates Americanae, Copenhagen, pp. 7-78: these two Sagas refer to the discovery of America at the end of the 10th and the beginning of the 11th centuries.

F. SACRED OR LEGENDARY LORE.

- I. STJÓRN OR A BIBLICAL PARAPHRASE of the Historical Books of the Old Testament by bishop Brand (died 1264), edited by Unger, Christiania 1862; also sometimes called Gyðinga Sögur. The first part, pp. 1-319, is a scholastic compilation from Genesis, Exodus, Petrus Comestor, and the Speculum Historiale, and was composed about A. D. 1300, but the whole work is now called by the name of Stjórn.
- II. HOMILIES, etc.—The Homilies and Sermons of St. Gregory, marked Greg. Homiliu-bók or Book of Homilies, by Unger, Christiania 1864, marked Hom.; the figures refer to the pages of the MS. Arna-Magn. 619, which are marked in the edition: another old vellum MS. of Homilies at Stockholm (marked Hom. St.) is not published. Elucidarius, Ed. in Ann. for Nord. Oldk. 1858; the figures mark the pages of the MS. noted in the edition.
- III. HELGRA-MANNA SÖGUR OR LIVES OF SAINTS, etc.:—Barlaams Saga (by Joh. Damasc.), Unger's Ed., Christiania 1851: Clemens Saga (Clement Alexandr.): Martinus Saga (St. Martin of Tours), from vellum MS. Arna-Magn. 645: Blasius Saga (St. Blaise), from vellum MS. Arna-Magn. 623: Mariu Saga (Virgin Mary), from MS. Arna-Magn. 656 A. and other MSS., is now edited by C. R. Unger, Christiania, and often cited both in the Grammar and Dictionary: Niðrestigningar Saga or History of the Descent to Hell, a rendering of the later part of the Apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus, from MSS. Arna-Magn. 645, pp. 102-110, and 623, pp. 1-10: Andreas Saga, MS. Arna-Magn. 625: Johannes Saga baptistae, MS. Arna-Magn. 623: Postula Sögur, from various MSS., Arna-Magn. 645, 656 C, etc.; a printed copy (Viðey 1836) is now and then used: Theophilus, edited by Mr. Dasent, 1842, now again published as part of the Mar. Saga. Antonius Saga, Augustinus Saga, Páls Saga Postula, cited from Arna-Magn. 234 fol. Many other small legendary stories are besides cited (without name) from the Arna-Magn. MSS. nos. 656, 655 (the Roman numerals denote parts or fasciculi), 623, 645, 677. Many of these tales and homilies are preserved in very old MSS., and belong to the earliest stage of Icelandic literature.

G. ROMANCES OR FABLES, rendered mostly from French and Latin.

- I. HISTORICAL ROMANCES:—Alexanders Saga (from the Alexandreis of Philip Gautier), by Unger, Christiania 1848: Karla-Magnús Saga (Charlemagne), by Unger, Christiania 1860: Þiðreks Saga af Bern (Dieterich), by Unger, Christiania 1853: Breta-Sögur, the first part also called Trojumanna Sögur, chiefly founded upon Geoffrey of Monmouth's Hist. Brit. and Dares Phrygius, edited in Ann. for Nord. Oldk., Copenhagen 1848, 1849.
- II. MYTHICAL:—Artus-kappa Sögur, containing Parcevals Saga, Ivents Saga, Valvents Saga, Möttuls Saga, Erreks Saga, cited from MS. 4859 in the British Museum: Elis Saga, Bærings Saga, Flovent Saga, Magus Saga, all four cited from vellum MS. Arna-Magn. 580; the last is also at times quoted from an edition: Tristams Saga, in MS. Arna-Magn. 443, but only cited from Fritzer's Dictionary: Mirmants Saga, cited from MS. 4859 in the British Museum: Bevus Saga; Clarus Saga. β . Strengleikar or Lays of the Britons, edited by Unger, Christiania 1850.
- III. LYGA-SÖGUR OR STORIES fabricated in Iceland:—The greater part of Fornaldar Sögur, 2nd and 3rd vols., vide above; Þjalar-Jóns Saga, Konráðs Saga Keisara Sonar, and many others.

H. WORKS OF A LEARNED OR SCHOLASTIC CHARACTER.

- I. PHILOLOGICAL:—Skálda, a collection of three or four Icelandic philological treatises of the 12th to the 14th century, preserved in one of the MSS. of the Edda (Orms-bók), and therefore usually published as an appendix to that book, and in many modern works quoted under the name of Edda; it is here cited under the name of Skálda. Skálda is a traditional name in Iceland, although it is sometimes applied to the Skáldskapar-mál, vide C; the earliest and by far the most interesting—perhaps the earliest philological treatise in any Teutonic language—is that by Thorodd; it is contained in p. 160, l. 27 to p. 169, l. 18 in the edition of Dr. Egilsson, Reykjavik 1849 (where these treatises are published under the name of Ritgjörðir Tilheyrandi Snorra Edda), but in the Ed. Arna-Magn. (Copenhagen 1852) ii. 10-43; the second treatise, probably from the later part of the 12th century, pp. 160-173, Ed. Arna-Magn. ii. 44-60; the third treatise, an imitation of Donatus and Priscian, pp. 173-200, is written by Ólafur Hvíta-skáld (died 1259), cp. Ed. Arna-Magn. ii. 62-189; the fourth treatise, pp. 200-212, is simply a continuation of the third. 2. The Skáldskapar-mál of Snorri, the rhymed glossaries, and the metrical poem Hátta-tal with the commentary in prose (vide C), may be reckoned in this class.
- II. Skugg-sjá or Konungs Skugg-sjá, i. e. Speculum Regale, a didactic scholastic work; the Copenhagen Ed. of 1768 is cited here; a new edition appeared at Christiania in 1848. Anecdoton, a polemical treatise on ecclesiastical matters, published by Werlauff, Copenhagen 1815, and again in 1848, along with the Skugg-sjá.
- III. ARITHMETICAL:—Rím-begla, a large collection of arithmetical treatises, etc., published at Copenhagen in 1780; the name Rím-begla, however, refers properly only to the first part, viz. pp. 1-114 in this edition: this treatise is preserved in an Icelandic MS. of the 12th century (no. 1812 Royal Libr. Copenhagen), and is so called by the author, whose name is unknown. Algorismus, a treatise on Arithmetic by Hauk Erlendsson (died 1334), contained in the vellum MS. Hauks-bók, and edited by Munch in Ann. for Nord. Oldk., Copenhagen 1848, pp. 353-375.
- IV. GEOGRAPHICAL:—A small collection is published under the title of Symbolae ad Geographiam Medii aevi, edited by Werlauff in 1821, especially containing a geographical sketch by the Icelandic abbot Nicholas (died 1161), called Leiðarvisir og Borga-skipan: some things are also published in Antiquitates Russae and Orientalis, 1852; various fragments of this kind are contained in the Hauks-bók. Some parts of the rhymed glossary in the Edda (C. 1), e.g. names of rivers, islands, etc., belong to this class.
- V. MEDICAL:—Lækninga-bók, a MS. in the Arna-Magn. collection 434, 12mo; a small part published in Prøver, pp. 471-474. The chief source for medical citations, however, is a list of Icelandic names of diseases contained in the 9th and 10th volumes of Félags-rit, 1789 and 1790, written by Svein Pálsson (died 1840), and drawn from various old treatises on medical matters.

J. MÁLDAGAR, SKJÖL, etc., i. e. DEEDS AND DIPLOMAS.

- I. ICELANDIC:—Historia Ecclesiastica Islandiae by bishop Finn Jónsson, Finnus Johannacus, published in four volumes, Copenhagen 1772-1778, contains a great number of writs and deeds referring to Icelandic church-history, which are cited in this Dictionary as far as down to A. D. 1400: Diplomatarium Islandicum by Jón Sigurdsson, Copenhagen 1857 sqq., contains deeds and Libri Datici of the churches down to the union with Norway (about A. D. 1263), but is not finished: deeds of the 14th century are therefore cited from MSS. in the Arna-Magn. collection marked Dipl., the Roman numerals denoting fasciculi: there are also cited collections of Libri Datici of the 14th century, viz. Pétrs-máldagi, Auðunnar-máldagi, Jóns-máldagi, and Vilkins-máldagi, all bearing the name of the bishops of the 14th century who made the collection, and cited from MSS. in the Arna-Magn.

- II. NORSE:—Diplomatarium Norvagicum, in many volumes, by Unger and Lange, Christiania 1849 sqq.; but as the language of Norway was no longer in a pure state in the 14th and 15th centuries, this large collection is sparingly cited: Björgynjar Kalfskinn, Boldts Jordebog, and Munkalíf are all registers of properties of the Norse cloister, rarely cited.

K. RUNIC INSCRIPTIONS.

- I. GOTHIC RUNES, called by some Old Scandinavian Runes; they are identical with the Anglo-Saxon Runes, but older, and are found only on the very oldest monuments:—The Golden Horn, dug up in Schleswig A. D. 1734, contains an inscription probably of the 3rd or 4th century, explained by Munch and finally by Bugge; The Runic Stone at Tune in Norway, edited and explained by Munch, Christiania 1857, specially cited now and then in the introductions to the letters.
- II. COMMON SCANDINAVIAN RUNIC INSCRIPTIONS:—The SWEDISH STONES, collected in Bautil, vide s. v. bautasteinn; the figures mark the number: Brocman's treatise upon the Runes at the end of Ingvars Saga, Stockholm 1762. 2. The DANISH Runic Stones, edited by Thorsen, De Danske Rune-Mindes-mærker, Copenhagen 1864; Rafin's collection, Copenhagen 1856. The MANX STONES are edited by Munch along with his edition of the Chronicon Manniae.

§57 As to the authorship of these works, we can only briefly note that most of them are Icelandic, but parts Norwegian or Norse. Parts of A, the whole of B. II, and part of B. III are Norse; F and G are partly Norse and partly Icelandic; H. II and J. II are Norse; K Scandinavian; the rest Icelandic. Some few MSS. under the other letters are Norse, e. g. Fagrskinna; but the works are undoubtedly of Icelandic origin. Again, many of the Norse laws are preserved in Icelandic MSS., and only one of the many MSS. of the Skuggsjá is Norse.

BY MODERN WORKS are understood the works from the Reformation to the present time, as opposed to the old literature, which may be said to end about A. D. 1400; the following 100 or 150 years are almost blank, at least as far as prose is concerned. The first specimen of modern Icelandic literature is the translation of the New Testament, A. D. 1540, then the rendering of hymns and psalms into Icelandic, and the version of the whole Bible: the middle and latter part of the 16th century was entirely taken up with these subjects. A fresh historical literature, annals and the like, first dawns at the end of that century. The 17th century is especially rich in religious poetry; the Sermons of Jón Vídalín belong to the beginning of the 18th; essays of an economical or political character begin at the middle or end of that century, and periodicals from A. D. 1780. As for this Dictionary, it may be briefly stated that, as to the old literature, every passage is as far as possible given with references; while words and phrases from the living Icelandic tongue, popular sayings, etc. are freely given, but generally without references. No Icelandic Dictionary can be said to be complete that does not pay attention to the present language: the old literature, however rich, does not give the whole language, but must be supplemented and illustrated by the living tongue. The differences in grammar are slight, and the transition of forms regular and gradual, so the change is mostly visible in the vocabulary. But it should be noted that when a word or phrase is given without reference, this means that no ancient reference was at hand: but it does not follow that it is modern; this can only be seen from the bearing of the word, e. g. whether it conveys a notion known to the ancients or not. Of modern works cited the following may be noted:

- I. IN POETRY, first, the flower of Icelandic poetry, old as well as modern, the Passiu-Sálmur or Fifty Passion Hymns by Hallgrím Petrósson (born 1614, died 1674), finished 1660, published 1666, and since that time reprinted in thirty editions; the former figure marks the hymn, the latter the verse. The Hymns and Psalms of the Reformation are now and then cited from the Hymn-book of 1619 (called Hóla-bók, cited by its leaves), or the collection of 1742. 2. Of secular poems, Búnaðar-bálkr (marked Bb.), composed 1764, by Eggert Ólafsson (born 1726, died 1768); this poem has always been a great favourite with the people in Iceland: the first figure marks the divisions of the poem. A small collection, A. D. 1852, called Snót, containing small but choice poems of different poets. β. Of rímur or modern rhapsodies, the Úlfars-rímur are cited as the choicest specimen, composed by Þorlak Gudbrandsson, who died in 1707; Tíma-ríma, a satirical poem of the beginning of the 18th century; Núma-rímur by Sigurd Breiðfjörð. γ. Njóla, a philosophical poem by Björn Gunnlaugsson, published 1844; Hústafla, a pedagogical poem by Jón Magnússon (born 1601), cited from the Ed. of 1774. δ. The Ballads or Fornkvæði, 1854 sq., vide s. v. danz. ε. Ditties and Songs, never published, but all the better recollected,—the choicest among them are those attributed to Pál Vídalín (born 1666, died 1727), etc. etc. 3. The chief Poets are:—Hallgrím Petrósson; Stefán Ólafsson (died 1688); Eggert Ólafsson; Jón Þorláksson (born 1744, died 1819), his poems are collected in two volumes, 1842; Benedikt Gröndal (born 1762, died 1825), his poems in a small collection, 1833; Sigurd Petrósson (died 1827), his poems collected in 1844; Bjarni Thorarinnsson (born 1787, died 1841), his poems published 1847; Jónas Hallgrímsson (born 1807, died 1846), his poems published 1847; Sigurd Breiðfjörð (died 1846).

- II. IN PROSE we must first mention, 1. Nýja Testamenti, the New Testament, cited from the text of 1644, in Edd. of 1807 and 1813 (in no case is the new version, London 1866, cited, it being merely a paraphrase, and inaccurate); the text of 1644 here cited is mainly founded on the original version of 1540, which has been duly reckoned among the noblest specimens of Icelandic prose, especially in the Gospels; it is therefore frequently cited. Gamla Testamenti, the Old Testament, is cited more sparingly. The earliest edition of the Bible (Hólum 1584) is called Gudbrands-Biblia, i. e. the Bible of bishop Gudbrand; the next edition (Hólum 1644) is called Þorláks-Biblia, i. e. the Bible of bishop Þorlak, and is a slightly emended text of that of bishop Gudbrand. The Þorláks-Biblia may be called the Icelandic textus receptus; the edition of 1746, called Waisenhús-Biblia, is a reprint of it; as is also the edition of the British and Foreign Bible Society, 1813. Whenever the Old Testament is cited (and when Stjórn is not meant), the reference is to one of these three editions of the same version. β. Next we have to notice the Sermons of bishop Jón Vídalín (born 1666, died 1720), called Jóns-bók (not the Jóns-bók above mentioned, B. III) or Vídalíns Postilla, a highly esteemed work; the first edition is of 1718, and ten or eleven editions have since been published; perhaps no Icelandic book is so stocked with popular sayings and phrases of every kind. 2. Of secular literature we have first to mention Íslenzkar Þjóðsögur or Icelandic Stories and Legends by Jón Arnason, Leipzig 1862, 1864, in two volumes; some of them rendered into English by Messrs. Powell and Magnússon; the Icelandic text, however, is always cited. β. Kvöldvökur, a popular book for children, in two vols. 1794 and 1796, by Hannes Finnsson. γ. The publications of the Icelandic Literary Society, Bókmenta-félag, founded A. D. 1816: Árbækr or Annals of Iceland by Jón Espolin (died 1836), published 1821 sqq.; Safn or Contributions towards the History of Iceland, etc. etc. δ. Piltur og Stúlka, a novel, 1850. ε. The beautiful translation of the Odyssey by Sveinbjörn Egilsson, published under the name of Odyssseifs-kvæði, in small parts, to serve as school books during the years 1829–1844. ζ. Periodicals:—Félags-rit, a periodical in fifteen volumes, 1780–1795, contains much that is valuable in Icelandic philology; cp. also Ný Félags-rit, a periodical of 1841 sqq. Ármannt & Alþingi, a periodical of 1829–1832. Þjóðólfr, a newspaper, Reykjavík 1848–1869.

Ample thanks are due to the excellent reader at the Clarendon Press, Mr. Pembrey, for his watchful attention to consistency in spelling and accuracy in punctuation, especially in the Icelandic part of this Dictionary.

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS OF WORKS AND AUTHORS.

N. B.—The letters between () refer to the Classification of Works and Authors.

- A. A. = Antiquitates Americanae. (E. II.)
 Ad. = Arinbjarnar-drápa. (A. III.)
 Akv. = Atla-kviða. (A. II.)
 Al. = Alexanders Saga. (G. I.)
 Alg. = Algorithmus. (H. III.)
 Alm. = Alvis-mál. (A. I.) Am. = Atla-mál. (A. II.)
 Anal. = Analecta. (D. II.)
 Andr. = Andreas Saga. (F. III.)
 Anecd. = Anecdoton. (H. II.)
 Am. = Íslenzkir Annáll. (D. IV.)
 Ant. S. = Antonius Saga. (F. III.)
 Arna-Magn. or A. M. = Arna-Magnæanus.
 Arons S. = Arons Saga. (D. III.)
 Art. = Artus-kappa Sögur. (G. II.)
 Aug. = Augustinus Saga. (F. III.)
 A. Þ. = Arfa-þáttir. (B. I.)
 Ágr. = Ágrip. (E. I.)
 Am. = Auðunnar-máldagi. (J. I.)
 Árna S. = Árna Saga. (D. III.)
 Band. = Banda-manna Saga. (D. II.)
 Barl. = Barlaams Saga. (F. III.)
 Baut. = Bautil. (K. II.)
 Bárð. = Bárðar Saga. (D. V.)
 Bb. = Búnadar-bálkr.
 Bev. = Bevus Saga. (G. II.)
 Bjarn. = Bjarnar Saga. (D. II.)
 Bjarni = Bjarni Thorarinson.
 Björn = Björn Halldórsson.
 B. K. = Björgynjar Kálfskinn. (J. II.)
 Bkv. = Brynhildar-kviða. (A. II.)
 Blas. = Blasius Saga. (F. III.)
 Bm. = Bjarka-mál. (A. II.)
 Boldt = Boldt. (J. II.)
 Boll. = Bolla-þáttir. (D. V.)
 Brandkr. = Brandkrossa-þáttir. (D. V.) Bret. = Breta Sögur. (G. I.) Brocm. = Brocman. (K. II.)
 Bs. = Biskupa Sögur. (D. III.)
 Bt. = Bauga-tal. (B. I.)
 Bær. = Bærings Saga. (G. II.)
 Clar. = Clarus Saga. (G. II.)
 Clem. = Clements Saga. (F. III.)
 Darr. = Darradar-ljóð. (A. III.)
 D. I. = Diplomatarium Islandicum. (J. I.) Dipl. = Diplomatarium. (J. I.)
 D. N. = Diplomatarium Norvagicum. (J. II.)
 Dropl. = Droplaugar-sona Saga. (D. II.)
 Eb. = Eyrbyggja Saga. (D. II.)
 Edda = Edda. (C. I.)
 Eg. = Egils Saga. (D. II.)
 El. = Elis Saga. (G. II.)
 Eluc. = Elucidarium. (F. II.)
 Em. = Eiriks-mál. (A. III.)
 Esp. = Espólin Árbækr Íslands.
 Fagrsk. = Fagrskiina. (E. I.)
 Fas. = Fornaldar Sögur. (C. II.)
 Fb. = Flateyjar-bók. (E. I.)
 Fbr. = Fóstbræðra Saga. (D. II.)
 Fé. = Félags-rit.
 Finn. = Finnboga Saga. (D. V.)
 Fkv. = Forn-kvæði.
 Flóam. S. = Flóamanna Saga. (E. I.)
 Flóv. = Flóventis Saga. (G. II.)
 Fm. = Fafnis-mál. (A. II.)
 Fms. = Fornmanna Sögur. (E. I.)
 Fr. = Fritznar's Dictionary, 1867.
 Frump. = Frumpartar.
 Fs. = Forn-sögur. (D. II.)
 Fsm. = Fjölsviuns-mál. (A. II.)
 Fspl. = Forspjall-ljóð. (A. I.)
 F. Þ. = Festa-þáttir. (B. I.)
 Fær. = Færeyinga Saga. (E. II.)
 Gautr. = Gautreks Saga. (C. II.)
 Gg. = Grógaldr. (A. II.)
 Gh. = Guðrúnar-hefna. (A. II.)
 Gisl. = Gísla Saga. (D. II.)
 Gkv. = Guðrúnar-kviða. (A. II.)
 Glúm. = Víga-Glúms Saga. (D. II.)
 Gm. = Grímnis-mál. (A. I.) Grág. = Grágás. (B. I.)
 Greg. = Gregory. (F. II.)
 Grett. = Grettis Saga. (D. II.)
 Grönd. = Benedikt Gröndal.
 Grönl. Hist. Mind. = Grönlands Historiske Mindes-mærker.
 Gs. = Gróttá-söngur. (A. I.)
 Gsp. = Getspeki Heiðreks. (A. II.)
 Guðm. S. = Guðmundar Saga. (D. III.)
 Gullp. = Gull-Þóris Saga. (D. II.)
 Gylfag. = Gylfa-gimming. (C. I.)
 Gpl. = Gulapings-lög. (B. II.)
 Hálf. S. = Hálfredar Saga. (D. II.)
 Hallgr. = Hallgrímur Pétrosson.
 H. Ann. = Hauks-annáll. (D. IV.)
 Harð. S. = Harðar Saga. (D. II.)
 Har. S. Harð. = Haralds Saga Harðráða. (E. I.) Haustl. = Haustlög. (A. I.)
 Há. S. = Hákonar Saga. (E. I.)
 Hálf. S. = Hálfis Saga. (C. II.)
 Háv. = Hávarðar Saga. (D. II.)
 Hb. = Hauks-bók. (H. IV.)
 Hbl. = Harbarðs-ljóð. (A. I.)
 Hd. = Hús-drápa. (A. I.)
 Hdl. = Hyndlu-ljóð. (A. II.)
 Hóm. = Hamðis-mál. (A. II.)
 H. E. = Historia Ecclesiastica Islandiæ. (J. I.) Heiðarv. S. or Heið. S. = Heiðarvíga Saga. (D. II.)
 Helr. = Helreið Brynhildar. (A. II.)
 Hem. = Hemings-þáttir. (C. II.)
 Hervar. S. = Hervarar Saga. (C. II.)
 Hjalt. = Hjaltalín, Icelandic Botany.
 Hkm. = Hákonar-mál. (A. III.)
 Hkr. = Heimskringla. (E. I.)
 Hkv. = Helga-kviða Hundingsbana. (A. II.)
 Hkv. Hjörv. = Helga-kviða Hjörvarðssonar. (A. II.)
 Hlt. = Háleygja-tal. (A. II.)
 Hm. = Háva-mál. (A. I.)
 Hom. = Homiliu-bók. (F. II.)
 Hrafn. = Hrafnkels Saga. (D. II.)
 Hrólf. Kr. S. = Hrólfis Saga Kraka. (C. II.)
 Hs. = Harm-sól. (A. III.)
 Hsm. = Hugsviuns-mál. (A. III.)
 Ht. = Háttá-tal. (C. I.) Hung. or Hv. = Hungri-vaka. (D. III.)
 Húst. = Hús-tafla.
 Hým. = Hýmís-kviða. (A. I.)
 Hæns. Þ. = Hænsa-Þóris Saga. (D. II.)
 Höfuðl. = Höfuðlausn. (A. III.)
 Itin. = Itinerarium or Travels of Eggert Ólafsson, 1772.
 Ivar Aasen = Ivar Aasen's Dictionary, 1850.
 Íb. = Íslendinga-bók. (D. I.)
 Íd. = Íslendinga-drápa. (A. III.)
 Íngv. = Íngvars Saga. (E. I.)
 Ísl. Þjóðs. = Íslenzkir Þjóðsögur.
 Játv. = Játvarðar Saga. (E. II.)
 Jb. = Jóns-bók. (B. III.)
 Jd. = Jónsvíkinga-drápa. (A. III.)
 Jm. = Jóns-máldagi. (J. I.)
 Jöh. = Jóhannes Saga. (F. III.)
 Jómsv. S. or Jv. = Jónsvíkinga Saga. (E. I.) Jónas = Jónas Hallgrímsson.
 Jóns S. = Jóns Saga. (D. III.)
 Jón Þorl. = Jón Þorláksson.
 Js. = Járnsíða. (B. III.)
 Karl. = Karla-magnús Saga. (G. I.)
 K. Á. = Kristinn-réttr Árna biskups. (B. III.)
 Kb. = Konungs-bók. (B. I, C. I, etc.)
 Kjáln. S. = Kjalnesinga Saga. (D. V.)
 Km. = Kráku-mál. (A. III.)
 Knytl. = Knyttlinga Saga. (E. I.)
 Konr. = Konráðs Saga. (G. III.)
 Korm. = Kormaks Saga. (D. II.)
 Kristni S. or Kr. S. = Kristni Saga. (D. I. III.)
 Krök. = Króka Refs Saga. (D. V.)
 K. Þ. K. = Kristinn-réttr Þorlaks ok Ketils = Kristinna-laga-þáttir. (B. I.) Landn. = Landnáma. (D. I.)
 Laur. S. = Laurentius Saga. (D. III.)
 Ld. = Laxdæla Saga. (D. II.)
 Lex. Mythol. = Lexicon Mythologicum.
 L. a. Poët. = Lexicon Poëticum by Sveinbjörn Egilsson, 1860.
 Lex. Run. = Lexicon Runicum.
 Lil. = Lilja. (A. III.)
 Ls. = Loka-senna. (A. I.)
 Lv. = Ljósvefninga Saga. (D. II.)
 Lækn. = Lækninga-bók. (H. V.)
 Mag. = Magus Saga. (G. II.)
 Magn. = Magnús Saga jarls. (E. II.)
 Magn. S. Góða = Magnús Saga Góða. (E. I.)
 Mar. = Mariu Saga. (F. III.)
 Mart. = Martinus Saga. (F. III.)
 Merl. = Merlinus Spá. (A. III.)
 Mirm. = Mirmants Saga. (G. II.)
 M. K. = Munkalíf. (J. II.)
 Mkv. = Málshátta-kvæði. (A. III.)
 Mork. = Morkinskinna. (E. I.)
 Mött. = Möttuls Saga. (G. I.)
 N. G. L. = Norges Gamle Love. (B. II.)
 Niðrst. = Niðrstigningar Saga. (F. III.)
 Nj. = Njála. (D. II.)
 Njarð. = Njarðvíkinga Saga. (D. II.)
 Njóna = Njóna, the poem.
 Norge's Beskriv. = Beskrivelse Norge.
 Norma G. S. = Norma-Gests Saga. (C. II.)
 N. T. = New Testament.
 Ný Fél. = Ný Félags-rit.
 Ob. = Orms-bók. (C. I.)
 Od. = Odysseis-kvæði, prose, 1829.
 Odd. or S. Odd. = Stjórnu-Odda draumr. (D. V.)
 Og. = Oddrúnar-grátr. (A. II.)
 O. H. L. = Ólafs Saga Helga Legendaria. (E. I.)
 Or. = Ólafis-ríma. (A. III.)
 Orkn. = Orkneyinga Saga. (E. II.)
 Ób. = Ómaga-bálkr. (B. I.)
 Ó. H. = Ólafs Saga Helga. (E. I.)
 Ósv. = Ósvalds Saga. (E. II.)
 Ó. T. = Ólafs Saga Tryggvasonar. (E. I.) Pass. = Passiu-Sálmar.
 Páls S. = Páls Saga. (D. III.)
 Pd. = Placidus-drápa. (A. III.)
 Pm. = Péturs-máldagi. (J. I.)
 Post. = Postula Sögur. (F. III.)
 Rafn. S. = Rafus Saga. (D. III.)
 Ragn. S. = Ragnars Saga. (C. II.)
 Rb. = Rímbegla. (H. III.)
 Rd. = Reykdæla Saga. (D. II.)
 Rétt. = Réttarbætr. (B. II.)
 Rm. = Rígs-mál. (A. II.)
 Róm. = Rómverja Saga. (E. II.)
 Safn. = Safn til Sögu Íslands.
 Sb. = Staðarhóls-bók. (B. I.)
 Sd. = Svarfdæla Saga. (D. II.)
 Sdm. = Sigdrífumál. (A. II.)
 Sig. Breiðf. = Sigurðr Breiðfjörð.
 Sig. Pét. = Sigurðr Pétrosson.
 Skálda = Skálda. (H. I.)
 Skáld H. = Skáld Helga-rímur. (A. III.)
 Skjöld. = Skjöldunga Saga. (C. II.)
 Skm. = Skírnis-mál. (A. I.)
 Sks. = Konungs Skugg-sjá. (H. II.)
 Sksn. = Skáldskapar-mál. (C. I.)
 Skv. = Sigurðar-kviða. (A. II.)
 Sl. or Sól. = Sólarljóð. (A. III.)
 Snót = Snót, poems.
 Stef. Ól. = Stefán Ólafsson.
 Stell. = Stellu-rímur.
 Stj. = Stjóru. (F. I.)
 Stor. = Sona-torrek. (A. III.)
 Str. = Strengleikar. (G. II.)
 Sturl. = Sturlunga Saga. (D. I.) Sverr. S. = Sverris Saga. (E. I.)
 Symb. = Symbolæ. (H. IV.)
 Sæm. = Sæmundar Edda. (A. C. I.)
 Th. = Theophilus. (F. III.)
 Thom. = Thomas Saga. (E. II.)
 Tl. = Tíundar-lög. (B. I.)
 Tristr. = Tristrams Saga. (G. II.)
 Ub. = Uppsala-bók. (C. I.)
 Úlf. = Úlfars-rímur.
 Valla L. = Valla Ljótis Saga. (D. II.)
 Vápn. = Vápnfirðinga Saga. (D. II.)
 Vd. = Vatnsdæla Saga. (D. II.)
 Ver. = Veraldar Saga. (E. II.)
 Verel. = Verelius, Index.
 Vh. = Vatnsþyrna MS.
 Vidal. = Vídalíns-Postilla.
 Vidal. Skýr. = Vídalín Skýringar.
 Vígl. = Víglundar Saga. (D. V.)
 Vínl. Þ. = Vínlunds-þáttir. (E. II.)
 Vkv. = Völundar-kviða. (A. II.)
 Vm. = Vilkins-máldagi. (J. I.)
 Vsl. = Víglóði. (B. I.)
 Vsp. = Völuspá. (A. I.)
 Vitkv. = Vegtams-kviða. (A. I.) Vpm. = Vafþrúðnis-mál. (A. I.)
 Völs. S. = Völsunga Saga. (C. II.)
 Yngl. S. = Ynglinga Saga. (C. II.)
 Ýt. = Ynglinga-tal. (A. II.)
 Þd. = Þórs-drápa. (A. I.)
 Þidr. = Þiðreks Saga. (G. I.)
 Þjal. = Þjalar-Jóns Saga. (G. III.)
 Þkv. = Þryms-kviða. (A. I.)
 Þorf. Karl. = Þorfinns Saga Karls-efnis. (D. II.)
 Þorl. S. = Þorlaks Saga. (D. III.)
 Þorst. hv. = Þorsteins-þáttir hvíta. (D. II.)
 Þorst. Síðu H. = Þorsteins Saga Síðu Hallssonar. (D. II.)
 Þorst. S. St. = Þorsteins-þáttir Stangarhöggs. (D. II.)
 Þorst. ux. = Þorsteins-þáttir uxa-fóts. (D. V.)
 Þórð. = Þórðar Saga hreðu. (D. V.)
 Þ. Þ. = Þingskapa-þáttir. (B. I.)
 Ölk. = Ölkofra-þáttir. (D. II.)

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS.

absol. = absolute, absolutely.	dat. = dative.	Fris. = Frisian.	loc. = local, locally.	O. H. G. = Old High German.	Sansk. = Sanskrit.
acc. = accusative.	decl. = declined.	Gael. = Gaelic.	m. or masc. = masculine.	opp. = opposed.	Scandin. = Scandinavian.
act. = active.	def. = definite.	gen. = genitive.	line.	Ormul. or Orm. = Ormulum.	via, Scandinavian.
A. D. = Anno Domini.	defect. = defective.	gener. = generally.	medic. = medicine, medically.	part. = participle.	Scot. = Scottish.
adj. = adjective.	dep. = deponent.	Germ. = German.	metaph. = metaphorical, metaphorically.	partic. = particularly.	signif. = signification.
adv. = adverb.	De Professor = De Herr Professor by August Corrodi, in the Zürich idiom.	gl. or gloss. = glossary.	metath. = metathesis.	pass. = passive.	slav. = Slavonic.
adverb. = adverbially.	deriv. = derived.	Goth. = Gothic.	meton. = metonymy, metonomically.	perh. = perhaps.	Span. = Spanish.
allit. = alliteration, alliterative.	dict. = dictionary.	Gr. = Greek.	metric. = metrically.	pl. or plur. = plural.	spec. = specially.
anatom. = anatomically.	dimin. = diminutive.	gramm. = grammar.	mid. H. G. = middle High German.	poët. = poetically.	sq., sqq. = following.
ἀπ. λεγ. = ἀπαξ λεγόμενον.	dissyl. = dissyllabic.	Havn. = Havniensis.	mid. Lat. = middle Latin.	Pol. = Polish.	subj. = subjunctive.
A. S. = Anglo-Saxon.	D. R. A. = Deutsche Rechts-alterthümer by Grimm.	Hel. = Heliland.	milit. = military.	posit. = positive.	subst. = substantive.
astron. = astronomy, astronomically.	dub. = dubious.	Icel. = Iceland, Icelander, Icelanders, Icelandic.	M. Lat. = Mediæval Latin.	pr. or prop. = proper, properly.	suff. = suffix.
begin. = beginning.	eccl. = ecclesiastical.	id. = idem, referring to the passage quoted.	mod. = modern.	pref. = preface.	sup. = supine.
Bodl. = Bodleian.	Ed., Edd. = edition, editions, edited.	id. = idem, referring to the translation.	monosyl. = monosyllabic.	prep., prepp. = preposition, prepositions.	superl. = superlative.
Bohem. = Bohemian.	E. Engl. Spec. = Early English Specimens.	i. e. = id est.	MS., MSS. = manuscript, manuscripts.	pres. = present.	s. v. = sub voce.
botan. = botanically.	e. g. = exempli gratia.	imperat. = imperative.	mythol. = mythology, mythologically.	pret. = preterite.	Swed. = Swedish.
Brit. Mus. = British Museum.	ellipt. = elliptical, elliptically.	impers. = impersonal.	n. or neut. = neuter.	priv. = privative.	temp. = temporal.
ch. = chapter.	Engl. = English.	indecl. = indeclinable.	naut. = nautical.	pr. n. = proper name.	termin. = termination.
class. = classical.	esp. = especially.	indef. = indefinite.	navig. = navigation.	prob. = probably.	Teut. = Teutonic.
Cod. or Cd. = Codex.	etc. = et cetera.	indic. = indicative.	neg. = negative.	pron. = pronoun.	theol. = theological, theological.
cognom. = cognomen.	etym. = etymology.	inflex. = inflexive.	N. H. G. = New High German.	proncd. = pronounced.	trans. = transitive.
collect. = collective.	f. or fem. = feminine.	intens. = intensive.	no. = number.	proverb. = proverbially.	transl. = translation.
comp. = comparative.	for. = foreign.	intrans. = intransitive.	nom. = nominative.	provinc. = provincial.	trisyll. = trisyllabic.
compd, compds = compound, compounds.	Fr. = French in etymologies.	irreg. = irregular.	North. E. = Northern English.	qs. = quasi.	Ulf. = Ulfilas.
conj. = conjunction.	Frank. = Frankish.	Ital. = Italian.	Norweg. = Norwegian.	q. v. = quod vide.	uncert. = uncertain.
contr. = contracted.	freq. = frequent, frequently.	l. = line.	obsol. = obsolete.	R. = Rîmur.	unclass. = unclassical.
corresp. = corresponding.		L. = Linnæus.		recipr. = reciprocally.	Ups. De la Gard. = De la Gard's collection of Icel. MSS. in Upsala.
cp. = compare.		Lat. = Latin.		redupl. = reduplicative.	v. = vide.
Dan. = Danish.		l. c. = loco citato.		reflex. = reflexive.	viz. = namely.
		lit. = literally.		relat. = relative.	v. l. = varia lectio.
		Lith. = Lithuanian.		S. = Saga.	Wolf. = Wolfenbüttel
		Litt. = Littonian.		s. a. = sub anno.	p. = pátrr.

SIGNS, ETC.

=, equal or equivalent to, the same as.

[], between these brackets stand etymological remarks and comparisons with cognate languages.

Words in capital letters are root words or important words.

The word Norse is generally used in a peculiar sense, namely, to mark the old Norwegian idiom (or MS.) as opposed to Icelandic proper.

Historical references referring to religion, customs, life, etc. are given in chapters, and under the special name of the Saga or work cited, vide e. g. sub voce draumr and drápa; the condition of the editions has, however, made it impossible to follow this rule throughout. Philological references are given in pages.

In nouns the genitive termination is placed between the noun and gender, e. g. alda, u. = alda, gen. öldu; bára, u. = bára, gen. báru, etc.; bati, a. = bati, gen. bata; bogi, a. = bogi, gen. boga, etc. So also s, ar, jar, e. g. bekkr, s. = bekkr, gen. bekks; bekkr, jar, = bekkr, gen. bekkrjar; belgr, jar, = belgr, gen. belgrjar; borg, ar, = borg, gen. borgar, etc.

Compounds of nouns formed from the genitive of the noun are regarded as double words, and printed at the end of the head noun in the same paragraph, vide e. g. bekkr, bök, etc.

As to the marking of verbs the following is to be noticed:—ad, or d, ð, t, tt, following immediately after a verb, are the preterite inflexions which characterise the verb; ad indicates a trisyllabic preterite with ad as its characteristic, e. g. baka, ad, that is to say, infin. baka, pret. bakaði, sup. bakað, pres. baka: whereas d, ð, t, dd, tt, indicate a dissyllabic preterite, having the dental as characteristic, e. g. brenna, d, that is to say, infin. brenna, pret. brenndi, sup. brennt, pres. brenni; fæða, dd, that is to say, infin. fæða, pret. fæddi, etc.; bæta, tt, = bætta, pret. bætti, etc.; bægja, ð, = bægja, pret. bægði, etc. Where the verb is somewhat irregular, the form is given in full, e. g. berja, pret. barði. All verbs in this Dictionary not marked as above stated are strong, and the tenses are given in extenso. The notation as above stated is adopted from Unger's Glossaries to his editions of Sagas, and has been lately used in Fritzner's Dictionary.

The simple and accented vowels are separated; thus a and á, i and í, o and ó, u and ú, y and ý stand each by themselves; an exception, however, is made with é, because it is rare and peculiar in pronunciation. Ang, iug, ung, yng are given with the simple unaccented vowels, though they are frequently in the editions spelt with an acute (´).

OUTLINES OF GRAMMAR.

THE ALPHABET.

THE Icelandic alphabet (stafrof) in popular use as taught to children consists of the following letters (stafir):—

a, b, c, d, e, f, g, h, i, k, l, m, n, o, p, q, r, s, t, u (v), x, y, z, þ, æ, ö, the names of which may be learnt from two stanzas by Gunnar Pálsson in the Barna-gull:—

A, bé, cé, dé, e, eff, gé, eptir kemur bá, í, ká, ell, emm, enn, ó, einnig pé, ætla eg qú þar standi hjá.	Err, ess, té, ú eru þar næst, ex, ý, zeta, þorn, æ, ü,— allt stafrofið er svo læst í erendin þessi lítill tvö.
--	---

The vowels are pronounced long. This alphabet was, with some additions, adopted from the Latin, and the þ was added at the end; and so late as the 17th century (in the Glossary of Magnus Ólafsson, who died 1636, and in the Icel. Grammar of Runolf Jónsson, who died 1654), the alphabet ends with þ, æ and ö being attached to a and o; Runolf calls the ö 'o brevissimum.' At a later time æ and ö were detached from a o, and put at the end; but not both of them at the same time, as Björn Halldórsson ends his Dictionary with æ. Gunnar Pálsson, who wrote the first popular abc, seems to be the man who, by his memorial stanzas, settled the alphabet as it is now taught. The division into mutes, liquids, etc. is too well known to be repeated. Neither are we here concerned with the Runic alphabet; there can be little doubt that this too was rudely imitated from the Greek or Latin, perhaps from coins: Roman coins of the 2nd and 3rd centuries of our era have been dug up in Scandinavian cairns and fens: foreign coined money was centuries in advance of books, and in barbarous countries shewed the way to the art of writing.

The vowels (hljóð-stafir or less properly raddar-stafir) are, 1. simple (short)—a, e, i, o, u, y, ü. 2. diphthongal, either marked with the acute (´), á, é, í, ó, ú, ý, or double letters, au, ei, ey, æ (æ). Thus in written Icel. all the vowels together are, a á, e é, i í, o ó, u ú, y ý, æ, ö, the diphthongs au, ei, ey being included under a and e respectively. In this Dictionary the simple and acute vowels are treated under one head, but separately one after another; e. g. A in pp. 2-36, Á in pp. 36-48; these letters are widely different from one another both as to sound and etymology; a and á, o and ó, i and í, for instance, being no more akin than a and ei, o and au, etc.; and therefore great confusion would arise from mixing them together. The long vowels are chiefly due to contraction or absorption of consonants, which in Icel. has been carried farther than in any other Teutonic language, e. g. ar, atom, and ár, year; vin, friend, and vín, wine; dyr, door, and dýr, deer; fullr, full, and fúll, foul; goð, god, and góðr, good, etc.

To the consonants (samhljóðendr) were added in olden times the ð (eð), þ (þorn); and in modern times j, about the end of the last century; so that in Icel. writing all the consonants are, b, c, d, ð, f, g, h, j, k, l, m, n, p, q, r, s, t, v, x, z, þ, (=twenty-one); and this brings the whole alphabet to thirty-six letters:—

a á, b, c, d, ð, e é, f, g, h, i í, j, k, l, m, n, o ó, p, q, r, s, t, u ú, v, x, y ý, z, þ, æ (æ), ö, from which number we may subtract c, q as little in use, x, z as compound letters, ð as subordinate to d, æ and æ are treated as one letter, and thirty remain; au, ei, ey go along with a and e, each in its due place, as also ja, jú, jó, jót.

There is a curious division of the alphabet by an old Icel. grammarian of the latter part of the 12th century (Skálda 169-173). He draws five concentric circles: in the centre he places what he calls the höfuð-stafir ('head-staves,' initial letters), viz. b, g, v, þ, which in Icel. can only stand at the beginning of a syllable: in the next ring the mál-stafir ('speech-staves' or common consonants), twelve in number, which can stand both as final and initial: in the third ring the hljóð-stafir ('voice-staves,' vowels, still so called in Icel.), twelve in number, among which he distinguishes between six simple and six long vowels, the latter marked as at present with ´; with them also he counts the líningar ('clusters,' double vowels), æ, œ, a, and lausa-klofar (split letters), ei, ey, as well as ia, io, iu; the vowel i he calls skiptingr (a changeling) from its being sometimes a vowel, sometimes a consonant: in the fourth ring are the capitals, which in MSS. are made to serve for double consonants (e. g. kroS=kross): lastly, in the fifth ring, the undir-stafir ('under-staves,' sub-letters), ð, x, z, which in Icel. can only be used as final.

Thorodd (Þóroddr Gamlason, called Rúnameistari or Rune-master) is the oldest Icel. grammarian, and lived in the beginning of the 12th century; for a curious account of this remarkable man, a builder by profession, see Bs. i. 235. He makes thirty-six vowels, nine of which seem to be nasal, caused by the frequent dropping and agglutination of n (in the infinitives, the weak nouns, etc.) These letters were lost before writing began, but left a nasal sound so late as the beginning of the 12th century. To the five Latin vowel characters he adds œ, e, ø, y. These nine vowels as well as the nasals he then doubles by marking the long with an acute (´), and so they make thirty-six. In writing and printing, œ, e, ø are out of use, but occur frequently in MSS.

Icel. prose literature extends over nearly eight centuries, and in the course of that time the language lost some of its rich vowel system; besides the nasals we are able to trace seven distinct vowels as lost. Four of them were lost at a very early time, perhaps in the 12th century, viz. á the umlaut of ú (see p. 1, B. 5); ø or œ, a vowel change of ó; and the double e and ö sound (see introduction to letter E); all these four letters were lost about the same time, and so early that few MSS. use them; they are not noticed in this Dictionary, except now and then for etymological purposes. Some three or four centuries later, three other vowels vanished, viz. the y sound in all the three letters y, ý, ey, which became respectively =i, í, ei; but the former are still preserved in writing and printing. The MSS. down to the Reformation make in most cases a sharp distinction between the i and y sound, as also the poets; yet one very ancient MS. of the 12th century (Arna-Magn. 623, see Frump. pp. 42-48) is remarkable for its confounding both letters. The same confusion is observable in Anglo-Saxon; whereas in Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, the distinction of i and y is still strictly kept up. As for Icel. we suspect that the change began in some remote district at an early time, until many centuries later it was suddenly adopted throughout the whole country.

The Icel. is not, in its pronunciation, a strongly accented language, (the acutes, as stated above, are marks of diphthongs, not of accent,) and is in this respect nearest in sound to the French. In modulation the Icel. is in the main trochaic (— ◡ | — ◡), and arsis and thesis follow alternately one after another: secondly, all root syllables are accentuated, but inflexive syllables have no accent, e. g. bärnä, händä, böðä, härðän, fägrä; in bisyllabic compounds both the root syllables are accentuated, but the second with only a half accent, which we mark by ˘, e. g. säm-bänd, hüg-böð, as also in strong inflexions like -andi, -astr, e. g. eigändi, härðästän: if one of the words which form a compound falls in the third syllable it is accentuated, e. g. bärnä-güll, bärnä-güllí, händä-vörk (but händ-vörk), because in this case the arsis falls on the third syllable which is a root: in trisyllabic words with bisyllabic inflexion the third syllable is sounded ˘, e. g. lausnärínn, hüg-ünär, söngäðíst, sönnleikänn, hentügäst, trúär-ínnar (fidei), näðar-ínnär, höföing-jännä, and that even though the second syllable is a root syllable, e. g. úppväknäðr, äfsökün: words like bléssümärínnär, mískünärínnär, dröttningürínnär, etc. are dactylic. Root and inflexion on the one hand and the trochaic flow on the other are felt all along, mutually resisting or aiding one another as to the measure of a syllable; accordingly, whenever the arsis falls on ◡ it becomes ˘, if on ˘ it becomes —. In the best Icel. poets half-accentuated syllables may form full rhyme, by a poetical licence; thus, in the Passiu-Sálmur more than eight score, and in Bínaðar-balkr more than two score of such rhymes are found, e. g.

Mig hefir ljúfur Lausnarínn leitt inn í náðar grasgärd sinn.
Huggun er manni mönnum äð miskun Guðs hefir svo tilskikkað.
Íðranin blíðkar aptur Guð ei verður syndin tilreiknuð.

Þærnarlaus aldrei byrjuð sé burtför af þínu heimile.
Þú veizt ei hvern þú hittir þar heldur en þessir Gyðingar.
Því hjartað mitt er helmingað, hlakka eg til äð finna það.

SUBSTANTIVES.

A. STRONG NOUNS, i. e. the more complex kind of Declension in which the gen. sing. ends in a Consonant.

1st Declension, gen. sing. -s, nom. pl. -ar.					2nd Declension, gen. sing. -ar, nom. pl. -ir.			3rd Declension, nom. pl. -r.
SING.	NOM.	heim-r	himin-n	lækn-ir	fund-r	bekk-r	kött-r	vetr
	GEN.	heim-s	himin-s	lækn-is	fund-ar	bekk-jar	katt-ar	vetr-ar
	DAT.	heim-i	himn-i	lækn-i	fund-i	bekk	kett-i	vetr-i
	ACC.	heim	himin	lækn-i	fund	bekk	kött	vetr
PLUR.	NOM.	heim-ar	himn-ar	lækn-ar	fund-ir	bekk-ir	kett-ir	vetr	eigend-r
	GEN.	heim-a	himn-a	lækn-a	fund-a	bekk-ja	katt-a	vetr-a	eigand-a
	DAT.	heim-um	himn-um	lækn-um	fund-um	bekk-jum	kött-um	vetr-um	eigund-um
	ACC.	heim-a	himn-a	lækn-a	fund-i	bekk-i	kött-u	vetr	eigend-r

Feminine.

1st Declension, gen. sing. -ar, nom. pl. -ir.				2nd Declension, gen. sing. and nom. pl. -ar.			3rd Declension, nom. pl. -r.
SING.	NOM.	tíð	höfn	sól	nál	fit	heið-r	eik	bók
	GEN.	tíð-ar	hafn-ar	sól-ar	nál-ar	fit-jar	heið-ar	eik-ar	bók-ar
	DAT.	tíð	höfn	sól-u	nál	fit	heið-i	eik	bók
	ACC.	tíð	höfn	sól	nál	fit	heið-i	eik	bók
PLUR.	NOM.	tíð-ir	hafn-ir	sól-ir	nál-ar	fit-jar	heið-ar	eik-r	bæk-r
	GEN.	tíð-a	hafn-a	sól-a	nál-a	fit-ja	heið-a	eik-a	bók-a
	DAT.	tíð-um	höfn-um	sól-um	nál-um	fit-jum	heið-um	eik-um	bók-um
	ACC.	tíð-ir	hafn-ir	sól-ir	nál-ar	fit-jar	heið-ar	eik-r	bæk-r

Neuter.

1st Declension, gen. sing. -s.				2nd Declension.
SING.	NOM.	skip	barn	nes	högg	klæði	riki
	GEN.	skip-s	barn-s	nes-s	högg-s	klæði-s	riki-s
	DAT.	skip-i	barn-i	nes-i	högg-vi	klæði	riki
	ACC.	skip	barn	nes	högg	klæði	riki
PLUR.	NOM.	skip	börn	nes	högg	klæði	riki
	GEN.	skip-a	barn-a	nes-ja	högg-va	klæð-a	rik-ja
	DAT.	skip-um	börn-um	nes-jum	högg-um	klæð-um	rik-jum
	ACC.	skip	börn	nes	högg	klæði	riki

B. WEAK NOUNS, i. e. the simpler kind of Declension in which the gen. sing. ends in a Vowel.

Masculine.				Feminine.			Neuter.
SING.	NOM.	tím-i	steð-i	tung-a	ald-a	ell-i	aug-a	hjart-a
	GEN.	} tím-a	} steð-ja	} tung-u	} öld-u	} ell-i (unchanged)	} aug-a (unchanged)
	DAT.
	ACC.
PLUR.	NOM.	tím-ar	steð-jar	tung-ur	öld-ur	no plur.	aug-u	hjört-u
	GEN.	tím-a	steð-ja	tung-na			aug-na	hjart-na
	DAT.	tím-um	steð-jum	tung-um	öld-um		aug-um	hjört-um
	ACC.	tím-a	steð-ja	tung-ur	öld-ur		aug-u	hjört-u

STRONG NOUNS.—Masculine.

Remarks on the 1st Declension: I. heimr: words of this form are found almost in every column of the Dictionary, and are therefore usually only marked 'm.' 2. about half a score of masculines have a characteristic v, which appears before a vowel, hör-r, hjör-r, bör-r (poët.), söng-r, má-r, sæ-r, snjá-r (sjó-r, sújór), sör-var (poët., pl.); in dat. sing. hör-vi, . . . söng-vi, má-vi, sæ-vi, snjá-vi; in pl. hör-var, söng-var, sújór-var. The dat. in -vi is now obsolete, but the pl. is still used. 3. remarks on the inflexion, a. the nominative: -r assimilates with the final radicals l, n, s: in words with long root vowel, ál-l, gál-l, hvál-l, hól-l, kjól-l, stól-l, fil-l, hæl-l, þræl-l, flein-n, stein-n, svein-n, brún-n, dún-n, hún-n, ás-s, bás-s, lás-s, haus-s, hnaus-s, meis-s, ís-s, ós-s, etc. In mod. usage the inflex. -s in ás-s . . . ós-s is dropped, as is the -r after a radical r, in ár-r, aur-r, hver-r, her-r, geir-r, leir-r, hör-r, mör-r, þór-r, hamar-r, and thus the nom. becomes like the acc., ás, bás, . . . ár, hver, hamar, etc.:—the r is dropped, in words like afl, gafl, skafi, nagl, vagl, fugl, karl, jarl, jaxl, lax, hrafi, stafn, ofn, stofn, þorn, vagn, svefn, þegnl, geisl, gisl, háls, fress, sess, foss, koss, kross, þurs, dans, fans, angr, klungr, hungr, akr, hafr, sigr, otr, lúðr, hrúðr, naðr, nykr, veðr (weither), vikr, gróðr, aldr, Baldr, galdr, öldr, meldr, arðr, hlátr, bólst, austr, lestr, bakstr, mokstr, apaldr. β. the genitive; graut-r, skóg-r, höfund-r have -ar in gen. as the 2nd declension. γ. the dative; some words of this declension drop the -i, but it is difficult to draw an exact line, as this use is rather a licence than a law:—all the words in -leik-r, kærl-leik (charitati), fríð-leik (venustati), sann-leik (veritati); as also leik-r, fil-l, kíll-l, skríll-l, (dat. fil, kíll, skríll), hrepp-r, lepp-r: words with long root vowel and a final p or f, hóf-r, hóf-r, hóp-r, sóp-r: words with ei as root vowel, dat. hleif, Hm. 51 (but hleif-i, 140); sveip, meis, sveig, dverg (but dvergi, Ýt. 2), strákr, snákr, skákr, bát and bát-i (scapbae); þór, kór, flór, bor, hor, from þór-r, etc.; daun (odori), dúnn, Brún, hún, múl, múr, dúr, etc., for dún-i . . . dúr-i, which are obsolete; so also búkr and búk-i, dúkr and dúk-i, múg and múg-i, reit and reit-i: those with a long vowel as final, e. g. jó, skó, ná, Frey, þey, from jó-r . . . þey-r:—in masculines with a characteristic v the old dat. form is -vi, whereas the mod. drops both letters, thus dat. mör, hör, má, snjó, for the old mör-vi, hör-vi, má-vi, snjó-vi. Nouns with the inflexive endings -ingr, -ungr seldom drop the i, konung-i, búning-i: words with a radical r never, e. g. galdr-i, aldr-i, not aldr, galdr: the proper names of this declension very seldom drop it, e. g. Þorleif-i, Þorlák-i, Þorleik-i: dag-r, dat. deg-i, but as pr. name Dag. In old writers many of these apocopate forms begin to appear, e. g. þó-r-i (the god) is only found in a single instance used by a poet of the 8th century; yet the decay of the dat. inflexion is a little increasing, though the use, ancient and modern, is in the main still the same.

II. himinn: the contraction in dat. sing. and plur. is to be noted, and the assimilation in nom.; hereto belong all masc. with inflex. -inn, -unn, -arr, -urr, -ill, -ull: 1. -nn, aptan-n, arin-n, dróttin-n, hinin-n, Óðin-n, morgin-n. 2. -arr, hamar-r, kamar-r, humar-r, jadar-r, nafar-r, etc.: pr. names in -arr (the -ar in these is etymologically different) are not contracted, e. g. Einar-r, dat. Einar-i. 3. -urr, fjotur-r, tötur-r, jöfur-r; but not so the pr. names, e. g. Gizur-r, dat. Gizur-i. 4. -ll, bagal-l, kaðal-l, vaðal-l, bíðil-l, ketil-l (q. v.), lykil-l, jökul-l, röðul-l, stöðul-l, söðul-l, möndul-l, öngul-l, þöngul-l, etc.: even the pr. names are contracted, e. g. Egil-l, dat. Agli; Ketil-l, dat. Katli.

III. læknir: hereto belong only a score of common words used in prose writing, bætir, ein-ir, elr-ir, end-ir, eyr-ir, fell-ir, hell-ir, hers-ir, hirð-ir, kas-ir, kyll-ir, létt-ir, lækn-ir, miss-ir, mæl-ir, mæn-ir, nenn-ir, reyn-ir, skelm-ir, steyp-ir, verm-ir, víð-ir, vis-ir, þerr-ir: pr. names as, Grett-ir, Brest-ir, Bein-ir, Stein-ir, Svær-ir, Þór-ir, Æg-ir: local names, Geyss-ir, Keil-ir. 2. a great many (more than a hundred) poet. and obsolete words.

In mod. usage the declension of these words is altered and the r is kept throughout, whereby nom. dat. acc. sing. become alike, hell-ir, gen. helli-r, dat. acc. hell-ir, pl. hell-rar, hell-ra, hell-rum, or lækn-irar, lækn-ira, lækn-irum:—the words with an inflex. -ari were originally, as shewn by Gothic bōcar-eis, of this declension, but now they are all weak masc., and the sole instances left on record of the old inflexion are the gen. mútar-is by Sighvat, and vartar-is, Landn. 197 (v. l. 18) in a verse of the 10th century.

Remarks on the 2nd Declension: the words belonging hereto are far less in number than those of the 1st, perhaps seven score of simple nouns or thereabout, but they are often irregular, we shall therefore try to give a list of them; their marks, besides the plur. -ir, are the freq. dropping of the dat. sing. -i, the acc. plur. -u, and the characteristic i:

I. fundr: skrið-r, stuld-r, sull-r, sult-r, veg-r, frið-r, kvið-r (a womb), feld-r, verð-r, brest-r, gest-r, rétt-r, kost-r, burð-r, skurð-r, purð-r, fund-r, mund-r, grís-s, ná-r:—inflex. -aðr, -öfr, búnað-r, fögnuð-r, hagnað-r, jöfnuð-r, getnað-r, söknud-r, dugnað-r, þrifnað-r, skilnað-r, etc.:—stað-r, brag-r, mat-r, sal-r, haun-r, svan-r, val-r, sauð-r, óð-r, snúð-r, þrótt-r, bol-r, dug-r, hug-r, bug-r, grunn-r, mun-r, hlut-r, skut-r, vin-r, grip-r, glepp-r, lýð-r,—in these words the dat. -i is dropped, as also in compd nouns in -skap-r, gleðskap-r, fílskap-r, etc.:—pr. names in -vðr, -aðr, -kon have also -ar in gen., Bárd-r, Þórð-r, Sigurð-r, Þránd-r, Eyvind-r, Geirröð-r, Sigröð-r, Hákon, etc.:—in pl., pr. names of some people (countries or counties), Danir, Frisir, Valir, Indir, Vindir, Lappir, Grikkir, Tyrkir, Kyralir, Kvenir, Serkir, Vanir (the gods): Egðir, Eynir, Háleygir, Mœrir, Sygnir, Þilir, þrœndir (in Norway): -dœlir, Lax-dœlir, Vatns-dœlir, etc. Irregularities; some of the words above have -s in gen. sing. like those of the 1st declension, e. g. hal-r, val-r, ham-r, svan-r, bol-r, dug-r, grunn-r, brest-r, gest-r, grís-s, glepp-r, lýð-r, ná-r:—dal-r, hval-r, staf-r, mar-r, hver-r, ref-r, sel-r, mel-r have now usually -ir in pl., but in olden times they had -ar, and belonged to the 1st declension; they also drop the -i in dat. sing.

II. bekkr: with characteristic j, which appears before a vowel in a score and a half of words; bed-r, vef-r, bekk-r, hrekk-r, stekk-r, flekk-r, leyg-r, eyk-r, reykr-r, legg-r, vegg-r, belg-r, elg-r, merg-r, streng-r, þveng-r, hrygg-r, drykk-r, hlykk-r, byl-r, hyl-r, ryf-r, byr-r, hyr-r, styr-r, lek-r, bæ-r. 2. dreng-r, segg-r, stegg-r, etc. have -s in gen. sing.

Almost all those above (with characteristic j) also drop the dat. -i in sing. 3. with characteristic v; sjó-r, gen. sjó-var, pl. sjó-ir.

III. köttur: with an old acc. pl. in -u, prob. caused by a characteristic u (cp. the Goth. airus, quibus, ūgus, vabstus, valus), three score words: 1. with a plain root vowel; kvið-r (dictum), kvist-r, kvitt-r, lið-r, lim-r, lit-r, sið-r, smið-r, stig-r, tig-r, víð-r, rétt-r (a fold), bur-r: most of these words drop the -i in dat. (lið, lim, lit, sið, smið, stig).

2. with a change in the root vowel,—ö, a, e, lög-r, mög-r, völ-r, völl-r, vönd-r, vörð-r, mörd-r, svörð-r, böll-r, bök-r, knörr, gröpt-r, örn, flöt-r, hött-r, knött-r, kött-r, vött-r, köst-r, vöxt-r, löst-r, mökk-r, Höð-r, Hörð-r, Snört-r, spól-r (vide bring-spellir):—jö, ja, í, björn, fjörð-r, hjört-r, kjöl-r, mjöld-r, skjöld-r, Njörð-r (the god):—á, æ, ár-r, ás-s, drátt-r, hátt-r, mátt-r, slátt-r, þráð-r, spán-n, bálk-r:—ó, á, búg-r:—o, y, son-r: the acc. pl. -u has been changed into -i, first, in árr, áss, making áru, ásu, which changed to æri, æsi, a change which took place very early, and later in other words, which have now all got a regular acc. in -i (limi, firði, ketti, hetti, syni, etc.); syni for sonu occurs even in old MSS. 3. Tó björn (p. 66) add that when used as a pr. name it has in mod. usage a gen., Björn-s, not Bjarnar (e. g. Sigurðr Björnsson).

Remarks on the 3rd Declension: I. ordinary substantives, 1. gen. -ar, mánað-r, pl. -r, mod. -ir; fót-r, q. v.; vetr, fingr, q. v. 2. gen. -s, mað-r, gen. mann-s, pl. menn (með-r); nagl, gen. nagl-s, pl. negl. II. eigendr: the plur. of participles, when used as subst., as grátend-r, fagnend-r, gefend-r: hereto belong the plur. of bóndi, frændi, fjándi, q. v. III. the plur. of faðir, bróðir may also be reckoned in this declension.

The Icel. is the only one of all Teutonic languages, except Gothic, that has preserved (up to the present day) the masc. inflexive -r (Goth. -s); even in the earliest Anglo-Saxon it is dropped, and the nom. sing. represents the naked root in the masculines as well as in the feminines and neuters.

Feminine.

Remarks on the 1st Declension: I. tíð: almost in every column or page of the Dictionary, and simply marked 'f.'

II. höfn: about four score words, with a in the root vowel changed into ö, caused by a hidden characteristic u, which appears in dat. sing. of a few of them: 1. fönn, önn, bönn, höglð, hrönn, hvönn, spönn, ögn, lögn, sögn, þögn, höfn, körf, mörk (sylva), örkr, þökk, Hlökk, vömb, þömb, skömm, vömm, klöpp, löpp, ösp, vöst, öxl, mjölt, björg, björkr, tjörn, Gjöll (mythol.), löð, tröð, sög, kör, kröm, möl; and in mod. usage, dögg, lögg, öx, kvörm (kvern), q. v. 2. with -u in dat. sing.; rödd, rönd, strönd, önd (anima), jörð, hjörð, höll, þöll, mjölt, mörk (sylva), stöng, töng, röst. 3. -r in nom. pl.; önd (a duck), mörk (marca), hönd (dat. hendi), röng, tönn. 4. the following had in olden times -ar in plur. and thus belonged to the 2nd declension, but changed into -ir at an early date, so that this is the usual form in Editions of Sagas and the sole form in mod. usage,—

a. with a single final, röð, döf, gröf, gjöf, nöf, töf, fjöð, spjör, sök, dvöl, fjöl, kvöl, löm, grön, mön, þön, för, skör, kös, nö, hvöt, vök. with double final, vörr, þörf, gjörð, görn. It is likely that at earlier times many more of these words had the plur. -ar and dat. -u; the -ar remained longest in those with a single final, and the dat. -u in those having dd, nd, ll, ng as final; dat. sak-u (culpa) occurs on Runic stones, and gjaf-u, dval-u, etc. may also be supposed.

III. sól: with a characteristic u, which appears sometimes in dat. sing. alone, sometimes in both dat. and acc.: 1. only in dat. in sál, ván, sól, braut, laut, þraut, fold, mold, þjóð, grund, lund, mund, stund, und, ull, hurð, urð, dögg (irreg.), rödd, etc. (above); nött, nigbt, in plur. nætr (3rd declension); ey dat. ey-ju, and egg dat. egg-ju belong to the 2nd declension: mæ-r, dat. mey-ju; and even röddu (vocem), Pass. 19. 9, but that is a poet. licence. 2. fem. pr. names ending in -björg, -laug, -rún, -ný, -ey, -leif, Ingi-björg, Guð-björg, Þor-björg, Vil-borg, Ás-laug, Guð-laug, Guð-rún, Sig-rún, Sig-ný, Ás-ný (gen. -nýjar), Þór-ey, Guð-leif, Ingi-leif; in names of foreign origin, Kristín, Katrín, Elín; in all the pr. names the -u fixedly remains (in the appellatives it is often dropped), and this not only in the dat. but as a common case for dat. and acc.

3. feminines with the inflexive -ing, foð-ing, eld-ing, drottn-ing, kerl-ing, kenn-ing, þekk-ing, vírð-ing, send-ing, bygg-ing, uppstign-ing, sæ-ing, etc., so many that it would be in vain to try to record them all; they have -ar in plur. and thus belong to the 2nd declension: in mod. usage many of them have the -u in common for dat. and acc., thus drottning-u = reginae and reginam, kenning-u = doctrinae and doctrinam, foðing-u = nativitatem and nativitati, but this is very rare in old writers, yet drottning reginam (acc.), Mar. 232, 304. β. in -ung, djörf-ung, hörm-ung, laun-ung, etc., but only in dat.; they have also -ar in plur.

Remarks on the 2nd Declension: I. nál: 1. the feminines in -ing, -ung, vide above. 2. over two score simple nouns, ár, ál, nál, skál, tág, flaug, laug, rauf, dreif, kleif, veig, geil, seil, hlein, rein, vél, heid, rim, sin, hlíf, smið, fílk, kví, for, brú (q. v.), rún, lend, kvern, öx (the old form), alin:—with radical r, gymsr, lifr, vinstr, vigr:—only in plur., leif-ar, hraer-ar, gerð-ar, herð-ar, öfg-ar, ás-ar, hreys-ar, slíð-ar-ar, gjöll-ar, meidm-ar (poët.): heterogeneous are, lim-ar, tál-ar (lim, tál in sing. are neut.): heteroclyte, lyg-ar, görsim-ar (sing. indel. weak fem.) 3. add the words röð, döf, etc. above recorded (1st declension II. 4).

II. fit: over a score of words, with characteristic j, which appears before a vowel, hel, skel, ben, eng, egg, dregg, ey, des, fles, il, vin (only in local names, e. g. Björg-vin), nit, klyf, lyf, nyt, dys, nauðsyn, Frigg (the goddess), fiski (q. v.), mæ-r (q. v.), pl. mey-jar:—only in plur., ref-jar, síf-jar, skæf-jar, meuf-jar, skyn-jar, hreð-jar. 2. with characteristic u, ör, gen. sing. nom. plur. ör-var, stöð, böð, dögg, gen. stöð-var, böð-var, dögg-var; only in plur., göt-var (obsolete). Heterogene are the local names in Norway; in fem. plur., Holt-ar, Hús-ar, Hús-ar, Torg-ar, Tún-ar, Þorp-ar, Nes-jar (holt, hús, hris, torg, tún, þorp, nes are all neut. appellatives), Ló-ar, Les-jar, Vág-ar, Vin-jar, Kvild-ar, etc., see Munch's pref. (p. x) to Norge's Beskriv.

III. heiðr: feminines with an inflex. -r in nom. and characteristic i, which has caused a vowel change in most of them, and which appears in dat. acc. sing.: 1. about a score of appellatives; heið-r, veið-r, Hleið-r, erm-r, helg-r (a holiday), eyr-r, mer-r, reyð-r, brúð-r, byrð-r, fyll-r, floð-r, æð-r (an eider-duck), æð-r (vena), myr-r, vætt-r, öx (qs. öx-r); ký-r, xð-r, sý-r (q. v.), all three contr. in dat. and plur.; the obsolete þý-r, rýg-r, gýg-r (pl. þý-jar, rýg-jar, gýg-jar):—in mod. usage the -r has changed into -i, in heið-i, veið-i, erm-i, eyr-i, mer-i, byrð-i, fyll-i, flœð-i, ðx-i; otherwise they retain the full declension and must not be confounded with the indeclinable weak feminines glœð-i, ell-i, etc. In the west of Icel. the -r is still in use in flœð-r, veid-r, reyð-r (steypi-reyð-r), and all over Icel. in ký-r, æ-r; as also in brúð-r, only here the -r is kept through all cases, so that the word has an indeclinable sing., cp. the use of this word in Ísl. Þjóðs. i. 340, 341 (omitted s. v. p. 84).

2. a great many fem. pr. names: simple, Auð-r, Fríð-r, Gerð-r, Hild-r, Þrúð-r, Unn-r, Urð-r (mythol.): compds, Sigríð-r, Ástríð-r, Guðríð-r, Þuríð-r, Ragnheið-r, Alfhæið-r, Hallgerð-r, Ingigerð-r, Valgerð-r, Þorgerð-r, Gunnhild-r, Ragnhild-r, Ingveld-r, Þór-hild-r, Hólmfríð-r, etc.: those in -uðr, qs. -unnr, Steinun-n, Ingun-n, Iðun-u, Þórun-n: in -dís, Ás-dís, Her-dís, Vig-dís, Þór-dís, Álf-dís, dat. acc. dísí (omitted s. v. p. 100), and by way of analogy the foreign abbadis (abbess), as if compounded with dís; foreign pr. names, Margrét, Elizabeth, etc.: in pr. names the inflexive -r is in full use over Icel., so that Baugeið, Randið, etc. in old MSS. are only Norwegianisms. ☞ The Icel. feminines in -r answer to Gothic -is, and are different from the Gothic feminines in -s, such as anst-s, alf-s; of these latter the Icel. nauð-r (need, decl. as tíð) is the sole remnant. It is worth noticing that the Icel. feminine proper names have preserved and represent the oldest and fullest declension of feminines.

Remarks on the 3rd Declension, which contains about two score words:

1. eik, steik, geit, greip, grind, gnit, kinn, kind (in mod. usage), flík, spík, tík, vík, rit, mjólk, kverk (but in mod. usage kverk-ar).

2. with changed vowel, bók, brók, glöð, nótt, rót, gát, nátt, tóun, hönd, önd (anas), mörk, fló, kló, ló, ró, tá, gás, lús, mús, brún, stöð, hnot; plur. bæc-r, glœð-r, gæt-r, næt-r, tenn-r, hend-r, end-r, flec-r, tæ-r, gæs-s, mýs-s, brýn-n, stœð-r, hnet-r (but in present use, stœð-ir, hnot-ir).

☞ A very few of these words have also -r in nom. sing., viz. mjólk, mörk, nátt, vík; bæc-r from bók also occurs, though seldom; rist-r from rist, Pass. 33. 4, is poët.

3. to this class we may refer the plur. dyr-r (q. v.), gen. dura; and the latter r is inflexive, and the form analogous to ký-r from kú; and the plur. ký-r, æ-r (q. v.)

4. to this declension may also be referred the plur. of dóttir, systir, móðir, although the r is here radical. ☞ The monosyllabic feminines with a final long vowel are contracted, á, brá, gjá, Gná, ljá, lá, krá, rá, slá, skrá, spá, þrá; as to the declension of these words vide á, p. 48, and brá, p. 77; ló, Ey-gló, sló, stó, þró, dat. lóm . . . ; úsjá (q. v.) has no r in gen., nor trú, frú (q. v.) The root vowel of these words is not changed, and accordingly they are classed with the 1st declension of feminines, but in a contracted form.

Neuter.

Remarks on the 1st Declension: I. skip: forms like this are regular, and occur throughout the book, simply marked 'n.'

II. barn: to this belong neuters with a as root vowel, which in plur. becomes ö; a change due to a lost characteristic vowel in neut. plur., answering to -a in Goth., -u in A. S. (cp. Lat. cornu): as a radical a is the only vowel which is affected by an inflexive u, the remains of this inflexion are only found in the words with that root vowel; these words are many:

1. single words, bað, blað, vað, haf, vaf, flag, drag, bak, flak, rak, tak, þak, skjál, far, skar, var, glas, fat, gat, afi, tafl, fall, fjall, kall, band, grand, barð, skarð, bjarg, bragð, flagð, nafn, safn, gagl, hagl, tagl, agn, gagn, hald, vald, magn, lamb, mark, rann, happ, hapt, skapt, hlæss, gjald, spjall, tjald, hvarf, starf, barn, kast, ax, fax, sax, vatn:—only in plur., lög, glöð, sköp, rök: many have no plur.

2. with an inflexive -að, -al, etc., changed into u, hér-að, hundr-að, for-að, óð-al, plur. hér-uð, hundr-uð, óð-ul: sum-ar (prop. a masc.), plur. sum-ur: gaman, dat. contr. gamni: höfuð, dat. höfði.

III. nes: to this belong more than a score of words, with characteristic j, geð, veð, nef, stef, egg, hregg, skegg, el, sel, ben, fen, gren, men, ber, sker, nes, flet, net, fley, grey, hey, kið, rif, gil, þil, fyl, kyn, ný.

IV. högg: to this belong a score of words, with characteristic v, högg, skrók, kjöt, böl, él, fól, mjöl, fjör, smjör, bygg, glygg, lyng, fræ, læ, hræ, hey: only plur. söð. ☞ The dat. högg-vi, kjöt-vi, böl-vi, smjör-vi, bygg-vi, fræ-vi, hey-vi, etc. began to be uncommon even in old writers and are in mod. usage sounded högg-i, skrók-i, kjöt-i, etc., whereas in plur. the v still remains, e. g. sölv-a-fjara. For fé, kné, tré, see these words.

Remarks on the 2nd Declension, containing bisyllabic derivative words with characteristic i. Most of these words are derivative and with a changed vowel wherever possible. A great number are declined like klæð-i, so that it is difficult to give a complete list of them, e. g. frelsi (by misprint called fem., p. 172); in the Dictionary they are simply marked 'n.'

II. ríki: to this belong those with a final g, k, which have j (the characteristic i) in gen. and dat. plur., e. g. fylki, ríki, síki, vígi, lægi, and many others.

WEAK NOUNS.—Masculine.

The original characteristic of weak nouns in Teutonic languages is the inflexive -u, of which in Icel. the sole remnant is the gen. plur. of the feminines and neuters.

Remarks on this Declension: I. tími: forms like this occur almost in every page of the Dictionary, and are simply marked 'a, m.'

II. steði: to this belong only a few primitive words with characteristic j, as aðil-i, bryt-i, steð-i, vil-i, nið-i; the poët. and obsolete skyt-i, tygg-i; poët. pr. names, Bel-i, Ið-i, Skyl-i, Þrið-i, Vig-i; compds in -skegg-i, eyjar-skeggjar; names of people in -ver-jar, Gaulver-jar, Oddaver-jar, and in mod. usage, Þjóðver-jar, Spánver-jar, etc., cp. -varii in old Teutonic names in Latin writers:—compds in -ingi, höfðing-i, heiðing-i, kunning-i, fœðing-i, banding-i, leysing-i, auming-i, ræning-i, Væring-i, Skræling-i, etc., pl. höfðing-jar, etc.: in -yrki or -virki, ein-virki, spell-virki, etc., pl. einvirk-jar, Tyrki (a-Turk, mod.), etc.:— for lé, gen. ljá (léa), and klé, gen. kléa, see these words. There is a curious inflexive -n left in pl. of the obsolete poët. words, brag-nar, gum-nar, got-nar, from bragi, goti, gumi. ☞ Some masculines have a double declension, both strong and weak, hug-r and hug-i, hlut-r and hlut-i, hölm-r and hölm-i, stall-r and stall-i, munn-r and munn-i, garð-r and garð-i, odd-r and odd-i, nið-r and nið-i, drang-r and drang-i, linn-r and linn-i, líkam-r and líkam-i, glugg-r and glugg-i, -ingr and -ingi; all derivative words in -leikr have both forms, -leik-r and -leik-i; cp. also pr. names as Örn and Árn-i, Björn and Bjarn-i, Finn-r and Finn-i, Odd-r and Odd-i, Gísl and Gísl-i, Geir-r and Geir-i, etc.

Feminine.

Remarks on the 1st Declension: I. tunga: this form, marked 'u, f.' in the Dictionary, contains many hundreds of appellatives, and several pr. names, Halla, Ása, Þóra, Hall-dóra, etc.: frú (q. v.) is contracted; so also trú-a, gen. trú; the pr. names Gró-a, Gó-a, gen. Gró, Gó.

II. alda: to this belong all the feminines with a as root vowel, cp. introduction to letter A: völv-a, a sýbl, gen. völv-u, pl. völv-ur. ☞ Only a few of the words of this declension (little more than a score, or about two or three per cent. of the whole) form a gen. plur.; these are esp. the following, vaka, vika, klukka, ekkjá, rekkja, kirkja (gen. ekk-na . . . kirk-na), stúlka, tala, vala, sála (sálna, Mar. passim), kúla, súla, gata, gáta, sáta, varta, dúfa, þúfa, rjúpa, ríma, vísa, hosa, messa, kelda, skýlda; kona has kven-na; the nom. of stjarna (a star) and skepna (a creature) may also serve for gen. plur., skaparinn stjarna, creator stellarum, in a hymn: in some few cases the gen. plur. is formed by adding the article to the nom. sing., thus gyðja-nna (dearum), gryfja-nna (fovearum): in many cases the gen. sing. is used collectively, thus Icel. say, öldu-gangr, impetus undarum,—the words denoting wave, alda, býla, býlgja, are all of this declension, and none of them have a proper gen. plur.; bylg-na is found (bylgna-gangr, Mar. 269), but ald-na, bár-na are impossible forms, one might perhaps say alda-nna, býlgja-nna; sögu-bók, liber historiarum; the gen. saga-a, historiarum (sagna-ritari), is rarely used and is borrowed from sögn. Sometimes this deficiency may become puzzling, chiefly in translating Latin into Icel.; in original writers it is not felt. In olden times the number of those words that allowed of a gen. was still more limited.

Remarks on the Indefinable Feminine:—with perhaps the sole exception of ævi (life) and elli (age) all the words of this declension are derivatives from adjectives and formed by a change of vowel, whenever the root vowel of the adjective is changeable; almost all these words are abstract (denoting quality), and so have no plural; forms like glœði-r (ludi) or æfi-r (vitae) are quite exceptional and ungrammatical:

1. single nouns, about two score of words; glœði, helgi (holiness), ergi, leti, gremi, helti, speki, hugrekki, frœði, moði, cæði (fury), hæsi, kæti, reiði, feiti, bleyði, hreysti, veyki, háreysti, fylli, hylli, fýsi, sýki, bírti, snilli, gírti, teiti, hvíti, örvi, mildi, blíndi, atgörvi, hnöggvi, myki: lygi and görsími in sing., but heteroclitic in plur.

2. derivatives; -semi from adj. -samr, skyn-semi (very many): compds in -fræði, -speki, but if prefixed as a double compd they take s, thus e. g. fræði-bók, but guðfræðis-bók; skynsemi (rationalis), but skynsemis-trú (fides rationalis, i. e. rationalismus): -ni from adjectives in -inn, e. g. heið-ni, Krist-ni, hlýð-ni, and many others: -skynni, -sýni, e. g. glám-skynni, víð-sýni: -gi from adj. -igr, e. g. græð-gi, kyn-gi; -ýðgi, harð-ýðgi, etc.: -gli from adj. -gull, sann-sögli (veracitas) from sann-sögull (verax): in -andi only a few, kvæð-andi, hyggi-andi, afr-endi, Verð-andi (the Norn): in local names, Skáni, Erri, Ylfi (islands): Skaði (the goddess) is declined as masc.

Neuter.

Remarks on this Declension: it contains, 1. six words denoting parts of the body, auga, eyra, hjarta, lunga, nýra, eista. 2. a few appellatives, almost obsolete, none of which form a gen. plur.; bjúga, ökla, síma, leika, hnoða, viðbeina, vetta (in ekki vetta, no wigbt; hvat-vetna, every wigbt).

ADJECTIVES.

A. STRONG DECLENSION, as in Substantives, used of Adjectives, both positive and superlative, when indefinite.

		Masc.	Fem.	Neut.		Masc.	Fem.	Neut.		Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
SING.	NOM.	ung-r	ung	ung-t	fagr	fögr	fagr-t	há-r	há	há-tt
	GEN.	ung-s	ung-rar	ung-s	fagr-s	fagr-ar	fagr-s	há-s	há-rrar	há-s
	DAT.	ung-um	ung-ri	ung-u	fögr-um	fagr-i	fögr-um	há-vum	há-ri	há-vum
	ACC.	ung-an	ung-á	ung-t	fagr-an	fagr-a	fagr-t	há-van	há-va	há-tt
PLUR.	NOM.	ung-ir	ung-ar	ung	fagr-ir	fagr-ar	fögr	há-vir	há-var	há
	GEN.	ung-ra	in all genders		fagr-a	in all genders		há-rra	in all genders
	DAT.	ung-um	in all genders		fögr-um	in all genders		há-vum	in all genders
	ACC.	ung-a	ung-ar	ung	fagr-a	fagr-ar	fögr	há-va	há-var	há

THE ARTICLE.

PARTICIPIAL ADJECTIVES in -inn.

		Masc.	Fem.	Neut.		Masc.	Fem.	Neut.		Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
SING.	NOM.	ný-r	ný	ný-tt	hin-n	hin	hi-t	komin-n	konn-ar	komi-t
	GEN.	ný-s	ný-rrar	ný-s	hin-s	hin-nar	hin-s	komin-s	komin-nar	komin-s
	DAT.	ný-jum	ný-ri	ný-ju	hin-um	hin-ni	hin-u	konn-um	komin-ni	konn-u
	ACC.	ný-jan	ný-ja	ný-tt	hin-n	hin-a	hi-t	komin-u	konn-a	komi-t
PLUR.	NOM.	ný-ir	ný-jar	ný	hin-ir	hin-ar	hin	konn-ir	konn-ar	komi-n
	GEN.	ný-rra	in all genders		hin-na	in all genders		komin-na	in all genders
	DAT.	ný-jum	in all genders		hin-um	in all genders		konn-um	in all genders
	ACC.	ný-ja	ný-jar	ný	hin-a	hin-a	hin	konn-a	konn-ar	komi-n

B. WEAK DECLENSION, used of Adjectives, both posit. and superl., when indef.; and general in compar. and part. act. sing.

		POSITIVE (definite).			COMPARATIVE (def. and indef.)			SUPERLATIVE (definite).
		Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
SING.	NOM.	ung-i	ung-a	ung-a	yng-ri	yng-ri	yng-ra	yng-sti	yng-sta	yng-sta
	GEN.	ung-a	ung-u	ung-a	yng-ra	yng-ri	yng-ra	yng-sta	yng-stu	yng-sta DAT.
	ACC.
PLUR.	NOM.	ung-u	in all genders	yng-ri	in all genders	yng-stu	in all genders
	GEN.
	DAT.
	ACC.
	DAT.	ung-um	in all genders	yng-rum	in all genders	yng-stum	in all genders

C. INDECLINABLE ADJECTIVES in -a and -i, see remarks below.

D. THE ARTICLE SUFFIXED TO NOUNS.

		Masc.	Fem.	Neut.		Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
SING.	NOM.	heimr-inn	tíð-in	skip-it	tími-nn	tunga-n	elli-n	auga-t
	GEN.	heims-ins	tíðar-innar	skips-ins	tíma-ns	tungu-nnar	elli-nnar	auga-ns
	DAT.	heimi-num	tíð-inni	skipi-nu	tíma-num	tungu-nni	elli-nni	auga-nu
	ACC.	heim-inn	tíð-ina	skip-it	tíma-na	tungu-na	elli-na	auga-t
PLUR.	NOM.	heimar-nir	tíðir-nar	skip-in	tímar-nir	tungur-nar		augu-n
	GEN.	heima-nna	tíða-nna	skipa-nna	tíma-nna	tungna-nna		augna-nna
	DAT.	heimu-num	tíðu-num	skipu-num	tímun-um	tungu-num		augun-um
	ACC.	heima-na	tíðir-nar	skip-in	tíma-na	tungur-nar		augu-n

Remarks on the Adjectives: I. the nom. masc. :— the nom. -r is dropped in fagr (qs. fagr-r), magr, dapr, apr, vakr, digr, vitr, bitr, lítr, lítr, snotr, forn, sýkn, frœkn, gjarn, frjáls, þurr, hvass, hress:—it is assimilated in bein-n, ein-n, hrein-n, sein-n, grœn-n, kœn-n, -rœn-n, væn-n, bryn-n, frýn-n, sýn-n, hál-l, heil-l, veil-l, sæl-l, fúl-l, hás-s, fús-s, læs-s, laus-s, ljós-s, vís-s, etc.; inflexive, lítill-l, mikill-l, gamall-l, vesall-l, förl-l, atal-l, spurul-l, þögl-l, heimill-l, etc. 2. the nom. fem. sing. represents the root of the adjective (ung, ný, há):—adjectives with a as root vowel change into ö in fem. sing. and neut. plur., e. g. all-r, öll, all-t; marg-r, mörg, marg-t; harð-r, hörr, har-t; hag-r, hög, hag-t; fagr, fögr, fagr-t; stak-r, stök, stak-t; van-r, vön, van-t; hvass, hvöss, hvas-t; varm-r, vörm, varm-t; sam-r, söm, sam-t; tam-r, töm, tam-t: in the inflexive -aðr, a is changed into u, aldrað-r, fem. öldruð; gamlað-r, fem. gömluð; gamal-l, fem. gömul; talað-r, fem. töluð, etc., see introduction to letter A, p. 1: this change is all that remains of an obsolete characteristic u, answering to the inflexive -u in Anglo-Saxon. 3. the nom. neut. sing. is formed by adding -t to the root :—after a long root vowel -u, e. g. há-tt, mjótt, ný-tt, grá-tt, hrá-tt, smá-tt, etc. :—the t assimilates with a final ð, e. g. mið-r, breið-r, blíð-r, stríð-r, fróð-r, góð-r, óð-r, stríð-r; in neut., mit-t, breit-t, blit-t, strít-t, frót-t, got-t, ót-t, etc. :—in long syllables with d or ð as final, the ð is dropped, as in harð-r, stirð-r, lynd-r, dœmd-r, reynd-r; in neut., har-t, stir-t, lyn-t, dœm-t, reyn-t, qs. harð-t, etc. :— the t is dropped in such words as reist-r, bratt-r; in neut., reist, bratt, etc.; cp. the participles of the second weak conjugation :— in the participles and adjectives in -aðr, the ð is dropped, e. g. elskað-r (amatus), elska-t (amatum), but in mod. usage elska-ð; and only the change of vowel marks the distinction between fem. and neut., e. g. töluð (dicta), but talað (dictum):—in adjectives in -inn, the root n is dropped before the neutral t, hi-t, heiði-t, komi-t, Kristi-t, qs. hin-t, heiðin-t, etc. 4. as to the cases, the inflexive -r in gen. and dat. sing. fem. and gen. pl. is assimilated into n in the words in -inn, and monosyllables in -nu with a long root vowel, thus, komin-na (q. v.), væn-na (venustorum), væn-ni (venustae, dat.), væn-nar (venustae, gen.), etc.: into l in similar words, e. g. sæl-l, heil-l, gamal-l, sæl-lar, gamallar (sæll-rar, gamall-rar, etc. are faulty forms); mikil-li, magnæ; litil-li, parvæ, etc.:—it is dropped in those with radical r, vitra, sapientium; fagri and fagnar, pulchræ: into s in words such as viss, e. g. vissa, certorum; but in mod. usage viss-ra and viss-ri, certæ; (fag-urri, fag-urarr are not right, although now and then used in mod. writers):—the r is doubled after a long vowel, há-rii altæ, mjó-ra tenerarum, at least in mod. usage; old writers seem to have spelt and sounded mjó-ra, njó-ri, etc.:—the -ar and -um are contracted after a long vowel, thus, blá-r caeruleas, blá-m caerulaeo.

5. contraction takes place. a. in a few words in -igr, -ugr, auð-igr, blóð-igr, úð-igr, göf-igr, öf-ugr, höf-igr, öfl-ugr, saur-igr, nauð-igr, móð-ugr, mál-ugr, úr-igr (poët.), mátt-igr; they are contracted before an inflexive vowel, auð-gan, auðg-ir, auðg-um, göfg-ir, úðg-ir, blóðg-ir, öfg-ir, höfg-ir . . . máttk-ir, etc.; in mod. usage the root is dissyllabic and not contracted, thus, auðugir, blóðugir, höfugir . . . máttugir, etc.: even in old writers other adjectives in -igr were not contracted, e. g. hróðigr, kröptugr, skyldugr, syndugr, síðugr, ráðigr,—hróðigan, e. g. ráðigan (not ráðgan), etc., both in old and mod. usage. β. in a few words in -ll, gamall, vesall, litill, mikill, hugall, þögull, etc.

II. há-r: to this belong over twenty words, with characteristic v, dygg-r, hrygg-r, styggr-r, glögg-r, hnögg-r, snögg-r, þróng-r, öng-r, dökk-r, þjókk-r (þykk-r), kvik-r, myrk-r, yrk-r, rösk-r, lösk-r, öl-r, föl-r, ör-r, gör-r, hös-r (obsolete), há-r, mjó-r, sljó-r (slœ-r); the v is freq. spelt with f in the words há-r, mjó-r, sljó-r, but not in the rest, see introduction to letter F. In mod. usage and pronunciation this v or f has been mostly lost; Icel. say há-an, mjó-an, föl-an, but it still lingers in the words ending in gg, ng, kk, rk, sk, as glögg-van, öng-van, þykk-van, rösk-van, etc. are current forms.

III. ný-r: to this belong adjectives with characteristic j: only a few words remain with g, k as final, fræg-r, hæg-r, læg-r, slæg-r, þæg-r, cyg-r, fleyg-r, ýg-r, sek-r, rik-r, þekkr-r, ræk-r, tekk-r; in very old MSS. the forms fræg-jan, ýg-jan, sek-jan, rik-jan, þekkr-jan, etc. are almost universal, but even in old times the j was dropped in these words, and fræg-an, sek-an, rik-an, etc. are now the sole forms. This declension therefore is now only represented by mið-r (medius) and by the words ending in a vowel, ný-r, hlý-r, -sæ-r; but that in pre-historical times this declension was far more extensive is shewn by the many adjectives with a changed root vowel (prob. caused by a lost j), as dýr-r, hýr-r, lynd-r, streym-r, væn-n, sæl-l, sæt-r, skæð-r, næm-r, hœf-r, mær-r, kær-r, ber-r, þver-r.

IV. kominn: to this belong all participles of the strong verbs, and a great many adjectives; with the exception of the contraction it conforms to the article. For participles of weak verbs of the 3rd conjugation see remarks on the verbs below.

Remarks on the formation of the Degrees of Comparison:

I. the compar. and superl. are, -ari, -astr, or -ri, -str, thus, kald-r, compar. kald-ari, superl. kald-astr, fem. and neut. plur. köld-ust; harð-r, harð-ari, harð-astr, fem. and neut. plur. hörd-ust; frjáls, frjáls-ast, frjáls-ast (frjáls-ust): in adjectives with characteristic j or v these letters reappear, glögg-r, glögg-vari, glögg-vastr; örr, ör-vari, ör-vastr; nýr, ný-jari, ný-jastr; or it is contracted, mjó-r, mjó-ri, mjó-str, but older are the forms mjó-vari, mjó-vastr.

II. the compar. is assimilated in adjectives in -nn, -ll, væn-n, væn-ni, væn-str; græn-n, græn-ni, græn-str; heil-l, heil-li, heil-str or heil-astr; sæl-l, sæl-li, sæl-str; svipal-l, svipul-li.

III. some few adjectives form compar. and superl. by vowel change, há-r, hæ-ri, hæ-str; fá-r, fæ-ri, fæ-str; lág-r, læg-ri, læg-str; lang-r, leng-ri, leng-str; (fram), fram-r, fram-str; fagr, fegr-ri, fegr-str; skamm-r, skem-ri, skem-str; grann-r, grena-ri, grena-str; stór-r, stær-ri, stær-str; smá-r, smæ-ri, smæ-str; ung-r, yng-ri, yng-str; þung-r, þyng-ri, þyng-str; grunn-r, grynn-ri, grynn-str: in mod. usage also, full-r, fyll-ri, fyll-str; stutt-r, stýtt-ri, stýtt-str; þunn-r, þynn-ri, þynn-str; njúk-r, myk-ri, myk-str; djúp-r, dýp-ri, dýp-str; þróng-r, þreyng-ri, þreyng-str, but also þróng-vari, þróng-vastr (older and better); svang-r, sveng-ri, sveng-str; magr, megr-ri, megr-str, etc.; but in old writers we often find full-ari, full-astr, etc.

IV. heterogeneous, as in other languages, are góð-r, bet-ri, bez-tr; ill-r, ver-ri, ver-str; marg-r, flei-ri, fle-str; litil-l, min-ni, min-str; mikil-l, mei-ri, me-str; gamal-l, ell-ri, ell-str.

V. forming compar. and superl. from adverbs: 1. from local adverbs denoting direction, aust, norð, súð, vestr, fram, aptr, út, inn, of, níðr, fjarr, ná; in compar. and superl., eyst-ri (aust-ari), aust-astr; nyrd-ri, nyrd-str; synn-ri, synn-str; vest-ri, vest-astr; frem-ri, frem-str; ept-ri, ept-str, or apt-ari, apt-astr; yt-ri, yt-str (yztr); inn-ri (íð-ri), inn-str; ef-ri (öf-ri), ef-str (öf-str); neð-ri, neð-str; fir-ri, fir-str; næ-ri, næ-str.

2. temp. adverbs, síð, fyrr; síð-ari, síð-astr; fyr-ri, fyr-str.

3. other adverbs, from heldr, sjaldn; in compar. and superl., held-ri, held-str; sjaldn-ari, sjaldn-astr; hind-ri, hiun-str; œð-ri, œð-str; ská-ri, ská-str: only in compar., höeg-ri, the right; vin-ri, the left.

Remarks on the Weak Declension: I. the positive and the superlative have both strong and weak declension, according as they are indefinite or definite in sense, whereas the comparative has in either case only a weak declension.

2. the part. att. in -andi is declined as the comparative.

II. the numerals þriði, fjóriði, fimti, sexti, etc., the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, etc., have (old and mod.) only the weak declension; þriði with a characteristic j, þrið-ja, plur. þrið-ju, fjórd-u, fimt-u.

III. changes in mod. usage.

1. the dat. plur. -um, which is almost always used in good old MSS., is now lost, and dat. is like nom.: thus Icel. say, hinum beztu mönnum, betri mönnum, ungu mönnum; in old usage, beztum, betrum, yngrum, (Jón Þorkelsson, Hauks-bók, 1865, p. 14, note 4.) The sole remnant in mod. usage of the old -um is the compar. fleir-um (pluribus), which is still so pronounced, and often used in Icel. writings.

2. the sing. has become indeclinable; the gen. dat. acc. masc. sing. -a in the compar. is now obsolete; Icel. say yngrir manns (junioris hominis) for the old yngra, dat. yngra manni, mod. yngrir manni; yngra mann, mod. yngrir mann.

3. the part. act. sing.; here also the gen. masc. sing. is altered; vaxanda vind (vindi, vind), crecentis venti, into vaxandi vind: the neut. -a is also usually changed into -i, e. g. fall-anda forað into fall-andi forað (a stumbling-block).

Remarks on the Indeclinable Adjectives. They were originally regular adjectives, which, though both definite and indefinite, had only the weak declension; and—perhaps in order to distinguish them from other adjectives in definite forms—they have lost all inflexion, and have no comparative or superlative; they vary between the forms -i and -a, andvan-i and andvan-a, originally expressing the distinction between masc., fem., and neut., but are, in fact, used without regard to gender, one MS. has -a, another -i, even in the same passage, e. g. Mar, 378; in mod. usage, -a is the current form. These indeclinable words (in the Dictionary simply marked 'adj.' or 'adj. indecl.') are very many, chiefly compound words, e. g. in al-, ein-, hálf-, full-, frum-, sam-, and for the latter part, -vana, -geðja, -laga, -stola, etc., e. g. af-laga, sjálf-kræfa (-bjarga, -rúða), ein-hama, ein-mana, ein-staka, ein-skipa, ein-huga, sam-huga, sam-rúða, ör-vasa, full-tíða, mið-aldra, gjaf-vaxta, frum-vaxta, ham-stola, vit-stola, óð-fluga, flaum-ósa, al-verkja, al-bata, al-dauda, al-eyða, ú-skynja, eíð-rofa, fár-flóta, óða-mála, sund-orða, tvi-saga, hungr-morða, strú-dauda, afl-vana, mátt-vana, and-vana, hálf-vita, harð-brjósta, hand-lama, fót-lama, gagn-drepa, hall-oka, las-burða: single words are few, hlessa, hissa, klumsa, reisa, hugi, játsi, heitsi, etc. In some cases it is difficult to say whether the word is to be taken for a substantive or indeclinable adjective, e. g. eíð-rofi or eíð-rofa, harm-daufi, full-tíði, þing-logi, nasta-bræðra.

Remarks on the Suffixed Article. This is characteristic of the Scandinavian languages, and still remains in modern Danish and Swedish. It forms a double declension, with substantive and adjective forms in the same word; or rather it gives to a substantive the form of an adjective. The inflexive -ar, -ir represent different genders for substantive and for adjective, thus, all-ir dag-ar, omnes dies, masc., but all-ar stund-ir, omnes horae, fem. The same rule applies to the suffixed article, draum-ar-nir, but tíðir-nar. The nouns of the 2nd strong declension are so few that they scarcely affect this rule.

In very early times we may suppose that the Scandinavian language had no suffixed article; in the oldest poems it is rarely used; in old prose more rare than in modern prose; and at the present time the article is less used in Icel. than in any other living European language, and is dispensed with in endless cases, where others must use it; in solemn style it is used less than in conversational.

II. the declension of the suffixed article: 1. the b is dropped throughout (inn, in, it).

2. the root vowel of the article is dropped, if the substantive ends with a vowel, and the final n + the inflexion is suffixed, e. g. sólu-nni, tungu-nni, for the vowel of the noun has always the preference.

β. so also after the plur. -ar, -ir, -r, e. g. tíðir-nar, draum-ar-nir, vetr-nir, foetr-nir; but not so after -ar, -r in gen. sing., e. g. tíðar-innar, fótar-ins, hafnar-innar, bókar-innar and bækr-innar, roð BÍβλou, whereby a distinction is kept between gen. sing. and nom. plur., e. g. tíðar-innar temporis, but tíðir-nar tempora. Icel. say, móður-inni matris, systur-inni soror; i dóttur-inni filiae, as also móður-innar matris, systur-innar sororis, dóttur-innar filiae; but contracted in föður-num patri, bróður-num fratri,—föður-innar, bróður-innar may occur in old writers, Mar., but is seldom used.

γ. the masc. dat. -i is often dropped before the article, but kept if without the article, e. g. draum'-num, saum'-num, but draumi, saumi: it is difficult here to give a rule.

δ. the acc. sing. fem. is in old writers contracted in such words as, sök-na (causam), ál-na (funem), etc., mod. sök-ina, ál-ina, etc.

ε. the vowel of the article is also dropped in the dat. of strong masc., as bekk-r of the 2nd declension (without -i), thus, reyk-num, bekk-num, not reyk-inum, bekk-inum.

3. in dat. plur. the final m of the noun is dropped, tíðu-num,—an older form tíðum-inum, temporibus, occurs in early Swedish; this -inum is always in mod. usage sounded -onum (mönn-onum), as also in earlier rhyme, Pass, 9. 7.

PRONOUNS.

PERSONAL (1st and 2nd pers.) without gender.			PERSONAL (3rd pers.) with gender.			REFLEXIVE.	DEMONSTRATIVE (sá, the, that; þessi, this).
			Masc.	Fem.	Neut.		Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
SING.	NOM.	ek þú	han-n	hon (hún)	þat	sín	sá (sjá)	sú (sjú)	þat	þessi	þessi	þetta	} common for both demonstratives
	GEN.	mín þín	han-s	hen-nar	þess		þess	þeir-rar	þess	þessa	þessa-rar	þessa
	DAT.	mér þér	hán-um	hen-ni	því		sér	þeim	þeir-ri	því	þess-um	þess-ari		þessu
	ACC.	mik þik	han-u	han-a	þat		sik	þann	þá	þat	þenna	þessa		þetta
DUAL.	NOM.	vit þit (it)
	GEN.	okkar ykkar
	DAT.	okkr ykkr
	ACC.
PLUR.	NOM.	vér þér (ér)	þei-r	þæ-r	þau	þess-ir	þess-ar	þessi	} common for both demonstratives
	GEN.	vár yðar	þei-rra	in all genders	þau		þessa-ra	in all genders
	DAT.	oss yðr	þei-m	in all genders	þau		þess-um	in all genders
	ACC.		þú	þæ-r	þau		þess-a	þess-ar		þessi

INTERROGATIVE.

	In plural sense ('who or which of many').			In dual sense ('who or which of two').			INDEFINITE (one, some one).
	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
SING.	NOM.	hver-r	hver	hver-t and hvat	hvár-r	hvár	hvár-t	nokkur-r	nokkur	nokku-t
	GEN.	hver-s	hver-rar	hver-s	hvár-s	hvár-rar	hvár-s	nokkur-s	nokkur-rar	nokkur-s
	DAT.	hver-jum	hver-ri	hver-ju	hvár-um	hvár-ri	hvár-u	nokkur-um	nokkur-ri	nokkur-u
	ACC.	hver-n	hver-ja	hver-t	hvár-n	hvár-a	hvár-t	nokkur-u	nokkur-a	nokku-t
PLUR.	NOM.	hver-ir	hver-jar	hver	hvár-ir	hvár-ar	hvár	nokkur-ir	nokkur-ar	nokkur
	GEN.	hver-ra	in all genders		hvár-ra	in all genders		nokkur-ra	in all genders
	DAT.	hver-jum	in all genders		hvár-um	in all genders		nokkur-um	in all genders
	ACC.	hver-ja	hver-jar	hver	hvár-a	hvár-ar	hvár	nokkur-a	nokkur-ar	nokkur

NUMERALS (two, both, three, four).

	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
NOM.	tvei-r	tvær	tvau (tvö)	báð-ir	báð-ar	bœð-i	þrjú	þrjú	þrjú
GEN.	tve-ggja	in all genders		be-ggja	in all genders		þrjú-ggja	in all genders
DAT.	tvei-m or tvei-mr	in all genders		báð-um	in all genders		þrjú-m or þrjú-mr	in all genders
ACC.	tvá	tvær	tvau (tvö)	báð-a	báð-ar	bœð-i	þrjú	þrjú	þrjú

Other Pronouns: I. the demonstrative hinn, hin, hitt (the other one) is declined like the article, only the neut. sing. with -tt. II. the possessive pronouns are, 1. minn, mín, mitt (meus); þinn, þín, þitt (tuus): the reflex. sinn, sín, sitt (suus). 2. in dual sense; okkar-r, okkur, okkat (noster); ykkar-r, ykkur, ykkat (vester). 3. in plur. sense; vár-r, vár, vart (noster); yðar-r, yður, yðar-t (vester); declined as nokkur, but contracted, e. g. yðir. In mod. usage these possessives in plur. and dual sense are rare, and instead of them the gen. of the personal okkar, ykkar, yðar is used as indeclinable. III. for the pronouns sami (weak) ídem, sjálfir (ipse, neinn (né einn) nullus, einhverr every one, sumr some, engi no one, annarr-hvár one of the two, alteruter, hvárgi or hvárigr neither of the two, neuter, hvár-tveggja or hvár-tveggi each, uterque (the former part following the strong declension, the latter the weak), þvílíkr and slíkr such, talis, hvílíkr as, qualis: see the Dictionary. IV. as relatives the old language has only the particles er and sem, see the Dictionary, pp. 131, 132.

Remarks: I. personal and demonstrative; in the mod. language ek etc. have become eg, mig, þig, sig, við, þið, vor; and hón or hon has become hún:—in the neut. þau is sounded þaug, but seldom spelt so:—old writers often use sjá as a woman nom. for masc. and fem., sjá maðr, that maðr, and sjá kona, that woman:—dat. fem. þessi = þessari is used in old writers:—dat. sing. masc. þeim-a = þeim, and dat. sing. neut. því-sa occur in old prose and poems; in Runes, þansi = þenna. 2. interrogative and indefinite; remains of an older declension are, hvat, what (still in full use); dat. hveim (poët. and obsolete); hví, why; hve, how, mod. also hvers; the mod. hvaða is curious, being indeclinable throughout:—old form nekkverr or nakkverr (necquerr, naquarr in the MSS.): in mod. usage nokkur, but contracted before a vowel, e. g. nokkr-ir, nokkr-um, etc.

Remarks on the Numerals: I. the cardinals; the first four are declined, einn, tveir, etc.: the rest indeclinable, fimm, sex, sjau (mod. sjö), átta, níu, tíu, ellífu, tólf, þrettán, fjórtán, fimmtán, sextán, sjautján (mod. sautján), átján, níttján, tuttugu (twenty), tuttugu ok einn, etc.—the decades first and then the smaller numbers: but with the even decades, from twenty onwards, the reverse is common in Icel.,—einn og tuttugu (one and twenty), ... tíu og tuttugu (ten and twenty'), ... níttján og tuttugu (nineteen and twenty'), fjörtíu (forty), einn og fjörtíu (one and forty), and so on to sixty, then from sixty to eighty, from eighty to 'tenty' (tíu-tíu = hundred), from 'tenty' to a hundred (i. e. the gross hundred, 120). Icel. children in play, shepherds in counting their flocks, and fishermen in counting their catch are sure to reckon in this way. From forty and upwards the Danes say, tre-sinds-tyve (= three times twenty = three score) for 60, fir-sinds-tyve (= four score) for 80, and halv treds (= three score minus a half score) for 50, halv fjerds (= four score minus a half score) for 70, balv fems (= half the fifth score, i. e. five score minus a half) for 90; but not so in Sweden and Norway. The decades are in old writers treated as independent words, and declined, þrjú tigi, dat. þremr tígum, acc. þrjú tigi, with a following genitive, e. g. fjóra tigi manna (quadraginta hominum'), etc.; in mod. usage indeclinable, þrjú-tíu, fjóru-tíu, fimm-tíu, sex-tíu, sjö-tíu, átta-tíu, níu-tíu, tíu-tíu ('ten ten'), i. e. one hundred), but usually hundrað; both hundrað (hundred) and þúsund (thousand) are in old writers (and freq. in mod.) declined and followed by a genitive, e. g. þúsund manna, tveim hundraðum skipa. II. the ordinals; fyrstr (q. v.), annarr (q. v.): the rest only in the weak declension, þriði, gen. dat. acc. þriðja, plur. þriðju indecl.; fjór-ði, fimm-tí, séttí, sjau-ði (mod. sjóun-ði), át-tí (mod. áttun-ði), niun-ði, tíun-ði, ellef-tí, tólf-tí, þrettán-ði, fjórtán-ði, ... tuttugu-asti (twentieth), þritug-asti, fertug-asti, ... níttug-asti, hun-drað-asti, ... þúsund-asti. III. distributives (from 1 to 4; ein-ir (singuli), tvenn-ir (bini), þrenn-ir (trini), ferm-ir (quaterni)), all as regular adjectives. IV. multiplicatives, either tve-nnr (duplex), þre-nnr (triplex), fer-n (quadruplex); or with -faldr, ein-faldr, tvau-faldr (twofold), þrjú-faldr, fer-faldr, ... átt-faldr, ní-faldr, tí-faldr, ... tvisug-faldr, þritug-faldr, ... hundrað-faldr, þúsund-faldr, all regular adjectives. V. the adjectives in -tugr and -ræðr, denoting aged, measuring, for the decades, from twenty and upwards: α. -tugr, for the decades, from 20 to 70, tví-tugr, þrjú-tugr, fer-tugr, fimm-tugr, sex-tugr, sjau-tugr. β. -ræðr, for the decades, from 80 to 120, átt-ræðr, ní-ræðr, tí-ræðr, tí-ræðr (centenarius), tólf-ræðr (numbering 120), hence tólf-rætt hundrað = 120, and tí-rætt hundrað = 100. VI. numeral adverbs, tvisvar = bis, þrýsvar = tris: the rest formed by sinni or sinnum, times; fjórum-sinnum, four times = quater.

VERBS.

A. WEAK VERBS, i. e. Verbs in which the Preterite is formed by adding a Termination : characterised by the final vowel of the pres. sing.

	1st Conjugation, characteristic vowel a .		2nd Conjugation, characteristic vowel i .		3rd Conjugation, characteristic vowel i is suppressed.		4th Conjugation, characteristic vowel i .
INDIC. Pres. Sing.	1.	boð-a	kall-a	dœm-i	fylg-i	glæð	spyr	vak-i	dug-i
	2.	boð-ar	kall-ar	dœm-ir	fylg-ir	glæð-r	spyr-r	vak-ir	dug-ir
	3.	boð-ar	kall-ar	dœm-ir	fylg-ir	glæð-r	spyr-r	vak-ir	dug-ir
	Plur.	1.	boð-um	kall-um	dœm-um	fylg-jum	glæð-jum	spyr-jum	vök-um	dug-um
		2.	boð-it	kall-it	dœm-it	fylg-it	glæð-it	spyr-it	vak-it	dug-it
		3.	boð-a	kall-a	dœm-a	fylg-ja	glæð-ja	spyr-ja	vak-a	dug-a
	Pret. Sing.	1.	boð-aða	kall-aða	dœm-da	fylg-da	glæð-da	spyr-ða	vak-ta	dug-ða
		2.	boð-aðir	kall-aðir	dœm-dir	fylg-dir	glæð-dir	spyr-ðir	vak-tir	dug-ðir
		3.	boð-aði	kall-aði	dœm-di	fylg-di	glæð-di	spyr-ði	vak-ti	dug-ði
		Plur.	1.	boð-uðum	köll-uðum	dœm-dum	fylg-dum	glöd-dum	spyr-ðum	vök-tum	dug-ðum
			2.	boð-uðut	köll-uðut	dœm-dut	fylg-dut	glöd-dut	spyr-ðut	vök-tuð	dug-ðut
			3.	boð-uðu	köll-uðu	dœm-du	fylg-du	glöd-du	spyr-ðu	vök-tu	dug-ðu
IMPERAT.		boð-a	kall-a	dœm	fylg	glæð	spyr	vak (vak-i)	dug (dug-i)
SUBJ. Pres. Sing.	1.	boð-a	kall-a	dœm-a	fylg-ja	glæð-ja	spyr-ja	vak-a	dug-a
	2.	boð-ir	kall-ir	dœm-ir	fylg-ir	glæð-ir	spyr-ir	vak-ir	dug-ir
	3.	boð-i	kall-i	dœm-i	fylg-i	glæð-i	spyr-i	vak-i	dug-i
	Plur.	1.	boð-im	kall-im	dœm-im	fylg-im	glæð-im	spyr-im	vak-im	dug-im
		2.	boð-it	kall-it	dœm-it	fylg-it	glæð-it	spyr-it	vak-it	dug-it
		3.	boð-i	kall-i	dœm-i	fylg-i	glæð-i	spyr-i	vak-i	dug-i
	Pret. Sing.	1.	boð-aða	kall-aða	dœm-da	fylg-da	glæð-da	spyr-ða	vek-ta	dug-ða
		2.	boð-aðir	kall-aðir	dœm-dir	fylg-dir	glæð-dir	spyr-ðir	vek-tir	dug-ðir
		3.	boð-aði	kall-aði	dœm-di	fylg-di	glæð-di	spyr-ði	vek-ti	dug-ði
		Plur.	1.	boð-aðim	kall-aðim	dœm-dim	fylg-dim	glæð-dim	spyr-ðim	vek-tim	dug-ðim
			2.	boð-aðit	kall-aðit	dœm-dit	fylg-dit	glæð-dit	spyr-ðit	vek-tið	dug-ðit
			3.	boð-aði	kall-aði	dœm-di	fylg-di	glæð-di	spyr-ði	vek-ti	dug-ði
INFIN.		boð-a	kall-a	dœm-a	fylg-ja	glæð-ja	spyr-ja	vak-a	dug-a
PART. Act.		boð-andi	kall-andi	dœm-andi	fylg-jandi	glæð-jandi	spyr-jandi	vak-andi	dug-andi
PART. Pass. Masc.		boð-aðr	kall-aðr	dœm-dr		glæð-dr	spyr-ðr	vak-tr
	Fem.	boð-uð	köll-uð	dœm-d		glöd-d	spyr-ð	vök-t
	Neut. or Supine	boða-t	kalla-t	dœm-t	fylg-t	glæt-t	spur-t	vaka-t	duga-t

B. STRONG VERBS, i. e. Verbs in which the Preterite is formed by changing the Root Vowel (as found in the Infin.)

	1st Class, change of radical e (i) into a , u .		2nd Class, i into ei , i .		3rd Class, jó into au , u .		4th Class, a into ó .		5th Class, e into a , á ; into a , á , o .		6th Class, á into é ; au into jó .
INDIC. Pres. Sing.	1.	brenn	rís	býð	fer	gef	ber	græt	hleyp
	2.	brenn-r	rís-s	býð-r	fer-r	gef-r	ber-r	græt-r	hleyp-r
	3.	brenn-r	rís-s	býð-r	fer-r	gef-r	ber-r	græt-r	hleyp-r
	Plur.	1.	brenn-um	rís-um	bjóð-um	fór-um	gef-um	ber-um	grát-um	hlaup-um
		2.	brenn-it	rís-it	bjóð-it	far-it	gef-it	ber-it	grát-ið	hlaup-it
		3.	brenn-a	rís-a	bjóð-a	far-a	gef-a	ber-a	grát-a	hlaup-a
	Pret. Sing.	1.	brann	reis	baud	fór	gaf	bar	grét	hljóp
		2.	brann-t	reis-t	baut-t	fór-t	gaf-t	bar-t	grét-st	hljóp-t
		3.	brann	reis	baud	fór	gaf	bar	grét	hljóp
		Plur.	1.	brunn-um	rís-um	bud-um	fór-um	gáf-um	bár-um	grét-um	hljóp-um
			2.	brunn-ut	rís-ut	bud-ut	fór-ut	gáf-ut	bár-ut	grét-uð	hljóp-ut
			3.	brunn-u	rís-u	bud-u	fór-u	gáf-u	bár-u	grét-u	hljóp-u
IMPERAT.		brenn	rís	bjóð	far	gef	ber	grát	hlaup
SUBJ. Pres. Sing.	1.	brenn-a	rís-a	bjóð-a	far-a	gef-a	ber-a	grát-a	hlaup-a
	2.	brenn-ir	rís-ir	bjóð-ir	far-ir	gef-ir	ber-ir	grát-ir	hlaup-ir
	3.	brenn-i	rís-i	bjóð-i	far-i	gef-i	ber-i	grát-i	hlaup-i
	Plur.	1.	brenn-im	rís-im	bjóð-im	far-im	gef-im	ber-im	grát-im	hlaup-im
		2.	brenn-it	rís-it	bjóð-it	far-it	gef-it	ber-it	grát-ir	hlaup-it
		3.	brenn-i	rís-i	bjóð-i	far-i	gef-i	ber-i	grát-i	hlaup-i
	Pret. Sing.	1.	brynn-i	rís-a	býð-a	feer-a	gæf-i	bær-i	grét-a	hlyp-a
		2.	brynn-ir	rís-ir	býð-ir	feer-ir	gæf-ir	bær-ir	grét-ir	hlyp-ir
		3.	brynn-i	rís-i	býð-i	feer-i	gæf-i	bær-i	grét-i	hlyp-i
		Plur.	1.	brynn-im	rís-im	býð-im	feer-im	gæf-im	bær-im	grét-im	hlyp-im
			2.	brynn-it	rís-it	býð-it	feer-it	gæf-it	bær-it	grét-ið	hlyp-it
			3.	brynn-i	rís-i	býð-i	feer-i	gæf-i	bær-i	grét-i	hlyp-i
INFIN.		brenn-a	rís-a	bjóð-a	far-a	gef-a	ber-a	grát-a	hlaup-a
PART. Act.		brenn-andi	rís-andi	bjóð-andi	far-andi	gef-andi	ber-andi	grát-andi	hlaup-andi
PART. Pass. Masc.		brunn-inn	rís-inn	boð-inn	far-inn	gef-inn	bor-inn	grát-inn	hlaup-inn
	Fem.	brunn-in	rís-in	boð-in	far-in	gef-in	bor-in	grát-in	hlaup-in
	Neut. or Supine	brunn-it	rís-it	boð-it	far-it	gef-it	bor-it	grát-ið	hlaup-it

C. IRREGULAR VERBS.

THE VERB SUBSTANTIVE.

INDIC. Pres. Sing.	1.	em	Pret. var (vas)	IMPERAT. ver (ver-tu)	SUBJ. Pres. só	Pret. vær-a	INFIN. ver-a	PART. Pass. ver-it
	2.	er-t	var-t						sé-r	vær-ir
Plur.	3.	er (es)	var (vas)	verit (estote)	sé-m	vær-im	þurf-u	unn-a
	1.	er-um	vár-um						sé-t	vær-it
	2.	er-ut	vár-ut						sé	vær-i
	3.	er-u	vár-u

TEN VERBS WITH PRESENT IN PRETERITE FORM.

INDIC. Pres. Sing.	1.	á	kná	má	skal	kann	mun (mon)	man	þarf	ann	veit
	2.	á-tt	kná-tt	má-tt	skal-t	kann-t	mun-t	man-t	þarf-t	ann-t	veit-t
Plur.	3.	á	kná	má	skal	kann	mun	man	þarf	ann	veit
	1.	eig-um	kneg-um	meg-um	skul-um	kunn-um	mun-um	mun-um	þurf-um	unn-um	vit-um
	2.	eig-ut	kneg-ut	meg-ut	skul-ut	kunn-ut	mun-ut	mun-it	þurf-ut	unn-it	vit-uð
Pret. Sing.	3.	eig-u	kneg-u	meg-u	skul-u	kunn-u	mun-u	mun-a	þurf-u	unn-a	vit-u
	1.	á-tta	kná-tta	má-tta		kunn-a	mun-da	mun-da	þurf-ta	unn-a	vis-sa
		as regular weak verbs
IMPERAT.		eig				kunn		mun		unn vit
SUBJ. Pres. Sing.	1.	eig-a		meg-a		skul-a		kunn-a		mun-a
		as regular weak verbs
Pret. Sing.	1.	ætt-a	knætt-a	mætt-a	skyl-da	kynn-a	møn-da	myn-da	þyrf-ta	ynn-a	vis-sa
		as regular weak verbs
INFIN. Pres. Pret.		eig-a		meg-a		skul-u		kunn-a		mun-u skyl-du		mun-du
PART. Act.		eig-andi		meg-andi		kunn-andi		mun-andi		þurf-andi
PART. Pass. Neut.		á-tt		má-tt		kunn-at		mun-at		þurf-t unn-t vit-að

NINE VERBS WITH THE PRETERITE IN -ra (-li).

INDIC. Pres. Sing.	3.	rœ-r	grœ-r	sæ-r	gný-r	sný-r	fry's-s	ky's-s	slæ-r	veld-r
	Plur.	3.	ró-a	gró-a	sá	gnú-a	fnjós-a	kjós-a	slá	vald-a
Pret. Sing.	3.	rö-ri	grö-ri	sö-ri	gnö-ri	snö-ri	frö-ri	kjö-ri	slö-ri	ol-li
	(or re-ri)	gre-ri	gre-ri	se-ri	gne-ri	sne-ri	fre-ri	ke-ri	sle-ri)
IMPERAT.		ró	gró	sá	gnú	snú	fnjós	kjós	slá	vald
SUBJ. Pret. Sing.	3.	rö-ri	grö-ri	sö-ri	gnö-ri	snö-ri	frö-ri	kjö-ri	slö-ri	yll-i
INFIN.		ró-a	gró-a	sá	gnú-a	snú-a	fnjós-a	kjós-a	slá	vald-a PART. Pass.		ró-inn	gró-inn	sá-inn	gnú-inn	snú-inn	fros-inn	kos-inn	sleg-inn	vald-it

D. VERBS WITH THE REFLEXIVE OR RECIPROCAL SUFFIX -sk, -z, -st (-mk).

		Present.		Preterite.		Present.		Preterite.
		Indic.	Subj.	Indic.	Subj.	Indic.	Subj.	Indic.	Subj.
Sing.	1.	kalla-sk	kalli-sk	kallaði-sk	kallaði-sk	læzk	láti-sk	lézsk	léti-sk
	2.	kalla-sk	kalli-sk	kallaði-sk	kallaði-sk	læzk	láti-sk	lézsk	léti-sk
	3.	kalla-sk	kalli-sk	kallaði-sk	kallaði-sk	læzk	láti-sk	lézsk	léti-sk
Plur.	1.	köllu-mk	kalli-mk	kölluðu-mk	kallaði-mk	látu-mk	láti-mk	létu-mk	léti-mk
	2.	kalli-zk	kalli-zk	kölluðu-zk	kallaði-zk	láti-zk	láti-zk	létu-zk	léti-zk
	3.	kalla-sk	kalli-sk	kölluðu-sk	kallaði-sk	láta-sk	láti-sk	létu-sk	léti-sk
PART. Pass. Neut.		kalla-zk, láti-zk, (glað-zk, gefi-zk, bori-zk,) etc.

E. VERBS WITH THE NEGATIVE SUFFIX.

INDIC.	Sing.	Pres.	Pret.	Pres.	Pret.	Pres.	Pret.	Pres.	Pret.
		1.	em-k-at	var-k-at (vask-at)	skal-k-át	skyldi-t	mon-k-a	mundi-t	hyk-k-at	átti-g-a
		2.	ert-at-tu	vart-at-tu	skalt-at-tu	skyldir-a	mont-at-tu	mundir-a	hyggr-at	áttir-a
		3.	er-at (es-at)	var-at (vas-at)	skal-at	skyldi-t	mon-at	mundi-t	hyggr-at	átti-t
	Plur.	3.	eru-t	váru-t	skulu-t	skyldu-t	monu-t	mundi-t	hyggja-t	áttu-t

IMPERAT. ver-at-tu (be not thou!), lát-at-tu (let not thou!), grát-at-tu (weep not thou!), etc.

WEAK VERBS.

Remarks on the 1st Conjugation. To this belong four or five hundred simple verbs, which in the Dictionary are marked 'a', i. e. pret. -aði; they are,

I. verbs with a primitive root vowel, a, á, au, o, ó, u, ú (except a few which are placed in the 4th conjugation), e. g. tala, baga, haga, skaða, baka, stama, bana, svara, rasa, tapa, hvata, rata, hata, glata, launa, fagna, banna, safna, anda, varna, starfa, stöða, loga, loka, losa, rota, hóta, róma, hljóða, sópa: verbs with i as root vowel, esp. if before a single consonant, fríða, skrífa, kvika, lima, lina, skipa, hita, kvista; some with í, ei, leita, reika, eisa, geisa, smíða, líka, etc.

II. derivatives, 1. in -na, inchoative verbs, daf-na, kaf-na, harð-na, vak-na, blá-na, grá-na, fit-na, hvít-na, vis-na, los-na, roð-na, brot-na, bólg-na, fül-na, fú-na, dök-na, ves-na, tré-na, (a hundred words or more.) 2. in -ga, from adj. -igr, chiefly in a causal sense, to make so and so, about a score of words, auð-ga, blöð-ga, móð-ga, göf-ga, hel-ga, líf-ga, nauð-ga, saur-ga, fjöl-ga, frjóv-ga, vin-gast, hold-gast, synd-ga, kván-gask, hýr-ga, þýf-ga: in -ka, denoting to become or make so and so, hæ-kka, læ-kka, snæ-kka, fæ-kka, græn-kka, væn-kast, dýp-kka, rým-kka, mjó-kka, breið-kka, sein-kka, víð-kka, miu-kka, blíð-kka, þur-kka, ið-kka, tíð-kka, þræl-kka, which follow the 1st conjugation without regard to root vowel.

3. in -sa, iteratives, glep-sa, hrif-sa, taf-sa, hram-sa, kjam-sa, ryg-sa, king-sa, ving-sa, flak-sa, flang-sa, vind-sa, kal-sa; with these may be reckoned hug-sa (cogitare), hrein-sa; (these words also are few.) 4. in -ja, a few words (perhaps thirty), vöð-ja, steð-ja, stef-ja, egg-ja, gnegg-ja, hrekk-ja, bel-ja, em-ja, gren-ja, sker-ja, ið-ja, kvíð-ja, rif-ja, gil-ja, fit-ja, vit-ja, klyf-ja, syf-ja, lyf-ja, byr-ja, bryn-ja, skyn-ja, syn-ja, dys-ja, flysj-ja, bryt-ja, á-ný-ja.

5. in -va, bölv-va, mölv-va, göt-va, ör-va, etc., (a few words.) 6. in -la, a kind of diminutive, but rare, ding-la (to dangle), hönd-la (captare), hvarf-la, söng-la (to sing between the teeth), skjút-la, væt-la (to drip, ooze), sving-la, trít-la, skurt-la (to make a slight cut), fip-la, rup-la, hnup-la, grip-la, jap-la (to clasp, mumble with the teeth), tönn-last, gut-la, brut-la, æx-la, etc. 7. in -ra, klif-ra, halt-ra, hlið-ra, (a few words, some of which are conversational.)

Remarks on the 2nd Conjugation. To this belong several hundred words, which in the Dictionary are marked variously 'd, ð, dd, t, tt,' according to the final root consonant; in words like fæða, reiða, the pret. are fœd-di, reid-di; so beita, bæta, pret. beit-ti, bætt-ti: the d becomes ð after a soft root consonant or a vowel, e. g. ræg-ja, ræg-ði; svœf-a, svœf-ði, etc.: it becomes t after hard consonants, or s, reis-a, reis-ti; leys-a, leys-ti, cp. introduction to letter D, p. 93 (C. III): it is dropped and cannot be sounded in words like skept-a, hept-a, frétta, gæld-a, send-a, lend-a, ert-a, pret. skept-i, frétt-i, send-i, lend-i, ert-i: in mod. usage a root d may even be changed into t; Icel. often say, hert-i, ent-i, lent-i, synt-i, from herð-a, end-a, lend-a, synd-a: in words with a double final consonant it is common to drop one, thus kyss-a, kys-ti; þerr-a, þer-ði; but ll and nn are more often (and properly) retained, as fell-ð, fell-t, kenn-ð, kenn-t, from fell-a, kenn-a, better than fel-ði, fel-t, ken-ði, ken-t.

II. To this conjugation belong chiefly derivative verbs with a changed vowel in the root, e, ey, ý, æ, ø, e. g. brenna (to make burn), kenna (to teach), gleyma, dreyma, bæta, græta, græða, hýsa, lýsa, (several hundred words.) In earlier times (in Gothic) these words had a characteristic j and a primitive vowel, e. g. Goth. döm-jan, haus-jan, = Icel. dœm-a, heyr-a; this j has in Icel. been preserved in verbs with a short root vowel and a single final consonant (see the 3rd conjugation); but in verbs with a diphthong or long vowel only if the final be g or k, or if they end in a vowel, e. g. blekk-ja, drekk-ja, sekk-ja, rekk-ja, þekk-ja, telg-ja, velg-ja, cng-ja, deug-ja, leng-ja, feyk-ja, teyg-ja, heyg-ja, beyg-ja, sleik-ja, steik-ja, rik-ja, berg-ja, presk-ja, bæg-ja, hœg-ja, læg-ja, væg-ja, stygg-ja, drýg-ja, byrg-ja, syrg-ja, rýja, etc., (about a hundred words, see the Dictionary): fylgja is a specimen of these verbs. A few verbs which now have -ja had in olden times -va, e. g. bygg-va, styrk-va, stygg-va, hrygg-va are older forms than bygg-ja, styrk-ja, hrygg-ja. Many verbs with í, ei as root vowel belong to this conjugation, not only derivatives, as leiða, reisa, beita, from the strong verbs líða, rísa, bíta; but also other words, as beina, greina, deila, gliúna, tína, níta: also verbs with i before a double consonant, as spilla, villa, dimma, inna, ginna, sinna, dirfa, firra, miissa, hitta, flúmta, skipta, gista, hrista, and many others. Monosyllables as má, brá, spá, strá, fú (pingere), gljá, kljá, þjá, hrjá, tjá, etc. are contracted, but, in spite of the root vowel, belong to this conjugation.

Remarks on the 3rd Conjugation. To this belong about ninety words: 1. about fifty verbs with e (a) for the root vowel, gleð-ja, kveð-ja, bleð-ja, seð-ja, sked-ja (obsolete), teð-ja, kef-ja, kref-ja, svef-ja, tef-ja, vef-ja, seg-ja, þeg-ja, hrek-ja, klek-ja, rek-ja, vek-ja, þek-ja, dvel-ja, kvel-ja, sel-ja, tel-ja, vel-ja, frem-ja, grem-ja, hem-ja, krem-ja, lem-ja, sem-ja, tem-ja, spen-ja, þen-ja, ven-ja, glep-ja, lep-ja, skep-ja, ber-ja, er-ja, fer-ja, mer-ja, ver-ja (defendere), ver-ja (induere), et-ja, flet-ja, hvet-ja, let-ja, met-ja, set-ja, legg-ja, pret. bag-ði (obsolete, vide bæg-ja), skil-ja, þil-ja, vil-ja. 2. about thirty verbs with y (u) for the root vowel, bryð-ja, gnyð-ja, ryð-ja, snyð-ja (obsolete), styð-ja, hygg-ja, ygg-ja, tygg-ja (mod., but old usage strong), kryf-ja, lyk-ja, byl-ja, dyl-ja, hyl-ja, myl-ja, þyl-ja, gylm-ja, rym-ja, ym-ja, þym-ja (obsolete), dyn-ja, dryn-ja, hryn-ja, styn-ja, smyr-ja, spyr-ja, þyr-ja (obsolete), fyr-va, pret. bus-ti (obsolete), pret. þus-ti, flyt-ja.

3. a few verbs with long root vowel, hey-ja, þrey-ja, dy-ja, fly-ja, gny-ja, kný-ja, hly-ja, lý-ja, ty-ja, which have monosyllabic pres. indic. hey-r, dy-r, fly-r, and change even the vowel in pret., há-ði (gessit), dú-ði, knú-ði; and in mod. usage also flú-ði, hlú-ði, lú-ði, but fly-ði, etc. in old writers: —sel-ja and set-ja have unchanged pret. sel-di, set-ti; skil-ja has skil-di; vil-ja, vil-di, part. vil-jat; seg-ja and þeg-ja a bisyllabic pres. seg-i, þeg-i.

II. special remarks: 1. the characteristic marks are, a. the vowel change in pret. indic. (glad-di, spur-ði). β. the vowel in pret. subj. (gleð-di, spyr-ði). γ. the monosyllabic pres. indic. sing. (gleð, spyr). 2. the j as characteristic; only fyrra, an obsolete word, has v.

2. a participle passive in -iðr is used in some of these verbs by old writers, especially poets, viz. a bisyllabic form, as kraf-iðr, vaf-iðr, vak-iðr, tal-iðr, bar-iðr, hul-iðr, val-iðr, var-iðr, tam-iðr, lag-iðr, skil-iðr, þil-iðr, fem. bar-ið . . . lag-ið, neut. bar-it . . . lag-it (see Lex. Poët.): this -iðr was in later times changed into -inn in imitation of the strong verbs, which however is only used in about thirty-four verbs (a third of the whole number), viz. kraf-inn, kaf-inn, taf-inn, vaf-inn, hrak-inn, klak-inn, rak-inn, vak-inn, þak-inn, dval-inn, kval-inn, tal-inn, val-inn, fram-inn, ham-inn, kram-inn, lam-inn, sam-inn, tam-inn, þan-inn, van-inn, bar-inn, mar-inn, var-inn, skil-inn, krunn-inn, dul-inn, hul-inn, mul-inn, þul-inn, hrun-inn, knú-inn, flú-inn, lú-inn (in old writers, kný-iðr, fly-iðr),—almost the same words in which the ancients had -iðr: these forms begin to occur in MSS. of the 13th or 14th century, e. g. dulin, Fb. i. 12, Fs. 97 (Arna-Magn. 132); þilinn, Fbr. 44 new Ed.; barin, Ld. 152, (both from Arna-Magn. 132); as a provincialism it is still older, and frequently occurs in an old vellum MS. of Mar. S. (Arna-Magn. 655), Unger's Edit.; framinn, Mar. 449; laginn, 465, 484, 491; valin, 446; skilinn, 326; laminn, 637; saminn, 491; vaninn, 398; barinn, 619; lagin, 633.

This -inn must not be confounded with the participles of the strong conjugation; for, a. in this weak -inn the n disappears in the adjectival inflexion, e. g. plur. taldir, never talnir, whereas fallinn makes fallnir. β. the weak nom. remains beside that in -inn, e. g. hul-inn and hul-ðr, þak-inn and þak-tr, vak-inn and vak-tr, flú-inn and flú-ðr. γ. the inflexive -inn can never be used in the other words of this conjugation, e. g. glad-ðr, never glad-inn; spur-ðr, never spur-inn; skap-tr, never skap-inn. Some have no participle, as bleðja, metja, bylja, glymja, etc.

Remarks on the 4th Conjugation. To this belong only a few verbs (thirty or upwards), but some of them are among the chief verbs of the language, hafa, lafa, vaka, gana, gapa, mara, spara, stara, bjara, blaka, flaka, blasa, þrasa, kúra, stúra, lífa, loða, þola, skalla, tolla, þora, brosa, duga, luma, una, trúa, grúfa, ugga: in -ja, þegja, segja, æja (áði), vilja (see above); under this also come sökja, pret. sótti; yrk-ja, pret. orti; þykkja, pret. þótti; a pret. þátti from þekkja is obsolete and poet. —and to these may be added the weak preterites of the verbs with strong preterite in present sense, vissi, átti, mátti, knátti, kunni, mundi, undi, skyldi; as also verbs such as göra, old pres. gör-r, mod. göri; ljá (to lend), old pres. lé-r, mod. ljæ-r; ná, pres. nái, mod. næ, gá, q. v.

II. special remarks: 1. the characteristic marks are, a. the root vowel, according to which we should expect them to follow the 1st conjugation, whereas they all have the characteristic i of the second. β. in about twenty words the pret. subj. is formed by vowel change from pret. indic., viz. hefði, vekti, sperði, þyldi, þyrði, dygði, tyllði, myndi, yndi, tryði, næði, gæði, segði, þegði, from pret. indic. höfðu, dugðu, . . . trúðu, náðu, gáðu; as also ætti, mætti, knætti, þyrfti, kynni, from pret. indic. áttu, máttu, knáttu, þyrftu, kunnu; þætti, sækti, yrkti, from þóttu, sóttu, orktu; keypti from kaupa (emere) is pret. subj. with the sense of pret. indic. γ. some have part. pass. in -at (-að) like the 1st conjugation, vak-at, spar-at (in old writers also spart), blak-at, blas-at, loð-at, lif-at, toll-at, bros-at, dug-at, un-at, trú-at, pag-at (from þegja), sag-at (from segja, instead of sagt) occurs in Merl. Spá; haf-at=haft, Vsp. 16; þol-at, þor-at are now the only forms, but þolt, þort also occur in old writers; vilj-at from vilja, but vilt seems older, cp. also mun-at, vit-at, kunn-at.

2. the sole remains of a bisyllabic imperat. in -i (answering to the 1st conjugation in -a) are the old imperatives vak-i! gap-i! dug-i! lum-i! ugg-i! un-i! see these words; in mod. usage the sole instance left is þeg-i (acee) or þegi-ðu! Many of the rest might, but for the primitive root vowel, well be counted as regular verbs of the 2nd conjugation. This conjugation seems to answer most nearly to the 3rd Gothic conjugation of Grimm.

STRONG VERBS.

A List of the Strong Verbs:

I. to the 1st class belong about fifty words, finna (fann, fundu, fundit), spinna, spirna, svimma (obsolete), vinna (vann, unnu, unnit), binda (batt, bundu), hrinda (hratt, hrundu), vinda (vatt, undu), springa (sprakk, sprungu), stinga (stakk, stungu), brenna, renna, drekka, bregða (brá, brugðu), bresta, bella, gnella, smella, skreppa, sleppa, serða, snerta, gnesta, detta, spretta, svella, vella, svelta, velta, hverfa, sverfa, þverra, verpa, verða: with the root vowel e resolved into ja, gjalda (galt, guldu), gjalla, skjalla, bjarga, skjálfa, hjálpa (halp, hulpu, hölpinn): with characteristic j or v, hrökkva (hrökk, hrukku), klökkva, stökkva, slöngva, þröngva, svelgja, tyggja, hnöggva (defect.), syngja. ☞ All those with n, g, k for final have u in part. pass., fundit, bundit, stungit, brunnit, drukkit, brugðit, þrungit, tuggit, sungit; they have also i for root vowel in infin., finna, etc., which is weakened into e in bregða, drekka, brenna, renna,—bríðða, drikkja, brinna, rinna are the older forms, which even occur in old poets: the rest have o in part., oltinn, sloppinn, snortinn, brostinn, dottinn, goldinn, hólpin, . . . hrokkinn, stokkinn, sokkinn, sólginn: those with initial v drop it before u, o, y, svella, sulu, sylli, sollinn; . . . verða, urðu, yrði, orðinn; vinna, unnu, ynni, uninn.

II. to the 2nd class belong about forty words, bíða, kvíða, líða (pati), líða (labi), ríða (equitare), ríða (ungere), ríða (qs. vriða, nectere), síða, skríða, sníða, sviða, drífa, hrífa, klífa, rífa, svífa, þrífa, dvína (defect.), fína, hrína, hvína, skína, grípa, svípa (defect.), físa, rísa, bíta, drita, hníta (defect.), líta, ríta, rísta, skíta, slíta, hníga, míga, síga, stíga: with characteristic j, blík-ja, svík-ja, vík-ja. ☞ Those with final g have also e in pret., e. g. hneig and hne; steig and sté; also vék and veik from víkja, but these forms are later.

III. to the 3rd class belong about thirty-six words, bjóða, hnjóða, hrjóða (desolare), rjóða, sjóða, frjósa, gjósa, hnjósa (defect.), hrjósa (defect.), kjósa, ljósa, brjóta, fljóta, gjóta, hljóta, hrjóta (cadere), hrjóta (stertere), njóta, skjóta, þjóta, þrjóta:—those with final f, þ, g, k, have ju in infin., which seems older, kljúfa, krjúfa, rjúfa, drjúpa, krjúpa, fljúga, ljúga, sjúga, smjúga, fjúka, rjúka, strjúka: with eliminated j, súpa, lúka (and ljúka), lúta, hnúfa, amputare (defect.) ☞ Those with final g have also an obsolete pret. in ó (fló, ló, smó, só), but usually and in mod. usage regular, flaug, etc.: frjósa and kjósa have a double pret., a regular fraus, hnaus, and irregular fróri, kóri.

IV. to the 4th class belong twenty-six words, hláða, vaða (óð, vaðit), vaxa (óx, vaxit), standa (stöð, staðit), grafa, skafa, ala, gala, kala, mala, skapa, fara, draga, gnaga (defect.), aka, skaka, taka: contracted in infin., flá, slá, þvá (qs. flaga, slaga): infin. with characteristic j, dey-ja, gey-ja, hef-ja, hlæ-ja (hló, hlögu), kleg-ja (defect.), sver-ja (sór, svarit). ☞ The verbs with final g and k, either contracted or not, have e in part. pass., dreg-it, ek-it, skek-it, fleg-it, sleg-it, þveg-it, hleg-it; deyja has dá-it.

V. the 5th class falls into two divisions: 1. twenty words, kveða, veða (vá, vágu), fregna (frá, frágu, fregit), gefa, leka, reka (persequi), reka (qs. vrcka, ulcisci), drepa, vera (vesa), lesa, eta, feta, freta, geta, meta: infin. with characteristic j, bið-ja, ligg-ja (lá, lágu, legit), þigg-ja (þá, þágu, þegit), sit-ja, sjá (sá, séð).

2. nine irregular words, all having o in part. pass., vefa (óf, ófu, ofit), fela (fal, fálu, fölgit), stela (skal, stólu, stólit), nema (nam, námu, numit), bera, skera (skar, skáru, skárit), tróða (trað, tráðu, tróðit), sofa (svaf, sváfu, sofit), koma (kom, kómu or kvámu, komit). In placing these words here we follow the preterite; according to the participle they might be put in the 1st class. Grimm makes a separate class of them; but for that they are too few in number and too similar in inflexion to the 1st and 5th class.

VI. the 6th class, originally reduplicated verbs, many of which are still such in Gothic: 1. with e in pret., falda, halda, falla, blanda, ganga (gökk, gengu, gengit), hanga (hékk, hengu, hangit), fá (fékk, fengu, fengit), ráða, blása, gráta, láta, heita (hét, heittinn), leika (lék, leikinn), blóta (q. v.) 2. the verbs auka, ausa, hlaupa, búa (q. v.), höggva (hjó, hjoggu, höggit), spý-ja (spjó, spúit); defect. bauta (p. 54).

IRREGULAR VERBS.

The Verb Substantive properly belongs to the 5th class of strong verbs; older forms are, pres. es, pret. vas, vas-t, vas, infin. vesa, imperat. vesi, ves-tu, which forms are used in old poets and in the very oldest MSS. (cp. Engl. was); er, var, vera, etc. are the mod. forms; er (sum) is mod. instead of em, which latter however is still used in the N. T. and often in sacred writings, hymns, etc.; mod. Dan. and Swed. also have er, so that the Engl. alone has preserved the true old form (am): the Engl. plur. are is not Saxon but Scandin.-Engl., and is not used even by Chaucer.

Verbs with Present in Preterite Form: the first three belong, although irregularly, to the 5th strong class, the next six (skal, . . . ann) to the 1st class, and veit to the 2nd. The plur. 2nd pers. munit, unnit, and 3rd pers. munna, unna, which are used in old writings, shew that at early times this verb began to confuse the preterite with the present forms; in mod. usage this is carried farther, and Icel. say, eigit and eiga, megíð and mega, kunníð and kunna, þurfið and þurfa, vitið and vita; but the -u is still preserved in skulud and skulu, munud and munu. Icel. distinguish between munu (μέλλουσι) and muna (meminerunt).

II. the infinitives skulu, munu are properly preterite infinitive forms; whereas in the rest of these verbs the -u changed into -a, eiga, vita, etc.: another preterite infinitive (weak) is preserved in skyl-du and myn-dn, which are the sole preterite infinitive forms that have been preserved in prose. ☞ In old poetry there are about twenty instances of an obsolete pret. infinitive, which conforms to 3rd pers. plur. pret. indic., just as the pres. infin. to the 3rd pers. plur. pres. indic.; especially in acc. with infin., hygg þá stóðu (credo illas stetitisse), fóru (ivisse), kómu (venisse), flyðu (fugisse), etc., vide Lex. Poët., all of them obsolete and seldom used in prose, e. g. vildo (voluisse), Mork. 168, l. 20; only skyldu, myndu are frequent in the Sagas and are used even to the present day.

III. the preterites are formed by inflexion and are weak; exceptional however are kunna, unna, vissa, being without d or t; in mod. usage Icel. say, unnti (amavit), making a regular weak preterite of it, which form occurs even in Fb. iii. 469; but we cannot say kunn-ti instead of kun-ni.

The Verbs with the Preterite in -ra: these verbs are properly strong verbs, and are so in kindred languages (A. S., O. H. G., Goth.). The pret. form is difficult to explain; a reduplication might explain the verbs having initial r or s before the root vowel, róa, gróa, frjósa, and sá (sö-ri being qs. sö-si); and would even do for slá, snúa: but gnúa, kjósa remain unexplained, unless we admit that they have been formed by analogy with the others, as also valda (ollí, qs. vo-volti). ☞ Kjósa, frjósa usually follow the 3rd strong class (pret. kaus, fraus), and slá the 4th; sleri only occurs a few times in old writers; sá has in mod. sense become a regular weak verb (sá, sá-ða, sá-ð).

General Remarks on the Strong and the Irregular Verbs:

These verbs all together amount to about two hundred and twenty, but in the course of time some of them have become weak, and even in old writers are so used: a. changed into the 1st weak conjugation, bjarga, hjálpa, feta, freta, fregna, rita (from ríta), blíka (from blíkja), dvína, klífa (from klífa), svípa (from svípa), gala, mala, aka, skapa, falda, blanda, blóta, klegja. β. into the 2nd weak conjugation, snerta, slöngva, þröngva, rísta, svelgja, sá (serere). γ. into the 3rd weak conjugation, fela, tyggja, þvá,—in all about twenty-six verbs. If we add half a score of words which are obsolete and defective, or were so even in olden times, there remain not quite two hundred strong verbs in full use. We may add fragmentary verbs, of which only the part. pass. remains; and to this class we may assign the participial adjectives, bólginn (inflatus), toginn (ductus, Germ. gezogen), dofinn, boginn, hroðinn (picus), snodinn, rotinn, hokinn, fúinn, líunn, auðinn, snivinn (υφόμενος obsolete and poet.), belonging chiefly to the 1st and 2nd class, and perhaps many besides. Grimm reckons that in all the Teutonic languages together there are about four hundred and fifty strong verbs, whole or fragmentary; but no single dialect has much more than half of that number. These verbs belong to the earliest formation of words; they are decreasing, as no new strong verbs are ever spontaneously formed, whereas the old die out or gradually take the weak forms. So also wrecks of strong verbs are found here and there, and even modern languages have by chance preserved words lost elsewhere, thus vrungru (torserunt) is an ἄπ. λεγ. in one of the oldest Icel. poets; but in this case the English supplies the loss, as wring, wrung (whence wrong, prop. = wry, opp. to right) are common enough. Most of the important words of the language belong to the strong conjugation, and many of them are treated at great length in the Dictionary; whereas only a few of the great verbs, such as góra, haða, belong to the weak conjugation, so that the strong conjugation has an importance far beyond the number of its verbs.

II. the formation of tenses in the strong verbs is plain enough, a. the chief tenses, the pret. in sing. and plur., the infin. and part. pass., are formed by way of ablaut (see p. xxix), from which β. the secondary tenses are formed by way of umlaut (see p. xxviii), viz. the pres. sing. indic. from infin., e. g. býð (jubeo) from bjóða (jubere); stend (sto) from standa (stare); el (alo) from ala (alere); græt (fleo) from gráta (flere), etc.: in plur. the unchanged root vowel returns, bjóðum (jubemus); stöndum (stamus); öllum (alimus); grátum (flemus). γ. in the same way the pret. subj. is formed from pret. plur. indic., e. g. byða (juberem) from buðu (jusserunt); eða (alerem) from ölu (aluerunt); brynna (urerem) from brunnu (usserunt); bæra (ferrem) from báru (tulerunt), etc. ☞ The characteristic j and v reappear in pres. indic. plur.; thus, from sitja (sedere), pres. sing. sit (sedeo), but sitja (sedenit); from höggva (caedere), högg (caedo), but höggva (caedunt): in pres. subj. the j and v are kept through the sing., as sitja (sedeam), höggva (caedam), etc. III. the weak verbs are formed upon a later and quite different principle, viz. by suffixing the auxiliary verb to do, in a (reduplicated?) form ded or did, whence the mod. Engl. deed, Germ. that, Icel. dúð; thus heyr-ð-a = I bear-d or bear did I. This is precisely analogous to the suffixing of the article, only that the verbal suffixed preterite is much older (centuries older than Ulfilas), and is common to all Teutonic languages, ancient and modern; whereas the suffixed article is of later date and is limited to the Scandinavian branch. There probably was a time when the preterite of weak verbs was expressed by a detached auxiliary did, as was common in the English of former days and still remains to a certain extent. The other tenses, future and pluperfect, are still expressed by auxiliaries (mun, skal, vil, hafa); ek mun ganga, íbo; ek hefci gengit, ivi; ek hafða gengit, iveram. In mod. Icel. pres. indic. is used in future sense (as in Gothic and to some extent in Engl.); as, ham kemr aldreí, he will never come; hann kemr á morgun, he comes (i. e. will come) to-morrow. The auxiliary verb mun is chiefly used in writing; in conversation it sounds stiff and affected: again, skal denotes necessity or obligation, e. g. in a reply, eg skal gera þáð.

Modern Changes: generally these are very few, for special cases see above and the single verbs in the Dictionary. There are two things chiefly to be noted:

1. the 1st pers. -a, in pret. indic. as well as in pres. and pret. subj., is changed into -i, boðaði = boðaða (nuntí-avi), hefði = hefða (babberem), hafi = hafa (babeam). These mod. forms began to appear in MSS. even of the 13th century; but the old form still remains in some words in southern Icel., see the Dictionary, p. 2, introduction to letter A (signif. C). 2. the plur. forms of the subj. -im, -it, -i are in most cases changed into -um, -ut, -u, and conform to the indic., thus tölum (loqueremur) instead of taladim; tölum (loquanur) instead of talim; but wherever the subj. is formed by vowel change it remains, thus hefðum (babberemus) instead of the old hefðim; værum (essemus) instead of værim (in indic. höfðum, várum); as also hafði (babui), but hefði (babberem), so that in this case distinction is kept up between indic. and subj. But the old subj. inflexion -i is still sounded in the 2nd and 3rd pers. in many dissyllabic words, e. g. værið (essetis), væri (essent) are quite as freq. as væruð, værum, whereas in the 1st pers. plur. Icel. say værum (essemus), never værim.

3. in 2nd pers. sing. pret. indic. of strong verbs, s has been inserted throughout, thus, brann-st (ussisti), fann-st (invenisti), kom-st (venisti), hljóp-st (cucurrísti), var-st (fuisti), bjó-st (paravísti), etc., whereas the ancients said brann-t, hljóp-t, etc. But even the ancients inserted s with verbs having t as characteristic; indeed it is doubtful whether braut-t (fregísti), grét-t (flevísti) ever occur in old writers; in these words we meet with the s in rhymes, even in verses of the middle of the 11th century, e. g. brauztu við bragning nífztan, Ó. H. 219; brauztu rhymes on mestau, Fms. vi. 139; and so also the MSS., e. g. vcizt (ností) not veit-t; lózt (fecísti) not lét-t, etc. 4. in 2nd pers. pres. indic. of strong verbs ð is inserted in about a score of verbs, viz. in strong verbs and in weak of the 3rd conjugation if they have a final vowel or a final r, fer-ð (is), fæ-rð (capis), dey-rð (moreris), hlæ-rð (rides), slæ-rð (feris), þvæ-rð (lavas), sé-rð (vides), bý-rð (paras), sve-rð (juras), ræ-rð (remigas), gny-rð (fricas), sny-rð (vertis); weak, ber-ð (feris), met-ð (contundis), ver-ð (defendis), smyr-ð (ungis), spyr-ð (quaeris), ljær-ð (commodas), fly-rð (fugis), lý-rð (fatigas), tæ-rð (carpis lanam), instead of fer-r, dey-r, . . . lý-r, tæ-r; but this is conversational and little used in writing: t is added in vil-t (vis, Engl. wilt), for the old vill; both forms occur in very old MSS., e. g. villt, Mork. 57. l. 15, 168. l. 19, but vill 62. l. 3: er-t (es, Engl. thou art) is common for old and mod.

5. for the weak participle in -inn see p. xxiv. Some MSS. (e. g. the Mar. S.) confound the 1st pers. with the 3rd pers. pres. indic., and say, ek segir, heyrir, tekr, elskar, as in mod. Swed. and Dan.; Dan. jeg siger, bærer, tager, elsker, Swed. säger, bærer, tager; cp. in vulgar Engl. I says, I hears, I takes, I loves: this use has never prevailed in Icel., either in speech or writing; and in MSS. it is simply a kind of Norwegianism.

VERBS WITH SUFFIX.

The Reflexive: these verbs are used in a reflexive or reciprocal sense, but seldom as passive, and then in most cases only by way of Latinism, the passive being usually expressed by the auxiliary verb verða or vera; thus elska (amare), but þau elskask, they love one another; anda, to breathe, but andask, to breathe 'oneself', to die, expirare: the reflexive often gives a new turn to a verb, and makes it, so to say, individual and personal; see the Dictionary passim.

II. as to the form, 1. the inflexive -r (of the active voice) is dropped, thus, boða-sk, qs. boðar-sk (nuntiaris). 2. the inflexive -t assimilates to the reflexive -s, and becomes -z, e. g. in the 2nd pers. plur., elskizk (amamini), eggizk (hortamini); þeim hafði boðazk (qs. boðat-sk), as part. pass. neut. illis nuntiantur fruit, but boða-sk (nuntiantur). 3. -sk, qs. sik (se), is the old form, and kept in the oldest MSS.; even sometimes -þ, but usually -z, -zt or -zst (often in MSS. of the 14th century), thus boða-z or boða-zt, the former of which is common in MSS.; the mod. is -st (boða-st), which form is adopted in most Editions and is also found in some old MSS., e. g. in one of the handwritings of Hb. (see Antiqq. Americ. fascini. iv). It is likely that the sound of -zþ, -z, -zt, and -st was much the same, and that they differed only in the spelling.

III. originally there were two suffixes, viz. -sk (i. e. sik, se) for the 2nd and 3rd pers., but -mk (i. e. mik, me) for the 1st pers. plur.; this -mk is used in many good old MSS. (and has generally been adopted in this Dictionary), but was, from some confusion with -sk, changed into -mz or -mst; the -mk may be called the personal reflexive, i. e. the reflexive reflecting the speaker himself. It is worthy of notice that the ancients seldom used ek (I) along with -sk; therefore—instead of saying ek þykki-sk (videor), þótti-sk (videbar), ek andask, létsk, efask, óttask—they said, ek þykkju-mk (videor mibi), ek þótu-mk (videbar mibi), ek óndu-mk (morior), ek látu-mk, ek efu-mk (dubito), ek óttu-mk (timeo), etc.; and ek þykkjumst, ek þóttumst are still in use. This usage is quite correct, and the later common ek þykki-sk is in fact nonsense, being literally egó 'sibi' videor; it no doubt arose from the fact that the sense of the suffix was no longer perceived. 2. we may note also the old poet. usage of joining the reflexive -mk to the 2nd and 3rd pers., but in a personal reflexive sense, as göngumk firr funi, flame! begone from me, Gm. I; jötna vegir stóðu-nik yfir ok undir, the ways of giants stood over and under me, i. e. there were precipices above and below, see the Dictionary, article ek, B. It scarcely needs remark that the m in this case belongs to the pronoun, not to the verbal inflexion, and we are to write þykkju-mk, not þykkjum-k; the inflexive -m is dropped before -mk, just as -r before -sk.

The Negative: it is obsolete and only used in poetry, in laws, old sayings, and the like; from the poets about two hundred instances have been collected—perhaps a hundred more might be gleaned—in Lex. Poët. p. 2, and from prose in this Dictionary, pp. 2, 3. In Unger's Edition of Morkinskinna (lately published), we read mun-k-at, 50; mun-a, 37; er-a, 36, 52, 129, 186; vere-a (non esset), 37.

I. this suffix is chiefly used, 1. in the verb substantive and in the irregular verbs with pret. pres., esp. á, mun, skal, which four verbs include nearly half the instances: in regular strong verbs and some few verbs of the 3rd and 4th weak conjugation, hafa, lifa, göra, etc.: very seldom in the 1st or 2nd weak conjugation, e. g. kallar-a (non vocas), Akv. 37; subj. stöðvi-g-a (non sistem), Hm. 151; and once or twice in trisyllabic tenses.

2. as to moods, it is freq. in indic. and imperat., but seldom in subj., where scarcely a score of instances are on record, e. g. verir-a, væri-a, kveðir-a, megi-t, verði-t, standi-t, renni-a, bití-a, sé-t (non sit), etc.; and never in infin.

3. as to number and person, freq. in sing. through all persons; in plur. freq. in 3rd pers., but very rare in 1st and 2nd; forms such as vitum-a, munum-a, várum-a (non fuimus), ættim-a (non baberemus), or segit-a (ne dicatis), farit-a (ne eatis), each probably occurs only once.

4. as to voice, it is rarely used with a reflexive; þóttisk-a (non videbatur), komsk-a (non pervenit), kömsk-at, forðumk-a (non evitamus), each occurs about once or twice; ermk-a (non est mibi), Stor. 17, Eg. 459 (in a verse).

II. as to form, -at and -a both occur, as skal-a and skal-at, mon-a and mon-at; -a is preferred when the next word begins with a consonant, -at when it begins with a vowel; but they are often used indiscriminately.

2. after a vowel inflexion the vowel of the suffix is dropped, and -t (-ð, -þ) remains, as áttu-ð, vitu-ð (nescitis), eigu-t (non habent), standa-t (non stant); yet in a few instances -a is used, but the hiatus sounds ill, e. g. biti-a, renni-a, skríði-a, all from Hkv. 2. 30, 31; væri-a, Mork. 37, Bkv. 8; kæmi-a (non veniat), Gs. 10; urðu-a (non fiebant), Gh. 3—in verbs with characteristic j it appears, thus þegi-at-tu (ne taceas), segi-at-tu (ne dicas), eggi-a (ne borteris), Sdm. 32; teygj-at, id.; kvelj-at (hilt not), Völ. 31; leti-at (ne retineat), Skv. 3. 44—in verbs ending in a long vowel the a is not dropped, e. g. kná-at (cannot), á-at (ought not), sá-at (saw not).

3. in 1st pers. sing. the personal pronoun (-k = ek) is inserted between the verb and suffix, á-k-at, em-k-at, etc.: if the verb ends in gg an assimilation takes place, hykk-at, qs. hygg-k-at (I think not); likk-at, qs. ligg-k-at (non jaceo): after a long vowel the k is even doubled, e. g. sé-kk-at (non video), má-kk-at (non debeo): the pronoun is even repeated, e. g. má-k-at ek, sá-k-at ek, etc.—in weak dissyllabic forms the inserted k becomes g, stöðvi-g-a, or iterated stöðvigak, bjargi-g-a, Hm. 151, 153; (note also that the inflex. -a of the 1st pers. is here turned into -i, bjargi-g-a, not bjarga-g-a).

4. in 2nd pers. sing. the personal pronoun þú is also iterated, the latter being assimilated, er-t-at-tu for er-t-þú; mon-t-a-ttu, but also mon-at-tu.

The Personal: 1. for -k in the 1st pers., see s. v. ek (B), p. 124. 2. the 2nd pers. þú, thou, is suffixed, as -ðu, -du, -tu, or -u, according to the final of the verb, a. imperat. boða-ðu, dømdu, gled-ðu, spyr-ðu, vak-tu, dug-ðu; brenn-ðu, rís-tu, bjóð-ðu, far-ðu, gef-ðu, ber-ðu, grát-tu, hlauptu; ver-tu, eig-ðu, mun-tu, mun-ðu, unn-tu, vit-tu, ró-ðu, gró-ðu, sá-ðu, snú-ðu, gnú-ðu, kjós-tu, slá-ðu;

as also hað-ðu, gör-ðu, kom-ðu (kon-ðu) come thou! vil-tu, stattu-stand thou! bitt-u bind thou! pres. boðar-ðu, brennr-ðu, ris-tu, býðr-ðu, . . . er-tu, átt-u, kann-tu, munt-u, veizt-u, etc.: pret. boðaðir-ðu, . . . dugðir-ðu, braunt-u, bautt-u (bauðst-u), reist-u, grétst-u, hljópt-u, hljóst-u, etc.: subj. boðaðir-ðu, . . . gleddir-ðu, etc.: this usage is freq.

in old prose, and already occurs in even the oldest poems, but it has gained ground in mod. usage, and esp. in speech it has quite superseded the detached þú; the vowel is ambiguous, being sometimes pronounced long (viltú), but usually short (viltu), in which latter case it has become a full suffix.

ADVERBS, PARTICLES, ETC.

ADVERBS.

With Degrees of Comparison: I. the neut. sing. is freq. used as positive, e. g. þung-t, heavily; skjót-t, suddenly; fljót-t, þrát-t, ót-t, ör-t, stór-t, har-t, mjúk-t, ljót-t, fagr-t, etc. 2. from adjectives in -ligr is formed an adverb in -liga, skjót-liga, ná-liga, etc.: in a few cases, especially in poetry, they are contracted -la, thus skjót-la, óð-la, brál-la, etc.; in prose in var-la, bardly, Lat. vix, but var-liga, warily; harð-la or har-la, very, but harð-la, barsbly; ár-la, early; but from var-la, har-la, ár-la no degrees of comparison are formed. 3.

a few end in -á, víð-á, far and wide; snemm-á, early; ill-á, ill, badly; görvá, quite. 4. special forms, leng-i, Lat. diu, but lang-t, locally; fjar-, far; vel, well; sjaldan, seldom; síð, late; opt, often; mjök, much; lítt, little; inn, in; út, out; fram, onwards; aþtr, backwards; niðr, down; upp, up; heim, home: of the quarters, austr, norðr, suðr, vestr.

II. the formation of degrees of comparison is like that of the adjectives, only that the inflexive -i, -a, -r is dropped; as skjót-t, compar. skjót-ar, superl. skjót-ast; fljót-t, fljót-ar, fljót-ast; fagr-t, fegr, fegr-st; skjóttlig-a, skjóttlig-ar, skjóttlig-ast; víð-a, víð-ar, víð-ast; leng-i, leng-r, leng-st; skamm-t, skem-r, skem-st; (fjar), fir-r, fir-st; vel, bet-r (melius), bezt; ill-a, ver-r, ver-st; görvá, gör-r (more fully), gör-st; sjaldn-a, sjaldn-ar, sjaldn-ast; snemm-a, snem-r, snemi-st; síð-r (less), sízt (least), but síð-ar (later), síð-ast (latest); opt, opt-ar, opt-ast; mjök, mei-r, me-st; lit-t, mið-r or minn-r (less, Lat. minus), minn-st; inn, inn-ar, inn-st; út, út-ar, út-ast or yzt; upp, of-ar, of-st; niðr, neð-ar (farther down), neð-st; aþtr, apt-ar (farther behind), apt-ast of ept-st; austr, aust-ar, aust-ast; norðr, norð-ar, norð-ast or nyrd-st; suðr, sunn-ar, sunn-ast, sýnn-st or syð-st; vestr, vest-ar, vest-ast: without positive are, ská-r (better), ská-st; hand-ar (ulterius), hand-ast; held-r (rather), heldzt; fyr-r (prius), fyr-st; hand-ar (ulterius), hand-ast; superl. hinn-st (hindermost). Old writers usually spell -arr, thus opt-arr, síð-arr, víð-arr, etc., as also fyr-r, gör-r, in mod. usage opt-ar, víð-ar, fyr, gör. 2. the full adjectival comparative is frequently made to serve as adverbial comparative, e. g. hæ-ra, higher; læg-ra, lower; leng-ra in local sense, but leng-r in temp. sense; skem-ra (local), but skem-r (temp.).—or both forms are used indiscriminately, as víð-ar and víð-ara; skjót-ar and skjót-ara, harð-ar and harð-ara. 3. if following after the article the superlative conforms to the neut. sing. of the weak declension, e. g. riða hit harðasta, to ride one's hardest; hit skjótasta, fyrsta, síðasta, etc.

Without Degrees of Comparison: I. adverbs with inflexions, 1. formed as genitive in -s, or -is, or -ar; öllungis, quite; einungis, only; lok-s, at last, or lok-ins, id.; all-s, in all: formed from nouns, as leið, dagr; heim-leiðis, homewards; sömu-leiðis, likewise; á-leiðis, onwards; rak-leiðis, straight; ár-degis, early in the day; framveg-is, furthermore; útbýrd-is, overboard; innbýrd-is, inwardly; ókeypis-is, gratis; erlend-is, abroad; margsinn-is, optinn-is, many a time; umhverf-is or umberg-is, all around; jafn-fætis, on equal footing; and-sælis, against the sun; for-streymis, for-brekkis, for-viðis; tví-vegis, twice, etc.—in -ar, from staðr, allstað-ar, everywhere; sumstað-ar, somewhere; annars-stað-ar, elsewhere; einhverstað-ar, anywhere; nokkurs-stað-ar, id.; marg-stað-ar, in many places: from konar (generis), kind; eins-konar, annars-konar, of another kind; nokkurs-konar, of any kind; alls-konar, hvers-konar, margs-konar: alls-kostar = alls-konar: so, many other words, innan-húss, in-doors; utan-húss, out-doors; utan-lands, abroad; and inn-fjarða, innan-lands, etc. 2. the acc. sing. masc. is often used adverbially, as harð-an, swiftly; bráð-an, suddenly; riða mikinn, to ride fast; this is properly an elliptical use, a noun being understood. 3. in -um, properly a dative form, eink-um, especially; fyrr-um, formerly; löng-um, all along; tíð-um, often; stund-um, sometimes; forð-um, of yore; fíkj-um, eagerly; óð-um, rapidly; bráð-um, by and by; endrum og sínum, now and then; höppum og glöppum, by hops and gaps; smám saman, by little and little: also from nouns, hrönn-um and unnvörp-um (Lat. undatim). 4. in -eg, from veigr, a way; thus þann-ig, þann-og, thus and thither; þinn-ig, the other way, thither; hvern-ig, how; einn-ig, also: the ancients often spell þann-og, etc.; in mod. usage þann-inn, hvern-inn, einn-inn; hins-eg-inn

(the other way), qs. þann-iginn or þann-veginn, etc., from the noun along with the article: the adverbs, báðum-egin, on both sides; hvárum-egin, on what side; hinum-eginn, on the other side; öllum-eginn, on all sides; hérna-eginn, on this side; formed from dat. plur. and veigr, the oldest form is probably báðu-megum, both forms being in dat.: öðru-vísí, otherwise. 5. in -an, denoting motion from a place; héð-an, hence; það-an, thence; hvað-an, whence; síð-an, since; und-an, before; fram-an, q. v.; hand-an, from beyond; neð-an, from beneath; of-an, from above; heim-an, from home; inn-an, from the inner part; út-an, from outwards; norð-an, from the north; aust-an, sunn-an, vest-an, etc.: without the notion of motion, áð-an, shortly, a little while ago; jafn-an, 'evenly,' frequently; sam-an, together. 6. in -at, denoting motion to the place, hing-at or heg-at, thither; þang-at, thither; hver-t, whither. 7. terminations denoting rest in the place, hér, here; þar, there; hvar, where; hvar-gi, nouwhere; heim-a, at home: old poet. forms are hédra, here; þaðra, there. 8.

mod. forms suffixing a demonstrative particle -na, hér-na, þar-na, tar-na, this here (qs. þat þar-na): in -i, fram-i (q. v.), upp-i, niðr-i. 6. numeral adverbs, tvisvar, twice; þrýsvar, thrice, (spelt with y in good old MSS.)

II. special adverbs, ár, early; ár-la, id.; þegar, at once, Lat. jam; svá, so, thus, and svo-na, id.; ger, yesterday; þá, then; nú, now, and nú-na, just now; nær, when; hve-nær, id.; eou, still; senn, soon; ella, else; unz, until; já, yes; nei, no; aldri, never; æ, ever; ætíð, id.; ei and ey, id.; sí, Lat. semper, only in compounds and in the phrase, sí og æ, for ever and ever; hvi, why; hve, how; hversu, id.; allténd (mod.), always; ávalt, id.; alla-jafna, id.; einatt, repeatedly; of, too; van, too little, used singly only in the phrase, of ok van; samt, together; sundr, asunder; á mis, amiss; ymist, indiscriminately; iðula, repeatedly, etc.

Adverbial Prefixes: 1. in positive and intensive sense, especially with adjectives, al-, quite, al-, see Dictionary, p. 11 sqq.; all-, very; auð-, easy; afar-, greatly; fjöl-, frequently; of-, too (very freq.); ofr-, very, greatly: temp. sí-, semper: ið-, often, again; ey- or ei-, ever-; einka-, especially; endr-, again; frum-, originally. 2. in special sense, dá-, very; full-, quite; hálf-, half; jafn-, equally, in many words, etc.: only as prefixes, sam-, together, Lat. con-, in many words; er-, qs. el- (cp. Lat. ali-us), in er-leudr and compds; and-, against; gagn-, id.; gör-, quite, altogether. 3.

in negative sense, ú- or ó-, = Lat. in-, Engl. un-, in a great many words; the mod. form is ó-, e. g. ó-fagr, unfair, ugly; un- is the etymologically true form, which is preserved in German and English, as well as in mod. Danish, Swedish, and Norse; but that the Icel., even in the 12th century, had already changed ú- into ó- is shewn by the spelling of the earliest MSS., and from the statement in Skálda by the second grammarian, who says that 'ó- or ú- changes the sense of a word, as in satt (sooth), or ó-satt (untrue),' Skálda 171; but in the bulk of MSS. of a later date, after the union with Norway, the ú- prevailed, and was henceforth adopted in the Editions, although the Icel. people all along pronounced ó-, which also is the spelling in all modern books, and might well be adopted in Editions too: mis- (cp. Engl. amiss), differently, and also badly, in many compds: var-, scarcely, insufficiently; svi-, cp. svei, p. xxviii: van-, deficiency, 'wane'; tor-, = Gr. δυσ-, with difficulty, opp. to auð-: ör-, = Lat. ex-, thus ör-skipta = expers, ör-endr = exanimis, etc.: for-, in a few words, cp. p. 182.

Words denoting wonder, awe are often used as adverbial prefixes in an intensive sense, as geysi-, æði-, undra-, fjarska-, furðu-, óskapa-, awfully, wonderfully; see Dictionary.

PREPOSITIONS.

With dat. and acc., at, Lat. ad, only exceptionally with acc.; á, Lat. in, Engl. on; fyrir, for, before; eptir, after; í, in; undir, under, beneath; yfir, over, above; víð, with, = Lat. cum; með, id.

2. with dat., af, off, of; frá, from; ór, mod. úr, Lat. ex, out of; hjá, Lat. juxta, = besides; móti, against; gegn, id.

3. with acc., gegnum, through; fram, on, onwards; upp, up; niðr, down; ofan, id.; um, Lat. de, per, old form of.

4. with gen., til, till, to; án, without; milli or meðal, between. The prepositions á and i are in the MSS. usually joined to the following word, thus alandi=á landi, iriki=í ríki. As to the syntactic use of prepositions, elliptically and adverbially, see Dictionary. In poetry, even in plain popular songs, hymns, epics, etc., a preposition can be put after its case, e. g. birnst snjóhvítum búningi í, blesaðir englar líka, Pass. 2I. 10; himnum á=á himnum, in the heavens; but scarcely, unless before a pause at the end of a line.

CONJUNCTIONS.

The chief of these are, ok, mod. og, and, also; né, nor, Lat. neque; oða or eðr, or, Lat. aut; ellegar, id.; en, but, Lat. sed, autem, vero; en (an), þan, Lat. quam; enda, and even, and then; ef, if, Lat. si; nema, unless, but, Lat. nisi; heldr, but, Lat. sed; sem, as, Lat. ut, sicut; þó, though, although, yet; alls, because; hvárt, whetber, Lat. an; því, therefore: we may here add the enclitic particle of or um (different from the prep. um), which is very much used in old poetry, and now and then in laws and very old prose, e. g. hann of sá, þe saw; er sér of getr, who gets for himself, see Lex. Pöet.

Compounds of adverbs, prepositions, and conjunctions are much used: 1. prepositions and adverbs or double prepositions; á meðan, whilst, meanwhile; á undan, ahead; á eptir, behind; á milli and á meðal, among, between; á ofan, to boot; á samt, together; á móti, against; á fram, on, along; á lengdar, afar; á síðan, since; á víð, alike: auk-heldr, still more; í frá, from, cp. Swed. ifrån; í sundr, asunder; í gegn, against; í hjá, aside; í senn, in one; í kring, around; undir eins, at once; at auk, to boot; at ofan, from above; upp aprt, over again; kringum (qs. kringum), all around; gegn-um, all through; yfir um (proncd. ufrum), across; fyrrum, formerly; framan af, in the beginning; hédan af, henceforth; þaðan af, thenceforth; allt af, for ever; hingað til, bitberto; þangað til, until; eptir á, after, (so ávalt, for of all); ofan á, insuper; framan á, in front; neðan á, beneath on; aptan á, behind on: as also, ofan í, down; neðan í, underneath, at the bottom; framan í, in the face; aptan í, in the rear; framan til, until; austan til, norðan til, sunnan til, vestan til, etc.; áð aptan, and aptan til, behind; fyrr fram, beforehand; fyrr útán, except, etc., see e. g. fyrr and fram:—with nouns, á víxl, alternately; á laun, secretly; á vit, towards; á mis, amiss; á braut, abroad, away; á ská, askance; á víð ok dreif, scattered abroad.

2. with a conjunction; þó at or þó-tt, although; svá at (svá-t), so that, Lat. ut; því at, for that, because; hvárt áð, whetber; ef áð, if; fyrr en, Lat. priusquam; áðr en, id.; at eigi, that not, lest; eins og, as; áð eins, only, barely; þegar er, Lat. simul ac; síðan er, Lat. postquam; meðan er, Lat. dum; hvárt er, Lat. utrum; hvar's, wheresoever; hvegi er, whosoever: in mod. usage, þegar áð, síðan áð, meðan áð, hvárt áð, and many others. 3. adverbial phrases, e. g. áð vörmu spori (tepidio vestigio), at once; um hæl, 'turning the heel', in return; af bragði, af stundu, instantly; aprt á bak, backwards; um leið, by the way; eptir áð hyggja, apropos, and many others.

INTERJECTIONS AND EXCLAMATIONS.

To denote consent, já já or jú jú, yea yea! ó já, O yes! jaur or jur, bear! O. H. L. 10, 45, 69, Mirm. (jur); in mod. usage, jír jór or jur jór, sounded almost like the Engl. bear bear! (it is doubtful whether this Engl. exclamation has any connection with bear=audire):—half consent, þeja, yea yea!—denial, nei nei, ó nei, ó ekki, ekki, O no!—bitti nú, wait a bit!—loathing, bja, fussum, fý, fi! vei, Lat. vae, Engl. woe, whence the compd svei or svei þér (qs. sé vei, woe be to thee!), (a shepherd's shout, e. g. to a dog worrying the sheep), or Læt apage! putt (Dan. pyt, Swed. pytt), þisb, þsbaw! Mork. 138: þey þey, tush!—hushing to sleep, etc., dillindó, korrið, bíum bíum, bí bí (as in the rhyme, Bí, bí og blaka!)—hó hó, bo, boa! a shepherd's cry in gathering his flock so as to make the fells resound, hence the verb hóa; trutt trutt, hott hott, hæ hæ! the shout in driving or leading horses; tu tu tu tu, kus kus, bás bás! in milking or driving cows into the byre; kis kis, puss puss (to a cat); sep sep or hép hép (to a dog); rhrhrh! in driving horses or cattle out of a field, imitating the sound of a rattle, called áð síga:—amazement, uss, sussu (qs. svá svá), sei sei, á, eb!—a cry of pain, ai ai! which form occurs in Sæm. I 18 and þorf. Karl. 390, v. l. whence the mod. æð (proncd. like Engl. long i); this Icel. use is curious, as mod. Swedes, Danes, and Norsemen, as well as Germans, all say au (proncd. ow); from æ comes the verb æja, to cry; æ æ, æi, beigb-ób! aví, = Germ. ob web, is foreign;—exultation, hæ hæ, á á, aba!—wonder, delight, ó ó!—enquiry, há, ubat!—chattering of the teeth from cold, atatata, hutututu, Orkn. 326.

2. interjections imitating the voice of birds or beasts, e. g. dírríndí (of the lark); there is a pretty legend about this in Isl. þjóðs. ii. 2; krunk krunk (of the raven); mjá mjá (of the cat); gagg gagg (of the fox); kví kví kví, cp. kyteitt kyvitt in the bird's song in Der Machandelboom in Grimm's Märchen: tí tí tí, úh úh! Bb. 2. 12; ví ví (of birds and ducks); gagga-gagg (of a gull).

THE SUFFIXED PARTICLES.

These are suffixed to nouns and verbs, but never used separately: I. the nominal suffix -gi, originally a copula, akin to Lat. -que, and used so in some words, but chiefly used in a negative sense, see Dictionary, p. 199. II. the verbal negative suffix -a, -at, see p. xxvi. The true explanation of this particle is found in the Gothic, which makes frequent use of a suffixed particle -ub (esp. in verbs and also in pronouns), to which the particle þan is freq. added in an indefinite enclitic sense, almost as the Gr. δέ, thus vas-ub-þan, or assimilated vas-ub-þan=Gr. ἦν δέ; skál-ub-þan=δαί γάρ; stóþ-ub-þan=εἰστήκει δέ; nam-ub-þan=ἐλαβε δέ; quaf-ub-þan=ἐλεγε δέ; vésun-ub-þan=ἦσαν δέ; quérjun-ub-þan=ἐλεγον οὖν; vitum-ub-þan=οἶδαμεν δέ; vitaidedun-ub-þan=παρητήρουν δέ; bidjandans-ub-þan=προσευχόμενοι δέ; and even in passages where the Gr. text has no particle, qvíþid-ub=εἶπατε (Mark xvi. 7). There can be little doubt of the identity, by way of assimilation, of the Goth. -ub or -ub-þan and the Scand. -a or -af (-at). As to the sense, the difference is that whereas in Gothic this suffix is used indefinitely or is almost an affirmative copula, the Icel. is only used in a decidedly negative sense. But the freedom in the use of the particles is greater than in any other part of speech; and the negative and affirmative frequently take the place of one another in different dialects, e. g. -gi, see above; so eyvit etymologically = ougbt, but in fact used = naugbt (the etymological notice p. 136 is scarcely correct); or, on the other hand, neinn or ne-einn, qs. none (n'one), but actually used = Lat. ullus; nokkurr, prop. from ne and hverr, = ne-quis, but in fact used = aliquis; ein-gi, ein-gir are both used negatively = none, and positively = any; Icel. mánn-gi, Lat. nemo, is etymologically identical to Engl. many; ei-manni, nobody, Vþm., is etymologically = Germ. je-mand=everybody; the particle ei- is used both in a positive and negative sense; vætr, a wight, is positive, but is used negatively = naugbt. As to the form, the Icel. -a answers to Goth. -ub, the Icel. t or þ to Goth. þ, whereas the -an is dropped. The double Goth. form -ub and -ub-þan (-ub-þan) also explains the puzzling Icel. double form -a and -af (-at); the -a represents the -ub singly, the -af the compd -ub-þan or -ub-þan. A further proof is that neither the Goth. nor the Icel. suffix was used with nouns. In the 9th and 10th centuries the negative suffixed verb appears to have still been in full use among Icelanders (at that time there were no books), else it could not have survived in laws and old saws; there are about four or five hundred instances, three-fourths in poetry; it lingered on into the 11th or even 12th century, and then became obsolete; in Norway, Sweden, and Denmark it seems to have disappeared much sooner, and has left no traces. From Ulf. we see that in his days the Goths used the -ub freely, though in a different sense. As a pronominal suffix the Gothic -ub seems to remain in the Icel. word þeim-a, Goth. þaim-ub=illi; perhaps also in hvát-ta, ubat! Mork. 129 (exclam. indignantis); cp. also the mod. hváð-a, who? perhaps also in end-a=hédé; and lastly, the demonstrative pronoun þetta=Goth. þat-ub=Gr. τοῦτο, but in these cases the particle has not taken the negative sense (see Grimm's Gr. iii. 24, 25; the explanation of the negative -at, as suggested in iii. 718, from vætr, is not admissible). A different kind of negative is the particle ne before a verb, only in old poets, e. g. Vsp., sól þat ne vissi (thrice within a single stanza); in A. S. and Early Engl. often prefixed to the verb, as nolde=n'wolde, naðde=n'badde, cp. Lat. nolo, nemo; in Icel. it remained in the adj. neinn and nokkurr (see above), cp. also neita or nita, negare. In mod. usage eigi or ekki has replaced almost all other negative particles. To make it emphatic, nouns are added, ekki grand, not a grain; ekki vitund, not a wight; ekki hót, qs. ekki hvat, naugbt; ekki ögn, not a mite; ekki augna-blik, not the twinkling of an eye; ekki fet, not a step: and borrowed from French, ekki þar, ne pas. Phrases of this kind are of modern growth and were scarcely used by the ancients;—ekki lyf, Skv. 2, is dubious, if not corrupt. In sense the Icel. enclitic particle of or um answers to the Goth. -ub, but is detached and placed before the verb or noun: this particle, although a favourite with the old poets (like the Homeric δ' ἄρα), is obsolete, and in prose is only found now and then in the oldest writers, in laws and the like. III. the demonstrative suffix -na, in nú-na, þar-na, hér-na, svá-na; this -na is akin to Lat. en, ecce (qs. en-ce), and is found in A. S. eno and O. H. G. ino; cp. the Icel. exclamation há-na, hana-nú! It probably explains the Icel. and Scand. demonstrative pronoun hann (he), hon (she), compared with Engl. he; hann, hon being qs. ha-n, hó-n, be there, sbe there, en ille, en illa! cp. also gær-na=gær, q. v.; þér-na, iðimét, Mork. 120. IV. a pronominal suffix -su, -sa occurs in hver-su, þow; því-sa, dat. neut. of þat; þeim-sa, dat. masc. from sá.

FORMATION OF WORDS.

VOWEL CHANGES.

All changes of vowels are of two kinds, simple and complex : 1. the simple is homogeneous and leaves the quantity of the vowel unaltered ; a short vowel is changed into a short, a long or a diphthong into a long or a diphthong ; this change is generally caused by characteristic or inflexive letters, in Icel. especially by i (j) and u (v). 2. the complex is heterogeneous and affects the quantity of a vowel, which is changed from a short into a long or diphthongal vowel ; this change is generally produced by, a. agglutination, absorption, or the like ; or, β. by contraction of two syllables into one (e. g. reduplicated syllables contracted).

The Simple Vowel Changes.

The Umlaut or Vowel Change was first traced out by Jacob Grimm in his Grammar of 1819 and 1822 ; it is of two kinds, A. the i-umlaut caused by a characteristic i or j ; and, B. the u-umlaut caused by a characteristic u or v.

A. The i-umlaut, whereby the primitive vowels a, á, au, o, ó, u, ú, jó, jú, (o), are changed into e, æ, ey, y, æ, y, ý, ý, (ø).

The primitive vowels are thus changed into mixed vowels with an i-sound ; short vowels change into short, and long or diphthongs into long or diphthongs. All the changed vowels have an a- or u-sound blended with i, whence it follows that no change takes place within the i-class itself, and i, í, ei are unchangeable (' unumlautbar,' as Grimm says) : the characteristic i usually appears as j, or has since been dropped in most cases ; it can only be sounded, a. in dissyllabic words with a short root syllable, i. e. a short vowel and a single final, thus tem-ja, ven-ja, but tœma, vœna ; and, β. in long syllables with g, k, or a vowel as final, without regard to the quantity of the root vowel, thus fyg-ja, hœg-ja, søk-ja, dey-ja : in monosyllables it is apocopated throughout, e. g. in nes, but nes-ja. Thousands of words are formed by way of umlaut, but all words thus formed are derivatives, nouns as well as verbs : I. roots and words formed by umlaut are, 1. verbs, the greatest part of the 2nd weak conjugation, such as dœma, geyma, heyra, kenna, at least three hundred, to which add all those with inflexive -ja, in the 2nd and 3rd conjugations and a few of the 1st, together about two hundred verbs. We may take as a sample the transitive verbs which are formed from the strong intransitive verbs, all following the 2nd weak conjugation, and having for root vowel the pret. sing. of the strong verbs but with changed vowel wherever the vowel is changeable ; about forty such words are in use, formed from the 1st class, with pret. a, sprengja, drekkja, brenna, renna, bella, sleppa, spretta, svelta, vella, velta, hverfa, þverra, skelfa, hrökkva, stökkva, sökkva : from the 2nd and 3rd classes, pret. ei, au, leiða, reiða, dreifa, hneigja, reisa, beita, bleikja ; geysa, fleyta, hreyta, þeyta, dreypa, fleygja, smeygja, feykja, reykja : from the 4th class, pret. ó, œxa, fœra, gœla, kœla, søera, hlœgja : from the 5th and 6th classes, pret. át, a, etc., leggja, setja and sæta, svæfa ; fella, hengja, græta,—all of them causal, denoting to make one do so and so, e. g. brenna (brann), to burn, but brænna (brenn-di), to consume by fire ; hverfa (hvarf), to disappear, hverfa, ð, to turn ; riða (reið), to ride, reiða, dd, to carry ; bita (beit), to bite, beita, t, to cut, make bite ; hníga (hneig), to sink, hneigja, ð, to make to sink ; sofa, to sleep, svæfa, ð, to lull to sleep ; falla (féll), to fall, fella, d, to fell ; gráta (grét), to grieve (weep), græta, tt, to make one grieve ; hanga (hékk), to hang (intrans.), hengja, d, to hang (trans.), etc. 2. nouns, adjectives ; those as ný-r, sœt-r, counting perhaps a hundred words : substantives, hundreds of derivatives, e. g. the neuters in -i, as klæð-i : all the weak feminines in -i, as glæð-i : the words of the 2nd declension of strong masc. and fem., as bekkr, fit, heiðr : the masc. in -ir, as lækn-ir : neuters, as nes ;—in short, all words marked as having characteristic i or j : in the chief declension (the 1st), hundreds of words, as ben, prayer, from bón ; væta, wetness, from vátur ; or, 3. words with nominal inflexions, the feminines with inflexive -d (ð, t, prop. instead of -id), leng-d, length, from lang ; hæ-ð, beight, from há-r ; dýp-t, depth, from djúp : most feminines with inflexive -ska and -sla (qs. -iska, -isla), bern-ska from barn, Ísland-ska from Ísland, gæt-sla from gát : masculines in -ingr and feminines in -ing, thus England, England, but Englendingr, an Englishman ; læg-ing, lowering, from lág-r ; but not in those in -ningr, -ning, e. g. brag-ningr, drótt-ning (not drœtting), as the n comes between the word and root vowel : masculines in -ill, ket-ill : diminutives in -lingr, bækk-lingr, libellus, from bók ; dræp-lingr, a ditty, from drápa, a poem. II. inflexions formed by way of umlaut are, 1. verbs ; in about three hundred verbs the derivative tenses pres. indic. and pret. subj. are thus formed, viz. all the strong verbs and the weak of the 3rd and partly those of the 4th conjugation (see the tables and remarks on the verbs above). 2. nouns ; the plur. in the 3rd strong declension, bók, bæc-r ; eigandi, eigend-r ; bróð-ir, brœð-r ; fað-ir, fed-r ; móð-ir, mœð-r ; fót-r, fœt-r ; mús, mýs-s ; gás, gæs-s,—the -r or -s being here contracted instead of -ir. 3. dissyllabic comparatives (and superlatives) of adjectives, in -ri, -str, ying-ri, yng-str ; hæ-ri, hæ-str, etc.

By observing the rules of the vowel change the reader will be enabled to follow the derivative words recurring in the Dictionary, e. g. glæðr and glæði, fúr and fætta, auðr and eyða, forn and fyrna, bót and boeta, fullr and fylla, fúss and fýsa, ljós and lýsa. Lastly, we have to notice that, 1. the œ (in MSS. spelt ø and œ) is obsolete in Icel., and the changes of á and ó are sounded both alike, thus fótr, fœti (old fœti) ; móð-ir, bróð-ir, old plur. mœð-r, brœð-r ; in Denmark, Sweden, and Norway the distinction is retained, and has to be borne in mind for the sake of the etymology. 2. the vowel change o into ø is rare and obsolete, and is now represented by e ; it takes place in very few words, e. g. the comparative and superlative from of-, öfri, öfstr ; norðr, norðri : the pres. indic. kœm-r from koma (to come), sœf-r from sofa (to sleep), trœð-r from troða (to tread) ; but commonly kœm-r, trœð-r, sef-r : the plur. of hnót (a nut), hnót-r ; stöð (a column), stöð-r, but later huet-r, steð-r ; this change is therefore in col. I put last, between (), and it need not be heeded, and o and u may be said to have the same vowel change.

B. The u-umlaut, whereby the primitive vowels a, á, are changed into ö (ø), ó.

Distinction is to be made between the change if caused by a characteristic or an inflexive u : I. the change by a characteristic u takes place in the following instances, a. nouns, all masculines as kött-r : feminines as höfn : neuters as högg : neuter plurals as börn from barn : masculines as söng-r. β. adjectives, in fem. sing. and neut. plur. in words as fagr : and through all genders in adjectives as föl-r. γ. verbs : those in -va (only a few). 2. the vowel change ú, ó takes place in all similar instances, e. g. hótt-r (modus) ; óss (a god) = úss ; nál = nál (needle) ; ó-r = ár (an oar) ; ó-r = ár (years) ; sár = sár (wounds) ; fó = fá (few), fem. and neut. ; há = há (big), fem. and neut. ; but this change from ú into ø is now obsolete, and has been lost for about seven centuries, whereas the change from a into ö is still in full use ; both are of common origin, and can only have risen together and at a time when the inflexive -u was still suffixed to all these words. Since that time it has been dropped in many cases, but the vowel change has remained, in some forms throughout all numbers and cases, whereas in others, as barn, höfn, fagr, the primitive vowel recurs before inflexive -ar, -ir, and the like ; the difference is probably only one of time, the one being older and weak, the other later and stronger. 3. The words in p. I, col. 2, lines 23, 24 from the bottom are not quite exact, and ought to be worded thus, ' this vowel change seems still to have been in full use in Icel. during the 11th and 12th centuries, being etc.' II. the change caused by an inflexive -u takes place in all words, nouns and verbs, having a as root vowel, and -u, -ur, -um for inflexion, cp. in the tables the verbs kalla, vaka, and such nouns as hjarta, alda. Thus in börn and in börn-um the case is different, the ö in börn is caused by a lost characteristic u, in börn-um it is caused by the inflexive -um ; as also in göm-ul (prisca) from gamal. 3. The former change by a characteristic u was in olden times common to all Scandinavians, whereas the latter seems to be solely Icel. ; Swedes, Danes, and Norsemen said lönd (terrae), but landum (terris) ; börn, but barnum ; as also gamul (prisca), not as the Icel. gömul. It is to be borne in mind that a characteristic belongs to the root, and has a stronger hold than an inflexive vowel, so that the former may cause a change in the root vowel, though the latter does not. It is also to be noticed that the inflexive vowel was not properly u, but in early times sounded and spelt o (land-om, kall-om, gam-ol). β. in inflexive syllables ending in a the change usually becomes u, e. g. hundrað, sumur, from hundrað, sumar ; kölluðu, clamabant : in hard or strong inflexions both forms are right, as in eigöndum and eigund-um, hördöstum and hördustum ; in mod. usage the latter is more current. III. the ancients seem to have had a third kind of u change, viz. caused by a mixed i and u, which they spelt ø or ey, as the verbs hrökkva, dökkvan, stökkva were in MSS. sometimes spelt hreyqua, steyqua, deyquan, qs. hranquian ; but this was confined to a few words and is now obsolete.

There is also a peculiar Resolution of the vowels i or e into ja (or já). This is called 'breaking' (Grimm 'brechung'), and takes place in some infinitives of strong verbs of the 1st class, gjalda, etc., and in several nouns, e. g. hjálp, help; cp. also berg and bjarg, fell and fjall, gildi and gjald: in the feminines björk, a birch; fjöl, a deal-board; björg, help; tjörn, a turn; fjöðr, a feather (but also fidr); gjöf, a gift, from gefa, to give; gjörð, a girdele; jörð, earth (see remarks on the 1st strong fem. declension); in the seven masc. nouns, as fjörðr, a firth (see remarks on the 2nd strong masc. declension): and in sundry other nouns, jarl, an earl, hjalm-r, a helmet; jaki, ice, jökull, an icicle; hjarta, heart; jötunn, a giant, fjöturr, a fetter: in adjectives, as bjartr bright, but birti brighiness; sjálfr, self; jafn, even; gjarn, willing (and giri); snjall and snilli; fjarr, far, but firr, farther, and firask, to avoid, whence fjar-ski, q. v.; sjaldan, seldom; fjöl, Germ. viel, whence fjöldi, multitude. These must be distinguished from such words as fjúndi, qs. fi-andi, a fiend; sjúndi, seeing, qs. si-andi; or in trjá, arborum; fjár, pecoris;—in all of which the já is produced by contraction; as also from jó or jú, in bjóða, ljós, and similar words.

The Complex and Heterogeneous Vowel Changes.

Absorption and Contraction. A consonant is sometimes absorbed by a preceding vowel, which then becomes long or diphthongal:

I. absorption of nasals, a. the inflexive -n in the weak nouns and infinitives of verbs has been absorbed, but as all Icel. inflexions (of cases and tenses) have short vowels, the end syllable has not in this case become long, and the n has simply been dropped, leaving at first a nasal sound, which afterwards disappeared: similar is the contraction in the negative suffix (see p. xxvi). β . in roots, the Scandinavian tongue commonly contracts the particles an-, in-, u-, in- (semper) into á, í, ú (or ó), si; pá, Engl. then; nú, Germ. nun.:—in sundry other words, esp. before s, e. g. os-s = Germ. us; ás-s, deus; bás-s, a byre; gás, a goose; ást, love (for ans, bans, gans, etc.); fús-s, willing, from fús; rás, course, from renna, to run: vetr, winter: assimilation has taken place in the preterite forms, as batt bound, vatt wound, hratt pushed, qs. bandt, vandt, brandt; even ng, as in æri, an obsolete form for yngr, younger (qs. öngri); hestr, a horse, prob. = hengistr, Dan. bingst; in provinc. Dan. it is still pronounced as diphthong beist.

2. absorption of gutturals before t; here also the t is doubled and the vowel made long (by assimilation as well as absorption) in many words, e. g. dó-ttir, a daughter, Goth. daunbar; nó-tt, night; só-tt, sickness, cp. sjúk-r, sick; á-tta, octo, eight; dró-tt (q. v.); þó-tti, thought; só-tti, sought (þykkja, sækja); sá-tt, peace (cp. sikn); drá-ttr, draught; slá-ttr, stroke; má-ttr, might; há-ttr, mode; ró-ttr, right; slé-ttr, slight; ó-tti, fright; fló-tti, flight; þó-ttr and þjokkr, ught; fré-tta and íregna, to ask; væ-ttr, weight, Germ. wiecht; nita, to deny, cp. Germ. nicht; væ-tt, weight; hlá-tr, laughter; slátra, to slaughter, etc.: even before δ in the feminine inflexion -ið, qs. hugð.

β . at the end of a syllable; ná-r, a corpse, Goth. nabs, cp. Lat. nes-s, = Gr. vékus; fá-r, Lat. paucus, Goth. fabs; fé, Goth. faibu, Lat. pien; né, Lat. ne-que; þó, though, Germ. doch; mý, a gnat, cp. Germ. mücke; ljó-s and ljó-mi, light; þjó, thigh: the strong verbal forms, infin., slá, Germ. schlagen; flá, flay; þvá, to wash, qs. slag, flag, þvag: the pret. and pres. forms, á, ought; má, might; kná, can, from eiga, meiga; as also slá and sló, hle and hló, laugh; vá, from vega; lá, from liggja; spá, to spæc, but spakr, wise, cp. Lat. -spicio; þá, from þiggja; frá, from fregna; hjó, from höggva; bjó and byggja; trú and tryggja; trútr, true, and trygg, trusty; Freyja and Frigg. The Scandinavian languages have rejected all guttural sounds, and even in writing the contraction is not marked, the change having taken place long before writing began; whereas in Engl., although the same phonetic change has taken place, the old Saxon spelling is still kept, because the change was of much later date (15th century?), when the old sound was fixed in writing: but the Icel. spelling accords better with the sound.

3. absorption of dentals; only in a few cases, as nál, needle, Goth. naþal; vál, misery, A. S. vál = begging or ambitus; hvár (uter), from hvadarr (cp. Engl. wether); hvárt, wether; fjó-rir, an older form is preserved in the old Swed. county-name Fjadrundaland, the Fourth land, cp. Lat. quatuor: Gormr is contr. from God-ormr (Guthrum of the A. S. Chronicle); Hrólf, Ralph, from Hrodulfr, Rudolph.

4. absorption of the semi-consonant v and the like, as vý-r new, sál soul, Goth. saula; and contr. in forms such as mey, maid, for mavi, whence Goth. mavila = mey-la = girl; cy, for avi; hey, bay, for havi, and many other words.

5. in Icel. (as in Latin) all monosyllables ending in a vowel are long, therefore even the names of the letters of the alphabet are sounded so, (á, bé, cé, not a, be, ce.)

The Ablaut, or Variation of Vowels, as Jacob Grimm calls it. This variation is chiefly found in the strong verbs, esp. in the pret. tense; but also in nouns and adjectives:

I. in those root words whose strong verbs still exist, e. g. líð, troops, and leid, a way; rið, trembling, and reid, riding; snid and snéid, a slice; grip and greip, q. v.; drif, splash, and dreif, spray; svif, turn, and sveif, a helm; klif and kleif, a cliff; ris, rising, and reisa, to raise; rit, a writ, and reitr, beds, a square; bit, a bit, and beit, bite, grazing; lit, a look, and leiti, a bill in the horizon; blík, blík, and bleikr, pale; vik, a nook, and vik, an inlet; roði, ruddiness, rauðr, red, and rjóðr, ruddy; Goti and Gautr, q. v.; not, nautn, use, and njótr, a mate; klofi, a cleft, and klauf, a clove; rof and rauf, a rift; rok, splash, and reykr (rauk), reek; flog and flaug, flight; sopi and saup, a sip; gróf (graf-), a grave, and gróf, a ditch; hláð and hlóð, a structure; gal, crowling, and gól, bowling; drep, a stroke, and dráp, slaying; eta, a manger, and át, eating; geta and gát, getting; set and sát, a seat; skeri, a cutler, and skári, a swathe, etc.

II. in roots where the verb is either lost, or only found in the cognate languages or dialects (Goth., A. S., Engl.), the vowels a, ó, æ vary, hani, a cock, and hoena (hón), a hen; ein-man, solitude, and mœna, Lat. im-minere; bati and bót, bettering; dagr and dœgr (dóg), a day; dalr and døld, a dale; hagr and hægr, easy; skaði and skœðr (skóð), scathe; net and nót, a net; kaf and kófi, choking; sök (sak), sake, and seekja (sók), to seek; kraki, a twig, and krókr, a crook; haki, a hook, hœkja, a crutch, and haka, a chin; sama and scœma (sómi), to beseech:—irreg. variation of o, au, doði, torpor, and dauðr, death; dofi, numbness, and daufr, deaf; froða and frauðr, froth; snoðinn, sborn, and snauðr, poor; baugr, a ring, bogi, a bow, and bjúgr, crooked; bloti and blautr, wet; losa, to loosen, and lauss, loose; lofa and leyfa (lauf), to praise; togi and taug, a string; glufa and gljúfr, a chasm; guma and geyma (gaum), to heed; tamr, tame, and taumr, a bridle; gap, gap, and gaupn, q. v.:—i, ei, vry, hiti, beat, and heitr, bot; digna and deigr, wet; sviti and sveiti, sweat; fita and feiti, fatness; sili and seil, a string; gil and geil, a chasm, etc.

III. in many cases there is only one derived form, e. g. dá (from deyja), a swoon; þága (from þiggja), acceptance; nám (from nema), seizing; kváma (from koma), coming; reiðr (from vríða), wroth, prop. wry, distorted. It is worth noticing that the intermediate classes of the strong verbs (the 2nd to the 5th) gave rise to most words and forms, whereas in the 6th no nouns were formed from the preterite, very few in the 1st class:—for spun (spinning), bruni (burning), runi, sultr, fundr, sprunga, stunga, drykk, band, hjálp (help), hvarf—nouns related to the 1st class—are partly irregular and not directly formed from the verb; and faldr (a fold), hald, fall, bland, gangr, hangi, fang, ráð, blástr, grátr, lát, heit, leikr, blót, auki, ausa, hlaup, bú, högg—nouns related to the 6th class—seem to be formed, not from the pret., but from the infinitive. Many words throughout the language indicate ablaut and lost verbs, e. g. breið-r, broad; hvitr, white; hveiti, wheat; deili, distinction; hreinn, pure; beinn, straight; leifa = Gr. λεῖψω (lifa, leif); draumr, a dream; námr, night, etc. etc. But great caution is needed here; the form of a word is not sufficient to prove etymology, and in many cases the likeness is only apparent; thus gnaga (to gnaw) and gnógr (enough), or bak (back) and bók (a book) are not related, though skaði and skœðr are. In respect to unblaut the mere form of the word is in most cases conclusive; but the ablaut, in many cases, requires examination, although hundreds of words may still be explained by it.

It is interesting to compare the Latin irregular verbs with the strong Teutonic verbs, especially those which are etymologically related; the pret. and pres. sing., Icel. and Lat., are the best tenses for comparison: a. pres. Icel. ét and éðo, sit and séðo, les and lêgo, kem and vénio, fel and se-pélio, hef and cépio, ber and púrio, ek and ágo, miel and môlo, veð and vádo, dreg and trábo, veg and vêbo, stéud and sto. β . pret., át and éði, sátu and séði, lásu and lêgi, kvámu and véni, fálu and se-péli, hóf and cépi, báru and peperi, ók and végi, mói and molui, óð and va-si, dróg and traxi (trab-si), vóg and vexi (veh-si), stóð and stéti.

γ . Latin words with inserted n, n may be compared with the Icel. 2nd and 3rd classes, which are only two branches of the same kind of words; the i and the inserted j in Icel. are a kind of equivalent to the inserted m, n in Latin; thus Icel. brjóta braut and Lat. frango frēgi, rjúfa rauf and rumpo rūpi, míga meig and mingo minxi, sníða sneið and scindo scēdi, þjóta þaut and tundo tūtūdi, strjúka strauk and stringo strinx, bíta beit and findo fūdi: weak forms, sleikja and lingo, leifa and linquo, auka jók and juugo junxi; cp. also Goth. siuban taub, Germ. ziebén zog, and Lat. duco duxi (duc-si); Icel. tjá (to say) and Lat. dicere, and many others.

In the Gothic the preterite is almost like the Icel., thus (compared with table, p. xxii), Goth. brinnan, brann, brunnum; biudan, bauþ, buþum; reisan, rais, risum; faran, fór, fórum; giban, gab, gébuvi (Goth. é answers to Icel. á): in case of reduplication the same vowel is not repeated, but changed for the sake of euphony, thus grétan, gaigrót; blauþan, bláiblauf (not grégrét or blaublauf); this accounts for the fact that the ablaut is heterogeneous, viz. does not change á into ú, u into ú, etc., as in simple absorption (see above), but into a different kind of vowel, e. g. fara, fór; geta, gátu; bjóða, bauð, buðu; falla, féll, etc. This, as well as a comparison with the Latin and Greek irregular verbs, seems to shew that the strong verbs in the Teutonic languages are akin to the irregular and reduplicated in Latin and Greek, although in a contracted form. The characteristic of weak verbs is the formation of the preterite by inserting an auxiliary verb between the root and inflexion, heyrd-a (bear-d-I); the characteristic of strong verbs is the formation of the preterite by reduplication, which in most cases remains only in a contracted form. There seems to be no other way of forming the preterite. In Gothic, out of about 130 strong verbs, about 26 are still reduplicated, chiefly belonging to the 6th class; some few of the others, e. g. taka, to take, are reduplicated in Gothic.

☞ The classes have here been arranged simply according to the number of words in each; they might have been arranged as follows: α. those in which the long vowel remains through both numbers (the 4th and 6th classes). β. those in which it remains only in one number, that one being short (the 2nd, 3rd, and 5th). γ. those in which it is short in both numbers (the 1st class). That in the 5th class the long vowel originally belonged to both sing. and plur. is shown by eta, pret. sing. át; the short vowel in one or both numbers of the preterite is probably a corruption, though old, as it is so even in the Gothic. The ablaut belongs to the earliest stage of the language, and the long vowels thus formed are far more ancient than those caused by simple absorption; centuries must have elapsed between the formation, for instance, of the á in át or sát and in áss or átta, and long afterwards there was a distinction in the pronunciation, the former being pure long vowels, whereas the latter retained a nasal or guttural sound from the absorbed consonant. For the nasals see Lyngbye in Tidskrift for Philol., Copenhagen, vol. ii.

In a few cases the Icel. has a long vowel, which is merely due to phonetic causes: I. a, o, and u are sounded and spelt long before the double consonants lf, lk, lm, lp, thus kálf-r, a calf; hálf-r, half; sjálf-r, self; sálm-r, a psalm; hálm-r, balm or straw; málm-r (Dan. and Swed. malm), metal; úlf-r, a wolf; hjálpa, to help; skjálfa, to shudder; álpt, a swan; gólf, a floor; tólf, twelve; álka, an auk; bálkr, a balk; fálki, a falcon; fólk, folk; mjólk, milk; gálgi, the gallows; bólgá, ólga, etc.; so also háls, qs. hals, a neck; frjáls, qs. frjals, free. The true pronunciation only remains in skalf, skulfa, not skálf, skúlfu. This was in fact the first step towards absorption of the l as in other languages (e. g. Engl. ank, baum), but in Icel. it remained incomplete. In popular Norse the old simple vowels are still sounded (Ivar Aasen) as well as in modern Danish and Swedish, which shows that this change is purely Icel. and must have taken place after the separation from Norway; yet it is old, as we see from old MSS., Ann. Reg. of the end of the 13th century, that at that time the present pronunciation was in use; hardly any other MSS. distinguish between short and long vowels.

II. in ing, úng, which are spelt and pronounced with a long vowel instead of a short, ing, ung. In this Dictionary the long vowels á and ú are kept in the former case (álf, álmr, hálmr), but in the latter case always the short, ing, ung, tunga, not túnga; анги, not úngi; as also lengi, not leingi. ☞ Again, in a few instances a long vowel has passed into a short, viz. in the possessive pronoun minn þinn sinn, neuter mitt þitt sitt, which the ancients wrote and pronounced minn þinn sinn, mitt þitt sitt, cp. the Goth. meins, Germ. mein, etc.; even in MSS., as the Fb. (14th century latter part), we find mijtt, i. e. mitt: the word illr, evil, ill, is usually spelt so, but is still frequently pronounced illr, illt, which is the true form, the long vowel being due to the contraction, cp. Germ. übel, Engl. evil; (Icel. say mér er illt, not illt): drottinn, drottning, and drottna, instead of dróttinn, dróttning, and dróttna; gott for gótt; (the Ann. Reg. spells dróttning.) The distinction (by an acute) between a long and short vowel was a century ago resumed in Icel. printed books, so as to follow the present pronunciation; and since etymology and comparison with foreign languages support this practice, with the few exceptions now mentioned, it has been retained in modern Editions as well as in modern writing.

β. the syllable ú is in modern usage throughout changed into vo, svá svo, tvá tvo, vátv votr, ván von, vápn vopn, etc., but the vowel change remains as before, e. g. væta wetness, vænta to expect, etc.; hánum (bin) is changed into honum: u sometimes changes into u or y, Sigurðr = Sigvarðr, dógurðr and dagverðr, yrkja from verk: or into æ, Svenskr and Søenskr, Swedish; kæmi and kvæmi, veniret; sæfi and svæfi, dormiret, etc.: this and other less important vowel changes are noticed in the Dictionary, especially in the introduction to each letter.

Formation by way of Inflexions.

Words are either formed from verbs or from nouns or roots.

A. From verbs: I. from the 1st weak conjugation feminines are formed by adding -n to the infinitive, boða-n, announcement; skipa-n, order; hugga-n, comfort; skapa-n, creation; iðra-n, repentance; helga-n, hallowing; vitra-n, vision; hindra-n, hindrance; nútálma-n, id.; játa-n, confession; neita-n, denial; hugga-n, thinking; hegða-n, conduct; blessa-n, blessing; bölva-n, cursing; undra-n, admiration; efa-n, doubting; fjölga-n, multiplication; lifga-n, calling to life; holdga-n, incarnation; ætla-n, opinion; prédika-n, a sermon; prenta-n, printing; menta-n, breeding; tapa-n, perdition; kalla-n, vocation; vara-n, admonition; svala-n, refreshing; langa-n, desire; hreinsa-n, purification; saurga-n, pollution; byrja-n, beginning; dýrka-n, worship; betra-n, bettering; rotna-n, rotting, decomposition; visna-n and föllna-n, withering; hnigva-n, decay; una-n, charm (4th conjugation), etc. ☞ In mod. usage the -an is often changed into -un, thus köllun and kallan, iðrun and iðran, byrjun and byrjan, the latter form being even the more usual. This change freq. occurs even in very old MSS., e. g. skepton, Mork. 72, 168; etlun, devise, 10, 34; vingun, friendship, 166, 178; eptir-leiton, seeking, 168; flimton, reviling, 28.

II. from the 2nd weak conjugation feminines are formed in -ing, which is added to the root, *dæm-ing, judgment, damnation; fylk-ing, a rank or host; leys-ing, loosening; keun-ing, doctrine; lík-ing, likeness, parable; virð-ing, esteem; hegn-ing and hirt-ing, chastisement; birt-ing, brightening, publication; þekkt-ing, knowledge; læg-ing, humiliation; melt-ing, digestion; send-ing, despatch; legg-ing, laying; freist-ing, temptation; fyll-ing, fulfilment; bygg-ing, building; rigu-ing, pouring with rain; fœð-ing, birth; lær-ing, teaching; søem-ing, beseeching; grœð-ing, healing; upp-frœð-ing, information; tæl-ing and gimn-ing, deception; aðgrein-ing, distinction; mænn-ing, manliness; hring-ing, pealing; deil-ing, division; beyg-ing and hneig-ing, inflexion; bend-ing, beckoning; lend-ing, alighting; end-ing, finishing; gerð-ing, bedding; eld-ing, lighting; cftu-ing, fulfilment; þreyng-ing, pressing; and a great many others: a few, as kerling a carling, þrenn-ing trinity, ein-ing unity, are formed from nouns, as are also the masculines in -ingr; lækn-ing, healing, from lækna, að, is irregular or refers to a lost strong verb. ☞ The feminines in -an and -ing are counted by hundreds.*

III. from the 3rd weak conjugation and from the strong verbs, feminines are formed in -ning:—from the 3rd weak, glæð-ning, gladdening; kvað-ning, greeting; sað-ning, filling; vað-ning, entanglement; hrak-ning, tossing; vak-ning, awakening; tal-ning, counting; sam-ning, agreement; tann-ning, tanning; ar-ning, tilling; far-ning, passage; var-ning, ware; hvat-ning, exhortation; set-ning, a position, thesis; lag-ning, laying down; skil-ning, understanding, discerning; ruð-ning, clearing; stuð-ning, upholding; smur-ning, smearing, anointing; spur-ning, speering, asking; flut-ning, carrying; á-ning, baiting (æja), etc.

β. from the strong verbs, *rit-ning, writing; lot-ning, lotting; veneration (lúta); get-ning, begetting; kos-ning, election; soð-ning, cooking; les-ning, gleaning; ráð-ning, rebuke (ráða); frá-drag-ning, subtraction; upp-ál-ning, breeding; hlut-tek-ning, partaking; haf-ning, elevation (hefja); upp-stig-ning, ascension (stiga); snú-ning, turning (snúa); nú-ning, rubbing (gnúa); bú-ningr, dress (búa), is masc.: gôr-ning, a deed (göra), shows that this word has had a strong inflexion: ját-ning, confession (jätta, tt), is irregular from the 3rd weak conjugation: drótt-ning, a mistress, a queen, is formed from dróttinn, a lord. ☞ This u is undoubtedly a remnant of the part. pass. In the case of the 3rd weak conjugation, this formation is an evidence that the participles in -inn were of early growth; it is curious that feminines in -ning were formed even from verbs in which that participle is not used, e. g. glæð-ning, from glæðja, see p. xxiv. Some of the above words are in modern usage also masculine, e. g. barnung and barnungr, skilning and skilningr, gôrning and gôrningr; but the feminine is older and more correct.*

2. a few masculines in -naðr are also formed from the same verbs, e. g. þrif-naðr, thrift (þrifa); snú-naðr, profit (snúa); bú-naðr, husbandry (búa); met-naðr, ambition (meta); get-naðr, begetting (geta); skap-naðr, shape (skapa); skil-naðr, departing (skilja): from other verbs, her-naðr,arrying, freebooting (herja); as also *kost-naðr, cost (kosta); spar-naðr, saving (spara); trú-naðr, trust (trúa); té-naðr, help (tœja); fé-naðr, cattle; dug-naðr, energy (duga); lif-naðr, living (lifa); unaðr, delight (uua); verk-naðr, working (yrkja); fögn-uðr, joy; jöfn-uðr, equity; hagn-aðr, comfort; sök-naðr, sorrow (for a lost thing); söfn-uðr, congregation; vörn-uðr, caution; árn-aðr, intercession; þjóf-naðr, theft; (mán-uðr, a month, is different.) ☞ Altogether different are the old words, hól-ðr a bero, fróm-uðr a promoter, grónduðr a destroyer; mjót-uðr, A. S. meotod = ruler; these words are very few, mostly poetical, and are used in an active sense, (see Grímn's Gr.iii. 241.)*

IV. feminines in -sla are formed from the 2nd weak conjugation, skir-sla, ordeal; geym-sla, keeping; fœð-sla, food; kenn-sla, teaching; frœð-sla, information; eyð-sla, spending; vig-sla, inauguration; reyn-sla, experience; get-sla, guarding, keeping; greið-sla, payment; veit-sla, banquet; hræð-sla, fright; fær-sla, shifting; neyt-sla, taking food; bæn-heyrt-sla, grant; reið-sla, leið-sla, hero-sla, hird-sla, etc.; often spelt with z, veizla, etc.

V. the monosyllabic feminines in -n are chiefly formed from the roots of verbs, not from the infinitive; heyrt-n, bearing; spur-n, speering, news; skír-n, baptism; eig-n, owning, possession; sög-n, a saw, saying, tale; þög-n, silence; vör-n, defence; stjór-n, sway; sök-n, prosecution; fyls-n, desire; auð-n, voidness; fórn-n, offerings; freg-n, news; ið-n, activity; njós-n, espying; laus-n, freedom; raus-n, liberality; gaup-n, a gowpen; sjú-n and sý-n, sight; þjá-n, oppression; smá-n, disgrace; bæ-n, begging; lik-n, healing, mercy; óg-n, awe, etc., but not very many; a few are from adjectives, as feik-n immensity, tig-n lordship, from feikinn immense, tigiinn lordly: auð-na luck, stjarna-na star.

VI. masculines in -dr (-tr): 1. with a radical r; al-dr, age (ala); gal-dr, spell (gala); hjal-dr, sound, battle (hjala); hlá-tr, laugbier; lá-tr, litter (leggja); ar-ðr, a plough (erja); gró-ðr, growth (gróa); ró-ðr, rowing (róa); les-tr, gleaning, reading (lesa).

2. with inflexive r; stul-ðr, theft (stela); bur-ðr, birth (bera); skur-ðr, a cut (skera); vör-ðr, a wafer (verja); þur-ðr, wane (þverra); gróf-tr, digging, burial (grafa); vöx-tr, growth (vaxa); fun-dr, finding; kos-tr, chase (kjósa); má-ttr, might; þvá-ttr, a wash; drá-ttr, a draught; slá-ttr (cp. Engl. slaughter), mowing; há-ttr, mode (haga); snú-ðr (snúa), a whirl; blás-tr, a blast: ó-tti, awe (óg); fló-tti, flight (flýja); þó-tti, conceit (þykkja); skjál-fti, trembling: cp. also kul-ði, cold; fjöl-ði, multitude; van-ði, custom;—which however are not formed from verbs.

VII. in -st, -str, masc., fem., and neut.: bak-str, baking; rak-str, raking; rek-str, a drove; þor-sti, thirst (þurr); trau-st, trust (from trúa); fre-st, delay (from firra); ri-st, step, cp. Engl. wrist; and rei-str, a serpent, poet. (from vriða, to writhe); ba-st (from binda); flau-st (from fljóta), etc.

B. From nouns and roots.

Masculines: I. with inflexive n, r, l, 1. in -inn, -unn, a few words; apt-ann, evening; jöt-unn, a giant; him-inn, heaven; drótt-inn, a lord; morg-inn, morning; ar-inn, beard: in pr. names, Óð-inn, þrá-inn, etc.; Auð-unn. 2. in -urr, -arr; fjót-urr, a fetter; þjót-urr, wood-grouse; jöf-urr, cp. Germ. eber; töt-urr, tatters; kög-urr and köng-urr, texture; jað-arr, a rim; ham-arr, a hammer; hum-arr, a lobster; naf-arr, a gamlet; goll-urr, q. v.; gag-arr, q. v.; sum-arr, summer (obsolete as masc.): in pr. names, Hjálm-arr, Ein-arr, Böðv-arr, Stein-arr, Ött-arr, Gunn-arr, Iv-arr, Agn-arr, Yngv-arr, Ragn-arr, Giz-urr, Við-arr, Ulf-arr, etc. are of a different kind, viz. the latter part = -bári or -bæri or -bard, thus Gunnarr = Gundeberg; Einarr = Einbard.

§§ The pr. names in -an are chiefly of Gaelic origin, thus Bek-an, Kjart-an, Kalm-an, Kvar-an, Hnok-an, Kjar-an, Kál-an, Feil-an, Bjól-an, Duf-an, Koðr-an, Kamb-an, Lun-an, Trost-an, etc., see Landn. 3. in -ull, -ill; jök-ull, an icicle; kögg-ull, articularis; röð-ull, an edgel; söð-ull, a saddle; mönd-ull, axle-tree; skök-ull, asbest; þing-ull, a stalk of seaweed; öng-ull, a hook; rið-ull, a detachment of troops; bit-ull, a mouth-piece; tig-ull, a brick, a square; seg-ull, a magnet; stöp-ull, a steeple; fer-ill, a track; snig-ill, a snail; lyk-ill, a key; þist-ill, whistle; fit-ill, dandelion; bið-ill, a wooer; ket-ill, a kettle; rei-ill, tapestry; hnyk-ill, a claw; skut-ill, a harpoon; dras-ill, a charger, horse; beit-ill, a herb; smyr-ill, a hawk; dep-ill, a blot; hef-ill, brails; hvirf-ill, the crown of the head: foreign, eng-ill, an angel; kynd-ill, a candle. §§ Many of these were originally diminutives, but most of them have lost that sense, as jökull from jaki. β. in -all; kað-all, a chain; vað-all, shallow water; kap-all, a horse.

A few diminutives in -lingr; ket-lingr, a kitten; kið-lingr, a kidling; yrm-lingr, Lat. vermicula; boek-lingr, Lat. libellus; ung-lingr, a youngling, youtb. III. in -ungur and -ingr, -lingr: 1. patronymic in plur.; Nifl-ungur, Germ. Niebelung; Völs-ungur, Skjöld-ungur, Skán-ungur, Kuf-ungur; Gyð-ungur, Jews; Yng-lingar, Knyt-lingar: in -lendingr, Grœn-lendingar, etc.: in -firðingr, Vest-firðingar; Vik-ingar, Vikings, etc. 2. in many poet. words; siklingr, öðlingr, an etelbeling; mildingr; hildingr: in pr. names, Erl-ingr, Hær-ingr, etc. 3. other words; kon-ungur, a king; síf-ungur, a kinsman (poët.); brœðr-ungur and syst-ungur, a cousin; ná-ungur, a neighbour (eccl.); helm-ingr, a half; fjórð-ungur, the fourth part, a farthing; fimt-ungur, the fifth part; sétt-ungur, the sixth part; átt-ungur, the eighth part; vetr-ungur and geml-ingr, a yearling; höfr-ungur, a dolphin; öld-ungur, an elder; bún-ingr, dress; görn-ingr, a deed; sköfn-ungur, a shin-bone; gár-ungur, a jester; spek-ingr, a philosopher; vitr-ingr, a wise man; þuml-ungur, an ineb; grað-ungur, a bull: of boats, sexær-ingr, six-oared; áttaer-ingr, eight-oared; teinær-ingr, ten-oared; byrd-ungur, a ship of burden.

IV. in -ingi; höfð-ingi, a captain; ætt-ingi, a kinsman; heid-ingi, a beathen; band-ingi, a prisoner; fæð-ingi, a native; leys-ingi, a free man; ræningi, a robber; mord-ingi, a murderer; let-ingi, a lazy man; ænningi, a poor wretch; cer-ingi, a springal; sæl-ingi, an epicurean; Skrælingi, an Esquimaux; kunn-ingi, a friend; loem-ingi, a bird. V. in -undr; auð-undr, an author; vól-undr, q. v.; vis-undr, a bison: in -uni (obsolete), arf-uni, an heir; síf-uni, Goth. siponeis, a disciple; beim-uni, etc., Lex. Poët.

VI. in -ari, especially words such as dóm-ari, a doomsiter, judge; les-ari, a reader; skrif-ari, rit-ari, a writer; skap-ari, creator; skir-ari, baptist; gjaf-ari, giver; græð-ari, bealer; Lausn-ari, Frels-ari, Redeemer; Keis-ari, Kaiser; mút-ari (poët.); vart-ari; ridd-ari, a knight; stall-ari, stabularius; kval-ari, tormentor:—there are few of these words in old writers, but they have increased, especially in nouns denoting business, leik-ari, a jester; skó-ari, a shoemaker; vef-ari, a weaver; prout-ari, a printer; söngv-ari, a singer, musician; skinn-ari, sít-ari, bak-ari, fiðl-ari, þóf-ari, hatt-ari; ræð-ari, an oarsman,—some of which occur in olden times: foreign, kjall-ari, a cellar; salt-ari, a psalter: in -ali, -li, a few words, aði-li; rang-ali, a lobby; skark-ali, tumult; taf-ali, trouble; saf-ali, a sable; Kast-ali, a castle: in -aldi, glöp-aldi, digr-aldi, Tas-aldi, þumb-aldi, leggi-aldi, him-aldi, ribb-aldi, a very few words.

VII. in -andi, active participles; veg-andi, a slayer; bú-andi or bón-ði (hús-bón-ði, Engl. husband); fjá-andi, a foe; fra-andi, a kinsman; and numberless participles when used as substantives, e. g. grát-andi, weeper; eig-andi, owner; fagn-endr, heyr-andi, etc. VIII. in -si; van-si, disgrace; of-si, passion; gal-si, gaiety.

Feminines: I. in -d, -ð, or -t, formed chiefly from adjectives, and feminine also in cognate languages (e. g. old Germ. -ida); a vowel change takes place wherever the root vowel is changeable; the d, ð, and t are phonetical changes depending on the final letter. In this way a great many feminines (more than a hundred) are formed, hæ-ð, beight; dýp-ð, depth; víd-d, width; brœid-d, breadth; leng-d, length; fæ-ð, fewness; merg-ð, multitude; stær-ð, size; þyk-t, thickness; þyng-d, beaviness; erf-ð, inheritance; grim-d, ferocity; heil-d, wholeness; helf-t, a half; deil-d, a share; grein-d, distinction; frem-d, q. v.; sœm-d, honour; eilíf-ð, eternity; tryg-ð, fidelity; hryg-ð, sorrow; sek-t, guilt; spek-t, wisdom; nek-t, nakedness; hef-n-d, revenge; nefn-d, a committee; vern-d, protection; gren-d, vicinity; vil-d, willingness; girn-d, desire; dirf-ð, daring; dýr-ð, glory; lyg-ð, a lie; kyr-ð, calmness; hvíl-d, rest; reyn-d, experience; eym-d, misery; deyf-ð, numbness; leyn-d, secrecy; fræg-ð, fame; gnœg-ð, wealth; hæg-d, ease; væg-ð, mercy; mæg-ð, affinity; vinsal-d, popularity; van-d, expectation; fegr-ð, beauty; megr-ð, meagreness; feig-ð, feyness; myk-ð, meekness: all in -sem-d, skyn-sem-d, reason; unað-sem-d, delight; and many others formed from nouns and adjectives indiscriminately. § Of a different kind are hul-d, mystery; skul-d, debt; afun-d, envy; nán-d, neighbourhood; vis-t, abiding; frét-t, news; dyg-ð, virtue; gnót-t, abundance; söt-t, sickness; sæt-t, settlement: and still more nat-t, night; ród-d, voice; and similar words, which can be seen if compared with kindred languages (Germ., Saxon).

II. in -ska, prop. -iska, and thus causing umlaut; bern-ska, childhood; mæl-ska, eloquence; gœð-ska, grace; græ-ska, spite; gleym-ska, forgetfulness; fyrr-ska, age, decay; vit-ska, wisdom; menn-ska, manhood (and in compds, ragmenn-ska, cowardice; karlmenn-ska, valour; góð-menn-ska, gentleness; íll-menn-ska, cruelty; ú-m, sloth; var-m, meanness, etc.); heim-ska, foolishness; el-ska, love; íl-ska and vánd-ska, evil passion; œr-ska, youth; fífl-ska, folly; dæl-ska, liberty; tíð-ska and lýð-ska, usage, custom; kœn-ska, craft: in names of people or their tongues, En-ska, English; Sœn-ska, Swedish; Grikska, Greek; Ír-ska, Irish: irreg. and without umlaut, in Val-ska, Welsh; Dan-ska, Danish; and mod. as in Ital-ska, Italian; Spán-ska, Spanish: in -eskja or -neskja, inserting n, form-eskja, antiquity; vitn-eskja, knowledge; flat-neskja, flat land, plain, level; mann-eskja, a man (mod.); harð-neskja, barbness, barness.

III. indel. fem. in -i, -gi, -ni, formed from adjectives; bræð-i, anger, from bráðr hot; mœð-i from móðr; hreyst-i valour, from hraustr; helt-i lameness, from haltr lame, etc., see p. xviii.

IV. in -osta (-usta), a few words; orr-osta, fight (cp. Germ. ernst); fulln-usta, fulfilment; holl-usta, homage; kunn-usta, knowledge (Germ. kunst); þjón-usta, service (Germ. dienst); for-osta, beadsip; unn-usta, a spouse, (unn-usti, m. a lover). V. in -átta, a few words; víð-átta, abroad; kunn-átta, knowledge; bar-átta, battle; veðr-átta, weather, temperature, (for-átta, q. v., is different.) VI. in -ung; hörn-ung, vexation; laun-ung, secrecy; laus-ung, looseness; nauð-ung, constraint; háð-ung, indignity; sundt-ung, scattering; verð-ung (poët.), king's household.

VII. in -und, a few words; þús-und, thousand; hör-und, Lat. cutis; teg-und, species, kind; öf-und, spite; vit-und, knowledge; tí-und, teind, tithe; átt-und, the eighth part, fjáðr-und (obsolete): in local names, as Sól-und, Borg-und (Burgundy), Eik-und; þús-und and hör-und are also used as neut. 2. in -ynja, Lat. -ina, a very few words; ás-ynja, a goddess; for-ynja, an ogre; úlf-ynja and varg-ynja, a she-wolf, lup-ina: mod. -inna, keisara-inna, is scarcely used, and is borrowed through Dan. from Germ. and cannot therefore be called Icel.

VIII. special; in -ingja, ham-ingja, luck: in -sa, heil-sa, health. IX. a kind of diminutive; in -la, hris-la, a little twig; hynd-la, Lat. canicula (Mar. 494, v. l.); trævæt-la, a ewe two years old: in -ka, stúl-ka, qs. staul-ka (from stauli), a girl. § Different are hál-ka, slipiness; hlá-ka, thaw; har-ka, barbness: as also -ga in mœð-gur, mother and daughter.

2. in a few names of maers; Mús-ka, a mouse-grey mare; Brún-ka, black; Raud-ka, red; Ljós-ka, light: in -na (and -ni masc.), also of horses, Skjó-na and Skjó-ni, pie-bald; Grá-na and Grá-ni, grey: in -lin, cp. Germ. -lein, of cows, Hring-lin, Randa-lin, etc.

Neuters: I. the derived neuters in -i (see p. xviii); they are formed from adjectives or from roots of words, as -leysi want, from lauss; félauss penultness, whence féleysi penultlessness; ríki might, kingdom, from ríkr mighty; lýti fault, from lýtr ugly; œði madness, from óðr mad; gœði goods, from góðr good; frelsi freedom, from frjáls free; ágæti goodness, from ágætr good. They sometimes have a colective sense; and in compounds any word may become neuter, regardless of its gender when simple, e. g. -berni from barn, a bairn; -mennir from maðr (stór-menni, ung-menni, góð-menni, ill-menni); -gresi from gras, (ill-gresi weeds, blóm-gresi flowers); -neyti from nautr, (föru-neyti, fellowskip); al-pingi, but ping; vald and veldi, power; nafn and -nefni, a name; stafn and stefni, a stem; band and -bendi, a string; garðr and -gerði, a fence; ból and -boeli, a den; land and -lendi; sáð and sæði, seed; lund and -lyndi, temper; orð and -yrði, a word; fugl and -fygli, a fowl; munnr and -mynni, moutb; helsi a neektie, from hells a neck; vætti testimony, from váttir a witness; hall-æri a bad season, famine, from ár a year; eðli and aðal, nature;—indeed any word may thus be changed into neuter.

2. in -endi; eyr-endi, errand; kvik-endi, a creature; heil-indi, health; væl-indi, gullet; chiefly only in plur., as vis-indi, science; hygg-endi, good sense; sann-indi, truth; tíð-indi, tidings; lík-indi, likelihood; hlunn-endi, endowments; dýr-endi, costly things; rang-indi, injustice; rétt-indi, rights; leið-indi, tediousness; harð-indi, a bad season; sár-indi, soreness; klök-endi, shrewdness; fríð-endi, fine things; in -enni, denoting kin, cp. Ulf. fáþreiu = pátra and þveitis, breþrabans = æðelþof, whence Engl. breþren, cp. also Lat. ernitas; fað-erni, bróð-erni, móð-erni, fatherhood, etc.; þjóð-erni, nationality (mod.); lund-erni, temper; lif-erni, conduct of life; besides sal-erni, síð-erni (q. v.): in -elsi, a very few words, reyk-elsi, incense; fang-elsi, a prison; hrokk-elsi, a stone grig, is prob. different: in -íði, first-ildi, a butterfly; þykk-íði, callousness: in -di, el-di, q. v. (ala); upp-el-ði, education: in -u, bynd-in, a sheaf; ald-in, fruit: in -ili, heim-ili, home.

II. in -sl (-sli); bríg-sl, rebuke; kyn-sl, prodigy; smyr-sl, ointment; þyng-sl, heaviness; bög-sl, fins, (bóg, a bow); eym-sl, soreness; œxl (qs. œk-sl, from vaxa), excessiveness; skrímsl, a monster; œr-sl, mad pranks, (œrr, mad); bei-sl, a bridle; þyrm-sl, mercy; renn-sli, a watercourse.

2. in -su; hœn-su, poultry; ræk-sn, rags; fylg-sni, q. v. III. in -al, etc.; óð-al, a feud; með-al, medicine (mod.); að-al, nature: in -an, gam-an, joy; and a few other words but little used, e. g. ó-ár-an, a bad season; ó-lyfj-an, poison; ó-út-an, offal of food: in -in, -u, ald-in, fruit; meg-in, main power; reg-in, gods; meg-u, power; reg-n, rain; vat-n, water: in -gin, feð-gin, father and daughter; syst-kin, brother and sister; móð-gin, mother and daughter: in -að, hér-að, a county; hundr-að, bundred; for-að, q. v.; höf-úð, a head: in -ald, kaf-ald, snow; fol-ald, a foal; ker-ald, a tub; haf-ald, q. v.; gim-ald, an opening; eisk-ald (poët.), heart; rek-ald, a wreck: in -arn, ís-arn (poët.), iron; ak-arn, an acorn; fó-arn, a crop; und-arn, afternoon: in -t, fros-t, frost, from frjósa: in -ang, hun-ang, boney.

The following are to be regarded in the light of compds: I. masculines in -leikr and -leiki; kær-leikr, love; sann-leikr, truth; heilag-leiki, holiness, (many words): in -dómr, -dæmi (n.), Engl. -dom, Germ. -thum, helgi-dómr, holidom; Kristin-dómr, Christianendom; heidindómr, beatendom; mann-dómr, manhood; lær-dómr, learning; vís-dómr, wisdom; konung-dómr, kingdom; jarl-dómr, earldom, etc.: in -skapr, Germ. -schaft, vin-skapr, friendship; fjánd-skapr, enmity; félag-skapr, fellowship; skáld-skapr, poetry; fífl-skapr, folly; grey-skapr, meanness; greið-skapr, readiness, etc. (several words): in -angr, leið-angr, levy; far-angr, baggage, etc.

II. feminines in -úð and -ýðgi, contr. from bygð, cp. A. S. hygd; denoting temper, mind, ól-úð, sincerity; ill-úð, spite; var-úð, beedfulness; ást-úð, love; mann-úð, humanity; harð-úð, hardness; grim-úð, cruelty; grunn-ýðgi, shallow mind, gullibility; harð-ýðgi, etc.: different are misk-unn, mercy; várk-unn, excuse (from unna, cp. afund, envy): in -semi from -samr, miskun-semi, mercy, etc.

III. neuters in -œfi; and-œfi, riches; ör-œfi, wilderness (only in plur.): in -orð, akin to A. S. wyrth = weird = fate, god-orð, priesthood; met-orð, dignity; gjaf-orð, marriage; vit-orð, intelligence; ban-orð, deathweird; bôn-orð, courting; lof-orð and heit-orð, promise; vátt-orð, testimony; leg-orð, q. v., in many of which it is simply derived from orð = word: in -læti, from adjectives in -lætr, rétt-læti, righteousness; ör-læti, liberality, etc.

♂ Masculines in -dagi; bar-dagi, battle; ein-dagi, term; máld-dagi, a deed; skil-dagi, condition: feminine pr. names in -unnr, -ný, Stein-unnr, Ing-unn, Þór-unn, Sæ-unn, etc.; Sig-ný, Ás-ný, Þór-ný, etc.: in -beidr or -eidr, Ragn-eidr, Sig-riðr: masculine pr. names in -mundr, -ndr, -ðr, Guð-mundr, Þrí-ndr, Eyv-ndr, Ön-undr, Bár-ðr (qs. Bár-röðr), Þór-ðr (qs. Þór-röðr), and many others.

ADJECTIVES.—They are either simple, as fagr-, göð-r, sæt-r, or formed by inflexion: I. in -ligr, Engl. -ly, Germ. -lich, in mod. usage spelt and pronounced -ligr, counted by hundreds, a. twofold adjectives, e. g. sein-ligr (seinn, slow, and -ligr); eilíf-ligr, eternal; sæl-ligr (sæll); grim-ligr (grimmr), vitr-ligr, fagr-ligr, harð-ligr, fram-ligr, spak-ligr, fróð-ligr, kát-ligr, hag-ligr, rang-ligr, hrein-ligr, góð-ligr, feig-ligr, hljóð-ligr (hljóðr, silent), væn-ligr, þung-ligr; veik-ligr, weakly; ung-ligr, heil-ligr; mjú-ligr, like myself, etc. β. with a binding vowel i or u, most of which seem to be formed from verbs; virðu-ligr, worthy (virða); mátu-ligr, deserved; kostu-ligr, costly (kosta); skipu-ligr, orderly (skipa); tígu-ligr, magnificent; ríku-ligr, rich, opulent; risu-ligr, elevated, grand;—often in mod. usage spelt with ug, virðug-ligr, ríkug-ligr, etc.: with i, sæmi-ligr, seeming (sæma); æski-ligr, desirable (æskja); hæði-ligr, ridiculous (hæða); æsi-ligr, violent (æsa); þægi-ligr, agreeable (þægja); drengi-ligr, bold; senni-ligr, probable (sanna); skyndi-ligr, sudden (skynda); æti-ligr, eatable (eta); hœfi-ligr, proper (hœfa); hyggi-ligr, prudent (hyggja); skemti-ligr, amusing (skemta); gríni-ligr and fýsi-ligr, desirable (fýsa); glæsi-ligr, splendid (glæsa); leyni-ligr, a secret (leyna); heyri-ligr (heyra); eyði-ligr, empty (eyða); heppi-ligr, lucky; gæti-ligr, cautious (gæta); ílli-ligr, ill-looking. γ. formed from nouns; dýrd-ligr, glorious; and-ligr, spiritual; hold-ligr, carnal; líkam-ligr, bodily; verald-ligr, worldly; Guð-ligr, godly; dag-ligr, daily; ár-ligr, yearly; stund-ligr, temporary; síð-ligr, well-bred; mann-ligr, manly; gæfu-ligr, lucky; elli-ligr, aged; þrek-ligr, stout; udar-ligr, wonderful; vig-ligr, martial; grát-ligr, wailing; hlœg-ligr, laugable; kvenn-ligr, womanlike; karlmann-ligr, manly; hóf-ligr, moderate; hégóm-ligr, vain; inserting s, yndis-ligr, charming.

δ. with double inflexion; heilag-ligr, holy; vesal-ligr, wretched; mikil-ligr, grand; gamal-ligr, old-looking; fræk-n-ligr, valiant; að-dáan-ligr, wonderful; ymis-ligr, various; heimol-ligr, intimate. II. participial adjectives: 1. as from strong verbs, a. participles of strong verbs, in -inn. β. participial adjectives from lost verbs; bog-inn, bowed; tog-inn, stretched; hrokk-inn, curled; rot-inn, rotten; hok-inn, stooping; loð-inn, sbaggy; las-inn, dilapidated; snod-inn, sborn; fú-inn, rotten; bólg-inn, bulged, swollen; lú-inn, weary; sólg-inn, gloating.

γ. sundry adjectives formed from verbs with a radical n; heid-inn, heathen; Krist-inn, Christian; tíg-inn, noble; feg-inn, vain; eig-inn, own; œr-inn, ample; yfr-inn, id.; op-inn, open. δ. with a single n; jaf-n, even; for-n, old; gjar-n, willing; fræk-n, valiant; sýk-n, sackless; grœn-n, green (from gróa). ε. many adjectives denoting apt, given to, or the like; íð-inn, busy, sedulous; hæð-inn, mocking; hres-inn, conceited; röð-inn, talkative; kost-gæf-inn, painstaking; hygg-inn, prudent; gæt-inn, watchful; skryft-inn, funny; hlýð-inn, obedient; lyg-inn, mendacious; gleym-inn, forgetful; skreit-inn, untruthful; breyt-inn, fickle, shifty; feim-inn, shy; kím-inn, ironical; grett-inn, frowning; bell-inn, tricking; rýn-inn, prying; frétt-inn, enquiring; hitt-inn, biting; styrf-inn, peevish; slys-inn, hapless; hepp-inn, happy, lucky; úf-inn, rough; gim-inn, a nimble wrestler; send-inn, sandy, etc.

2. as from weak verbs: in -aðr; participles, tal-aðr, boð-aðr, kall-aðr, etc.: participial, aldr-aðr, aged; gaml-aðr, doted; vilj-aðr, willing; bless-aðr, blessed; bölv-aðr, curled; hug-aðr, daring; ölv-aðr, tipsy: in -ðr, hæð-ðr, hoary; lær-ðr, learned; reyn-ðr, experienced; eyg-ðr, eyed; grein-ðr, clever, discerning: different is kal-ðr, cold, etc.

3. participles in -andi; les-andi, able to read: often in a gerundinal sense, óþol-andi, intolerable; óhaf-andi, unfit; óver-andi; óger-andi, impossible, etc.: from those in -andi come the Engl. words in -ing, d being changed into g. III. in -igr, -ugr, -agr; in Goth. etc. all three forms are used indiscriminately; in Icel. the ancients prefer -igr, the modern -ugr; (-agr remains only in heil-agr, holy, from heil-l); auð-igr, wealthy; mátt-igr, mighty; blóð-igr, bloody; naud-igr, unwilling; móð-igr, moody; göf-ugr, noble; öf-ugr, backward, inverse; höf-ugr, heavy; kunn-igr, known; þrótt-ugr and öf-ugr, strong; örð-ugr, arduous; gráð-igr, greedy; vit-ugr, witty, clever; síð-ugr, well-bred; stöð-ugr, steady; synd-ugr, sinful; verð-ugr, worthy; minn-ugr, mindful; skyld-ugr, dutiful; heipt-igr, bating; kröpt-ugr, powerful; ráð-ugr, ready, sagacious; slótt-ugr, wily; leir-ugr, clayey; mold-ugr and ryk-ugr, dusty; snjó-ugr, snowy; hróð-ugr, exultant: in -úðigr, -míndigr, grim-úðigr, fierce, etc.

2. simple forms, mostly poët., as spár-kar, prophecy; mein-gitr, moaning, Lex. Poët. IV. in -ótr. O. H. G. -obt, A. S. -ibt, Germ. -iebt; denoting colour, shape, etc.; dumb-ótrr, dusky; skj-ótrr, chequered; frekn-ótrr, freckly; rúnd-ótrr, striped; flekk-ótrr, q. v.; skjöld-ótrr; brönd-ótrr, brindled; dröfn-ótrr, q. v.; bíld-ótrr, sokk-ótrr, bles-ótrr, gols-ótrr, bleikál-ótrr, móál-ótrr, vind-ótrr, etc., all of colour: of shape, or, as Lat. -osus, denoting all over, covered with; knött-ótrr, ball-shaped; tind-ótrr, with peaks; bár-ótrr, waved; kringl-ótrr, round; hnöll-ótrr, höll-ótrr, ball-formed; hlykkj-ótrr, crooked; grot-ótrr, full of holes, ragged; sköll-ótrr, bald; koll-ótrr, humble (cow); huf-ótrr, rugged; hnyfl-ótrr, etc.: = Lat. -osus, hrukk-ótrr, rugosus; bylj-ótrr, gusty; refj-ótrr, crafty; göldr-ótrr, a wily wizard; skerj-ótrr, full of skerries; gör-ótrr, poisoned; kvist-ótrr, knotty; sök-ótrr, having many enemies, etc. etc.:—a rich harvest of such words is found in Hjaltalín's Icel. Botany, rendering the Lat. technical terms in -osus.

V. in -all, -ull, -ill; lít-ill, little; mik-ill, great, muckle; gam-all, old; ves-all, poor: as a kind of iterative adjective, denoting frequency or tendency, hverf-ull, shifty, changeable; svik-all, false; gjöf-ull, open-handed; pag-all, taciturn; spur-ull, speering, curious; stop-all, shifing; fúr-ull, vagrant; smug-all, penetrating; röc-ull, stumbling, tottering (of a horse); at-all, fierce; hvik-ull, wavering; göng-ull and reik-all, rambling; hug-all, minding, observing; ris-ull, early rising; sög-ull, telling tales; svip-all, shifty; (these words are not very numerous.) In mod. usage -ull; þög-ull = pag-all; öt-ull, pert: but -all is kept in gam-all, ves-all. VI. in -samr; hóf-samr, thrifty; skyn-samr, clever, intelligent; feng-samr, q. v.; lán-samr, lucky; síð-samr, upright, bonest; frið-samr, peaceful; líkn-samr and miskun-samr, merciful; róð-samr, calm; grunn-samr, suspicious; iðju-samr, busy; atorku-samr, starf-samr, hard-working; vorkun-samr, forbearing; rök-samr, officious; gaman-samr, merry; arð-samr, profitable; and many others.

VII. in -skr, Germ. -sch, Engl. -ish; bern-skr, childish; mæl-skr, eloquent; þrjúð-skr, stubborn; ni-skr, stingy; bei-skr, bitter; dæl-skr, easy; fíll-skr, foolish; heim-skr, silly; brei-skr, brittle; va-skr, kar-skr, hor-skr, rök-skr, vigorous; fri-skr, fresh: esp. in names of nations, Dan-skr, Danish; Sœn-skr, Swedish; En-skr, English; Ír-skr, Irish; Skot-skr, Scottish; Val-skr, Welsh; Gri-skr, Greek; Finn-skr, Finnish; Ger-skr, Russian; Bret-skr, British (i. e. Welsb); Gaut-skr, Gautish: in -eyskr, Sudr-eykskr, Orkn-eykskr, Fær-eykskr, from Sudor, the Orkneys, the Faroes: in -lend-skr, -lenzkr (-land), Ís-lenzkr, Icelandic; Grœn-lenzkr, Greenlandish (but Gren-skr of the county in Norway): in -dæl-skr (dalr): in -ver-skr (-verjar), Vik-verskr, Þjóð-verskr (German), Róm-verskr (Roman), formed from Vik-verjar, Þjóð-verjar, Róm-verjar (Romans): in -neskr, Sax-neskr, Saxon; Got-neskr, Gotbic; Frakk-neskr, Frankish or French:—this n belongs to the noun, cp. Saxon, Gotmar, Lat. Gotbones: hence the mod. names (formed by a false analogy, since the noun has no n), Rúss-neskr, Russian; Prúss-neskr, Prussian, etc.: in appellatives, him-neskr, heavenly (himinn); jarð-neskr, earthly (irreg.)

VIII. in -œnn; cp. Goth. -ein; O. H. G. -in; A. S. -en; in five words, esp. denoting the quarters of heaven, austr-œnn, eastern; nor-œnn, northern, Norse; suðr-œnn, southern, Scot. southron; vestr-œnn, western: also aldr-œnn, aged;—in all these words the r seems to belong to the root: út-rœnn, haf-rœnn, blowing from the sea, are mod. words formed by analogy: ein-rœnn, peculiar, odd, is qs. ein-rýnn; but how can we explain fjall-rœnn in Kristni S. ch. 6 in a verse of the year 998, unless this too is due to a false analogy? IX. adjectives in -látr, -mannered; dramb-látr, rött-látr; mikil-látr, proud; lítil-látr, bumble; vand-látr, zealous; stór-látr, righteous; ör-látr, liberal; fá-látr, silent, cold; þakk-látr, thankful, etc.: in -leitr, -faced, looking, fól-leitr, pale; þykk-leitr, etc.: in -eygr, -eyed, fagr-eygr, fair-eyed, etc.: in -lyndr, -mooded, tempered, góð-lyndr, gentle; ill-lyndr, pettish; grá-lyndr, spiteful; fjöl-lyndr, fickle; fá-lyndr, melancholy; fjót-lyndr, hot-tempered; ör-lyndr, liberal, etc.: in -kárr, var-kárr, cautious; laun-kárr, lurking: in -ræðr, átt-ræðr, ni-ræðr, tí-ræðr, tólf-ræðr (see p. xxi), prob. akin to Goth. ga-raþjan = numere; cp. also röð, a row:—these with several others may be regarded as compounds.

VERBS.—The 1st and 4th weak conjugations, as also the strong, consist of primitive words; the 2nd and 3rd weak consist of derivatives from nouns, adjectives, and preterites of strong verbs (see the remarks on the umlaut); the exceptions are the verbs of the 1st with inflexive syllables. Inflexions: I. in -na, denoting to become, grow so and so; these words seem originally to be formed from strong participles or adjectives in -inn, whence the n in the inflexion; and so they may serve as guides in tracing lost strong verbal inflexions:

I. where a participle or adjective in -inn exists; roð-na, to blush (roðinn); vis-na, to wither (visinn); sof-na, to go to sleep (sofnn); dof-na, to get benumbed (doðinn); vak-na, to awake (vakinn); bog-na, to be bowed (boginn); klök-na, to be softened; drukk-na, to drown (drukkinn); þrot-na, to come to an end (þrotinn); stork-na, to be curdled (storkinn); brot-na, to break (brotinn); rot-na, to rot (rotinn); soð-na, to be cooked (soðinn); hlot-na, to fall to one's lot (hlotinn); skrið-na, to slip (skriðinn); svið-na, to be singed (sviðinn); blik-na, to turn pale (blikja); slit-na, to be torn (slitinn); rif-na, to be rent (rifinn); vik-na, to give way (vikinn); hnip-na, to quail (hnipinn); fú-na, to rot (fúinn); bráð-na, to melt (bráðinn); tog-na, to become leaky (toginn); bólg-na, to bulge, swell (bólgin); hnig-na, to decay (hniginn); gis-na, to be 'geizened' (gisinn); las-na, to decay (lasinn); slök-na, to be quenched; hang-na, to become hanginn. β. where a lost participle can be suggested; þag-na, to become silent; glúp-na, q. v.; kvik-na, to be engendered; hit-na, to become hot; fit-na, to grow fat; dig-na, to get wet; glíð-na, q. v.; doð-na, q. v.; los-na, to get loose; stik-na, to be roasted; þor-na, to be dry (þurr, þorrinn); líf-na, to become alive; þið-na, hlá-na, and þá-na, to thaw; kaf-na, to be choked; hjað-na, to wane. 2. formed from plain adjectives, perhaps by way of analogy to the above; harð-na, to harden, grow hard (harðr); stíð-na (stíðr, stiff); þykk-na (þykk, stout); sort-na, to become black (svart); hljóð-na, to become silent (hljóðr); fól-na, to grow pale (fól); gul-na, to grow yellow (gulr); ves-na, to grow worse (verri); bat-na, to grow better (bati); blá-na, to grow blue (blár); grá-na (grár, grey); dökk-na, to darken (dökkr, black); vök-na, to get wet (vökvi); súr-na, to get sour (súrr); hvít-na, to whiten (hvít); sár-na, to smart (sárr); volg-na (volgr, lukewarm); gláð-na, to be gladdened (gláðr); meyr-na (meyrr, Germ. mürbe); hlý-na, to get warm (hlýr); tré-na, to dry (tré, a log); ré-na, to sink, dwindle; gild-na (gíldr, stout). 3. the sense is different in such words as sam-na, to collect (saman); gam-na (gaman); fag-na, to rejoice (feginn); sak-na, to miss; gag-na, to gain; tig-na, to honour (tiginn); as also Krist-na, to Christianize (Kristinn); drótt-na, to rule (dróttinn); var-na, to shun; spyr-na, to spurn, etc.

II. in -ga, from adjectives in -igr; auð-ga, to enrich (auðigr); hel-ga, to hollow (heilagr); ráð-gast, to take counsel, see p. xxiv. 2. in -ka, formed from adjectives, to become (and to make) so and so; hækk-ka, to heighten; læk-ka, to lower; fæk-ka, to become few; dýp-ka, to deepen; min-ka, to lessen; smæk-ka, to become smaller; stæk-ka, to become larger; breið-ka, to become broad; víð-ka, to widen; mjök-ka, to make narrow; síð-ka, to become 'sid'; sein-ka, to make slow, etc., see p. xxiv; some of these are also intrans., e. g. min-ka, to lessen and to become less. III. in -sa and -ra, a kind of iterative verb mentioned in p. xxiv.

IV. in -la, id.

Final Remarks on the Formation of Words. From the roots fresh words branch out by means of prefixed or suffixed syllables; the ablaut is probably due to a prefix (reduplication), the umlaut to a lost inflexion; root vowels seem not to change of themselves, but from some outward cause. Ablaut, umlaut, and inflexions are the three chief agents in forming words. All three degrees of formation may be found in a single word; e. g. kann (knew) is a strong preterite, formed by way of ablaut; whence kenna, to teach, by umlaut; whence kenn-sla, teaching, by inflexion: or to take another example,—from heil-l, whole, comes heil-agr, holy, whence heil-ga, to sanctify, whence helgan (i. e. hel-g-a-n), where we have ablaut + threefold inflexion: so also from sôn atonement, sacrifice (in sônar-göldr, sônar-dreyri, sacrificial blood, Germ. sühne), is formed synd-ð (in old MSS. spelt syn-þ), a sin, a thing to be atoned for, whence synd-ugr sinful, whence synd-ga to sin, whence syndga-n (syn-d-g-a-n) sinfulness. Yet beyond sôn with its long vowel, as well as heill with its diphthong, lie primitive words whence sôn and heill were formed by means of ablaut, and so in many other cases. The growth of words is slow, and between the first and last of these formations centuries elapsed;—són is a heathen word, synd and derivatives are Christian; heill, heilagr, and helga are heathen, whereas helgan is Christian. Many of the inflexions are the latest, and from them were formed fresh words to express ideas unknown in heathen times: such especially are most of the feminines in -u and -ing (from verbs) of late growth, and but few of them perhaps known to the men of the 10th century (the Saga time); some of the new words displaced older, e. g. hugga-n, comfort; but líkn is older: again, the umlaut belongs to the early, the ablaut to the earliest stage of the language,—doðr (doom), deöma (deem), dæming (deeming, damnation), represent the three steps. In some instances the succession is different, and an inflexion comes between ablaut and umlaut, thus þurr dry, þor-sti thirst, whence þyr-str thirsty; gróa to grow, gró-ðr growth, whence grœða to heal, whence grœð-sla healing; and many others.

Pet Names.

These are diminutives, and in compound names are chiefly formed by a sort of contraction and by changing a strong declension into a weak (usually in the latter, but sometimes in the former part of the name), or by adding -si, -ka, or the like: I. girls; Sigga from Sig-ríðr; Gunna from Guð-rún; Inga from Ing-unn, Ing-veldr; Imba from Ing-björg; Gudda from Guð-ríðr; Manga from Margrét; Valka from Val-gerð; Ranka from Ragn-eiðr and Ragn-hildr; Jónka from Jón-hanna; Tóbba from Þor-björg; Sissa from Sig-þrúðr; Kata (Engl. Kate) from Katrín; Kittita from Kristín; Ásta from Ás-tríðr; Þóra from Þur-íðr; Dóra from Hall-dóra, etc.; Díska from Val-dís, Vig-dís, Her-dís, etc.; Geira from Geir-laug; Frída from Hólm-fríðr, etc.; Þrúða from Jar-þrúðr, Sig-þrúðr; Lauga from Guð-laug; Ása from Ás-laug. II. boys; Siggí from Sig-urðr; Gvendr from Guð-mundr; Simbi from Sig-mundr; Brynki from Bryn-jólfr; Steinki from Stein-grímr; Mangi from Magnús; Rúnki from Rún-ólfr; Sveinki from Sveinn; Sebbi from Sig-björn, Svein-björn (rare); Erlri from Erl-inðr (Erlingr); Guttí from Guthormr, or rarely Guð-brandr,—nú skal hann Guttí (Guddi?) setja öfn, Safn ii, 128; Kobbí from Jakob; Valdí from Þor-valdr; Mundi or Ási from Ás-mundr, etc.; Láki from Þor-lákr; Leifí from Þor-leifr; Láfi from Ólafr; Eyví from Eyj-ólfr; Keli from Þor-kell; Laugi from Gunn-laugr; Tumi (Engl. Tommy) from Thomas occurs in Icel. as an independent name about the middle of the 12th century (Sturl.), and was probably borrowed from the English; Þúsi from Vig-fús; Grímsi from Grímr; Jónsi from Jón (Engl. Johnny); Björnsi from Björn; Bensí from Benedikt. These names, and others similar to them, are not of yesterday, but can be traced back even to the heathen time; many of the old names with weak declension in -i and -a were probably originally pet names, e. g. Bjarni from Björn; Árni (Arne) from Örn; Bersi from Björn; Karlí (Engl. Charley) from Karl; Jóra from Jóreiðr; Ragna from compounds in Ragn-, Ragn-eiðr; Ingi and Inga from compounds in Ing-; Goddí (Laxd., cp. Germ. Götze) probably from compounds in Guð- (Guðmundr) as the present Gudda of girls; Boddí (a name of the 8th century) from those in Bóð-

(A. S. Beadu-); Daði (occurs in an Icel. colonist family from the British Isles in the 10th century) probably from Davið (Davy); Sebbi and Ubbi occur on Swedish Runic stones; Helgi (old form Hölgi) from Há-lejgr, Nj. ch. 94. Only a few instances in the Sagas bear directly on this subject; one is the dream of earl Hakon (year 994) of his son Erling's death; 'nú er Ulli dauðr,' qs. Erli er Erlingr; cp. also the name of Snorri Goði from Snerrir, Eb. ch. 12. Of a similar kind are At-li, Goth. att-ila, Lat. paterculus; Gam-li.

Compound Words.

Of these the Dictionary gives the best account; when the former part is an uninflected root word a hyphen is usually printed between the component parts, with a few exceptions, such as words compounded with particles like afar-, all-, fjöl-, full-, gagn-, etc.; and some other words, as fú-, goð-, gull-, etc. Again, the Icel. has an almost unlimited stock of compound words formed by means of the genitive. Many of these are used both as compounds and as two separate words, and are therefore given under the head of the principal word, e. g. barn with barns- and barna-: in these cases it depends upon the genitive whether the alphabetical order is preserved or not; this is mostly the case in words like bátr, báts-borð, but not so in beðr, gen. beðjar-; or in beini, beina-; baula, baulu-. As compounds are made from both gen. plur. and sing. they are sometimes double, e. g. under the head barn, both barns- and barna-. But chiefly are to be noticed words with the u-umlaut, because a is the first and ö the last letter in the alphabet; thus e. g. föður- is the compound form of faðir (father), and would if simple stand at the end of the letter, whereas now it stands near the beginning, s. v. faðir; as also bjarnar-

under björn; bjarkar- under björk; still greater is the leap in compounds from words such as alda, a wave, gen. öldu- (p. 11); so also the compounds from öld (age), önd (soul), örk (arc), örn (eagle), öxl (shoulder), which are aldar-, andar-, arkar-, amar-, axlar-; but these words are few. Icel. printing, in editions of Sagas as well as in modern books, has no fixed rule as to the spelling of such compound words, and often connects them in hundreds of cases where they are evidently separate; in old writers, e. g. in Mar. S., musterisferð, journey to the temple, 14; freistnistormr, storm of temptation, 433; uppstingarsaðr, place of ascension, 588; snubbanarorðum, snubbing language, 567; uppsprettubrunnr, 27; stjörnuþókarmenn, astronomers, 30; spektarþögn, silence of wisdom, id.; unskurðarskírn, baptism of circumcision, 35; Austrvegskonungar, the kings of the East, id.; vistarveizluna, giving shelter, Mork. 67, etc.; and in mod. writers, e. g. in the 4th hymn of the Passiu-Sálmur, trjársjóinn, the eye of faith; dreyralækir, brooks of blood; Lásmargjald, 'lease-gild,' ransom; lífsæðarnar, life veins; Arkargluggi, window of the Ark; hrygðarskuggi, the shadow of sorrow; sólarbjarmi, the brightness of the sun; hrygðarmyrkr, the darkness of grief; svalavatn, the refreshing water; heidisproti, wrath's rod; svalalind, a refreshing well; hjartablöð, heart's blood, all spelt as one word, even without a hyphen between them. Again, the old MSS. separate too much, or rather keep no rule whatever. We have not thought of giving a full list of these and similar words, for this would be impossible. From such words as maðr, barn, fótr, hönd, etc. hundreds of similar compounds may easily be formed, most of which are in a grammatical sense rather sentences than single words; but many are given, especially from old writers. For a native these things are of little moment; but for the sake of lexicography a more distinct and regular spelling is much needed.

REMARKS ON THE SPELLING IN VELLUM MSS.

A regular spelling has been adopted in most editions during the last hundred years—before that time few editions had been issued: this spelling was fixed by Icel. scholars of that time, and was chiefly founded upon the average spelling in the vellums, partly upon a few noted MSS. (e. g. the Arna-Magn. 132 folio, and 66 folio), and with reference to the living Icel. language. But of late many of the oldest MSS. and fragments have been carefully and exactly printed. A few hints are therefore needed to guide the reader how in these cases to use the Dictionary, which in the main holds to the normal spelling. The spelling varies much, not only in MSS. of different times, but in the same MS.; very few of them follow any fixed plan, and the same word is differently spelt even in the same line; yet in many particular instances the spelling is instructive, and even more correct than the accepted orthography, and must not be left out of sight by those who study the growth and history of the language.

A. In inflexions: I. vowels:—the MSS. use o and u as well as e and i indiscriminately in declensions of nouns and verbs, the oldest almost always o and e, as tungor, tongues; oldor, waves; timom, times; boðodot, kolloðom, gorðosk, etc.: e, i, as time, a time; elle, age; faðer, father; timenn, the time; boðaðer, fylder, etc.: most MSS. (the later) prefer u, and so it has come into the normal spelling; for the use of e, see introduction to that letter (signif. B), p. 114: in inflexions, -oll, -orr, -odr, -osta, -on, instead of -ull, -urr, -odr, -usta, -un (see pp. xxxii, xxxiii); as also in dat. pl. with the article, timonom, hondonom; the pret. toloð, dicta; kolloð, vocata; kolloðom, vocavimus: also -endi, -enn, -elli, instead of -indi, -inn, -ill. II. consonants:—the reflex. i is in very old MSS. spelt -sc (-zc or -sp), but in the usual way -z, -sz.

B. In root syllables: I. vowels: 1. long and short vowels are usually not distinguished, except in very few MSS., e. g. Ann. Reg., which MS. is of a like interest for Icel. in this respect, as the Ormulum for Early English. Later MSS. began to distinguish by doubling the long vowels, aa = á, ij = í, oo = ó, uu = ú, but mostly without a fixed rule: this way of spelling has remained in English, e. g. Engl. foot = Icel. fót, blood = blóð. At last the marking the long vowels with an accent was resumed, as taught by Thorodd. 2. of special letters, a. the spelling of ö varies very much; the accents had a double ö sound (ø and œ), but both were soon confounded, and ö was spelt indiscriminately in a sixfold or eightfold fashion, o, au, av, o, ø (born, bårn, baurn, bavn, børn, börn), and was thus confounded with several vowels, e. g. with the diphthong av, the o and ó, the æ and æ, e. g. ræð may be = raud red or röd a row, log may be log a lowe or lög laws, lavg may be laug a bath or lög laws, høll may be hæll a heel or höll a ball, etc.; in print ø was used for about two hundred years, till at the beginning of this century it was replaced by the present ö, which was probably borrowed from the German. β. the e and æ were confounded, and in some few MSS. it is almost a rule, as the Mork., the Njála (Arna-Magn. 468), the Kb. of Sæm., and the fragment Arna-Magn. 748, cp. e. g. the print of Baldrs Draumar in Sæm. Edda by Möbius, pp. 255, 256; thus teki = tæki, seti = sæti, reður = ræður, beta = bæta, be = bœ (a bouse), sekia = sœkja, fella = foela, mela = mæla, and vice versa; g, æ, instead of e, setti = seti, elli = elli, see introduction to letter E, p. 113; æi = ei freq. In the east of Icel. the æ and æ were, up to the beginning of the 18th century, sounded not = Engl. long i as they are at present, but as Germ. ê or ä, Engl. ā, with a protracted sound: many puns referring to this provincialism are recorded by Jón Ólafsson, e. g. the ditty, mér sú merin (= mærin) ljósa i minni er,—the pun is in merr = a mare and mær = a maid being sounded alike; Hann Bersi minn í BÉ! Hún er gengin á reður með honum, see Jón Ólafsson, Essay on Icel. Orthography of the year 1756 (in MS.). The poet Stefán Ólafsson, a native of the east of Icel. (died 1688), still rhymes brækr (i. e. brækr) and lekr (= stillat). It is likely that the MSS. above named were written, if not composed, in the east of Icel. In still earlier times this pronunciation was no doubt universal, but not so six or seven hundred years ago. γ. the Icel. (see p. xxix) confounded the two sounds æ (g) and æ (ω); yet for a long time afterwards both characters g and ω were still used, but upside down, without any regard to etymology, till at last the Roman æ took the place in writing of both g and ω. δ. the u and v were used indiscriminately, e. g. tvngv = tungu, bvndv = bundu; and, on the other hand, ualld = valld, uera = vera, uit = vit, etc. ε. the i served for i and j (iörð = jörð): ja is especially in very old MSS. often spelt ea, earn = jarn (cp. Thorodd in Skálda): in old poems the j always serves as a vowel in alliteration, which in mod. usage sounds harsh, though it may be used; but ia, io, etc. were, on the other hand, one syllable, and old grammarians speak of i as a 'changeling,' being sometimes a vowel and sometimes a consonant: it is likely that the pronunciation was similar to ea in Engl. tears, fear, whereas in mod. Icel. usage j before a vowel is sounded as Engl. y before a vowel. ζ. in Norse MSS. ey is usually spelt øy, höyra, øyra, = heyra, eyra, and is sounded thus in mod. Norse dialects. η. many old Icel. MSS. confound y and i in a few words and forms, especially in the prepositions firir, ifir, = fyrir, yfir; the verbs skildi, mind (subj.), þikkir, = skyldi, myndi, þykkir; minni = mynni (ostium) and minnask = mynnask, 'to mouth,' 'to kiss'; kirkja = kyrkja, cp. Scot. kirk; before ngv, as singva = syngja to sing, lmgvi = Yngvi, lingva = lyngva, etc.: nikill and mykill, nickle, muck: the inflex. -indi and -yndi. θ. the ey is used in some few MSS. instead of ø in such words as seynir, seyni, = synir, syni; geyrva = gorva. ι. the o instead of the later u in a few words, but only in very old MSS., as goð = guð, gold = gull, fogl = fugl, oxi = uxi, mon (the verb) = mun, cp. Engl. God, gold, fowl, ox. κ. the ø and æ are in very old MSS. spelt eo, e. g. keomr =kømr (i. e. kemr), feoða = fœða.

II. consonants: 1. a radical l is almost always doubled before the dentals d or t without regard to etymology; the MSS. thus spell holld flesb, moldd mould, valld power, skalld poet, hallda to bold, holtt a bolt, kallt cold; but not so if the d is inflexive and soft, e. g. skyl-ði, þol-ði, val-ði, hul-ði, etc., from skulu, þola, velja, hylja; as also gal-ðr from gala, kul-ði from kul, skul-ð from skulu a debt, etc. This was no doubt due to the l having in the former case been pronounced aspirate (as it still is), similar to Welsh ll, the l in holtt being sounded exactly as bl at the beginning of syllables. β. the z instead of s was almost always used after the double consonants (with a dental sound), ll, nn, nd, ld, dd, tt, ll, nt, rd, and t, e. g. in the genitives gullz, munnz, sandz, valdz, oddz, hattz, holltz or hollz, fantz, garðz, knutz or knúz, as also in botz, vaz or vatz, from gull, munnr, . . . knútr, botn, vatn; in the common spelling gulls, munns, etc.: again, guls from gulr, dals from dalr, etc. This is not a mere variation of spelling; the sibilant in the former cases was no doubt sounded as Engl. z, viz. with a lisping sound; the z sound is now lost in Icel., and s is spelt wherever it is etymologically required. γ. the þ instead of ð (t) was used throughout as final (inlaut, auslaut) in very old MSS., in later þ and ð indiscriminately, e. g. gubþ, orþ, secp, dypþ, = guð, orð, sekt, dypt (qs. sekð, dypð); as also in inflexions, tocop, vitop, scolop, hafþ, = tókut, vituð, skulut, hafit; in modern and better spelling tókuð, vituð, skuluð, hafð, etc., see introduction to letter D (signif. B), p. 93. δ. the qu = kv in imitating Latin MSS., e. g. quama, necquerr, quiðr, quiquan, quøquæ, = kváma, nekkverr, kvíðr, kvikvan, kveykjá, (kv very seldom occurs in good old MSS.); perhaps the qu had a peculiar sound, like that of the English queen; in mod. Icel. pronunciation there is only a single k sound throughout: for the use of c, see Dictionary, p. 93. 2. Norwegianisms, α. the spelling with v before u in verbal forms, as vultu, vurðu, vorðinn, from velta, verða, = ultu, urðu, orðinn; these neither occur in very old MSS. nor in alliteration in old poets nor in mod. pronunciation. β. the dropping of b before the liquids l, n, r, and writing lutr, not, ringr, instead of hlutr a lot, hnot a nut, bringr a ring; this dropping of the b seems to have come into fashion with Icel. writers and transcribers after the union with Norway; but as early as the 15th century MSS. had resumed the old correct form, which had never been lost, and which has been preserved in speech as well as writing up to the present day, Icelanders being now the only people of all the Teutonic races who have preserved this sound; but it is curious that the Icel. transcribers, having the b sound in their ears, frequently blundered, and br, bn occur now and then, which never happens with Norse transcribers; there is, for example, no need of any stronger evidence that Hauk Erlendsson (the writer of the vellum Hauks-bók) was a native Icelander, than that, although he tries to spell in the Norse way, the b creeps in, see, for instance, facsimile I in Landn. (Isl. i, Ed. 1843), where l. 11 bráfukels, but l. 12 ráfukels. 3. for many special usages see the introduction to each letter.

ICELANDIC GRAMMARS.

Runólfur Jónsson (died 1654); he wrote in Latin the first Icelandic Grammar, Grammaticae Islandicae Rudimenta, Copenhagen 1651: it was republished by Hickes at Oxford in 1688, but with many misprints, and in his Thesaurus in 1703: Hickes also made the index of the words occurring in the book. This Grammar is formed upon the Latin principle, and is a useful book; the author was an Icelandic schoolman, rector of the College at Holar in Iceland, and a learned man.

Jón Magnússon (born 1664, died 1739, a brother to Arni Magnússon); his Grammatica Islandica (also in Latin) was never published, but exists at Copenhagen in the author's autograph; it is less interesting than the above.

Rask (Rasmus Kristian), the famous Danish linguist (born 1787, died 1832), wrote three Icelandic Grammars:—

α. Veiledning til det Islandske Sprog, Copenhagen 1811 (in Danish).

β. Anvisning til Isländskan, written in Swedish and published at Stockholm in 1818; this is the best of the three which Rask wrote, and it was rendered into English by Mr. Dasent in 1843.

γ. Kortfattet Veiledning til det Old-nordiske eller Gamle Islandske Sprog, Copenhagen 1832 (in Danish), rendered into English by B. Thorpe.

Grimm, Jacob (born 1785, died 1863), in his Deutsche Grammatik, first in 1819 in one volume, but recast in the great Teutonic Grammar of 1822 sqq.; the Icelandic paradigms are contained in vol. i,—the nouns, pp. 650–665; the adjectives, pp. 736–743; the verbs, pp. 911–928; the formation of words etc. in the following volumes (ii–iv). The work of Grimm is rightly regarded as the key-stone for the knowledge of Teutonic languages.

Unger, C. R. (and P. A. Munch), Det Norske Sprogs Grammatik, Christiania 1847, chiefly founded on Grimm's work.

Halldór Friðriksson, Íslenzk Málmynda-Lýsing, Reykjavík 1861; a small book, but curious as being the only Icelandic Grammar written in Icelandic.

GRAMMATICAL ESSAYS ON THE SPELLING OF MSS.:

α. Frumpartar Íslenzkrar Tungu by Konrad Gíslason, Copenhagen 1846. β. The Prefaces to the various Editions, especially in those edited within the last twenty years.

AN ALPHABETICAL LIST OF VERBS,

Including the Strong Verbs, the Irregular Verbs, and the Verbs of the 3rd and 4th Conjugation, cp. the Paradigms, Gramm. pp. xxii-xxv. They contain almost all the chief Verbs in the language, as well as all the Defective and Obsolete Verbs. The vowel changes (ablaut) in the Preterite and Participle forms are the most important to bear in mind; those of the Present and Subjunctive (umlaut) are secondary. The chief Verbs are here marked with capitals or thick type.

Infju.	Pres.	Plur.	Pret.	2nd Pers.	Plur.	Subj. Pret.	Part. aka (to drive)	ek	ökum	ók		óku	œki	ekinn ala (to feed, beget)	el	ölum	ól		ólu	œli	alinn auka (to eke, augment)	eyk	aukum	jók		jóku	ÿki	aukinn ausa (to sprinkle)	eys	ausum	jós		jósu	eysi, ÿsi	ausinn (bauta, to beat) defect.		bautu					bautinn belgja (to swell) defect.							bolginn bella (to bit) defect.	bellr		ball
BERA (to bear)	berr		bar	bart	báru & bóru	bæri	borinn berja (to beat)	berr	berjum	barði		börðu	berði	barðr, bart biðja (to beg)	bið	biðjum	bað	batt	báðu	bæði	beðinn binda (to bind)	bind		batt	batzt	bundu	byndi	bundinn biða (to bide, wait)	bið		beið	beitt	biðu	biði	beðið bita (to bite)	bit		beit	beizt	bitu	biti	bitinn bjarga (to save)	bergr	björgum	barg	bargt	burgu	byrgi	borginn bjóða (to bid)	býð	bjóðum	baud	bautt	buðu	byði	boðinn (bjúga, to bend) defect.					bugusk		boginn blanda (to blend)	blend	blöndum	blétt	blézt	blendu		blandinn blása (to blow)	blæs	blásum	blés	blést	blésu	blési	blásinn bleðja (to lop) defect.	bleðr		(bláddi) blíkja (to blink) defect.	blíkir				blíku blóta (to worship, sacrifice)	blœt		blét	blézt	blétu	bléti	blótinn
BREGÐA (to move, draw)	bregð		brá	brátt	brugðu	brygði	brugðinn brenna (to burn)	brenn		brann	brannt	brunnu	brynni	brunninn bresta (to break)	bræst		brast	brautt	brustu	brysti	brostinn brjóta (to break)	brýt	brjótum	braut	brautt	brutu	bryti	brotinn brosa (to smile)	brosi		brosti			brosi	brosat brugga (to brew) defect.							brugginn
BÚA (to abide, make ready)	bý	búum	bjó	bjótt	bjoggu	bjoggi	búinn, búit, búð bylja (to resound) defect.	byll		bulði bysja (to gush) defect.	byss		busti detta (to drop)	dett		datt	datzt	duttu	dytti	dottinn deyja (to die)	dey		dó	dótt	dó	dœi	dáinn
DRAGA (to draw)	dreg	drögum	dró	drótt	drógu	drœgi	dreginn drekka (to drink)	drekk		drakk	drakkt	drukku	drykki	drukkinn drepa (to smite, kill)	drep		drap	drapt	drápu	dræpi	drepinn drífa (to drive like spray)	dríf		dreif	dreift	drifu	drífi	drifinn dríta (to care)	drítr		dreit	dreizt	dritu		dritinn drjúpa (to drip)	drýp	drjúpum	draup	draupt	drupu	drypi	dropið drúpa (to droop)	drúpi		drúpdi			(drypði) drynja (to roar)	drynr		drundi duga (to help)	dugi		dugði			dygði	dugat dvelja (to dwell, delay)	dvel	dveljum	dvalði		dvöldu	dvelði	dvalðr, dvöld, dvalt dylja (to conceal)	dyl	dyljum	dulði			dylði	dulðr, dult dynja (to pair)	dynr		dunði				dunið dýja (to shake)	dýr	(dúum)	dúði			(dýði)
EIGA (to own)	á, átt	eigum	átti		áttu & áttu	ætti	átt, átt, átzk erja (to ear, plough)	er	erjum	arði		örðu	erði	arðr eta (to eat)	et	etum	át	ázt	átu & átu	æti	etinn etja (to goad)	et	etjum	atti		öttu	etti	att falda (to fold, hood)	feld	földum	félt		féldu	félði	faldinn
FALLA (to fall)	fell	föllum	féll	féllt	féllu	félli	fallinn
FARA (to fare, go)	ferr	förum	fór	fórt	fóru	foeri	farinn
FÁ (to fetch)	fæ	fám & fóm	fékk	fékk	fengu	fengi	fenginn fá (to polish)	fái		fáði				fánn fela (to hide)	fel		fál	falt	fálu & fólu	fæli	folginn ferja (to ferry)	ferr		farði		(fórðu)		farðr feta (to step) defect.			fat		fátu
FLNNA (to find)	finn		fann	fannt	fundu	fyndi	fundinn fisa (pedere) defect.			feis fjúka (to be driven by the wind)	fýk	fjúkum	fauk	faukt	fuku	fyki	fokinn flaka (to gape)	flaki		flakði				flakað flá (to flay)	flæ	flám	fló		flógu	flœgi	fleginn flætja (to slit)	flæt		flatti		flöttu	fletti	flattr, flött, flatt fljóta (to float)	flýt	fljótum	flaut	flauzt	flutu	flyti	flotinn

Inf.	Pres.	Plur.	Pret. 2nd Pers.	Plur.	Subj. Pret.	Part.
fljúga (to fly)	flýg	fljúguni	flaug & fló	flugu	flygi	flöginn
flytja (to flit)	flyt	flytjum	flutti		flytti	fluttur, flutzk
flýja (to flee)	flý	flýjum	fló & flýði		fló	flýðr, flúinn
fregna (to ask, bear)	fregn		frá frátt	frágu & frógu	frægi	freginu
frænja (to further)	frem	fremjum	framði	frómðu	freindi	framðr, frömð
fréta (bedere) defect.			frat
frjá (to love) defect.
frjósa (to freeze)	frýs	frjósuni	fraus	frusu	frysi & freri	frjándi
frýja (to challenge)	frý		frýði			frosinn & frörinn
fyrva (to ebb) defect.			furði (Grág. ii. 187)			frýð
gala (to crow)	gel	gölum	gól	gólu	gæli	galið
gana (to rub)	gani		ganði			ganat
GANGA (to go)	geng	göngum	gékkt	géngu	gengi	gengit
gapa (to gape)	gapi		gapði
gá (to heed, mark)	gái		gáði
GIEFA (to give)	gef		gaf	gáft	gæfi	gáð
geta (to get, guess)	get		gat	gætt	gæti	gefinn
geyja (to bark)	geyr		gó	gáfu	gæti	getið & getað
gína (to gape)	gin		gein	gátu & gátu	gæti
gjalda (to pay)	geld	gjöldum	galt	gá	gæti	gætið
gjalla (to yell)	gell	gjöllum	gall	galzt	gæti	gætið
gjósa (to gush)	gýs	gjósuni	gaus		gæti	gætið
gjóta (to cast young)	gýt		gaut		gæti	gætið
gleðja (to gladden)	gleð	gleðjum	gladdi		gæti	gætið
glepja (to confound)	glep	glepjum	glapði		gæti	gætið
glotta (to grin)	glotti		glotti		gæti	gætið
glymja (to clasp)	glymr		glumði		gæti	gætið
gnaga (to gnaw) defect.	gnegr		(gnóg)		gæti	gætið
gnapa (to jut out)	gnapi		gnapði		gæti	gætið
gnella (to yell) defect.			gnall		gæti	gætið
gnesta (to crack)	gnestr		gnast		gæti	gætið
gnúa (to rub)	gný	gnúum	gnóri & gneri		gæti	gætið
gnyðja (to murmur) defect.			gnuddi		gæti	gætið
gnýa (to sound) defect.	gnýr		gnúði		gæti	gætið
grafa (to grave, dig)	graf	gröfum	gróf	gróft	græfi	grafinn
gráta (to greet, weep)	græt	grátum	grét	grézt	gréti	grátinn
grenja (to anger, provoke)	gremr		gramði		gréti
grípa (to grasp)	gríp		grip	greipt	gréti
gróa (to grow)	grœ	gróm	gröri & greri		gréti
grúfa (to grovel)	grúfi		grúfði		gréti
gyggva (to quail) defect.	gyggvir				gréti
GÖRA, gjöra, gera (to do)	görr & göri		görði, gjörði, & gerði		gréti
HAFJA (to have)	hefi	höfum	hafði		gréti
HÁLDA (to hold)	held	höldum	hélt	hélzt	gréti
hanga (to hang)	hangi	höngum	hékk	hékkkt	gréti
há (to vex)	há		háði		gréti
HEFJA (to lift, heave, begin)	hef	hefjum	hóf	hóft	gréti
HEITA (to be called, promise)	heit & heiti		hét	hézt	gréti
hemja (to hem, restrain)	hem		hamði		gréti
heyja (to perform)	hey		háði		gréti
hjálpa (to help)	helpr	hjálpum	halp		gréti
hlaða (to build up)	hleð	hlöðum	hlóð	hlótt	gréti
hlaupa (to leap)	hleyp	hlaupum	hljóp	hljópt	gréti
hljóta (to get allotted, must)	hlýt	hljótum	hlaut	hlautz	gréti
hlymja (to dash)	hlymr		hlumði		gréti
hlýja (to shelter)	hlýr		hlýði	hlíði	gréti
hlæja (to laugh)	hlæ	hlæjum	hló	hlótt	gréti
HNÍGA (to sink)	hníg		hneig	hneigt	gréti
hnípa (to droop, crouch) defect.			hneit		gréti
hníta (to strike against) defect.			hnaud	hnautt	gréti
hnjóða (to rivet)	hnýð		hnauss		gréti
hnjósa (to sneeze)	hnýss		hnauf		gréti
hnúfa (to crouch) defect.			hnögg		gréti
hnöggva (to humble)	hnyggr		hnöfði		gréti
HORJA (to look)	horfi		hrafði		gréti
hrekja (to toss)	hrek		hrakði		gréti
HRINDA (to push)	hrind		hratt	hratzt	gréti
hrifa (to grapple)	hrif		hreif	hreifft	gréti
hrína (to squeal)	hrín		hrein		gréti
hrjóða (to rid, clear)	hryð	hrjóðum	hraud	hrautt	gréti
hrjósa (to shudder)	hryss		hraus		gréti
hrjóta (to rebound)	hryt	hrjótum	hraut	hrautz	gréti
hrymja (to weaken)			hrumði		gréti
hrynja (to fall into ruin)	hryn		hrunði		gréti
HRÖKKVA (to recoil)	hrökk		hrökk	hrökkkt	gréti
hverfa (to rotate)	hverf		hvarf		gréti
hvetja (to urge)	hvet	hvetjum	hvatti		gréti
hvína (to whistle)	hvín		hvein		gréti
HYGGJA (to think)	hygg	hyggjum	hugði		gréti
hylja (to bid)	hyl	hyljum	hulði		gréti

Infm.	Pres.	Plur.	Pret.	2nd Pers.	Plur.	Subj. Pret.	Part.
höggva (to bew)	högg	höggum	hjó	hjótt	hjoggu	hjoggi	höggvinn kala (to cool, freeze)	kell		kól		kólu	kœli	kalinn kaupa (to chaffer, buy)	kaupi		keypti			keypti	keyptr, keypzk kefja (to submerge)	kef		kaði		köfðu		kaðr kjósa (to choose)	kýss	kjósum	kjöri & kaus		kuru & kusu	kjöri	kjöirinn & kosinn klá (to claw, scratch)	klæ		kló	klótt			klegrinn klekja (to bathe)	klekr		klakði		klökðu	klekði	klakðr klífa (to climb)	klíf		kleif		klifu	klífi kljúfa (to cleave)	klýf	kljúfum	klauf		klufu	klyfi	klöfinn klýfja (to split)			klufði				klufðr klökkva (to sob) defect.			klökk		klukku
(knega, to be able) defect.	kná, knátt	knegum	knátti		knáttu & knóttu	knætti knýja (to knock)	kný	knýjum	knúði			knýði	knúinn
KOMA (to come)	kómnr & kemr	komum	kom, komt		kómu, kvámu	kœmi, kvæmi	kominn krefja (to crave)	kref	krefjum	kraði		kröfðu	krefði	kraðr, kröfð kremja (to squeeze)	krem	kremjum	kramði		krömðu	kremði	kramðr, krömð kreppa (to clench) defect.							kröppinn krjúpa (to creep)	krýp	krjúpum	kraup, kraupt		krupu	krypi	kröppinn kryfja (to embowel)	kryf	kryfjum	krufði			kryfði	krufðr krysja (to crouch)			krusti krytja (to murmur)			krutti
krýja (to swarm)			krúði			(krýði)	(krúð)
KUNNA (to know, be able)	kann, kannt	kunnu	kunni			kynni	kunnad
KVEÐA (to say)	kveð		kvad	kvatt	kváðu & kóðu	kvæði	kveðinn kveðja (to call on, request)	kveð	kveðjum	kvaddi		kvöddu	kveðdi	kvaddr, kvödd kvelja (to torment)	kvæl	kveljum	kvalði		kvöldu	kveldi	kvalðr, kvöld lafa (to dangle)	laf	lafum	lafði		löfðu	(lefði)	lafat
LÁTA (to let)	læt	látum & lóttum	lét	lézt	léttu	léti	látinn
LEGGJA (to lay)	legg	leggjum	lagði		lögðu	legði	lagðr, lögð, lagt leika (to play)	leik		lék	lékt	léku	léki	leikinn leka (to leak)	lek		lak	lakt	läku	läki	lekit lemja (to thrash)	lem	lemjum	lamði		lömðu	lemði	lamðr, lömð lepja (to lap)	lep		lapði		löpðu	lepði	lapit lesa (to gather, to read)	les		las	last	läsu	läsi	lesinn letja (to bold back)	let	letjum	latti		löttu	letti	lattr, lött
LIFA (to live)	lifi		lifði		lifðu	lifði	lifad
LIGGJA (to lie)	ligg	liggjum	lá	látt	lágu & lögu	lägi	legið
LÍÐA (to glide)	líð		leið	leitt	liðu	liði	liðinn líta (to look)	lít		leit	leizt	litu	liti	litinn ljá (to lend)	lé	ljám	léði			léði	léðr, ljóta (to strike)	lýst	ljóstum	laust		lustu	lysti	lostinn ljúga (to lie)	lýg	ljúgum	laug & ló	lótt	lugu	lygi	loginn loða (to stick to)	loði		lodd				loðat luma (to keep)	lumi		(lumði)				lumat lúka (to shut, end)	lýk	lúkum	lauk	laukt	luku	lyki	lokinn lúta (to lout, stoop)	lýt	lútum	laut	lauzt	lutu	lyti	lotinn lykja (to lock)	lyk	lykjum	lukði			lykði	lukðr, lukt, lukzk lýja (to beat soft)	lý	lýjum	lúði			lýðum	lúinn mala (to grind)	(mel)	mölum	mól		mólu	miæli	malinn mara (to be water-logged)	mari	mörum	marði		mörðu		marað má (to blot)	mái		máði				máðr, mázt
MEGA (may, to have might)	má, mátt	megum	mátti		máttu & mótту	mætti	mátt merja (to crush)	merr		marði		mörðu	merði	maríðr, mariinn meta (to tax)	met		mat	mazt	mátu & mótu	mæti	matinn metja (to eat, consume) defect.			matti míga (mingere)	míg		meig	meigt	migu	migi	migið muna (to remember)	man, mant	munum	mundi			mynði	munað
MUNU and monu (will, shall)	man, mant	munu, monu	mundi & möndi			möndi & myndi mýlja (to crush)	mýl		mulði			mölði, mýlði	mulðr, mulinn mýgja (to destroy) defect.			mugði		mögðu
ná (to reach)	nái		náði			næði	náð, názk
NEMA (to take, learn)	nem		nam	namt	námu	næmi	numinn njóta (to enjoy)	nýt	njótum	naut	nautum	nútum	nyti	notiinn
RÁÐA (to advise, rule)	ræð	ráðum	réd	rét	réðu	rédi	ráðinn reka (to drive)	rek	rekum	rak	rakt	ráku & ræku	ræki	rekinn rekja (to unfold)	rek	rekjum	rakði		rökðu	rekði	rakðr, röktr, rakzt renna (to run, flow)	renn		ran	rannt	runnu	rynni	runniinn ríða (to ride, swing)	ríð		reið	reitt	riðu	ríði	ríðinn ríða (to writhe, knit)	ríð		reið	reitt	riðu	ríði	ríðinn rífa (to rive, tear)	ríf		reif	reift	rifu	rífi	rífinn rísa (to rise)	rís		reis	reist	risu	rísi	rísinn rísta (to slash)	ríst		reist	reist	ristu	rísti	rístinn ríta (to trench, to write)	rít		reit	reizt	ritu	ríti	ritinn rjóða (to redden)	rýð	rjóðum	rauð	rautt	ruðu	ryði	roðinn rjóta (to roar, snore)	rýt	rjótum	raut	rautt	rutu	ryti	rotið rjúfa (to dissolve)	rýf	rjúfum	rauf	rauft	rufu	ryfi	rofinn rjúka (to reek, steam)	rýk	rjúkum	rauk	raukt	ruku	ryki	rokiinn róa (to row)	rœ	róm & róum	rœri & reri			rœri & reri	róinn ryðja (to rid, clear away)	ryð	ryðjum	ruddi			ryddi	ruddr, rutt, ruzt rymja (to roar)	rymr		rumði

Infín.	Pres.	Plur.	Pret.	2nd Pers.	Plur.	Subj. Pret.	Part. rýja (to pluck)	rýr		rúði			(rýði)	rúinn sama (to beseech)	samir		samði		sömdu	semði	samat sá (to sow)	sær & sáir		söri & seri		söru	söri	sáinn seðja (to satiate)	seð	seðjum	saddi		söddu	seddi	saddr, södd, satt
SEGJA (to say)	segi	segjum	sagði		sögðu	segð	sagðr, sögð, sagt selja (to sell)	sel	seljum	seldi			seldi	seldr, selt semja (to compose)	sem	semjum	samði		sömdu	semði	samðr, sömð serða (stuprare) defect.			sarð				sorðinn
SETJA (to set)	set	setjum	setti			setti	settr, sezkr
SITJA (to sit)	sit	sitjum	sat	satzt	sátu & sótu	sæti	setinn síða (to work a charr)	síð		seíð		síðu	síði	síðit síga (to sink)	síg		seig & ség		sígu	sígi	síginn
SJÁ (to see)	sé	sjám & sjóm	sá	sátt	sú & só	sæi	sénn (séðr), sésk sjóða (to cook)	syð	sjóðum	sauð	sautt	suðu	syði	soðinn sjúga & sýga (to suck)	syg	sjúgum	saug & só	sótt	sugu	sygi	soginn skafa (to scrape)	skef	sköfum	skóf	skóft	sköfu	skœfi	skafinn skaga (to jut out)	skagi	skögum	skagði		skögðu	skægi	skagat skaka (to shake)	skek	skökum	skók	skókt	skóku	skæki	skekinn skapa (to shape, make)	(skep)	sköpum	skóp		skópu skeðja (to hurt)	skeðr		skaddi				skaddr, sködd, skatt skepja (to shape)			skapði				skapðr skera (to cut)	skerr		skar	skart	skáru & skóru	skæri	skorinn
SKILJA (to separate, understand)	skil	skiljum	skilði			skilði	skilðr, skilt, skilzkr skína (to shine)	skínn		skein	skeint	skinu	skini	skinninn skíta (to care)	skít		skeið		skítu		skitinn skjalla (to clash)	skellr		skall	skallt	skullu	skylli	skollinn skjálfa (to shiver)	skélf	skjálfum	skalf	skalft	skulfu	skylfi	skolfitt skjóta (to shoot)	skýt	skjótum	skaut	skauzt	skutu	skyti	skotinn skolla (to dangle)	skolli		skolldi				skollat skorta (to lack)	skorti		skorti			skyrði	skort skreppa (to slip)	skrepp		skrapp	skrappt	skruppu	skryppi	skroppinn skriða (to creep)	skrið		skreið	skreitt	skriðu	skriði	skriðinn
SKULU (sball)	skal, skalt	skulu	skyldi			skyldi slá (to smite)	slæ	slám & slóm	sló	slótt	slógu	slægi	sleginn sleppa (to slip)	slepp		slapp	slappt	sluppu	slyppi	sloppinn slíta (to slit)	slit		sleit	sleizt	slitu	sliti	slittinn slyngva and slöngva (to sling)	slyng		slaug		slungu	slyngvi	slunginn slökkva (to extinguish) defect.	slökk						slokinn smella (to smack) defect.	smell		small smjúga (to creep through)	smýg	smjúgum	smaug & smó		smugu	smugi	smoginn smyrja (to anoint)	smyr	smyrjum	smurði			smurði	smurðr snerta (to touch)	snertr		snart	snarzt	snurtu	snyrti	snortinn sníða (to slice)	sníð		sneið	sneitt	sníðu	sníði	sníðinn snjúga (to snow) defect.	snýr						snúinn snúa (to turn)	sný	snúm	snöri & sneri		snöru	suöri	snúinn snyðja (to snuff) defect.			snuddi sofa (to sleep)	söfr & sefr	sofum	svaf	svaft	sváfu & sófu	svæfi	sofinn sóa (to sacrifice) defect.							sóit spara (to spare)	spari	spörum	sparði		spörðu	spærði	sparat spá (to spae, prophesy)	spái		spáði				spáð spenja (to decoy)	spenr	spenjum	spanði		spönðu	spenði	spanið, spönð sperna (to spurn) defect.			sparn spinna (to spin)	spinn		spann	spannt	spunnu	spynni	spunninn spretta (to spirt, spring)	sprettr		spratt	sprazt	spruttu	sprytti	sprottinn springa (to spring, crack)	spring		sprakk	sprakkt	sprungu	spryngr	sprunginn spyrja (to spear, ask)	spyr	spyrjum	spurði			spyrði	spurðr, spurtr, spurzt spýja (to spew)	spý	spúm	spjó	spjótt	spjó	spýi	spúð
STANDA (to stand)	stend	stöndum	stóð	stótt	stóðu	stæði	stadit stara (to stare)	stari	störum	starði		störðu	sterði	starat stedja (to steady, stop) defect.			staddi		stöddu		staddr, stödd, statt stela (to steal)	stel		stal	stalt	stálu & stólu	stæli	stolinn stinga (to stick)	sting		stakkr	stakkt	stungu	styngr	stunginn stíga (to step)	stíg		steigr & stétt		stigu	stigi	stiginn strá (to strew)	strái		stráði				stráð strjúka (to strike)	stryk	strjúkum	strauk	straukt	struku	stryki	strokinn stúpa (to stoop) defect.							stopðir (?)
stúra (to mope) defect.	stúri		stúrði styðja (to prop)	styð	styðjum	studdi			styddi	studdr, stutt, stuzt stynja (to groan)	styn	stynjum	stundi			stynði	stundi stökkva (to leap)	stökk		stökk	stökkt	stukku	stykki	stokkinn súpa (to sip)	syþ	súpum	saup	šaupt	supu	sypi	sopinn sveðja (to glance off)	sveðr		svaddi		svöddu svefja (to soothe)	svefr		svafði		sváfðu svelgja (to swallow)	svelgr	svelgjum	svalgr	svalgt	sulgu	sygi	solginn svelja (to swell)	svelr		svalði		svöldu svella (to swell)	svellr		svall	svallt	sullu	sylli	sollinn svelta (to starve, die)	sveltr		svalt	svaltt	sultu	sytti	soltinn sverfa (to file)	sverf		svarf	svarft	surfu	(syrfi)	sorfinn sverja (to swear)	sver	sverjum	sór	sórt	söru	særi	svarinn svimma (to swim)	svimm		svamm		summu	symmi	summit

Infm.	Pres.	Plur.	Pret.	2nd Pers.	Plur.	Subj. Pret.	Part.
sviða (to singe)	svið		sveið	sveitt		sviðu	sviðinn svífa (to rove, drift)	svíf		sveif		svífu	svífi	svífið svíkja (to betray)	svík	svíkjum	sveik	sveikt	svíku	svíki	svíkinn svipa (to swoop) defect.	svípr		sveip				svíprinn (?)
syngja (to sing)	syng	syngjum	saung	saungt	sungu	syngi	sunginn syja (to sew) defect.			séði or söði				sóðr
SÖEKJA (to seek)	sœki	sœkjum	sótti			sœtti	sóttur, sótzk sökkva (to sink)	sökk		sökk	sökkt	sukku	sykki	sökkinn
TAKA (to take)	tek	tökum	tók	tókt	tóku	tœki	tekinn teðja (to dung)	teð		taddi		töddu		taddr, tödd, tatt tefja (to delay)	tef	tefjum	tafði		töfðu	tefði	tafðr, töfð telja (to tell, count)	tel	teljum	talði		töldu	telði	taldr, töld, talt temja (to tame)	tem	temjum	tamði		tömðu	temði	tamðr, tömð tjá (to sbew)	té		tjáði				téðr (tjúga, to draw) defect.							töginn tolla (to bang fast)	tolli		tollði				tollað tréðja (to tread)	tréð & trþóðr		traddi		tröddu		traddr, trödd tréfa (to tear)	(tréfr)		(trafði)				trafðr tréga (to grieve)	trégr		trégði				trégað tróða (to tread)	tróðr & tréðr		trað		tráðu & tróðu	træði	tróðinn trúa (to row)	trúi		trúði			trýði	trúað tyggja (to chew)	tygg	tyggjum	tögg & tögg	tugði	tuggu	tyggi	tugginn týja, tœja, tjá (to avail, grant)	týr		týði & tœði ugga (to fear)	uggi		uggði			ygðði	uggat unna (to rest)	uni		unði			ynni	unnað unna (to grant, love)	ann, annt	unna	unni			ynni	unnat, unnt vaða (to wade)	veð	vöðum	óð	(ótt)	óðu	œði	vaðið vaka (to wake, be awake)	vaki	vökum	vakði		vökðu	vekði	vakað valda (to wield, rule)	veld	völdum	voldi & olli			ylli & voldi	valdit vara (to be aware of)	vari		varði				varat vaxa (to wax)	vex	vöxum	óx	óxt	óxu	yxi	vaxinn vefa (to weave)	vef		vaf & óf	óft	ófu	væfi, œfi	ofinn vefja (to wrap)	vef	vefjum	vafði		vöfðu	vefði	vafðr, vöfð vega (to weigh, fight)	veg		vá	vátt	vágu & vógu	vægi	vegin vekja (to wake, rouse from sleep)	vek	vekjum	vakði		vökðu	vekði	vakðr, vökt velja (to choose)	vel	veljum	valði		völdu	velði	valðr, völd vella (to boil)	vell		vall		ullu	ylli	ollinn velta (to roll)	velt		valt	valtzt	ultu	ylti	óltinn venja (to accustom to)	ven		vandi		vöndu	vendi	vandðr, vönd
VERA & vesa (to be)	em & ert	erum	var & vas	vart & vast	váru & vóru	væri	verit
VERÐA (to become)	es, er		varð	vart		(pres. subj. sé, sér, sému, séð)	orðinn verja (to defend, clothe)	verð		varði		urðu	yrði	varðr verpa (to warp, throw)	ver		varp		vörðu	verði	orpin
VILJA (to will)	verp		varpt	varpt	urpu	yrpi	orpin vinda (to wind wrong)	vil & vilja	viljum	vildi			vildi	viljað vinna (to work)	vind		vatt	vatz	undu	yndi	undinn
VITA (to wit, know)	vinn		vann	vannt	unnu	ynni	unninn víkja (to move)	veit, veizt	vitu	vissi			vissi	vitað (vringa = to wring) defect.	vík		veik	veikt	viku	viki	vikinn ymja (to hem)	ving = vring (?)	Grett. (in a verse)			vrungu yrkja (to work, compose)	ymr		umði ýja (to swarm) defect.	yrki		orti			yrti	ortr, ort, orzk þeþja (to thicken) defect.			úði þegja (to be silent)	þegi	þegjum	þaði		þögðu	þegði	þagat þekja (to thatch)	þek	þekjum	þakði		þökðu	þekði	þakðr, þökð, þakinn þekkja (to know) defect.			þátti & þekði þenja (to stretch)	þen	þenjum	þandi		þöndu	þendi	þandðr, þönd þeyja (to thaw) defect.			þá þiggja (to receive)	þigg	þiggjum	þá	þátt	þágu & þógu	þægi	þegin þilja (to board)			þiði				þiðr þíða (to melt) defect.							þiðinn þjá (to coerce)	þjá		þjáði				þjáðr, þjáð, þjázk þjóta (to whistle)	þýt	þjótum	þaut	þautz	þutu	þyti	þotinn þola (to thole, bear)	þoli		þoði			þöðði, þyðði	þolt, þolat þora (to dare)	þori		þorði			þörði, þyrði	þorat, þort þrasa (to talk big) defect.	þrasi þrá (to long)	þrá		þráði				þráðr þrifa (to seize)	þrif		þreif	þreif	þrifu	þrifi	þrifinn þrjóta (to cease)	þrýtr		þraut		(þrutu)	þryti	þrotinn þruma (to sit fast)	þrumi		þrumði þröngva, þryngja (to press, throng)	þröng		þröng		þrungu	þryngvi	þrunginn
ÞURFA (to need)	þarf, þarft	þurfu	þurftu			þyrfti	þurfat (þurt) þvá (to wash)	þvæ	þvám	þó	þótt	þógu	þvægi	þveginn þverra (to wane)	þverr		þvarr		þurru	þyrri	þorrinn
ÞYKKJA (to think, seem)	þykkir		þótti			þætti	þótt, þótzk þylja (to recite)	þyl		þulði			þylði	þulit þyrja (to rush) defect.	þyrr		þurði þysja (to rush) defect.	þyss		þusti æja (to bait)	æ & á		áði			æði	áð & áit

A LIST OF IRREGULAR FORMS.

I. Verbal Forms.

ann, annt, from unna.
 arði, from erja.
 atti, from etja.
 á, átt, from eiga.
 áði, átt, from eja.
 át, ázt, átu, from eta.
 bað, báðu, from biðja.
 bar, báru, from bera.
 barði, from berja.
 barg, from bjarga.
 batt, batzt, from binda.
 bauð, bautt, from bjóða.
 beðið, from biðja & biða.
 beið, biðu, from biða.
 beit, bitu, from bita.
 berg, from bjarga.
 bittu, from binda.
 bjó, bjoggu, bjuggu, from búa.
 blend, from blanda.
 blés, from blása.
 blét, blétt, from blóta and blanda.
 blás, from blása.
 boðinn, buðu, from bjóða.
 borginn, from bjarga.
 borinn, from bera.
 brann, from brenna.
 brast, brustu, from bresta.
 braut, brottinn, from brjóta.
 brá, brygði, from bregða.
 brostinn, brysti, from bresta.
 brugðinn, from bregða.
 brunnninn, from brenna.
 brýt, bryti, from brjóta.
 bundinn, from binda.
 byndi, from binda.
 byrgi, from bjarga.
 bý, from búa.
 býð, byði, from bjóða.
 bæði, from biðja.
 bæri, from bera.
 datt, dottinn, from detta.
 dáinn, from deya.
 dó, ðei, from deya.
 drakk, from drekka.
 drap, drápu, from drepa.
 draup, dropið, from drjúpa.
 dreg, from draga.
 dreginn, from draga.
 dreif, drifinn, from drífa.
 dró, drógu, from draga.
 drukkinn, from drekka.
 drundi, from drynja.
 drykki, from drekka.
 drýp, from drjúpa.
 droegi, from draga.
 dulði, dult, from dylja.
 dunði, from dynja.
 duttu, from detta.
 dúði, from dýja.
 dvalði, dvalið, from dvelja.
 dygði, from duga.
 dytti, from detta.
 ðei, from deya.
 ek, from aka.
 el, from ala.
 em, er, eru, from vera.
 eyk, from auka.
 eys, from ausa.
 fal, fálu, from fela.
 fann, from finna.
 fat, fátu, from feta.
 fauk, from fjúka.

fékk, fenginn, from fá.
 feld, from falda.
 féll, from falla.
 fell, from falla.
 ferr, from fara.
 fiðr = finnr, from finna.
 flatti, from fletja.
 flaug, fló, from fljúga.
 flaut, flutu, from fljóta.
 floinn, from fljúga.
 flotinn, from fljóta.
 fló, flúinn, from flyja.
 fló, flógu, fleginn, from flá.
 flutti, from flytja.
 flýg, flygi, from fljúga.
 flýtt, flyti, from fljóta.
 flær, from flá.
 floegi, from flá.
 fokinn, from fjúka.
 folginn, from fela.
 fór, fóru, from fara.
 framði, from fremja.
 fraus, frusu, frosinn, fröinn, from frjósa.
 frá, frágu, from fregna.
 frýs, frýsi, from frjósa.
 frömd, from fremja.
 fundinn, from finna.
 fyndi, from finna.
 fýk, fyki, from fjúka.
 fæ, from fá.
 fœli, from fela.
 gaf, gáfu, from gefa.
 gakk, from ganga.
 gall, from gjalla.
 galt, from gjalda.
 gat, gátu, from geta.
 gaus, gusu, from gjósa.
 gaut, gotinn, from gjóta.
 gein, ginu, from gina.
 gékk, gengu, gengit, from ganga.
 geld, from gjalda.
 gellr, from gjalla.
 geng, from ganga.
 gladdi, glatt, from gleðja.
 glapði, from gleypja.
 glunði, from glymjja.
 glödd, from gleðja.
 gnast, gnustu, from gnesta.
 gný, from gnúa.
 gnýr, from gnúa.
 gnöri, gneri, from gnúa.
 gollinn, guldu, from gjalda.
 gollíð, gullu, from gjalla.
 gosið, gusu, from gjósa.
 gotinn, gutu, from gjóta.
 gó, from geyja.
 gól, from gala.
 gramði, from gremja.
 gref, from grafa.
 grét, græt, from gráta.
 gróf, from grafa.
 grœ, from gróa.
 græfi, from grafa.
 græt, from gráta.
 gröri, grefi, grœ, from gróa.
 gyldi, from gjalda.
 gylli, from gjalla.
 gyss, gysi, from gjósa.
 gæði, from gá.
 gæfi, from gefa.
 geli, from gala.
 geti, from geta.
 göra, gjöra, = gera.

halp, from hjálpa.
 hamði, from hemja.
 háði, háði, from heyja.
 hef, hefði, from hafa.
 hékk, hengu, from hanga.
 held, from halda.
 helpr, from hjálpa.
 hélt (held), from halda.
 hét, from heita.
 hjó, hjoggu, höggvinn, from höggva.
 hlaut, hlutu, from hljóta.
 hleð, from hlaða.
 hlegið, from hlæja.
 hleypr, from hlaupa.
 hljóp, hlypi, hlœpi, hlupu, from hlaupa.
 hlotinn, from hljóta.
 hló, hlógu, from hlæja.
 hlóð, from hlaða.
 hlýt, from hljóta.
 hnauð, hnóðinn, from hnjóða.
 hnaus, from hnjósa.
 hneig, hné, hniginn, from hniga.
 hneit, hnitu, from hníta.
 hnugginn, from hnóggva.
 hnýs, from hnjósa.
 holpinn, from hjálpa.
 horfnn, from hverfa.
 hóf, from hefja.
 hrakði, from hrekja.
 hratt, hritt, from hrinda.
 hrauð, from hrjóða.
 hraut, hrutu, hrotið, from hrjóta.
 hreif, hriðinn, from hriða.
 hrein, from hriða.
 hroðinn, from hrjóða.
 hrokkið, hrukku, from hrökkva.
 hrundi, from hrynja.
 hrundinn, from hrinda.
 hryndi, from hrinda.
 hryð, from hrjóða.
 hryss, from hrjósa.
 hugði, from hyggja.
 hulði, hult, from hylja.
 hulpu, hylpi, from hjálpa.
 hurfu, hyrfi, from hverfa.
 hvatti, from hvetja.
 hvein, from hvína.
 hvött, from hvetja.
 hæfi, from hefja.
 hófð, from hafa.
 jök, jyki, from auka.
 jós, jysi, from ausa.
 kafði, from kefja.
 kann, from kunna.
 kaus, from kjósa.
 kell, from kala.
 kemr, kóm, from koma.
 keypti, from kaupja.
 kjöri, keyri, from kjósa.
 klakði, from klekja.
 klauf, klufu, klofnn, from kljúfa.
 kleif, klífu, from klífa.
 kló, kleginn, from klá.
 klýf, klýfi, from kljúfa.
 kná, knátti, from knega.
 knúði, knúinn, from knýja.
 kosinn, from kjósa.
 kóðu, from kveða.

kól, from kala.
 kómu, from koma.
 krafði, from krefja.
 kramði, from kremja.
 kraup, krupu, kropinn, from krjúpa.
 krufði, from kryfja.
 krýp, krypi, from krjúpa.
 kvað, kváðu, from kveða.
 kvaddi, kvatt, from kvedja.
 kvalði, from kvelja.
 kvámu, kvæmi, kæmi, from koma.
 kvódd, from kvedja.
 kvöld, from kvelja.
 kynni, from kunna.
 kýs, kýsi, from kjósa.
 kæli, from kala.
 lagði, lagt, from leggja.
 lak, láku, from leka.
 lamði, from lemja.
 lapði, from leypja.
 las, lásu, from lesa.
 latti, from letja.
 laug, from ljúga.
 lauk, from lúka.
 laust, from ljósta.
 laut, from lúta.
 lá, látt, lágu, leginn, from liggja.
 lé, léði, from ljá.
 lék, from leika.
 leið, liðinn, from liða.
 leit, litu, litinn, from líta.
 loginn, from ljúga.
 lokinn, luku, from lúka.
 lostinn, lustu, from ljósta.
 lotinn, lutu, from lúta.
 ló, lótt, from ljúga.
 lukði, from lykja.
 lúinn, from ljýja.
 lýg, lygi, from ljúga.
 lýk, lyki, from lúka.
 lýt, lyti, from lúta.
 lægi, from liggja.
 læki, from leka.
 læt, from láta.
 lögð, from leggja.
 man, from muna, munu.
 marði, from merja.
 mat, mátu, from mæta.
 má, mátti, mætti, from mega.
 meig, from míga.
 mól, from mala.
 mulði, from mylja.
 myndi, or mündi, from munu.
 mœli, from mala.
 mætti, from mega.
 nam, námu, from nema.
 naut, nutu, notinn, nýt, from njóta.
 numinn, from nema.
 næni, from nema.
 ofinn, from vefa.
 olli, from valda.
 ollinn, from vella.
 oltinn, from velta.
 orðinn, from verða.
 orpinn, from verpa.
 orti, ort, from yrkja.
 óð, óðu, from vaða.
 óf, ófu, from vefa.
 ók, from aka.

ól, from ala.
 óru, from vera.
 óx, óxu, from vaxa.
 rak, ráku, from rekja.
 rakði, from rekja.
 rann, from renna.
 rauð, ruðu, from rjóða.
 rauf, rufu, from rjúfa.
 rauk, ruku, from rjúka.
 raut, rutu, from rjóta.
 réð, réðu, from ráða.
 reið, riðinn, from ríða.
 reif, rifinn, from rífa.
 reis, risinn, from rísa.
 reist, ristu, from rísta.
 reit, ritinn, from ríta.
 ro, i. e. ero, from vera.
 roðinn, from rjóða.
 rofinn, from rjúfa.
 rokinn, from rjúka.
 ruddi, rutt, from ryðja.
 runninn, from renna.
 ryð, ryði, from rjóða.
 rýf, ryfi, from rjúfa.
 rýk, ryki, from rjúka.
 roe, from róa.
 ræð, from ráða.
 röri, reri, from róa.
 saddi, from seðja.
 sagði, sagt, from segja.
 samði, from semja.
 sarð, from serða.
 sat, sátu, from sitja.
 saud, from sjóða.
 saug & só, from sjúga.
 saung, from syngja.
 saup, from sápa.
 sá, sátt, from sjá.
 sé, sér, sém, séð, from vera.
 sé, séðu, sénn, from sjá.
 séðu, from syja.
 sef, söf, from sofa.
 seig & ség, sigu, from síga.
 seri, söri, from sá.
 setið, from sitja.
 skaddi, from skeðja.
 skál, skalt, from skulu.
 skalf, from skjálfa.
 skall, from skjalla.
 skapði, from skepja.
 skar, skáru, from skera.
 skaut, from skjóta.
 skef, from skafa.
 skein, skínu, skininn, from skína.
 skek, from skaka. skekinn, from skaka.
 skelf, from skjálfa.
 skellr, from skjalla.
 skorinn, from skera.
 skotinn, from skjóta.
 skóf, skófu, from skafa.
 skók, from skaka.
 skóp, from skapa.
 skrapp, skruppu, skroppinn, from skreppa.
 skreið, skriðu, from skriða.
 skulfu, skolnið, from skjálfa.
 skullu, skollíð, from skjalla.
 skutu, skyti, from skjóta.
 skylði, from skulu.
 skylli, from skjalla.
 skódd, from skeðja.
 slapp, sluppu, from sleppa.

slaung, slungu, from slöngva.
sleginn, from slá.
sleit, slitu, slitinn, from slíta.
sloppinn, from sleppa.
sló, slógu, from slá.
slæ, from slá.
small, from smella.
smaug, smó, smoginn, from smjúga.
smurði, from smyrja.
smýg, from smjúga.
snart, snartu, snyrti, snortinn, from snerta.
sneid, sniðinn, from sníða.
sný, from snúa.
snöri, sneri, from snúa.
sodinn, from sjóða.
soginn, from sjúga.
sokkinn, from sökkva.
solginn, from svelja.
sollinn, from sveilla.
soltinn, from svelta.
soppinn, from súpa.
sorðinn, from serða.
sorfinn, from sverfa.
sör, sóru, from sverja.
sótti, sótt, from sökja.
spanði, from spenja.
spann, from spinna.
spjó, from spýja.
sprakk, sprungu, sprung-inn, from springa.
spratt, spruttu, sprottinn,
from spretta.
spunninn, from spinna.

spurði, spurt, from spyrja.
spönd, from spenja.
staðið, from standa.
stakk, from stinga.
stal, stálu, from stela.
steig, sté, stigu, from stiga.
stend, from standa.
stikk, from stinga.
stokkinn, from stökkva.
stollinn, from stela.
stóð, stóðu, from standa.
strauk, struku, strokinn, from strjúka.
studdi, stutt, from styðja.
stukku, from stökkva.
stundi, from stynja.
stæði, from standa.
stæli, from stela.
stödd, from stéðja.
sudu, from sjóða.
sugu, from súga.
sukku, from sökkva.
sulgu, from svelja.
sulu, from sveilla.
sultu, from svelta.
summu, from svimma.
sunginn, sungu, from syngja.
supu, sypi, from súpa.
surfu, from sverfa.
svaf, sváfu, svæfi, from sofa.
svalg, from svelgja.
svalt, from svelta.
svamm, from svimma.
svarf, surfu, from sverfa.
svarinn, from sverja.
sveid, sviðinn, from sviða.

sveik, sviku, from svikja.
sykki, from sökkva.
sylgi, from svelgja.
syð, syði, from sjóða.
sýg, sygi, from sjúga.
sýp, sypi, from súpa.
sæi, from sjá.
særi, from sverja.
sæti, from sitja.
södd, from seðja.
södr, from sjá.
sögð, from segja.
sóri, from sá.
taddi, from teðja.
tafði, from teffja.
talði, from telja.
tamði, from tenja.
té, téðr, from tjá.
trað, tráðu, træði, from troða.
treð, from troða.
trýði, from trúa.
trödd, from tredja.
tæki, from taka.
töfð, from teffja.
tögg, tugði, tugginn, from tyggja.
tülð, from telja.
ullu, from velta.
ultu, from velta.
umði, from ymjá.
undu, undinn, from vinda.
unnu, unninn, from vinna.
urðu, from verða.
urpu, from verpa.
uxu, from vaxa.
vaf, from vefa.

vafði, from vefja.
vakði, from vekja.
valði, from velja.
vall, from vella.
valt, from velta.
vandí, from venja.
vann, from vinna.
var, váru, from vera.
vard, from verða.
vardí, from verja.
varp, from verpa.
vatt, from vinda.
vá, vátt, vágu, from vega.
veð, from vada.
veik, vikinn, from víkja.
veit, vitu, veizt, from vita.
veld, from valda.
vex, from vaxa.
viðr=vinnr, from vinna.
vittu, from vinda.
voldi, from valda.
væri, from vera.
vöfð, from vefja.
vökð, from vekja.
yönd, from venja.
yggi, from ugga.
yki, from auka.
ylli, from valda.
ylti, from velta.
yndi, from una.
yudi, from vinda.
ynni, from unna & vinna.
yrði, from verða.
yrpi, from verpa.
yxi, from vaxa.
þagði, from þegja.
þakði, from þekja.

þandi, from þenja.
þarf, þarft, from þurfa.
þaut, from þjóta.
þá, þágu, from þiggja.
þorrinn, from þverra.
þotinn, from þjóta.
þó, þógu, from þvá.
þótti, þótt, from þykkja.
þraut, þrotinn, from þrjóta.
þreif, þrifu, from þrifa.
þrýt, from þrjóta.
þulði, from þylja.
þurru, from þverra.
þusti, from þysja.
þvarr, þurru, þyrri, þorrinn, from þverra.
þveginn, from þvá.
þvæ, from þvá.
þylði, þölli, from þola.
þyrði, þörði, from þora.
þyrfti, from þurfa.
þyrri, from þverra.
þyrti, from þjóta.
þýt, from þjóta.
þægi, from þiggja.
þætti, from þykkja.
þökð, from þekja.
þönd, from þenja.
þeði, from vada.
þæki, from aka.
þeli, from ala.
æti, from eta.
ætti, from eiga.
örðu, from erja.
ötta, from etja.
ötta=áttu, from eiga.
ótu=átu, from eta.

II. Nominal Forms.

aðrir, from annarr, otber.
Agli, from Egill.
agnar, from ögn, chaiß.
aldar, from öld, age.
alnar, from öln or alin, ell.
andar, from önd, breath, duck.
annar, from önn, labour.
arðar, from örd, tilling.
arkar, from örk, chest.
arnar, from örn, eagle.
aspar, from ösp, asp.
aungan, aungva, etc., from eingi, none.
aurar, from eyrir, ounce.
axar, from öx, axe.
axlar, from öxl, shoulder.
á & ána, from á, river.
á, from ær, eve.
ár, from á, river.
állar, from böllr, ball.
barkar, from bökr, bark.
beggja, from báðir, both.
birni, bjarnar, from björn, bear.
bjargar, from björg, help.
björg, from bjarg, rock.
björt, from bjart, brigbt.
blátt, from blár, blue.
blint, from blindr, blind.
blöð, from blað, blade, leaf.
botz, from botn, bottom.
breitt, from breiðr, broad.
brýnn, from brún, brow.
brýr, from brú, bridge.
brœðr, from bróðir, brother.
brœkr, from brók, breeches.
brögð, from bragð, exploit.
brött, from brattr, steep.

búendr, from buandi, franklin.
bæði, from báðir, both.
bægi, from bógr, bow.
bæjar, býjar, from bæ, býr, town.
bækr, from bók, book.
bækli, from bálkr, bulk, partition.
bœndr, from bóndi, franklin.
bœtr, from bót, remedy.
bök, from bak, back.
bönd, from baud, bond.
börð, from barð, brim.
börn, from barn, hairn, child.
degi, from dagr, day.
djörf, from djarfr, daring.
drætti, from drátr, pulling.
dura, from dyrr, door.
dýalar, from dvöl, delay.
dýpri, from djúpr, deep.
dætr, from dóttir, daughter.
dögum, from dagr, day.
dögurðr = dagverðr, dinner.
dölum, from dalr, dale.
Dönnum, from Danir, Danes. döpr, from dapr, dismal.
eitt, from einn, one.
elptr, from álpt, swan.
endr, from önd, duck.
erni, from örn, eagle.
eyjar, from ey, island.
fanna, from fönn, snow.
farar, from för, journey.
fátt, from fár, few.
fædr, from faðir, father.
fegri, fegrstr, from fagr, fair.
firði, from fjörðr, firth.
firri, firstr, from fjarr, far.
fjaðrar, from fjöðr, feather.

fjar, from fjöl, deal.
fjarðar, from fjörðr, firth.
fjár, from fé, cattle.
fjögur, from fjórir, four.
fjöll, from fjall, fell.
flatar, flæti, from flötr, flat.
flœr, from fló, fleet.
flöt, from flatr, flat.
fremri, fremstr, fr. fram, forward.
frítt, from friðr, bandsome.
fyllri, fyllstr, from fullr, full.
færi, fæstr, from fár, few.
fœtr, from fótr, foot.
föður, from faðir, father.
fögnuðr = fagnuðr, joy.
fögr, from fagr, fair.
föll, from fall, fall.
för, from far, footprint.
föst, from fastr, firm.
föt, from fat, garment.
galtar, gelti, from göltr, bag.
garnir, from görn, gut.
gjáfar, from gjöf, gift.
gjardar, from gjörð, girdle.
gjöld, from gjald, payment.
gjörn, from gjarn, willing.
glatt, from gláðr, glad.
glœðr, from glóð, embers.
glöð, from gláðr, glad.
gott, from göðr, good.
grafar, from gröf, grave.
grafar, grefti, from gröftr, digging.
grátt, from grár, gray.
grynnri, grynnstr, from grunur, shallow.
grös, from gras, grass. gæss, from gás, goose.

gömul, from gamall, old.
götu, from gata, path.
Haðar, Heði, from Höðr. hafnar, from höfn, bay.
hallar, from höll, hall.
handar, from hönd, hand.
Harðar, Herði, from Hörðr. hattar, hetti, from hött, hood.
hátt, from hár, high.
heilög, from heilagr, boly.
helgan, helgari, from heilagr, boly.
hendi, hendr, from hönd, band.
himni, from himinn, beaven.
hirti, from hjörtr, hart.
hitt, from hinn, the.
hjarðar, from hjörð, herd.
hjörtu, from hjarta, heart.
hlýtt, from hlýr, warm.
hnött, hnetr, from hnot, nut.
hrátt, from hrár, raw.
hundruð, from hundrað, hundred.
hvannar, from hvönn, angelica. hvöss, from hvass, sharp.
hvött, from hvatr, vigorous.
hæri, hæstr, from hár, high.
hætti, from hátr, mode.
höf, from haf, sea.
höfði, from höfuð, head.
hög, from hagr, bandy.
höll, from hallr, slant.
hölt, from haltr, lame.
höpt, from hapt, bond.
hörd, from harðr, hard. jarðar, from jörð, earth.
jüfn, jömn, from jafn, even.
karar, from kör, bed of a bedridden person.

kastar, kesti, from köstr, pile.
 katli, from ketill, kettle.
 kattar, ketti, from köttir, cat.
 kili, from kjölr, keel.
 kljá, from klé, weaver's weight.
 knarrar, knerri, from knörr, sbip.
 knjá, knjúam, from kné, knee.
 kramar, from kröm, wasting sickness.
 kíu, from kýr, cow.
 kvalar, from kvöl, torment.
 kvenna, from kona, woman.
 köku, from kaka, cake.
 köld, from kaldr, cold.
 köll, from kall, call.
 kölluð, from kallaðr, called.
 laðar, from löð, bidding.
 laga, from lög, law.
 lagar, legi, from lögr, water.
 lanz, from land, land.
 lasta, lesti, from löstr, fault.
 látum, from læti, manners.
 leitt, from leiðr, loafbed.
 litíð, from lítill, little.
 ljá, from lé, scythe.
 lukli, from lykkill, key.
 lýss, from lús, louse.
 lægri, lægstr, from lágr, low.
 lær, from ló, lark.
 lömb, from lamb, lamb.
 lönd, from land, land.
 löng, from langr, long.
 maðar, megi, from mögr, son.
 malar, from möl, grave.
 manar, from mön, mane.
 manna, manni, mannr, from maðr, man.
 marðar, merði, from mörðr, marten.
 markar, from mörk, mark, march.
 mart, from margr, many.
 máttkan, from máttigr, mighty.
 megri, from magr, meager.
 menn, meðr, from maðr, man.
 merkr, from mörk, mark.
 mey, meyjar, from mæ, maid.
 miði, from mjöðr, mead.
 mikít, from mikill, mickle.
 mitt, from minn, mine.
 mitt, from miðr, middle.
 mjaðar, from mjöðr, mead.
 mjallar, from mjöll, snow.
 mjótt, from mjógr, slim.
 morni, from morginn, morning.
 mónoðr = mánoðr, month.
 muðr = munnr, mouth.
 mykill = mikill, mickle.
 nýss, from mús, mouse.
 næðr, from móðir, mother.
 nætti, from mátt, might.
 möðru, from maðra, madder.
 mögn, from magn, might.
 mögr, from magr, meagre.

mörg, from margr, many.
 mörk, from mark, march, border.
 mál, from máll, speech.
 nasar, from nös, nostril.
 nánari, from náinn, near.
 náttar, from nótt, night.
 negl, from nagl, nail.
 Nirið, Njarðar, from Njörðr. nýtt, from nýr, new.
 nætr, from nótt, night.
 nætr, from nótt, net.
 nöfn, nönn, from nafn, name.
 nöðri, nerðri, = nyrðri, more north.
 orz, from orð, word.
 ótt, from óðr, enraged.
 raðar, from röð, row, series.
 raddar, from röð, voice.
 randar, from rönð, stripe.
 rastar, from röst, mile.
 rótt, from rór, resting.
 roer, from ró, nail.
 roetr, from rót, root.
 röm, from ramnr, strong, bitter.
 röng, from rangr, wrong.
 rön, from rann, house.
 ró = rá, nook, yard.
 saðr = sannr, sooth.
 sagar, from sög, saw, (to saw).
 sagnar, from sögn, saw, (to say).
 sakar, from sök, sake.
 sannz, from sandr, sand.
 satt, from sannr, sooth.
 sitt, from sinn, suus.
 sítt, from síðr, long.
 skátt, from skár, open.
 skemri, skemstr, from skammr, short.
 skildi, from skjöldr, shield.
 skúar, from skór, shoe.
 skömm, from skammr, short.
 sköpt, from skapt, shaft, handle. sköpuð, from skapaðr, shaped.
 skörð, from skarð, cleft.
 slætt, from slær, blunt.
 slætti, from slátt, smiting.
 smæri, smæstr, from smár, small.
 snær = snjó, snow.
 spalar, speli, from spölr, rail.
 spjöld, from spjald, tablet.
 spjöll, from spjall, spell.
 spæni, from spánn, cbip.
 spök, from spakr, wise.
 stangar, stengr, from stöng, pole.
 steðja, from steði, stithy.
 strandar, strendr, from strönd, strand.
 styttri, styztr, from stuttur, short.
 stær, stærstr, from stórr, great.
 stöðr, steðr, from stoð, pillar.
 sumur, from sumar, summer.
 sú, from sá, that.

sú, from sýr, soz.
 svarðar, sverði, from svörðr, sword.
 sveppi, from svöppr, musbroom.
 sviðr = sviunnr, wise.
 svör, from svar, answer.
 syni, sóni, from sonr, son.
 sætt, from sær, seeing.
 sævar, from sær, sea.
 sögu, from saga, story.
 sölt, from salt, salt.
 sölu, from sala, sale.
 söm, from samr, same.
 sönn, from sannr, true.
 sóx, from sax, sword.
 sór = sár, sore, wound.
 tafar, from tóf, delay.
 tangar, from töng, tongs.
 tennr, teðr, tanna, from tönn, tooth.
 tjarnar, from tjörn, tarn.
 traðar, from tröð, enclosure.
 trjá, trjám, from tré, tree.
 trútt, from trúr, true.
 tugli, from tygill, strap.
 tveggja, from tveir, two.
 tvær, tvá, tvau, from tveir, two.
 tær, from tá, toe.
 töðu, from taða, bay.
 töfl, from tafi, same.
 tölu, from tala, speech, tale.
 töluð, from talaðr, told, spoken.
 tóm, from tamr, tame.
 töpuð, from tapaðr, lost.
 tösku, from taska, bag.
 tór = tár, tears.
 vakar, from vök, bole.
 valar, veli, from völr, stick.
 vallar, velli, from völlr, field.
 vambar, from vömb, womb.
 vamma, from vömm, fault.
 vandar, vendi, from vöndr, wand.
 vant, from vandr, difficult.
 varðar, verði, from vörðr, ward.
 varnar, from vörn, defence.
 varrar, from vörr, lip.
 varrar, verri, from vörr, pull.
 vattar, vetti, from vötr, glove.
 vatz, from vatn, water.
 vaxtar, vexti, from vöxtr, growth.
 vánd, from vándr, bad.
 veraldar, from veröld, world.
 vesöl, from vesall, wretched.
 vilja, from vili, will.
 vinz, from vindr, wind.
 vitt, from víðr, wide.
 vöð, from vað, ford.
 vöknuð, from vaknaðr, awake.
 vöku, from vaka, waking.
 völd, from vald, power.
 völn, from vala, knuckle.
 vön, from vanr, want.
 vönd, from vandr, difficult.

vör, from varr, ware.
 vörðu, from varða, beacon.
 vörm, from varmr, warm.
 vörtu, from varta, wart.
 vöru, from vara, wares.
 vösk, from vaskr, valiant.
 vötn, from vatn, water.
 vón = ván, hope.
 vöpn = vápn, weapon.
 yngri, yngstr, from ungr, young.
 yxu, from uxi, ox.
 þagnar, from þögn, silence.
 þakkar, from þökk, thanks.
 þau, þær, from þeir, they.
 þelli, from þollr, young fir.
 þitt, from þinn, thine.
 þramar, þremi, from þrómr, rim, border.
 þrastar, þresti, from þróstr, brush.
 þriggja, from þrír, three.
 þrjár, þrjú, from þrír, three.
 þræði, from þráðr, thread.
 þvætti, from þváttr, wash.
 þyugri, þyngstr, from þungr, heavy.
 þynnr, þynnstr, from þunnr, thin.
 þætti, from þátt, strand.
 þök, from þak, thatch.
 ærir, from árr, messenger.
 æsir, from áss, god.
 öðli, from óðal, property.
 öðrum, from annarr, other.
 öðu, from aða, shell.
 öfl, from afl, strength.
 ögn, from agn, bat.
 ökrum, from akr, acre.
 öldruð, from aldradr, aged.
 öldrum, from aldr, eld, age.
 öldur, from alda, wave.
 ömmu, from amma, grandmother.
 önduð, from andaðr, dear.
 öndurðr = öndverðr, opposed.
 öngan, öngir, from einginn, none.
 önnur, from annarr, other.
 öpnum, from aptan, evening.
 örðla, örðlum, from óðal, property.
 örg, from argr, mean.
 örm, from armr, poor.
 örmum, from armr, arm.
 örnum, from arinn, beard.
 örvar, from ör, arrow.
 ösku, from aska, ashes.
 ösnu, from asna, she-ass.
 ötul, from atall, dire.
 öx, from ax, ear of corn.
 ó = á, river.
 ó = á, from æt, ewe.
 ól = ál, strap.
 ór = ár, oar.
 ór = ár, years.
 órr = árr, messenger.
 óss = áss, god.
 óst = ást, love.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Dictionary projected by the late Richard Cleasby, and completed, remodelled, and extended by Gudbrand Vigfusson, is now printed and published by the Delegates of the Clarendon Press, and it only remains to point out briefly the advantages which philology in general and English philology in particular will derive from a work on which so much money and such persistent labour have been expended. And first let it be said that the Delegates have well appreciated the importance of the object by undertaking such a work. It is peculiarly fitting that a great Icelandic Dictionary should be printed in England, and that the vocabulary of that noble tongue should be rendered and explained in English. It is well known that the Icelandic language, which has been preserved almost incorrupt in that remarkable island, has remained for many centuries the depository of literary treasures the common property of all the Scandinavian and Teutonic races, which would otherwise have perished, as they have perished in Norway, Denmark, Sweden, Germany, and England. There was a time when all these countries had a common mythology, when the royal race in each of them traced its descent in varying genealogies up to Odin and the gods of Asgard. Of that mythology, which may hold its own against any other that the world has seen, all memory, as a systematic whole, has vanished from the medieval literature of Teutonic Europe. With the introduction of Christianity the ancient gods had been deposed and their places assigned to devils and witches. Here and there a tradition, a popular tale, or a superstition bore testimony to what had been lost; and though in this century the skill and wisdom of the Grimms and their school have shewn the world what power of restoration and reconstruction abides in intelligent scholarship and laborious research, even the genius of the great master of that school of criticism would have lost nine-tenths of its power had not faithful Iceland preserved through the dark ages the two Eddas, which present to us in features which cannot be mistaken, and in words which cannot die, the very form and fashion of that wondrous edifice of mythology which our forefathers in the dawn of time imagined to themselves as the temple at once of their gods and of the worship due to them from all mankind on this middle earth. For man, according to their system of belief, could have no existence but for those good and stalwart divinities, who, from their abode in Asgard, were ever watchful to protect him and crush the common foes of both, the loathly race of giants, or, in other words, the chaotic natural powers. Any one, therefore, that desires to see what manner of men his forefathers were in their relation to the gods, how they conceived their theogony, how they imagined and constructed their cosmogony, must betake himself to the Eddas as illustrated by the Sagas, and he will there find ample details on all those points, while the Anglo-Saxon and Teutonic literatures only throw out vague hints and allusions. As we read Beowulf and the Traveller's Song, for instance, we meet at every step references to mythological stories and mythical events which would be utterly unintelligible were it not for the full light thrown upon them by the Icelandic literature.

But it is not in mythology alone that the Icelandic affords us help and sheds a flood of light on ways which would otherwise be obscure and darksome. From the Sagas we learn literally how our ancestors lived and moved and had their being. And here let us point out that there are Sagas of all kinds. There are the mythical Sagas, which deal of heroes, half gods and half men, who lived in the times when the belief in the preternatural prevailed, and when the human was eked out with the divine whenever man fell short of the occasion. These, too, next to the Eddas, are valuable helps by which to reconstruct that old mythological edifice, but they are not by any means the most interesting histories of their kind. Then there are the so-called historical Sagas, lives, for the most part, of the Kings of Denmark or of Norway, which sometimes exist in several recensions, the most famous of all being the Heimskringla, ascribed to Snorri Sturluson, who seems to have aimed at a critical arrangement of the whole series. Such Sagas as these, written at various periods by scribes more or less fitted for the task they had undertaken, are evidently of very varying authority, the most authentic of them being beyond doubt the Saga of Swerri, King of Norway, who flourished at the end of the 12th century. In its way it is equal to Thucydides, and of it it may be said that the king was lucky in finding such an historian, and the writer in finding such a king to chronicle. These are still more valuable than the mythical Sagas, inasmuch as they are more full of the blood and stronger with the bone and sinew of daily life. With the exception of some incredible traits and occasional legends and superstitions inseparable from the age which produced them, the Sagas of the Kings of Norway give a faithful representation of the kings and earls of the time, as they ruled the Scandinavian lands and lived as lords over their subjects, who, on their side, possessed rights of which no king or noble could deprive them. These stories are filled with adventures and expeditions, such as that of Harold Hardrada against England, or of Magnus Barelegs against Scotland and Ireland, when they called out their levies and sailed with twenty or thirty thousand men at their back, to harry and plunder in the regions of the West. Not unlike these expeditions were those undertaken to the East as Crusaders by King Sigurd of Norway and Earl Rognvald of Orkney, the accounts of which are full of daring deeds on sea and land. And yet, although these Sagas are filled with the might and glory of kings and jarls, they are thickly sown with the brave deeds and outspoken utterances of sturdy freemen, and of those allodial owners of land which belonged to them in their own right, who did not scruple, if the king wronged them, to resist him, and even to defy him to the death. Such a man was Sveinki Steinarrson, who would only answer the messengers of King Magnus Barelegs in biting proverbs when they came to demand his submission, and at last made them fly home in deep disgrace.

Besides these there is still another series of Sagas. Those relating to events in the lives of Icelanders at home and abroad. These are the most interesting, because they are the most truthful of all. The Sagas of gods and heroes are mythical, altogether out of our horizon, and deal with supernatural beings which do not breathe our common air. In those elevated mythological regions respiration is impeded, and we only half live; the gods and heroes have it too much their own way, and we are amazed rather than sympathetic. In the lives of the kings, again, it requires an effort of the imagination to raise ourselves to the level of their daily life, rough and rude as it often was. We are more at our ease than when we are witnesses of the wanderings of Odin and the feats of Thor, but still we are not quite at our ease, and feel as many a stranger must have felt in the halls of Harold Hardrada and Magnus Barelegs. It is with the every-day life of the Icelanders that we feel ourselves thoroughly at home. In the hall of the gallant Gunnar at Lithend, or with the peaceful and law-skilled Njal at Bergthorshvol, we meet men who think and act as men of noble minds and gentle hearts have ever acted, and will never cease to act so long as human nature remains the same. Gisli the generous outlaw and Snorri the worldly-wise priest, Mord Valgardson the wily traitor and Hallgerda the overbearing hateful wife, are characters true for all time, whose works and ways are but eminent examples of our common humanity, and at once arouse our sympathy or our antipathy. It is this great store of Sagas relating to daily life in an age eminently poetic and attractive that forms the wealth of the medieval vernacular literature of Iceland. It may be said to begin with Landnáma, the Doomsday-Book of the colonisation of Iceland in the 9th century, and it extends down to the Sturlunga Saga in the 14th century, ending with that, perhaps the most interesting of all the Sagas, and thus bringing down the domestic history of the island to the day when it lost its independence. No other country in Europe possesses an ancient vernacular literature to be compared with this; and if to this be added the translations and adaptations from the cycle of Romance literature, and the homilies and works of religious edification, as well as those on physical and moral science, of which Iceland possesses her full share, we shall see that, whether in a literary or in a philological point of view, no literature in Europe in the Middle Ages can compete in interest with that of Iceland. It is not certainly in formâ pauperis that she appears at the bar of the tribunal of learning.

Nor should it be forgotten that the early customs and laws of Iceland are of great importance for England. While our jurists have wearied themselves in tracing at home the origin of many of the institutions now peculiar to England, and while our legal antiquaries have fathered trial by jury, the bulwark of Englishmen's rights, on King Alfred, the source of that mode of trial, as well as of our special demurrers and other subtleties of pleading, is to be found in Iceland, where, as early as the 10th century, a form of trial almost exactly answering to that in which our juries de vicineto played a part in the 13th century, may be seen in full vigour as described in the famous trial of the Burners in Njála.

There can be little doubt that this form of trial and these legal subtleties are due in great part to a Northern influence in the Danelagh, or Scandinavianized portion of England, which at the time of the Conquest may be roughly reckoned at half the kingdom. It may be objected indeed that these institutions came in with the Normans; but unfortunately for this theory, the form of trial prevalent in Normandy was not, as in Iceland, trial by jury, but that by compurgation, or witnesses brought forward by the accused to swear that he did not do or was not capable of doing the deed laid at his door. And it is very remarkable that this trial by compurgation was also that common in Norway itself, as well as in all the Teutonic races; thus it existed in England among the Anglo-Saxons, and it came from Norway into Normandy along with the followers of Rollo, and thence it went with them into England. But in the Danelagh it found the form of trial peculiar to Iceland, and which had been developed in that island alone. This was a process not in general by compurgation, but before judges by witnesses to the fact, who made up the well-known kviðr of the Sagas. After the Conquest, in that general scramble of tongues and local institutions which took place among the native populations which the Normans had subdued, this form of trial held its own in the Danelagh, and ultimately asserted its supremacy over the compurgations both of the Saxons and the Normans, and thus we find it formally recognised as the law of the land at the end of the 13th century. 'From the analogy of the Icelandic customs,' says Mr. Vigfusson under the word kviðr, 'it can be inferred with certainty that along with the invasions of the Danes and Norsemen, the judgment by verdict was also transplanted to English ground; for the settlers of England were kith and kin to those of Iceland, carrying with them the same laws and customs.' The difference between the Scandinavian lands and England being that while the institution was never developed in Norway, and only struck faint root in the 'Sandemand' and 'nämd' of the Danish and Swedish laws, and while it languished and died out in Iceland itself with the fall of the Commonwealth towards the end of the 13th century, it grew more and more naturalised in England under the rule of the Normans, supplanting all other forms of trial between man and man, until England came to be considered the 'classical land of trial by jury.'

From whatever point of view, therefore, we consider the relations which exist between England and Iceland, whether from that of primæval affinity and a community of race, religion, and law, or from that of connexion by commerce, immigration, or conquest, we shall find the two languages and peoples so closely bound together, that whatever throws light on the beliefs, institutions, and customs of the one, must necessarily illustrate and explain those of the other. Nor should it be forgotten that in the 10th and 11th centuries the Icelanders were foremost in the history of the time. They were at once the most learned and the boldest and most adventurous of men. From Iceland they pushed on to Greenland and America, and their ships swarmed in commerce or in viking voyages on all the seas. At the courts of kings and earls, whether Norwegian, Danish, Swedish, or Anglo-Saxon, they were welcome guests, for though none were more dreaded as foes, none were more greeted as friends for their gifts of wit and song. Thus we find Egil Skallagrimsson playing a great part, both as a warrior and a skald, at the court of the Anglo-Saxon King Athelstane, whose relations with the mighty King Harold Fair-hair, the founder of the Norwegian monarchy, was such that he fostered his son Hacon the Good, who thenceforth was known in the history of the North as Hacon Athelstane's foster-child. But where such mighty men as Egil came we may be sure that many others of lesser mark followed, and that when Eric Bloodyaxe held the North of England as a fief from Athelstane, he had many Icelanders in his train. As time wore on, and the Danish invasions under Sweyn and Canute followed, there was a still further infusion of Northern life into the North of England, until, as we have seen before, the Danelagh, or that portion of England in which the Northmen lived, as they lived at home, under their own laws and customs, stretched itself over half the kingdom. We have already seen something of the effect which these had on the laws of England, and how trial by jury first rose in the Danelagh, and then spread over the whole land; but the presence of the Northern element in the country shewed itself in other ways besides those of law. The language of the North of England, and especially the dialect called Lowland Scotch, was full, and to this day is full, of words and expressions which can only be explained by the help of the Icelandic as the representative of the old Northern language spoken by the Scandinavian settlers in England. When the Streoneshalch of the Anglo-Saxons was called Whitby by the Danish invaders, and when Northworthige became Deoraby, our Derby, the new names were full of meaning to the Danes and meaningless to the old possessors. 'The town on the white cliff' was a name that spoke at once to Scandinavian sea-rovers as they neared that part of the Yorkshire coast to which they gave the name of Kliflönd or Cleveland; and in the case of Derby, 'the town of deer,' the town near the wooded hills full of beasts and game, spoke more forcibly to the feelings of a race that equalled the Anglo-Saxons in their love of vert and venison than the old name; derived from the position of the town towards the North. It is scarcely necessary to repeat the fact, now so well known, that this final by of names of places in England is the invariable sign of Scandinavian settlement and possession. It was a local termination unknown to the Anglo-Saxons, but so common among one of the Northern races, that the towns and places to which they gave it may be traced by hundreds on the map of England. Rugby is about the farthest south that we find it; but Tenby in South Wales shews that when the Northmen settled on the remotest parts of the sea-coast they left their mark there as well as in the very heart of the country.

Besides these names of places, very many modern English words shew early Northern influence; and even in Anglo-Saxon times the language was so blended with Scandinavian words that there were often double expressions for the same thing. One of the most common of these is egg, not originally an Anglo-Saxon, but a pure Scandinavian form, which, existing at first side by side with its old English equivalent, has at last thrown it entirely out, much in the same way as in certain counties the English rat has been eradicated by its Norwegian cousin. The story told by Caxton in his Eneydos throws light on the gradual progress of this word south. A traveller was at an inn at one of the Forelands, probably the South, in Kent, and asked for eggs, but was answered by the landlady that she knew no French; and it then came out that what he in London called eggs, she in Kent called 'eyren,' for in that part of England the old Anglo-Saxon word still lingered. Like traces of Scandinavian influence may be found in the form are of the verb substantive, which, in the three persons of the present plural, has expelled the old Anglo-Saxon 'syndon,' a form akin to the German 'seyn.' But perhaps the most remarkable instances of the displacement of old Anglo-Saxon words by their Scandinavian equivalents are 'law,' which, even in the time of Edgar, had begun to throw out the old Anglo-Saxon 'æw' and 'dóm,' and the two verbs to 'take' and to 'call,' which are now in every man's mouth, but which long sounded strange to English ears. For ages the Anglo-Saxon forms 'clepe' and 'nim' held their own, but now the first is only just understood in archaic poetry, while the last is utterly obsolete. The same may be asserted of 'cast,' 'same,' 'skill,' 'skin,' 'score,' and numberless others.

Enough has now been said to shew both the general and particular importance of the study of Icelandic for English philologists. Mythology, laws, customs, literature, the names of places, and even the every-day vocabulary of life cannot be thoroughly understood except by comparison with those of the North as preserved in the language and literature of Iceland. For the interest of English therefore the projection and publication of an Icelandic-English Dictionary on a large scale needs no justification, for it is simply the greatest help to English philology that has ever been undertaken and completed. When we possess an Anglo-Saxon Dictionary of the same proportions and authority we shall be better able to say what the Anglo-Saxon language really was in its earliest stage, what it afterwards became when a great infusion of Scandinavian words was thrown into it, and what it was as it degenerated into semi-Saxon after the Conquest. But while it is so important for England that she should possess this Icelandic-English Dictionary, it may easily be shewn that it is no less advantageous for the world at large that English should be the language into which the Icelandic is rendered and explained. It would, for instance, be little gain to the literary world if there had been an Icelandic-Danish or Icelandic-Norse or Icelandic-Swedish Dictionary. In any of those cases the language of a small people would have been the exponent of a language and literature which for its beauty and richness is worthy of being known to the greatest possible number of readers. From this point of view no language, not even German itself, could supply the place of English, which is already the mother-tongue of half the civilised earth, and in days to come will fill a still ampler space on the surface of the globe. In India, Australia, and, though last not least, America; wherever the English tongue is spoken and the Anglo-Saxon race has taken its stubborn root, it will be possible for scholars to avail themselves of this great treasure—a Thesaurus in every sense of the word, which, had it been explained and rendered in a Scandinavian tongue, would have remained to all but a few a sealed book.

Nor let it be for a moment supposed that any of the dialects we have named lie in reality any closer to the Icelandic than the English itself. No philologer would deny for an instant the importance of the labours of scholars in both the modern Danish and Norwegian; but those languages as vehicles of expression have suffered so much from the infusion of German words and from the adoption and assimilation of German forms and phrases, that it is often far more difficult to give the meaning of an Icelandic word or phrase in them than in English. The Swedish has remained more faithful to her old form of speech so far as the vocabulary is concerned, and her literature is the noblest of all the sister languages. Tegner and Geijer are names in poetry and history of European importance; but with all the richness of her store of words, from immemorial time Sweden has held herself aloof from the rest of the Scandinavian tongues and has remained distant, though closely cognate. Of all the kindred tongues, English, and that form of English which is called Lowland Scotch, has remained nearest in form, feeling, and often in vocabulary to the Icelandic. As for German and French, with all their richness and facility, they cannot dispute the claims of English in this particular respect; and this no doubt is owing, besides the natural and spiritual affinity existing between English and Icelandic, to the flexibility of the former tongue, which enables her to make foreign words more thoroughly her own than any other language. The Danish, the Swedish, and the German, if we may be allowed the expression, swallow many foreign words, but they seem to want the power to digest and assimilate them. They remain, so to speak, sticking in their throats for ages, while the English has long since made them part and parcel of her own flesh and blood. The courage of the Delegates of the Oxford Press in undertaking this work, and the care and time bestowed on printing it, will meet with their reward in the undoubted fact that they have not only given to the world one of the greatest helps to comparative philology that has ever appeared, but that this Dictionary is peculiarly a work to be published in England and by a great English University. Oxford now possesses a work on Northern philology which may be matched with the labours of Rask and Petersen in Denmark, with those of Munch and Keyser and Unger and Aasen in Norway, with those of Schlyter, the Nestor of Early Northern Jurisprudence, and Klemming in Sweden, and with those of Maurer, Juris Islandici peritissimus, in Germany; and in this Dictionary she holds out a sure light to every student of Northern literature.

After these general remarks we proceed to consider this particular Dictionary, and to shew that it is worthy of being the interpreter of a language so rich, and of a literature so noble. It is no less strange than true that, till very recent times, never was language worse off for helps and appliances by which it might be learnt than this very Icelandic. The works of earlier scholars, among the chief of which are the Glossary of Junius, the Thesaurus of Hickes, and Ihre's Lexicon Suiuo-Gothicum, were so antiquated and imperfect as rather to mislead than assist the student. As to more modern works, any one who has had to learn Icelandic by the feeble light afforded by Björn Halldorsson's Lexicon, published in two volumes at Copenhagen in 1814, or aided by the various Glossaries annexed to Editions of the Sagas, will feel, when he consults this Oxford Dictionary, that the days before its appearance were indeed the dark ages of Icelandic philology, and be ever grateful to the Delegates of the University Press for undertaking and publishing this sure guide. The history of the book, for books have histories just as much as men, has already been partly told in the Preface. Projected by Richard Cleasby, whose name should never be mentioned by Icelandic scholars without pious respect, it was supposed to be about to be published, when death cut short his days and arrested the progress of the work, which scholars like Grimm and Schmeller anxiously expected. No one perhaps, both by his knowledge of the Teutonic dialects and by his indefatigable love of his subject, was better fitted than Richard Cleasby to carry out his great plan of printing a Dictionary of the Icelandic language, as exhibited by quotations drawn from the prose literature of Iceland in that golden age which ended with the 14th century. At the same time Dr. Egilsson was busy with his Dictionary of the Poetic Diction of Iceland, so that between these two works no want or desire of the philologist would have been left unsupplied. Dr. Egilsson's work has been published for many years, but the Dictionary which Cleasby projected has only just seen the light. It is due in this place to declare that the heirs of the deceased, when the hand and head which should have superintended the completion of his work were cold in death, were equal to the emergency. They determined that the work should not be abandoned, and advanced a large sum of money for its completion. It has already been mentioned in the Preface that when the MS. was transmitted to England it was found to be in such an unsatisfactory condition that in the end it had to be entirely rewritten and remodelled. This most responsible duty was ultimately undertaken in the year 1866 by Mr. Gudbrand Vigfusson, then one of the first, as he is now undoubtedly the first, of Icelandic philologists.

Many years after the transmission of the MS., and when the first part of the Dictionary had been published and the second and third were far advanced towards completion, Mr. Cleasby's own materials were returned from Copenhagen and handed over to the writer. Acting on his own discretion, he determined that it would be most unfair to Mr. Vigfusson to interrupt him by new matter, which might have been of great assistance at an earlier period, but which could only have been an encumbrance to him when his labours were drawing to an end. Two boxes, which contained what may be called Mr. Cleasby's literary remains, were left unopened till the Dictionary was completed and the last sheet had gone to press. On the 25th of August last they were opened by Dr. Dasent and Mr. Vigfusson, and were found to contain three volumes in folio; in one of which were entered, in Mr. Cleasby's own hand, the principal verbs of the language, 112 in number, and filling 500 written pages*. In a second volume, 84 nouns, particles, and pronouns are contained, filling

* These verbs are auka, ætla, beiða, beita, bera, biðja, binda, bíta, bjóða, blanda, blása, bæta, bregða, brjóta, byggja, búa, deila, draga, drepa, dvelja, eiga, eyða, falla, fara, fá, fela, fella, festa, færa, ganga, göra, gefa, geta, greiða, greina, hafa, halda, hefja, hefna, hrifa, kalla, kaupa, kenna, kjósa, koma, kunna, kveða, kveðja, láta, leggja, leiða, leika, leita, líða, líta, ljósta, lúka, lýsa, mæla, mega, munu, nema, ráða, reiða, reka, rekja, renna, renna (trans.), reyna, riða, róa, ryðja, segja, selja, semja, setja, sitja, sjá, skera, skilja, skipa, skipta, skjóta, skora, slá, slíta, snúa, sækja, spenna, spretta, standa, stilla, stinga, stúga, taka, tala, tjá (tæja, týja), þykkja, varða, vaxa, vega, veita, vera, verða, verja, verpa, vilja, vinna, vita, víkja.

230 written pages*. In the third volume were entered the prepositions to the number of 44, filling 160 written pages†; added to which it appears, from pencil marks and notes, that it was the intention of the writer to enter into the volume several important verbs and substantives not to be found in the first volume. These three volumes are estimated by Mr. Vigfusson to contain about 15,000 quotations, written out at length and posted most methodically and neatly, like entries in a ledger, the references being double to book and chapter, and page and line. These volumes are written in a bold running hand, and the correctness of the spelling and accentuation of Icelandic words shews the writer's thorough mastery over the language. Besides the beautiful writing in ink, there are frequent pencil marks and marginal notes in a fine English hand. These notes often contain valuable remarks, though all in a rough state, and affording rather hints and suggestions as to the plan of the Glossary. Besides, there are frequent renderings of Icelandic words into Latin as well as English. It has been a pious duty to print specimens of these remarks on pp. cv–cviii, where will be found Cleasby's entries under the word mál, to which has been added, for purposes of comparison, the same word as it appeared in the Copenhagen transcripts based on these very materials of the lamented philologer‡.

The remainder of the Cleasby collections in the boxes consisted of slips, on each of which was entered a single Icelandic word, followed by quotations and references, for the most part in a very elementary state. About half the writing on these slips is that of Cleasby, who seems to have extended and completed the work first begun in rough by his amanuenses. In one respect these slips, rude and incomplete as they are, contrast very favourably with the Copenhagen transcripts. The quotations in them are written out in full, and the references are to chapter, page,

* These words are the nouns alín, bragð, borð, braut, dagr, efni, eyrir, fall, fang, fótr, för, garðr, grein, gripr, hlutr, hugr, hundrað, hús, höfuð, hönd, kost, lag, leið, maðr, mörk, mál, mánaðr, megin, munr, nótt, orð, penningr, ráð, sök, staðr, stafr, stokkr, stund, þing, ván, vegr, viðr, örendi, örtug: and the pronouns, adverbs, particles, and adjectives—at, en = er, en or enn (conj.), hér, heldr, ok, nema, svá, þar, þá, þó, þótt, upp, uppi; allr, annarr, einn, eingi, hann, hinn, hvárr, hvártveggja, hvern, hvárgi, hvergi, nakkvarr (= nekkverr), sá, sem, sér-hverr, þessi; fár, fullr, góðr, harðr, hár, íllr, lauss, lítill, mikill, víss.

† These prepositions are *af, at, á, án, eptir, fjar, fjarri, frá, fyrir, gagnvart, gegn, gegnum, handa, hjá, í, innan, kring, með, meðal, megin, miðil, milli millim, mótt, móttí móts, nær nærri, of, or or ór, sakar sökum, til, um, um-fram, um-hverfis, undan, undir, upp-á, upp-í, úr, útan, yfir, vegna, við,—*about 44 in 160 written pages. From pencil marks it is clear that Cleasby intended to insert the verbs bíða, finna, flytja, hlaupa, höggva, kasta, kosta, leysa, leita, skulu; as also the words land, lið, mjök. Of this volume Cleasby left a foul copy also in his own hand, being a rough outline, while the fair copy contains a more careful, though still very elementary, arrangement of his materials. All these words are entered in no order, but evidently just as each word occurred to him; but on the fly-leaves Mr. Cleasby has drawn up an alphabetical list of the words contained in each volume. From this we are enabled to see the alphabetical order he intended to follow in the Dictionary. He distinguishes short and long vowels as in this present Dictionary: but, besides, he puts ö after a (thus divorcing a and á), thus, a, á, ö, b, c . . .; þ he places after t (as in Icelandic-German Glossaries); and æ and æ he inserts respectively under a and o, as æ, œ.—G. V.

‡ In the Copenhagen transcripts important words have been omitted, no doubt from carelessness: thus there is no verb lúka and no preposition milli; lúka is in Cleasby's volume represented by 60 references, in the present Dictionary there are some 65, of course only partly the same as in Cleasby.—G. V.

and line. In another particular, the care taken by Cleasby in quotation and reference was remarkable, in cases where several Sagas are contained in one volume; such, for instance, as the Íslendinga Sögur (of 1830), he is not content to quote the collective volume, but invariably specifies the particular Saga from which the quotation is made. If this excellent rule had been observed in the Copenhagen transcripts, immense labour would have been spared to Mr. Vigfusson, who has returned to Cleasby's method, though in ignorance that he was pursuing the plan of the originator of the Dictionary. The references and quotations in these slips may be roughly estimated at 50,000. They contain the rest of the Icelandic vocables, the 240 words already mentioned as entered in the three volumes being omitted.

Even from a glance at these, his own materials, Cleasby stands out as a clear-sighted ready worker. Some time before his death he had printed a specimen of his Glossary, a portion of which will be found appended to the Memoir which follows this Introduction. So far as we can judge from these materials, it is plain that he intended to complete the work on the same scale; and it is very satisfactory to see that in one or two cases of doubtful etymology his views as now revealed are identical with those of the philologer to whom the laborious task of restoring order to his collections has devolved*. Such is the nature of the literary remains of Cleasby now restored to his native land,

* Thus, on the slip which contains the Icelandic word röst, a mile, he has entered in pencil 'rest,' shewing that he was aware of the identity between the Icelandic and the English words, though their modern senses are different. So again, under the word eingi, he has drawn up in parallel columns the various forms of the word, thus striving to arrange them methodically. Under þessi Cleasby notes a Runic form, but adds in pencil that such forms are 'not otherwise included in this Dictionary;' and then he adds 'it would appear as if the lengthened form (þessari etc.) arose from a desire to avoid so many cases terminating in þessi, þessa, etc.; perhaps annarr was taken as a model for the new form.' His subdivisions are very precise, though perhaps a little too formal and old-fashioned; thus he draws up the verbs in activæ and passivæ formæ, having probably adopted the expression from German Dictionaries. 'Tropical' is the term he uses for the 'metaphorical' of the present Dictionary, in which the example set by Liddell and Scott has been followed. Under goði, leið, þing, Cleasby has begun collecting a few historical names; thus we notice,—under leið, Hvamms-leið, Þverár-leið, Band.: under þing, Borgundar- or Borgar-þing, Fms. vi. 233; Hörnboru-þing, ix. 269; Rauma-þing, 247, Ann. 1214 (in Norway); Lambaness-þing, Dropl. (in Iceland).

The word eyrendi or þrendi, an errand, Mr. Cleasby has arranged as follows:—'1. intervallum respirandi; 2. strophæ, 3. oratio, 4. negotium.' But in an inserted slip of paper he has reconsidered the matter. 'This word,' he says, 'in its present form appears derived from ör = ör = out of, and önd, andi = breath, in the same manner as the adjective ör-endr = exanimatus (sic), with which may be compared í-endr = alive, which likewise well accords with the signification No. 1. Nos. 2 and 3 might also perhaps be possibly explained as extension of the same signification, though they may also belong to what follows. But,' Mr. Cleasby adds, 'its more frequent use in the signification of affair or business, an errand (No. 4), and especially the passage 677. 35² [see árr, line 8], leave no doubt also of its original connection with árr, a messenger, G. airus, A. S. ærend, O. H. G. arunti, which the frequent use of -indi rather than -endi also favours. It is not improbable that originally there were two distinct words, which later, after a correct feeling of their origin had been lost, became confounded.' He then says, 'erendi as head-form, and all to be altered; árr probably lengthened from arr, Goth. airus, æendi, arunti.' Whence it appears that Cleasby intended to arrange the etymology of the word afresh, and in the same way as it now stands in this Dictionary. Eyrendi, qs. ör-endi, out of breath, is an old popular, home-made Icelandic etymology, which probably originated from the well-known passage in the Edda of Thor's drinking the sea dry until he became short of his 'eyrendi.' But nevertheless it is only a false etymology, as is borne out by comparison with the form the word takes in the sister languages (A. S., O. H. G.) To put 'intervallum respirandi' together with many valuable works from his library, nearly twenty years after his Dictionary was said to have been completed. Better far would it have been had they been restored on his death. As it was, a hard fate neither permitted him to complete worthily the great work which he had sketched out in these volumes, nor suffered the threads which had fallen from his hands to be taken up by those who were competent to unravel them till many years after his decease.

From the thankless task of contemplating the short-comings of others, it is grateful to turn to the part which Mr. Vigfusson has had in this undertaking. With the most praiseworthy determination, neither turning to the right nor to the left, he has pursued his course and fulfilled his task unflinchingly for seven years, during which he has resided in Oxford. Those only who, like the writer, were acquainted with the Cleasby transcripts as they came from Copenhagen, can tell how far more meritorious and scientific the printed Dictionary is than those undigested collections. Mr. Vigfusson might have been contented with restoring order and in imparting life and spirit into the rude mass which had been handed over to him; but in reality he did much more. He has embodied into the work the materials to be found in the Poetic Dictionary of Dr. Egilsson, and he has also largely availed himself of the quotations and references in the excellent Icelandic-Norse Dictionary of Fritzner, as well as the greater part of the Glossary of Möbius. Added to which he has sought words and phrases and proverbs from very many glossaries too numerous to mention. The result has been that as the Oxford Dictionary now appears, about one-third of the references has been derived from the Cleasby transcripts, which were originally meant to illustrate, as we have already said, the golden age of prose Icelandic literature. Thus it is that we find copious quotations in them from such classical works as Njála, Grágás, and the Laxdæla and Egils Sagas. Besides these, the following list will pretty nearly exhaust the works quoted in the Cleasby collections, and from these the quotations were less copious:—the Heiðarvíga Saga, Hrafnkels Saga, Vápnfirðinga Saga, Ljósvetninga Saga, Víga-Glúms Saga, Gísla Saga, Fóstbræðra Saga, Bjarnar Saga Hitdæla-kappa, Gunnlaugs Saga, Bandamanna Saga, Grettis Saga, the Sturlunga, Árna Biskups Saga, and the Sagas of some other Bishops extending to about one-third of the first volume of the Biskupa Sögur. So far as the Laws are concerned, besides the Grágás, quotations are made from the first and part of the second volume of Norges Gamle Love and the two Kristinréttir. Besides the domestic Sagas of Iceland mentioned above, quotations and references were made from and to the Fornmanna Sögur, the Fornaldar Sögur, and from the Skuggsjá, the Snorra Edda, and the Sæmunds Edda and Skálda, so far as the prose diction was concerned. In addition to these, copious use was made of some moral and biblical treatises and paraphrases, such as Stjórn and the Homilies, now printed, but then quoted from the MSS. 226, 619, as the head sense is to take the word by the wrong end. In Iceland all notion of the true origin of eyrendi became lost; árr, a messenger, being an obsolete poetical word, unknown except in the bad sense of an imp, devil, evil spirit,—a remnant, we believe, of Biblical sentences like Matth. xxv. 41, where, in the Icelandic version, árr happens to be used, whence the bad sense clung to the word even when detached and alone.—G. V.

and 677 in the Arna-Magnaean collection, as well as the Sagas and legends contained in the MSS. Nos. 623, 645, 655, and 656 in that collection*. In what may be called the translations and adaptations from the Romance cycle, references and quotations were made from the Alexanders Saga and the Strengleikar, as well as from the Flovents Saga, the Elis Saga, the Bærings Saga, under the common head of Arn. M. 580, a MS. which has not as yet been printed. These, with a few Deeds out of Finn Jónsson's Historia Ecclesiastica, vol. i. and ii. reaching down to the year 1400, and some of the Máldagar or Agreements of various monasteries in Iceland, complete the list of works made use of in Cleasby's own materials and in the transcripts made from them at Copenhagen after his death.

That they were quotations from a great body of works belonging to the best age of Icelandic literature cannot be contested, but it is also undeniable that a mass of works of the greatest importance to the philology of the language were entirely omitted. It must ever be remembered that a Dictionary has to deal with words, and not with literature, except as affording a matrix, so to speak, from which words may be extracted. A very ignoble author may thus afford a very precious word; and a Dictionary, in the true sense of the word, must open her doors to all her children of whatever age, whether of high or low degree, alike. Based on this principle, we find that this Dictionary, besides embodying the whole vocabulary of the poetic language, includes not only very many words contained in the modern language of Iceland, but also numberless quotations from Sagas and writings altogether ignored in the Cleasby transcripts. Not to speak of particular MSS., such as the Codex Regius, the Flateyjarbók, and Morkinskinna, we shall find a whole host of works quoted, to which reference is never made in Cleasby's collections. Such are the Barlaams Saga, the Legendary Olafs Saga, the Fagrskinna, the Tristrams Saga, the Rómverja Saga, the Parcevals Saga, the Ívents Saga, the Thomas Saga Erkebiskups, the Játvardar Saga, the Karlamagnús Saga, the Þiðreks Saga, the Saga of Þorstein the son of Sidu-Hall, and several others. Besides these, the end of the second volume and the whole of the third volume of Norges Gamle Love, the Diplomatarium Norvagicum, the remaining Sagas of the Bishops, and the Runic Inscriptions have been left unnoticed in the Cleasby transcripts. If we add to this that the quotations from such standard works as Landnáma, Eyrbyggja, Vatnsdæla, the Flóamanna Saga, the Rafns Saga, the Laurentius Saga, the Arons Saga, the Kristni Saga, the Íslendingabók, the Orkneyinga Saga, the Maríu Saga, and many others were very scanty and imperfect,—and if we consider that no extracts were made from the ancient poetical literature, not even from the rhymed names of trees, fishes, birds, and nautical words, etc., in the Edda (Edda Gl.); that there were no quotations from any prose work after A.D. 1400 or 1350; nor from any work of the time of the Reformation downwards; and that no regard was had to the modern living language, which in every nation remains a true Lexicographical Cornucopia,—we must confess that a large field of unexplored country remained to cover.

* Nearly all these vellum fragments—in Cleasby's life-time mere black and torn shreds—have now been published in the Maríu Sögur and the Postula Sögur by the learned industry of C. R. Unger in Christiania.

But besides this extended field of reference and quotation, Mr. Vigfusson has done much more than improve and arrange the Cleasby transcripts. So far as can be ascertained from the printed specimen, it was Cleasby's intention to pay particular attention to the etymology of the Icelandic language, and this intention has been followed in the new Dictionary, though there was scarcely a trace of etymology in the transcripts. At the head of the account of each word its etymology and affiliation with other tongues are given, and this information will be found to be both ample and reliable. There may be, as there must always be, differences of opinion as to the etymology of certain words—for the region of etymology contains some of the darkest paths to be found in the realm of philology. But in every case the etymologies here given are scientific and reasonable, which cannot be said of most Dictionaries. In a word, they are free from that wildness and extravagance which have so often brought this branch of philology into disrepute, and on the whole are stamped with a modesty and forbearance which speak loudly for the good sense and discretion of their author. Under another point of view this Dictionary presents a feature never seen, or at least far less prominently seen in other Dictionaries. This feature may be called the literary life of important Icelandic words. It contains an exhaustive collection of Icelandic proverbs, which are, as it were, the marrow of the language; and whenever a word occurs which has played a great part in the laws or literature or history of the Northern races, the fullest account of it is given. If the reader will refer to such natural words as 'Nótt,' 'Sól,' and 'Sumar,' such law terms as 'Lyritr,' 'Mál,' 'Mót,' and 'Þing,' such mythological compounds as 'Múspell' and 'Ragna-rök,' such religious and social words as 'Baugr,' 'Bauta-steinn,' 'Goði,' and 'Lögmaðr,' and to words of reckoning, such as 'Fimmt,' 'Tigr,' 'Hundrað,' and 'Þúsund,' he will find not only an exact etymological account of each, but a whole history of the word in the various relations which it bore to the development of religious, social, and political feeling in the Icelandic Commonwealth. These instances have been taken almost at random, but what is true of them is true also of hundreds of words in this Dictionary, which in this characteristic is matchless of its kind.

And now nearly all has been said that could be said of the origin, progress, and completion of this Icelandic Dictionary. The writer, who has watched over it, so to speak, from its birth, and who has been, as it were, a second father to it ever since the untimely death of its natural parent, cannot but feel a glow of exultation as he beholds it issuing from the press in all the maturity and fulness which it at one time seemed hopeless that it could ever assume. In it the English student now possesses a key to that rich store of knowledge which the early literature of Iceland possesses. He may read the Eddas and the Sagas, which contain sources of delight and treasures of learning such as no other language but that of Iceland can furnish. But when he wanders through these fresh pastures, and his heart warms as he reads the mighty deeds of the gods and heroes, of the kings and earls and simple yeomen of the North, let him not forget to honour those to whom honour is due. The time and trouble bestowed upon this work would have been of little avail had it not found a hearty welcome from the Delegates of the Oxford Press. To those Delegates past and present, to the Bishop of Chester and Dean of Christ Church in particular, the thanks of all lovers of Northern learning are due for having so generously fostered this Icelandic Dictionary, and made it a child of this famous University.

To no one has the Dictionary been more indebted than to the Dean of Christ Church, so far as advice with respect to the English is concerned; but this acknowledgment really represents very feebly the services rendered by Dr. Liddell to the work. From the very first, not only did its general superintendence devolve on him, but for the whole time during which it was passing through the press, his assistance was invaluable, in correcting the English, in adding to the philological character of the work, and in suggesting alterations and improvements. In the autumn of 1870, indeed when the serious responsibilities of the Vice-Chancellorship were added to his other duties, Dr. Liddell was unable to bestow so much time on this labour; it then fell to Mr. Kitchin, who had also revised the sheets from the beginning, to supply his place, but to the very last every sheet as it was printed was first submitted to the Dean, then passed on with his suggestions to Mr. Kitchin, and finally settled by him with Mr. Vigfusson. For such constant and laborious care the thanks of all Icelandic scholars are due to Dr. Liddell and Mr. Kitchin, as without their supervision and advice the English portion of the work could not have attained its present excellence. In another point too the experience of the Dean of Christ Church was specially valuable; this was in the arrangement and simplification of what may be called the mechanical part of the Dictionary. The eye and hand so practised by the toil of preparing successive editions of Liddell and Scott's Greek Dictionary stood this Icelandic follower in good stead; and it may be affirmed without fear of contradiction that in no city or university in the world has the art and science of printing and publishing a Dictionary with the utmost economy of space, and at the same time with such distinct and beautiful typography, been carried to a greater pitch of perfection than at the University Press in Oxford.

To another well-known name in Oxford Mr. Vigfusson has been indebted for much valuable information and assistance. The Icelandic language is full of seafaring terms, as befits the speech of those hardy seamen who swarmed in early times on every sea in Europe. Throughout the whole literature it may be said that there is a wholesome smack of the salt sea, and mast and sail and rope and pump fill many a page in the Sagas of the North. When these sea terms had to be rendered into English there was but one in Oxford to whom Mr. Vigfusson could betake himself. This was Dr. Henry Acland, whose knowledge of the seafaring terms of England is as exact as his medical skill. To him, to Mr. Kitchin, to Mr. Coxe, and to many others in Oxford, Mr. Vigfusson desires through the writer to express his thanks for the help rendered on these and many other points, as well as for the uniform kindness with which they welcomed the stranger to Oxford, and relieved to the utmost of their power the monotony inevitably attending the execution of such work as that in which he was engaged. It will be a recompense to him for the labour which he has bestowed on this Dictionary, if it should be the means of attracting the attention of students in England to the literature of Iceland. Nor, though the wealth of the language lies in the early Sagas, is it to be supposed that the Icelandic of later days is not worthy of being known. In no portion of the world, in proportion to its population, has there been such continuous literary life as in that distant isle. Still more would he feel himself rewarded if his labours should be the means of restoring her Old Bible to Iceland. It would be for the good of all, and even for the beginner in Icelandic if he could find a sure stay to his first footsteps in the grand old Icelandic translation of the Bible by Bishop Gudbrand of the year 1584, which may compare with our own Authorised Version for purity and strength; but this version has, most unhappily for Iceland, been replaced in recent years by a paraphrastic translation, which it should be the aim of all true friends of piety and learning to discourage and disclaim. Were that pure and faithful version restored to its rightful position, the first footsteps of the student would be far more sure, and, strengthened by that literal translation, he might proceed to the Sagas and the Eddas, when he will certainly not regret the time and trouble spent in learning the language, especially when the time has been shortened and the labour lightened by the help of this Dictionary.

Nor, finally, should it be forgotten that even without its aid many Englishmen have become students of Icelandic. The late Sir Edmund Head, too early lost to these and other studies, Mr. Garnett of the British Museum, and Principal Barclay of Glasgow, were all of them in their day sound scholars in the language; Dr. Carlyle, in Edinburgh, is also well acquainted with Icelandic; and here in Oxford it will be enough to mention one living instance in the Right Hon. Robert Lowe, who, instead of burning his books, like too many of his contemporaries, when he turned his mind to politics, found time to enter into new fields of learning, and to possess them. To few Englishmen has it been granted to attain to such mastery both over the language of Iceland and the spirit of her people and literature. Nor can this Introduction be more fitly closed than by quoting an epigram by that skilful hand, and repeating in this University the greeting with which he addresses that island so smitten with snow-storms, so veiled in mist, so seamed with volcanic fire, so shaken by earthquakes as never Delos was shaken; and yet, in spite of all this, so mighty in the indomitable spirit of her sons, so subtle and far-sighted in her laws, and so free and independent for centuries against the tyranny of Norwegian kings:—

Χαῖρε καὶ ἐν νεφέλῃσι καὶ ἐν νιφάδεσσι βαρείαις καὶ πυρὶ καὶ σειμοῖς νῆσε σαλευομένη· ἐνθάδε γὰρ βασιλῆος ὑπέρβιον ἔβριν ἀλύξας δῆμος Ὑπερβορέων, πόντου ἐπ' ἔσχατιῇ, αὐτάρκη βίοντων θείων τ' ἐρεθίσματα Μουσῶν καὶ θεσμοὺς ἀγνῆς εὖρεν ἑλευθερίας.

GEORGE WEBBE DASENT.

• RICHARD CLEASBY.

RICHARD CLEASBY was born on the 30th of November in the year 1797; the son of Stephen Cleasby of Craig House in Westmoreland, descended from a Yorkshire family of that name, derived from a village in that county, the by in the termination of which is a sure proof of original Scandinavian extraction. His mother was a daughter of George John of Penzance; and during the latter portion of their lives his parents lived at No. 3, Cornwall Terrace, Regent's Park, London. Mr. Stephen Cleasby was in business in the City as a Russia broker, and was altogether in affluent circumstances. He had one daughter, Mary, afterwards Mrs. Jones; and three sons: Richard, the eldest; Anthony, of Trinity College, Cambridge, who was Third Wrangler, and in the First Class of the Classical Tripos in 1827, now Sir Anthony Cleasby, and one of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer; Stephen, a third brother, who came between the two, died in November, 1835, and the intelligence of his death called forth a remarkable letter from Richard to Anthony in December of that year. It seems to have been the determination of Mr. Stephen Cleasby that his eldest son should be associated with him in pursuits in which he took a just pride; and so it was that Richard Cleasby was neither at a Public School nor one of the Universities; but, after a sound classical education at a school in the neighbourhood of London, where he gained a love of learning which was the foundation of that philological knowledge for which he was afterwards so well known, he entered his father's counting-house at the early age of fifteen, and for a while seemed entirely devoted to commercial pursuits. The regular and industrious habits engrafted in him and both his brothers by the example of the father, whom they all loved and respected, coupled with great natural ability, would have made success certain in any sphere of life; but of him it may be said, that while his hand was on the desk in the City, his heart was away among his books in his library at home; his tastes for literary and philological knowledge grew with his growth and strengthened with his strength, until, as the drudgery of the merchant's office became irksome to him, he gave up business in the year 1824, and obtained his father's consent to reside abroad on an ample allowance, that he might devote himself entirely to his literary labours. One great advantage he had over many scholars. They are often tied and tethered, as it were, to one field, through want of means to change their abode, and so are apt to grow one-sided and undeveloped in all aspects but one. The case of Richard Cleasby was altogether different. He had both the power to roam, and the will to make his flitting from one city or country to another a means, not of idle amusement, but of advancement in sound learning and fruitful study. He was not one of those butterflies which pass from flower to flower, and gain nothing at the end of the day but death; but rather like the bee, which seems to spend its time in the same way, and yet returns to the hive laden with honey. Thus, shortly after leaving England, Richard Cleasby took up his residence at Geneva, where he stayed a while to practise himself in French, and then crossed the Alps into Italy, where he settled down at Florence, and spent more than two years in the study of the ancient languages, and of Italian, in which he acquired such mastery as both to speak and write it with fluency and elegance, as draughts of letters in Italian still remaining among his correspondence abundantly testify. About the year 1830 he recrossed the Alps, and established himself at Munich, where he worked indefatigably both at philology and philosophy under Schelling, then the great master of the transcendental school, who had caught the torch of thought as it fell from the dying hand of Kant. In philology, Massmann and Schmeller, well known as the author of the Dictionary on the Dialects of Bavaria, were his teachers; but in the first period of his residence at Munich, philosophy rather than philology seems to have been the object which he had in view, and the earlier volumes of the copious Diaries which he kept from this time to his death, and which are now before the writer of this notice, are full of notes of Schelling's lectures, who possessed a greater power of fascinating his pupils even than his great rival, Hegel himself. But though he worked faithfully and laboriously at his philosophy, that regular practical mind was not one to sink itself altogether in cobweb speculations on German metaphysics. Philology afforded him a firmer footing, and, having once taken his stand on that rock of learning, he clung to it to the end. For several years he remained abroad, deaf to the entreaties of his friends to return home, pursuing his favourite study in all parts of Germany, which he visited now on foot, and now on horseback, until there was no district to which he had not penetrated, and no dialect over which he had not attained a mastery. His acquirements in this respect were well known to the great German scholars, now dead and gone. Schmeller, his old teacher, had the greatest respect for his judgment, as is shewn by his letters among Richard Cleasby's correspondence; and Jacob Grimm told the writer, in the year 1844, that no one knew the dialects of Germany, as a whole, more profoundly than Cleasby. 'Some of us,' he said, 'know one or two dialects better, but Richard Cleasby knows them all, as his leisure and means have allowed him to traverse the country in every direction and make them his own.'

But though thus laborious in the pursuit of knowledge, it must not be supposed that Richard Cleasby was a mere bookworm. The same Diaries which attest his unwearying efforts to acquire knowledge are filled with passages which prove his keen enjoyment of society and his delight in the natural beauties of the countries in which he was from time to time a sojourner. He was never so happy as when, after months of patient study, he broke away with some congenial companion from Leipzig or Dresden, or from Munich, the capital of his choice, to take a pedestrian tour in Saxon Switzerland or in the Bavarian Tyrol. In later years, after he had settled down in Denmark, he sought relaxation from his philological labours in the smiling neighbourhood of Copenhagen, and, as he is careful to note the fall of the first winter's snow and the pinching cold of Yule, so in the early spring the first chirping of the chaffinch and the coming of the welcome swallow are not lost upon him. With literary men his acquaintance both in Germany and the North was most extensive, and it may safely said that there was no learned man in either country whom he had not seen and known. Most of his friends, both at home and abroad, have now ceased to live, but in England, it will be sufficient to mention the names of Sir John Shaw Lefevre and Henry Reeve to prove that, though he was best known to foreigners, there were wanting those among his own countrymen who yet survive to appreciate his worth. It would take volumes to exhaust the notices of men and manners and science that might be drawn from twelve thick volumes of Diaries; but the following extracts from his Diaries and from his letters will at once present a sketch of Richard Cleasby's life, and show what manner of man he was. The first years of his foreign pilgrimage must be passed over lightly. Thus, though in the years 1824, 1825, and 1826 he was in Italy and Switzerland, we only pause at the 21st of March in the last year to note his feelings on entering Rome:

I entered the city standing, and with my head uncovered, a feeble tribute to the memory of the great writers and men of all descriptions whom she nursed. I had Byron in my hand, and felt the force of his beautiful line—

“Oh Rome, my country, city of the soul!”

On the 18th of May he makes the following entry:

Wrote a very long letter to my father in answer to his, telling him that, as far as my present obligations went, I had no idea of returning to business; that I was in a few days about to leave Carlsbad by the Tyrol . . . and that I should require a letter either on Dresden or Leipzig.

This is the first mention of his many visits to Carlsbad, rendered necessary by rheumatism and an affection of the liver, which seemed to yield to no other treatment.

On the 7th of June we find him for the first time at Munich, and on the 16th at Carlsbad, consulting Dr. Leo, and confessing that the place would be much more agreeable if he could speak German. On the 22nd of July he left Carlsbad ‘without regret,’ and went by way of Prague to Dresden, where he paid due homage to the pictures, of which he seems to have been an excellent judge. On the 12th of August he left Dresden for Berlin, arriving on the 13th. He did not make a very long stay in the Prussian capital, for on the 19th he was at Leipzig, and on the 21st attended a lecture in Latin on Theocritus, by Hermann, the famous Greek Professor, of whom the entry in the Diary gives us the following glimpse:

‘Hermann lectured in Latin, in which language indeed almost the whole business of the University of Leipzig is carried on. . . . There were about 70 young men present, a sadly raffish-looking set; Hermann himself, with a stand-up collar, blue coat, and woollen winter-looking overcoat, had all the appearance of a little mechanic—a man one would expect to see at a turning-machine.’

On the 22nd he left for Dresden, where he determined to learn German, and for that purpose settled at Tharandt, about ten miles from the capital, in the house of the clergyman, a charming man named Prietsch. This was on the 29th of August, where he stayed, delighted with his master and the neighbourhood, till the 30th of February, when a letter from Florence induced him to recross the Alps. At Florence he stayed till the 5th of April, 1827; receiving there the news of his brother Anthony's success stayed a while to practise himself in French, and then crossed the Alps into Italy, where he settled down at Florence, and spent more than two years in the study of the ancient languages, and of Italian, in which he acquired such mastery as both to speak and write it with fluency and elegance, as draughts of letters in Italian still remaining among his correspondence abundantly testify. About the year 1830 he recrossed the Alps, and established himself at Munich, where he worked indefatigably both at philology and philosophy under Schelling, then the great master of the transcendental school, who had caught the torch of thought as it fell from the dying hand of Kant. In philology, Massmann and Schmeller, well known as the author of the Dictionary on the Dialects of Bavaria, were his teachers; but in the first period of his residence at Munich, philosophy rather than philology seems to have been the object which he had in view, and the earlier volumes of the copious Diaries which he kept from this time to his death, and which are now before the writer of this notice, are full of notes of Schelling's lectures, who possessed a greater power of fascinating his pupils even than his great rival, Hegel himself. But though he worked faithfully and laboriously at his philosophy, that regular practical mind was not one to sink itself altogether in cobweb speculations on German metaphysics. Philology afforded him a firmer footing, and, having once taken his stand on that rock of learning, he clung to it to the end. For several years he remained abroad, deaf to the entreaties of his friends to return home, pursuing his favourite study in all parts of Germany, which he visited now on foot, and now on horseback, until there was no district to which he had not penetrated, and no dialect over which he had not attained a mastery. His acquirements in this respect were well known to the great German scholars, now dead and gone. Schmeller, his old teacher, had the greatest respect for his judgment, as is shewn by his letters among Richard Cleasby's correspondence; and Jacob Grimm told the writer, in the year 1844, that no one knew the dialects of Germany, as a whole, more profoundly than Cleasby. 'Some of us,' he said, 'know one or two dialects better, but Richard Cleasby knows them all, as his leisure and means have allowed him to traverse the country in every direction and make them his own.'

But though thus laborious in the pursuit of knowledge, it must not be supposed that Richard Cleasby was a mere bookworm. The same Diaries which attest his unwearied efforts to acquire knowledge are filled with passages which prove his keen enjoyment of society and his delight in the natural beauties of the countries in which he was from time to time a sojourner. He was never so happy as when, after months of patient study, he broke away with some congenial companion from Leipzig or Dresden, or from Munich, the capital of his choice, to take a pedestrian tour in Saxon Switzerland or in the Bavarian Tyrol. In later years, after he had settled down in Denmark, he sought relaxation from his philological labours in the smiling neighbourhood of Copenhagen, and, as he is careful to note the fall of the first winter's snow and the pinching cold of Yule, so in the early spring the first chirping of the chaffinch and the coming of the welcome swallow are not lost upon him. With literary men his acquaintance both in Germany and the North was most extensive, and it may safely be said that there was no learned man in either country whom he had not seen and known. Most of his friends, both at home and abroad, have now ceased to live, but still, in England, it will be sufficient to mention the names of Sir John Shaw Lefevre and Henry Reeve to prove that, though he was best known to foreigners, there were not wanting those among his own countrymen who yet survive to appreciate his worth. It would take volumes to exhaust the notices of men and manners and science that might be drawn from twelve thick volumes of Diaries; but the following extracts from them and from his letters will at once present a sketch of Richard Cleasby's life, and shew what manner of man he was. The first years of his foreign pilgrimage must be passed over lightly. Thus, though in the years 1824, 1825, and 1826 he was in Italy and Switzerland, we only pause at the 21st of March in the last year to note his words on entering Rome:

'I entered the city standing, and with my head uncovered, a feeble tribute to the memory of the great writers and men of all descriptions whom she nursed. I had Byron in my hand, and felt the force of his beautiful line—

"Oh Rome, my country, city of the soul!"'

On the 18th of May he makes the following entry:

'Wrote a very long letter to my father in answer to his, telling him that, as far as my present feelings went, I had no idea of returning to business; that I was in a few days about to leave Florence for Carlsbad by the Tyrol . . . and that I should require a letter either on Dresden or Leipzig.'

This is the first mention of his many visits to Carlsbad, rendered necessary by rheumatism and an affection of the liver, which seemed to yield to no other treatment.

On the 7th of June we find him for the first time at Munich, and on the 16th at Carlsbad, consulting Dr. Leo, and confessing that the place would be much more agreeable if he could speak German. On the 22nd of July he left Carlsbad 'without regret,' and went by way of Prague to Dresden, where he paid due homage to the pictures, of which he seems to have been an excellent judge. On the 12th of August he left Dresden for Berlin, arriving on the 13th. He did not make a very long stay in the Prussian capital, for on the 19th he was at Leipzig, and on the 21st attended a lecture in Latin on Theocritus, by Hermann, the famous Greek Professor, of whom an entry in the Diary gives us the following glimpse:

'Hermann lectured in Latin, in which language indeed almost the whole business of the University of Leipzig is carried on. . . . There were about 70 young men present, a sadly raffish-looking set; Hermann himself, with a stand-up collar, blue coat, and woollen winter-looking waistcoat, had all the appearance of a little mechanic—a man one would expect to see at a turning-machine.'

On the 22nd he left for Dresden, where he determined to learn German, and for that purpose settled at Tharandt, about ten miles from the capital, in the house of the clergyman, a charming man named Prietsch. This was on the 29th of August, where he stayed, delighted with his master and the neighbourhood, till the 30th of February, when a letter from Florence induced him to recross the Alps. At Florence he stayed till the 5th of April, 1827; receiving there the news of his brother Anthony's success at Cambridge, and also a letter as to his mother's health, which induced him to return at once to England. With all his generosity, of which these Diaries contain many proofs, he was not the man to submit to imposition, and in this journey at Dijon he makes the following entry :

'Had the clerk of the diligence up before the Judge de Paix, and, for insolence relative to the mistake with my portmanteau, made him pay the expenses of my detention here, 24 francs ; got my portmanteau and went to Paris by diligence.'

On arriving in London he found that his return had been caused by a false alarm. After spending two months in London, and seeing in particular the Stafford and Grosvenor galleries, Cleasby took 'a very feeling parting from his parents, and left London for Liverpool and Dublin.' Passengers who now cross from Liverpool to Dublin and find the voyage long, may be consoled at finding that it then took 56 hours to make the passage. On the 15th of August he left Dublin for Bordeaux, where he arrived on the 19th. On the morning of the 20th he notes :

'The moment I went out I felt enamoured with the fine Southern climate. Oh, such a change from Albion's and Erin's shores !'

From Bordeaux he made his way back to Italy, visiting Naples and the South, returning to Rome for the winter. There he stayed till the 18th of March, 1828, on which day he notes :

'I left Rome with Dr. Bromfield in the carriage of a vetturino, in which were an actress, a dancer, a Bolognese mezzo-litterato, two canaries, a parcel, and at times a poodle-dog, though he was in general outside ; and proceeded to Ronciglione, where we slept, and ought to have supped, if there had been anything to eat.'

He was now on his way to Vienna, viâ Trieste, seeing Pola and its amphitheatre on the road. On the 12th of April he was in Vienna, and on the 22nd he left it for Dresden, where he arrived on the 24th, and went immediately to his old quarters with the clergyman at Tharandt ; but after staying there not quite a month, he was seized with a complicated attack of liver and rheumatism, which reduced him 'to an almost total privation of the use of his limbs, being unable to walk without a stick, in much pain and scarcely able to stand upright.' In this condition it was not wonderful that 'Carlsbad was considered essential to his recovery,' and that we find him there again on the 1st of June. On the 7th of July he left that bath, and after staying till the 30th of July in Dresden, diligently learning German, in which he now became proficient, he started for home on that day, reaching London on the 12th of October.

The object of this visit to England was to pass the winter in Edinburgh in the study of Scotch metaphysics. There he attended Sir William Hamilton's lectures, as well as those of Professor Wilson, Dr. Chalmers, and Professors Pillans, Leslie, and Ritchie. The first he considered not a very pleasing lecturer, though a man of great erudition and information. Dr. Chalmers reminded him of the pictures of Luther, and his vast powers of eloquence and argument quite enchanted him. With all these, as well as with Jeffrey, Cleasby became intimate. On the 1st of April, 1829, his work in Edinburgh was at an end, and he thus sums up his experiences :

'I cannot take leave of Edinburgh without the expression of my extreme satisfaction as to the manner in which I have passed this winter. My leading object was to attend the Moral Philosophy Class and get some insight into the Scotch philosophy and metaphysics. Wilson, though a clever and amiable man, is not, I think, exactly calculated for the Chair he fills. He has a great deal of talent, but it is of a poetical cast; his imagination seems to hold the reins. I cannot, however, but say that he made from time to time some very good and genuine observations displaying considerable insight into human nature, especially as to the passions. His appearance is very commanding, and the index of his mind; it resembles much more an Apollo than a Socrates. . . . As to Wilson's political economy, I regret to say he had neglected to get up the subject; and certainly, upon the whole, cut but a poor figure, often coming before us quite unprepared. . . . Chalmers and Leslie seem to be the great lights. . . . I consider Edinburgh a most desirable residence; it has almost all the advantages of a capital without the follies and excesses.'

On the 2nd of April he left Edinburgh with his friend Forbes, a son of Lord Medwyn, on a visit to Abbotsford. He was delighted, as so many were, with Sir Walter Scott, and left him on the 4th, copying, before he went, the following epitaph in Melrose Churchyard:

'The earth goeth on the earth glistening like gold,
The earth goeth to the earth sooner than it wold;
The earth buildeth on the earth castles and towers,
The earth sayeth to the earth, all shall be ours.'

On the 11th of April he was at his father's house in Cornwall Terrace, Regent's Park, having taken a peep at the family property in Westmoreland on his way south.

Fortified with his Scotch metaphysics, he was now ready to face German philosophy. On the 25th of April he left London, and on the 8th of May was back at Dresden and Tharandt. After studying steadily till the middle of August, on the 21st of that month he started on a tour in Poland, from which he returned on the 16th of September, highly pleased with his journey, but still more delighted to be back 'in delightful Saxony.' In Dresden he remained till the year was out, entering in his Diary on the 31st of December the following note:

'Since my return from Poland I have been diligently occupied in the study of history, especially German.'

The years 1830, 1831, and 1832 were spent for the most part by Cleasby in Germany in the earnest pursuit of knowledge. At Dresden he remained during the early part of 1830, continuing his German studies, with occasional outbreaks for recreation. Thus, on the 8th of March, he sets out for a pedestrian tour to Leipzig, distant about 55 English miles, which he and his friends accomplished in two days. On the 11th he attended a lecture in philosophy by Professor Krug, and

'Was not a little surprised to see him mount the desk in regular cavalry spurs, which rang so as he came in that I thought a dragoon had entered the room. He is a man, I suppose, towards 60 years old, his physiognomy serious, his delivery clear and impressive, perhaps a little too mannered. At eleven o'clock I heard the animated little Greek professor Hermann, likewise towards 60 years old, who also lectured in spurs and a drab great-coat. He speaks an easy clear Latin. The Agememnon of Æschylus was the subject, and he appeared to illustrate it ably. I heard Wachsmuth on Universal History, a man 40 or 45 years old: he maintained a constant smile, almost a laugh, was full of wit in his remarks, and so restless that he could scarcely remain a

at Cambridge, and also a letter as to his mother's health, which induced him to return at once to England. With all his generosity, of which these Diaries contain many proofs, he was not the man to submit to imposition, and in this journey at Dijon he makes the following entry :

'Had the clerk of the diligence up before the Judge de Paix, and, for insolence relative to the mistake with my portmanteau, made him pay the expenses of my detention here, 24 francs ; got my portmanteau and went to Paris by diligence.'

On arriving in London he found that his return had been caused by a false alarm. After spending two months in London, and seeing in particular the Stafford and Grosvenor galleries, Cleasby took 'a very feeling parting from his parents, and left London for Liverpool and Dublin.' Passengers who now cross from Liverpool to Dublin and find the voyage long, may be consoled at finding that it then took 56 hours to make the passage. On the 15th of August he left Dublin for Bordeaux, where he arrived on the 19th. On the morning of the 20th he notes :

'The moment I went out I felt enamoured with the fine Southern climate. Oh, such a change from Albion's and Erin's shores !'

From Bordeaux he made his way back to Italy, visiting Naples and the South, returning to Rome for the winter. There he stayed till the 18th of March, 1828, on which day he notes :

'I left Rome with Dr. Bromfield in the carriage of a vetturino, in which were an actress, a dancer, a Bolognese mezzo-litterato, two canaries, a parcel, and at times a poodle-dog, though he was in general outside ; and proceeded to Ronciglione, where we slept, and ought to have supped, if there had been anything to eat.'

He was now on his way to Vienna, viâ Trieste, seeing Pola and its amphitheatre on the road. On the 12th of April he was in Vienna, and on the 22nd he left it for Dresden, where he arrived on the 24th, and went immediately to his old quarters with the clergyman at Tharandt ; but after staying there not quite a month, he was seized with a complicated attack of liver and rheumatism, which reduced him 'to an almost total privation of the use of his limbs, being unable to walk without a stick, in much pain and scarcely able to stand upright.' In this condition it was not wonderful that 'Carlsbad was considered essential to his recovery,' and that we find him there again on the 1st of June. On the 7th of July he left that bath, and after staying till the 30th of July in Dresden, diligently learning German, in which he now became proficient, he started for home on that day, reaching London on the 12th of October.

The object of this visit to England was to pass the winter in Edinburgh in the study of Scotch metaphysics. There he attended Sir William Hamilton's lectures, as well as those of Professor Wilson, Dr. Chalmers, and Professors Pillans, Leslie, and Ritchie. The first he considered not a very pleasing lecturer, though a man of great erudition and information. Dr. Chalmers reminded him of the pictures of Luther, and his vast powers of eloquence and argument quite enchanted him. With all these, as well as with Jeffrey, Cleasby became intimate. On the 1st of April, 1829, his work in Edinburgh was at an end, and he thus sums up his experiences :

'I cannot take leave of Edinburgh without the expression of my extreme satisfaction as to the manner in which I have passed this winter. My leading object was to attend the Moral Philosophy Class and get some insight into the Scotch philosophy and metaphysics. Wilson, though a clever and amiable man, is not, I think, exactly calculated for the Chair he fills. He has a great deal of talent, but it is of a poetical cast; his imagination seems to hold the reins. I cannot, however, but say that he made from time to time some very good and genuine observations displaying considerable insight into human nature, especially as to the passions. His appearance is very commanding, and the index of his mind; it resembles much more an Apollo than a Socrates. . . . As to Wilson's political economy, I regret to say he had neglected to get up the subject; and certainly, upon the whole, cut but a poor figure, often coming before us quite unprepared. . . . Chalmers and Leslie seem to be the great lights. . . . I consider Edinburgh a most desirable residence; it has almost all the advantages of a capital without the follies and excesses.'

On the 2nd of April he left Edinburgh with his friend Forbes, a son of Lord Medwyn, on a visit to Abbotsford. He was delighted, as so many were, with Sir Walter Scott, and left him on the 4th, copying, before he went, the following epitaph in Melrose Churchyard:

'The earth goeth on the earth glistening like gold,
The earth goeth to the earth sooner than it wold;
The earth buildeth on the earth castles and towers,
The earth sayeth to the earth, all shall be ours.'

On the 11th of April he was at his father's house in Cornwall Terrace, Regent's Park, having taken a peep at the family property in Westmoreland on his way south.

Fortified with his Scotch metaphysics, he was now ready to face German philosophy. On the 25th of April he left London, and on the 8th of May was back at Dresden and Tharandt. After studying steadily till the middle of August, on the 21st of that month he started on a tour in Poland, from which he returned on the 16th of September, highly pleased with his journey, but still more delighted to be back 'in delightful Saxony.' In Dresden he remained till the year was out, entering in his Diary on the 31st of December the following note:

'Since my return from Poland I have been diligently occupied in the study of history, especially German.'

The years 1830, 1831, and 1832 were spent for the most part by Cleasby in Germany in the earnest pursuit of knowledge. At Dresden he remained during the early part of 1830, continuing his German studies, with occasional outbreaks for recreation. Thus, on the 8th of March, he sets out for a pedestrian tour to Leipzig, distant about 55 English miles, which he and his friends accomplished in two days. On the 11th he attended a lecture in philosophy by Professor Krug, and

'Was not a little surprised to see him mount the desk in regular cavalry spurs, which rang so as he came in that I thought a dragoon had entered the room. He is a man, I suppose, towards 60 years old, his physiognomy serious, his delivery clear and impressive, perhaps a little too mannered. At eleven o'clock I heard the animated little Greek professor Hermann, likewise towards 60 years old, who also lectured in spurs and a drab great-coat. He speaks an easy clear Latin. The Agememnon of Æschylus was the subject, and he appeared to illustrate it ably. I heard Wachsmuth on Universal History, a man 40 or 45 years old: he maintained a constant smile, almost a laugh, was full of wit in his remarks, and so restless that he could scarcely remain a minute in the same position. Had his French pronunciation been more perfect I should rather have taken him for a Frenchman than a German. After that I went and saw the "Convict," as it is called; this is an immense old hall, in which 300 or 400 poor hungry students, mostly theologians, are fed twice a day at Government cost; mid-day they get meat and vegetables, in the evening a soup, and what they call a "brei," i. e. a sort of porridge, and each a loaf about the size of an English twopenny loaf.'

On the 15th of March he was back at Dresden, by Eilwagen, where he resumed his studies. On the 5th of May his friend Professor Chalybæus took him to see Tieck and to hear him read, as he was in the habit of doing every Sunday evening to a select circle of twenty or thirty persons. On the 15th he set off with the same friend for a pedestrian tour in Saxon Switzerland, and on the 17th he quitted Dresden with much regret. He was now on his way home again, passing by Cassell, Göttingen, Brunswick, Hamburg, Bremen, and Holland, taking the steamer for London at Rotterdam, and arriving on the 14th of June. In England Cleasby stayed till the outbreak of the French Revolution in that year; as soon as it was thought safe to visit France, he crossed on the 17th of August from Brighton to Dieppe, and made his way by Rouen to Paris. There he was surprised to see no traces of any recent tumult or excitement. The only thing unusual which he seems to have remarked was the utter absence of priests in the streets. On the 17th of August he left Paris for Nancy and Strasburg, and, crossing the Rhine, arrived at Leipzig on the 4th of September, just in time to see a little riot in the streets, in which, while the troops remained inactive, the populace entered the houses of obnoxious persons and destroyed their furniture. On the 5th Cleasby notes :

'The police establishment ceased yesterday to exist, and all military interference seems to be forbidden.'

On the 6th he left Leipzig, and travelled to Munich by way of Baireuth and Nuremberg, and on the 12th he reached the Bavarian capital, which ever after he considered his head-quarters in Germany, and to which, in his latest years, he fondly imagined that he should return after he had finished his labours in the North. His first friend in Munich was the eccentric Hoffmann, who shewed him all the lions which he had not already seen, and introduced him to many literary men. By this time Cleasby was a very good German scholar, and he began at once to attend Schelling's lectures on Philosophy, and to study Old German under Massmann and Schmeller, with the last of whom he contracted a lasting friendship. On the 16th of November he notes :

'I heard yesterday Professor Schelling deliver his introductory lecture to the course he intends reading this season on the Philosophy of Mythology, in which he expressed the deepest regret at the declining state of the Gymnasia, i. e. the schools where the youths are prepared for the universities. . . . He received a treble "Lebe Hoch" on appearing, and was much moved in reading the first part of his lecture.'

On the 29th of December he writes :

'There had been a little row with a few tipsy students on Christmas Eve, which the Government foolishly made a great fuss about, and pretended to see in it a Revolution, so that the military have been ordered out, and the National Guard placed on duty at once. Several people were hacked about by the Cuirassiers, and the University ordered to be closed for two months; however, this has been countermanded. The absurd conduct of the King and Government on this occasion is enough to make any one desire a change in the order of things.'

On the 5th of January, 1831, he notes :

'I dined with a large party of Professors, who met to-day and celebrated Schelling's birthday, but "Deutscher Ernst" was too leading an ingredient in the assembly, and it went off heavily. He is 56 years old.'

On the 3rd of March the first mention occurs of Schmeller's name: 'Walked with Schmeller to Hesloe, and dined there.' On the 1st of May he does not omit to mention the annual festival of tapping the 'Bock' beer, which he found admirable at the price of a penny a pint. On the 2nd he notes :

'Schelling commenced his lectures for the summer half-year, continuing the Philosophy of Mythology. Oken did the same, but said, as only 4 or 5 had inscribed their names, he should not continue to lecture unless all those present, about 30 or 40, did the same; the subject is Natural History. The students here, many from poverty, many from shabbiness, are excessively shy about paying the fees.'

Later on in his Diaries he mentions the fact that he found Ranke and other professors at Berlin lecturing to very scanty classes.

On the 8th of May he notes that his physician, Dr. Walther, had recommended a new cure for his old ailments: this was a Kräuter-Kur, or herbal course of medicine, according to which he would have to drink, every morning before breakfast, half a pint of a decoction of dandelion and other herbs. But the end of this Kräuter-Kur and of the many Trauben and Molken-Kurs which he underwent was that he was ordered again to Carlsbad, where we find him drinking the waters on the 12th of June, on which occasion Cleasby notes: 'Found there were 13 English here.' On the 18th of July he left Carlsbad, and was back at Munich on the 24th, whence he wrote to his father, telling him that he had made up his mind to go to Greece with Thiersch; for then all the world in Bavaria, it must be remembered, were mad to go with King Otho to his new kingdom. But preparatory to this expedition, which, had it been carried out, might have changed the whole tenor of his life, Cleasby set off on the 20th of August with Constantin Höfler, a young German, for the Tyrol, Switzerland, and Upper Italy. The reason why the trip to Greece was abandoned is given in the following letter to his mother :

'ZURICH, Sept. 18th, 1831.—My dear mother, I wrote my dear father at the beginning of the month from Tyrol, expressive of my disappointment at being prevented visiting Greece, from the numerous difficulties of quarantine etc. occasioned by cholera morbus in the north and south, and plague in the east.... It was, notwithstanding, with great reluctance that I relinquished my plan...., for I confess that after the manner in which my life has been employed for some time past, I look upon a visit to classical Greece as a great desideratum. We bachelors with a literary turn of mind are in our way, like the good folks in the City,—the more we have, the more we want; but still the circle of my perambulations is nearly completed, and I look forward to setting myself down permanently by your side at no very distant period, but wish, if possible, not to have to come home in the mean time, in order to avoid those terrible parting scenes which have been more than once so painful.'

Then he goes on to describe how he had consoled his disappointment at not seeing Greece by a tour through the Tyrol, Switzerland, and the Italian Lakes, and says his address till further advices will still be Munich.

On the 27th of October he returned to his old quarters in that city, and on the 1st of November dined with Dr. Martius, Professor of Botany, where he ‘Heard the famous amateur piano-player, Mendelsohn, quite a young man . . . he executed some sonatas of Beethoven in a style perfectly wonderful.’

On the 2nd he resumed his Greek with Joseph Müller, and on the 22nd of November he notes :

‘We began to-day with Professor Schmeller to read the Anglo-Saxon version of the Gospel of St. Matthew belonging to the 7th century, to be continued every Wednesday.’

At Munich he remained hard at work till the 23rd of April, 1832, when he started with Louis Halm for a pedestrian tour to Gastein and Salzburg, returning on the 9th of May, and almost immediately set off for England, viâ Frankfort and the Rhine, where we find him, in London, on the 20th of that month. Nothing particular occurred on this visit to England, except that his horrible Kräuter-Kur followed him home, for we find him taking every morning half a pint of a mixture of dandelion, ground-ivy, and white horehound, prepared by a herbalist in Covent Garden. At the same time he procured from Dr. Bandinel, of the Bodleian Library, a copy of the Anno Lied for his friend Baron Lassberg. On the 4th of June he was off again for Germany, and on the 24th of the month was back at the everlasting Carlsbad drinking the Sprüdel. On the 29th of July his cure was over, and he was at Munich attending Schelling’s lectures. On the 15th of August Cleasby notes :

‘Schelling closed his lectures on the Philosophy of Revelation, completing, with his Philosophy of Mythology, an entire and perfect course. I gave a crown dollar (4s. 6d.) towards a serenade for him this evening.’

On the 30th of the month Cleasby set off for a lengthened tour in the Austrian Tyrol, Styria, and the Upper Engadine, from whence he returned on the 5th of October. Philosophy rather than Philology seems still his favourite study ; his Diary is full of Schelling’s lectures, and on the 29th of November he writes :

‘Schelling told me to-day, that during the troubles of the war in Germany, when there was scarcely any telling what might be the result, he had formed a plan for going to England to give instruction in the Latin language, having excogitated a method by which to teach it in half the usual time.’

On the 6th of December he notes :

‘Otto, the second son of the King of Bavaria, King of Greece, left Munich this morning to take possession of his new kingdom.’

In Munich Cleasby remained till the year turned and spring came again, and on the 22nd of April, 1833, he set off on a lengthened tour through Austria and Hungary, in which latter country he was treated with marked distinction by Graf Mailath and Pyrker the Archbishop of Erlau. Having covered an immensity of ground, he was back at Munich on the 26th of May. On the 8th of June he wrote to his father, saying that he should return to England by way of Carlsbad, Dresden, Berlin, Westphalia, and Holland. The 10th of that month was a day of leave-taking at Munich, where Cleasby had now concluded the studies which he deemed necessary to repair a neglected education. On that day he dined with his friend Martius—

‘Whose general kindness, together with the agreeable society of his excellent wife and three charming little daughters, have had a great share in causing me to leave Munich with so much regret. My excellent friend Schmeller was likewise there, a sterling character of a sort at present rare in the extreme.’

On the 19th he was again at Carlsbad, drinking steadily. There, on the 8th of July, he notes :

‘I received a packet from Andreas Schmeller of Munich, containing, as a present, his Mundarten Baierns, and other works.’

It was at this visit that he made the acquaintance of Bishop Tegner, who talked philosophy with him, and urged him to visit Sweden, and especially Vexiö, where his see was. It is evident also, from later letters to Schmeller, that the two friends had discussed this Scandinavian expedition, which, besides visiting Tegner, had in view the famous Codex Argenteus at Upsala. On the 6th of August Cleasby reached Berlin, and presented letters of introduction to Von Raumer, Professor Ehrenberg, Graff the Old German philologist, Lachmann, and Boeckh. On the 7th he heard Lachmann lecture on the Niebelungen at 8 A.M.; at 11, Ranke, Professor of History, the class consisting of only four persons besides himself. By all these celebrities, and especially by Ehrenberg, Graff, and Ranke, Cleasby was courteously received and hospitably entertained, and on the 16th left for Magdeburg, taking with him the impression that Berlin and her inhabitants, as compared with Munich and South Germany, might be described as ‘vornehm und traurig.’ From Magdeburg he passed into the Hartz country, and on the 22nd ascended the Brocken. On Sunday the 25th he was at Göttingen, where he found the students ‘very rough and unpolished in their manners,’ and the University much reduced in number, having sunk from 1500 to 850, chiefly in consequence of the political troubles of 1831. Here comes a very interesting entry in the Diary :

‘I presented Schmeller’s letter to Jacob Grimm, the librarian, and was received in the most friendly manner. He seems an excellently amiable, mild, good creature, perfectly wrapped up in his grammatical enquiries. He invited me to pass the evening with him and his brother William, who is married, and an uncommonly animated jovial fellow. They both live in the same house, and in such harmony and community that one might almost imagine the children were common property. William read us a sort of farce written in the Frankfort dialect, depicting the “malheurs” of a rich Frankfort tradesman on a holiday jaunt on Sunday. It was very droll, and he read it admirably.’

On the 27th Cleasby left Göttingen, making his way through Westphalia to the Rhine. At Bonn he called one morning on A. W. Schlegel, and found he was in his bath. In the afternoon he called again, and observed—

‘A great effeminacy of manner about him. He is a vast crier out against the system of the English Universities, seemed dissatisfied that the geologist Buckland and the like should be D.D.’s in holy orders, and that on the other hand a good classic and a tory was all that was required of a bishop; then found fault with the fixed salaries of professors, when all got alike, whether superior or not; and said professors were like players, the best went where they got the most money.'

On the 18th of September Cleasby crossed from Ostend to Dover, and arrived in London the following day, where he made the following entries in his Diary:

'Sept. 19th, 1833.—After returning yesterday evening from the Continent with a view to make some lengthened stay in England after my long peregrinations, I got on to the coach this morning at Dover, about 8 o'clock, for London, and arrived about 5 P.M. in Cornwall Terrace, where I found my father, mother, and sister in excellent health. Stephen came from the City later in the evening in his accustomed steadiness of garb, and Anthony was in Yorkshire occupied as a revising barrister. I cannot say that I approached without some misgivings the over-grown Metropolis,—the head and centre of all ceaseless toiling after wealth and endless striving after rank and consequence, the matchless emporium of smoke and fog,—for after the many quiet winters passed in philosophical research, and the tranquillity of literary pursuit in the less aspiring circles of German capitals, I feared that the rush and bustle and ambitious contendings of the great city would be sadly at variance with the tendency of my feelings and the whole tenor of my mind.'

'Oct. 12th, 1833.—Paid Mr. Henry Reeve a visit at No. 3, Well Walk, Hampstead, and presented him with a Bocksbeutel tobacco-bag. I bought for him in Pesth two Debrecziner pipes, for which he paid me my disbursement of five shillings.'

'March 1st, 1834.—Dined with Reeve at Hampstead,' and on the 4th 'wrote to Schmeller, and begged Martius would remember me to Schelling, and say I should have long ago written him if "Herr Reeve mir nicht gesagt hätte, er stände mit ihm in Briefwechsel und hätte ihm über den hiesigen Standpunkt der Philosophie benachrichtiget; ich kann nicht sagen, dass die Deutsche Schule sehr schnellen Fortschritt macht. Die Engländer begeben sich in das Transcendentale erstaunlich langsam."'

On the 22nd of March, 1834, he is in Oxford, on which day he says,

'I accompanied Mr. Thorpe (Benjamin), the Anglo-Saxon scholar, to the Clarendon Press, which is an enormous building, where various works in Greek, Latin, and English were in course of printing by hand-presses, there being no machines at present; but what most surprised me was the enormous room, I think above 200 feet long, in which nothing but Bibles and Prayer Books are printed: there seemed to be 70 or 80 men or more hard at work, and yet all they could do from morning till night is scarcely capable of meeting the demand.'

As yet he knows nothing of Icelandic, and is uncertain whether he will go to the North. Thorpe begs him if he went to Denmark to bring him a copy of 'Hervara Saga, edit. Rafen.'

On the 31st of March, 1834, he wrote a long letter in German to his friend Schmeller in Munich, giving an account of the collation of certain Latin MSS. in Oxford. In it he says:

'Vielleicht kann ich diesen Frühling die Wahlfahrt nach Scandinavien nicht machen; dann komme ich wahrscheinlich nach Carlsbad.'

However, this doubt was solved in the affirmative, for on the 14th of May he left London by steamer for Hamburg, and on the 21st he paid his first visit to Copenhagen by steamer from Travemünde through the Danish Isles, and is 'much struck by the width of the streets and spaciousness of the large open squares and the general large scale of the houses.' Here his banker, Herr Brandt, 'Informed' him 'on the 23rd that such was the abundance of wheat from the total absence of export that the price had fallen below that of rye, so that the common people were beginning to ask after wheaten bread . . . ; had not the Russian corn crops failed last season there is no saying what would have been the price of grain.'

On the 24th of May he set off for Elsinore, where he makes the following entry in his Diary, shewing how much he had yet to learn in Northern philology :

'Helsing-öer from the corner of land being in the shape of an ear; thus, formerly the Sound was called Öre-sund.'

Thence he crossed to Helsingborg in twenty-six minutes, and, landing in Sweden, at once fell into the agonies of their paper money :

'Got 100 dollar note, about £8, changed into smaller money, for which I got a bundle of shabby rags fitter in bulk to put under one's arm than into one's pocket.'

The cheapness of Swedish posting was, however, much to his mind, and with great courage he made his way to Stockholm posting, though quite ignorant of the language, and finding no one who could speak German. At Vexjö he stopped to respond to the invitation of Tegner, the great Swedish poet, whom he had met at Carlsbad the year before, and who had warmly besought him to visit him at his episcopal residence; but to his disappointment he adds,

'I found him so depressed in spirits and suffering in body that he seemed to have forgotten all his promises about Schelling's philosophy, etc., complained of being too unwell to attend the Diet at Stockholm, where he ought to have been, and let me leave Vexjö without paying me any other attention than giving me a cup of coffee and giving me one of the teachers of the gymnasium as an interpreter.'

At Stockholm Cleasby arrived on this his first visit on the 30th of May, and was much struck, as every one must be, with the beauty of the city and its lovely 'Djurgård,' or park. After making several acquaintances, whom after intimacy ripened into friends, he left on the 8th for Upsala, and admired the quaint old wooden town, the grand cathedral, and the library. In it was contained the great object of his admiration, the Gothic Gospels of Ulphilas, with which he was to be better acquainted in later years. In this his first visit he remarks that Professor Schröder, the chief librarian, though he received him with remarkable civility and attention, could not conceal his anxiety when his visitor took the Codex Argenteus in his hand. On this occasion there was no question of a collation of the manuscript. In fact, it appears from sundry entries in the Diary as to linseed, rape, corn, etc., that this Northern visit of Cleasby was as much commercial as literary. After visiting the iron districts, Cleasby returned to Stockholm and crossed the country to Norway, starting from Stockholm on the 18th of June, and reaching the Norwegian capital on the 23rd, and finding, as he crossed the frontier, how very much dearer posting was in the one country than in the other. After seeing a little of the country round Christiania, Cleasby went by steamer to Göttenburg, which he reached on the 1st of July, and having made some commercial enquiries, and seen a little of the neighbourhood, he returned to Copenhagen on the 10th of that month. Here he notes :

'After seeing the other Northern capitals I was struck with surprise at seeing Copenhagen again, which has all the solidity and traffic and shop conveniences of the largest German capitals, and is, I think, more varied and picturesque than most of them.'

On the 12th of July he took his first lesson in Danish, and set himself seriously to work to acquire the language, as well as to drink the imitation Carlsbad waters, which were now so necessary to his existence.

At Copenhagen or in its neighbourhood Cleasby remained for nearly a year, only leaving it for a month in the autumn to take a grape-cure on the Rhine; on the return from which he visited the Grimms at Cassel, when Jacob gave him a letter of introduction to Finn Magnusen, which he delivered on the 27th of October, making the following entry:

‘I delivered Grimm’s parcel to Finn Magnusen, whom I found in a very brown-studious looking room and mood; but he was very obliging. He has all the appearance of a dry “Gelehrter.”’

On the 24th of November Cleasby moved from the Hotel Royale, where he had hitherto stayed, into lodgings in the Kongens Nytorv. On the 12th of December he dined with Öhlenschläger, ‘who,’ he says, ‘at my instigation, and with some assistance from me in English, translated part of Moore’s Lallah Rookh.’ On a former occasion, in making the poet’s acquaintance, Cleasby says of him:

‘Öhlenschläger is an exceedingly jovial, open-hearted man, but with more of the sensualist in his look than of the poet of deep feeling. His conversation is light, and even almost flimsy at times. . . . He related to me that he had applied to Sir Walter Scott about publishing one of his romances in England, which had been very well received in Denmark and Germany, and wished to have £100 for the copyright; but Sir Walter wrote back to say there was no entrepreneurs for foreign novels. It was before Sir Walter’s misfortunes, and Öhlenschläger seemed to think he ought to have sent him the £100, as a sum of no kind of consequence to him and of much assistance to a fellow-poet. Such is the generous open nature of Öhlenschläger’s disposition, that I doubt not he would have done it under similar circumstances; but in this he belongs no doubt to the few, and not to the many.’

On the 25th of February, 1835, Cleasby looked out for lodgings for a month or so at Roeskilde, ‘in order to read in quietude,’ and, having found them, went thither on the 3rd of March. On the 2nd occurs the first mention of Rafn’s name in the Diary, thus:

‘Paid Mr. Rafn, the Secretary of the Nordiske Oldskrift Selskab, the fee on becoming a member, being 25 specie dollars. I was elected on the 31st of January. Rafn and Finn Magnusen were proposer and seconder.’

On the 3rd of April he returned from Roeskilde, and on the 23rd started for Lund in Scania, in Sweden, at which University he spent about a month learning Swedish, as he had already learnt Danish, and becoming intimate with the Professors Reuterdaahl, Agardh, and, though last not least, Nilson, so well known for his geological and ethnological writings. On the 10th of June Cleasby left Copenhagen for his annual visit to Carlsbad, by way of Stettin, Berlin, and Dresden, reaching it on the 15th. He had not intended to return home this year, but at the close of his cure he received such an alarming letter from his brother Anthony as to his brother Stephen’s health that he came home immediately, arriving in London on the 22nd of July. His brother was then at Malvern, being threatened with consumption. He found him better than he had expected, and, after staying in England till the 25th of September, left for Germany and Dresden, where he arrived on the 5th of October, and he went into lodgings for the winter. Early in November he heard of his brother Stephen's death, which is thus commemorated in his Diary :

'November 14th.—This is the severest day with which it has as yet pleased Providence to visit me. I lost my dear and much-loved brother Stephen. He died at Cheltenham between 7 and 8 A.M. Multis ille bonis, etc.'

Further on he describes this bereavement as 'A loss quite irreparable; a rapid decline tore him away from us, a visitor which all former circumstances of his life and of the family never led us to dream of. He himself has made a change for the better; it is his mourning relations who suffer. He was in his thirty-seventh year.'

Later, on the 15th of December, Cleasby wrote a long letter to his brother Anthony, in which he says :

'The loss of such a brother cannot be repaired, but we must seek by all possible unity and mutual approximation in desire and deed, and by clinging closely to each other, to close up as far as possible the cruel gap which the envious Giant has made in our ranks; not unreminded by what has happened of the uncertainty of the period during which it may be granted to us to range in the already diminished space of fraternal love and friendship.'

Whether it were that the death of his brother gave his mind a more serious turn, it is plain from the Diary that Richard Cleasby studied divinity and associated with clergymen during this winter. His friends, the Hof-Prediger Franke and the Ober-Hof-Prediger Ammon, were those whose society he most sought in Dresden; nor did he forget to visit his old friend Pastor Prietsch at Tharandt. On the 3rd of January, 1836, he left Dresden for Leipzig, where he had many friends; but the religious turn of his mind is best shewn by the following little entry on the 11th of January :

'Took a young man of the name of Stegman to assist me in an attentive reading of the Bible.'

Old Professor Hermann was still alive, and Cleasby gave him a memorandum which Thiersch had left with him at Munich in 1833. At Leipzig he stayed engaged in his theological studies till the 18th of May, when he went leisurely home by Jena, the Odenwald, Heidelberg, the Rhine, and the Moselle. Treves and Luxemburg were duly visited, and on the 8th of June he crossed to Dover. In the winter his brother Anthony had married Miss Fawkes. On the 3rd of July is the following entry :

'Dr. Lappenberg of Hamburg, Brönsted of Copenhagen, and the Librarian Falkenstein of Dresden dined with us, and met Reeve.'

On the 27th of August Cleasby left Dover for Ostend. On the 19th of September we find him at Munich :

'This town, to which so many agreeable recollections are attached, as well as regards the acquisition of knowledge as that of sincere friends.'

Here he went into lodgings in the house of his friend Professor Martius, and on the 14th of October began reading Mæso-Gothic with his friend Professor Schmeller. At Munich he remained till May, 1837, hard at work; and early in that month took a tour in the Bavarian Tyrol, during which he stayed at Kreuth to take a whey (molken) cure. On the 3rd of July he returned to Munich, 'very well satisfied with the effects of the molken.' On the 2nd of September he set off with his friend Schmeller on a tour through Switzerland, returning on the 24th of the month, and making good use of the journey in studying the dialects. He now resumed his Old German and Philological studies, but a report of his mother's ill-health took him to England for a fortnight. He found his mother better than he expected, and on the 5th of December he was back at Munich. The winter of 1837-38 now passed away, and the spring found him still at work. We only pause to note that on the 27th of January, 1838, he writes, 'Was at a ball at Staatsrath Maurer's,' Konrad Maurer's father, and Schmeller's trusty friend. Then he again drinks the molken at Kreuth, climbs the Bavarian hills, and returns to England in July. On the 13th he was present at a dinner in Guildhall, to congratulate the Queen on her coronation. There he sees

'The Duke de Némours, a nice, amiable-looking, blonde youth; Soult, a broad, tough-looking warrior, a good deal knocked about, but still hale and firm. Sebastiani's countenance is intelligent. Esterhazy, Schwartzberg, Stroganoff, Putbus, Spanish and Portuguese grandees, etc., excited less interest, but the splendid diamonds on the sabre of the first-mentioned could not escape notice. Wellington, Peel, Melbourne, Sir J. Graham, Stanley, little Lord John Russell, and the massive pair, O'Connell and Hume, with numerous other contrasts, sat peaceably and apparently well-pleased side by side.'

After a visit to the patrimonial acres in Westmoreland he departed for Germany on the 25th of August, and reached Munich by way of Augsburg and Nuremberg, carrying with him some facsimiles of Old German MSS. for his friend Schmeller. He still takes lessons in Greek and German philology. In these studies he again passed the winter of 1838-39.

On the 13th of February he wrote to his father to say that he thought of leaving Munich about the end of the month by Leipzig to Hamburg, and thence to Denmark and St. Petersburg. On the 1st of March, 1839, stands an entry like many others in these volumes:

'Made Joseph Müller, Orientalist, a present of a hundred gulden, to forward the publication of a work he is preparing for the press.'

Now he buys a britschka for his journey, and extra strong shoes and boots, acquires statistical works on Russia, packs up his books and sends them to Cotta to take care of, and departs on the 2nd on his travels. At Leipzig, on the 6th of March, he gave Dr. Cruzius a hundred dollars, fifty in his own name, and fifty in that of his friend Vipan, 'For the five exiled Göttingen professors. Two of the seven, Ewald and Gervinus, forego their shares.'

Three of the five were his friends Dahlmann and Jacob and William Grimm.

At Halle, of which he says, 'A more narrow-cornering, dirty, wretched-built town I scarcely recollect,' he saw Professor Leo, 'Who, though terribly pugnacious and bitterly persecuting with his pen, is a lively and very agreeable person in conversation. We immediately got on to the subject of his Anglo-Saxon Lesbuch, when he quite agreed to my suggestions as to certain passages.'

On the 8th he was at Berlin, struck more than ever with its imposing appearance—‘Munich is quite a village to it.’ His friend Raumer was in Italy, but he saw Graff, and found him, ‘as usual, complaining, but he brightened up when I talked of consulting him as to some passages in Ottfried’s Christ.’ Then follows the discussion, at the end of which Graff remarked that the passages were the more difficult because they were nearly all of them ἀπαξ λεγόμενα. On the 12th he reached Hamburg, and, after seeing Lappenberg, went on slowly to Copenhagen, lingering in Schleswig and Jutland more than a month, and accurately observing the dialects and the people. On the 4th of May he reached the Danish capital, and called on his friends. On the 6th he went with Professor Thiele to the Museum of Sculpture and saw Thorwaldsen, who had been absent in Italy on his former visits :

‘Among the sculptures there is his own bust, by himself, some twenty years younger, a magnificent countenance. On expressing my strong desire to see him, Thiele was so kind as to go in to him and announce me, though he had let his servant know he was not very well this morning ; and I believe I should not have seen him but for my being able to speak Danish, for immediately on my going in he received me most cordially, and his first words were, “Fæg hörer at de taler Dansk.” I passed about three-quarters of an hour with him alone, and I never recollect having more enjoyment in the same time. There is earnestness and great depth of expression in his countenance, with great placidness and serenity. He talked little, but moved slowly about in his silk dressing-gown, letting fall every now and then a remark either voluntarily or in answer to some observation of mine upon a picture or a piece of sculpture. He seemed, as far as I could judge, to be very favourably impressed as to England, and dwelt especially upon the merits of one or two pictures he has, painted by Englishmen. . . . He said he wished to see England, but feared, from the great number of very kind friends he had there, he should be detained too long, and his years reminded him that his time was growing short. I saw in his studio numerous works, partly now in execution, especially reliefs of the “Triumph of Alexander,” and a colossal and most noble figure, just modelled, representing Ocean, which is to form part of a group. . . . I left him with the impression of having been in the company of a great man. There is something half sacred about his still, pensive manner, with his white hair and figure a little bent forward.’

Cleasby had now made up his mind more clearly as to his Northern journey. On the same day he wrote to his father that he was going first to Stockholm, and then to Upsala, to stay there fourteen days. After that he should go to Petersburg, by way of Riga and Reval. On the 7th of May he left Copenhagen by steamer for Malmoe in Scania. From Malmoe he posted in his carriage to Calmar, and thence to Stockholm, which he reached on the 16th. Cleasby was now better fitted to enjoy Sweden than on his former visit in 1834. He knew the language, and had letters to many literary men from his friends in Copenhagen. Dr. Hildebrand, the archivarius and great Anglo-Saxon numismatist, took him to the Library, and put him in the way of obtaining some facsimiles and transcripts from Icelandic Sagas of the Romance cycle for Lady Charlotte Guest. Having put this in train, Cleasby turned to the main object of his visit—the inspection and collation of the Codex Argenteus at Upsala. He was fortunate in finding his friend Dr. Reuterdahl, of Lund, in Stockholm, who gave him a letter to the chief librarian Schröder, a man who was known, for his difficulty of access, by the nickname of ‘Ingalunda ;’ ‘Certainly not,’ or ‘Not by any means,’ that being the word with which he usually met applicants who desired to avail themselves of the literary treasures under his care. Fortified with this letter, Cleasby presented himself at Upsala on the 19th of May, and saw Schröder, whom he calls 'an obliging, friendly man.' He made no objection to the collation of the MS. with Gabelentz and Löbe's edition, and, while he went to Stockholm, confided Cleasby to the care of the under-librarian Afzelius, with whom he spent the morning of the 20th in trying to find his 'Colleague Fant, who was said to have the key of the glass case in which the Codex Argenteus is kept. It looked as if I should have to wait Schröder's return from Stockholm.'

So the 20th was lost, but on the 21st Cleasby notes :

'This morning I was rejoiced to find that the valuable key was found. . . . I accordingly accompanied Afzelius to the Library, but partly because it was more convenient for him to sit at home than come to the Library and sit there while I was at work, and partly, as he said, because he could there ask me questions as to English, which language he was reading and desirous of my help, he determined upon taking out the Codex and carrying it to his house, where I was to have leave to work before and after noon ; and indeed I began at 10 o'clock A.M. and remained till 1 o'clock, and then went again at 4 and remained till 7.'

Next day, and every day, he worked at the Codex, but on the 22nd he saw Geijer the historian, who had been absent on his former visit ; and this is his account of a very remarkable man :

'Passed the evening with Geijer, who speaks a little English. There is nothing striking in his outward appearance or manner ; nor is he especially conversant, though, after being with him a time, he becomes more so ; but there is a good deal of inward thought in him, and perceptible in his countenance.'

At Upsala he also saw Tullberg, a young Sanskrit Professor. He complained of the little interest taken in Sanskrit by the students, but this, he added,

'Was less to be wondered at, for he had seen Bopp with not more than half-a-dozen hearers at Berlin, Rosen with only four or five in London, and Wilson with not more in Oxford.'

On the 28th Cleasby notes :

'Spent the evening with Geijer ; as pleasant a one as I ever passed. He was in good humour, and communicative, which is not always the case, and is a man decidedly of the first order. On my departure he presented me with a monthly periodical, which he edits, containing a notice of Lockhart's Life of Walter Scott, and I think there has scarcely anywhere been set a more interesting and touching monument to the memory of this good and great man. . . . Besides being perhaps the first historian of the day, Geijer is a poet of a very high order, and a musical composer of great merit.'

On the 1st of June Cleasby's labours on the Codex Argenteus were concluded for the present, and he speaks in high praise of the text as he found it in the edition of Gabelentz and Löbe, though it is now superseded by Professor Upström's splendid facsimile edition. On the same day he received a number of letters of introduction from his father to influential persons in Russia. On his return to Stockholm he saw the magnificent collection of Northern antiquities in the royal palace, and especially the Anglo-Saxon coins and those some of the rarest ; a proof, if any were wanting, that among the Northern Vikings there must have been many Swedes who, on their return from the West, buried their treasure in the earth.

On the 4th of June Cleasby left Stockholm for Finland and Russia, on which journey we forbear to dwell, except to say that wherever he went he saw everything and every person of any importance to whom he could get access. On the 19th of July he returned to Stockholm. There he found the facsimiles for Lady Charlotte Guest were ready; and having inspected the Icelandic MSS. in the Royal Library, and made the acquaintance of Mr. George Stephens, the translator of Frithiof's Saga, then resident in Stockholm and an ardent collector of popular tales, but now Professor at Copenhagen, and a great authority on Runes, one of the most obliging and learned of men, he hired a servant for a journey to Norway, and set out on his expedition by way of Upsala. His object was, as we know, to complete his collation of the Codex Argenteus—but alas! the fates were against him, as the following entry in his Diary shews:

'July 29th, 1839.—I left Stockholm for Upsala. The librarian, Schröder, was not there,—the second one, Afzelius, took me to the library, but could not find the key, precisely as on the last occasion, and I am inclined to think the reason was that he would not find it, which prevented my looking at the first 16 pages of the Codex Argenteus, which I wished to do, to see the state of the leaves, and also p. 118, to see how the Latin Gloss was written at the beginning of Luke's Evangelium.'

Thence he passed through the Swedish mining districts, and, passing on to Dalecarlia, was delighted, as all must be, with the primitive people who dwell along the banks of the two Dal Elvs and round the shores of the lovely Siljan Lake. Crossing the fells called the Kjölen or Keel, he came down by Veradal on Drontheim, very nearly by the same route which St. Olaf took when he went to meet his death at Sticklastad. At Drontheim he passed several pleasant days with Rector Bugge, and left it on the 10th of August for the South, crossing the Dovre Fjeld, and then turning up by Romsdale and Gudbrandsdale to Christiania, which he reached on the 16th, and thought not to be compared to Drontheim. Having renewed his acquaintance with Keyser, Professor of History in the University there, he left Christiania on the 18th for Gottenburg, by way of Drammen, following the route which he had taken in 1834. On the 23rd he reached Copenhagen, and thus reviews his Swedish and Russian tour:

'I thus finished, very much to my satisfaction, a most agreeable and, at the same time, instructive tour, in which I learned much as to the state of the countries I visited, which, doubtless, is not to be acquired from books. I was everywhere received with great kindness, and all facilities were given me for the attainment of the objects I had in view, with the sole exception of Petersburg, where I cannot but allow that the literary introductions I had were but coldly responded to.'

After a little tour among the smaller Danish Isles, during which he was amazed at the prosperity and ease of the peasantry, he left Copenhagen on the 9th of September for England, meaning to go by steamer from Hamburg, but the vessel having broken down at the mouth of the Elbe, he left her, and went home by Lower Germany and Friesland, and embarked at Ostend on the 13th of that month for London. His return had been hastened by the intelligence of his father's failing health; but this, it seems, was a false alarm. After seeing friends, writing to Dr. Bowring, and giving him an account of the Romance literature in Icelandic in the Royal Library at Stockholm, and enclosing the facsimiles which Lady Charlotte Guest was anxious to have for her edition of the Mabinogion, he sailed on the 16th of October for Rotterdam, and, making the acquaintance of Dr. Bosworth, then chaplain in that city, and editor of an Anglo-Saxon Dictionary, he returned through Holland and Friesland, stopping on his way at Deventer to see the great Frisian scholar, Dr. Halbertsma :

'A somewhat rigid-looking man, who seemed, in silence, keeping his wife—quite a model of a Dutch frow—and his two children company. . . . We talked upon Frisian. . . . He is about a work on the language, a complete Dictionary, which I encouraged him to make haste with. He has no doubt collected such stores as no other man possesses ; but I am in general a little afraid of the speculative nature of his philology, for on my asking him what he considered was the derivation of the name of the Frisians, he said it was the same word as Persians,—the p becomes f, etc., etc., but I asked him for some connecting links.'

Stopping at Hamburg to see Lappenberg the historian, and at Kiel to have a chat with his good friend Chalybæus, who had taught him Speculative Theology at Dresden, and was now professor in the same branch of study in the Holstein University, he passed on by Eckernförde and Schleswig into that land of the Angeln of which so much was heard in the Schleswig-Holstein controversy, which in those happy days had hardly begun to lift its horrid head. At Gelting, in the heart of that district, Cleasby stayed a few days, and made up his mind that 'The basis of the population of Angeln is Danish, mixed, no doubt, a great deal with German settlers, but whose language was obliged to give way to the predominant one ; . . . the names of the towns, localities, and inhabitants seem a sufficient proof of this, and I am much inclined to doubt whether the name of the country, "Angle," has anything to do with the Angles who went over to England with the Saxons, and who sat at the mouth of the Saal or the Elbe, according to the testimony of Ptolemy.'

On the 29th of October he was back at Copenhagen, and was busy greeting his old friends in that capital, among whom were Professor Molbech, Finn Magnusen, Öhlenschläger the poet, Brönsted, and Rafn.

Now his Diary is full of his arrangements for taking lodgings, hiring and buying furniture, preparatory to a lengthened stay in Copenhagen. He was gradually settling down more and more to Northern studies. Just about this time the old King of Denmark, Frederick VI, died after a long reign, and was succeeded by his son, Christian VIII ; but Cleasby is more occupied with his books than the royal death and funeral, on which occasion the population of Copenhagen 'evinced a curiosity and love of sight-seeing' which 'astonished' him :

'I took the Danes,' he says, 'for a more staid and solid people ; high and low, lords and servants, cookmaids and shoeblacks, all have been up to see these sights—that is, the lying-in-state.'

But Cleasby cares for none of these things. On the 5th of November, nearly a month before the old king died, comes the following entry in his Diary :—'4 degrees heat,'—he was always most exact in noting the state of the weather,—'began to read Icelandic—Sæmund's Edda—with a native Icelander, Giselsen.' This is the first mention of Konrad Gislason, and for some time longer he is to Cleasby in his Diaries 'Giselsen,' and not Gislason. With him he reads four times a week. But he was soon to feel that reading Icelandic in those days was to read a language without a Dictionary, for that of Björn Haldorsen was little help. On the 10th of January, 1840, comes this entry:—‘Talked with Rafn about editing an Icelandic Dictionary.’ And on the 12th of February we find him writing to his friend Kemble, the well-known Anglo-Saxon scholar:

‘I am up to my chin in Islandicis, and doing what I can to promote the preparation of a good sound old Northern Lexicon, and so get this, for so late in the 19th century, unaccountable and most scandalous blank filled up in this grand branch of Teutonic development; but there are many difficulties.’

And to Arfwedson, the librarian at Stockholm, on the 26th of February in Danish, which he wrote fluently, if not always correctly:

‘Jeg har tilbragt vinteren her totus in Islandicis og havde næsten i sinn at tage op til dem igjen i sommer.’

On the 18th of April stands, ‘Bought four reams of paper, 5 dalers per ream.’ And on the 5th, ‘Sent three reams of paper to Konrad Giselsen in preparation for the Dictionary of the Icelandic Language I intend to edit.’ And on the 22nd, ‘Paid Konrad Giselsen this day 8 daler for instruction this month, and 50 daler for work to be undertaken by him, exclusively for me, relative to an Icelandic Dictionary I intend to publish. The 50 daler are regarded as a payment at the rate of 50 daler per month, from this day till the 1st of June, and he gave me an acknowledgment in writing.’

And accordingly we find among Cleasby’s papers the following:

‘Jeg har faaet i dag Kjöbenhavn den 22 April 1840 af Herr Richard Cleasby Halvtresindstve Rigsbank Daler Dansk, som belønning indtil den förste dag of næstkommende Juni, for et Arbed jeg har paataget mig at udrætte udelukkende for hans Brug, angaaende en Ord-bog han agter at give ud paa Islandsk og et eller flere andre sprog.—KONRAD GISLASON.’

After which entry follow similar acknowledgments from Mr. Gislason and Cleasby’s other Icelandic amanuenses, down to that sad entry of the 6th of September, 1847, when he paid Mr. Fridriksson 20 dollars.

Having started his amanuensis, Cleasby left for home on the same day for a month, again passing through Hanover and Holland, and taking the steamer from Antwerp to London, where he arrived on the 4th of May, and found all well at home. On his way he had met his father, and assisted him on some business matters which had rendered his presence in Antwerp necessary. After visiting friends, and especially Kemble, then settled at Addlestone, under the Hog’s Back, Cleasby left for Copenhagen on the 24th of May, loaded as usual with letters from his literary friends in England to scholars abroad. He again took the route by Rotterdam and Lower Germany, and reached Hamburgh on the 29th, whence he wrote the following letter to his old friend Schmeller, on the subject of his Icelandic undertaking:

‘Bei meiner Rückkehr (nach Copenhagen) wand ich mich mit vielem Fleiss dem Isländischen zu, und fand bald den grossen Mangel der ohne Zweifel die Hauptursache ist des versäumten Studiums dieser herrlichen Sprache, nämlich der Mangel an Hilfsmitteln, und besonders an einem brauchbaren Lexicon; denn Björn Haldorson’s ist so gut wie keiner. Da ich nun mich über die Aussicht für die Zukunft erkundigte, fand ich, dass zwei Männer in Iceland hatten seit 20 Jahren, der eine an ein poetisches, der andere an ein prosaisches Wörterbuch gearbeitet; und begierig ungefähr den Zustand ihrer Arbeit zu kennen, liess ich nach Iceland schreiben, und erfuhr, dass das poetische Werk so vorwärts geschritten war, dass die letzte Revision und das Fertigmachen zum Druck in ungefähr einem Jahr geschehen könnten, falls der Verfasser nicht zu sehr mit anderer Arbeit pressirt wurde, welches ich auch erfuhr wie ich früher in Correspondenz mit der "Old Nordisches Selskabet"—unter uns gesagt für ihren wahren Zweck auf das anpassendste constituirt und administirt was sich nur denken kann—gewesen war. Da ich nun nicht wünschte diesem zu nahe zu treten, so besuchte ich den Secretair Rafn, und durch dringende Zumuthung und das Versprechen von Unterstützung wenn nothwendig, bewog ich ihn an den Verfasser zu schreiben ihm ein passendes Honorar anzubieten, und den Druck des Werkes entweder für die Gesellschaft allein oder in Verbindung mit mir zu übernehmen; so dass ich hoffe, dass wir bald um diese ohne Zweifel treffliche Arbeit werden reicher werden, was, wenn ich nicht sehr entschieden dazwischen getreten wäre, wäre Gott weiss wie lange unvollendet geblieben.

'Was das prosaische Werk angeht*, so scheint es als eine Art Thesaurus angelegt zu sein, von grossem Umfang, umfassend alte und neue Sprach-Dialecte, Redensarten, u. s. w.; aber ohne alle Ansicht der Vollendung in der Lebenszeit des Verfassers, der schon etwas bei Jahren ist, und ein bisschen der Sache müde zu sein scheint, und es nicht unwahrscheinlich erst in seinem Testament jemanden zur Ausgabe übermachen wird. Diese aber ist eine so weite Aussicht, und die Sache scheint mir so dringend Noth zu thun, dass ich mich beinahe entschlossen habe mich selbst an ein prosaisches Lexicon zu machen; nicht Thesaurus-artig, aber von brauchbarem Umfange, und die alte Skandinavische Sprache umfassend von den frühesten Denkmälern bis ungefähr zum A. D. 1400, mit Englischer Übersetzung; ein Werk dessen Schwierigkeiten, wenn ordentlich vollführt und dem jetzigen philologischen Standpunkt entsprechend, mir nicht verborgen ist; aber mit redlichen Willen und fleissiger Arbeit ich doch denke in ungefähr 3 Jahren zu Stande gebracht werden könnte; und es würde mir eine grosse Befriedigung gewähren, wenn ich für die vielen, sehr vielen, lehrreichen, beherzigenden, angenehmen Stunden die ich, und besonders in München, zugebracht habe in dem Studium der Germanischen Sprachkunde, dadurch meine Dankbarkeit an den Tag zu legen, dass ich eben diesem Studium einen gründlichen und nützlichen Beitrag brächte, und einen Mangel abhülfe der gewiss mit jedem Jahr muss mehr und mehr gefühlt werden, und ich bitte Sie, sagen Sie mir in einem recht baldigen Briefe ihre Meinung über dieses mein Beginnen.'

On the 1st of June he was back at Copenhagen, and

'Found Giselsen employed with his friend — in writing out Icelandic words for my Dictionary, but not much above half way through the alphabet, he having found the job much longer than he expected.'

On the 3rd of that month he 'Went into splendidly roomy lodgings, No. 14, Gammel Strand, . . . three fine front rooms, a back room and entrance hall, furnished, and with attendance, for 22 dollars a month.' And on the 4th he 'bought two reams more of paper for 10 dollars, and sent them to Giselsen.' And, again, on the 22nd, 'bought another ream of paper, and paid 5 dollars 3 marks for it, and sent it to Giselsen.'

On the 24th he wrote as follows to Kemble:

'Finn Magnusen has read your treatise on Anglo-Saxon Runes, and trembled; he says you have been sadly hard upon him; I told him you were an earnest "Forscher." I am hard at work upon the foundations of the edifice I told you at Addlestone I had an intention of rearing. I find them, I rather regret to say, covering a good deal more ground than I expected, but hope they will prove all the better for the superstructure; every day convinces me more and more that "Zeit und Muth," on a large scale, will be among the leadingly necessary implements.'

On the same day he wrote thus to Mr. John Shaw Lefevre:

'My dear Sir,—The making your personal acquaintance during my last stay in London was a source of great gratification to me; to find a man like yourself, under so heavy a weight of public business, seeking recreation in the extension of the wide range of your knowledge, is not less attractive than rare, and truly encouraging. The circumstance of your having directed your attention to these parts made it the more interesting to me, for a native partiality for the Scandinavian North,—a sort, as it were, of veneration for the primitivi Penates,—has induced me to devote much time to its vulgar, as well as its more archaic literature, and which will, I hope, end in enabling me to facilitate to my countrymen the acquirement of the knowledge of a great store of interesting matter—interesting not only in itself, but also as intimately bound up with the early manners, institutions, and destinies of our own ancestry.’

* This refers to the Lexicographical collection of the late Dr. Hallgrim Scheving, of Bessestad in Iceland.

On the same day we find the following entry: ‘Received a most agreeable letter from my valued friend Schmeller in Munich.’ This was in answer to his letter of the 29th of May, and the following is an extract from it:

‘Wie sehr uns alle das was Sie zum Besten der Nordischen Sprachkunde zu thun im Begriffe sind, erfreue, brauche ich Ihnen nicht erst zu sagen. Dacht’ ich doch oft wie Schade es wäre, wenn so viel beharrlicher, gründlicher, wahrhaft ausserordentlicher Fleiss, auf diesen noch so vernachlässigten Theil des Sprachstudiums, verwendet, nicht auch zur Hülfe, zum Segen für andere ausschlagen sollte. Schon die edelmüthige Dazwischenkunft durch die Sie die endliche Herausgabe des poetischen Wörterbuchs fördern, wird Ihnen den bleibenden Dank aller Freunde der Germanischen Zunge sichern. Noch weit mehr aber wird dieses der Fall seyn, wenn Sie dem tagtäglich bitterer gefühlten Bedürfnissen nach einem wahrhaft brauchbaren prosaischen Handlexicon der älteren Nordsprache entgegen zu kommen, Ihre eigene Kraft und Mühe daran setzen. Die Aufgabe ist freylich kein Kinderspiel. Es wollen dazu nicht blos alle bereits vorhandenen Vorarbeiten, sondern auch sämtliche sowohl gedruckte als handschriftliche Literaturstücke durchgelesen und methodisch excerptiert seyn. Hiefür aber werden Sie hülfreiche Amanuensen finden. Einem klaren, umsichtigen, ausharrenden Geiste wird keine Aufgabe zu schwer. Sollten mehr als die drei Jahre darüber hingehen, so würde mich die Liebe zu demselben Zweig des Wissens dafür trösten müssen, so lange ohne das hertzlich gewünschte Wiedersehen zu seyn.

‘Bleiben Sie eingedenk

‘Ihres

‘J. A. SCHMELLER.’

On the 3rd of July he enters:

‘Yesterday Etatsraad Rafn brought me from Egilsson in Iceland a specimen of his poetical Icelandic Dictionary, which had been from negligence lying at the Icelandic merchant Knutsen’s 14 days. . . . As a ship was to sail again for Iceland to-morrow morning, by which it was to be returned to Egilsson, I had only an hour or two to look through it. I told Rafn I thought the work upon the whole good, but that it appeared to me much too prolix, there being also an immense number of prose words. I therefore recommended his writing back, that (1st) he should leave out all the prose words which occurred with no other meaning than what they have in prose: (2nd) that he should not give more than one citation in full for one meaning of a word, but at all events only mention the place where it besides occurred in that sense: (3rd) that he should not regard the modern language as his norm, which he seemed to have done at the beginning of letters, giving a list of how the words were written or pronounced, hodiernis vocabulis. If this was done it might shorten the work a third.’

On the 31st of July we find him paying Gislason 40 dollars ‘for his labours for the month of July relating to the Icelandic Dictionary which I propose editing;’ and a day or two afterwards he writes to his sister that he thinks of leaving Copenhagen for Carlsbad on the 17th of August, and being back about the end of September. On the 18th of August he started for a little walking excursion with a young Icelandic ‘Candidat Juris,’ Pjeturson, taking with them the Hrafnkels Saga to read on the way—the first mention of Pjeturson, one of his amanuenses, whom he took the next year with him to Germany and England, and with whom he was in constant communication for some years. All this time the Dictionary was progressing, and on the 11th of August he 'paid the book-binder Lerche 3 dollars 1 mark and 8 sk. for bookbinding and pasteboard cases for letters for my Icelandic Dictionary.' On the 17th he paid Gislason 40 dollars 'as remuneration for the month of August,' and left for Carlsbad by the steamer for Travemünde. He took the way by Schwerin, Perleburg, and Spandau to Berlin, which he reached on the 20th, and called on Lachmann and Graff, to consult with them as to his Dictionary, finding the latter ill in bed, and then set off for Leipzig, where he arrived on the 21st, and on the 22nd was at Carlsbad, where he began drinking and bathing with great assiduity, swallowing as much as three glasses of the Mühlbrunn and eight of the Sprüdel a day, and amusing himself with translating the Hrafnkels Saga into English. Here he notes that on the 28th of August he received a letter from Schmeller, and on the 10th of September was gladdened by 'a visit from my good friend Schmeller from Munich, whom I was glad to see again in good health and spirits, with a scarcely perceptible alteration externally, and none internally; the subject of the Icelandic Dictionary was, of course, largely discussed, and we walked after dinner to Eich.'

The next two days were occupied in shewing Schmeller the lions of the place and neighbourhood, and here he notes :

'It was interesting too with Schmeller to remark his attention to dialects in any villages we passed through yesterday or to-day, and the result was that quite up to and in Carlsbad, and I suppose one may say the whole valley of the Eger up to the Saxon border, the dialect is decidedly that of the Upper Palatinate (Ober-Pfalz) and not Saxon.'

On the 12th Schmeller departed for Toeplitz, and on the 23rd Cleasby took leave of his English friends at that bath, among whom were Mr. Senior and Mr. Charles Villiers 'of Corn-Law fame,' and left Carlsbad, which he had often before visited, with the following remarks :

'I cannot notice my departure from Carlsbad without saying that, upon the whole, I was more delighted with the various beauties of its environs than on any former occasion; nor was I otherwise than satisfied with the immediate operation of the waters—God give that the permanent effect may not be less beneficial.'

On the 24th he wrote in German from Leipzig to Gislason at Copenhagen, telling him that he should be home in about eight days, and nothing doubting that he had been 'recht fleissig.' As for himself, he had not been 'unthätig,' 'und sehe mit grossem Vergnügen einem arbeitsamen Winter entgegen.' On the 26th he was at Cassell, where the brothers Grimm then were, having, as is well known, been expelled for their political opinions, by the King of Hanover, from Göttingen. Here he tells us :

'I immediately paid Jacob Grimm a visit, whom I rejoiced to find looking, as I thought, younger and better than when I saw him six years ago; he received me most cordially: and in the afternoon I went again and passed two or three hours with him, discussing various points as to the old Scandinavian language.'

On the 27th he writes :

'I passed the forenoon with Jacob Grimm, entering widely into detail as to a variety of orthographical points relating to the old Scandinavian language, and found him most amiably communicative. In the afternoon I returned and took a walk with him, and enjoyed from an eminence on the brink of the town a beautiful prospect.'

On the 28th he says :

'Passed the forenoon again with Jacob Grimm, and dined with, I suppose I must say, William Grimm, as he is the married man with the family to whom the ménage more especially belongs, though Jacob lives with them.'

And on the 29th :

'I had again the satisfaction of passing my forenoon with J. Grimm, and witnessing his acuteness, his fulness of candour, and voidness of all pedantry and pretentiousness. I shewed him what I had done at Upsala touching the Codex Argenteus, with which he seemed much pleased, and noted some points. . . . I took tea with the Grimms in the evening, and, after a couple of hours' chat, left them reluctantly at 9 o'clock. Nothing can be more delightful than the truly fraternal relation in which these brothers live to one another; one soul seems to animate them both, although their individual characters appear to me not a little subjectively different. All their concerns seem to be mutual, one can scarcely perceive to which of them the ménage, the wife, the children, belong; indeed she, when speaking of them both, makes use of the expression "meine Männer," which in truth, in a circle where there could be a shadow of doubt as to its purity, would sound somewhat equivocal. Jacob seems to have got over the Göttingen affair better than his brother; he is more hasty, but once fairly expectorated, is more easily reconciled again; it seems to prey more on William, who altogether seems to me to have less elasticity, less vigour of character; he broods more over it; indeed, though doubtless an excellently sterling man, yet there seems to me a little more sarcasm and more form about him than about his brother, in whom there is really something of infantine simplicity of manner. I do not know that I ever passed three or four days more to my mind than those at Cassell, where so much of the instructive was mixed with the agreeable.'

On the 6th of October he was back at Copenhagen, returning by Hanover, Hamburg, and Kiel; and the day after his return there is the usual entry :

'Paid K. Gislason 40 dollars as remuneration for the month of September.'

On the 14th of October we find the following entry :

'A meeting took place this evening at Etatsraad Rafn's rooms, at 7 o'clock, and ended at 10 o'clock, where himself, Etatsraad Finn Magnusen, Registrator Petersen, the two Arna Magnæan stipendiaries Sivertsen and Gislason, and myself were present, to discuss the orthographical rules to be observed in the edition of the Islendinga Sögur about to be published by the Old Nordisk Selskabet, wherein it was agreed to adhere to the orthography observed by Rask in the 7th vol. of the Fornmanna Sögur, excepting that,—1st, that the circumflex $\hat{\ }$ over the class of words hanum, vapn, varum, sva, etc., should be exchanged for an acute accent, the same as that used for the long a in general; 2nd, that the two diphthongs œ and ø should be distinguished from one another; 3rd, that where the root has a double consonant this should always be written, even where a third consonant follows—as "brennda" from at brenna, not "brenda," and "allt" from allr, not "alt," etc.; 4th, that the acute accent shall be discontinued over the a, i, and u in -ang, -ing, and -ung.'

On the 16th of the same month he writes in Danish to Finn Magnusen, as head of the Arna Magnæan Commission :

'Jeg har allerede opholdt mig i nogen Tid i Kjöbenhavn og have i Sind at blive her endnu i længere Tid, for at kunne affatte en Ordbog i det gamle islandske Sprog. For ret at kunne udføre dette Arbed, er det mig magtpaaliggende med Hensyn især til Retskrivning at have Membraner ved Haanden til fornödent Eftersyn. Jeg tager mig derfor den ærbødige Frihed at bede den Kongelige Commission om gunstig Tilladelse til at erholde til Laans og Afbenyttelse i Huset af de Arna Magnæanske Membraner fra en til to ad Gangen, da jeg skal være ansvarlig for samme (og) drage den yderste Omhu for deres vedbørlige Conservation medens de ere i min Værge.'

The purport of this letter being to obtain from the Commission the loan, in his lodgings, of certain MSS. in that splendid collection, which he proposed to borrow two or three at a time. It need scarcely be said that the Commission complied with the foreigner's request with a liberality which, alas! seldom or never has its parallel in English libraries.

On the 9th of November he writes: 'P. G. Thorsen, under-librarian of the University Library, drank tea with me: a nice unassuming young man.' This is the Thorsen now so well known as the writer on Runic stones. On the 30th he paid Gislason 40 dollars for the month of November, and 'the carpenter Möhring for a polished wooden stand for the boxes containing my Icelandic Alphabet, 8 dollars.'

On the 22nd of December we find the following entry: 'Thank God the shortest day is past. Took Gislason and his friend Petersen to dine with me at the Skydeban, and we drank a toast to Balder and one to Iceland's prosperity.'

On the 31st of December he paid Gislason 40 dollars for the month of December.

The winter of 1841 was very cold in the North; the Sound was frozen over, so that sledges came over from Sweden. On the 13th of February Cleasby writes:

'Yesterday evening a movement took place in the ice in the Sound, so that to-day a ship or two came up to Copenhagen—after its having been firmly frozen over between five and six weeks.'

A few days before he had remarked 'the first solitary song of a chaffinch.' On the 18th of March Cleasby received a polite letter from the Arna Magnæan Commission, accompanied by a present of several works printed at their expense.

'The signatures to the letter were Örsted, Wehrlauff, Engletoft, F. Magnusen, Rafn, and Kolderup Rosenvinge, all of whom I thanked.'

On the 21st he writes: 'Dined with Kolderup Rosenvinge; met the Stifts-Probst Tryge and the young Professor of Philosophy, Martensen, and had a famous dose of philosopho-theological discussion interestingly conducted. The Probst rather accusing Protestantism of a degree of one-sidedness, and thinking that there were points in Catholicism which it might adopt; and that perhaps a sort of union might be accomplished. The philosopher, on the contrary, arguing correctly that irenic attempts were altogether vain with the Catholic Church.'

During these months the payments of 40 dollars to Gislason continue, and on the 29th Cleasby writes:

'On the evening of the 29th of March, in consequence of a note from Etatsraad Rafn of the 25th inst., a meeting took place at his dwelling, consisting of the same persons as that on the 14th of October, which see; viz. Finn Magnusen, Professor Petersen, Gislason, Sivertsen, Rafn, and myself, on the subject of the orthography to be used in the edition of Islendinga Saga about to be edited by the Old Nordisk Selskabet. The letter from Rafn was accompanied with two proof-sheets of Ari Frodi's Islendinga-book, and the commencement of the Landnama-book, to my utter astonishment printed totally at variance with the agreement which had been entered into at the meeting of the 14th of October; the Islendinga-book especially, after no kind of system whatever, with the retention of certain forms and rejection of others of the MS., of the most capricious nature; which is the more blameworthy, as a precise copy of this MS. is to be given which will satisfy every want of learned research; and the other might have been printed in conformity with the rest of the series, for the better understanding of the other class of readers. But even in the Landnama-book the circumflex over words like hanum, var, vapn, etc., is retained; the accent also over ang, ing, and ung, and with the greatest difficulty the separation of æ and æ has been retained; but it appears uncertain if it will be done in future volumes. I, at the meeting, expressed my greatest dissatisfaction at this variance from the agreement entered into, and Petersen, Gislason and myself, and F. Magnusen after hearing my grounds, decidedly acquiesced in the abolition of the circumflex over hánnum, vár, svá, and the like; also that of the ' over ang, ing, and ung, and in the separation of æ and æ. Sivertsen was almost silent on the subject, but, even reckoning him with Rafn, we were four against two; notwithstanding which Rafn has refused to make any alteration. As to æ and æ, he seemed at one time to admit the chief objection to separating them was their incapacity to correctly distinguish them, and indeed shewed throughout the whole argument the greatest ignorance of the first principles of the language.'

On the 27th of April he wrote thus to Kemble :

'I have been toiling very hard in the Icelandic field all this winter, and am not a little exhausted. The further I get from the beginning the further I seem to be from the end; but in time I suppose the perspective will change. I expect to leave this in a fortnight or three weeks for Germany, and shall, I think, very likely be in England towards the beginning of July.'

On the same day he wrote to Mr. John Shaw Lefevre :

'As to the Icelandic Opus, I have been toiling incessantly since I wrote you last, grubbing away at the foundations; but it is a slow operation; indeed the further I get from the beginning the more I think the end seems to recede; a quality which, at ten or twelve years of age, one would doubtless have hailed with joy in a plum-cake, but which in a pursuit like the one in question is not so attractive; one is involuntarily reminded of the Will o' the Wisp. To judge from the basement, of which portions here and there are beginning to be visible above the ground, I fear the edifice in point of extent much exceeds what I at first expected.'

Then, passing to politics, that being the time of the Turco-Egyptian quarrel with France, he says :

'Denmark partakes, with the whole world besides, of that disquieting sensation of envy occasioned by the unrivalled position England occupies, her gigantic power, and her unexampled successes; the radiance which surrounds her is too bright for a weak vision; eyes of such a class are unable to even gaze at it without smarting, and this annoys their possessor. I cannot, however, doubt that every sensible and impartial man must be rejoiced at the result of the whole affair—a bold and straightforward, decided course crowned with success—veering and truckling and cunning by-views completely put to the rout! If the French would however but have seen their error, and acknowledged it, and profited by it for the future, the injury sustained by them would have been comparatively trifling; but instead of this they seek to mask the truth, and attempt to glory in their error; still further deceiving themselves with, as it were, the celebration of a sort of triumph in their fortification of Paris; a measure which I regard as the commencement of a new epoch for that unstable nation, and one decidedly of "decadence." The Icelandic labours have exhausted me not a little, and I am looking to my departure from this place in two or three weeks for Germany.'

On the 4th of May he notes :

'Paid N. C. Möller for bookbinding nine dollars; seven dollars of it for the two books for my Icelandic Dictionary.'

On the 10th he says :

'Universal fast-day. The only day in the year that one has no new bread; the bakers getting a night's rest.'

On the 17th of May he left Copenhagen for Lubeck, but before he went he sent

‘the cases in which my Dictionary-papers stand to Serena d’Acqueria,’ an intimate friend.

On this occasion Cleasby took with him as his companion a young Icelfander, Brynjolfr Pjeturson, whom he occasionally calls Petersen in the Danish form, a law-student, and clerk in the Chamber of Accounts, in whom he seems to have taken great interest, and to whom he did the honours, and shewed the lions of Germany and England. The travellers we need scarcely say were bound for Carlsbad, and took the route by Dessau, Halle, Leipzig, and Dresden, staying in each sufficient time to examine and admire their natural and artistic beauties. On the 26th of May they reached Carlsbad, where the cure as usual consisted in bathing and drinking for a month or more. In the midst of it, on the 12th of June, Cleasby wrote to his father to say that he should ‘come home about that day month, and bring a young Icelfander with him, but not remain more than a fortnight.’ On the 1st of July the travellers left Carlsbad, Cleasby for Toeplitz, to remain three weeks, and take twenty baths in the Neu-Bad, and then to pay a visit to his friend Count Thun-Hohenstein, at his magnificent seat at Tetschen, while the Icelfander went on to Prague. Both these objects having been accomplished, they met again at Prague, where Cleasby, by the introduction of Count Thun, made the acquaintance of the Slavonic historians Palacsky and Saffaric, who received him most kindly and imparted very valuable statistics as to the various Slavonic nationalities and their languages. Before he left Toeplitz, as he was wandering through Prince Clary’s woods, he came upon some of that grand seigneur’s foresters, who told him an anecdote which illustrates very well the relation then existing between landlord and peasant :

‘Prince Clary had,’ he says, ‘in the heat of sport trespassed with his dogs on a piece of oats belonging to one of the peasants here, which the peasant warmly resented ; and though the Prince immediately expressed his readiness to make the damage good, and even more, still continued turbulent and offensive ; upon which one of these foresters, to use his own term, “hat ihn ordentlich geblescht,” a provincialism expressing about the same as geprügelt ; and the other related how the peasant was for two days hardly able to move from the damage he received ; he added further, “it was not to be supposed that the Prince would have his sport spoiled for a little bit of oats.”’

From Prague Cleasby and Pjeturson went to Frankfort, and going down the Rhine to Rotterdam, took the steamer for London, which they reached on the 5th of August. While he had been absent his only sister, Mary, had been married to Mr. Jones of the Crown Office.

On the 13th of August we find the following entry :

‘Dined at Dolly’s with Pjeturson, whose praise of the beefsteak was unbounded.’

And on the 22nd :

‘Walked with Pjeturson over Primrose Hill, up on to Hampstead Heath. He was charmed with the situation and views.’

On another day he took his Icelandic friend a walk round part of Streatham by Beulah Spa, and through Norwood home again to Brixton Hill—‘a most charming ramble;' and on another by steamer up to Richmond, and then ascended the hill, though they were disappointed in the view owing to the clouds and rain.

On the 8th of September the two friends set off by Great Western Railway to Oxford, or rather to Steventon, accomplishing the remaining 10 miles by coach. They were up betimes, starting at 6 A.M., and reaching the University by a quarter past 9. There they saw the Bodleian, the fine hall at Christ Church, and many gardens.

'Nothing struck us upon the whole more than the back of Magdalen College, the beautiful green open space between a newly-erected Gothic side and an elder one in plain modern style, with the park on one side abounding in the grandest elms and plenty of deer, and the walks and meadows on the other.'

The same day they left by coach for Cheltenham, and on the following returned by rail from Birmingham to London.

The next ten days of September were devoted to shewing Pjeturson the wonders of London, and among others the British Museum, where, among the Icelandic MSS., he notes No. 11,127 of the Additional MSS., 'a very middling copy of Sturlunga;' but this is a mistake, as the MS. in question contains the best text of the Saga known. On the 22nd Cleasby saw Pjeturson safe on board the 'Countess of Lonsdale' steamer for Hamburg, and on taking leave of him says he was

'In all respects satisfied with his conduct during the whole of his sojourn both abroad and at home in my company, in which time he sorted the whole of the words which I wrote into the two large volumes for the Icelandic Dictionary, and also carefully went through Njáll and took a list of all the words contained therein.'

On the 22nd he 'penned a circular for his father, to be sent round to his connexion, informing them of his intending to retire from business on the 29th inst.' On the 6th of October comes the following entry:

'Visited Copeland,' the famous surgeon, 'who, after my laying open to him my complaint, told me what I knew and had long felt, that my nervous system was in a very deranged state, and that it would take a long course of medicine to get it right again; and began by ordering me sarsaparilla twice a day, with a little potash and manna.'

On the 15th he saw Copeland again, who now ordered him blue-pill and colocynth, and on the 26th calomel and senna and magnesia. But these were minor evils. On the 28th his mother was seized with paralysis, which deprived her of speech, and though she rallied a little and lingered through the month of November, she died on the 8th of December, surrounded by her family, by whom she was most tenderly loved.

'We all deplored in tears the loss of an excellent wife, a most affectionate mother, and a good, kind, and upright woman. She was born,' he adds, 'on the 25th of July, 1768, and therefore in her 74th year.'

On the 14th she was buried in the burial-ground of the old church of St. Marylebone.

'Where,' says her son, 'my poor mother's remains were placed upon those of my brother Stephen, who had been deposited there in 1835 in a dry vault which runs under the street. In addition to my present severe bereavement, I was not a little affected at seeing for the first time the coffin of my lamented brother, who was so cruelly snatched away from us in the very prime of life.'

All this time Copeland was treating him, and at last, seeing his prescriptions did little good, advised him to consult a physician. This he accordingly did, and called in Dr. Seymour, who agreed with Copeland that 'a singing in his head and a numbness in his left leg would end in paralysis,' but completely differed with him as to the means to be taken to arrest the evil.

'He said immediate bleeding was necessary, and ordered me to lose 12 or 14 oz. of blood from the arm; placed in prospect my losing some more by cupping next week, and gave hopes of a final complete recovery. I was bled, and lost about 19 oz. from the right arm.'

After such drastic treatment it is not surprising that Cleasby's entries in his Diaries for the rest of December, 1841, and the first ten days of January, 1842, are limited to notices of the weather and the frost, which was very hard for England. On the 10th of that month he wrote to Pjeturson, announcing his mother's death and the probability of his longer stay in England. As to Icelandic, he writes:

'Hvad De sigte med Hensyn til Sivertsens Reise til Sverge er meget tilfredsstillende, thi hvis Byttet er ikke saa stort dog er det af megen Vigtighed at vide at man har, hvad der kan have; om de to fortrinlige Codices of Riddersagaerne i Stockholm viste Jeg alrede, thi da jeg ophold mig i denne By i 1839, lod jeg gjøre nogle Fac-similes derfra for en Dame i Wallis der udgiver visse Keltiske Sagaer som behandle de samme gjenstande; fra den vigtige Pergament Codex imperial Octav angaaende gudelige Ting og deslige haaber jeg i det mindste nogen Berigelse for Sproget, og vist ikke liden Fornöielse vil det skaffe mig at nærmere omtale og undersøge disse Ting med vor Ven Gislason og Dem. Det glædede mig meget at höre so gode Efterretninger om Gislasons Helbred og saa at han var beskæftigt ved at conferere Haandskrifterne af Snorro; denne Anmodning paa Selskabets Side viser dets Önske at den nye Udgave skal nöde en udvalgt Text; der er blott tilbage at önske at det vilde höre paa ham ved Hensyn til Orthographien; naar han er færdig dermed, i Fald der ikke proponeres ham noget andet umiddelbart Arbeide, (sic) vil det være mig kjær at han igjen tager fat paa Læsning of nogle utrykkede Haandskrifter som Gretli, visse Måldagar etc. hvilke vi omtalte förend jeg forlod Kjöbenhavn, og jeg bede Dem at berette mig om naar han tænker omtrent at være i Stand til at begynde, og jeg vil arrangere Penge-remiser igjennem Brandt eller noget andet Hus indtil jeg selv viser mig igjen i Kjöbenhavn i Foraaret.'

After this letter, shewing the liveliest interest in Icelandic study, it is sad to read that on the 24th of January Dr. Seymour ordered him to be cupped. 'Mr. Watkins, of Saville Row, took 15 oz. of blood from the back of my neck, at half-past 9 o'clock P.M.' A little later Copeland calls and orders his left leg to be bandaged with 'eight yards of middle-breadth stocking-roller.'

On the 16th of February it is a relief to find Cleasby leaving London to visit his friend Robertson, Rector of Shorwell in the Isle of Wight. On the 28th he returns to town, delighted with his excursion, and writes as follows to Pjeturson:

'Det glædede mig at höre at vor Ven Gislason for færdig med Snorro, og som jeg anseer det for hans Fordeel at han beskæftiges paa Regjerings vei, finder jeg mig gjerne i det Tab af en Deel af hans Tienster, og dess lettere som De tilbyder Deres, og siger at De vil gaae ham til Haande og anvende nogle Timer dagligen; og jeg svarer ikke andet end at jeg önsker at De ville begge begynde saa umiddelbart som det er Dem behageligt, vælgende af de Haandskrifter som jeg nævnde i mit sidste (brev) i saadan Orden son det kan synes Dem raadligst; paa Excerpten-maade kan det ikke være nödvendigt at jeg siger Dem noget, ti De kenne desangaaende nöiaktigt min Plan og mine Önske. Jeg haaber inden omtrent en Maaned at vore i Stand til at skrive og sige Dem temmeligt bestemt Tiden naar De kan vente at see mig igjen ibland mine Danske Venner. Jeg har beskæftiget mig meget, saa meget som Helbredden har tilladt det, med Snorro og Fornmanna-Sögur ogsaa med Islendinga (sögur) og Vatnsdæla og jeg haaber förend jeg tager bort igjen jeg skal have sorgfältigt gjennemgaet en anseelig Portion.'

We now find him, in better health, dining with Henry Reeve at 16 Chester Square, and running down to see Kemble at Addlestone. On the 5th of April he set off with his father on an expedition to look at the family property in Westmoreland, which, what with leases and repairs and tythe squabbles, seems to have been a perpetual trouble. While Richard Cleasby was enquiring into all these things and struggling to reduce them to order, his father spent the morning of the 13th of April

'Searching the registers at the clergyman's, the result of which was its appearing probable that our family came over to Stainmoor from Yorkshire somewhat before the middle of the seventeenth century.'

On the same day they left Westmoreland to return home, starting from Brough in a post-chaise, and 'crossing bleak Stainmoor, with a shower of hail to conduct us out of Westmoreland.' That night they got to Barnard's Castle, and the next day, about four miles from Darlington, on the Yorkshire side of the Tees, 'saw the little village of Cleasby, with its beautiful land running down to the river.'

On the 15th of April they were back in town again. For the next few days he buys presents of cutlery and creature comforts for his friends at Copenhagen, and on the 23rd he embarked in the 'Neptune' for Hamburg. In that city he stayed a day, leaving it on the 24th, and reaching Copenhagen on the 27th. As soon as he returned he resumed his labour at the Dictionary, and his two amanuenses are now Pjeturson and Gislason, who each receive twenty dollars a month for four hours' work a-day. On the 3rd of May he begins taking his 'juice of spring herbs' again; and on the 18th left Copenhagen for Germany, making before leaving the following entry in his Diary:

'Left Copenhagen. Left with Gislason Preposition-book, also Verb-book; also the two books, one of Njall etc. begun by Pjeturson, the other my own extracts*; also fourteen bundles, A to G of the slips with words upon them; also paid him twenty dollars for this month of May, and was not a little surprised, when offering to pay him for June, to find that he talked of going to Sweden for the summer, which, and his remaining silent upon up to this moment, appeared very strange, and quite contrary to what I thought was understood between us. . . . I sent to Captain Röder a deal case containing my two folio books containing skeleton of the Icelandic Dictionary †.'

He was now bound for Marienbad, as a change from Carlsbad. On the 25th of May he reached his 'beloved Munich,' and immediately called on the Martius's, 'my cherished friends, whom I found in even increased domestic felicity, from the delightful promise with which the daughters have grown or are growing up.' Next he called on Schmeller and Professor Joseph Müller, who told him all that had passed since he was last there; 'almost all, I regret to say, of a most discouraging nature; especially the arbitrary conduct of the king as respects the "Academie der Wissenschaften," in arrogating to himself the appointment of the President, who had hitherto always been chosen by the Society; and other acts of violence.' He called on his old friend, Minist.-Rath Holler, 'who almost shed tears at seeing me.' Accompanied by Schmeller he then saw the new Library, and was shocked to find it built mostly of fir, and about to be heated by hot air. On the 28th he left Munich for Ratisbon, 'pleased in the extreme with his very hearty reception by his old friends,' and 'longing for the time when the situation of' his 'Scandinavian labours will allow of' his 'transplanting his head-quarters to Munich: though,' he adds, 'the clearness and intenseness of the light of the Munich atmosphere has always struck me, yet I think I never remarked it so strongly, compared with other places where I have resided, as during this visit.' Not for him clearly was Munich, even under the 'violent' Ludwig, what it was to Gustavus Adolphus—'a golden saddle on an ass's back.'

* These two books have not as yet been returned from Copenhagen.

† These two 'skeleton books' are probably the same as those which Cleasby elsewhere calls 'control books;' they have not been returned from Copenhagen.

On the 30th he reached Marienbad, just across the Austrian frontier. There for a month he drinks the Kreutz-Brumm, and bathes in the Schlammbad, that is to say, 'in a bath of turf or peat, of about hasty-pudding consistency, at a heat of from twenty-eight to twenty-nine degrees, in which one remains half an hour; and then, to cleanse oneself, enters a simple water-bath for about ten minutes.' In these pursuits he remained till the 30th of June, when he left Marienbad, 'upon the whole very well pleased with' his 'residence there.' During his stay he found time to think of Icelandic, and to write the following letter to Pjeturson:

'1842, June 10th.—Jeg bad Gislason, i Tilfældet at han skulde komme til at reise at overlevere Dem de Verb & Præposition-Register saa vel som de to Lister af excerptirte Ord hvilke jeg efterlod med ham, at bede Dem at fortsætte Læsning hvor hann skulde have ophørt; ok Hensynet med dette Brev er at forandre denne Bestemmelse og tilkjendegive Dem mit Önske at De saa snart som De faae det skal begynde at læse de to Binde af Sturlunga og fortsætte denne Læsning med Anvendelsen af saa megen Tid som De kann disponere over indtil min Tilbagekomst, hvilken vill finde Sted i den første Hælfte af næste Maaned. De ere allerede tilstrækkeligt i Besiddelsen af min Plan med Hensyn til den Maade paa hvilken denne Læsning skal udføres og jeg bede Dem at anvende stor Precision og ikke overgaa Ord som er ikke endnu tagne: hvor de i de trykte Bind finde steder over deres Rigtighed de tvivle, kann De gjøre en liden Bemærkning, og saa kann jeg sammenligne dem med Haandskriftene i Kjöbenhavn; i det Tilfælde Gislason er bleven i Byen vær saa god at sige ham, at jeg önsker Sturlunga læst for (fra?) de Haandskrifter om hvilke vi talte, jeg haaber siltigst mitte (sic) næsten Maanedes (sic) at træffe dem vel og munter i Kjöbenhavn og forbliver imidlertid, deres hengivne Ven

'RICHARD CLEASBY.'

On leaving Marienbad he went to Leipzig, and thence to Berlin, which he reached on the 2nd of July. He called immediately on Jacob Grimm, who gave him letters to Kosegarten in Greifswald, and to Professor Hegel, son of the philosopher, in Rostock. After a chat with Raumer, he called on his old instructor Schelling, who had been called to Berlin by the king, 'whom,' Cleasby says, 'I found looking on the whole lively and well. He said he had every reason to be satisfied here, but still I thought did not seem able altogether to relinquish the idea of returning to Munich, and I thought this seemed still more the case with his wife and daughters.' On the 3rd he left Berlin for the Mark and Pomerania, visiting Greifswald and Stralsund, with both of which he was much pleased. At the latter he saw outside the Rathhaus door 'a flat stone in form of a grave-stone, on which Charles XII slept during the siege of Stralsund in 1715; a hard bed enough.' On the 8th of July he left for Ystad in Sweden by steamer, and in fifteen hours from Stralsund was back in Copenhagen, where he found, to his great satisfaction, that Gislason had remained working during his absence, and not gone to Sweden at all. The next day he paid him 40 dollars for the month of June. He now took lodgings for the winter at No. 52, Vesterbro, opposite the entrance to Fredberg's Allee, from July to the Flitting Day in April, for eight guineas, and settled down to work. On the 6th of September he determined to explore Jutland thoroughly, and started laden with letters of recommendation to various residents in that interesting part of Denmark. Before he left he notes that he 'left Pjeturson in charge of' his 'rooms, 52 Vesterbro, giving him permission to use' his 'bed and remain there till' his 'return. I also,' he adds, 'gave Gislason leave to take out his bed and be there if he chose.' On the 26th of September he returned to Copenhagen, 'delighted with' his 'little tour, having most satisfactorily attained the object for which it was undertaken.' He found his lodgings as he had left them, his Icelandic secretaries not having made use of his permission to be there. Awaiting him was a letter from Mr. John Shaw Lefevre, relating to a proposition of Laing, the Swedish and Norwegian traveller, to publish a work on the Sagas; which he answered on the 28th as follows:

'I did not receive your letter of the 1st inst. till yesterday, on my return from a three weeks' excursion into the provinces, and cannot allow a day to pass without thanking you for your kindness in thinking of me and my labours, and for your desire that the latter should not be interfered with by another and later hand; and I will in return proceed to state, without further preface, according to your request, the more especial field of my Northern toils. My first object is to publish a Lexicon of the ancient Scandinavian language, as preserved to us chiefly in Icelandic, but also in small part in Norwegian remains, with an English and Latin translation. Not an inconsiderable part of these remains have been printed and published, but generally not satisfactorily, and with a very uncritical treatment of the text, especially when regard is had to the position which this branch of philological study now occupies; a considerable portion exists only in MSS., and it is my intention to embrace all we possess, from the earliest documents down to about the close of the 14th or beginning of the 15th century, about which period the language ceases to retain its ancient form and texture, influenced by the modern Danish and Norwegian dialects, which, as well as Swedish—though no doubt each had from olden time some dialectical peculiarities of its own—had long been more and more separating themselves from the common stock and forming a character proper to themselves. This period will embrace the Laws, Civil and Ecclesiastical, Snorro's History, the whole of the Sagas not of later origin than the said period, a considerable collection of legends, a number of writings of religious or ascetic character, the Younger Edda, some treatises of calendaric (sic) character, and a few pieces on other subjects. The very extensive and careful study necessary to such a compilation can scarcely have failed to make me intimately acquainted with the whole Saga-world, and a future translation of some of them, not without commentary, has not been foreign to my intentions; indeed, I did think of giving two or three smaller ones last year, and commenced with the translation of one, but found the Lexicon extending into a work of such circumference, that I saw, if I divided my strength, no moderate term would see it finished. Having said thus much, I cannot but add that I reserve to myself the liberty of dealing with the whole subject, both as regards remarks and translation—anything I did in the latter I should especially be desirous of accompanying with a critically correct text as far as existing documents allow—in such a manner as may most accord with the future course of my studies; but I cannot at the same time for a moment on this account seek to interfere with Mr. Laing's entering the field, which is an open and public one, and elucidating the theme after his own views, which may possibly in some respects differ from mine, and may probably cast a new and valuable light on the subject, since he has been so successful in his treatment of modern Norway and Sweden.'

Truly an admirable letter. As for Mr. Laing's venture on the Sagas, it only came to translating the Heimskringla from the Norwegian translation of Aall. With all his merits, Mr. Laing was no Icelandic scholar, and though Cleasby was, we know that his whole undivided strength was unequal during his lifetime to finish his Dictionary.

For some reason, Cleasby on the 15th of October relet his lodgings in Vesterbro, and moved into others, 4, Gammel Strand, where he remained the winter over, working away at the Dictionary with his two secretaries, taking walks with them and other of his friends in the hours of relaxation, and very often asking them out to dine with him in the suburbs. It was about this time that Gislason's eyes began to fail. On the 26th of November Cleasby wrote to his father to say that 'the hard weather, and my leading amanuensis being threatened with blindness and not able to write so much, threw more labour on me, and made it difficult for me to fix the time of my return.' As yet, however, Gislason worked on with Pjeturson, and the monthly payments of 20 dollars each continue. On the 8th of December we find the following entry, enclosed in deep black lines: 'Anniversary of a day of severe bereavement.' On that day, the year before, he had lost his mother. On the 22nd, the day after the shortest day, he enters, 'Took my two amanuenses, Gislason and Pjeturson, to dine at Fredericksberg, and drank Balder's health in commemoration of the recommencement of the reign of light.' On the 31st comes the usual entry of 20 dollars each to those two Icelanders.

On the 2nd of January, 1843, he paid Möller, the stationer, six dollars four marks for 'a book for inserting substantives' and 'cut slips of paper,' and on the 11th, 'to the same for a book for the words ú—jafn, all, at, ný;' but, strange to say, he has omitted to enter the amount. On the 27th he notes: 'The half-yearly meeting of the Nordisk Oldskrift Selskab: the Crown Prince—the late King of Denmark—presided, and cut a much better figure than I expected from what general report says of him. He took a good deal of interest in the thing, and was sometimes smart.' Shortly before this he had written to his brother Anthony that he could not come home for the Athenæum election, but hoped he should be elected; and on the 27th he heard from him that his election had taken place. On the 10th of March he enters: 'My amanuensis Gislason entered the Fredericks Hospital to-day, to put himself under the care of Dr. Möller for his eyes.' On the 8th of April he lent Pjeturson 50 dollars. It had been very cold that year, and it was not till the 26th of April that he notes the coming of the first swallow. On the 1st of May he paid Gislason 20 dollars for this month of May, previous to his departure; and on the 3rd left two cases at the University Library, one with slips, and the other with some slips and the verb, preposition, and substantive-books. 'Paid Pjeturson 10 dollars further in addition to the 50 he received of me as loan, which is considered as payment for his labours for April, May, and June. I also gave him 20 dollars, which he was to convey to Gislason, not as payment for June labours, but, as I told him, together with the 20 dollars he received on the 1st instant, he was to apply as he pleased, without regard to any occupation for me, but for the improvement of his health.' On the evening of the same day he started for Malmoe and Travemünde, whence he went to Berlin viâ Rostock, delivering his letter to Professor Hegel, whom he describes as 'a very agreeable and obliging young man,' and admiring the memorial to Marshal Blücher. At Berlin, which he reached on the 8th of May, he paid the Grimms a visit, and 'was sorry to find Jacob so unwell from the remains of the grippe, as to be forbid to speak or lecture for the present.' On leaving Berlin he again passed through Halle, the town of his detestation, at which, as usual, he flings a stone in passing: 'Halle has always appeared to me the ugliest, least liveable town I know, and appeared so this time in an almost increased degree.' On the 11th of May he reached Marienbad, and for a month was immersed in Schlammbäder and drenched with Kreutz-Brunn; but on the 20th, after seven glasses of Kreutz-Brunn, comes an ominous entry: 'I have been plagued with a rather severe catarrh since my arrival, which has prevented my following up my Schlamm Baths.' On the 28th he had a letter from his father complaining of illness. On the 8th of June he wrote to him to say he should not be home before the autumn. On the 11th of June he left Marienbad for the North, taking a round by Coburg and Magdeburg, from which city he descended the Elbe to Hamburg. There, as usual, he saw Lappenberg, and thence returned to Copenhagen by way of the west coast of Holstein and Schleswig. On the 26th of June he had made his way round to Flensburg, where he took steamer for Copenhagen, and arrived on the morning of the 27th. 'On my arrival,' he says, 'I found Gislason still in the same state as to his eyes, and that Pjeturson, pressed by office business, had made much less progress in Sturlunga than I expected.' In the Danish capital Cleasby stayed till the 4th of September, superintending the progress of his Dictionary, which always slackened when he left it to others. As Gislason's eyes were still bad, we find the following entry on the 31st of August: 'Paid Gislason 20 dollars for this month, and paid to a friend of his, B. Thorlacius, who read aloud to him, for the months of July and August, 40 dollars; together 60 dollars.' On the 4th of September he wrote to Anthony, 'and told him I was but poorly, going to Sweden, and should endeavour when I came home to make some stay.' On the 5th he left for Sweden, his object being to collate the Icelandic MSS. in that country. On this occasion he posted up the country, only taking the steamer at Norrköping for Stockholm, where he arrived on the 10th of September. On the 11th he went to his friends Hildebrand and Arfwedson, now chief-librarian, who at once put him in the way to effect his object. For several days he worked in the Royal Library from 11 A.M. to 2 P.M., passing the rest of the day in admiring Stockholm, and, above all, its beautiful Djurgård.

On the 15th he went to Upsala, to see his old friend Schröder, and inspected this time, not the Codex Argenteus, but the Icelandic MSS. in that library, of which, as well as those in the Royal Library at Stockholm, there are many pages of collation and comment in the Diary. On the 16th he enters: 'I passed the evening with Geijer, and find, though age has in the last four years made considerable external impression, yet his mind is as fresh and genial as ever.' On the 18th he was back at Stockholm, and 'went to the library, and saw a very curious little Erse MS., of a few pages only, which Sir W. Betham has pronounced to be poetry, and of the 8th century. There is a curious Old English medical MS. of the 14th century, also one of the court rolls and records of the reign of Edward the Third, and a beautifully-written and preserved MS. on parchment, in Old French, being a History of the World . . . in which the Anglo-Saxon-English kings are treated very fully, and no doubt a work of English birth. Mr. Stephens has had the merit of discovering these objects. Drank tea and passed the evening with Mr. Hildebrand, the best specimen of the Swedish "Gelehrte" I have seen; really a sound, serious person, and zealous in his department. Mr. Stephens gave me a memorandum, begging me to make inquiry among Icelanders at Copenhagen as to any Folk-Sagor, Barn-Sagor, Folk-Visor, Barn-Visor, Vagg-Visor, and Folk-Gåtor, etc.; and of any with melodies; also as to Danska and Norrska Folk-Visor and Folk-Sagor from 1500 to 1800.'

After making the acquaintance of Dr. Retzius, the ethnologist, and seeing his collection of skulls, Cleasby left Stockholm on the 21st of September, and reached Calmar by steamer on the 22nd. Thence he posted to Malmoe, stopping at a parsonage called Hoby on the way, to inspect the celebrated stone called 'Runamo,' on which Finn Magnusen had read many Runes which no one else could decipher: Nilson of Lund and Berzelius, as 'Naturforskare,' having, on the other hand, declared the marks on the trapp rock to be the work of nature. After this inspection Cleasby was not disposed to offer any decided opinion upon so short a survey, and left the spot admiring Finn Magnusen's 'extreme boldness in making out of them a long Runic inscription.' Before leaving the parsonage Cleasby heard a piece of superstition which shewed the state of mind of the middling agricultural class. 'A bönde (farmer) came to arrange for the clergyman's marrying him, and after all was settled, hastened back to remind him on no account to publish the banns when the moon was on the wane, but when it was increasing,—the expressions he made use of were "ny" and "neðan."' At Lund Cleasby stopped to inspect some Icelandic MSS. which Professor Schlyter, the veteran editor of the Ancient Laws of Sweden, had borrowed from the Royal Library at Stockholm, and found very few of them of such an age and character as to be worthy his attention; besides which they had been fully collated by Professor Keyser. On the 27th of September he crossed from Malmoe to Copenhagen in two hours, where he found all in statu quo, 'pleased to get back again to the seat of my labours, but at the same time satisfied to the last degree with my three weeks' trip.'

Cleasby now settled down to work, and it appears from a letter to his father, written on the 18th of December, that he did not intend to return home before the middle of March, 1844. In the meantime he had gone on swimmingly with his Dictionary, and as Gislason's health was still weak and Pjeturson's not much better, on the 4th of November a young man of the name of Brynjolfr Snorrason, an Icelander, was engaged to assist; and after that the payments of 20 dollars are regularly made monthly to the three amanuenses. So the year passed on, and on the 22nd of December we have the usual entry, 'Took Gislason and Pjeturson to dine with me at Fredericksberg, and drank Balder's health in commemoration of the reign of darkness having again given way to that of light;' but on the 25th he received an unwelcome letter from Anthony, stating that his father's health was precarious; and on the 29th another, speaking so unfavourably of his state that Cleasby determined to leave for London immediately. He was just in time to catch the last steamer of the season for Kiel, and departed that day, having first packed up all his papers and sent most of them to the University Library, and the two control books and remaining slips to his friend Capt. Röder. Before he went he paid up his amanuenses for December, and two of them in advance for January. On the 6th of January, 1844, he reached London,—having travelled extra post through Lower Germany, and by rail from Cologne,—where he happily found his father much better than he had been or than he expected to find him. On the 27th of the month he wrote to Pjeturson, telling him that though he found his father better, his health was so weak that he might have to stay a month or two in England. He hoped, however, to return to Copenhagen, 'Saa snart vi skrive Martz,' and to be ready to set to work again. In the meantime he hoped both Pjeturson's and Gislason's health would mend, and that they would be prepared to work during the coming spring and summer. As for himself, he was doing what little work he could in London. Soon after this letter his father's health somewhat mended, and Cleasby determined to return to Copenhagen for a while. On the 5th of March, 'after taking an affectionate leave of my dear father, who, though very weak, appeared a good deal better than he had been, and after having received assurances from Dr. Arnott that there was no danger at present,' Cleasby started for Dover, and took the steamer for Ostend. In spite of the ice, which was thick on the Belts, he reached Copenhagen on the 15th, and immediately pays his amanuenses as usual. On the 28th he wrote to his father to say that he should be back by the middle of April. On the 29th he enters: 'Thorwaldsen died suddenly this evening at the theatre during the overture;' and on the 30th, 'Thorwaldsen's funeral took place to-day. The king, queen, and whole royal family attended at the service, and 7000 or 8000 persons at least followed in the procession. That may be said of him which can be said of few, that he has not left his like behind him.'

All this time the winter had been very severe, and it was not till the 9th of April that the ice which filled up the harbour of Copenhagen moved off. On the 15th Cleasby wrote to his father that he should leave on the 22nd. On the 16th he writes: 'Rafn sent me the first part of a to f of Egilsson's MSS. of the Poetic Dictionary, 699 sides in 4to;' and on the 20th, 'had a conversation with Rafn to-day concerning Egilsson's Poetic Dictionary, and told him I thought 500 or 600 dollars would be fair honorar. for the work, and that I had no objection to go as far as 300 dollars towards its coming out, provided it was printed in connexion with mine, and so reduced that the two together should form a key to the whole [language?], and words partly prosal without poetical signification be not taken up in his.'

On the 22nd he paid up his three amanuenses; Gislason 20 dollars, Snorrason the same, and Pjeturson 10, 'for what little he has done this month; leaving 12 packets of slips, i, z, and j inclusive, with Snorrason for him to work upon during my absence, with various MSS.;" and departed for Kiel and England, which he reached on the 1st of May, only to find his father very poorly. In truth it was now plain that the poor old man's days were numbered; a chronic disease of the bladder had got so inveterate that surgical skill could only prolong but not save his life. With the exception of a flying visit to Copenhagen, which began on the 26th of June and ended on the 8th of July, Cleasby stayed with his father to the last. Before he left London he wrote to Pjeturson on the 9th of June to say that he was coming for a few days, and in the meantime begged him to look after Snorrason and see how he was getting on in his work, and to write at once to say how he himself was, and whether Gislason was in Copenhagen. As Sir Benjamin Brodie on the 9th of June said that his father was in no immediate danger, the flying visit took place, as has been said. During the five days he was in Copenhagen he paid up his amanuenses and settled his accounts. On the 4th of July he writes: 'I leave behind in Copenhagen 22 packets of slips in the care of Pjeturson and Snorrason, viz. 5 packets of H; 1 of I, Í, J; 3 of K; 2 of L; 2 of M; 1 of N; 1 of O, Ó, Æ, and P; 1 of R; and 6 of S.' At the same time he wrote full instructions to his two amanuenses; Gislason's name is now wanting, and is explained by the following entry of the same day: 'I gave Pjeturson 60 dollars to be sent to Gislason to the Bath Kreischa, if he thought fit, in order that he might have the full benefit of September there if his own means would not carry him so far. I also gave Pjeturson for himself in advance, for work that might be done in my absence, 20 dollars; and paid Pjeturson, for Snorrason, 20 dollars in advance.' On the same day he left Copenhagen, and, as has been said, was back in London on the 8th, finding his father 'a shade better.'

All that month the old man lingered, and it was not till the 31st of August that he sank under his disease. His deathbed, like that of his wife, was cheered by the tenderness of his children. After the last scene, Richard Cleasby lay down for an hour or two, and on returning to his father's room 'found him stretched out upon the bed in which he died, covered over with a white sheet, with a little bunch of flowering sprigs of jasmine placed on his chest, gathered out of the little garden at the back of the house.' On the 7th he writes: 'The last ceremony was this day performed over my poor father's remains in the burial-ground of Paddington. The coffin was placed on that of my mother, who herself lies upon that of poor Stephen, in one of the vaults. Then a last adieu was said to our much-lamented parent.'

On the 4th of September, as soon as the first shock was over, Cleasby had written as follows to Pjeturson:

‘Deres gode Bref af 27 ult. fand mig i den dybeste Bedrøvelse, ti min kjære Faders lange Lidelser tog en Ende den 31 Aug., kl. 5, formiddag, til hvilken Tid det behagede Forsynet at berøve mig min nærmeste Slægtning og ælteste (sic) og beste Ven! jeg maa søge Understøttelse under dette haarde Slag i den trøstende Tanke at jeg ved min Nærværelse og uafsladelige Opmærksomheder bidrog alt mueligt til at lindre den tunge Prøve hann gik igjennem, og i den kjærlige Medlidelse og Condolence of mine Venner; Gud alene er den som veed hvad er det Beste!

‘Det har gjort mig meget ondt at høre saa daarlige Efterretninger om Snorrason, alligevel er det ikke meget andet end hvad vi var besørget om forleden Höst, naar De huske, en Reise op til Island var anseet som nödvendigt for Ham, indtil i Vinterens Löb hann blev saa hurtigt ok uvæntet bedrei jeg haaber dog hann vil komme sig snarere end De synes formode. Den andre (sic) unge Mands Indvielse bliver om saa nödvendigere.

‘Saa snart visse Affairer ere arrangerede, hvilke vil nödvendigt kræve min første Opmærksomhed har jeg i sind at reise til Kjöbenhavn og haaber ved min Ankomst at høre bedre Efterretning om Gislasons Öien hvilket jeg tænker vil sandsynligt følge en bedre Tilstand af den almindelige Sundhed; det vil være meget vigtigt at hann yde den Tjeneste hann kann i den kommende Vinter. . . . Haabende inden temmelig kort Tid at see Dem igjen jeg forbliver Deres hengivne

‘R. CLEASBY.’

The death of his father plunged Cleasby into business, and it was some time before he could think of his Icelandic Dictionary in the pressure of family affairs. He had to go hither and thither, to Brighton and to Westmoreland, where, as far as we can discern, the family property came to him; and what with executorships and business letters, it was long before he could see his way. It is amusing, however, to see how strong his water-drinking propensity was, for on his return from Westmoreland, in September 1844, we find him stopping at Harrogate to drink its abominable sulphur spring, which he confesses did him little good. At last, on the 2nd of October, he broke away from London, laden with presents for his Copenhagen friends, in which city he arrived on the 7th. There he ‘found all in order at’ his ‘lodgings, 159 Gammel Strand, but that unfortunately very little had been done in the Icelandic, Snorrason having been ill again, and Pjeturson had very little time; Gislason not yet returned from his water-cure.’ Under these circumstances it was necessary to engage other assistance, and so on the 23rd of November we find this entry: ‘Snorrason left off to-day writing into the slips, and it was agreed that the money he had had, 40 dollars in June and August, should be considered as his payment up to this time.’ On the 25th of the same month we read, ‘An Icelander, Fridriksson—who had for Gislason written out the words out of the Collection of Fragments, No. 655, and assisted Snorrason latterly in writing them into the slips—came to-day and began to write them on in my rooms, commencing with S.’

So the year came to an end, which, if it brought him an increase of means, added much to the burden of his correspondence. His Diaries are now full of notices on letters of business, and his time for Icelandic must have been much straitened. Still he went bravely on, and his new amanuensis seems to be the best he had. This year the 22nd of December passes over without that annual party to drink ‘Balder’s health.’ The night was now drawing near from which there was to be no return of light. Before the year was out he was called home by business, and on the 28th of December he paid up Fridriksson, Pjeturson, and Thorlacius, set them work to do, left some of his MS. of the Dictionary in Copenhagen, and had some sent to him in England. On the 3rd of January, 1845, he was again in London, and for the next three months entirely engrossed by business. The winter of 1845 was unusually prolonged both in the North and in England, and so late as the 18th of March Cleasby noticed persons skating on the water in the Regent's Park, before the house in Cornwall Terrace. Shortly after, the house having been sold, he is busy moving his father's wine and chattels to No. 5, Harley Place, Harley Street, as to which he notes on the 28th of March: 'After having had two or three days of dislocation and transportation of chattels, once in a man's life is often enough to move.' Poor man, that was his first and last moving in England!

On the 2nd of April he embarked for Hamburg, and on the 8th reached Copenhagen. As soon as he arrived Thorlacius and Snorrason came to work again, and Gislason and Pjeturson also assisted. On the 10th of June he set off for an excursion to Danzig, embarking first for Stettin. Having seen Danzig and Marienburg, with its grand old castle of the Deutscher Ritter, he returned by way of Berlin, where he saw the two Grimms, 'who were both brisk and well, and seem satisfied with Berlin. In the evening,' he writes, 'I went to Professor Ehrenberg's, where Berzelius from Stockholm was one of the guests; altogether an agreeable assembly of "Gelehrte." I called also on Schelling, who, though 70 years of age, seemed little altered.' On the 21st of June he was back at Copenhagen in time to witness the arrival of the Swedish and Norwegian students, who visited Denmark in a body, and amused the inhabitants with demonstrations in favour of an United Scandinavia.

On the 4th of July, 1845, he says: 'I was weighed at Tivoli, a place of entertainment just outside the gates of Copenhagen, and found to be equal to 148 lbs. Danish weight, which is somewhat heavier than English; I think about 11 st. 8 lb. English.' On the 8th of August he 'accompanied Christian Lange, a Norwegian, who is here taking copies of old Norwegian diplomas, to the Office of the Archives, where he shewed me a large number of the first and some of the second half of the fourteenth century, which he had copied, which were in great part in perfectly pure old language, like Gula-Þings Log or Skuggsjá, the orthography of the vowels, as usual, very varied.'

On the 15th he paid Fridriksson twenty dollars 'for work from the 15th of June till this day;' on the 22nd he paid Thorlacius the same sum for the same purpose; and on the 25th 'made Dr. Egilsson's acquaintance; he called on me to-day.' On the 28th he left Copenhagen and went by steam to Kiel, and embarked at Hamburg, arriving in London on the 31st of August, the anniversary of his father's death, which he enters in his Diary as an 'anniversary of a day of severe bereavement,' and surrounds it with deep black lines.

He had now, as we have seen, sold the old house in Cornwall Terrace and taken 5 Harley Place, at the top of Harley Street, into which his books and effects had been moved. He notes on the 11th September that he 'found all in very nice order there.'

After travelling in England, partly for business and partly for pleasure, he left England again in September, and returned to Copenhagen on the 12th of October, having passed some days in Schleswig, where he observes :

‘Heard throughout Schleswig that the Dano-German question as to language has rather increased than diminished in heat and difficulty of solution.’

He was now living at 159 Gammel Strand, where he ‘found all in order to receive him.’ On this occasion he returned loaded with creature comforts for his Danish friends, and on the 10th of October he distributed to them ; but finding that the authorities of the town had overcharged him for the tax on his horse, he ‘Wrote to the magistracy on the 14th, begging them to rectify their demand for tax on my horse from ten dollars, yearly charge as a foreign horse, to two dollars, the proper tax for a Danish one, which he is.’

On the 16th he was delighted at hearing Jenny Lind for the first time ; and, after expressing his admiration in warm terms, he adds :

‘Such was the rage to get a seat in the theatre to hear her, that people stood last week in the most horrid storm and rain all the night through, from the time of the theatrical performance closing at ten o’clock at night till eleven o’clock the next morning, when the doors were opened again for the disposal of tickets. Those costing a dollar were easily sold at five or six dollars !!’

For the rest of the year 1845 he worked steadily on with his amanuenses, paying them regularly for their work. On the very last day of the year he dined with his friend Ellis, the English clergyman, and on his way back ‘heard everywhere the firing which here begins on New-Year’s Eve as soon as it gets dark. It is a sort of compliment in this country to fire off a pistol or two before folks’ windows! Every land has its customs!’ With January, 1846, his health seemed to fail him, and he went to consult a Dr. Bendz, who prescribed leeches and herb-tea and physic, and advised him not to drink too much cold water in the morning ; and for some time after this the recurrence of the name of Bendz in the Diary shews that Cleasby was still in his hands. On the 6th of April he left for England, having paid Fridriksson 20 dollars ‘for work to be done for me, of which I gave him particulars, during my absence.’ On the 9th he reached London, and was soon deep in business. On the 14th, however, he ‘had a visit from Sir Benjamin Brodie, before whom I laid my complaints of the three past months,’ and accordingly had to take blue-pill and senna. His property at Brighton and in Westmoreland, besides some house-property at Chelsea, were an endless trouble to him. After struggling with his tenants and agents for the rest of that month and all the next, he left Dover for Ostend on the 31st of May, on his way to Marienbad, which he reached on the 5th of June. There it is the same old story of Kreutz-Brunn and Schlammbäder for a month. On the 8th of July he left it, and went by way of Magdeburg to Wölfenbüttel, to inspect the Icelandic MSS. there, which he collated. Thence he returned to England, reaching it on the 15th of the month. As soon as he got back he rushed down to Brighton, on hearing that his next-door neighbour was building up a wall behind his premises. On the 27th of July, 1846, he writes :

‘Went to Brown, Great Russell Street ; ordered finally a slab to be erected to my father’s memory, to cost £23, and £1 per 100 for the letters the inscription may contain. Told him to chalk the plan in Marylebone Church, which he said he would do, and apply to my sister for the inscription etc. when wanted.'

After this came letter on letter on business, but on the 28th he left for Hamburg, and reached Copenhagen on the 1st of August. On the 10th he took part in a 'Gilde,' or banquet, given to his old friend Geijer, 'and was sorry to see him both mentally and bodily sadly altered since' his 'visit to Upsala in September 1843.' On the 9th of September he wrote to the Manager of the Hotel d'Angleterre at Frankfort-on-the-Maine to keep a room ready for him on the 24th; and on the 17th he set off to be present at the meeting of Germanische Sprach und Geschichts-Forscher, which was to be held at Frankfort. On the 25th he reached that city, having done a little grape-cure by the way, and soon found out the Grimms. He was most cordially received, and invited to the meeting, attended by about 150 professors and jurists and as many spectators. There he met most of his old friends, Schmeller, Massmann, Dahlmann, Pertz, and others, of whom Dahlmann read a paper in his section, 'shewing that the English jury is of Scandinavian, and not of Anglo-Saxon origin.' The meeting was followed by a dinner, of which Cleasby tells that 'it was bad, noisy, and cold; but, worst of all, that froward Professor Massmann must needs propose my health after some few others had been given, but when no mention had yet been made of names like Grimm and Schmeller. It annoyed me exceedingly; however, there was nothing left for it but to return thanks, and I did so; ending with proposing the health of the Grimms, the heroes of modern Sprach-Forschung—which was upon the whole, perhaps, getting out of it as well as I could.' When the sittings of the sections were over, on the 28th Cleasby says: 'Saw the two Grimms this morning, and conversed with them on various points as to the Dictionary, and shall note some of their remarks.' On the same day he had 'a final hour-and-a-half's conversation with Schmeller,' and 'shewed him part of my substantive etc. book of the Dictionary.' The same night Cleasby left Frankfort, and returned to Copenhagen, reaching it on the 4th of October.

After his return he worked on steadily with his Dictionary; but he now has 'a spasmodic cough,' for which he called in Bendz, who gave him a 'tinctura pectoralis and some herb-tea.' At the end of November Bendz was called in again, to attend him for a carbuncle, which kept him in-doors for some days, and led to six visits from the doctor; and so, with failing health but still full of work, the year 1846 came to an end.

The first days of January, 1847, are filled with letters written to England on business and family matters. On the 28th he notes: 'At a meeting of the Society of Northern Antiquaries this evening the subject of Egilsson's Poetic Lexicon was brought under discussion. It was stated that I had given 150 dollars towards the honorar. and the Society 150 dollars, and that 800 dollars had been regarded as what he—Egilsson—should have. Some members found that too little, and the Society agreed to pay him 500 dollars, at 100 dollars per annum. Finn Magnusen moved that the thanks of the Society should be publicly given to me for forwarding the work ; and all persons turned towards me to thank me.' Then come entries of business letters till the 31st of March, when Cleasby wrote to his sister to say that he should be home between the 8th and the 20th of April. Accordingly he paid up his amanuenses and his doctor, and to Professor Rafn 100 dollars more in addition to the 150 he had already paid towards Egilsson's Dictionary. On the 8th of April he writes : ' Before leaving ordered my box of slips and that containing the two "control books" to be sent to Captain Röder's, and left 20 dollars with Fridriksson for this month, and left him a variety of things to be done in my absence.' On the 15th he returned to England, and was soon as much occupied as ever with business. He had, however, taken a specimen of his Dictionary with him ; and on the 10th of May he writes : ' Took back to-day to Taylor's the proof of the first four pages of my Icelandic Prose Dictionary, which I had set up on trial*. There was, unluckily, a great deal to correct, their not understanding the language making it impossible to know where words ought to be divided at the end of a line ; and not being used to my writing also no doubt does something.' On the 12th he went down to consult his friend Kemble at his cottage near Rickmansworth, who 'expressed himself highly pleased at the appearance of the proof.' On the 16th he was off to Germany, to try a new bath. This time it was towards Homburg, then only a rising watering-place, that he turned his steps. He had better have returned to Carlsbad or Marienbad, for his cure at Homburg did him little good, though he left it delighted with the scenery. On the 16th of June he returned to England for his last visit. On the 17th he wrote to Copenhagen, to announce his speedy return, and in particular to Fridriksson, stating that he should be back at the end of the month, and that he hoped he would have got a good deal of the work ready which he left him in April, and be ready 'til videre Anvendelse af Flid ;' and to tell Gislason of the time of his return, and to greet him and Pjeturson heartily. On the 19th he paid Messrs. Taylor £5 18s. for the six sides of the Icelandic Dictionary printed as an 'ensample.' During the few next days he packed up his deeds and effects, and left them in safe custody till his return—which was never to happen ; and on the 23rd set off in the steamer 'Wilberforce' for Hamburg. On the 26th he reached Copenhagen, and drove at once to No. 40 B, Gamle Kongens Gade, 2 Sal., which he had taken in April for the three months ending October 1st, paying for them 75 dollars in advance. He came out as usual bringing presents to his friends, and, amongst others, to Mr. Ellis, the British Chaplain, with whom he was very intimate. In stopping at Hamburg he had enclosed proofs of the specimen of the Dictionary both to Jacob Grimm and Schmeller ; but he now found on reaching Copenhagen that he had brought none of the second and third sheets for himself. He therefore wrote on the 27th of June to Grimm, begging him to be good enough to send him the two sheets 'containing the end of af and at—bragt, búa, and ok.' Cleasby seems to have spent the month of July hopefully enough, in riding and walking with his friends in the beautiful neighbourhood of the Danish capital ; and on the 7th

*. A specimen of these is printed at the end of this Memoir.

he writes to Thorpe to say that N. M. Petersen the historian was quite willing that he—Thorpe—should translate one of his works into English; and he pays his amanuenses regularly and keeps them to work. On the 28th of July he received the following charming letter from Jacob Grimm as to his Dictionary, on returning the proofs as desired:

‘Wie werden Sie, verehrter Freund, mein langes Schweigen auf ihre gütige Mittheilung sich erklärt haben? Es hat folgende leidige Ursache: Bald nachdem Ihr erster Brief eingetroffen war, gerieth unser ganzes Haus in die lebhafteste Unruhe, aus der es sich noch nicht erholt hat. Meine gute Schwägerin, die Sie, so viel ich weiss, persönlich kennen, war nach Jena gereist, um einen dortigen Arzt für die kränkelnde Tochter zu gebrauchen. Nun aber erkrankte sie selbst aufs gefährlichste. Nachdem wir einige Tage in Angst geschwebt hatten, reiste mein Bruder auch fort, um ihr beizustehen. Die Gefahr scheint zwar verschwunden, aber wir müssen doch noch in beständiger Sorge sein.

‘In solcher Lage verliert man alle Arbeitsfähigkeit, und thut nur noch einzelne Geschäfte mechanisch ab. Jetzt, beim genauen Wiederlesen Ihres zweiten Briefes, sehe ich, dass Ihnen an schnelle Rücksendung der Druckbogen gelegen war, und erschrecke sie versäumt zu haben. Also folgen die Bogen nunmehr augenblicklich, ohne dass ich Zeit oder rechten Sinn dafür hätte, mich über Ihre schöne Arbeit im einzelnen auszulassen. Mein Trost ist, dass Sie keines Rathes von anderen bedürfen; alles innere und äussere scheint aufs beste bedacht und gerathen. Der Himmel lasse Ihnen alles gelingen.—Ihr herzlich ergebener Freund, ‘Berlin, 22 Juli, 1847.’

‘JAC. GRIMM.’

But on the 1st of August a change took place. On that day he writes: ‘Dr. Bendz stethoscoped me to-day, my cough, hoarseness, etc. continuing; pronounced lungs sound, but said my chest was weak; prescribed a large plaster called Manus Dei, and a draft of senega, to take a table-spoonful four times a day.’ On the 2nd he notes, ‘put on the plaster this evening before going to bed.’ He still, however, works some hours every day, and takes little excursions into the country. On the 24th of August he enters the arrival of a man now very distinguished in the North: ‘Unger from Christiania drank tea with me.’

After this he is full of home business again, and writes a letter to Anthony on the 30th, enclosing letters to his agents, and at the end, ‘Said I was a little better; the monster plaster had stilled but not taken away the cough, and especially worked well with the nightly perspiration, which had become only occasional and not so violent.’ On the same day he notes: ‘Paid Gislason 10 dollars, with 20 last month equals 30 for two months.’ On the 2nd of September he paid Fridriksson ‘10 dollars on account for this month.’ On the 4th he enters: ‘Received as a present by Mr. C. R. Unger, from him and the other editor, Mr. C. Lange, Diplomatarium Norvegicum, 1st vol. Christiania, 1847. 4to.’ On the 5th he received his last letter of business from his agent in England; and on the 6th stands the last entry in these Diaries: ‘Paid Fridriksson remaining 10 dollars, making 20 for this month. Answered Miles’—the agent’s—letter of 28th ult. as at back of same.’ So end his Diaries: the little that is left to tell of his life must be drawn from the letters of his friend Mr. Ellis, the English chaplain, to his sorrowing family.

But indeed there is little more to tell. On the 7th of September, having been, as has been shewn, under medical care for an affection of the chest, he was seized with a slight fever, at first supposed to be of a rheumatic character, but which towards the end of the month rapidly passed into a low typhoid type. On Monday, the 27th, though confined to his bed, he 'dictated in a firm voice and collected manner' a letter to his brother, in which he said that he was in no danger, but that time was needful for his recovery. Complaints were made of his treatment; but upon this subject it is now needless to enter. It is enough to say that he grew rapidly worse and never rallied. On Wednesday, the 6th of October, at 10 A.M., he had finished his mortal course. His relations had no opportunity of being with him in his last moments, for they never heard of his danger till they received the intelligence of his death. On the 14th of October his remains were deposited in a vault below the church of St. Peter, where they still remain.

So passed away the spirit of Richard Cleasby, one of the most indefatigable students that ever lived. If he were fortunate in the circumstances of his life, he was surely most unhappy in his death,—snatched away just as the mechanical part of his labours was drawing to a close, but before he could bring his philological power to bear upon the mass of materials which he had collected. His methodical and yet poetic mind, his far-sighted and yet microscopic eye, will no longer note day by day the last penny of his expenses and the very spot where he took his friends to dine, side by side with entries full of a lively interest in philology, literature, and art, and of delight at the smiling face of nature as she revives at the soft breath of spring. For him the first chaffinch will chirp in vain, the earliest swallow twitter, and the beech and willow burst out into tender green. He is gone like Balder to the realm of night, never to return. It is poor compensation for the cessation of an existence so full of spirit and work to reflect that at the same time came rest and peace; that all that weary trouble which wealth brought with it was over for ever; that no letters on business from London or Westmoreland would now pursue him; that his life-long chase after health at German Baths was at an end; and that as he passed from city to city surgeons and physicians would no longer torture and torment him. These were but accidents, and, though troublesome, Richard Cleasby bore them like a man, in the firm faith that the task which he had set himself to do would still be fulfilled. It has been at last fulfilled, but not in the way which either Cleasby or his heirs at first proposed. As soon as the first shock caused by his unlooked-for death had passed over, the question arose, what was to be done with the Dictionary, which it was well known he had been on the very eve of publishing? The greatest interest in the subject was naturally shewn in Copenhagen, and Mr. Anthony Cleasby received a message from the Crown Prince, as President of the Society of Northern Antiquaries, expressing his 'deeply-felt sympathy at his decease, and' his 'desire that the work might be completed to which he had devoted himself with such zeal and perseverance for so many years.' After mature deliberation it was resolved that the MS. should be completed at Copenhagen, under the care of a committee of three—two of whom were M. Krieger, the well-known statesman and antagonist of Prince Bismark; and M. Konrad

Gislason, Cleasby's chief amanuensis, on whom devolved the literary direction of the work. For this purpose the heirs of Richard Cleasby devoted several hundred pounds to erect what they naturally regarded as the best monument to his memory. In the meantime the writer had succeeded in interesting the Delegates of the Oxford University Press in favour of the work, which, when completed, was to be edited by him and printed at the expense of the University. But when the MS. of the Dictionary was forwarded after several years from Copenhagen, so far was it from being in a fit state for publication, that, after struggling with it for some years, he found it necessary to call in other assistance to complete the work. This he was fortunate enough to find in Mr. Gudbrand Vigfusson, then one of the Stipendiaries in the Arna Magnæan Library at Copenhagen, an institution which has done so much for Icelandic scholarship. After inspecting the materials placed at his disposal, Mr. Vigfusson found them so crude and in such an unsatisfactory state, that he resolved on rewriting and remodelling the whole. This Herculean task he has now completed, and in so doing has raised a monument to his own scholarship as well as one to the memory of Richard Cleasby. It is needless to say more of these Copenhagen transcripts in this place. Their nature has been sufficiently explained and exposed in the Introduction. It is enough here to point at them and pass by. The Dictionary as it now stands is far more the work of Vigfusson than of Cleasby; but if the dead take heed of aught here below, it must be a consolation to the spirit of Richard Cleasby to know that the work which he so boldly projected has at last been worthily completed, though by other hands; and if there be speech or language in those mansions, the solemn words of Hávamál will ring through them :

‘Deyr fé, deyja frændr ;
Deyr sjálfr it sama ;
En orð-stírr deyr aldregi Hveim sér góðan getr.’

SPECIMENS.

I.—SPECIMEN OF MR. CLEASBY'S MS. WORKED OUT BY HIMSELF.

mál, s, pl. n., pl. mál, Gr. þp. 30, i. 83¹² Cod. B, lb. 41. ii. 318²⁴ þd. A, Ísl. S. i. 374⁴; mol, Norske Love 335³³. Two leading significations characterise this word, each of which present a number of bdivisions. 1. speech, cp. mæla, to speak. 2. measure, cp. mæla, measure.

I. Leading signification.

a.—facultas voces articulatas proferendi, loquela, a speech. Børs synir þu upp tréin, sköpuðu af menn, . . . gaf hinn fyrsti önd ok líf. . . þriði sjónu, málit ok heyrn ok sjón, Sn. E. gg. c. 9. 10¹⁴. aldri bræðumsk ek þu guð er þú göfgar, þviat þau hafa ekki mál, Fms. i. 97¹⁹. þröngdi á sóttarfari konungsins, at hann missti málsins, x. 148¹⁷. þá spurði onungrinn ef Sigvaldi hefði mál sitt, xi. 102²³. hefi ek marga vega itað mála við hana ok hefi ek aldri fengit orð af henni, Laxd. c. 12. 2¹⁷. þeir glötuðu einnar tungu máli er forðum vildu stöpul smíða gegn Guði (speech in one language), No. 677. 19¹⁸. þeir menn er á hundis höfuð ok hafa gaud fyrir mál (latratus pro loquela), Rimb. i. 39. 347⁴. þeir hafa eigi manns rödd né mál, voice or speech, Rimb. i. 45. 348²¹. höncentaurus hefir tveinn mál, voices, organs, manners f speech, 673. A. 47².

b.—sermo, oratio, verba, hvárt eru þeir Steinarr ok Öundur hér, svá at eir megi skilja mál mitt, Eg. c. 86. 735⁴. hvárt er Flosi svá nær, at hann megi heyra mál mitt, Nj. 129. 200⁵. ver eigi nær honum en mál nemi, ms. iv. 28¹⁰. þér er mikit fyrir máli, v. 325¹⁹. var hann snjallr í máli ok taladr vel á þingi, ix. 535¹³. skilr þú nökkurt hér manna mál? umundis egir: eigi heldr enn fugla klíð, Fas. ii. 512²⁰. sumum gefsk mála þýðing, No. 677. 20²³. skáldskapr var honum svá tiltækr sem ann mælti af tungu fram sem annat mál, other speech, i. c. prose, Fms. i. 374⁹, cf. 91, var. 5. engi var svá vitr hjá, at snjallara mál (sermo, ratio) myndi fram bera, Fms. vii. 158²⁰. eigi man þat svá skjótt ráðask, egir þorsteinn ok tók annat mál, Gunnl. c. 5. 70⁷. engi hafði hön orð ni fyrir en Gestr lauk sínu máli, Laxd. c. 33. 130^b. ok er Ólafr lauk ínu máli, þá var göðr rómr gerr, 27. 106¹⁰. en er hann hafði þetta nælt fylldisk þegar mál hans, was fulfilled, came to pass, MS. 623. 42⁴. þau eru upphöf af máli mínu (of a sermon), Ísl. S. i. 385²¹. bar Gizurr var á mikit mál, at hann mundi því auðveldiga á leið koma, insisted much, Fms. x. 93¹⁸. þurfu þér firi því at . . . sýna fyrir mér öll þau mál ok athæfi er hafa þarf fyrir konungi, expressions, modes of expressions, ks. 301²=Cod. 61^a. 29: pl., þá svarar drottinn vár með málum David propheta, in the words of David, No. 619. 31²⁵. In specie, colloquium, þegar er þeir fundu menn at máli, Fms. i. 204⁹. mælti hann jafnan fyrst við Norðmenn ef þeir vildu hafa mál hans, audients bos bam, -paven, vii. 241⁹. Ölvir hnúfa var með konungi ok kom opt á mál við konung, Eg. 14. 106². hann lagðisk niðr ok skaut fyrir loku, engi þorði at krefja hann máls, 81. 601¹³. þórðis gekk til máls við Egil, 89. 764¹². síðan settu þau málinu (var. talinu), Nj. c. 6. 10³. þegar er hvárir ná máli tannarra stóð Atli upp ok mælti, 5. 81⁴. In specie, responsum, hann eitaði þá máls um við Ásgerði, hverju þat gegndi, Eg. c. 83. 703⁷. endimönnum þikkir hun svara furðu störliga ok spyrja hana máls um, svar til svör þessi skulu koma, S. i. Har. Hárf. 3. 77²³, cf. Fms. i. 3¹. mælti hann mál af þeim, ok spurðu þau hversu bardaginn hefði gengit, Fas. iii. 525²³. Sermonis argumentum, judicium (de aliqua re) verbis portatum, þat var mál manna at henni hafi allt verit illa gefit, þat er etc., Nj. c. 154. 268¹⁹. þat var mál manna um þá þórólfr ok Bárð, at þeir væri etc., Eg. c. 8. 39¹¹. þat er mál manna at eigi hafi meiri skörungr verit í Noregi, Fms. vii. 150⁷. ok höfðu menn at máli, at þat sumar höfðu Marcus-menn byr hvert er þeir vildu, 301¹. allir menn höfðu á máli er Ólaf sá, hversu fríðr maðr hann var, Laxd. c. 22. 88³⁸. Narratio, nú er þar til máls at taka er þorkell Eyjólfsson sitr í búi sínu, Laxd. c. 74. 314²⁵. jarlarnir Urgu-þrjótr ok Brimeskjarr er fyrr var getið í þessu máli, Fms. xi. 41³. Proverbium, saying, þat er fornt mál, at bysna skal at betr verði, Fms. x. 261²⁰. Rune incisa vel sententia? hann hafði króka-spjót í hendi haugtekít ok mál í, (the runes were legible? or of important signification?), Laxd. c. 21. 78⁹. nú eru tekin Grásiðu brot, ok görir þorgrímr þar af spjót . . . mál vóru í, ok fært í hepti spannar-langt, (i. e. fært spjót í hepti), Gísl. Cod. 113³⁶, cf. mála sax, Fas. i. 514¹⁵. Unus integer sensus, logice—a complete period, hér er mál fullt í hverju visu-orði, Sn. E. brh. 86. 234⁹. hér er tvau mál full komin í hverju visu-orði, 85. 233²¹. ok er sá visu-helmingr ei elligar réttir at máli, 91. 235²⁷. The mode (either with an usual or artificial term) of appellation in poetry (as, for instance, that a man be called 'maðr,' or be called 'skjald-tré,' or the like); tveinn eru kyn þau er greina skáldskap allan: hver tveinn? mál ok hættir, hvert máltak er haft til skáldskapar? þrenn er etc., Sn. E. skm. i. 93³. þá þykkja nýggörvingar vel kveðnar ef þat mál er upp er tekit haldi of alla visu-lengd, Sn. E. brh. 82. 230¹⁷. þeir ámæltu skáldskapnum Sighvats, ok kölluðu at hann hefði eigi rétt ort at máli, Fms. v. 209³, cf. bragar-mál, Sn. brh. 84. 232 (a poetical. . .). Lingua, idioma, er þú lætr eigi þurfa í váru máli þessa níu raddar-stafi, Sn. E. lat. c. 3. 277²⁴. mæl þú nú við mik girzkt mál, No. 677. 75¹⁹. Haraldr var njök stírt um norrænt mál, Fms. vii. 165⁴. Postulatum, demand, assertion, Hákon konungr hafði skrá látið allar Eyjar fyrir vestan Skotland þær sem hann kallaði sér, en Skota-konungr hafði nefit þær sem hann vildi eigi lausar láta, . . . en um aðra hluti var skamt milli máls konunga, en þó gekk eigi settin saman, Fms. x. 132². (ok miðlum svá mál á miðli þeirra) at hvárir tveggju hafi nakkvat síns máls, Ísl. S. i. 12²⁰. hann festi járnburð at svá skyldi sanna mál hans, Fms. vii. 230¹⁹. hefir hann í marga staði mikit til síns máls, 221¹⁰. hafa hér hvárir tveggju mikit til síns máls, Nj. c. 56. 88³. þá skal sá þeirra hafa sitt mál er eið vill at vinna, Gr. i. Kb. 3. 393¹. þeir skulu dómeindr sitt mál hafa er fleiri eru samau þar, 29. 430¹⁷. Gunnlaugr skal fyrr flytja fyrir, þviat hánum eirir verit ef hann hefir eigi sitt mál, Gunnl. 9. 110²². þessi eru þau dæmi er sýna hit sama mál, (i. e. at guð görði brigð á skipaðum dómi), Sks. Cod. 118^a. 17. Pactum, stipulatio, agreement, stipulation, condition, enda á þat at halda með þeim . . . nema þau vili annat mál á göra, Gr. i. fp. 23. 336¹⁵; and 22. 335⁴. nú bregðr hann (gríðmaðr) máli, við fleiri menn, i. þp. 56. 148²³. en ek skal lauss allra mála ef hann kenir eigi þá út, Gunnl. c. 5. 80⁵, cf. 9. 116¹⁵. Effatum, mandatum, sá er . . . fyr-litit mál Guðs ok setning laga, No. 677¹⁸. sá er elskar mik mun halda mál mín, 17²². Diversæ formulæ processuarie, . . . decisio, effatum etc., enda er eigi heimting til málsins, Gr. i. Kb. c. 81. 497¹⁵. skulut mál hans standask um þá sök, Gr. i. þp. c. 21. 64¹³. enda er svá sem þeir mæli eigi þeim málum, nema þeir vinni eida at, ii. lb. 46. 342²⁹, cf. 21. 25. skulu þeirra manna mál standask . . . hvar þess er þeir taka eigi af alþingis-máli, Gr. i. umb. 31. 296²². enn er sá hlutr í lögum er þú hefir eigi kennt mér, þat er at festa mér konu, þorsteinn segir: þat er litit mál, ok kendi honum atferli, Gunnl. c. 4. 54⁹. hann skal segja í annat sínu fram sökina, ok fara svá öllu máli um, sem hann hafi áðr ekki um mælt, Gr. i. þp. c. 12. 40²⁶. kveðr Ottarr jarl þings, ok mælti þeim málum á þinginu, at Hákon jarl skyldi heita vargi í veum, Fms. xi. 40²². ef hann kveðr svá at, ok hafði í máli sínu 'heilr ráð ok heimilt,' en eigi ella, Gr. i. fp. 7. 317¹⁶. Negotium, res, status. 1. negotium et res simili sensu, þórólfr bað Ölvi byrja mál sitt, Eg. c. 16. 62¹⁵. Svertingr gekk á konungs fund ok flutti mál sitt, Laxd. 41. 180¹⁶. hann fanu þafama, ok tók hann þar lausa af honum allra sína mála (of all be pad committed), Orkn. 21. 86. ok muntú nú verða mér at trúta til málanna þinna allra, Fms. xi. 104¹⁹, cf. Nj. c. 6. 10⁷. sitr hann þar nú at málum sínum við vegsemi, xi. 4⁵. vit leitumum ekki fyrst þessa mála við Brynjólf, E. c. 9. 40⁴. þikki mér nú vandask málit er ek hefi áðr ráðit brúðlaup mitt, Nj. 2. 41³. takit er nú höfðingja þann er yðr þikkir bezt til fallinu, því at einhver mun þurfa at vera fyrir málinu, 124. 192⁷. ef maðr handalsar manni sátt . . . ok skilja þeir þat mál eigi görir enn svá (the matter, affair, almost stipulation), Gr. i. þp. 50. 136⁶. vil ek því heita, at eiga síðan allt mitt mál undir yðr föstbræðrum, Fas. 2. 532³⁴. en þessi maðr er keisari hafði verið gjörð slíkt af sínu máli sem hafði hann áður rætt, Fms. vi. 73, var. 3 (af sin Sag). Því hverr hann vill leggjask í at iðka þetta mál, þá hlýtr hann etc. (buic materia incumbere), Rimb. ii. 90. 312². eigi maðr á annat mál at deila í kirkju nema biðja fyrir sér ok öllu Kristnu fólki, No. 619. 34². Negotium nuptiale, Austmadrinn heldr nú á málinu við bónda, svá at Flosi var hjú, Nj. c. 149. 259¹⁶. en er þetta mál var við Jórúni rætt, þá svarar hún etc., Laxd. c. 9. 22⁷. ek skal fara á fund Burizláfs konungs ok vitja málanna fyrir hönd okkra beggia, Fms. xi. 104¹⁹. þó lézk hann enn tala mundu málit fyrir hans hönd, Fas. i. 364⁴. en svá er mál með vexti at fátt hefir verið etc., Lvs. c. 14. 43⁴. svá er mál með grenni, at etc. (of tenderness), Fas. iii. 59¹⁰. The use below carried further and generalized? mun honum þó eigi miklu þikkja launadr uxinn... at ek hitta hann ef honum þikkir máli skipta, Eg. c. 87. 742¹⁷. hann kveðsk ok engu máli þikkja skipta, Heiðv. c. i. 282²¹. þótti henni allmiklu máli skipta, S. ii. Ól. Helg. c. 31. 33⁸. um þá hluti er vér þikkja miklu máli skipta, Fms. xi. 213¹⁴. ef hánun þótti máli varða, VV, 12. 260⁵. ef yðr þótti nökkuru máli varða um hans vináttu, S. ii. Ól. Helg. c. 135. 229¹. en þá skiptir eigi máli hver gögn þá fara á lengr, Gr. i. þp. 13. 43³. um þat er þú kvaddir þess kvídar er eigi átti máli at skipta um vig Auðólfs, Nj. c. 56. 87²⁷. 2. res, status, líu ek þá í vöggu er þær (sc. völvur) skyldu tala um mitt mál, Fas. i. 340¹⁹. faðir minn fór vestr til Írlands, ok er þat vitadr hver stórtíðendi gerðusk um hans mál, Fms. vii. 124²¹. vit förum kynliga með okkr um málin segir Hrappur, Nj. c. 87. 130²⁴. allt var þat annat mál segir Hallr, ér vátur þá vígreiðir, hafit ér nú of mikít at gert, Nj. 147. 256². ekki eru þau efni um várt mál, þvát ek sé at boðar eru á bæði þorr, Laxd. c. 21. 76². en þó skalt þú svá um þitt mál hugsa, ef þetta berr saman, at etc., Nj. c. 55. 85²¹. em ek þá þegar skildir við þin mál... kvadr hann at heimilu skiljask við sin mál ef hann ryfi sættina (partes), Fms. xi. 396. 19 seqq. þeir fóru á konungs fund, ok tóluðu mál Íslendinga (cause, part), Fms. x. 296. 29. er mál hans stendr í svá miklum háska, No. 655. xxxii. 1¹³. Causa, lis, actio, et fortasse, injuria delictum sæpius usurpatur promiscue cum 'sök'. sókn skal fara fyrr fram hvers máls enn vörn, Gr. i. þp. 18. 59¹. ek... seg þat Guði, at ek mun svá færa mál öll fram hér at ferasdómi etc., 48. 135¹, cf. Nj. 64. 99⁷ ubi = sök l. 5; et Gr. i. þp. 46. 361²¹. þá skal þeim er með mál fer... rétt at taka til sóknar etc., Kb. 72. 490¹³, cf. þp. 134. 348¹⁹. hardráðr við úvini sína enn tillaga göðr hinna stærri mála, Nj. c. i. 2¹⁰. Gunnarr sökier mál þetta á þingi, hann kvaddi búa til máls, 24. 36¹⁰, cf. Gr. i. umb. 32. 297¹⁶. Rútr nefndi vátta ok sagði únytt málit, Nj. 24. 36¹⁶. Njáll... kveðsk borgit munu geta málinu ok sökinni, (as well the form as the action itself), 36¹⁹. þeir váru... lagamenn miklir... þeir veittu Gizuri hvíta at hverju máli, c. 56. 86²⁰. þeir... létu þat standa fyrir kvíðburði um mál Auðólfs at aðili var í Noregi, 87¹³. ef sá maðr andask er sök hefir selda eða til búna, þá er hann er aðili, ok þá hverfr mál þat undir hans erfingja, Gr. i. þp. 55. 142⁵. sá ríðr síðast, segir Kári, at ek vil eigi drepa... hánun hefir farit þó bezt í málum várum áðr, Nj. c. 146. 254⁷. ok hefir sá sök er hann hefir mál á höndum, Gr. i. þp. 10. 38¹. veit hann vánir leyndr mála með þeim... eru cigi þá sakarnar settri enn áðr, þp. 47. 362¹. þriggja alþinga mál eru þetta allt, Gr. i. þp. 32. 346¹². ef hann vill tí ens meira máls færa, ok skal hann stefna, etc., Gr. i. Kb. 29. 430¹⁷. sama mála á bróðir samuæðr, Gpl. m. eb. 7. 240. ok ef kona á þann hluta máls, Krr. 9. 17. 124. Fere insimulatio, reatus, stefndi Sigurðr konungur þá þing... ok báð Sigurðr Hranason svara þar málum fyrir sik, Fms. vii. 130¹⁹. ok mun þá verða svarat máli því, Nj. c. 64. 99⁷. Njáll... spurði alla hina beztu menn... hvert máll þeim þótti Gunnarr eiga á þeim nöfnum fyrir fjórráðin, c. 70. 105²⁶. þá eru þeir vadrir máli ef þeir fá þann bjargkvið, Gr. i. þp. 16. 54². versk hann þá málinu, þp. 7. 317²⁸. en þau ur málinu ef þóðólfir hittisk ei þar, Laxd. c. 15. 44¹². ? en um xii mánaði stendr þeirra mál, Gr. i. þp. 55. 143¹⁸. compounds, lis, Vestfjarða-mál, = process tilborende Vestfirðir, Stu. A. B. c. 53. ii. 81¹⁰. Boejarhögn-mál, angaende Boejarhögni, Guðm. 19¹⁸. Áshildar-mál, angaende Áshildir, 103²⁴. XL. marka-mál, Gpl. 185¹⁶.

II. Leading signification.

a.—mensura, fimm álna er hátt mál hans, Fms. vi. 429¹⁵. at þeir haði jammiklir menn verið þá er þeir genu undir mál, Laxd. c. 41. 178¹⁹ and Fms. ii. 79¹⁴. hann lagði mál við öll en stærstu tré, bæði bita ok staflægjur etc., Laxd. c. 74. 316²². ef málit gengi saman þá er optarr þeir reynt etc., Korm. c. 3. 8. hann lyptir honum ór söðlinum ok kastar honum máls-lengð frá sér á leik-völlinn svá at í sundr ganga líti rífin í hánun, No. 580^a. 717. Tempus (facere ali- quid), time, fitting time, point of time, period (mæl or mál), en hús- bóndi sá sveri um, er hann hafði inni sitt, at hann var þar þá nótt ok á því máli, Norske love 309²³. skipverjum þótti mál ór haði, er á líðit var mjök sumarit, L. N. B. p. iii. c. 12. 156²⁵ (= Ísl. Sr. i. 206⁹). fara síðan niðr þriðja sinni, þar til er Kjartani þikkir allt mál upp, S. i. Ól. Tryggv. 88. 297³. þar til er Njáll talar at mönnum væri mál at lýsa sökum sínum, Nj. c. 67. 149²⁵. þá minnti biskup konung á, at mál væri at ganga at sofa, Fms. ii. ... 138²⁷. ok er mál at vér farim til Austreyjar, it is high time, Fær. c. 55. 255. mál er at leita at hestum várum, Kor. c. 19. 182. konungur spurði ef þegar væri mál at ríða, Fms. ii. 139¹⁴. ok er allt mál at ættvig þessi takisk af, Laxd. c. 59. 258². ? þá metask kvídr þeirra sem þá at í mál yrði borinn kvídrinn (in due time? or = í dóm?), Gr. i. þp. c. 16. 54²². 2. tempus prauendendi et cœnandi? (morning and evening meal-time), ef hánun er eigi deildir matr at málum, Gr. i. þp. 56. 194⁴. ok ala þá hvára tveggju í eitt mál ef rúmheilagt er (cf. l. 23 í tvö mál), Gr. i. umb. 30. 293¹⁹. Cod. A. en stýrimennu skulu feða þá í trau mál, (Cod. B.) Gr. ii. Skmf. 2. 400²⁷. ok oxa þarf hann (sc. ormrinn) í mál, Fas. i. 238⁷. biskups efni vildi ok láta gefa fátækum mönnum mat í tvö mál, Stu. p. 3. c. 13. ía. 216¹⁴. þat er ok mitt ráð, þó þat sé at fyrra máli, at menn snæði nökkut ok drekki, though before the meal (meal)-time, Fms. viii. 381, var. 18 (al. var. í fyrra lagi).

b.—quarta pars anni, í misseri eru mál trau, en í máli eru mánuðr þrír, Rb. i. c. 3. 6¹¹. mánuðr iii. Ann. No. 415. 4²⁸.

(Finis, being altogether about 180 references in seven somewhat closely-written pages in Mr. Cleasby's volume.)

2.—THE SAME WORD IN THE COPENHAGEN TRANSCRIPTS

(Transmitted to England in 1854, from which Mr. Vigfusson had to work).

mál, n., A) speech, 1) speech, power of expressing thoughts by words: Sn. ... , Fms. i. 97, x 148. Rb. 347, 348. Þeir glötuðu einnar tungu máli (speech in one language), er forðum vildu stöpl smíða í gegn guði, 677 p. 19.—b) voice, organ of speech: Honocentaurus hefir tvenn m. (ur. mól), 673 p. 47.—c) language, tongue, idiom: Fms. vii 165. Mæl þú við mik gerzkt m., 677 p. 75. Sn. 161. Sumum (gefisk) mála þýðing, 677 p. 20.—2) speech, talk, verbal utterance: Eg. 735. Nj. 200. Fms. iv 28, 374 (lit. other speech= prose), vii 158, ix 535. Fas. ii 512. Ld. 106, 130. En er hann hafði þetta mælt, fylldisk m. hans, 623 p. 43. þá svarar drottinn várr með málum Davíðs própheta (in the words of David), 619 p. 31. (hann) bar mikít m. á, at (be) insisted much: Fms. x 93.—b) expression, mode of expression, form of a language (= Lat. effatum): Sks. 301. Grág. i 40, 317. Fms. xi 40.—c) colloquy, discourse: Nj. 10. Eg. 106, 601, 764. Fms. i 204. Ef þeir vildu hafa hans m. if they wished his audience: Fms. vii 241.—Espec., answer, reply: Eg. 703. Hkr. i 77. Fas. iii 525.—3) anything told, spoken, or written:

þat var m. manna it was told, Nj. 268. Eg. 29. Fms. vii 150. hafa at (á) máli to speech of, make mention of: Fms. vii 301. Ld. 88.—narration, relation: Ld. 314. Fms. xi 41.—b) appointment, judgment, decision: Grág. i 69, 296, ii 342.—c) assertion, demand: Ísl. i 12. Fms. vii 221, 230. Nj. 58. Grág. i 393. Ísl. ii 237.—d) agreement, stipulation, condition: Grág. i 148, 236. Ísl. ii 217.—e) command, commandment... : Sá er lítr... m. guðs ok setning laga, 677 p. 1. Sá er elskar mik mun halda m. mín, 677 p. 17.—f) proverb, saying: Fms. x 261.—g) a complete period: Sn. 124, 125.—h) the mode of appellation (either with an usual or artificial term) in poetry: Sn. 49, 123. Fms. v 209.—i) engraved Runes or Runic words: Ld. 78. NO. viii 18.—B) something to be managed or transacted, 1) business, affair: Engi maðr á annat m. at deila í kirkju, nema biðja fyrir sér ok öllu kristnu fólki, 619 p. 34. Eg. 62, 40. Ld. 180. Fms. xi 104. Fas. ii 532. Nj. 192.—Espec., affair, business of courtsþip: Nj. 259. Ld. 22. Fas. i 364. Fms. xi 104.—b) matter, affair: Nj. 4. Rb. 312. Grág. i 136 (stipulation?).—svá er m. með vexti íbe is this, of that condition: Í. 43. Fas. iii 59.—var þat annat m. it another affair: Nj. 256.—c-t skiptir (varðar) máli (miklu, litlu or like) a thing is of importance: Eg. 742. Hkr. ii 32, 207. Fms. xi i. 1. 260.—skiptir þá eigi máli then it is indifferent: Grág. i 43.—á eigi máli at skipta a thing is not relating to: Nj. 87.—c) state, circumstance, condition: Fas. i 340. Fms. vii 124. Ld. 76. Nj. 85. En þans stendr í svá miklum háska, 655 xxxii p. 1.—d) cause: Fms. x xi 396. Grág. i 143.—2) cause, process, action: Grág. i 38, 59, 362. Nj. 2, 36, 86, 87, 254.—the form of an action: Nj. 36.—b) right, right of inheritance: Gpl. 240.—c) charge, indictment, complaint, accusation: Grág. i 54, 317. Nj. 99. Ld. 44. Fms. vii 130.— guilt (=Lat. reatus): Grág. i 430. Nj. 105.—C) measure. 1) of local character. a) measure, dimension (height, longitude): Korm. 8. Fms. vi 329.—b) measure, that by which anything is measured: Ld. 178, 316.—Also it seems to have been used in notion of a certain measure; cfr. málsleingd.—2) of temporal character. a) time, period, point of time: Ngl. i 309, 240.—b) time, fitting time: Ísl. i 206. Nj. 149. Fms. ii 138, 139. þat er m., at it is high time: Far. 255. Korm. 182. Ld. 258.—c) meal (morning and evening with regard to milking of cattle, sheep, twice a day): Grág. ii 230, 231. Cf. í II, B, 1, e.—d) meal time (also with regard to morning and evening): Grág. i 149.—at fyrra máli before the usual (meal) time: Fms. viii 381 (var.).—e) quarter (of a year): Rb. 6.

N. B.—This word is (with very few exceptions) a fair specimen of the Copenhagen transcripts for the whole of the letters A, B, E, G, L, M, R, T, Þ, Æ, Ö, and for the half or two-thirds of H. See the Preface, p. vi.—G. V.

II.—A SPECIMEN OF MR. CLEASBY'S VERBS. THE VERB 'FÁ,' leaving out all references, only shewing the frame-work or model on which Mr. Cleasby worked out his verbs. The references given by Mr. Cleasby are about 110.

—fæ, fōngum* (sic), fékk, fengum, fenginn, v. a. et n.
Forma activa—sensus activus.
to get, receive, obtain, take, procure, as well willingly as without consent. to get, receive, take, willingly as something desired, accipere, nanquam acc.: at ek mána lítið brauð fá eðr annan mat, Fms. x. (References follow.)
um genitivo:
eir börðusk við lands-menn ok fengu þar fjár nikils, Nj. 89. 137²⁹.
uldr konungr fékk þeirrar konu er Ragnhildr hét, Fms. i. 4¹⁵, Nj. 24¹⁹. (More references follow.)
to get, receive, without one's consent, or something disagreeable, wished, or which comes upon a person. (References follow.)

3. with the signification to procure, provide. (References follow.)
This verb is also used in the signification 'to be able' to accomplish (posse), in connexion with the participle preterite . . . fá e-n veiddan . . . with the participle omitted. (References follow.)
(absolute) without subject, i. e. 'maðr' understood, vápn svá góð at eigi fær önnur slík, Nj. 30. 44².
B. sensus neuter.
impersonal. (References.)
C. sensus activa (sic), with the signification to deliver, make over, give, etc., tradere. (References.)
II. Forma passiva. 1. recipr. signification (references). 2. reflect. signification (references). 3. passive signification (references). 4. participle adjective (references).

* Thus by a slip of the pen for fáin, mod. fáum.

II.—A SPECIMEN OF MR. CLEASBY'S PRINTED MATTER. THE WORD 'AT.'

AT

conj. (G. þatei. A. S. þæt. Ohg. daz). It is also sometimes found in MSS. written ad.—ut, quod, and as relative pron. qui, quæ, &c.
that, to.
of consecutive character—that. hann var svá mikill lagamaðr at er þóttu lögligr dómarr nema hann væri í. Nj. i, 1. hárit...svá mikill at tók ofan á belt. 1, 2¹³. svá kom of síðir því máli, at Sigvaldi undan. Fms. xi. 95.—also without a preceding svá. Bæring var einn eptir hánum, at hann komst fyrr í borgina en hann fengi náð m. 580 a. 15²⁸. so that he got into, &c. skyrturnar dagnaðr í konungssynni, at hann sakaði ekki. Fas. iii. 441.
where design, intention is expressed—that = in order that. frest þú undan valdi Serkja at öll veraldarbyggðin viti at þú einn er drottinn. 437. þeir...skáru fyrir þá meliun, at þeir dæi eigi af sulti. Nj. 265. fyrsti lutr bókarinnar er Kristindóms-bólkr, at menn skili illiga trú vera grundvöll ok upphaf allra góða verka. Gul. M. viii. connecting two propositions—that. þat var einhverju sinni, at kuldr hafði vinaboð. Nj. i, 2. þat var á palmddrottinsdag at Olafur gekk víti um stræti. Fms. ii. 244. vilda ek at þú ræðiz austr. Nj. 38, 57. ef svá kann at verða, að þeir láti síga ok renni n. Fms. xi. 94.—used in connexion—a. with þó, signifying together, although.—svarar hann þó rétt at hann svari svá. Grág. þs. 23. þó er rétt at nýta hann, at hann sé þó fyrir skorinn.

AT

Krist. g. 32, 134. gef þú mér, þó at úverðugri...at geta son. Stj. 315. þó at nökkurum mönnum sýnist þetta með freku sett...þávilj um vér gjarna eða vinna. Fms. vi. 21.—also without þú, in the same signification. eigi mundi hon þá meirr hvata göngunni, at hon hræddiz bana sinn. Sn. Ed. 99. 12. 12²².—b. with því, signifying together, because.—því þégi ek, at ek undrumst hvð mikil ógnarraust, &c. Fms. iii. 201. því er þessa getit at þat þótti vera raun mikil. Laxd. 19, 68¹. því at allir voru gerviligr synir hans. id. því at af íþróttum verðr maðr fróðr. Skuggs. 243 b. 3⁹. 20.—but as þó and því (which see) are often used alone in this signification, without at, this latter has something of a superfluous character; this is much more decidedly the case in—c. of modern appearance after ef. ef at þú laggr hlut þinn við þetta. Ljósv. 14, 45.—also in relative propositions, see B. 4.—d. it is used elliptically at the beginning of a proposition in forensic language, a preceding phrase or formula being left out, or to be understood, as, it is decreed, the law ordains, or the like.—at þeir skulu með váttorð þá sok sækja. Grág. þs. 22. i. 65³⁰. ef sök kömr á hendr þeim manni er í dóm er nefndr, at hánum er rétt hvárt sem hann vill, at verja sök þa eða, &c. 21, 64². 28, 79¹⁹. 38, 106².—e. used also with a pret. participle, where the personal pron. and auxiliary verb are left out.—nú hefi ek gört sem þú beiddist, at lokit upp með (noccorum) nökkurum orðum fyrir þér því orminn mælti. Skuggs. 243 b. 109 a¹⁵. i. e. at ek hefi lokit upp. þá hafa þeir með þessu efni skýringar górvor, at hugleitt hverr grundvöllr eða hvort efni hefir, &c. id. 113 a. 2. i. e. at þeir hafa hugleitt. nú hefir guð þat hefnr er hann hefir heitit þær, at sent í hendr þær úvin þinn. id. 147 a. b. i. e. at hann hefir sent.

AT

4. used before an infinitive—to. mikit mant þú þurfa fram at leggja með honum. Nj. 2, 3¹⁷. hafa þeir þó yrit at vinna. Fms. xi. 95¹¹. ok varð nú við að smíast ok veita vörn. 96². after certain verbs, as kunna, láta, mega, munu, skulu, þykkja, vilja; when used as incomplete ones before the infinitive of another verb, it is left out before this infinitive. þeir er mildliga kunnu styra guðs hjörð. 619. 37¹⁶. svá hygginn at hann kunni fyrir sökum ráða. Grág. vs. 37. ii. 75²⁸. Gunnarr mun af því láta vaxa óþokka við þik. Nj. 71. 107². þeir Hvamverjar létu fara ordum, at, &c. Laxd. 16. 50¹⁷. lét hún þar sjandskap í móti koma. 16. 50¹⁴. litlar sögur megu ganga frá hesti mínum. Nj. 58. 90⁷. í allnu lutum þeim er þryða má góðan höfðingja. Fms. x. 230. þar man vera Gunnarr frændi þinn. Nj. 54, 85. þat mundi jörunn systir mín ætla. 180²⁵. ek veit þann mann er kunna man. Guðm. 13²⁰. nú skalt þú deyja. Nj. 42, 64. skyldi Unnr sitja þrjá vetr í festum. 2, 4²⁴. Sveinn...þikki þat tjá at hann fær eigi haldit tign sinni. Fms. xi. 86⁸. fyrir sakastaði þá er hann þótti á eiga. Nj. 106, 166. hann þóttiz játa því. Nj. 81, 121. nú vil ek spyrja yðr hvat þær sáþ. 23. 35. Guðrún kvaðst vildu vita hvat þeir vildu at hafast. Laxd. 48, 216.—β. It is also sometimes the case with eiga and ganga. modur sína á maðr fyrst fram færa. Grág. ú. 1. i. 232⁴. þá á þann kvið enskis meta—þs. 18. i. 59¹⁹. but l. 26. á þat enskis at meta, er koungur var sofa genginn, var sveinninn eptir í höllinni. Fms. vi. 6. and on the whole not uncommon in both constructions.—γ. with the verbs hljóta and verða, when used in the signification, must, and placed after the infinitive of the other verb (when placed before it, at is retained: see hljóta and verða)—hær mantu vera hljóta. Nj. 86, 129. en fara hlýtr þú með mér til Jónsborgar. Fms. i. 159¹⁶. þat munu þeir ok vita verða. Fóstb. 9, 32. en vita verð ek, hvar til þetta heyrir. Fms. ii. 146¹². but cases also occur where verða is placed first. þó verðr maðr eptir mann lífa. Fas. ii. 552. hann man verða sökja. Fms. viii. 19.—b. as an exception it is sometimes found retained. ok ef svá kann at verða. Fms. xi. 94. hvært sem hann vill at verja sök þa, eða, &c. Grág. þs. 21, i. 64. fyrr viljum vèr önga kórónu at bera, en nökkut ófrelsi á oss at taka. Fms. x. 12.—c. it is also occasionally left out where it should be used. þessa hátið lögtaka, þá er guð gefr oss, finnast á prestastefnu. Dipl. ii. 14¹⁰. tak lög af læknisgrasi...ok gef hánum drekka. 655. xxx. 1⁸.—2. it sometimes expresses intention, design—to=in order to. Öxurr bauð þeim inn í búðina at drekka. Nj. 2, 4. þenna myrginn gekk Kolr...í borg at kaupa silfr. 158, 280. (hann) sendi riddara sína með þeim at vorveita (= varðveita) þær. 623, 45²⁶.

AT

B. used relatively—as the indecl. relat. pron. er is sometimes used for at, we also find at sometimes used for er.

1. causative—since, because. hann skal...mæla sva: at ek færi yðr (sc. ómaga) at þær erut í einum hrepp allir. Grág. ú. 8. i. 260¹³. as, in that, because you all inhabit the same district. eigi er kynligt at Skarphedinn sè hraustr, at þat er mælt at fjórðungi bregði til fóstrs. Nj. 42, 64. since it is said—these approach nearly to at=því at, with því left out.

2. temporal—as, when. jafnan er mér þá verra í hug er ek ferr á braut þaðan, enn þá at ek kem. Greð. Cod. 165¹³. sem ek kvað þá at ek lýsta. Nj. 142, 233. þar til at vèr vitum hvært fundr várr mun verða, ok bónda. Fms. v. 53.

3. as a relative pronoun—who, which. en engi mun sá, at minnismara mun vera um þenna atburð...enn mér. Laxd. 55, 242. Guðrún er komin gegnt rekkju þeirri, at Kjartan var vanr at liggja í. 46, 202. svá mikil sem þau blótnaut at stærst verða. Fms. ii. 214.

4. used superfluously in relative propositions. með fullkómun ávexti...hverr at þekkr ok þægiligur mun verða hinum hæstum himnakoungi. Fms. v. 159. Ólafir konungur spurði Önund konung hvern styrk at hann mundi fá honum. 44. allir kirkjusóknarmenn, þeir sem at færir eru til, skulu koma til sóknarkirkju. Hist. ii. 82. ek undrumst hvè mikil ógnarraust at liggr í þær. Fms. iii. 201. nú mun ek segja, yðr því at ek eni Nornagestr kallaðr. Fas. i. 340⁷. wherefore I am.

☞ in attu, which see—enclitically for at þú. Fms. xi. 66—81.

A—Á

A is the first letter in all the alphabets of Phœnician extraction. The Runic alphabet, being confused and arbitrary, makes the sole exception to this rule.

A. PRONUNCIATION: it is either simple (a) or diphthongal (á). The simple a is pronounced long or short; when long it is sounded like the long Italian a as in padre, or as in Engl. father; when short, like the short Italian a as in cambio, or as in Engl. marry. The á—though in grammars commonly called a long vowel—is phonetically diphthongal (a + u), and sounds like Engl. ou or ow: Engl. thou and Icel. þú, now and ná, have almost the same sound. Again a and á have, like all other vowels, diphthongs or simple, a deep, full chest-sound if followed by a single consonant, or by more than one weak consonant (a liquid followed by a media). They sound short if followed by two or more strong consonants (a double mute or liquid): thus the a and á sound long in tál, sermo; sát, sedebat; mán, mancipium; tál, dolus; ár, remus; sát, sessio; hátr, odium; hárdur, durus; káldr, frigidus; vándr, difficilis; támdr, domitus, etc. But short in hátt, pileum; hátt, modum; mánn, hominem; bánn, interdictum; háll, lubricus; kált, frigidum; rámt, acidum; hárt, durum; vánt, assuetum, etc.; the consonants shortening the sound of the preceding vowel. The a is also short in all endings, verbal or nominal, tála, tálár, táláðá, dixi; tálást, dicitur; váká, vigilia; fágrán, pulchrum, etc. Etymologically a distinction must be made between the primitive á, as in sátu (sedebant), átu (edebant), gátu (poterant), and the á produced by suppressing consonants; either nasals, as in á, úst, áss, báss, gás, = an, anst, ans, bans, gans; or gutturals, b, g, k, as in á (aqua), sá (videbat), lá (jacebat), má (debet), nátt (nox), dráttur (tractus), and a great many others; or labials, v, f, as in á = af, ár = af, hár but háfan; or dentals, as in nál (acus) [Goth. neþla, Engl. needle], vúl (ambitus, mendicitas) [A.S. vúll], etc. In very early times there was no doubt an audible distinction between these two kinds of á, which however is not observed even by the earliest poets, those of the 10th century. The marking of the diphthongal vowels with an acute accent is due to the Icelandic philologist Thorodd (circa 1080–1140), and was probably an imitation of Anglo-Saxon. The circumflex, applied by Jacob Grimm, is unknown to Icel. authors of whatever age. Thorodd, in his treatise on the vowels (Skálda, pp. 160 sqq.), distinguishes between three kinds of vowels, viz. sbort, long (i.e. diphthongal), and nasal. The long ones he proposes to mark with an acute (´); the nasals by a dot above the line (˙). The vowels of his alphabet are thirty-six in number. According to his rule we should have to write, af (ex), át (esus), á (in). No doubt the a was also nasal in the verbs and the weak nouns, komá (= koman), augá (gen.); and also when followed by an n, e.g. vánn (assuefactus). The distinctive marking of the nasals never came into practice, and their proper sound also disappeared; neither is this distinction observed by the poets in their rhymes. The marking of the diphthongal vowels—either the primitive vowels or those formed by agglutination—by an acute accent, according to the rule of Thorodd, is indeed used in a very few old Icel. parchment fragments of the 12th century. The only MS. of any considerable length which strictly observes this distinction is the Ann. Reg. Ísl. 2087. 4^b. Royal Libr. Copenhagen, written in Icel. at the end of the 13th century. In the great bulk of MSS. both kinds of vowels are treated alike, as in Latin. About the middle of the 14th century the doubling of vowels, especially that of aa (aa) = á, came into use, and was employed through more than three centuries, until about 1770 the Icelanders resumed the spelling of Thorodd, marking diphthongal vowels by an acute accent, but following the rules of modern pronunciation. The diphthong au—in Norse freq. spelt ou—has at present in Icel. a peculiar sound, answering to äu or eu in German, and nearly to Engl. oi. The Norse pronunciation is different and perhaps more genuine.

B. CHANGES. I. a changes into e, & into æ: this change—a part of a more general transformation, by Grimm termed umlaut, ‘vowel-change’—is common to all the Teutonic idioms, except the Gothic (v. letter E and Æ).

II. a changes into ö (o), & into ó: this transformation is peculiar to the Scandinavian branch, esp. the Icelandic idiom, where it is carried on to the fullest extent—in old Swedish and Danish its use was scanty and limited. It takes place, 1. in monosyllabic nouns with a for their radical vowel, a. feminines, öld, periodus; önd, anima; örk, arca; för, iter; höll, aula; hönd, manus; sök, causa, etc. β. adjectives in fem. sing. and in neut. pl., öll, tota; fögr, pulchra; hörd, dura; hölt, clauda; sönn, vera; from allr, etc. γ. in plur. neut., bönd, vincula; börn, træva; lönd, terrae; from band, etc. δ. in singular masculines with a suppressed u in the root, hjörtr, ceruus; fjörðr, sinus; björn, ursus; örn, aquila, etc.

2. in dissyllables a radical a, when followed by a final u (-u, -ur, -um, etc.), in Icel. constantly changes into ö,—öllum, cunctis; mönnum, hominibus; köllum, vocamus; vökum, vigiliis and vigilamus; vökur, vigiliae, etc. Danes and Swedes here retained the a; so did a great part of Norway. The change only prevailed in the west of Norway and the whole of Iceland. Some Norse MSS. therefore constantly keep a in those cases, e.g. Cd. Ups. De la Gard. 8 (Ed. C. R. Unger, 1849), which spells allum, cunctis; hafuð, caput; jafur, rex; andverðr, adversus; afund, invidia, etc. (v. Pref. viii.) Other Norse MSS. spell a and ö promiscuously; allum or öllum, kallum or köllum. In Icel. this change prevailed about the year 1000. Even at the end of the 10th century we still frequently meet with rhymes such as barð—jarðu, þang—langu, etc.

3. a in inflexions, in penultimate syllables, if followed by u, changes into u (or ö); thus keisurum, caesaribus; viturum, sapientioribus; hördurum, durioribus; hördustum, durissimis: pret. pl., sköpuðu, creabant; töluðu, dicebant; orrustu, pugnam. In part. pass. fem. sing. and neut. pl., sköpuð, creata; töluð, dicta; töpuð, perdita. Neut. pl. in words, as sumur, aestates; heruð, pagi. This change is peculiar to Iceland, and is altogether strange to Norse MSS., where we constantly find such forms as ætlaðu, putabant; gnagaðu, mordebant; aukaðu, augebant; skapaðu, creata; kallaðu, dicta; skaparum, tapaðum, agetastum, hardarum, skinandum; kunnastu, artem, etc. This difference, as it frequently occurred at early times, soon gave the Icel. idiom a peculiar and strange sound,—amarunt would, in Icelandic, be ömurunt. Norse phrases—as með bænum ok fastu (föstu) hafðu (höfðu) með sér vaxljós, ok dýrkaðu (dýrkuðu) þa hælgu hátíð með fastu (föstu) ok vaktu (vöktu) þar um nóttina með margum (mörgum) aðrum (öðrum) vanferum mannum (mönnum), O. H. L. 87—sound uncouth and strange to Icel. ears; and so no doubt did the Icel. vowel transformations to Norse ears.

4. endings in -au, -all, e.g. feminines in -an, as hugsan, ætlan, iðran, frequently change into -un,—hugsun, ætlan, iðran, and are now always used so: gamall, vetus, f. gómull; einsamall, solus, f. einsómull. In modern Norse, gomol, eismol (Ivar Aasen); atal, atrox; ötull, strenuus; svikall, perfidus, and svikull; þriñaðr, mundities, and þriñaðr, etc.

5. In the cases correlative to II. 1, 2, the á in its turn changes into a vowel, by Thorodd marked ö: this vowel change seems to have been settled about the beginning of the 11th century, and prevailed in Iceland during the 12th, being constantly employed in MSS. of that time; about the end of that century, however, and the beginning of the next, it fell off, and at last became extinct. Its phonetical value, therefore, cannot now be precisely stated: it no doubt had an intermediate sound between á and ó, such as ö (o) has between a and o. Thorodd proposed to mark the short ‘umlaut’ ö by o; and the vowel change of á by ö (in the MSS. however commonly written o). INSTANCES: fem., ö, amnis; öst, amor; öf, funis; öf, remus; lög, lignum; sktó, libellus; sött, pax; söl, anima; nöl, acus; vön, spes: masc., höttur, modus; þróðr, filium; þóttur, funis; móttur, vis; öss, deus; ötr, nuntius: neut. pl., sör, vulnera; tör, däpva; möl, dicta; röd, consilia; vör, vera: adj. fem. and neut., köt, lata; fö, paucis; smö, parva; há, alta; föm, paucis; höm, altis: verbs, sö, videbant (but sá, videbat); götu, capiebant; ötu, edebant (but át, edebat), etc.: v. Frump. 26–28: e. g. sár (vulnus) veitti maðr mér eitt unum), sör mörg (multa vulnera) veitta ek hánum, Skálda (Thorodd), 162; öl (= öl, cerevisia) er drykkur, öl er band (vinculum), id. 163; tungan er málinu von (= vön, assuefacta), en at tönnnum er bitsins von (morsus expectatio), id.: frequently in the Grágás, lýsa sár sitt (vulnus) eðr sör (vulnera) ef fleiri eru, Kb. i. 151; sör en minni (vulnera leviora), 170; en meire sör (graviora), 174; síðan es sör eða ben voru lýst, 175; engi sör (nulla vulnera), sör, and röd, 176, 177; möl, ii. 51; vör, 158, etc.

C. OTHER CHANGES:—in modern Icel. the old syllable vá has changed into vo; vó of the 14th century having an intermediate form: thus von, spes; votr, madidus; vor, ver; vorr, noster; voði, periculum; koma, adventus; voru, erant, etc.: so also the á in the dat. hánum, illí, now honum, which is also employed in the editions of old writings; kómu = kvámu = kvómu, veniebant, etc. In Norway a was often changed into æ in the pronominal and adverbial forms; as hæna, illam; pær, pænn, pætt, ibi, illum; hence originate the mod. Dan. bende, der, den, det; in some Norse dialects even still dar, dat. The short a in endings in mod. Dan. changed into e (æ), e. g. komme, uge, talede, Icel. koma, vika; whereas the Swedes still preserve the simple a, which makes their language more euphonic than the mod. Dan. In most districts of Icel. an a before ng, nk, has changed into á, thus langr (longus), strangr (durus), krankr (aegrotus) are spelt lángr, kránger, etc. In the west of Iceland however we still say laugr, straugr, etc., which is the pure old form. The a becomes long when followed by lf, lm, lp, thus álfr, genius; álpt, cygnus; hálftr, dimidius; kálfr, vitulus; sjálfr, ipse; this is very old: the fem. hólf, dimíðia, which occurs in the 12th century, points to an á, not a; já = ja in hjálpa, skjálfa, etc. The lengthening before lm is later, — álmtr, ulmus; hálmtr, calamus; sálmtr, psalmus; hjálmtr, galea; málmtr, metallum, etc. In all these cases the á is not etymological. Also before ln in the plur. of alín, álmtr not alnar: lk, álka = alka, alca; bálkr = balkr; fálki = falki, faleo: háls = hals; frjáls = frjals; járn = jarn; skáld = skald; v. those words: arni, dat. of arinn, v. that word: the proper name Árni, properly Arni: abbati, abbas, úbóti: Adám, on the contrary, changed into Adam; Mária into Maria, Mary. The old spelling is still kept in márla, motacilla pectore albo, etc. In the 1st pers. pret. indic. and in the pres. and pret. conj. we have a changed into i, e. g. talaða to talaði, locutus sum; sagða, dixi, vilda, volui, hafða, habui, to sagði, vildi, hafði: in the 1st pers. pres. and pret. conj., hefða, habeream, hafá, babeam, to hefði, hafí. These forms occur as early as the beginning of the 13th century (e. g. in the Hulda, Cd. A. M. 66, fol. = Fms. vi. and vii). In the south of Iceland however (Reykjavík, the Árnes and Gullbringusýsla) the old forms are still frequently heard in bisyllabic preterites, esp. ek vilda, sagða, hafða, and are also employed in writing by natives of those districts.

D. a answers to Goth. a; A. S. ea (a, ä); allr, totus; Goth. alls; A. S. eall: the primitive á to Goth. ê, sátu, Goth. sêtun, sedebant; gráta, grêtan, lacrymari; láta, lêtan; vápn, vêpn, arma; vágr, vêgs, fluctus. The Icel. secondary á, on the contrary, must in the kindred Teutonic idioms be sought for under a vowel plus a consonant, such as an, ab, or the like. A. S. æ commonly answers to Icel. á, láta, A. S. lætan; dáð, A. S. ðæð; þráðr, A. S. þræð, Engl. thread; mál (καυρός), A. S. mæl, cp. Engl. meal. The A. S. á, on the contrary, etymologically answers to Icel. ei. The diphthong au answers to Goth. au, A. S. ea, — rauðr, Goth. rauds, A. S. reað, Engl. red. In English the a seems at very early times to have assumed its present ambiguous sound; this we may infer from A. S. words introduced into Icelandic. The river Thames in Icel. is spelt, as it is still pronounced in England, as Tems, which form occurs in a poem of the year 1016.

E. The Runic character for a was in the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon Runes (so termed by P. A. Munch) ǰ [A. S. ƿ]; so in the Golden Horn, on the stone in Thune in Norway (Ed. by P. A. Munch, 1857), and in the Bracteats. The Saxons called it ô = áss, deus. In the Runes it was the fourth letter in the first group (fuþork). The Scandinavians in their Runes used this character for o, and called it ôss, ostium, probably misled by the A. S. pronunciation of the homely word áss. This character, however, occurs only a few times in the common Runes, which in its stead used the A. S. Rune j, gêr, annonna, which is the fourth Rune in the second group (hnias, A. S. hnijs), called according to the northern pronunciation ár, annonna: this letter, ǰ or ǰ, has the form, as well as the name and place, of the A. S. j, ϕ.

A

-A or -AT or -T, a negative suffix to verbs, peculiar to Iceland and a part, at least, of Norway. Occurs frequently in old Icelandic poetry and laws, so as almost to form a complete negative voice. In the 1st pers. a personal pronoun k (g) = ek is inserted before the negative suffix, in the 2nd pers. a for tt. As a rule the pron. is thus repeated; má-k-at-ek, non possum; sé-k-at-ek, non video; hef-k-at-ek, non habeo; skal-k-at-ek; vil-k-at-ek, nolo; mon-k-at-ek, non ero, etc.: 2nd pers. skal-t-at-tu; mon-t-at-tu; gaf-t-at-tu, non dabis: and after a long vowel a tt, mátt-at-tu, sátt-at-tu; so almost invariably in all monosyllabic verbal forms; but not so in bisyllabic ones, máttir-a-þú, non poteris: yet in some instances in the 1st pers. a pronominal g is inserted, e. g. bjargi-g-a-k, verbally servem ego non ego; höggvi-g-a-k, non caedam; stúðvi-g-a-k, quin sistam; vildi-g-a-k, nolui; hafði-g-a-k, non habui; mátti-g-a-k, non potui; görði-g-a-k, non feci: if the verb has gg as final radical consonants, they change into kk, e. g. pikk-at-ek = pigk-k-at-ek, nolo accipere. In the 3rd pers. a and at or t are used indifferently, t being particularly suffixed to bisyllabic verbal flexions ending in a vowel, in order to avoid an hiatus, — skal-at or skal-a, non erit; but skolo-t, non sunt: forms with an hiatus, however, occur, — biti-a, non mordat; renni-a, ne currat; skriði-a, id.; leti-a, ne retardet; væri-a, ne esset; urðu-a, non erant: but biti-t, renni-t, skriði-t, urðu-t are more current forms: v. Lex. Poët. The negative suffix is almost peculiar to indic., conj., and imperat. moods; the neg. infin. hardly occurs. Nothing analogous to this form is to be found in any South-Teutonic idiom; neither do there remain any traces of its having been used in Sweden or Denmark. A single exception is the Runic verse on a stone monument in Öland, an old Danish province, now Swedish, where however the inscriptions may proceed from a Norse or Icel. hand. The Runic inscriptions run thus, sa'r aigi flo, ubbo did not fly, old Icel. 'fló-at', Baut. 1169. Neither does it occur in any Norse prose monuments (laws): but its use may yet be inferred from its occurrence in Norse poets of the 10th century, e. g. the poets Eyvind and Thiodolf; some of which instances, however, may be due to their being transmitted through Icel. oral tradition. In Bragi Gamli (9th century) it occurs twice or thrice; in the Haustlöng four times, in Ynglingatal four times, in Hákonarmál once (all Norse poems of the 10th century). In Icel. the suffixed negation was in full force through the whole of the 10th century. A slight difference in idioms, however, may be observed: Völuspá, e. g., prefers the negation by né (using vas-at only once, verse 3). In the old Hávamal the suffix abounds (being used thirty-five times), see the verses 6, 10, 11, 18, 26, 29, 30, 34, 37-39, 49, 51, 52, 68, 74, 88, 113-115, 126-128, 130, 134, 136, 147, 149, 151, 153, 159. In Skírnismál, Harbarðsljóð, Lokasenna—all these poems probably composed by the same author, and not before the 10th century—about thirty times, viz. Hbl. 3, 4, 8, 14, 26, 35, 56; Skm. 5, 18, 22; Ls. 15, 16, 18, 25, 28, 30, 36, 42, 47, 49, 56, 60, 62. Egil (born circa 900, died circa 990) abounds in the use of the suffixed neg. (he most commonly avails himself of -at, -gi, or né): so, too, does Hallfréð (born circa 968, died 1008), Einar Skálaglam in Vellekla (circa 940-995), and Thorarin in the Máhlíðingavísur (composed in the year 981); and in the few epigrams relating to the introduction of Christianity in Icel. (995-1000) there occur mon-k-ad-ek, tek-k-at-ek, vil-k-at-ek, hlífði-t, mon-a, es-a; cp. the Kristni S. and Njala. From this time, however, its use becomes more rare. Sighvat (born circa 995, died 1040) still makes a frequent but not exclusive use of it. Subsequent poets use it now and then as an epic form, until it disappeared almost entirely in poetry at the middle or end of the 13th century. In the Sólurjóð there is not a single instance. The verses of some of our Sagas are probably later than the Sagas themselves; the greatest part of the Völungakviður are scarcely older than the 11th century. In all these -at and conj. eigi are used indifferently. In prose the laws continued to employ the old forms long after they were abolished in common prose. The suffixed verbal negation was used, a. in the delivering of the oath in the Icel. Courts, esp. the Fifth Court, instituted about the year 1004; and it seems to have been used through the whole of the Icel. Commonwealth (till the year 1272). The oath of the Fifth (High) Court, as preserved in the Grágás, runs in the 1st pers., hefca ek fé borit í dóm þenna til ljós mér um sök þessa, ok ek monka bjóða, hefca ek fundit, ok monka ek finna, hvárki til laga né ólaga, p. 79; and again p. 81, only different as to ek hefca, ek monka (new Ed.): 3rd pers., hefirat hann fé borit í dóm þenna ok monat hann bjóða, ok hefirat hann fundit, ok monat hann finna, 80, 81; cp. also 82, and Nj. l. c. ch. 145, where it is interesting to observe that the author confounds the 1st and 3rd persons, a sign of decay in grammatical form. β. the Speaker (lögsgumaðr), in publicly reciting and explaining the law, and speaking in the name of the law, from the Hill of Laws (lögberg), frequently employed the old form, esp. in the legal words of command es and skal (yet seldom in plur.): erát in the dictatorial phrases, erat skyldr (skylt), non esto obligatus; erat landeigandi skyldr, Grág. (Kh.) i. 17; erat hinn skyldr, 21; yngrí maðr era skyldr at fasta, 35; enda erat honum þá skylt at . . ., 48; erat þat sakar spell, 127; era hinn þá skyldr at lýsa, 154; erat hann framar skyldr sakráða, 216; ok erat hann skyldr at úbyrgjask þat fé, 238; ok erat hann skyldr, id.; ok erat sakar aðili ella skyldr, ii. 74; erat hinn skyldr við at taka, 142; erat manni skylt at taka búfé, 143; enda erat heiming til fjár þess, 169; era hann þá skyldr at taka við í öðru fé nema hann vill, 209; ok erat þeim skylt at tunda fé sitt, 211; ok erat hann skyldr at gjalda tünd af því, 212; erat kirkjudrottinn þá skyldr, 228; ef hann erat landeigandi, i. 136. Skalat: skalat maðr eiga fé óborit, i. 23; skalat honum þat verða optar en um sinn, 55; skalat maðr ryðja við sjálfan sík, 62; skalat hann þat svá dvelja, 68; skalat hann til véfanga ganga, 71; skalat aðilja í stefnuvætti hafa, 127; ok skala hann gjalda fyrir þat, 135; ok skalat hann með sök fara, 171; enda skalat hann fleirum baugum boeta, 199; skalat hann skjilja félagit, 240; skalat hann meiri skuld eiga en, ii. 4; skalat þeim meðan á brott skipta, 5; skalat hann löggvill verða svá, 34; skalat hon at heldr varðveita þat fé, 59; skalat enn sami maðr þar lengr vera, 71; ok skala honum boeta þat, 79; skalat fyl telja, 89; skalat hann banna fiskför, 123; skalat hann löga fú því á engi veg, 158; skalat drepa þá menn, 167; skalat svá skipta manneldi, 173; skalat maðr reiðast við fjórðungi vísu, 183. Plur.: skolut mein andvitni bera ok hér á þingi, i. 68; skolut mál hans standast, 71; skolut þeir færi til vefangs ganga en, 75, etc. etc. Other instances are rare: tekrart þar fé er eigi er til (a proverb), i. 9; ok um telrat þat til sakbóta, ok of telrat þá til sakbóta (it does not count), 178; ef hann villat (will not) lýsa sér sitt, 51; ok ræðrat hann öðrum mönnum á hendr þann úkappa, 248; ræðrat sá sinum ómögum á hendr, ii. 18; verðrat honum at sakarvörn, 149; kömrart hann öðru við, ii. 141; þarfart hann biða til þess, i. 70; ok skilrat hann frá aðra aura, ii. 141, i. 136. Reflexive form: kömskart hann til heimtingar um þat fé, he loses the claim to the money, ii. 180, etc. All these instances are taken from the Kb. (Ed. 1853). Remarkable is also the ambiguity in the oath of Glum (see Sir Edm. Head, Viga-Glum, pp. 102, 103, note, l.c.), who, instead of the plain common formal oath—vask-at-ek þar, vák-at-ek þar, rauðk-at-ek þar odd ok egg—said, vask at þar, vák at þar, rauðk at þar. He inverted the sense by dropping the intermediate pronominal ek between the verb and þar, and pronouncing —z instead of —u. It further occurs in some few proverbs: varat af vöru, sleikði um þvöru, Fs. 159; veldrat sá er varir, Nj. 61 (now commonly ekki veldr sá er v., so in Grett.); erat héra at borgnara þótt hœna beri skjöld, Fms. vii. 116; era hlumv vant kvæð refr, dóð hörpu á isi, 19; also in some phrases, referred to as verba ipsissima from the heathen age—erat vinum lift Ingimundar, Fs. 39; erat sjá draumr minni, Ld. 128. Thorodd employs it twice or thrice: því at ek sékk-a þess meiri þörf, because I do not see any more reason for this, Skálda 167; kannka ek til þess meiri ráð en lítill, I do not know, id.; mona (will not) mín móna (my mammy) víð mik göra verst hjóna, 163. In sacred translations of the 12th century it occurs now and then. In the Homilies and Dialogues of Gregory the Great: monatþu í því flóði verða, thou shalt not; esa þat undarligt þótt, it is not to be wondered at; hann máttia sofna, he could not sleep; monaþ ek banna, I shall not mind, Greg. 51, 53; vasat kall heyrtr á strætum, was not, Post. 645. 84; nú mona fríðir menn hér koma, Níðstr. 623. 7. In later writers as an archaism; a few times in the Al. (MS. A. M. 519), 3, 5, 6, 44, 108; and about as many times in the MS. Eirspennill (A. M. 47, fol.) [Etymon uncertain; that at is the right form may be inferred from the assimilation in at-ut, and the anastrophe in t, though the reason for the frequent dropping of the t is still unexplained. The coincidence with the Scottish dinna, canna is quite accidental.]

abbadís, f. abbess, Hkr. iii. 398, Fms. vii. 239, Gpl. 365.
 abbast, ad, dep. (= amast), to be incensed at, vex, molest; a-við e-t, Clem. 50, Fms. vii. 166; a-uppá e-t, Nj. 194.
 abbíndi=af-bíndi, n. tenesmus, Hm. 140; cp. Fé. ix. 185, where it is spelt afbendi.

AD=at, v. that word. að- in compds, v. at- -að, suff. neg., v. -a.
 AÐA, u, f. (and compd öðu-skel, f.) a. mytilus testa planiuscula, a shell, [β. fem. pr. n., Edda.
 AÐAL, [O. H. G. adal, genus; cp. also A. S. éðele, nobilis; Old Engl. and Scot. etel; Germ. edel; edla- and edál-came from mod. Dan. into Icel. aðall, nobility. It does not occur in old writings in this sense.] I. n. nature, disposition, inborn native quality, used only in poetry; júðs a., chilidish, Yt. 13; ósnotr aðal, foolish, insipid, Hm. 106; arga a., dastardly, Ls. 23, 24; drengs a., noble, Km. 23; ódyggs a., bad, Hsm. 19. 2. in the sense of offspring; aðul Njarðar (where it is n. pl. ?), the gods, the offspring of Njord, Hallfred in a poem, vide Fs. 59. II. used in a great many compds, chief-, head-. aðal-akkeri, n. sheep-anchov, Fms. x. 130. β. metaph., Bs. i. 756. aðal-björri, s. m. prime beaver skin, Eb. (in a verse). aðal-borinn, part., v. óðalborinn. aðal-ból, n. a manor-house, farm inhabited by its master, opp. to tenant farms, Grág. (Kb.) ii. 150; also the name of a farm, Hrafn. 4. aðal-festr, f., v. alaðsfestr. aðal-fylking, f. main force, main body, Hkr. ii. 361. aðal-haf, n. the main, Fms. iv. 177. aðal-henda, u, f., v. alhenda. aðal-hending, f. full, complete rhymes, such as all—ball, opp. to skot-hending, q. v., Edda (Ht.). aðal-hendr, adj. verse in full rhyme, Edda, id. . aðal-kelda, u, f. chief well, Karl. 442. aðal-kirkja, ju, f. chief part of a church, viz. choir and nave, opp. to forkirkja, Sturl. ii. 59. aðalliga, adv. completely, thoroughly; a. dauðr, quite dead, 656 C. 31, Fms. ii. 313; a. gamall, quite old, iii. 171. aðal-mein, n. great pain, Fms. vi. (in a verse). aðal-merki, n. the bead-standard, Pr. 177. aðal-ritning, f. chief writing, Sks. 13. aðal-skáli, a, m. the chief apartment of a skáli, the hall, as distinguished from a forhús, Eb. 43. aðal-tré, n. trunk of a tree; eigi munu kvistir betri en a. (a proverb), Fms. iv. 33. aðal-troll, n. downright ogre, Fas. iii. 179. aðal-túlkr, s, m. chief advocate, Bs. i. 445. aðal-túpt, f. esp. in pl. ir=óðals-toptir, the ground on which a manor-house is built, toft of an allodial farm (Norse), flytja hús af aðaltóptum, remove it, N. G. L. i. 379.

aðild, older form aðið, pl. ir, f. [root aðal], v. the following word aðili. It doubtless originally meant chiefdom, headship, but it only occurs in the limited sense of chief-prosecutorship or defendantship, and this only, as it seems, in Icel. not in Norse law. It is a standing word in the Icel. codes and histories of the Commonwealth. It became obsolete after the year 1272, and does not occur in the codes Jb. or Js. In early times there were no public prosecutions or lawsuits; the aðild devolved together with the erfð (heirship) on the principal male heir, if of age; erfð and aðild go together, the first as a right, the last as an incumbent duty, like an English trusteeship; til erfðar ok aðilðar, Eb. ch. 38. In the year 993 a law was passed to the effect that male heirs under sixteen years of age should be exempted from aðild, neither should heiresses ever be aðili. In such cases the aðild devolved on the next male heir above sixteen years of age, who then got a fee for executing this duty, Bs. i. 675. The aðild also could be undertaken by a delegate, called at fara með handselda sök, sök handseld, vörn handseld, fara með sök, carry on a suit, etc., v. Grágás Vs. ch. 35, (of aðild in a case of manslaughter,) and in many other places; Eb. ch. 38, Bs. i. 675 (Rs. in fine), Bjarn. (in fine), Njála, and many others: v. Dasent, Introd. to Burnt Njal. COMPD: aðiðdar-maðr, m. = aðili, Sturl. iii. 240, Orku. 212.

aðili, ja, m. the chief-defendant or prosecutor in an Icel. lawsuit in the time of the Commonwealth. It seems to have meant originally bead, chieftain, princeps. A standing word in the Grágás and the Sagas. As to the form, the older one is that which preserves the j in the terminations, gen. dat. acc. aðilja, plur. -jar, acc. -ja, dat. -jum. The Grágás constantly employs this form. The Njála and some of the Sagas drop the j and write aðila etc. In the Grágás aðilja seems to occur as an indecl. word—at least four times in the Kb.—used as nom. pl.: but as -ar in old MSS. is frequently marked by a single 'a' with a little stroke (a), this may be a misinterpretation. The indeclinable form occurs in the Kb. (p. β.) 25 and 109 (only preserved in the Kb.); Kb. 147, 170 has aðilja, where the Sb. has in both passages aðiljar: cp. however gúðsifja and -bræðra. There is a distinction between a sóknar-aðili or sakar-aðili, prosecutor, and avarnar-aðili, defendant. Either with gen. or prep. at, varnar-a., sóknar-a., sakar-a.; or inversely a. sakar, a. varnar, a. frumsakar, Kb. 42, 124; a. máls, 126; a. vigsakar, in a case of manslaughter, 167; or vigsakar a. (often); a. fósakar, in a lawsuit about compensation, 123; a. legorðssakar, case of legorð, 194: with at, varnir þær er hann er aðili at, 175; aðili at legorðs sekt, App. iv. 46, Grág. Kb. 15, 211; cp. also § 58, p. 103: hann er aðili at sök, bæði sækjandi ok seljandi, chief-plaintiff, either for carrying it on himself or by a delegate, Kb. 208. In the case of a delegate being the aðili, the challenge of jurors and judges on account of relationship was to be made in respect to the chief aðili, not the delegate, Kb. 127.

AF, prep. often used elliptically by dropping the case, or even merely adverbially, [Ulf. af; A. S. and Engl. of, off; Hel. ab; Germ. ab; Gr. ἀπό; Lat. a, ab.] WITH DAT. denoting a motion a loco; one of the three prep. af, ór, frá, corresponding to those in loco—á, í, við, and ad locum—á, í, at. It in general corresponds to the prepp. in loco—á, or in locum—til, whilst ór answers more to í; but it also frequently corresponds to yfir, um or í. It ranges between ór and frá, generally denoting the idea from the surface of, while ór means from the inner part, and frá from the outer part or border. The motion from a bill, plain, open place is thus denoted by af; by ór that from an enclosed space, depth, cavity, thus af fjalli, but ór of a valley, dale; af Englandi, but ór Danmörk, as mörk implies the notion of a deep wood, forest. The wind blows af landi, but a ship sets sail frá landi; frá landi also means a distance from: af hendi, of a glove, ring; ór hendi, of whatever has been kept in the hand (correl. to á hendi and í hendi). On the other hand af is more general, whilst frá and ór are of a more special character; frá denoting a departure, or an impulse or force; a member goes home af þingi, whereas ór may denote an inmate of a district, or convey the notion of secession or exclusion from, Eb. 105 new Ed.; the traveller goes af landi, the exile ór landi: taka e-t af e-m is to take a thing out of one's hand, that of taka frá e-m to remove out of one's sight, etc. In general af answers to Engl. of, off, ór to out of, and frá to from: the Lat. prepp. ab, de, and ex do not exactly correspond to the Icelandic, yet as a rule ór may answer to ex, af sometimes to ab, sometimes to de. Of, off, from among; with, by; on account of, by means of, because of, concerning, in respect of.

A. Loc. I. WITH MOTION, off, from: I. prop. corresp. to á, a. konungr dró gullhring af hendi sér (but á hendi), Ld. 32; Höskuldr lætr bera farm af skipi, unloaded the ship (but bera farm á skipi), id.; var tekít af hestum þeirra, they were unsaddled, Nj. 4; Gunnarr hafði farit heiman af bæ sínum, he was away from home, 82; Gunnarr hljóp af bestu sínum, jumped off his horse (but hl. á hest), 83; hlaupa, stökkva af baki, id., 112, 264; Gunnarr skýrtr til hans af boganum, from the bow, where af has a slight notion of instrumentality, 96; flýja af fundinum, to fly from off the battle-field, 102; riða af þríhyrningshálsnum, 206; út af Langaholti, Eg. 744; sunnan ór Danmörk ok af Saxlandi, 560; ganga af mótnu, to go from the meeting, Fms. vii. 130; af þeirra fundi reis María upp ok fór, 625, 85; Flosi kastaði af sér skikkjunn, throw his cloak off him (but kasta á sik), Nj. 176; taka Hruignis fót af honum, of a load, burden, Edda 58; land þat er hann fiskði af, from which he set off to fish, Grág. i. 151, is irregular, frá would suit better; slíta af baki e-s, from off one's back, ii. 9; bera af bordi, to clear the table, Nj. 75. β. where it more nearly answers to í; þeir koma af hafi, of sailors coming in (but leggja í haf), Nj. 128; fara til Noregs af Orknycjum (but í or til O.), 131; þeim Agli fórst vel ok komu af hafi í Borgarfjörð, Eg. 392; hann var útlagi (outlawed) af Noregi, where ór would be more regular, 344; af Islandi, of a traveller, Fms. x. 3; búa her af báðum ríkjunum, to take a levy from, 51; hiurir beztu bændr ór Norðlendingafjórðungi ok af Sunnlendingafjórðungi, the most eminent Southerners and Northerners, 113; Gizzurr gekk af útsuðri at gerðinu, from south-west, Sturl. ii. 219; prestar af hváru-tveggja biskupsdæmi, from either diocese, Dipl. ii. 11; verða tekinn af heimi, to be taken out of the world, 623, 21; grufnar hon af læknum, scrambles out of the brook, Isl. ii. 340; Egill kneypði af horninu í einum drykk, drained off the horn at one draught, literally squeezed every drop out of it, Eg. 557; brottu af herbúðunum, Fms. x. 343. γ. of things more or less surrounding the subject, corresp. to xfir or um; láta þeir þegar af sér tjöldin, break off, take down the tents in preparing for battle, Eg. 261; kyrtillinn rifnaði af honum, his coat burst, caused by the swollen body, 602; hann hafði leyst af sér skúa sína, he untied his shoes (but binda ú sik), 716; Steinar vildi slíta hann af sér, throw him off, of one clinging to one's body, 747; tók Gísli þá af sér vápnin, took off his arms, Fms. vii. 39. δ. of putting off clothes; fara af kápu, Nj. 143; far þú eigi af brynjunni, Bs. i. 541; þá ætlaði Sigurðr at fara af brynjunni, id.; þá var Skarphéðinn flettr af klæðunum, Nj. 209; now more usually fara ór klæðum, fótum, exuere, to undress. δ. connected with út; fóstudaginn fór út herrinn af borginni, marched out of the town, Nj. 274; ganga út af kirkjunni, to go out of the church, now út úr, Fms. vii. 107; drekkti hann af þeirri jörðunni, of something impregnated with the earth, Lækn. 402. ε. more closely corresponding to frá, being in such cases a Latinism (now frá); bréf af páfa, a pope's bull, Fms. x. 6; rit af hánum, letter from him, 623, 52; bréf af Magnúsi konungi, a letter from king Magnus, Bs. i. 712; farið þér á brautu af mér í eilífan eld, Hom. 143; brott af drottins augliti, Stj. 43. ζ. denoting an uninterrupted continuity, in such phrases as land af landi, from land to land, Eg. 343, Fas. ii. 539; skip af skipi, from ship to ship, Fms. v. 10; braun hvat af öðru, one after another, of an increasing fire, destroying everything, i. 128; brandr af brandi brenni, funi kveykist af funa, one from another, Hm. 56; hver af öðrum, one after another, in succession, also hvert at öðrum, Eb. 272, 280 (where at in both passages). 2. metaph., at ganga af e-m dauðum, to go from, leave one dead on the spot, of two combatants; en hann segiz bani hins ef hann gekk af dauðum manni, Grág. ii. 88, Hkr. i. 327; undr þykir mér er bróðir þinn vildi eigi taka af þér starf þetta, would not take this toil from thee, Nj. 77; þegnar hans glöddust af honum, were fain of him, Fms. x. 380; at koma þeim manni af sér er settir var á fé hans, to get rid of, Ld. 52; vil ek þú vinnir af þér skuldina, work off the debt, Njarð. 366; reka af sér, to repel, Sturl. ii. 219; hann á þá sonu er aldri munu af oss ganga, who will never leave us, whom we shall never get rid of, Fas. i. 280; leysa e-n af e-u, to relieve, 64; taka e-u af lífi, to kill, Eg. 48, 416, Nj. 126; af lífdögum, Fms. vii. 204; ek mun ná lögum af því máli, get the benefit of the law in this case, Eg. 468; muntu enga sætt af mér fá, no peace at my hand, 414; rísa af dauða, to rise from death, Fms. ii. 142; guð bætti honum þó af þessi sótt, healed him of this sickness, ix. 390; vakna af sýu, draumi, svefni, to awaken from a vision, dream, sleep, 655 xxxii. 1, Gísl. 24, Eb. 192, Fas. i. 41. Rather with the notion out of, in the phrase af sér etc., e. g. sýna e-t af sér, to shew, exhibit a disposition for or against, Ld. 18; gera mik af sér, to shew great prowess, Isl. ii. 368; ef þú gerir eigi meira af þér um aðra leika, unless you make more of thyself, Edda 32; Svip-dagr hafði mik af sér gert, fought bravely, Fas. i. 41; góðr (íllr) af sér, good (bad) of oneself, by nature; mikill af sjálfum sér, proud, bold, stout, Nj. 15; ágætastir maðr af sjálfum sér, the greatest hero, Bret.: góðr af sér, excellent, Hrafn. 7; but, on the contrary, af sér kominn, ruinous, in decay; this phrase is used of old houses or buildings, as in Bs. i. 488=Sturl. l. c.; af sér kominn af mæði can also be said of a man fallen off from what he used to be; kominn af fótum fram, off his legs from age, Sturl. i. 223, Korm. 154 (in a verse). II. WITH-OUT MOTION: 1. denoting direction from but at the same time continuous connection with an object from which an act or thing proceeds, from; tengja skip hvárt fram af stafni annars, to tie the ships in a line, stem to stern, Fms. i. 157, xi. 111; svá at þeir tóku út af hördum, cutted out of the boards, of rafters or poles, iv. 49; stjarna ok af sem skaft, of a comet, ix. 482; líka upp af hrossi, to open a gate from off a horse, Grág. ii. 264; hon svarar af sínu sæti sem álpt af báru, Fas. i. 186; þar er sjá mátti utan af firdi, af þjóðleid, that might be seen from the fareway on the sea when sailing in the firth, Hkr. ii. 64; þá mun hringt af (bættar af) Burakirkju, of bells rung at the church, Fms. xi. 160; gengr þar af Meðalfellströnd, projects from, juts out, of a promontory, Ld. 10. 2. denoting direction along; upp af vikinni stóð borg mikil, a burg inland from the inlet, Eg. 161; lokrekkja innar af seti, a shut bed inward from the benches in the hall, Isl. ii. 262; kapella upp af konungs herbergjum, upwards from, Fms. x. 153; vindr stóð af landi, the wind stood off the land, Bárð. 166. β. metaph., standa af e-u, vide VI. 4. γ. ellipt., hallaði af norðr, of the channel, north of a spot, Boll. 348; also, austr af, suðr af, vestr af, etc. 3. denoting absence; þingeyngver skulu eigi vera um nótt af þingi (away from the meeting), eðr lengr, þá eru þeir af þingi (away from the meeting) ef þeir eru ór (out of) þingmarki, Grág. i. 25; vera um nótt af vörþingi, 115; meðan hann er af landi héðan, abroad, 150. β. metaph., guð hvíldi af öllum verkum sínum á sjaunda degi, rested from his labours, Ver. 3. 4. denoting distance; þat er komit af þjóðleid, out of the big road, remote, Eg. 369; af þjóðbraut, Grág. ii. 264, i. 15; Otradalr (a farm) var njök af vegi, far out of the way, Háv. 53.

B. TEMP. past, from, out of, beyond: 1. of a person's age, in the sense of having past a period of life; af ómaga aldri, of age, able to support oneself, Grág. i. 243; af askuldri, stricken in years, having past the prime of life, Eg. 202; lítið af barnsaldri, still a child, Ld. 74; ek em nú af léttasta skeiði, no longer in the prime of life, Háv. 40. 2. of a part or period of time, past; eigi síðar en nótt er af þingi, a night of the session past, Grág. i. 101; þá er sjau vikur eru af sumri, seven weeks past of the summer, 182; tíu vikur af sumri, lb. 10; var miklit af nótt, much of the night was past, Háv. 41; miklið af vetri, much of the winter was past, Fas. ii. 186; þriðjungtr af nótt, a third of the night past, Fms. x. 160; stund af degi, etc.; tveir mánoðr af sumri, Gpl. 103. 3. in adverbial phrases such as, af stundu, soon; af bragði, at once; af tómi, at leisure, at ease; af nýju, again; af skyndingu, speedily; af bráðungu, in a hurry, etc.

C. In various other relations: I. denoting the passage or transition of an object, concrete or abstract, of, from. 1. where a thing is received, derived from, conferred by a person or object; þiggja líð af e-m, to derive help from, Edda 26; taka traust af e-m, to receive support, comfort from, Fms. xi. 243; taka mála af e-m, to be in one's pay, of a soldier, Eg. 266; halda land af e-m, to hold land of any one, 282; verða viss af e-m, to get information from, 57, Nj. 130; taka við sök af manni (a law term), to undertake a case, suit, Grág. i. 142; hafa umboð af e-m, to be another's deputy, iv. 374; vera góðs (ílls) maklegr af e-m, to deserve good (bad) of, Vd. 88 (old Ed., the new reads frá), Fs. 45; afa matar af eyjum, to derive supplies from, Eb. 12. 2. where an object is taken by force: α. prop. out of a person's hand; þú skalt hnykkja smíðit af honum, wrest it out of his hand, Nj. 32; cp. taka, þrifa, svipta e-u (e-t) af e-m, to wrest from. β. metaph. of a person's deprivation of anything in general; hann tók af þér konung, carried thy wife off, Nj. 33; tók Gunnarr af þér sáðland þitt, robbed thee of seedland, 103; taka af honum tignina, to depose, degrade him, Eg. 271; vinna e-t af e-m, to carry off by force of arms, conquer, Fms. iii. 29; drepa menn af e-m, for one slay one's man, Eg. 417; féll þar líð mart af Eyvindri, many of Eyvind's people fell there, 261. γ. in such phrases as, hyggja af e-u (v. afhuga), hugsa af e-u, to forget; hyggja af harmi; sjá af e-u, to lose, miss; var svá ástíðigt með þeim, at hvargi þóttist mega af öðrum sjá, neither of them could take his eyes off the other, Sturl. i. 194; svá er mörg við ver sinn vær, at varla um sér hon af honum nær, Skálda 163. δ. denoting forfeiture; þá eru þeir útlagir, ok af goðorði sínu, have forfeited their priesthood, Grág. i. 24; telja hann af ráðunum fjár síns alls, to oust one, on account of idiocy or madness, 176; verða af kaupi, to be off the bargain, Edda 26; þá skalt þú af allri fjárheimtunni, forfeit all the claim, Nj. 15; ek skal stefna þér af konunni, summon thee to forfeit, a case of divorce, id.; ella er hann af réttarari um hana, has forfeited the suit, Grág. i. 381. β. ellipt., af ferr eindagi ef, is forfeited, Grág. i. 140. II. denoting relation of a part to a whole, off, of, Lat. de; höggva hönd, höfuð, fót af e-um, to cut one's hand, head, foot off, Nj. 97, 92, Bs. i. 674; höggva spjót af skapti, to sever the blade from the shaft, 264; hann lét þá ekki hafa af föðurarfi sínum, nothing of their patrimony, Eg. 25; vil ek at þú takir slíkt sem þér líkar af varningi, take what you like of the stores, Nj. 4; at þú eignist slíkt af fé okkru sem þú vill, 94. β. ellipt., en nú höfum vér kjörir, en þat er af krossinum, a slice of, Fms. vii. 89; þórdórf gaf Skólmi frændra sínum af landnámi sínu, a part of, Landn. 211; hafði hann þat af hans eigu er hann vildi, Sturl. ii. 169; þar lá forkr einn ok brotið af endanum, the point broken off, Háv. 24, Sturl. i. 169. γ. absol. off; beit hann höndina af, þar sem nú heitir úllsiðr, bit the band off, Edda 17; fauk af höfuðit, the head flew off, Nj. 97; jafnt er sem þér sýnist, af er fötrinn, the foot is off, id.; af bæði eyru, both ears off, Vm. 29. 2. with the notion of = among; mestir skörungr af konum á Norðrlöndum, the greatest heroine in the North, Fms. i. 116; hinn efnilgasti maðr af ungum mönnum í Austfjörðum, the most hopeful of youths in the Eastfjords, Njarð. 364; af (among) öllum hirðmönnum virði konungr mest skáld sín, Eg. 27; ef hann vildi nokkura kaup af þessum konum, Ld. 30; ör liggir þar úti á veggnum, ok er ú af þeirra örum, one of their own arrows, Nj. 115. β. from, among, belonging to; guð kaus hana af öllum konum sér til móður, of the Virgin Mary, Mar. A. i. 27. γ. metaph., kunna mikit (lítið) af e-u, to know much, little of, Bragi kann mest af skáldskap, is more cunning of poetry than any one else, Edda 17. δ. absol. out of, before, in preference to all others; Gunnarr baud þér góð boð, en þú vildir eingi af taka, you would choose none of them, Nj. 77; ráða e-t af, to decide; þó mun faðir minn mestu af ráða, all depends upon him, Ld. 22; konungr kveðst því mundu heldr af trúa, preferred believing that of the two, Eg. 55; var honum ekki vildara af ván, he could expect nothing better, 364. 3. with the additional sense of instrumentality, with; ferma skip af e-u, to freight a ship with, Eg. 364; hlaða mörg skip af korni, load many ships with corn, Fms. xi. 8; klyfja tvá hesta af mat, Nj. 74; var vágrinn skipaðr af herskipum, the bay was covered with war ships, 124; fylla ker af glóðum, fill it with embers, Stj. 319; fylla heiminn af sínu kyni, to fill the world with his offspring, Ver. 3.

III. denoting the substance of which a thing is made, of; used indifferently with ór, though ór be more frequent; þeir gerðu af honum jörðina, af blóði hans sæniun ok vötnin, of the creation of the world from the corpse of the giant Ymir; the poem Gm. 40, 41, constantly uses ór in this sense, just as in modern Icelandic, Edda 5; svá skildu þeir, at allir hlutir væri smíðaðir af nokkru efni, 147 (pref.); húsit var gert af timbrstokkum, built of trunks of timber, Eg. 233; hjöltin vóru af gulli, of gold, golden, Fms. i. 17; af osti, of cheese, but in the verse l. c. ór osti, Fms. vi. 253; línklaði af lépretti, linen, Sks. 287.

2. metaph. in the phrases, göra e-t af e-u (to dispose of), verða af (become of), hvat hefir þú gúrt af Gunnari, what hast thou done with Gunnar? Njarð. 376; hvat af motrinum er orðið, what has become of it? of a lost thing, Ld. 208; hverfr Óspakr á burt, svá cigi vita menn hvat af honum er orðið, what has become of him? Band. 5.

IV. denoting parentage, descent, origin, domicile, abode: I. parentage, of, from, used indifferently with frá; ok eru af þeim komnir Gílsbekkingar, descend from them, but a little below—frá honum eru komnir Sturlungar, Eb. 338, cp. afkvæmi; af ætt Hördakára, Fms. i. 287; kominn af Troj-mönnum, xi. 416; af Ása-ætt (Kb. wrongly at), Edda 1. á metaph., vera af Guði (theol.), of God, = righteous, 686 B. 9; illr ávöxt af illri rót, Fms. ii. 48; Asia er köllud af nafni nokkurr konu, derives her name from, Stj. 67; af honum er bragr kallaðr skáldskapr, called after his name, Edda 17.

2. of domicile; af danski tungu, of Danish or Scandinavian origin, speaking the Danish tongue, Grág. ii. 73; hvaðan af öndum, whence, native of what country? Isl. Þ especially denoting a man's abode, and answering to á and í, the name of the farm (or country) being added to proper names, (as in Scotland,) to distinguish persons of the same name; Hallr af Síðu, Nj. 189; Erlingr af Straumey, 173; Ástríðr af Djúpárþakka, 39; Gunnarr af Hlíðarenda (more usual rá); Þórir haklangr konungur af Ögðum, king of Agdir, Eg. 35, etc.; p. ór and frá.

V. denoting a person with whom an act, feeling, etc. originates, for the most part with a periphrastic passive: I. by, the Old Engl. of; as, ek em sendr hingað af Starkaði ok sonum hans, ent hither by, Nj. 94; inna e-t af hendi, to perform, 257; þó at alþýða væri skírd af kennimönnum, baptized of, Fms. ii. 158; meira virð af nönnum, higher esteemed, Ld. 158; ástsæll af landsmönnum, beloved, lb. 16; vinsæll af mönnum, Nj. 102; í allgöðu yfirlæti af þeim fæðgum, hospitably treated by them, Eg. 170; var þá nokktr drukkið af alþjóð, there was somewhat hard drinking of the people, Sturl. iii. 229; mun þat ekki upp tekið af þeim sökudólgum mínum, they will not clutch at that, Nj. 257; ef svá væri í hendr þér búið af mér, if I had so made everything ready to thy hands, Ld. 130; þá varð fúrátt um af föður hans, his father said little about it, Fms. ii. 154.

2. it is now also sometimes used as a periphrase of a nom., e. g. ritað, þýtt af e-m, written, translated, edited by, but such phrases scarcely occur in old writers.

VI. denoting cause, ground, reason: I. originating from, on account of, by reason of; af frændsemis sökum, for kinship's sake, Grág. ii. 72; ómáli af áverkum, speechless from wounds, 27; af manna völdum, by violence, not by natural accident, of a crime, Nj. 76; af förtölum Halls, through his pleading, 255; af ástsæld hans ok af tölum þeirra Sæmundar, by his popularity and the eloquence of S., lb. 16; af ráðum Haralds konungs, by his contriving, Landn. 157; úbygd af frosti ok kulda, because of frost and cold, Hkr. i. 5.

Þ adverbially, af því, therefore, Nj. 78; af því, why? 686 B. 9; þá verðr bóndi heiðinn af barni sínu, viz. if he does not cause his child to be christened, K.þ.K. 20. 2. denoting instrumentality, by means of; af sínu fé, by one's own means, Grág. i. 293; framfæra e-n af verkum sínum, by means of one's own labour, K.þ.K. 42; draga saman úð af sökum, ok vælum ok kaupum, make money by, 623. 1; af sínum kostnaði, at his own expense, Hkr. i. 217.

Þ absol., hinn fellir á mik þropa svá heita at ek brenn af öll, Ld. 328; hann fékk af hina mestu sæmd, derived great honour from it, Nj. 88; allí sötti á hendr honum svá at hann lagðist í rekkju af, he grew bedridden from age, Ld. 54; komast undan af hlaupi, escape by running, Fms. viii. 58; spinnna gam af rokki, spin off a wheel (now, spinnna á rokk), from a notion of instrumentality, or because of the thread being spun out (?), Eb. 92.

3. denoting proceeding, originating from; lýsti af höndum hennar, her hands spread beams of light, Edda 22; allir heimar lýstust (were illuminated) af henni, d.; en er lýsti af degi, when the day broke forth, Fms. ii. 16; lítt var lýst af degi, the day was just beginning to break, Ld. 46; þá tók at myrkja af nótt, the 'mirk-time' of night began to set in, Eg. 230; tók þá brútt at myrkva af nótt, the night grew dark, Hkr. ii. 230.

4. metaph., standa, leiða, hljóttast af, to be caused by, result from; opt hlýst líft af kvenna hjali, great mischief is wrought by women's gossip (a proverb), Gísl. 15, 98; at af þeim mundi mikit mein ok úhapp standa, be caused by, Edda 18; kenna kulda af ráðum e-s, to feel sore from, Eb. 42; þó mun hér hljóttast af margs manns bani, Nj. 90.

5. in adverbial phrases, denoting state of mind; af mikilli æði, in fury, Nj. 116; af móð, in great emotion, Fms. xi. 221; af úhyggju, with concern, i. 186; af létta, frankly, iii. 91; af viti, collectedly, Grág. ii. 27; af heilu, sincerely, Eg. 46; af fúri, in rage; af æðru, timidly, Nj. (in a verse); af setning, composedly, in tune, Fms. iii. 187; af mikilli frægð, gallantly, Fas. i. 261; af öllu afli, with all might, Grág. ii. 41; af ríki, violently, Fbr. (in a verse); af trúnaði, confidently, Grág. i. 400.

VII. denoting regard to, of, concerning, in respect of, as regards: I. with verbs, denoting to tell of, be informed, inquire about, Lat. de; Dioscorides segir af grasi því, speaks of, 655 xxx. 5; er mein spurðu af landinu, inquired about it, Landn. 30; hafa njósu af e-u, Nj. 104; er þat skjótast þar af at segja, Eg. 546, Band. 8.

Þ absol., hann mun spyrja, hvárt þér sé nokktr af kunnigt hversu fór með okkr, whether you know anything about, how, Nj. 33; halda skóla af, to hold a school in a science, 656 A. i. 19 (sounds like a Latinism); en ek gerða þik sem mestan mann af öllu, in respect of all, that you should get all the honour of it, Nj. 78.

2. with adjectives such as mildr, illr, góðr af e-u, denoting disposition or character in respect to; allra manna mildastr af fé, very liberal, open-handed, Fms. vii. 197; mildr af gulli, i. 33; góðr af gríðum, merciful, Al. 33; illr af mat e-u mildr af gulli, Fms. i. 53; fastr af drykk, close, stingy in regard to, Sturl. ii. 125; gat þess Hildigunnar at þú mundir góðr af hestinum, that you would be good about the horse, Nj. 90, cp. auðigr at, v. at, which corresponds to the above phrases; cp. also the phrase af sér above, p. 4, col. I, ll. 50 sqq.

VIII. periphrasis of a genitive (rare); provincialis af öllum Predikaraklastrum, Fms. x. 76; vera af hinum mesta fjandskap, to breathe deep hatred to, be on bad terms with, ix. 220; af hendi, af hálfu e-s, on one's behalf, v. those words.

IX. in adverbial phrases; as, af launungu, secretly; af hljóði, silently; v. those words. Þ also used absolutely with a verb, almost adverbially, nearly in the signification off, away; hann bad þá róa af fjörðinn, pass the fjord swiftly by rowing, row the fjord off, Fms. ix. 502; var þá af farit þat sem skerjóttast var, was past, sailed past, Ld. 142; ok er þeir höfðu af fjörðung, past one fourth of the way, Dropl. 10: skína af, to clear up, of the sky, Eb. 152; hence in common language, skína af sér, when the sun breaks forth: sofa af nóttina, to sleep it away, Fms. ii. 98; leið af nóttin, the night past away, Nj. 53; deþlja af stundir, to kill the time, Band. 8; drepa af, to kill; láta af, to slaughter, kill off. Y in exclamations; af tjöldin, off with the awnings, Bs. i. 420, Fms. ix. 49.

Ð in the phrases, þar af, thence; hér af, hence, Fms. ii. 102; af frann, straight on, Nj. 144; þar af, a fram, on, advance.

X. it often refers to a whole sentence or to an adverb, not only like other prepp. to hér, hvar, þar, but also redundantly to hvaðan, hóðan, þaðan, whence, hence, thence.

2. the preposition may sometimes be repeated, once elliptically or adverbially, and once properly, e. g. en er af var borit af bordinu, the cloth was taken off from the table, Nj. 176; Guð þerrir af (off, away) hvert tár af (from) augum heilagra manna, God wipes off every tear from the eyes of his saints, 655 xx. vii. 17; skal þó fyrst bætr af líka af fé veganda, pay off, from, Gpl. 160, the last af may be omitted—var þá af borit bordinu—and the prep. thus be separated from its case, or it may refer to some of the indecl. relatives er or sem, the prep. hvar, hér, þar being placed behind them without a case, and referring to the preceding relative, e. g. oss er þar mikit af sagt auð þeim, we have been told much about these riches, Band. 24; er þat skjótast þar af at segja, in short, shortly, Eg. 546; þaðan af veit ek, thence I infer, know, Fms. i. 97.

XI. it is moreover connected with a great many verbs besides those mentioned above, e. g. bera af, to excel, whence afbragð, afbrjóði; draga af, to detract, deduct, hence afdrátt; veita ekki af, to be hard with; ganga af, to be left, hence afgangr; standast af um e-t, to stand, how matters stand; sem af tekr, at a furious rate; vita af, to be conscious, know about (vide VII).

D. As a prefix to compounds distinction is to be made between:

I. af privativum, denoting diminution, want, deduction, loss, separation, negation, of, etc., answering indifferently to Lat. ab-, de-, ex-, dis-, and rarely to re- and se-, v. the following COMPS, such as ex-ga, dicere, but afsegja, negare; sækja, colere, but afækja, negligere; aflaga, contra legem; skapigr, normalis, afskapigr, deformis; afvik, recessus; afhúð, afhellir, afðalr, etc.

II. af intensivum, etymologically different, and akin to of, af-, e. g. afdrykkja = ofdrykkja, inebrietas; afbrjóði, jealously; afbendi, tenesmus; aiglapi, vir fatuus, etc. etc. Both the privative and the intensive af may be contracted into á, esp. before a labial f, m, v, e. g. á fram = af fram; ábrjóði = afbrjóði; ávöxtr = afvöxtr; áburðr = afburðr; ávita = afvita (?). In some cases dubious. With extenuated and changed vowel; auvirðiligr or övirðiligr, depreciated, = afv- etc., v. those words.

afa, u, f. overbearing, Am. I, Ls. 3, Bk. 2, 31, = afaryði.

afar- and avar- [cp. Ulf. afar = μετά, ὑπέρ; Germ. aber, esp. in compounds: v. Grimm Gr. ii. 709], only used as a prefix in compounds, very much, very. Now often pronounced afar, which form occurs esp. in MSS. of the 14th and 15th centuries, e. g. Fms. i. 150, xi. 249, Ísl. ii. 131; cp. also æfr, adj. iracundus. COMPS: afar-auðigr, adj. very rich, Lex. Poët. afar-breiðr, adj. very broad, Edda 10. afar-fagr, adj. very fair, Edda (Ub.) 360. afar-hreinn, adj. very clean, Lex. Poët. afar-illa, adv. very badly, Hkr. i. 226. afar-kaup, n. hard bargain, Sturl. (in a verse). afar-kostir, m. pl. barid condition, Eg. 14, 353, Hkr. i. 144, Ld. 222. afarkosta-laust, n. adj. on fair terms, Jb. 361, Sturl. ii. 79. afar-ligr, adj. immense, huge, Nj. 183, v. l. afar-litill, adj. very small, Merl. 2. 46.

afar-menni, n. an overpowering man, Orkn. 256 old Ed., Landn. 124, Ísl. ii. 190. afar-orð, n. overbearing words, Bs. ii. 9. afar-stórr, adj. big, Lex. Poët. afar-sætr, adj. very sweet, Sks. 534. afar-úðigr, adj. [hugð], overbearing, of violent temper, Fms. vii. 20.
afar-vel, adv. very well, Hkr. i. 204, Ísl. ii. 140; cp. ofa. afar-yrði, n. = afarorð, Orkn. 274. afar-pungur, adj. heavy, Edda (Ht.) 46.
af-audit, part. pass.; verða a. e-s, to fail, have bad luck, Gísl. 61.
af-át = ofát, over-eating, gluttony, gormandizing.
af-blómgaðr, part. pass. 'off-bloomed', 655 xxxii. 3.
af-boð, n. threats, high words, Fms. x. 199; ofboð, n., is used of panic, fear, agony, and as a prefix in compds of boðs = exceedingly. So now the modern verb ofbjóða, mostly used impers., e-m ofbjóði, to be shocked at, etc.
af-bragð, n. used of persons, a superior, excellent person; hann var a. í vitzku sinni, wonderfully clever, Fms. x. 397; a. annarra nianna, man of mark, vi. 144. 2. gen. afbragðs is now frequently used as a prefix to nouns to express something surpassing—a. fagr, góður, friður, etc.—a. vænleikr, surpassing beauty, Stj. 195. COMPD: afbragðs-maðr, n. a great man, Fms. x. 293 (where spelt abb-).
afbragðliga, adv. surpassingly, Fas. i. 220.
afbragðligr, adj. surpassing, Eb. 256, Fms. ix. 535, x. 230 (where spelt abb-), xi. 335.
af-brigð and rarely afbrigði, n.—the compound afbrigðar-tré points to a fem.—deviation, transgression, offence, (cp. bragða af, to deviate from), esp. in pl., þeir sókuðu hann um nokkuð afbrigð þinga sinna, Post. 645. 97; sættarof ok afbrigð við guð, trespasses, 671. 1; afbrigð, wrongs, Ld. 66; í afbrigðum boðborða Guðs, transgressions against the commandments of God, 671. 3; þóðir afsakar sik um öll afbrigði við þik, for having wronged thee, Sturl. ii. 132, Fms. vii. 24, Ísl. ii. 201. COMPD: afbrigðar-tré, n. tree of transgression, Níðst. 623. 7.
af-brot, n. pl. trespasses, sin, K. Á. 36, Fms. xi. 443; very frequent in religious writings after the Reformation.
af-brugðning, f. deviation from, 656 B. 7.
af-brúðigr and ábrúðigr, adj. jealous, Str. 5, 75; v. the following.
af-brýða, dd, [af-intens. and brúðr, spouse], to be jealous, also contracted ábrýða; þeir vandlæta ok afbrýða sem karldýrin er borin, Stj. 94.
af-brýði and contr. ábrýði, n. (now obsol.) jealousy; en er Sisinnus sá Clemens páfa standa hjá konu sinni, þá viltist hugr hans mjök af mikilli ílsku ok afbrýði, Clem. 1. 42, Fms. i. 9, Yt. II; in all these places spelt with af-, but ábrýði is more common, and occurs Hkr. i. 111; in the poem Gkv. I. 10—hón ægði mér af ábrýði—it is used of the jealousy of a wife to her husband.
af-burðr, m. (also spelt abb-), odds, balance, bias, success (cp. bera af, to prevail); svað honum eigi annat vænna til afburðar, in order to get the better of it, Sv. 166; sá hann at engi varð afburðrinn, they fought à quo Marte, Sturl. ii. 74; hann ætlaði sér afburð, he meant to keep the odds in his own band, Ísl. ii. 450; skal nú fara í haustvíking, ok vilða ek, at hon yrði eigi með minnum afburðum, less glorious, Orkn. 464. II. gen. sing. and pl. afburðar-, a-, freq. used as a prefix in some compds with the notion of gloriously, with distinction. afburðar-tigr, adj. very thick, proud, 24. afburðar-fræknligr, adv. very gallant, Ísl. ii. 369. afburðar-járn, n. excellent iron, Fms. x. 173. afburðar-maðr, m. a man of mark, Rb. 316, Orkn. 474, Grett. 133, Finn. 318. afburðarmikill, adj. conspicuous, Fms. v. 181. afburðar-skip, n. a fine ship, Fas. iii. 106. afburðar-vel, adv. very well, Hkr. ii. 265, Fms. ix. 515. afburðar-vænn, adj. very fine, Fas. i. 182.
af-búð, f. an 'off-booth', side-booth, apartment, Room, 116.
af-dalr, m. an 'off-dale', remote valley; freq. in tales and rhymes of bidden valleys, esp. in pl., e. g. Hvað hét hundr karls er í aðföldum bjó, in a nursery rhyme, K. Þ. K. 38, Fms. v. 183.
af-deilingr, m. part, portion, share, Bs. i. 881.
af-dráttir, m. [draga af, to detract], diminution, deduction, Ann. 1358 (of duties, fines), Dipl. i. 7, Jún. 135 = costs. β. in arithmetic, subtraction, Alg. 358, now frádráguing.
af-drif, n. pl. [drifa], destiny, fate; barn líkligt til stórra aðrifa, a bairn likely to grow into a great man, Fms. iii. 112 (of an exposed child); þykir mér lítil okkur a. verða munn, inglorious life, Fær. 53. It is now also used of final fate, end. 2. ofspring, Stj. 191.
af-drykkja, u. f. over-drinking, drunkenness, = ofdrykkja [af-intens.].
af-eggja, að, to dissuade, (as we might say 'to egg off'), Fms. ix. 352.
af-eitra, ð, to curtail, deprive of, with dat. of the thing; a. þá sinni sænið, to disgrace them, Bar. 3; riddaradóm, to degrade from knighthood, 4.
af-eistra, t, to castrate, Bs. ii. 118.
af-eyringr, m. an animal, sheep with cropped ears, Bs. i. 723, Sturl. iii. 47; also afeyra, ð, to cut the ears off, and afeyrt, n. adj. a mark on sheep.
af-fall, n. diminution, discount, falling off, in the phrase, selja e-t með affallum, to sell at a discount, Sd. 189.
af-fangadagr, v. atfangadagr, day preceding a feast.

af-fara, v. affür.
af-fari, adj. who deviates, trespasses, Fms. viii. 237, v. l.
af-feðrast, að, dep. to fall short of his father, to degenerate, Fms. xi. 423.
af-feldr, m. the spoon of Heia, Edda 231.
af-ferma, d and ð, [farmr], to unload a ship, Fas. ii. 448.
af-flutning, f. and afflutningr, m. disparaging, depreciation, Bs. i. 714.
af-flytja, flutta, to disparage, Fms. x. 41, Grett. 100 A. af-för, ar, f. departure, in the following compds: af-fara-dagr and af-farar-dagr, m. the last day of a feast, esp. of Yule or the like; a. jóla Twelfth-night, opp. to af-fanga-dagr = at-fangadagr, Christmas Eve, Hkr. iii. 304, Fbr. 139, Fms. vii. 272; a. veizlunnar, Bs. i. 287, Fms. iii. 121.
af-fara-kveld, n. the last evening of a feast, Fms. xi. 424. af-gamall, adj. [af-intens.], very old, decrepid from age, Nj. 190; a. karl, Fms. ii. 182, Sks. 92. af-ganga, u. f. surplus, Fms. iii. 208, v. l. II. deviation, digression, Skálda 203. COMPD: afgöngu-dagr, m. = af-faradagr, day of departure, Fas. iii. 600. af-gangr, s, m. surplus, storg, Ver. 17, Dipl. v. 10, Fms. iv. 236 K. Þ. K. 163, in the phrase, með afgöngum, to spare, Fms. iii. 108.
afgangs, gen. used adverbially, over, to spare, l. c., v. l. II. decease death [ganga af, to die], Fas. iii. 596.
af-gelja, u. f. [gala, cp. hégilja], chattering, Edda 110.
af-gipt, f. [gefa af], tribute, K. Á. 170. II. indulgence, absolution, Bs. i. 712, H. E. i. 523, Dipl. i. 5. COMPDS: afgiptar-bré n. letter of indulgence, Bs. i. 699. afgiptar-fé, n. a Norse law term escheatable property, N. G. L. i. 324.
af-gjald, n. tribute, Vm. 78 (freq.)
af-gjarn, adj. eager to be off, flying away, in the proverb, afgjarn verð öfundarfé, Fas. ii. 332; cp. af-sell. af-gjöf, f. = afgipt, K. Á. 170, 174, H. E. i. 430.
af-glapa, að, [cp. gleppa], an Icel. law term, to disturb or break the peace of a court or public meeting, by violence, crowding, shouting, brawling, or the like; ef menn tróðast svá mjök at lögréttu fyrir önnkost, eðr göra þa hrang þat eðr háreysti, at fyrir því afglapest mál manna, ok varðar þa fjórbaugsgarð, Grág. i. 5; ef vörþing verðr afglapt, at eigi megu mí lúkast, 105; ef menn afglapa görð allir þeir er til vóru teknir, i. 495.
af-glapan and afglöpun, f. [v. the preceding word], used of rioting or brawling in a court or at a meeting, to break the law or the peace; it is also used of any illegal steps to stop the course of law, so that the pleadings are interrupted, and there is a flaw in the procedure, v. þingsafglöpun frequent in the Grágás and the Sagas; it was liable to the lesser outlawry v. above: bribery and false witness seem to be counted as þingsafglöpun in Nj. 150, and were to be challenged to the High Court, Lv. 12, 3; Nj., Grág., esp. in the þ. þ. etc.: v. Dasent, Introd. to Burnt Njal.
af-glapi, a, m. an oaf, fool, simpleton, Fms. i. 156, Ld. 34, Sd. 14. COMPD: afglapa-orð, n. words of a fool, in the proverb, úmæt er afglapa-orð, a fool's word is nothing worth—nu úmæt er ómaagarð—Boll. 352.
af-greiðsla, u. f. payment, contribution, Vm. 141. af-guðliga, adv. ungodly, N. G. L. i. 376, v. l. = óguðliga. af-gæzla, u. f. taking care of, H. E. i. 396, uncert. read.
af-görá, ð, to offend, do amiss, transgress, Nj. 254, Fms. vii. 104, viii. 30.
af-görð, f. transgression, offence, mostly in pl., trespasses in a religious sense, Sks. 601, Hkr. iii. 225.
af-görvi, v. atgörfi.
af-hallinn, false read. = ofjarlar, Vall. L. 206, v. l.
af-hallr, adj. sloping downward, Eg. 277.
af-haugr, m. a side-mound, Ísl. ii. 46.
af-hefð, f. [hefð, possessio], ousting, D. N. iv. 881. af-hegna, ð, to enclose, hedge, D. N. iii. 774.
af-heima, gen. pl. n. [heima], from home, out of doors, abroad; fa til afheima, to go abroad, opp. to at heimili, at home, N. G. L. i. 158.
af-helgast, að, dep. to become unholy, to be profaned, Sks. 782 B. af-hellir, m. side-cave, Fms. iii. 570, Fas. ii. 152, Brandkr. 62.
af-henda, d and t, to hand over, Lv. 6, Dipl. ii. 14, 16; a. skuld, to put a debt, Vápn. 41; a. heit, to pay a vow, Bs. i. 121.
af-hending, f. a metrical term, a subdivision of the sambenda, when the final assonance of a verse is repeated in the next one, e. g. seimþver gefr seima | seimör . . . , Edda (Ht. 47 and 24). In mod. Icel. metri afhenda is quite different, viz. a short metre in only two lines.
af-hendis, adv. off one's band, N. G. L. i. 180.
af-hendr, adj. out of one's band, in the phrase, segja e-n sér afhenda to give one up, of a client or the like; leitt er mér at segja þik afhenda því at þat hefi ek aldri gert ef ek hefi við manni tekit, Fs. 34, Fms. i. 51 (of the poet Hallfræð and King Olaf). II. in afhent impet e-m er e-t afhent, unfit for, unable to, Fms. viii. 21.
af-heyrandi, part. act. out of bearing, absent, Grág. ii. 143.
af-heyris, adv. out of bearing, opp. to áheyris, Bs. i. 771.
af-hlaðning, f. unloading, N. G. L. i. 410.
af-hlaup, n. surplus, Fms. iv. 336; til afhlaups, to spare, Alg. 37.
af-hlaups-korn, n. surplus corn, Gþl. 352.
af-hlutr, m. share of a thing, v. fjár-afhlutr.

af-hlýðast, dd, to disobey, D. N. ii. 173.
af-hrapi, a, m. afscourings, outcasts, (an ἀπ. λεγ.—afhrak being now sed); ok ræðr hann sér einum á hendr afhrapa hans, Grág. i. 294 (of the consequences of harbouring a vagabond).
af-hroð, n. destruction, v. afráð, Fas. iii. 160.
af-huga, adj. ind. averse, having turned one's mind from; verða a. e-u or ið e-t, to forget, mind no more, Ísl. ii. 274, Stj. 202, Fs. 47, Bs. i. 78, 655 xi. 3.
af-hugast, að, dep. gov. dat. to forget, Fms. viii. 252; part. afhugaðr ið e-t = afhuga, having put it out of one's mind, ii. 336.
af-hús, n. out-house, side-apartment, Eb. 10.
af-hvarf, n. [hverfa], a diversion, turning aside, Hom. 33, in which passage it is opp. to gagnvegr, the straight path, Ld. 204.
af-hýða, dd, to scourge thoroughly, 'bide', Gret. 135, Sturl. iii. 295.
af-höfða, að, to behead, Fms. i. 217, Stj. 464. af-högg, n. a law term, 'off-bewing', mutilation, maiming, N. G. L. i. 70, Bs. i. 675, H. E. i. 237. II. chips, splinters, Fms. ii. 290.
AFI, a, m. [cp. Lat. avus, Ulf. avó = μάμμα, and aba = ἀντήρ, vir], randfather: it is now frequent, but occurs very rarely in old writers, who almost always use móðurfaðir or föðurfaðir. Yet it occurs in the poem Rm. 16—afi ok amma—and Vpm. 29, where it = föðurfaðir. It is curious to observe that in the poem Skm.—whence it is again transferred to the Grógaldr—it is used in the sense of a boy or a son; cp. as an illustration of this use the Norse phrase—D. N. iv. 848—afi eptir afa = now after father, man after man in uninterrupted succession, in accordance to the Gothic aba; Edda 108, Fms. iv. 288, vi. 346, xi. 6. We also say lang-afi, great-grandfather, and langamma, great-grandmother. COMPD: afa-systir, f. great aunt, Landn. 317.
af-kaup, n. bad bargain, Fms. v. 255.
af-káraligr, v. afkáligr.
af-kárligr, adj. = afkár, Lex. Poët.; now freq. afkáraleg, adj. and lega, adv. of manners, odd, like a madman.
af-kárr, adj. [af- intens.; kárr does not occur; cp. the modern kári, gale, tempest, (poët.)], strange, prodigious; er hér nokkut afkárni, of a giant pulling a bear out of his den by the ears, Fas. ii. 237; t occurs repeatedly in Lex. Poët. = very strong, remarkable; afkár söng, discordant song, of shouting, Akv. 38; cp. launkárr.
af-kleyfi, n. in the COMPD afkleyfis-orð, n. a metric. term, a superfluous word, syllable, in a verse, an enclitic syllable preceding the höfudstaf in a verse. COMPD: afkleyfis-samstafa, n, f. syllaba hypermetra, Edda (Ht.) 37.
af-klæða, dd, to undress, Stj. 194. β. reflex. to undress oneself, Eg. 205, Fms. x. 294.
af-komandi, part. descendant, Hkr. iii. 170. af-kvæmi, n. [kvám], 'off-coming', offspring, in a collect. sense, Fms. v. 212, Hkr. i. 325, Orkn. 142, Stj. 39. COMPD: afkvæmis-maðr, n. descendant, Stj. 39, 160.
af-kymi, a, m. nook, Ísl. ii. 471 (paper MS.); kymi, id., is now freq.
AFI, s, m. beard of a forge, Edda 69, 70, Stj. 312, Fms. viii. 8; in N. G. L. i. 328 it seems to mean beard (in general).
afi, n. [Grimm mentions an O. H. G. aval; abal is a dub. ἀπ. λεγ. in A. S. poetry, Ormul. avel], strength, esp. physical force; afreksmaðr at afii ok væði, Eg. 1; styrkr at afii, Fms. i. 19; ramr at afii, 155; fullkominn t afii ok hyggju, bodily and mental vigour, Ld. 256; stilt þú þó rélf afhinn, at þú verðir eigi kendr, Nj. 32; hafa afi til e-s, be a match for, be able to do, Gpl. 411. β. virtue; afi dauðfærandi grasa, virtue of poisonous herbs, 623, 26. 2. metaph. strength, power, might, majority, odds, in the phrase, ok skal afi ráða, plurima vota valeant; ef gerðarmenn (umpires) verða eigi ásáttir ok skal a. ráða, Grág. i. 493; nú verða fjórðungsmenn eigi ásáttir, þá skal afi ráða með þeim, i. i. p. 44, 531 (where it is used of a jury); en ef þeir verða eigi ásáttir er í ógréttu síða hvat þeir vilja lofa efr í lög leida, þá skolu þeir ryða ógréttu (viz. divide) ok skal ráða a. með þeim, Nj. 150. 5. force, violence; taka með afii, Stj. 430; bjóða e-m afi, Bs. ii. 106. COMPDS: afis-munn, m. odds, superiority of strength, esp. in the phrase, kenna afismunar, where there is a short struggle, the one being soon overcome, Eb. 182, Eg. 508, Hkr. i. 286; β. kenna afismuna = kosta afis, to exert oneself to the utmost; varð hann at kenna a. (to exert the whole of his strength) áðr hann kæmi honum undir, Eb. 172. afis-raun = afraun.
AFILA, að, [cp. Swed. avel, breed, stock: Dan. avling, farming; avls-gaard, farm; faareavl, qvægavil, breed of sheep or cattle. In Norse (mod.) avle is to harvest; Swed. afila, to beget. In the Icel. verb afila the idea of producing or gathering prevails, whereas the nouns branch off; the weak afi chiefly denotes produce, means, stores, resources, troops, forces; the strong one—afi—force alone. Yet such phrases as ramr at afii indicate something besides the mere notion of strength. In the mod. Scand. idioms—Dan., Swed., Norse—there are no traces left of the idea of 'force': cp. the Lat. opes and copiae. The Icel. spelling and pronunciation with bl (abl) is modern, perhaps from the time of the Reformation: cp. the words efla etc. with a changed vowel. The root is OP-, as shewn in Lat. ope, opes, the ö being changed into a o]. I. with gen. of the thing, to gain, acquire, earn, procure; vandara at gæta fengins fjár en afa þess (a proverb); þá bjöggju þeir skip ok öfudu manna til, got men to man it, Eg. 170. β. the phrase, afa sér fjár ok frægðar, to earn fame and wealth, of young heroes going sea-roving; fóru um sumarit í víking ok öfudu sér fjár, Eg. 4; afa sér fjár ok frama, Fs. 5; fjár ok virðingar, id.; hann hafði afa sér fjár (made money) í hólmgöngum, Eg. 49; afaði þessi bardagi honum mikillar frægðar, brought him great fame, Fms. ii. 307; kom honum í hug, at honum mundi mikillar framkvæmdar afa, bring him great advantage, Eb. 112. 2. as a law term, to cause, inflict a wound; ef maðr afaðr einum blóðs eðr bens af heiptugri hendi, N. G. L. i. 387. II. with acc., mostly in unclassical writers, but now rare, to earn; afaði hann þar fé mikit, Fms. vii. 80; afaði þann thesaur er, 655 xxxii. 1; hafit er ok mikit í afa, Al. 159; mun ek til hafa afaðr ok eljun at afa mír annan við, to contrive, Ld. 318, where, however, the excellent vellum MS. A. M. 309, 4to, has gen.—annars víðar—more classically, as the Saga in other passages uses the gen., e. g. afa sér manna ok hrossa, to procure horses and men, l. c. little below. β. reflex., e-u afaðr c-t, gains, Fb. 163. γ. absol., njót sem þú hefir afa, of ill-earned means, Nj. 37. δ. part. afaði, Njarð. 366. 2. now used absol. to fish, always with acc.; a standing phrase in Icel., the acc. only being used in that particular connection. III. with dat. in the sense of to perform, manage, be able to; hann afaði brátt mikilli vinnu, ok var hagr vel, Fms. i. 289; fyr mun hann því afa en ek færa honum höfuð mitt, it will sooner happen, Fms. iv. 291, where the Hkr. reads orka; baud út leidangri, sem honum þótti landit mestu mega afa, to the utmost that the country could produce, Fms. x. 118; ekki afaðr hann því at standa í móti yðr, he is not man enough to stand against you, Fas. iii. 138. af-lag, n. [leggja af], gen. aflags. I. used as adv. = afgangs, sparring, Fas. iii. 477. In modern Icel. hafa aflögum or afögum, to have to spare. II. slaughtering of cattle, killing off; leggja af margan fénað . . . minti biskup enn á um aflögin, the slaughtering, Bs. i. 913. af-laga, adv. unlawfully, Grág. i. 473, ii. 367, Gpl. 294, 432, 473, Hkr. ii. 246, Al. 153; ganga a., Stj. 430. 2. now used in the sense to be out of joint, things going wrong. af-lagliga, adv. = aflögliga, 655 xxxii. 4. aflan and öftun, f. gain, acquisition, Hkr. ii. 218, Sks. 232. COMPD: öftunar-maðr, m. a good steward, Sturl. iii. 130. af-langr, adj. oblong, Ann. year 1414; formed from the Lat. (?), now common. af-launsn, f., Lat. absolutio. I. some small release, ransom, compensation, Sturl. iii. 142, 239; gjöra a. um e-t, to relieve, release oneself in regard to a thing; Ólafr komungr mælti, 'Framar hefir þú þá gert um vigin á Grænlandi, en fiskimaðrim kallar a. vera fiskinnar; því at hann kallast leysa sik, ef hann dregr fisk fyrir sik, enn annan fyrir skip sitt, þrjúða fyrir öngul, fjórða fyrir vað', king Olaf said, 'Thou hast done more then in the matter of manslayings in Greenland, than what the fisherman calls the ransom of his fishing; for he says that he has freed himself (of his fishing), if he draws (up) a fish for himself, but another for his boat, a third for his angle, a fourth for his line,' (this way of reckoning their catch is still common with fishermen in many parts of England and Scotland), Fbr. 154; cp. a stanza in a Scottish ballad, 'I launched my boat in Largo Bay, | And fishes caught I three; | One for wad and one for book, | And one was left for me.' 2. eccles. = absolution, K. Á. 226, Hom. 137, Gret. 162, Fms. x. 18. af-lát, n. leaving off, relinquishing; a. synda, Stj. 567, Sks. 612 B; án afláti, used adverb. incessantly, 625, p. 77, Th. 20. β. remission, pardon; aflát misgörninga, Hom. 160; a. synda, 159. COMPD: afláts-korn, n. surplus corn, store corn, Gpl. 352, v. l. aflaupskorn. af-látr, adj. negligent, lazy, Hom. 152. af-leiðing, f. 'off-leading'. I. now generally used in the pl. consequences, result; 2. in old writers, on the contrary, it seldom occurs, and then in a peculiar sense. So Sturl. iii. 128, góðar afleiðingar eru með e-m, they are on good terms, things go on pretty well between them. 3. metric. continuation; hér er himn fyrri vísuhelmingr leiddr af þeirri vísu, er áðr var kvæðin ok fylgir þat málsorð, er afleiðing (continuation) er kölluð, Edda (Ht.) 126. af-leiðingar, s, m., skilja góðan afleiðing, used adverb. to part on friendly terms, Sturl. iii. 134; cp. the preceding word, 128; both passages are taken from the þorgils S. Skarða, to which the phrase seems to be peculiar. af-leiðis, adv. I. loc. astray, out of the path, Sd. 146, 655 xvii. 4. 2. metaph., færa a., to pervert, Stj. 227, 519; þeir lugu á okkr, en þú færðir orð þeirra a., you perverted their words, Bs. i. 7, Glúm. 327; Snúa e-m a., to seduce, Andr. 625, 75. β. impers., e-u þokar a., turns out wrong, Bs. i. 340. af-leifar, f. pl. scraps, remnants, leavings, Stj. 383, Bs. i. 237; f. búsafléifar, Grág. i. 299. af-leitinn, adj. = afléitr, of odd appearance, Fas. ii. 329. af-leitliga, adv. perversely, Stj. 55; illa ok a., 173. af-leitligr, adj. = afléitr, perverse, deformed, Stj. 274, Al. 96. af-leitr, adj. [lita, cp. also leit in compounds], strange, hideous; neut., hversu afleit (how disgusting) oss virðist um þeirra háttu, Hks. iii. 425; hversu afleitir (stupid) oss sýnast þeirra hættr, Fms. vii. 206, l. c.; þeir fyrirhlita ok halda alla sauðahirða sem afleita, odd, peculiar, Stj. 293; afleitit eðr eligt, vile, I Sam. xv. 9. β. abandoned, the face turned from, deserted by, with dat.; afleita hamingjunni, luckless, Stj. 421. Ruth i. 12.

af-lendis, adv. = erlendis, abroad, N. G. L. i. 244.
af-lendr, adj. far from land, in open sea, Bs. ii. 47.
af-letja, latí, to dissuade. α. with infin., Bs. i. 39. β. with acc., aflatti ham mjök fyrir sér ferðina, Fms. ix. 437. γ. or with an acc. of the person and gen. of the thing; a. c-n e-s, v. letja.
af-létta, tt, to cease, Fr.

af-léttir, prompt, ready, v. ofléttir.
af-lítt, n. adj. sbort of strength; verða a., to fail in strength, Fms. i. 55, iii. 150.
af-lróf, f. [af, m.], bole below the forge, cinder-pit, or a water-pit wherein to cool the iron (?); cp. Vkv. 22, þíðr. 72.
af-hella, u, f. beart-bone in a forge; er hann hafði þau (viz. the bones) niðrgraft undir sína afhellu, þíðr. 95.

aflí, a, m. I. means, acquisition, gain, produce, stores, fruits; aflí ok herfang, Fms. ii. 106; hafði þórir einn forráð þess líðs ok svá afla þess alls er verðr í ferðinni, iv. 297; eignir . . . með öllum afla ok ávexti, increase and interest, K. A. 54. 2. now used, α. partic. of fishing stores, fishing, and β. gener. of provisions and stores of any kind. II. metaph.: I. might, power; hafa afla til eingis, have might or means for nothing, be unable to do anything, to be powerless, Nj. 27. 2. forces, troops, body, Lat. copiae, opes; Ásgrímur sagði þat mikinn afla, great support, Nj. 210; en þat sýnist mér þó rúðligast at biðja sér líðs, þvíat þeir draga afla at yör, they gather forces against you, 222; munu vér skjótt eiga af honum ván hins mesta úfriðar ef hann fær nokkurn afla, troops, resources, Fms. i. 188; at herja á þá fœða með allmikinn afla, strong body, 184; ok er hirð Sverris konungs sú, at aflinn Magnúss konungs (the main body) flýði allr, viii. 119.

COMPDS: afla-bröðgð, n. pl. [bragð], stores of fish, A. A. 276.
afla-fátt, n. adj. = affútt, Fms. iii. 133. afla-fé, n. acquired property, N. G. L. i. 448. afla-líttill, adj. having little power, Finn. 320 (compar. aflaminni).

afla-maðr, m. powerful, strong, Lv. 12, 109. afla-mikill, adj. opp. to aflalitill, powerful, strong, Ld.; harðgjörð ok aflamikill, Bs. i. 635; var Sæmundr aflamestr, the strongest in men, Sturl. ii. 44: β. (= aflmikill), used of physical strength, Stj. Judg. iii. 29; verða menn eigi ásáttir hvárr sterkari er, en þó áfla flestir Gísla aflameira (= aflmeira), Gísl. 26. afla-munr, m. odds, Sturl.; at etja við aflamuninn, to fight against odds, Al. 110. afla-skortir, m. shortcoming in power, opp. to aflamunr, Bs. i. 525. afla-stund, f. fishing season, Bs. ii. 179.

af-líma, adj. ind., verða e-ni a., to be cut off, separated from, Post. 95, Anu. 26.
af-líma, að, to 'off-limb,' to dismember, maim, mutilate, Js. 37, Ann. 1342.
af-líman, f. 'off-limbings,' mutilation, Bs. ii. 75.
af-lauss, adj. weak, strengthless, a medical term, palsied, paralytic, Bs. i. 351.

af-leysi, n. palsy, v. Fél. ix.
af-litill, adj. weak, Fms. ii. 201, vii. 208.
af-líkill, adj. of great strength, Sturl. i. 23, Fms. i. 261.
af-lofa, að, to refuse, Fr.

af-raun, f. trial (proof) of strength; in plur. bodily exercises; Skalla-grímur hendi mikít gaman at afraunum ok leikum, Eg. 187; er þat flestra manna ætlan, at Grettir hafi verit sterkastr héraðsmanna, síðan þeir Ormr ok Þórálfir löguðu af afraunir, Grett. 133; þótti þetta mikil a., Fms. iii. 210, Finn. 274: cp. afraun.

af-skortir, m. failing of strength, Fms. ii. 149.
aftugr, adj. strong, v. öflugr.
af-vani, adj. ind. deficient in strength; verða a., to succumb; taka þeir fang, ok verðr Gunnarr mjök a., Fms. ii. 75 (in wrestling); enda varð hann a. fyrir líðs sakir, was overpowered, got the worst of it, Isl. ii. 172; Eustachus sá sik afhvani (acc.) í móti þeim, 655 x. p. 2.

af-vöðvi, a, m. [vöðvi, a muscle], the biceps muscle, Sturl. 51, Ld. 220, Fas. ii. 344. af-vöðviga, adv. = aflaga, unlawfully, D. N. i. 80, Stj. 154. af-má, ð, to 'mow off,' to blot out, destroy, Fms. ii. 238, Stj. 208, 346.
af-mán, f. [af, má], degradation, sbame, v. the following.
af-mána, að, = afmá, to degrade, pollute.
af-mánaðr, part. polluted, defiled, Rb. 332.

af-mynda, að, to deform; dep. afmyndask, to be deformed, Fas. i. 425 (paper M.S.); the word is now very freq.
af-mœðing, f. [móðir], right of weaning lambs, by taking them from the mother; kirkja á lamba a. (perhaps wrongly for afmæðing) í Mölvíkhöfða, Vm. 164.

af-nám, n. gener. taking away, removal, Stj. 2 Sam. iv. 11. β. esp. in the phrase, at afnámi, of something reserved, before the division of spoil, property, or inheritance; now, taka af óskiptu, Dan. forlods, Grág. i. 330, 336, Jb. 289 (Ed. af námi); konungr skildi hafa úr hlutskipti þriðjung við líðsmenn, en umfram at afnámi bjórskind öll ok

af-nám, n. gener. taking away, removal, Stj. 2 Sam. iv. 11. β. esp. in the phrase, at afnámi, of something reserved, before the division of spoil, property, or inheritance; now, taka af óskiptu, Dan. forlods, Grág. i. 330, 336, Jb. 289 (Ed. af námi); konungr skildi hafa úr hlutskipti þriðjung við líðsmenn, en umfram at afnámi bjórskind öll ok

af-nám, n. gener. taking away, removal, Stj. 2 Sam. iv. 11. β. esp. in the phrase, at afnámi, of something reserved, before the division of spoil, property, or inheritance; now, taka af óskiptu, Dan. forlods, Grág. i. 330, 336, Jb. 289 (Ed. af námi); konungr skildi hafa úr hlutskipti þriðjung við líðsmenn, en umfram at afnámi bjórskind öll ok safala, Eg. 57. 2. metaph. privation, loss; ok hann verðr at skáða þeim mönnum nokkurn, er oss mun þykkja a. í, Eg. 114, Fms. vii. 244. COMPDS: afnáms-fé, n. a law term, share, which is reserved before the division of property, spoil, inheritance, or the like, Eg. 240, Fms. iv. 28. afnáms-gripir, m. something reserved or set aside, Fms. x. 214.

af-nefja, að, to cut off one's nose, Str. 35.
af-neita, að and tt, and afníta, tt, now always afneita, að, to deny, refuse; with dat., hefir afneitað tiltekinni trú, Fms. iii. 166; eigi vil ek því afneita, refuse, Fs. 11; ek afneitta eigi hans orðsending, Stj. i Kings xx. 7; en er hann afneitti eigi með öllu (refused not), þá báðu þeir hann því meir, Grett. 146. 2. absol. afníta; en þar es Jökull bróðir minn laust þik högg, þat skaltu hafa bótalaust, því at þú afníttir þá er þér vöru bóðnar, Fs. 57.

af-neiting, f. denial, renunciation, Th. 17.
af-neyzla, u, f. use, consumption; a. skógarins, Fs. 125, Nj. 78; a. fjar (pl.), Jb. 404 A, B (Ed. ofneyzlu).
af-r, v. áfr, buttermilk.

af-rað, afráð, afroð, and afhroð, n. (Fas. iii. 169). [cp. Swed. afrad; from roð, rud, fundus, ager (?)]. I. prop. a Norse and Swedish law term, tribute, ground tax, payable to the king; a. ok landaura, N. G. L. i. 257, D. N. iii. 408. So also in Vsp. 27, hvárt skyldu æsir a. gjalda, where it is opp. to gildi, league. II. metaph. loss, damage, I. in the phrase, gjalda a., to pay a heavy fine, suffer a great loss; en þat a. munu vér gjalda, at margir munu eigi kunna frá at segja hvárir sigrast, there will be so heavy a loss in men, such a bavoc in killed, Nj. 197 (where most MSS. read afroð, some afráð, Ed. afráð); tólluðu þeir opt um málaferlin, sagði Flosi, at þeir hefði mikít a. góldit þegar, 254 (MSS. afráð, afroð, and afhroð); Lýfingur mun þykjast áor mikít a. góldit hafa í láti bræðra sinna, 155 (MSS. afráð, afroð, and afhroð), Fms. x. 324. 2. in the phrase, göra mikít a., to make a great bavoc; görði hann mikít afhroð í sinni vör, great slaughter, Fas. iii. 169: cp. Lex. Pöet. 3. advice, Vtkv. 5; the verse is spurious and the meaning false.

afráðs-kollr, m. cognom., Germ. 'steuerkopf,' cp. nefgildi, Engl. poll-tax, v. the preceding.
af-reizla, u, f. = afgreizla, outlay, payment, Ám. 13.
af-rek, n. [af-intens.], a deed of prowess, a deed of derring do; margir lofudu mjök afrek Egils, ok sigr þann sem hann vann, Fms. xi. 234; vinna afrek, Fs. 6; ekki a. gerði hann meira í Noregi, Fagrsk. 94; hann lét ok göra þar í Niðarósi naust bæði mörg, ok svá stór, at afrek var í grand, magnificent, Hkr. iii. 268. COMPDS: afreks-gripir, n. a splendid object, a thing of price, Ld. 144. afreks-maðr, m. a valiant man; a. at aflí ok áræði, Eg. 1; en þat hefi ek spurt, at hirð hans er skipuð afreksmönnum einum, heroes, 19, 84; a. um vöxt eðr afl, Ísl. ii. 190.

afreks-verk, n. valiant deed, Fær. 51, Al. 30. af-reka, að, to achieve, perform; munu þér mikít afreka, Lv. 33; hvat þeir höfðu afrekat, Fs. iii. 221; a. vel, to succeed, Bárð. 175.
af-remma, u, f. [ramr], restriction, encumbrance, obligation; sú er a. með þessum tillögum, at prestr skal vera at heimilishúsi ok syngja allar heimilistiðir, Ám. 37.

afrendi, f. [afrendir], strength, prowess, valour, Hým. 28.
afrendr, adj. [frequently or almost constantly spelt afreyndr, as if from 'af-intens. and 'raun,' of great prowess; but the derivation from 'afr = afar-' and '-endi or -indi' is better]. I. in the phrase, a. at aflí, very strong, valiant, Fms. ii. 87, Finn. 254; compar. afrendari, Fms. x. 321, Fs. 33, 48 (where the MS. Vh. spells afreyndr, so also does the Fb. i. 341, etc.). II. absol. without adding at aflí, Lv. 101 (where written afreyndr).

af-réttir, m. and afrétt, f. (now always f.; cp. rétt), [probably akin to reka, viz. afrekt, contr. afrétt], compassium, common pasture; it is now prop. used of mountain pastures, whither the cattle (sheep) are driven in the summer in order to graze during July and August, and again collected and driven down in the autumn (Sept.); in Norway called almennigr. I. masc., thus defined, en þat er afréttir, er ij menn eigu saman eðr fleiri, hverngi hlut sem hverr þeirra á í, Grág. ii. 303, 330; í afrétt þann, er, i. 397, ii. 303; afréttu, acc. pl., ii. 301, Jb. 198 A, K. þ. K. 90, Olk. 37; hálfan afrétt, Vm. 29. II. f. afréttinni (dat.), Grág. (Kb.) ii. 301, 325 A; gen. afréttar (gender uncert.), 303 A; afréttin, id., Cod. A; afrétt (dat. f.?), Ísl. ii. 330, Háv. 39; afréttum, dat. pl. (gender uncert.), Boll. 336. COMPDS: afréttar-dómur, m. court held for deciding causes concerning common pasture, Grág. ii. 323. afréttamenn, m. pl. owners or partners in common pasture, Grág. ii. 331.

af-roð, v. afráð.
af-róg, n. excuse, justification, Str. 71.
af-ruðningr, m. [ryðja], clearing off, defence, repeal, Pr. 425.
af-runi, a, m. [runi, renna], deviation; metaph. sin, trespasses; unibót ok iðran afruna (gen.), 125, 174; iðrun fyrir görva afruna (acc. pl.), id.; túrfelling er hann hefir fyrir afruna þá, er verða í þessa heims lífi, id. 184. β. injury, offence, D. N. iii. 367 (Fr.)

af-yrði, n. = afaryrði, insolent words. af-ræði, n. [af-intens. and ráð], absolute rule, D. N. ii. 336 several times (Fr.)
af-rækja, t and ð, to neglect, condemn, H. E. i. 257; reflex. afrækjast, in af-rækja, t and ð, to neglect, condemn, H. E. i. 257; reflex. afrækjast, in af-rækja, t and ð, to neglect, condemn, H. E. i. 257; reflex. afrækjast, in af-rækja, t and ð, to neglect, condemn, H. E. i. 257; reflex. afrækjast, in af-rækja, t and ð, to neglect, condemn, H. E. i. 257; reflex. afrækjast, in af-rækja, t and ð, to neglect, condemn, H. E. i. 257; reflex. afrækjast, in af-rækja, t and ð, to neglect, condemn, H. E. i. 257; reflex. afrækjast, in same signification, a. with dat., a. lögnum, to break, neglect the law, 4. β. with acc. (now always so), a. sitt höfuðmerki, Karl. 189. γ. cert. dat. or acc., a. Guðs hölvsno, Edda (pref.) 144, Stj. 241. δ. with at d following infin., Gpl. 183; komungar afræktast at sitja í Úppsólum, 7 off, Hkr. ii. 97. ε. absol., Fms. vii. 221, 188, Gpl. 506.

f-saka, ad, to excuse, exculpate, K. Á. 230, Stj. 37. β. pass. afsaki, to be (stand) excused, K. Á. 226, Stj. 125.

f-sakan and afsökun, f. a 'begging off,' excuse, exculpation, K. Á. 8, Stj. 152. COMP. f-sakanar-orð, n. pl. excuses, Stj.

f-saki, a, m. excuse, 623. 60.

f-sanna, ad, to refute, prove to be false ('unsooth'), 655 xvii. 1.

f-sáð, n. seed-corn, N. G. L. i. 240.

f-segja, sagði, to resign, renounce; a. sér e-t, Barl. 210. Now used the sense of to refuse, deny.

f-setja, setti, to depose, put down, v. the following.

f-setning, f. and afsetning, m. deposition, (off-setting, cp. Scot. 'aff-'), Jam., which means dismissal, the act of putting away, H. E. ii. 74, 523.

f-siða, adj. ind. immoral, of loose manners, Grág. i. 138.

f-sifja, ad, [sifjar], a law term, to cut off from one's 'sib,' alienate one's family, renounce; gefa má maðr vingjafir at sér lifanda, hest a yxn, vápn eða þvilika gripi, ok afsifjar (Cod. A reads afsitjar, but without wrongly) hann sér þó at sex skynsömum mönnum þyki eigi svik gör við erfingja, Jb. 163, D. N. i. 141, Pál Vidal. p. 84. The word appears to be a Norse law term, and does not occur in the laws of Iceland. Commonwealth, but came into use with the code Jb.

f-siða, adv. aside, apart, Krók. 56.

f-skapligr, adj. [skapligr], missbapen, monstrous, huge, shocking; áfelli, shocking accident, Stj. 90; herhfligr ok a., 655 xiii. A. 1; a. ok namligt, Stj. 272; a. úmenska, Fms. ii. 225, K. Á. (App.) 230.

f-skeiðis, adv. astray, H. E. i. 252, 655 xi. 3, Hom. 99.

f-skipan, f. deposition, dismissal, D. N. (Fr.)

f-skipta, adj. ind. cut off, from an inheritance or the like, Lat. expers; the phrase, vera görð a., to be wronged, Hrafn. 14.

f-skipti, n. pl. dealing with, intercourse, (cp. the phrase, skipta sér af a., to meddle with, care about); ok eingi a. veita heidnum goðum, Fms. ii. 3; ef hann veitir sér engi a., does not deal with, Grág. ii. 121. COMP. f-skipta-lauss, adj. heedless, careless, having nothing to do with, Fb. i. 2. afskipta-litill, adj. caring little about, Fms. vii. 181, Orkn. 142.

skipta-samr, adj. meddling, partaking, v. úafskiptasamr.

f-skiptinn, adj. meddling, partaking, Ld. 66.

f-skiptir, part. = afskipta, wronged, cheated, Fas. iii. 619. Metaph. id of, having no interest in, Stj. 155, 195.

f-skirrandi, participial noun, [skirrast], an offscouring, outcast; leiðir þenna a. út ór borginni, 656 C. 33.

f-skrámliga, adv. hideously, Hom. 155.

f-skrámligr, adj. [af-intens.]; skrámr means a giant; skrimsl, a monster; cp. Engl. to scream, hideous, monstrous; a. illvirki, a sacrilege, Á. 222: also spelt askramligr and askramliga, Al. 142, Hom. 155.

f-skræmi, n. a monster, v. the following.

f-skræmiliga, adv. hideously: a. of a scream; þá lét út á stöðli a., wled piteously, of a ghost, Hkr. ii. 312, Eb. 320, of the bellowing of mad bull. β. of a monstrous shape; þrællinn (of a ghost) rétti inn fudit, ok sýndist honum a. mikitt, Grett. 83 new Ed. γ. metaph., last a., to be shocked at, Stj. 101.

f-skurðr, ar, m. a chip, lappet, Dipl. iii. 3.

f-skyld, f. a law term, due, obligation, encumbrance, several times in the Cartularies and deeds of gift, in the phrase, sú er a. þessa fjár, D. I. i. 3, etc.; með þessi a. fara þessir fjárlutir, 282, Vm. 108: cp. the still more freq. phrase, sú er afvinna, cp. afvinna.

f-snið, n. a lappet, snip, Pr. 412.

f-sniðning, f. snipping off. afsníðningar-járn, n. a chopper, Fr.

f-sniðis, adv. cut through, across, Bs. i. 388.

f-spraki, a, m. [cp. A.S. sprecan; Germ. sprechen], rumour, bearsay; líkon jarl hafði fengit afspraka nokkurn (perh. better in two words), ns. i. 187.

f-springr, m., Al. II, Hkr. iii. 277, Edda (pref.) 146, and various her forms; afspringr, m. and afspringi, n., Gpl. 47, Fms. viii. 237, s. 46 B, Stj. 63, Orkn. 176; the form now usual is afspringi, n., Fms. 217, Fas. ii. 391, Bret. 112. 1. gener. afspring, progeny, v. the notations above. 2. in pl. used of the produce of the earth, Sks. 48 B (re). 3. metaph.: a. a band, a detached part of a body; tíst Hrafn þegar vita, at þessi a. mundi vera af ferð þeirra þorgils, that is detachment must be from the host of Þborgils and his followers, Sturl. 274. β. a branch, ramification; ok er mikil ván, at þar verði kurr a. (offsboot) af þessum ófriði á Limafrði, Fms. xi. 13. γ. mour, notice, = afspraki; fá nokkurn a. um e-t, Fms. viii. 160.

f-spurn, f. a 'speering off,' news, notice, Fms. i. 187.

f-spýttir, part. spit out of, deprived of, Anecd. 42.

f-standa, stóð, [Germ. abstehen], to cede, part with, Sturl. i. 164, l. miðla, Fms. iii. 208.

f-stigr, s, m. by-path, Fs. 5, Fær. 102.

af-stúfa, ad, or afstýfa, ð, to lop, prune, of trees; a. við, N. G. L. i. 350, Lex. Poët., v. stúfr.

af-stúka, u, f. side-nook, 655 xxxii. 4; a side-room in a temple, Fas. iii. 213; now stúka is almost always used of a sacristy.

af-svar, n. refusal, in pl. in the phrase, veita e-u afsvör, to refuse, Ld. 114, Fas. i. 444, Fbr. 120.

af-svara, ad, to deny, refuse, Fas. i. 528; with dat. of pers. and thing, Sturl. iii. 180.

af-sviptur, part. stripped; with dat., afsviptur þinni úsjónu, cut off from thy countenance, Stj. 228. Gen. xviii. 11, Sks. 342, H. E. i. 457.

af-sýnis, adv. out of sight, Fms. viii. 344.

af-sæll, adj. luckless, in the proverb, a. verðr annars gjafs jafnan, (another version of the proverb is quoted s. v. afgjarn), coveted wealth, which is eagerly looked for by another, is luckless, difficult to keep safe, Stj. 78.

af-tak, u, f. 1. gener. taking away, B. K. 108. 2. 'taking off' (Shaksp.), slaying, executing; hvat hann við bjóða fyrir a. Geirsteins, compensation for the slaughter of G., Fms. vii. 360; en a. hans (slaying) segja eigi allir einum hætti, x. 390; með aftaki Ólafs, by slaying him, 195; um mauna aftök, executions, Gpl. 137: cp. aftaka, and taka af, to execute, behead. 3. in pl. commonly used of, a. flat denial, in such phrases as, hafa aftök um e-t, to deny flatly. In some compts this signification can be traced, as in af-taka-minni, Fms. i. 139. β. it is also now used in many compts of whatever is excessive, above all measure, e.g. af-taka-veðr, a hurricane. COMP. af-taks-skjöldr, m. a huge shield, Fas. i. 415. af-taka-maðr, m. a determined, obstinate person; hún var a. mikill um þetta mál, he was very stubborn in this case, Hkr. ii. 74. af-taka-minni, adj. compar. less obstinate, more pliable; stóð konungur í fyrstu fast á móti, en drottning var allt af-takaminni, the king at first stood fast against it, but the queen was all along less stubborn, Fms. i. 139.

af-taka, u, f. = aftak: 1. gener. loss, privation; a. ok missa, of a personal loss by death, Edda 37. 2. death by violent means, slaughter; til aftöku mauna eðr fé upp at taka, for the cutting off of men or the confiscation of their goods, Eg. 73, 252; hann harði verit at aftöku þorkels föstra, Fms. vii. 201, Orkn. 22 old Ed. Formerly there were no public executions in Iceland, except the stoning of wizards or witches, Ld. ch. 98, Eb. ch. 20, Vd. ch. 26; and the hanging of thieves, Fbr. ch. 19, Eb. i. c. Now, however, used in the sense of public execution, and in various compts, e.g. af-töku-staðr, m. place of execution, etc.

af-tekja, u, f. dues, collections, revenues, or the like; til forræðis ok allra atekna (gen. pl.), Bs. i. 692; úbið ok a. staðanna, revenue, 752.

af-tekning, f. taking away, a grammatical term, an apostrophe, Skálda 182.

af-tekt, f. = atekja, Fms. v. 274, xi. 441, Bs. i. 68.

af-telja, talði, to dissuade, Fms. x. 27.

af-tigna, ad, now antigna, v. and antigna, to disgrace, Sks. 225.

af-trú, f. unbelief, beres, Orkn. 188.

af-trúast, ad, dep. to fall into unbelief, Bs. ii. 181.

af-tækiligt, n. adj. advisable, feasible, [cp. taka e-t af, to decide for], Fms. viii. 348.

af-tækt, n. adj. blamable; er þat ok ætun mín at fátt muni vera aftækt um yðra skapsmuni, I 'ettle' that there will be little blameworthy about your turn of mind, Fms. v. 341.

af-tæma, ð, to 'toom' off, to empty, Fr.

afugr, backwards, going the wrong way, v. öfugr.

afund, envy, v. öfund.

af-undinn, adj. cross, uncivil.

afusa, gratitude, pleasure, v. afusna.

af-vega, adv. [afvegur, Bs. ii. 92], off the way, astray, Sd. 149. Metaph. in moral sense; leiða a., to mislead; ganga a., to go astray.

af-vegaðr, part. misled, Mar.

af-vegis = afvega, astray, Skálda 203.

af-velta, adj. [the Scot. awald or awall], cast, used of cattle, sheep, or horses that have fallen on the back and are unable to rise, Háv. 44.

af-vensla, u, f. expenses, outlay; auðræði (means) urðu brátt eigi mikil, en afvenslur þóttu varla með mikilli stillingu, Bs. i. 136.

af-vik, n. a creek, recess, Stj. 195; metaph. a hiding-place, þiðr. 137.

af-vikinn, part. secluded, retired; a. staðr = afvik.

af-vinna, u, f. encumbrance, due, fees, outgoing, = afskyld. Freq. in deeds of gift, e.g. D. I. i. 203, 266; þá lágu öngar gjafir til staðarius, en a. varð öngu minni, then no gifts came in to the see, but the outlay was in nothing less, Bs. i. 84; þá górdust fjárhagir úhægir í Skálahlóti, urðu afvinnur miklar (great outgoing) en tillög (incomings) eingin, Bs. i. 99.

af-virða, ð and t, to despise, Barl. several times.

af-virðilligr, adj. worthless, poor, despicable, Barl. 75, 154; v. auvirðilligr and auðv., which are the Iceland forms.

af-virðing, f., contr. ávirðing, disrepute, disgrace, fault, Bs. ii. 187.

af-vönn, adv. unexpected, Fas. ii. 552.

af-vöxtr, m. 'off-wax,' i. e. decrease, N. G. L. i. 214; opp. to ávöxtr.

af-þerra, ð, and mod. ad, to wipe off; metaph. to expunge, Stj. 142.

af-þokka, ad, in the phrase, a. e-t fyrir e-m, to throw discredit on, run down, set against, Fms. ii. 145; hann útti fátt við jarl, en afþokkaði heldr fyrir þeim fyrir öðrum mönnum, be had little to do with the earl, but rather ran them down before other men, Orkn. 378.

af-þváttr, m. a washing off, ablution, Fr.

af-æta, u, f. [af and eta], prop. a voracious beast, a glutton, a great bully; ér langfedgær erut garpar niklir ok afætor, Fms. xi. 111; sterkir menn ok afætur miklar, iii. 143. It is perhaps identical with the present óféti, n. a vile thing, offscouring.

AGG, u, brawl, strife, now freq.

AGI, a, m. [A. S. oga; Dan. ave; Engl. awe; cp. Ulf. agis, n., and perh. áγος or άγος], gener. awe, terror; þá skelfr jörð öll í aga miklum, then all the earth quakes in great awe, Hom. 100; agi ok ótti, awe and terror, Fms. vi. 442. β. metaph. turbulence, uproar, disorder, esp. in the phrase, agi ok úfriðr, uproar and war, Fms. ii. 241, vi. 298, 430.

γ. awe, respect; var eigi sá annarr konungr, er mönnum stæði af jafumikill agi af fyrir vizku sakir, there was not another king who inspired his men with so much awe for his wits' sake, Fms. x. 406; Guðs a., fear of God, Sks. 354, 667. δ. discipline, constraint, now freq. in this sense; í æskunni meðan hann er undir aga, Sks. 26. II. moisture, wet, now freq., cp. vatn-sagi. Also a verb aga, að, to chastise, is now freq. COMPS: aga-sam-ligr, adj. unruly, Fms. vii. 274. aga-samr, adj. turbulent, in uproar; agasamt mun þá verða í héraðinu, ef allir þorlaks synir eru drepnir, there will be uproar in the district if all Thorlak's sons are slain, Eb. 230.

AGN, n. bait, Barl. 123, Niðrst. 623. 3. There is now in many cases a distinction between agn, bait for foxes and land animals, and beita, bait for fish; but in the poem Hým. 18, 22, at least, agn is used of fishing; ganga á agnið is to nibble or take the bait; cp. eгна.

agn-hald, n. a barb of a book.

agn-sax, n. fishing knife, with which bait for fish is cut, Edda 36, Nj. 19 (ansax is a false reading), Fas. i. 489.

agn-úti, a, m. the barb of a book for keeping on the agni; skal a. vera á hverjum þómi, Sks. 419 (B. reads agnör).

agn-ör, f. a barbed book, Sks. 89 new Ed.

AKA, ók, óku, ekít; pres. ek. It also occurs in a weak form, að, Fagrsk. 104, which form is now perhaps the most common. [Neither Ulf. nor Hel. use this word, which appears also to be alien to the South-Teut. idioms. The Germans say fabren; the English to drive, carry; cp. Engl. yoke. In Latin, however, agere; Gr. άγεω.] Gener. to move, drive, transport, carry: I. to drive in harness in a sledge or other vehicle (where the vehicle is in dat.), as also the animal driven; bryggjur svá breiðar, at aka mátti vögnum á víxl, 'briggs' (i. e. wharfs or piers, cp. 'Filey Briggs') so broad, that wains might meet and pass each other, Hkr. ii. 11; gott er heilum vagni heim at aka, 'tis good to drive home with a whole wain, to get home safe and sound, cp. Horace solve senescentem, Orkn. 464, Al. 61; þórr á hafra tvá, ok reið þá er hann ekr, in which he drives, Edda 14, Ob. adds í (viz. reið þá er h. ekr í), which may be the genuine reading. β. with the prep. í; Freyr ók ok í Kerru með gælti, Edda 38. γ. absol. to drive, i. e. travel by driving; þeir óku upp á land, Eg. 543; fóru þeir í sleðann ok óku nóttina alla, drove the whole night, Fms. iv. 317. With the road taken in acc.; aka úrgar brantir, Rm. 36; báðu hennar ok heim óku (dat. henni being understood), carrying a bride home, 37. 20. II. to carry or cart a load, (to lead, in the north of England):—in Iceland, where vehicles are rare, it may perhaps now and then be used of carrying on horseback. The load carried is commonly in dat. or acc.: a. acc.: aka saman hey, to cart hay, Eb. 150; saman ók hann heyit, Ísl. ii. 330; hann ók saman alla töðu sína, Landn. 94; þá tekr Gíslí eyki tvá, ok ekr fé sitt til skógar, Gísl. 121; but, absol., ok ekr til skógar með fjárhul sinn, l. c. 36; þá lét konungr aka til haugsins vist ok drykk, then the king let meat and drink be carted to the 'bow' (barrow), Fms. x. 186; vill hann húsit ór stað færa, ok vill hann aka þat, carry it away, Grág. ii. 257; líkin vóru ekin í sleða, carried in a sledge, Bs. i. 144. β. dat. more freq., as now; hann ók heyjum sínum á óxnum, carried his hay on oxen, Fbr. 43 new Ed.; einn ók skarni á hóla, carted dung alone on the fields, Nj. 67, Rr. 277. γ. with the animals in dat., þórlófr lét aka þrennum eykjum um daginn, with three yoke of oxen, Eb. 152; or with the prep. á, riðr þórdór hesti þeim er hann hafði ekít á um aptaninn, Ísl. ii. 331, Fbr. 43; ef maðr ekr eðr ber klyfjar á, leads or carries on pack-saddles, Grág. i. 441. δ. absol., þat mun ek til finna, at hann ók eigi í skegg sér, that he did not cart it on his own beard, Nj. 67. e. part., ekiinn uxi, a yoked, tamed ox, Vm. 152. III. used by sailors, in the phrase, aka segli, to trim the sail; aka seglum at endilöngum skipum, Fms. vii. 94; það hann þá aka skjótt seglum, ok vikja út í sund nokkut, 131. In mod. Icel. metaph., aka seglum eptir vindi, to set one's sail after (with) the wind, to act according to circumstances; cp. aktaumar. IV. metaph. in a great many proverbs and phrases, e. g. aka heilum vagni heim, v. above; aka höllu fyrir e-m, to get the worst of it, Ld. 206; aka undan (milit.), to retire, retreat slowly in a battle; óku þeir Erlingr undan ofan með garðinum, Fms. vii. 317; akast undan (reflex.), id., 278; þeir ókuðust undan ok tóku á skógana, they took to the woods, Fagrsk. 174 (where the weak form is used); sumir Norðmenn óku undan á hæli ofan með sjónum, x. 139; aka e-m á bug, the figure probably taken from the ranks in a battle, to make one give way, repel, en ef Ammonite aka þér á bug, if they be too strong for thee, Stj. 512. 2 Sam. x. 11, Mk. 7; als metaph., aka bug á e-n, id.; mun oss þat til Birkiþeinum, at þeir aki á os engan bug, to stand firm, with unbroken ranks, Fms. viii. 412. It is now used impers., e-m á ekki ór að aka, of one who has always bad luck, probably ellipt., ór steini or the like being understood; cp. Gísl. 54, the phrase þykkir ekki ór steini hefja, in the same sense, the figure being taken from: stone clogging the wheels; ók hann af sér fjótrinum, threw it off by rubbing. Fas. ii. 573; þá ekr Oddr sér þar at, creeps, rolls himself thither, of a fettered prisoner, id.; the mod. phrase, að aka sér, is to sbrug the shoulders as mark of displeasure: aka ör óngum, ex angustiis, to clear one's way, get on of a scrape, Bjarn. 52; aka í móinn, to strive against, a cant phrase. Im pers. in the phrase, e-m verðr nær ekít, is almost run over, has a narrow escape, varð honum svá nær ekít at hann hleypti inn í kirkju, he was so bar driven that he ran into the church, Fms. ix. 485; hart ekr at e-m, to be in great straits, ok er Þorri kemr, þá ekr hart at mönnum, they were pressed hard, Ísl. ii. 132; ekr nú mjök at, I am hard pressed, Gísl. 52; er honur þótti at sér aka, when death drew near, of a dying man, Grett. 119 A Reflex., e-m ekst e-t í tauma, to be thwarted in a thing, where the figur is taken from trimming the sail when the sheet is foul, Fms. xi. 121. I later Icelandic there is a verb akka, að, to heap together, a. e-u saman no doubt a corruption from aka with a double radical consonant, a car word. Aka is at present a rare word, and is, at least in common speech used in a weak form, akar instead of ekr; akadi = ók; akat = ekít.

AKARN, n. [Ulf. akran = καρρός; Engl. acorn; Germ. ecker; Dan. agern], acorn, Edda 30 and Gl.

ak-braut, n. carriage road, Hkr. ii. 253, Fær. 102, vide Fb. i. 144.

ak-færi, n. driving gear, carriage and harness, Fms. iii. 206, Nj. 153.

AKKERI, n. [no doubt, like Engl. anchor, of foreign origin; cp. Gr. άγκυρά; Lat. ancora. It occurs, however, in a verse as early as the 9th c. 996], ankeri, Lv. 99, is a corrupt form from a paper MS., so is also atker Hkr. i. 311; leggja um akkeri, to lie at anchor, Fbr. 52; leggjast um a., cast anchor, Fms. iv. 301; heimta upp a., to weigh anchor, 302; a. hri víð, the anchor holds, Ld. 21, Grág. ii. 397, Jb. 397, Eg. 129, Fms. vi. 264, ix. 44, x. 136, Hkr. i. 311, Lv. 99, Fas. i. 511, 515. Metaph., vagnar, anchor of hope, 677. 17. COMPS: akkeris-fleinn, m. a fluke, palm of an anchor, Fms. ix. 387, Orkn. 362. akkeris-lausi adj. without an anchor, Ann. 1347. akkeris-lægi, n. anchorage Jb. 396. akkeris-sát, f. id., Grág. ii. 402, 408. akkeris-stokki m. an anchor-stock, Orkn. 362. akkeris-strengtr, m. an anchor-rope cable, Fms. ii. 10. akkeris-sæti, n. anchorage, Jb. 397 B.

AKKORDA, að, [for word], to accord, Rb. 446.

AKR, rs, pl. rar. [Ulf. akrs; A. S. æcer; Engl. acre; Germ. acker Lat. ager; Gr. άργός], arable land, ground for tillage: a. opp. 1 engi, a meadow; cp. the law term, þar er hvárki sé a. né engi, Grág. 123, Hrafn. 21. β. opp. to tún, the 'town' or enclosed homefield bleikir akrar en segin tún, the corn-fields are white to harvest and t. 'town', i. e. the 'infield', is mown, Nj. 112; helgi túns ok akra ok engi Bs. i. 719; teðja aka, Rm. 12. 2. metaph. the crop; þeir höfðu nið brotíð akra hans alla, destroyed all the crop in the fields, Fms. v. 50; o er hann óð rúgakrinn fullvaxinn, þá tók döggskórinu á sverðinu akrinn uppstandand, and when he (Sigurd Fafnir's bane) strode through it full-waxen rye-field, the tip of his sword's sheath just touched the upstanding ears, Fas. i. 173; sá hinn góði akr (crop) er upp rann af þeirri him göðu jörð, Hom. 68. β. name of several farms. COMPS: akkr-ávöxttr, m. produce of the fields, Ver. 1. akra-gerði, n. a 'field garth', enclosure of arable land, N. G. L. i. 22. akra-karl, m. cognom. 'Acre-carle', Lv. 40. akra-spillir, m. cognom. destroyer of field Glúm. 333, Fas. ii. 362, better askaspillir, q. v.

akr-dai, n. (?), wild gourds; veit ek eigi hvat þat heitir (adds tl translator) þat var því líkast sem a., Stj. 615, 2 Kings iv. 39.

akr-deili, n. a plot of arable land, D. N. ii. 123 (Fr.).

akr-gerði, n. enclosure of arable land, Fms. vii. 178.

akr-görð, f. agriculture. akrgörðar-maðr, m. ploughman, Nj. 54.

akr-hæna, u, f. a 'field-ben', quail, opp. to heiðarhæna or lynghæns, Stj. 29.

akri, a, m. a bird, Edda (Gl.)

akr-karl, m. a 'field-carle', ploughman or reaper, Stj. 273, 441, El. 4, 19.

akr-kál, n. 'field-kale', potberbs, Stj. 615, 2 Kings iv. 39.

akr-land, n. land for tillage, Grág. ii. 258, D. I. i. 268, Bs. i. 341.

Fms. iii. 18. akrlands-deild, f. division of a field, Grág. ii. 260.

akr-lengd, f. a field's length (now in Icel. túnlengd, i. e. a short distance); svá at a. var í milli þeirra, so that there was a field's length between them, Bev. 14 (Norse).

akr-maðr, m. ploughman, tiller of ground, Fms. vi. 187.

akr-neytr, part. used as arable land, tilled, Sks. 630, v. 1.

akr-plógsmaðr, m. ploughman, Stj. 255.

akr-rein, f. a strip of arable land, D. N. ii. 561.

akr-skípti, n. a division of a field, Fms. xi. 441.

akr-skurðtr, ar, m. reaping. akrskurðar-maðr, m. a reaper, St Ruth ii. 21 (young men).

akr-súra, u, f. field-sorrel, Hom. 82, 83.

akr-tíund, f. tithe paid on arable land (Norse), N. G. L. i. 391.

akr-verk, n. field-work, barvest-work, Bret. 6, Fms. vi. 187, Stj. Ruth ii. 1. akverks-maðr, m. ploughman, tiller of the ground, Ver. 5. Gen. iv. 2.

ak-stóll, m. probably a cbair on wheels or castors; Ketillbjörn sat á akstóli mjök við pall, in the banquet at Flugumýri in the year 1253, Sturl. iii. 182.

AKTA, að, [for. word, which therefore does not observe the contraction into á, which is the rule with genuine words; it appears esp. in eccl. writers and annalists at the end of the 13th and 14th centuries, Arna b. S., K. Á., Stj., the Norse Gpl., etc.: cp. A. S. eabtan; Hel. abton, censere, considerare; Germ. achten; mid. Lat. actare, determinare et actare, Du Cange in a letter of the year 1284.] I. to number, tax, value, take a census; akta íðkið, Stj. 2 Sam. xxiv. 10; fóru þeir víða um land ok öktuðu vísaeyri konungs, taxed, Bs. i. 707; nú byggir maðr dyrra en vandi hefir á verit, akti (tax) því fremr dyrra ok fremr til leidangs ok landvarnar, he shall be taxed in due proportion, Gpl. 337.

2. to examine, enquire; aktið inniliga öll þau leyini sem hann má í felast, to take diligent heed of all the lurking-places, Stj. 479. I Sam. xxiii. 23; aktið þó ádr, and look, that, id. 2 Kings x. 23; hann aktadi eptir (looked after) um eignir staðarinn, Bs. i. 778.

3. to devote attention to, study; hann aktadi mjök bóklugar listir, Bs. i. 666, 680.

II. a law term, esp. in the Arna b. S., to debate, discuss in parliament; nú er þetta var aktad (debated) konu menn til lögréttu, Bs. i. 719; var þá gengit til lögréttu, ok lesit bréf konungs ok drottningar ok aktad (stated) af leikmanna hendi hversu prestar höfðu af stöðum gengit, 735; lögbók öktuð á alþingi, the code of law debated at the althing, H. Ann. 419. 19. Now only used in the sense of to care for, feel respect for, but a rare and unclassical Danism.

ak-taumur, adj. tame under the yoke; grüðungr a., Grág. ii. 122.

aktan, f. [Germ. achtung], heed, consideration, H. E. i. 410.

ak-taumur, m. esp. in pl. ar, lines (taumar) to trim (aka) the sail, distinguishing from höfuðbendur, the stays of the mast, perhaps the braces of a sail (used by Egiþsson to transl. ἕρεται in Od. 5. 260), þórarinn stýrði ok hafði aktaumana um herðar sér, þvíat þröngt var á skipinu, had the braces round his shoulders, because the boat was blocked up with goods, Ld. 56; the phrase, sitja í aktaumum, to manage the sail; ef ek sigli með landi fram, ok sit ek í aktaumum, þá skal engi snekkja tvítugssessa sigla fyrir mér, eða ek vilja svipta (reef the sail) fyr en þeir, Fms. v. 337; reiði slítmaði, svá at bæði gekk í sundr höfuðbendur ok aktaumar, Fas. iii. 118; reki segl ofan, en a. allir slítu, 204; slitnuðu höfuðbendur ok aktaumar, Bær. 5, Edda (Gl.) That the braces were generally two may be inferred from the words við aktaum hvárntveggja hálf mörk, N. G. L. i. 199.

2. metaph., sitja í aktaumum, to have the whole management of a thing; mun yðr þat eigi greitt ganga ef þér erit einir í aktaumum, if you are alone in the management of it, Ísl. ii. 49; einir um hituna is now used in the same sense. (The Engl. yoke-lines, as aktaumar is sometimes interpreted (as in the Lat. transl. of the Ld.), are now called stórtaumar. Aktaumur is obsolete. See 'Stones of Scotland,' tab. liv. sqq.)

AL- [A. S. æl-; Engl. all, al-; Germ. all-], a prefix to a great many nouns and participles, but only a few verbs, denoting thoroughly, quite, perfectly, completely, answering to Lat. omni- and Gr. nav- or navro-. If followed by a u or v it sometimes changes into öl, e.g. ölið, benignitas; ölvæð, laetitia; ölteiti, hilaritas, is irregular, instead of alteiiti. The prefixed particle al- differs from all-, which answers to Lat. per-, A. S. eall-, Engl. very: v. the following compds.

ALA, ól, ólu, alý; pres. el, [Ulf. a single time uses the partic. ans = εὐντροφόμενος, and twice a weak verb alíps = σιεντρος, a falling. The word seems alien to other Teut. idioms, but in Lat. we find alere; cp. the Shetland word alie, to nourish.] Gener. to give birth to, nourish, support, etc.

I. to bear, esp. of the mother; but also of both parents; rarely of the father alone, to beget: börn ólu þau, they beget children, Rm. 12; þat barn er þau ala skal eigi arf taka, Grág. i. 178; of the father alone, enda eru börn þau eigi arfgeng, er ham elr við þeirri konu, which be begets by that woman, 181; but esp. of the mother, to bear, give birth to; jóð ól Amma, Rm. 7; þóra ól barn um sumarit, Eg. 166, Fms. iv. 32, i. 14; houn fer eigi alit barnit, Fas. i. 118. β. metaph. to produce, give rise to; en nú elr hverr þessara stafa nú annan staf undir sér, Skálda 162. 2. pass. to be born, begotten; börn þau öll er alin eru fyrir jól, who are born, N. G. L. i. 377; the phrase, alnir ok úbornir, born and unborn, present and future generations, it may now become aldir ok öboruiri; eigu þau börn er þau alask (who are born there) at taka arf út hingat, Grág. i. 181; barn hvert skal færa til kirkju sem alit er, every child that is born, K. þ. K. i; ef barn elsk svá nær páskum, is born, 16. β. of animals (rarely), justus heitir forað, þat elsk (is engendered) í kvíði eins dýrs, 655 xxx. 4. II. to nourish, support, Lat. alere: I. esp. to bring up, of children; the Christian Jus Eccl., in opposition to the heathen custom of exposing children, begins with the words, ala skal barn hvert er borit verðr, every child that is born shall be brought up, K. Á. ch. i. β. adding the particle upp; skal eigi upp ala, heldr skal út bera barn þetta, this bairn shall not be brought up, but rather be borne out (i. e. exposed to perish), Finnb. 112. 2. to feed, give food to, harbour, entertain; ala gest ok ganganda, guests; ala þurfamenn, the poor, D. I. in deeds of gift; en sá maðr er þar býr skal ala menn ala þá er ham hyggtr til góðs at alnir sér, he shall harbour them, D. I.

i. 169; ala hvern at ósekju er vill, to harbour, 200; Guð elr gesti (a proverb), God pays for the guests, Bs. i. 247; sött elr sjúkan, fever is the food of the sick; utanhrepps göngumenn skal enga ala, ok eigi gefa mat, hvárki meira né minna, gangsrels of an outlying district shall none of them be harboured, nor have meat given them, neither more nor less, Grág. i. 293, 117. β. of animals, to nourish, breed; einu smáaudu er ham ól heima í húsi sínu, one pet lamb which be had reared at home in his own house, Stj. 516; segir alleiligan, ok kvað verða munu ágeta nauð of upp veri alium, of a live calf, Eb. 318. 2. pass. to be brought up, educated; ólusk (grew up) í ætt þar, æstir kappar (or were born), Hdl. 18; alask upp, to be brought up; hence uppeldi, u.

III. metaph. in such phrases as, ala aldr sínn, vitam degere, to pass one's days, Bárð. 165: the phrase, ala e-t eptir e-m, to give one encouragement in a thing, bring one up in, esp. in a bad sense; ól hann eptir engum manni ódáðir, Joh. 625, 93: ala á mál, to persist in, urge on a thing; karl elr á málið (begs bard) at Gunnar mundi til hans fara, Sd. 172, Ísl. ii. 133, 163:—the present phrase is, að ala e-t við e-n, to bear a grudge against; and in a negative sense, ala ekki, to let bygones be bygones: ala önn fyrir, to provide for: a. öfund, sorg, um e-t, to grudge, feel pang (poët.), etc.

alads-festir, ar, f. [obsolete aladr, alimentum, Ýt. 13, v. 1.], a law term in the Icel. Commonwealth, viz. the eighth part of the sum fjórþaugr (life-money), amounting to an ounce, a fee to be paid by a convict in the Court of Execution (féranndóm); if a convict, liable to the lesser outlawry, failed in paying off the aladsfestir, he thereby became a complete outlaw, úalandi; hence the name life-money or blood-money. It is thus defined: þar skal gjaldast mörk lögaura at féranndómi, goda þeim er féranndómiu nefndi; þat fé heitir fjórþaugr, en einn eyrir (ounce) þess fjúr heitir a. ef þat fé (the aladsf. or the whole fjórþ.) gelzt eigi, þá verði hann skógarmaðr úáll, Grág. i. 88; nú gelzt fjórþaugr ok a. þá skal dæma svá sekðarfé hans sem skógarmanns, 132: Njála uses the less classic form, aðalfestir (per metath.), Nj. 240; cp. Johnsonius (Lat. transl.), p. 529, note 8.

al-audn, f. devastation, þiðr, 233.

al-audr, adj. altogether waste, Bret. 168.

al-bata and al-bati, adj. ind. completely cured, quite well, Ísl. ii. 469.

al-berr, adj., now allsberr, quite bare, stark-naked, metaph. manifest, Sturl. iii. 118.

al-bitinn, adj. part. bitten all over, Rd. 298.

al-bjartr, adj. quite bright, brilliant, Eluc. 10, Fas. i. 663.

al-blindr, adj. stone-blind, Post. 745. 87.

al-blóðugr, adj. all-bloody, Nj. 62, Fms. i. 121, Ísl. ii. 271.

al-bogi = alnbogi, elbow, v. ölbogi and ölbogi.

al-breiðr, adj. of the full breadth of stuff; a. lérept, Jb. 348.

al-brotinn, adj. part. all-broken, shattered, Fms. ii. 246.

al-brynjaðr, part. cased in mail, Hkr. ii. 26, Fms. vii. 45, Fas. i. 91.

al-búa, bjó, to fit out, furnish or equip completely, at albúa kirkju, N. G. L. i. 387; but spec. in part. al-búinn, completely equipped, esp. of ships bound for sea [where bound is a corruption of boun, the old English and Scottish equivalent of buinn. Thus a ship is bound for sea or outward bound or homeward bound, when she is completely fitted and furnished for either voyage; windbound is a different word, where bound is the past part. of bind. Again, a bride is boun when she has her wedding dress on; v. below, búa and búask, which last answers to busk]; nú býst hann út til Íslands, ok er þeir vöru albúnir, Nj. 10; ok er Björn var a. ok byrr rann á, Eg. 158, 194: a. sem til bardaga, ok-armed for the battle, Fms. xi. 22. β. in the phrase, a. e-s, quite ready, willing to do a thing; hann kvaðst þess a., Nj. 100, Eg. 74: also with infin., a. at ganga heðan, ready to part, Fms. vii. 243.

al-búinn, ready, v. the preceding word.

al-byggðr, part. completely inhabited, taken into possession, esp. used of the colonisation of Iceland; þorbjörn sírr kom út at albyggð landi, after the colonisation was finished, Landn. 142, several times, Hrafn. 3, Eg. 191, etc.

ALDA, u, f. a wave, freq. as a synonyme to bylgja, bára, etc.; it is esp. used of rollers, thus undiralda means the rollers in open sea in calm weather, Edda (Gl.) 2. metaph. in the phrase, skil ek, hvaðan a. sjá rennr undan (whence this wave rolls), hafa mér þaðan jafnan köld ráð komið, veit ek at þetta eru ráð Snorra goda, of deep, well-planned schemes, Ld. 284. Now used in many compds: öldu-gangr, m. unruly sea; öldu-stokkr, m. bulwarks of a ship, etc.

alda- and aldar-, v. öld, time, period; (poët. = people.)

al-dauði and aldauda, adj. ind. dead and gone, extinct, of families, races, esp. in the neg. phrase, vera enn ekki a., to be still in full vigour; ok óru (váru) eigi þeir a., Ísl. ii. 310; eptir dauða Haralds var a. hin forna ætt Danakonunga, died out with king H., Fms. xi. 206; aldauda eru þá Mosselinger ef er Sigfússynir skulud rana þá, Nj. 73; ella eru mjök á várir foreldrar, Fms. vi. 37; opt fínn ek þat, at mér er a. Magnús konungr, I often feel that for me king M. is dead and gone, Hkr. iii. 107.

compd. aldauda-arfr, m. a law term, an inheritance to which there is no heir alive, Gpl. 282, N. G. L. i. 49; cp. Hkv. Hjörv. 11, where aldaudrarfr is a mis-reading; the meaning of the passage hyggsk a. ráða is, that he would destroy them to the last man.

ALDIN, n., dat. aldini, [Dan. alden]; a Scandinavian radical word (?)

not found in Ulf.], gener. fruit of trees, including apples, nuts, acorns, and sometimes berries; gras ok aldin ok jarðar ávöxtr allr, herbs, fruits, and earth's produce, K. p. K. 138; korni ok öllu aldini (dat.), K. Á. 178; þá verðr þegar citr í öllu aldini á því tré, Rb. 358. It originally meant wild fruits, nuts and acorns; hafði hann enga aðra fæðu en aldin skógar ok vatn, Hom. 105; af korninu vex rót, en vöndr af rötinni, en af vendi a., 677. 14; lesa a., to gather nuts, acorns, Dropl. 5; uskapligr er at taka a. af trénu fyr en fullvaxið er, unripe fruit, Al. 18; epli stór ok fiktrés aldin, great apples and the fruit of fig-trees, Stj. 325. Numb. xiii. 23. β. of garden fruit; allt þat a. er menn verja með gördum eðr gæzlu, Gpl. 544; akr einn harla góðr lá til kirkjunnar, óx þar it bezta aldini, the finest fruits, Fms. xi. 440. γ. metaph., blezad sé a. kvíðar þins, the fruit of thy womb, Hom. 30. Luke i. 42. compd: aldingarðr, m. a fruit-garden, orchard, Gpl. 543.

aldin-berandi, part. bearing fruit, Sks. 630.
aldin-falda, u, f. a lady with an old-fashioned head-dress, Rm. 2.
aldin-garðr, m. garden, orchard, Ld. hortus; víngarða, akra ok aldingarða, Stj. 441. 1 Sam. viii. 14, where aldingarða answers to oliveyards, Fms. iii. 194.

aldini, fruit, v. aldin.
aldin-lauss, adj. without fruit, sterile, barren; a. tré, Greg. 48.
aldinn, adj. [Engl. old; Germ. alt; Ulf. alpeis = ἀρχαῖος]. In Icel. only poet. The Scandinavians say gamall in the posit., but in compar. and superl. ellri, elztr, from another root ald: it very seldom appears in prose authors: v. Lex. Poët.; Sks. 630; cp. aldrenn.

aldin-skógr, ar, m. wood of fruit-trees, Stj. Judg. xv. 5, where víngarðar, olivatré ok aldinskógar answer to the Engl. vineyards and olives.

aldin-tré, n. fruit-tree, Stj. 68.

aldin-viðr, ar, m. fruit-trees, a poet. paraphrase, Fms. ix. 265, Sks. 105.
ALDR, rs, pl. rar, m. [Ulf. alps = αἰών or Lat. ævum; Engl. old; Germ. alter], age, life, period, old age, everlasting time. 1. age, lifetime, Lat. vita, aetas; hnígninn at aldrí, stricken in years, Eg. 187; hnígninn ú aldr, advanced in years, Orku. 216; ungr at aldrí, in youth, Fms. iii. 90; á létasta aldrí, in the prime of life, v. 71; á gamals aldrí, old, iii. 71; á tvtugs, þritugs aldrí, etc.; hálfþritugr at aldrí, twenty-five years of age, Eg. 84; vera sú aldris kominn, at that time of life, Fs. 4; hafa aldr til e-s, to be so old, be of age, Fms. i. 30; ala aldr, to live, v. ala, Fs. 146; allan aldr, during the whole of one's life, Ver. 45; lífa langan a., to enjoy a long life, Nj. 252. 2. old age, senectus; aldrí orþinn, decrepid, lit. overwhelmed by age, Fms. ii. 233, xi. 21; vera víð aldr, to be advanced in years.

3. manns aldr is now used = generation; lífa marga manns aldra, to outlive many generations: sometimes denoting a period of thirty to thirty-three years. 4. seculum, ævum, an age, period; the time from the creation of the world is divided into six such ages (aldrar) in Rb. 134: cp. öld. 5. eternity, in the phrase, um aldr, for ever and ever; mun ek engan mann um aldr (no man ever) virða framfar en Eystein konung, meðan ek lífi, as long as I live, Fms. vii. 147, Th. 25; af aldrí, from times of yore, D. N. ii. 501; um aldr ok æfi, for ever and ever, Gpl. 251, N. G. L. i. 41.

aldradr, adj. elderly, Fms. i. 70, 655 xiv. B. 1; öldruð kona, Greg. 27.
aldr-bót, f. fame, honour, Lex. Poët.

aldr-dagar, m. pl. everlasting life; um a., for ever and ever, Vsp. 63.
aldr-fremd, f. everlasting honour, Eluc. 51.

aldrí qs. aldrí-gi, [dat. from aldr and the negative nominal suffix -gi; Dan. aldrig], with dropped neg. suffix; the modern form is aldrí; unusual Norse forms, with an n or t paragogical, aldrégin, aldrégit: aldrégin, N. G. L. i. 8, Sks. 192, 202 B, Hom. ii. 150, Stj. 62 (in MS. A. M. 227. Ed. aldrí), O. H. L. 17, 79, and several times; aldrégit, N. G. L. i. 356. The mod. Icel. form with ei indicates a contraction; the old aldrí no doubt was sounded as aldrí with a final diphthong, which was later (in the 15th century) changed into ei. The contr. form aldrí occurs over and over again in the Sagas, the complete aldrégit or aldrígi is more rare, but occurs in Grág. i. 220 A, 321 A, ii. 167, etc.; aldré appears now and then in the Edd. and in MSS. of the 15th century, but hardly earlier. I. never, numquam:

1. temp., mun þik a. konur skorta, Ísl. ii. 250; koma aldrégit til Noregs síðan, Nj. 9; verðr henni þat aldrégit rétt, Grág. ii. 214; ella liggir féit aldrégit, in nouise, i. 220; sú sök fyrnist aldrégit, 361; ok skal aldrégit í land koma síðan, ii. 167. 2. loc. (rare), mörk var sú þykk upp frá tungunni at aldrí (nowhere) var rjóðr í (= hvergi), Sd. 170.

II. ever, unquam, after a preceding negative, appears twice in the Völs. kvíður; en Atli kveðst cigi vilja mund aldrégit (eigi aldrégit = never), Og. 23; hnekat ek af því til hjálpar þér, at þú værir þess verð aldrégit (now, nokkurn tíma), not that thou ever hadst deserved it, 11.

β. following a comparative, without the strict notion of negation; verr en a. fyr, worse than ever before, Stj. 404; framfar en a. fyr, l. c. Cod. A; meiri vesóð en áðr hafði hann aldrégit þolat, greater misery than be ever before had undergone, Barl. 196.

III. aldr' = aldrí = semper; aldr' hefí ek frétt . . . I have always heard that . . . in a verse in Orkn. 304.

aldr-lag, n. laying down of life, death, destruction, a poet. word, in the phrase, verða e-m at aldríagi, to bring to one's life's end, Fms. viii. 108, Al. 106; esp. in pl. aldríög, exitium, Bret. 59, 66, 67.

aldr-lok, n. pl. close of life, death, Hkv. 2. 10.

aldr-máli, a, m. tenure for life, D. N., unknown in Icel., Dan. livsfæste.

aldr-nari, a, m. [A. S. ealdornere, nutritor vitae], poet. name of fire, Vsp. 57, Edda (Gl.).

aldr-rúnar, f. pl. life-runes, charms for preserving life, Rm. 40.

aldr-sátt, adj. on terms of peace for ever, D. N. in a law phrase, a. ok æfinsátt, Fr.

aldr-slit, n. pl. death, in the phrase, til aldrslita, ad urnam, Sturl. iii. 253.

aldr-stamr (perh. aldrscamr), adj. = fey, only in Akv. 42.
aldr-tili, a, m. [cp. as to the last part, Germ. ziel], death, loss of life, exitium; rather poet.; or in prose only used in emphatic phrases; hefir þó lokit sumum stöðum með aldrtila, bas ended fatally, Fms. viii. 153; ætla ek þær lyktir munu á verða, at vér munim a. hljóta af þeim konungi, be will prove fatal to our family, Eg. 19; mun ek þangað sækja heldr yndi en a. (an alliterative phrase), Bret. 36; údánni ok a., 38:—the words, Acts ix. 1, 'breathing out threatenings and slaughter,' are in the Icel. translation of the year 1540 rendered 'Saul blés ógn og aldrtila.'

aldr-tjón, n. loss of life, Lex. Poët.

aldr-tregi, a, m. deadly sorrow; et sér aldrtrega, Hm. 19.

aldr-rænn, adj. elderly, aged (rare), Lex. Poët.; hinn aldræni maðr, Fms. vi. 65, but a little below aldradr; a. kona, Bs. i. 201, v. l. öldruð.

aldrur-maðr, m. alderman [A. S. ealdorman], Pd. 13.

al-dyggiliga, adv. truly, with perfect fidelity, Hom. 135.

al-dyggr, adj. faithful, Barl. 5.

al-dæli, adj. very easy to treat, Jv. 24, Mag. 115.

al-dæll, adj. easy to deal with, gentle, Grett. 108; A and B døll.

al-eiga, u, f. a person's entire property, Gpl. 543, Hkr. ii. 344, iii. 141, Bs. ii. 66. compd: aleigu-máli, n. a suit involving a person's whole property, Gpl. 550:—so also aleigu-sök, f., Hkr. ii. 163.

al-eyða, u, f. devastation, esp. by fire and sword; göra aleyðu, to turn into a wilderness, Fms. xi. 42, Hkr. iii. 141.

al-eyða, adj. ind. altogether waste, empty, void of people; a. af mönnum, Hkr. i. 98, ii. 197; brennir ok görir a. landit, burns and makes the land an utter waste, Hkr. i. 39; sumir lágu úti á fjöllum, svá at a. vóru bæirnir eptir, some lay out on the fells, so that the dwellings were utterly empty and wasted behind them, Sturl. iii. 75.

al-eyða, dd, to devastate, Karl. 370.

al-faðir, m. father of all, a name of Odin, v. alfoður.

al-far, u., better álfar [áll], channel, B. K. 119.

al-fari, adj. ind., now alfarinn; in phrases like fara, koma alfari, to start, set off for good and all, Fms. iii. 92, Bret. 80, Fas. i. 249; ríða í brott a., Nj. 112, Bs. i. 481; koma til skips a., Grág. ii. 75. [Probably an obsolete dat. from alfar.]

al-farinn, adj. part. worn out, very far gone, Stj. 201, of the kine of Pharaoh, 'ill-favoured and lean-fleshed', Gen. xli. 3. β. now = alfari.

al-feginn, adj. very glad ('fain'), Lex. Poët.

al-feigr, adj. very 'fey', i. e. in extravagant spirits, in the frame of mind which betokens speedy death, a. augu, Eg. in a verse.

alfr, alfheimr, etc., elves etc., v. álftr etc.

al-framr, adj. (poët.) excellent, Lex. Poët.

al-fríðr, adj. very fair, Lex. Poët.

al-frjál's, adj. quite free, Sks. 621.

al-frjóvaðr, part. in full flower, Lex. Poët.

alft, f. swan, v. álft.

al-fullr, adj. quite full, Greg. 26.

al-fúinn, adj. quite rotten, Fms. vi. 164.

al-færr, adj. quite fit, quite good, Vm. 177, v. ölforr.

al-fært, n. of weather, fit for travelling, Sd. = fært.

al-föðr, m. father of all, the name of Odin as the supreme god in Scandinavian mythology, Edda i. 37 (Ed. Havn.). Now used (theol.) of God.

al-gangsi and algangsa, adj. ind. quite common, current, Sks. 199, 208 B.

al-geldr, adj. part. quite gelded, of cattle, Grág. i. 503. β. now also = giving no milk.

al-gildi, n. a law term, full value, Gpl. 392. compd: algildis-vitni, n. a law term, lausful testimony, competent witness; defin., N. G. L. i. 211.

al-gildir, adj. of full value, in a verse in Fs. 94; now common, opp. to hálfgildir, of half value, or ógildir, valueless.

al-gjafi, prob. a false reading, N. G. L. i. 347 = frjálsgjafi.

al-gjasta, adj. ind. stall-fed, of cattle, Ísl. ii. 38.

al-gleymingr, m. [gláumr], great glee, great mirth, in the phrase, slá á algleyming, to be in a great glee, to be very merry, Sturl. iii. 123. The Icel. now say, að komast í algleyming, to run bigb, to the biggest point.

al-góðr, adj. perfectly good, now used of God. β. albeztr kostur, by far the best match (Germ. allerbester), Ld. 88.

al-grár, adj. quite grey, þorf. Karl. 424.

al-gróinn, adj. part. perfectly healed, Eluc. 57.

al-grönn, adj. quite green, flourishing, Lex. Poët.

al-gullinn, adj. (poët.) all-golden, Hým. 8.

al-gyldr, adj. all-gilt, Vm. 52.

al-göra, ð, to finish, of buildings, Hkr. iii. 180, Ld. 114. Metaph. to fulfil. Fms. iii. 49, Hom. 8, Stj. 18. Reflex. to become completed, Post. 656 B. 11. Part. algör, perfect; perfectam fortitudinem is rendered by algörvan styrkleik, thorough strength, Fms. viii. (pref.), i. 96, Sks. 44, 274, Stj. 563, 114; hið algörvasta, 677-7.

al-görlega, adv. altogether, quite, Fms. ii. 42, Greg. 34, etc. al-görleikr, now algörleigleikr, s, m. (theol.) perfectness, perfection, Stj. 21, Fms. x. 337, Kb. 316.

al-görri, adj. part. perfect, finished, v. algöra. al-görvi, f. I. perfection, maturity, Stj. 376, Hom. 25. II. full dress [v. görvi, dress], Sks. 298.

al-heiðinn, adj. altogether beaten; landit (Iceland) var a. nær hundraði vetra, the land was utterly beaten near a hundred (i. e. one hundred and twenty) winters, Landn. 322.

al-heilagr, adj. all-blessed, N. G. L. i. 141. al-heill, adj. I. completely whole, entire, Lat. integer, Stj. 439. I Sam. vii. 9 (wolly), Sks. 604, translation from Lat. individua. 2. perfectly healthy, safe and sound, Fms. xi. 38, ii. 232, Magn. 516.

al-heilsa, u, f. complete restoration to health, Bs. i. 313, v. l. al-henda, u, f. a metrical term, a subdivision of dróttkvætt, a metre having two rhymed couplets in every line; if one of these be half rhyme it is called a hin minni (ið minoralhenda), if both be full rhymes it is a meiri (complete alhenda), Edda (Ht.) 132, Sturl. ii. 56: thus barð-múla varð Skúli is a complete alhenda.

al-hending, f. = alhenda. al-hendr, adj. used of a metre in alhenda, Edda 132; drápa alhend, Sturl. ii. 56.

al-hnepptr, adj. part. (metric.) an apocopate (hneppt) species of the metre dróttkvætt with masculine rhymes, v. hneppt and hálfhneppt. Thus defined, Edda (Ht.), verse 78; it is called alhneppt, where all the rhymes are masculine; but hálfhneppt, where feminines and masculines are used alternately.

al-hreinn, adj. quite pure, clean, Hom. 107. al-huga and óluga or óluga, by eliding the b and changing the vowel through the following u, adj. ind. [hugr], whole-hearted, in full earnest, Sturl. iii. 272, v. l.; ólhuga óst, sincere love, Greg. 17.

al-hugat, alugat, or alogat, n. part. in real earnest, whole-hearted, having made one's mind up; ef þér er þat alugat, if thou be in earnest, Nj. 49; föður hans var alogat at drepa David, his father's heart was set on slaying David, Stj. 473. I Sam. xx. 33.

β. used substantively, serious matters; blanda hégóma við alhugat (now alvara), to blend trifles with serious things. γ. adverb. steadfastly, earnestly; íðrast a., to repent sincerely, Hom. 166; en ef þú sér at alogat (really) tekr fé þitt at vaxa, Sks. 34, 339; þá er hann alogat úsekr, really guiltless, 677-9.

al-hugi and alogi, a, m. earnest; þetta er a. minn en engi hégómi, I am in full earnest, Ísl. ii. 214; hvárt er þessa leitað með alhuga, in earnest, Eb. 130; er hitt heldr a. minn, I am determined, Fms. ii. 94; með enum mesta alhuga, with the most steadfast will, Hkr. i. 258, Fms. viii. 186, Bs. i. 732.

al-hugligr, adj. sincere; ekki þótti mér Ólafr frændi várr a., metbought our kinsman Ólaf was not quite sincere, Sturl. i. 81. al-hungraðr, adj. part. very much an-hungered, Barl. 200.

al-húsa, að, to 'house,' roof in, Fms. x. 153. al-hvíttr, adj. quite white, Fms. xi. 16, Stj. 260. al-hýsa, t, = alhúsa. Part. allhýst, when all the buildings are finished, in a complete state, Sturl. i. 68.

al-hýsi, n. farm-buildings, homestead, Gísl. 38, Bs. i. 144, Fas. iii. 15. al-hægð, f. perfect ease, Sturl. i. 56, v. l. and dub. al-hægr, adj. perfectly easy, smooth; a. tungubragð, a smooth, glib tongue, Skálda 170, Fas. ii. 65.

ali-, used of household or tame animals in some COMPS: ali-björn, m. a tame bear, Grág. ii. 118, cp. Fms. vi. 297-307, Bs. i. 61. ali-dýr, n. a domestic animal, cattle; alidýr þat sem vér köllum búsmála, bouse-lamb, Stj. 18, Finnb. 226, of a tame bear. ali-fé, n. fálings, Matth. xxii. 4, in the transl. of 1540. ali-fiskr, m. fish fattened in a stew or pond, in the local name Álifiskalækr, m. the brook of fattened trout, Gpl. 4.

ali-fugl and -fogl, n. tame fowl, Stj. 560, Þiðr. 79; óxn mín ok alifoglar, Greg. 43, Matth. l. c. ali-gás, f. a fattened goose, Fms. vi. 347. ali-karl, m. a nickname, cp. in familiar language fat carle, Sturl. i. 123. ali-sauðr, m. a pet sheep, Stj. 516, 2 Sam. xiii. 3.

ALIN, f. A dissyllabic form alun appears in old poetry, v. Lex. Poët. In early prose writers a monosyllabic form öln prevails in nom. dat. acc. sing., D. I. i. 310. l. 22 (MS. of the year 1275), 314. l. 16 (MS. year 1250), 311, 312. l. 16, 313. l. 7, 89. l. 1. Nom. pl., α, the old, alnar; β, the later, alnir: the former in -ar, in D. I. i. 309 (a MS. of the year 1275), 310-312 (MS. year 1370), 313, 316. l. 19, 318. l. 15. The pl. in -ir, D. I. i. 89 sqq., in MSS. of the 13th and 14th centuries. In the contracted form aln- the simple radical vowel soon became a diphthongal ú, viz. alnar, alnir, alnum, álna, and is at present so spelt and pronounced.

We find an acute accent indeed in álna (gen. pl.), D. I. i. 313. l. 25 (MS. year 1275), and alnar, id. l. 7; álnum, l. 28; ölnum with changed vowel, N. G. L. i. 323 (in an Icel. transcript). The present declension is, nom. acc. alin, gen. alnar; pl. nom. acc. alnir, gen. álna, dat. alnum.

I. properly the arm from the elbow to the end of the middle finger [Gr. ὠλήν, Lat. ulna, cp. A. S. el-boga, Engl. el-bow, etc.]; almost obsolete, but still found in the words ölbogi qs. öln-bogi, 'elbow,' and úlf-liðr, prop. ulu- or öln-liðr, wrist, commonly pronounced ulu-liðr [false etymol., v. Edda, p. 17]; cp. Ísl. Þjóðs. ii. 19, where tungl (luna) and unl-rhyme. Freq. in poetry in such compounds as alun-leygr, -brandr, ölnu-grjótt, alnar-gim, alin-leygr, the standing poet, name of gold and gems being ignis or lapis cubiti.

II. mostly metaph.: I. an ell, [Ulf. aleina; A. S. eln; Engl. ell; O. H. G. elina; Dan. alen; Lat. ulna, cp. ulb[rum]]; the finger, arm, foot were the original standards for measure. The primitive ell measured the length from the elbow to the point of the second finger, and answered to about half a yard Engl. = 18 inches. The Icel. ell before the year 1200 measured just half a yard. About this year, by a law of bishop Paul, the ell was doubled into a stika, a stika being precisely = two ells = an Engl. ell of that time. To prevent the use of bad measure, a just and lawful stika (yard) was marked on the walls of the churches, esp. that at Thingvellir, as an authorised standard, Páls S. ch. 9, Bs. i. 135, D. I. i. 309, 316, Jb. Kb. 26; ensk lérept tveggja álna, English linen of two ells measure, id.; þat er mælt, at at graftar kirkju hverri skal mæla stiku lengd, þá er rétt sé at hafa til álna mále, ok megi menn þar til ganga ef á skilur um alnar, 309. During the whole of the 15th century the Icel. trade was mainly in British hands; thus the Engl. double ell probably prevailed till the end of the 15th or beginning of the 16th century. The Hanse Towns ell = 21 $\frac{1}{11}$ inches was then introduced, and abolished in the year 1776, when the Dan. ell = 24 inches came into use. At present the Hanse Towns ell is called Íslenzk alin (Icel. ell), and the original half-yard ell is quite obsolete; cp. Jón Sigurðson in D. I. i. 306-308, and Pál Vidal. s. v. alin.

2. a unit of value, viz. an ell (half-yard measure) of woollen stuff (vaðmál); the vaðmál (Halliwell wadmal, Engl. wadmal, Orkn. and Shetl. wadmaal and vadmel) was in Icel. the common medium of payment, whence an ell became the standard unit of value or property, whether in land or chattels; 120 ells make a hundred, v. that word. In D. I. i. 316 we are told that, about the year 1200, three ells were equal in value to one ounce of ordinary silver, whence the expression þriggja álna eyrir (a common phrase during the 13th century). The value of the ell of vaðmál, however, varied greatly; during the 11th and 12th centuries six ells made an ounce, D. I. i. 88. In Norway we find mentioned níu, elflifu álna aurar (nine, eleven ells to an ounce). In Grág. (Kb.) ii. 192, § 245, it is said that, about the year 1000, four ells in Icel. made an ounce, and so on; vide Dasent, Essay in 2nd vol. of Burnt Njal., and Pál Vidal. s. v. alin.

COMPS: álnar-borð, n. a board an ell long, N. G. L. i. 100. álnar-breiðr, adj. an ell broad, Fas. ii. 118. álnar-kefli, n. a staff an ell long, Grág. ii. 339, Ld. 318. álnar-langr, adj. ell-long, Grág. ii. 359. álnar-tiund, f. tithe of the value of an ell, K. Á. 100. álnar-virði, n. equal in value to an ell, K. Á. 194. álna-sök, f. action for bad measure, Grág. i. 472.

al-jafn, adj. quite equal, 677. 12, 655 A. 2. al-járnaðr, adj. part. sbod all round, sbod on all four feet, Mag. 5. alka, alca, the auk, v. álka.

al-keyptr, n. part. dearly bought, in a metaph. sense, Fms. ix. 302, Eb. 266, Glúm. 365 = fullkeypt.

al-kirkja, u, f. a parish church, Pm. 41. al-kleðnaðr, m. a full suit of clothes, Nj. 73, Eg. 518, Bs. i. 655, 876. al-kristinn, adj. completely christianised, Fms. i. 279, Hkr. i. 259.

al-kristnaðr, part. id., Hkr. ii. 178, Fms. x. 273. al-kunna, adj. ind. α. of a thing or event, notorious, universally known; sem a. er orðit, Fms. xi. 201; en sem vinátta þeirra gördist a., but when their friendship was noised abroad, Hkr. ii. 281. β. of a person, knowing, fully informed; unz a., until I know the whole, Vtkv. 8, 10, 12.

al-kunnigr, adj. notorious, Hkr. iii. 26, Stj. Gen. iv. 10, 655 xxxi. 1, Fms. vii. 5, Hkr. ii. 328.

al-kunnr, adj. id., Fms. v. 40. al-kyrra, adj. ind. completely calm, tranquil, Fms. xi. 72.

ALL- may in old writers be prefixed to almost every adjective and adverb in an intensive sense, like Engl. very, Lat. per-, Gr. δια-, ζα-. In common talk and modern writings it is rare (except after a negative), and denotes something below the average, viz. tolerably, pretty well, not very well; but in the Sagas, something capital, exceeding. In high style it may perhaps be used in the old sense, e. g. allfagrt ljós oss birtist brátt, a transl. of the Ambrosian hymn, Aurora lucis rutilat. The instances in old writers are nearly endless, e. g. all-annt, n. adj. very eager, Fms. ii. 41; ironically, 150. all-apr, adj. very sore, very harsh, v. apr. all-auðsöttligt, n. adj. very easy, Fs. 40. all-auðveldliga, adv. very easily, Fms. iv. 129. all-auðveldligr, adj. very easy, Fms. v. 331. all-auðveldr, adj. id., Fbr. 158: neut. as adv., Hkr. ii. 76. all-ágetr, adj. very famous, Fms. ii. 76. all-áhyggjusamliga, adv. and -ligr, adv. very careful, Fms. vi. 184. all-ákafli, adv. and -ligr, adj. very hot, impetuous, Hkr. i. 234, ii. 32. all-ákaftr, adj. very fast, Nj. 196. all-áræðiliga, adv. very likely, Fær.

183. all-áræðislitill, adj. very timid, Fms. vi. 217. all-ástúðligt, n. adj. very hearty, intimate, Fms. ii. 20. all-banvænn, adj. very likely to prove mortal, Orkn. 148. all-beinn, adj. very hospitable, Fms. ii. 84, Eb. 286: neut. as adv., Fær. 259. all-beiskr, adj. very barsb, bitter, Sturl. iii. 167. all-bert, n. adj. very manifest, Lex. Poët. all-bitr, adj. very biting, sharp, Sks. 548. all-bitrlygr, adj. of a very sharp appearance, Vgl. 20. all-bjartr, adj. very bright, Fms. viii. 361. all-bjúgr, adj. very much bent, curved, Ölkofr. 39. all-blár, adj. very blue, Glúm. 394. all-blíðliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very blithely, kindly, Fær. 132. all-blíðr, adj. very mild, amiable, Sd. 158, Fms. i. 202. all-bráðgörr, adj. very soon mature, Eb. 16. all-bráðliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very hastily, Orkn. 72. all-bráðr, adj. very hot-beated, Njarð. 370: neut. as adv. very soon, Fms. xi. 51: dat. pl. all-bráðum, as adv. very suddenly, 139. all-bros-ligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very funny, laughable, Fms. iii. 113. all-dasigr, adj. very sluggish, Lex. Poët. all-digr, adj. very big, stout; metaph. puffed up, Nj. 236. all-djarfliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very boldly, Fms. ii. 313, Orkn. 102. all-djúpsettr, adj. very deep, thoughtful, Bret. 158. all-drengiliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very bold, gallant, Lv. 110. all-dræmt, n. adj. very boastfully, from dramb, superbia, (the modern word is dræmt = slowly, sluggishly); þeir létu a. yfir sér, boasted, Sturl. ii. 56. MS. Mus. Brit. 1127; Cod. A. M. has allvænt, prob. wrongly. all-dyggr, adj. very doubtful, Lex. Poët. all-dýrr, adj. very dear, Fms. iii. 159. all-eiguligr, adj. very worth baving, Sd. 146. all-eina (theol.), á Guð alleina (a hymn), alone: Hkr. iii. 339 (in a spurious chapter). all-einarðiga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very sincere, candid, open, Ld. 334. all-eldiligr and -elliligr, adj. of a very aged appearance, Fms. iii. 125. all-fagr, adj. very bright, fair, Orkn. 296 old Ed.: neut. as adv. very fairly, Sturl. i. 72. all-fast, n. adj. very firmly, steadfastly, Eb. 290, Fær. 259. all-fastorðr, adj. very 'wordfast,' very true to his word, Fms. vii. 120. all-fálátr, adj. very taciturn, close, Fas. iii. 408. all-fálaga, adv. on very cold terms, Sturl. iii. 298. all-fámáligr, adj. very close, of very few words, Fms. iii. 85, iv. 366. all-fámennr, adj. followed by very few people, Sturl. ii. 122, Magn. 386. all-fár, adj. very few, Eg. 512, Ld. 272, Ísl. ii. 356: neut. on very cold terms, Fms. xi. 55. all-fáreðinn, adj. of very few words, Fms. iv. 312. all-feginn, adj. very 'fain,' glad, Eg. 240, Ld. 330. all-feginsamliga, adv. very 'fain,' gladly, Eg. 27. all-feigiligr, adj. having the mark of death very plain on one's face, v. feigr, Sturl. iii. 234. all-feitr, adj. very fat, Fms. x. 303. all-férliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very rudely, Fms. iv. 263. all-fémikill, adj. very costly, Ld. 298. all-fjarri, adv. very far, far from, metaph., Hkr. ii. 246; eigi a., not improper, Fbr. 15. all-fjartekit, part. very far-fetched, Skálda 166. all-fjölgan, adj. acc. very numerous (does not exist in nom.), Sks. 138 A. all-fjölkunnigr, adj. very deeply versed in sorcery, Fms. ii. 175, Fas. i. 412. all-fjölmæðr and -mennr, adj. followed, attended by very many people, much frequented, Eg. 724, 188, Hkr. i. 215: n. sing. in very great numbers, Fms. i. 36. all-fjölrætt, n. adj. very heedful, much talked of, Nj. 109. all-forsjáll, adj. very prudent, Hom. 115. all-framr, adj. very famous, Lex. Poët.: very far forward, Grett. 161 A. all-frekiliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very daringly, impudently, Fas. i. 24. all-frekr, adj. too eager, too daring, Fms. vii. 164. all-fríðliga, adv. in very great peace, Lex. Poët. all-fríðr, adj. very beautiful, Eg. 23, Hkr. i. 225, ii. 354, Fms. i. 2. all-friðals, adj. very free, independent, v. alfrjáls. all-fróðligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very wise, learned, Sks. 306 B. all-fróðr, adj. very learned, Sks. 30. all-frøgr, adj. very famous, Fms. ii. 324, Hkr. i. 232, ii. 187, Ld. 122. all-frækiliga, adv. and -ligr, adj., and all-frækn, adj. and -liga, adv. very bold, boldly, Ísl. ii. 267, Hkr. i. 239, Fms. i. 121. all-fúss, adj. and -liga, adv. very eager, eagerly, Eg. 488, Fms. xi. 89. all-fýsiligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very desirable, Eg. 19, 468. all-fölr, adj. very pale, Lex. Poët. all-gagnsamr, adj. very profitable, gainful, Ísl. ii. 56. all-gamall, adj. very old, Hkr. i. 34. all-gegniliga and -gegnliga, adv. very fittingly, Sturl. ii. 63. all-gemsmikill, adj. very wanton, frolicsome, Sturl. ii. 57. all-gerla and -görviligr, v. -görla, -görviligr. all-gestrisinn, adj. very hospitable, Háv. 40. all-geysilegr, adj. and -liga, adv. very impetuous, Fms. x. 81. all-gildiga, adv. and -ligr, adj. with a very grand air, Grett. 121. all-gildr, adj. very grand, Lex. Poët. all-giptusamliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very lucky, Fms. x. 53. all-glaðliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very joyfully, joyful, Fms. iii. 143, Lv. 55. all-glaðr, adj. very joyful, Eg. 163, Ld. 176. all-gleymr, adj. very gleeful, mirthful, in high spirits, [glaurm], verða a. við e-t, Sturl. iii. 152, Eb. 36. all-glæsiliga, adj. and -ligr, adv. very shiny, Eb. 34, Fas. iii. 626, Fms. ix. 430. all-glöggvær, adj. very transparent, clearly visible, metaph., þorf. Karl. 380. all-glöggtr, n. adj. very exactly, Hkr. iii. 253, Fas. iii. 13. all-góðmannliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very kindly, kind, Mag. 6. all-góðr, adj. very good, Nj. 222, Eg. 36, 198. all-greiðliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very easy, easily, Eb. 268: neut. as adv., Eb. l. c. all-grimmliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very grimly, fiercely, Fas. iii. 414. all-grimmr, adj. very cruel, fierce, Hkr. iii. 167. all-grunsamliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very suspiciously, Ísl. ii. 364. all-göfugr, adj. very distinguishing, Eg. 598, Bs. i. 60. all-görila, adj. very clearly, precisely, Hkr. iii. 133, Fms. xi. 15. all-görviligr, adj. very stout, manly, Fms. ii. 28. all-hagstæðr, adj. with a very fair wind, Sturl. iii. 109. all-harðligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very hard, stern, Fas. i. 382. all-harðr, adj. very hard, stern, Fms. i. 177: n. sing. severely, Nj. 165, Grág. i. 261. all-háskasamligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very bazarous, Fms. v. 135. all-heiðinn, adj. quite beaten, Fs. 89 (in a verse). all-heiligr, adj. very sacred, Lex. Poët. all-heimskliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very foolish, frantic, Hkr. ii. 190, Fas. iii. 293. all-heimskr, adj. very silly, stupid, Eg. 376, Grett. 159. all-heppinn, adj. very lucky, happy, Lex. Poët. all-herðimikill, adj. very broad-shouldered, Eg. 305. all-hermannliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very martial, Fms. xi. 233. all-hjaldrjúgr, adj. very gossiping, chattering, Lv. 57: neut. as adv., Vápn. 10. all-hógliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very gently, Fms. xi. 240, vi. 274. all-hóleitr and -háleitr, adj. very sublime, Hom. 23. all-hór and -hárr, adj. very high, tall, v. -hárr. all-bratt, n. adj. in all speed, Lex. Poët. all-hraustliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very bravely, Fms. viii. 289, Eb. 34. all-hraustr, adj. very valiant, Fms. viii. 267. all-hreystimannliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very valiantly, Fms. xi. 95. all-hrumliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very in firmly from age, Fas. ii. 91. all-hræddr, adj. very much afraid, Fbr. 94. all-hreðinn, adj. very timid, Fms. vi. 155. all-hugsjúkr, adj. very grieved, heart-sick, Hkr. i. 243, Fms. vi. 133. all-hvass, adj. of the wind, blowing very sharp, Fms. ix. 20, Lex. Poët. all-hyggi ligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very carefully, Fas. iii. 610. all-hýrliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very blandly, with a very bright face, Fas. iii. 636. all-hæðiligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very ridiculous, Finnb. 312. all-hældreginn, adj. walking very much on one's heels, dragging the heel very much in walking, of an aged or beggarly person, Band. 9. all-hoegluga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very softly, meekly, Fms. xi. 389. all-hœlinn, adj. very bragging, Lex. Poët. all-ðinn, adj. very diligent laborious, Bs. i. 278. all-illa, adv. and -illr, adj. very badly, bad wicked, Nj. 242, cp. illa; ill-willed, Eg. 542: compar., vera allver um, to be worse off, Nj. 221 (Ed. allvant); angry, Lv. 145; disgraceful, Eg. 237 unfortunate, Sturl. ii. 47. all-jafnlýndr, adj. very calm, even-tempered, Fms. vi. 287. all-kaldr, adj. very cold, Vápn. 21. all-kappsamliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. with very much zeal, liberally, Hkr. i. 271; veita a., of hospitality, Ld. 292; mæla a., frankly, peremptorily, 296. all-kappsamr, adj. very eager, vehement, Eg. 187. all-karlmannliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very manfully, Fms. x. 141. all-kaupmannliga, adv. in a very businesslike, tradesmanlike way, Fms. v. 255. all-kátligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very funny, Grett. 112. all-kátr, adj. very joyful, Nj. 18, Eg. 44, 332. all-keppinn, adj. very snappish, Lex. Poët. all-kerskiligr and -keskiligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very sarcastic, biting, Sturl. ii. 196. all-klókr, adj. very shrewd, Hkr. iii. 317. all-knáliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very stoutly, vigorously, Rd. 312. all-kostgæfliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very earnestly, in a very painstaking way, Stj. all-kostigr, adj. very excellent, Lex. Poët. all-kviklátr, adj. very quick, lively, Ld. 270. all-kynliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very strangely, strange, Ísl. ii. 58, Fms. ii. 227, Grett. 160. all-kyrrligr, adj. very quiet, tranquil, Háv. 49. all-kærr, adj. very dear, beloved, Eg. 139, Fms. i. 48; very fond of, Hkr. i. 194: neut., Eg. 116, of mutual love. all-langr, adj. very long, Háv. 49. all-laust, n. adj. very loosely, Fms. xi. 103. all-lágr, adj. very low, short of stature, Fbr. 68. all-lengi, adv. very long, K. þ. K. 158. all-léttbrúnn, adj. of very brightened, cheerful countenance, Ld. 94. all-léttliga, adv. very lightly, Fas. iii. 612. all-léttmælt, n. adj. ver a. um e-t, to speak in a very lively way, Fms. iv. 261. all-létrr, adj. very light (in weight), Fas. iii. 487. all-likliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very agreeable, courteous terms, Fas. i. 84. all-likligr, adj. very likely, Fas. ii. 247, Sks. 669. all-likr, adj. very like, Fas. iii. 579, Sd. 166. Korm. 142. all-litilfjörlygr, adj. and -liga, adv. very puny, prop. having little life in one, Háv. 54. all-litill, adj. very little, Fær. 268: n. sing. all-litt, as adv. very little, Nj. 108, 130, Korm. 172; poorly, Grett. 116. all-lyginn, adj. very given to lying, Fbr. 157. all-makligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very deserving, fitting, Sturl. iii. 127, Bjarn. 22. all-mann-fátt, n. adj. with very few people, Gisl. 31. all-mannhætt, adj. very dangerous, Fas. iii. 34. all-mannskæðr, adj. very full of manslaughter, very murderous, Fms. ii. 512. all-mannvænigr, adj. a very promising man, Fms. iv. 254. all-mannvænn, adj. a man of very great promise, Hkr. ii. 182. all-margliga, adv. very affably, Sturl. iii. 27. all-margmæltr part. very talkative, Sturl. ii. 179. all-margr, adj. very numerous, pl. very many, Nj. 32, Grág. ii. 176, Sks. 328, Gpl. 329. all-margrætt, pl. adj. part. very much spoken of, Fms. viii. 275. all-málugr, adj. very loquacious, Hkr. iii. 152, 655 xi. 2. all-mátffarin, adj. very much worn out, with very little strength left, Fas. ii. 356. all-máttlitill, adj. very weak, Fms. i. 159. all-meginlauss, adj. very void of strength, Fms. xi. 103. all-mikilfengligr, adj. very big and mighty, very imposing, Fas. all-mikill, adj. very great, Ísl. ii. 269, Nj. 193, Eg. 25: 39: neut. as adv. greatly, Fms. i. 24, vii. 110. all-mikilmannliga

dv. very nobly, Sturl. i. 33. all-misjafn, adj. very variously, unfavourably, in such phrases as, mæla a. um e-t, there were very different words about the matter, leggja a. til, ganga a. undir, taka a. ú, Eg. 242, Hkr. ii. 122, Fms. i. 86, vii. 110, Ld. 166. all-mjór, adj. very slim, lender, narrow, Hkr. iii. 117, Gpl. 173. all-mjök, adv. very much, Hkr. 134, Ld. 196, Eg. 19; féllu þá a. menn, in very great numbers, Fms.
173. all-myrikr, adj. very dark, Fms. ix. 23. all-mæðiliga, adv. with very great effort, heavily, Fms. ix. 16. all-nauðigr, adj. and -liga, adv. very reluctant, unwilling, Grett. 153; a. staddr, dangerously, Fms. v. 212. all-náinn, adj. very near, nearly related, Sks.
30. all-náttföru, adj. very much given to wandering by night, ex. Poët. all-niðskárr, adj. of a poet, given to mocking, satirical erse, [nið and skáld (?)], Fms. ii. 7. all-nóg, adv. very abundantly, d. 182. all-nær, adv. very near, Fms. vii. 289; metaph., lagði a.
t. pretty nearly, well-nigh, Fs., Sks. 684 B. all-nærri, adv. very near,
d. 202, Fas. iii. 339. all-opt, adv. very often, Anecd. 38, Gpl. 169.
all-orðfát, n. adj. in the phrase, göra a. um, to be very short of words to, Bjarn. 31. all-orðugligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very frightful, dda 41. all-ólmiliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very furiously, Fas. iii.
46, Bárð. 177. all-óttalaust, n. adj. with very little to fear, Eg.
71, v. l. all-ramskipaðr, adj. part. very strongly manned, Fms. iii.
3. all-rauðr, adj. very red, Ld. 182. all-ráðligr, adj. very expedient, advisable, Grett. 145. all-reiðligr, adj. looking very wrathful, Fms. iv. 161. all-reiðr, adj. very uroth, angry, Edda 57, Nj. 135, g. 139. all-rikmannligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very grand, pompous, magnificent, Fms. i. 213. all-rikr, adj. very powerful, Fms. i. 115.
all-rýrliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very feebly, puny, Fbr. 28. all-róskliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very smart, brisk, Fms. viii. 317. all-sannligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very likely, 'soothlike', Fms. iv. 270. all-stúttgjarnliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very placable, of mild disposition, Sturl. iii. 288. all-seinn, adj. very slow, Bs. i. 192; neut. as adv. slowly, Grett. 151 A. all-sigrsæll, adj. very victorious, having very good luck in war, Hkr. i. 28. all-skammr, adj. very short, very scant,
j. 264; neut. substantively, a very short way, Finnb. 324; short distance, ms. iv. 329. all-skapliga, adv. very fittingly, properly, Grett. 120.
all-skapværr, adj. of a very gentle, meek disposition, Sturl. all-skap-ungt, n. adj., vera a., to be in a very gloomy, depressed state of mind, ms. iv. 26. all-skarpr, adj. very sharp, Lex. Poët. all-skeinu-ættir, adj. very dangerous, vulnerable, Sturl. ii. 139. all-skemtigri, adj. very amusing, Sturl. ii. 77. all-skemtilill, adj. very slow-witted, dull, Sturl. i. 89. all-skjalkænliga, adv. [skjalla, to flatter], ery coaxingly, Grett. 131 A. all-skjött, n. adj. as adv. very soon,
j. 236. all-skrautligr, adj. and -ligr, adv. very smart, splendid,
as. ii. 366, Mag. 11. all-skygn, adj. very sharp-sighted, Hrafn. 33. all-skyldr, adj. bound to, very obligatory; neut. = bounden duty, Sks.
84; deserved, Gpl. 61; β. nearly related, near akin, Fms. xi. 75. all-skyndiliga, adv. very quickly, Blas. 40. all-skynsamliga, adv. very judiciously, Sturl. iii. 161. all-skyrgr, adj. all curd-besprent, Grett. 107 A. all-sköruliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very frankly, boldly, dignified, Sturl. iii. 39, Fms. ix. 5, Ld. 94 C, 226, Bs. i. allhláliga, adv. very slowly, sluggishly, Grett. 101 A. all-smár, adj. very small, Fms. v. 55, xi. 61. all-snarpliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very sharply, smartly, Fms. viii. 346. all-snarpr, adj. very sharp, ms. i. 38, Nj. 246. all-snemma, adv. very early, Fms. ii. 223.
all-snjallr, adj. very shrewd, clever, Fms. viii. 307. all-snúðula, dv. very quickly, Lex. Poët. all-snæfr, adj. very brisk, id. all-nófurmannligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very brisk and energetic looking, of a man, Fms. xi. 79. all-spakliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very mildly, moderately, wisely, Hkr. ii. 41. all-spakr, adj. very gentle, wise, ms. vi. 298. all-starsýnn, adj. who stares very hard at a thing, looking fixedly upon, Fms. vi. 203. all-sterkliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very briskly, strongly, Ld. 158, Fas. iii. 612. all-sterkr, adj. very strong, Hkr. i. 238, Eg. 285; Ísl. ii. 461 (very vehement); as a pr. name, ms. iii. 183. all-stilliliga, adv. very calmly, in a very composed manner, Ld. 318. all-stirðr, adj. very stiff, Háv. 46. all-stór-ógg, adj. dealing very hard blows, Fms. i. 171. all-stórliga, adv. very baugbtily, Hkr. ii. 63, Ld. 168. all-stórmannliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very munificently, nobly, Fas. iii. 45; baugbtily, Sd. 146. alltórórðr, adj. using very big words, Eg. 340, Ld. 38 (very boisterous).
all-tórr, adj. very great, metaph. big, puffed up, Ld. 318; dat. all-stórum, s adv. very largely, Edda 32. all-strangr, adj. very rapid, Lex.
Poët. all-stygg, adj. very ill-humoured, cross, Grett. 103 A. allstyrkliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very stoutly, Stj. 402. all-styrkr, adj. very strong, Fms. i. 177. all-svangr, adj. very hungry, Lex. Poët. all-svinnliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very wisely, prudently, wise, Fas. i.
5, ii. 266. all-settfúss, adj. very placable, peace-loving, very willing to accept an atonement, Sturl. iii. 19. all-sœmiliga, adv. and ligr, adj. very seemly, decorous, honourable, Hkr. i. 215, Ísl. ii. 163. all-tiginn, adj. very princely, Lex. Poët. all-tilláttsamr, adj. very indulgent, lenient, Þórd. 12. all-tiðrætt, n. adj. very much talked of, much spoken of, Eg. 99, Sturl. i. 199. all-tiðvirk, adj. very quick at work, Fms. xi. 377. all-torfyndr, adj. very hard to find, Fms. vii.

356. all-torfært, n. adj. very hard to pass, cross, Eg. 546. alltorsótt, n. adj. part. very difficult to reach, Eg. 546. all-tortryggiliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very suspiciously, Sturl. ii. 47. all-torveldligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very difficult, Str. all-trauðr, adj. very slow, unwilling, Fms. xi. 39. all-tregr, adj. very tardy, Fær. 114, Bárð. 178. all-trútr, adj. very true, Fms. vi. 377. all-tryggr, adj. very trusty, Hkr. iii. 167. all-tvitugr, false reading, instead of eigi alls t., not quite twenty, Sturl. i. 181. all-undarligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very odd, wonderful, Fms. ii. 150. all-ungr, adj. very young, Eg. 268, Fms. i. 14, Ld. 274. all-úbeinskeytt, adj. shooting very badly, Fms. ii. 103. all-úblíðr, adj. very harsh, unkind, Fas. ii.
all-úbragðligr, adj. very ill-looking, Sturl. iii. 234. all-úðæll, adj.
very spiteful, untractable, Sturl. i. 99. all-úfagr, adj. very ugly, metaph., Fms. iii. 154. all-úfmiliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very awkwardly, Fas. ii.
543. all-úframliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very backward, shy, timid, Fbr. 38 C. all-úfriðr, adj. very ugly, Fms. xi. 227. all-úfrýnn, adj. very sullen, 'frowning', sour, Eg. 525. all-úfrægr, adj. very inglorious, Fms. iv. 259. all-úgláðr, adj. very gloomy, sad, Hkr. iii.
379. all-úhægr, adj. very difficult, Eg. 227. all-úhöfðingligr, adj. very low-looking, very plebeian, Finnb. 222. all-úkfátr, adj. very sorrowful, Edda 35, Eg. 223, Fms. i. 37. all-úknár, adj. very weak of frame, Grett. 119 A, very badly knit; Bs. i. 461 (of boys). allúkonungligr, adj. very unkingly, Fms. viii. 158. all-úkunnigr, adj.
quite unknown, Ísl. ii. 412. all-úlfígr, adj. very unlikely to live, Hkr.
ii. 200. all-úlíkliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very unlikely, Gísl. 24, Sd.
123, Finnb. 310. all-úlíkr, adj. very unlike, Glúm. 364. all-úlyginn, adj. not at all given to lie, truthful, Fbr. 157. all-úmátu-liga, adv. and -ligr, adj. weakly, very weak, tender, Fms. iv. 318. allúráðinn, adj. part. very 'unready' (cp. Ethelred the 'unready'), undecidet, Lv. 9. all-úráðliga, adv. very unadvisedly, rashly, Odd. 12 old Ed. all-úsannligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very untruthful, unjust; also, unlikely, Fms. vii. 141. all-úsátfúss, adj. very implacable, unwilling to come to terms, Sturl. iii. 275. all-úskyldr, adj. very strange to, not at all bound to..., Eg. 10. all-úspakr, adj. very unruly, Sturl. ii. 61. all-úsváss, adj. very uncomfortable, of weather, cold and rainy, Bs. i. 509. all-úsýnn, adj. very uncertain, doubtful, Glúm.
358, Sturl. i. 105. all-úsælligr, adj. of very poor, wretched appearance, Niðst. 109. all-úvinnsligr, adv. very unpopular, Fms. iv. 369, Fas. iii.
520. all-úvísiliga, adv. very unwisely, Niðst. 6. all-úvænliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. of very unfavourable prospect, Fas. ii. 266; n. adj. very unpromising, Grett. 148 A. all-úvænn, adj. very ugly, Fas. i. 234; very unpromising, unfavourable, Ísl. ii. 225; neut. as adv. unfavourably, Fms. xi. 134. all-úparfr, adj. very unbriftry, very unprofitable, something that had better be prevented, Eg. 576, Hkr. ii. 245. all-vand-látr, adj. very difficult, hard to please, Fms. vi. 387. all-vandliga, adv. with very great pains, exactly, carefully, Sks. 658 B. all-vant, n.
adj., vera a. um e-t, to be in a very great strait, Nj. 221. all-varfærr, adj. very careful, solicitous, Eg. 63. all-vaskligr, adj. and -liga, adv.
very brisk, smart, gallant, Hkr. i. 104; compar. v. alvaskligr. all-vaskr, adj. very brisk, gallant, Fms. viii. 226. all-vándr, adj. very bad, of clothes, much worn, Pm. 11. all-vápnðjarfr, adj. very bold, daring in arms, Hkr. iii. 63. all-veðrlítið, n. adj. very calm, with little wind, Fms. vi. 360. all-vegliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very grand, princely, nobly, Fms. i. 20, Eg. 332, Hkr. i. 15. all-vel, adv. very well, Nj. 12, Eg. 78, 198; compar. albet, v. alvel. all-vesall, adj. very puny, wretched, Nj. 97. all-vesalliga, adv. very wretchedly, Ólk. 35. all-vesalmannliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. id., Ísl. ii. 416. all-vesæll, adj.
very miserable, base, vile, Nj. 97. all-vingjarnliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very friendly, amicable, Sturl. ii. 168. all-vingott, n. adj. on very friendly terms, Fbr. 129. all-vinnsligr, adj. very popular, used of a man blessed with many friends, Fms. i. 184, ii. 44, Orkn. 104 old Ed.
all-virðuligr, adj. and -liga, adv. very worthy, dignified, Fms. x. 84, Bs. i. 83. all-vitr, adj. very wise, Sks. 29 B (superl.) all-vitriliga, adv. very wisely, Fas. ii. 66. all-viða and all-vitt, n. adj. very widely, Hkr. iii. 141, Lex. Poët. all-vigluga, adv. and -ligr, adj. in a very warlike manner, Fms. ix. 488, Fas. ii. 112. all-vingmannliga, adv.
very martially, Fas. iii. 150. all-vigmóðr, adj. quite wearied out with fighting, Intro. to Helgakviða (Sæm.) all-viss, adj. very wise, sure, Sks. 520, Lex. Poët.: neut. to a dead certainty, Lex. Poët. all-vænliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very promising, handsome, Glúm. 349, Fms. v.
260, Fbr. 114. all-vænn, adj. id., Clem. 24, Bs. i. 340; neut., þykja
a. um, to be in high spirits, Ísl. ii. 361; make much of, Fms. ii. 76; as adv.
favourably, Fms. iv. 192. all-vörpuligr, adj. of a very stout, stately frame, Hkr. ii. 254. all-vöxtuligr, adj. very tall, of large growth, Fas. iii. 627. all-þakligr, adj. very pretty, = þekkligr, Lex. Poët. allþakksamliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very thankfully, Fms. i. 120, Ld.
298. all-þartiga, adv. very thrifuly, very prisingly; biðja a., to beg very hard, Edda 45. all-þarf, adj. very thrifuly, Lex. Poët. allþétr, adj. very crowded, cp. Lex. Poët. all-þrekligr, adj. of a very robust frame, Hkr. ii. 2. all-þrongr, adj. as neut. in a very great crowd, Edda 24. all-fungliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. very hard, unwilling, reluctant, Sturl. ii. 120; taka a. á e-m, to be very hard upon, Mag. i. all-fungjar, adj. very unfavourable, Hkr. ii. 358; hostile, badly disposed towards, Eb. 108, Eg. 332; þykja a., to dislike, Fms. viii. 441; a. orð, to blame, Sturl. ii. 62. all-þykk, adj. very thick, Fas. i. 339; n. sing. as adv. thickly, Fms. vii. 70 (of great numbers slain on the battle-field). all-æfr, adj. very furious, wrath, Ísl. ii. 258, Lv. 60, Fas. i. 404. all-ægildir, adj. very terrible, Dropl. 18. all-æstr, adj. very incited, vehement, Nj. 231. all-örörð, adj. very quick-tongued, frank, outspoken, Eg. 340. all-bruggliga, adv. very steadfastly, very firmly, Gret. 153 A. all-bruggr, adj. very unflinching, Bs. i. 624. all-föðr, m. father of all, Edda 2, 6, 13 (a name of Odin), v. alföðr. al-ljóss, adj. quite light; dagr a., broad daylight, Eg. 219; n. sing., vera alljóst, in broad daylight, Gret. 95 A, 112 A, Fms. ix. 35, Sturl. ii. 108; metaph. quite clear, Sks. 490. al-loðinn, adj. very bairy, sbaggy all over, Fms. iii. 125. al-lokit, n. part., a. allri ván, when all hope is gone, Bs. i. 198. ALLR, öll, allt, and alt, adj. [Ulf. alls = nās, ānas, ḗλος; A. S. eall; Engl. and Germ. all].

A. In sing. as adj. or substantively, cunctus, totus, omnis: I. all, entire, the whole; hón á allan arf eptir mik, she has all my heritage after me, Nj. 3; um alla þingsafnglöpun, every kind of þ., 150; gaf hann þat allt, all, 101; at öllum hluta, in totum, Grág. i. 245; allr heilagr dömr, the whole body of Christians, ii. 165; á öllu því máli, Fms. vii. 311; allu fólki, the whole people, x. 273; hvítur allr, white all over, 655 xxxii. 21; bú allt, the whole estate, Grág. i. 244; fyrir allt dagsljós, before any dawn of light, Hom. 41; with the addition of saman = ánas, —Icel. now in fem. sing. and n. pl. say öll sönnun, and even n. sing. allt samt; in old writers saman is indecl., —the whole, Germ. sümmülich, zusammen; allt saman féit, the whole amount, entire, Grág. ii. 148; þenna hernað allan saman, all together, Fms. i. 144; fyrir allan saman ójafnað þann, Sd. 157. Metaph. in the phrase, at vera ekki allr þar sem hann er sénn (sóðr), of persons of deep, shrewd characters, not to be seen through, but also with a feeling of something 'uncanny' about them, Fms. xi. 157 (a familiar phrase); ekki er öll nótt út enn, sagði draugrinn, the night is not all over yet, said the ghost, 'the Ides are not past' (a proverb), v. Ísl. þjóds. 2. all, entire, full; allan hálfan mánuð, for the entire fortnight, Nj. 7; þar til er Kjtartan þykir allt máll upp, until Kjtartan thought it was high time, of one nearly (or) well-nigh drowned, Hkr. i. 286. III. metaph.

past, gone, dead, extinct; perh. ellipt., vera allr í brottu, quite gone, Eb. 112 new Ed.; var Hrappur þá allr í brottu, Nj. 132; then by an ellipsis of 'brottu,' or the like, allr simply = past, gone: A. past, of time; seg þú svá fremi frá því er þessi dagr er allr, when this day is past, Nj. 96, Fms. ii. 38, 301; var þá öll þeirra vináttá, their friendship was all gone, Fms. ix. 428; and allr þú mitt megin, my strength is gone, exhausted, Str. β. dead; þá er Geirmundr var allr, gone, dead, Landn. (Hb.) 124; sız Gunnarr at Hlíðaranda var allr, since G. of Litwend was dead and gone (v. l. to lézt), Nj. 142; sem fádír þeirra væri allr, after his death, Stj. 127; þá er Núi var allr, 66; en sem hann var allr, 100; eptir þat er Sara var öll, after all Sara's days were over, 139, 140, 405; á vegum allr hygg ek at at ek verða munu, that I shall perish on the way, Gg. verse 5; með því at þú ert gamlaðr mjök, þá munu þeir eigi út koma fyr en þú ert allr, Háv. 57; still freq. in Swed., e. g. blifwa all at bekumring, be worn out with sorrow; vinet blev alt, fell sbort; tiden er all, past. III. used almost adverbially, when it may be translated by all, quite, just, entirely; klofnaði hann allr í sundr, was all cloven asunder, Nj. 205; er sá allr einn í þínu líði er nú hefir eigi höfuðs, ok hinn, er þá eggjaði hins versta verks er eigi var fram komit, where it seems, however, rather to mean one and the same. . . or the very same . . . , thus, and he is now one and the same man in thy band, who has now lost his head, and he who then egged thee on to the worst work when it was still undone, or the very same . . . who, Nj. 213; vil ek at sú görd haldist öll, in all its parts, 256; kváðu Örn allan villast, that he was all bewildered, Ld. 74.

IV. neut. sing. used as a subst. in the sense of all, everything, in every respect; ok fór svá með öllu, sem . . . , acted in everything as . . . , Nj. 14, Ld. 54; ok lát sem þú þykist þar allt eiga, that you depend upon him in all, Fms. xi. 113; eigi er enn þeirra allt, they have not yet altogether won the game, Nj. 235; í alls völd, in all misery, Ver. 4; alls mest, most of all, especially, Fms. ii. 137 C, Fs. 89 (in a verse); in mod. usage, allra mest, cp. below. The neut. with a gen.; allt missera, all the year round, Hom. 73; allt annars, all the rest, Grág. ii. 141; at öllu annars, in all other respects, K. þ. K. 98; þá var allt (all, everybody) við þá hrætt, Fas. i. 338. In the phrases, at öllu, in all respects, Fms. i. 21, Grág. i. 431; ef hann á eigi at öllu framfærsluna, if he be not the sole supporter, 275; úreyndr at öllu, untried in every way, Nj. 90; cp. Engl. not at all, prop. not in every respect, analogous to never, prop. not always: fyrir alls sakir, in every respect, Grág. ii. 47, Fas. i. 252; í öllu, in everything, Nj. 90, 228; með öllu, wholly, quite, dauðr með öllu, quite dead, 153; neita með öllu, to refuse outright, Fms. i. 35, 232, Boll. 342; um allt, in respect of everything, Nj. 89; hence comes the adverb ávalt, ever = of all = um allt, prop. in every respect, v. ávalt. V. the neut. sing. allt is used as an adv., right up to, as far as, all the way; Brynjólftr gengr allt at honum, close to him, Nj. 58; kómu allt at bænum, 79; allt at búðardyrnum, right up to the very door of the booth, 247; allt norðr um Stað, all along north, round Cape Stad, Fms. vii. 7; suðr allt í England's haf, iv. 329; verit allt út í Miklagarð, as far out as Constantinople, ii. 7, iv. 250, 25; allt á klofa, Bárð. 171. 2. everywhere, in all places; at ríki Eirleks konungs mundi allt yfir standa í Eyjunum, might stretch over the whole of the Islands, Eg. 405; Sigröðr var konungr allt um þrændalög, over all Drontheim, Fms. i. 19; bjoggu þar allt fyrir þingmönnum Runólfs goða, the liegemen of R. the priest were in every house, ii. 234 (= í hverju húsi, Bs. i. 20); allt norðr um Rogaland, all the way north over the whole of R., Fms. iv. 251; vóru svirar allt gulli búinr, all overlaid with gold, vi. 308; hafð svá allt kesjurnar fyrir, at ekki megi á ganga, hold your spears everywhere (all along the line) straight before you, that they (the enemy) may not come up to you, 413; allt undr innviðuna ok stefnana, vii. 82. 3. nearly = Lat. jam, soon, already; vóru allt komin fyrir hann bréf, warrants of arrest were already in his way, Fms. vii. 207; var allt skipat löðinu til fylkingar, the troops were at once drawn up in array, 295; en allt huguð ver (still we thought) at fara með spekt um þessi heruð, Boll. 346. 4. temp. all through, until; allt til Jónsvöku, Ann. 1295; allt um daga Hákonar konungs, all through the reign of king Hacon, Bs. i. 731. 5. in phrases such as, allt at einu, all one, all in the same way, Fms. i. 113. In Icel. at present allt að einu means all the same: allt eins, nevertheless; ek ætla þó utan a. eins, Ísl. ii. 216; hann neitaði allt eins at . . . , refused all the same, Dipl. iii. 13; allt eins hraustliga, not the less manly, Fms. xi. 443. The mod. Icel. use is a little different, namely = as, in similes = just as; allt eins og blómstríð eina (a simile), just as the flower, the initial words of the famous hymn by Hallgrím.

6. by adding 'of' = far too . . . , much too . . . , Karl. 301 (now freq.) 7. with a comparative, much, far, Fms. vi. 45 (freq.) VI. neut. gen. alls [cp. Ulf. allis = ḗλος; A. S. ealles]. used as an adv., esp. before a negative (ekki, hvergi), not a bit, not at all, no how, by no means; þeir ugðu alls ekki at sér, they were not a bit afraid, Nj. 252; hræðumst vér hann nú alls ekki, we do not care a bit for him, 260; á hólmöngu er vandi en alls ekki (none at all) á einvigi, Korn. 84; ein junkherra Eiríkr þóttist ekki hafa, ok kallaði sík Eirík alls ekki (cp. Engl. lackland), Fms. x. 160; alls hvergi skil sök koma undir enn þriðja mann, no how, in no case, by no means, Grág. i. 144; sometimes without a negative following it; sér alls geldar, ewes quite barren, Grág. i. 502; hafnar alls geldir, id.; alls vesall, altogether wretched, Nj. 124; alls mjök stærst hann nú, very much, Stj. ; a. mest, especially, Fs. 89, Fms. ii. 137. In connection with numbers, in all, in the whole; tólf vörn þau alls á skipi, twelve were they all told in the ship, Ld. 142; tíu Íslenzkir menn alls, 164; alls förust níu menn, the slain were nine in all, Ísl. ii. 385; verða alls sárir þrír eða fleiri, Grág. ii. 10; alls mánuð, a full month, i. 163; þeir ala eit barn alls á þá sinni, Rb. 346. β. with addition of 'til' or 'of' = far too much; alls of lengi, far too long a time, Fms. i. 140; hefnd alls til lítil, much too little, vi. 35.

B. In pl. allir, allar, öll, as adj. or substantively: I. used absol. all; þeir genu út allir, all men, altogether, Nj. 80; Síðan bjoggst þeir heiman allt, 212; Gunnarr reið ok þeir allir, 48; hvikit þér allir, 78, etc. 2. as adj., alla höfðingja, all the chiefs, Nj. 213; ör öllum fjórðungum á landinu, all the quarters of the land, 222; at vitni guðs ok allra heilagra manna, all the saints, Grág. ii. 22; í allum orrostum, in all the battles, Fms. x. 273; Josep ok allir hans eliflu bræðr, Stj., etc. 3. by adding aðrir, flestir, etc.; allir aðrir, all other, every one else, Nj. 89, Fms. xi. 135; flestir allir, nearly all, the greatest part of, v. flestir; in mod. use flestallir, best being indecl.: allir saman, altogether, Nj. 80. 4. adverb., Gregorius hafði eigi öll fjögr hundruð, not all, not quite, four hundred, Fms. vii. 255. 5. used ellipt., allir (everybody) vildu leita þér vega, Nj. 78. 6. gen. pl. allra, when followed by superl. neut. adj. or adv., of all things, all the more; en nú þyki mér þat allra sýnst er . . . , all the more likely, as . . . , Ld. 34; allra helzt er þeir heyra, particularly now when they hear, Fms. ix. 330; allra helst ef hann fellr meir, all the rather, if . . . , Grág. ii. 8; allra sízt, least of all, 686 B. 2; bæzu sí kemr til þess allra mest, especially, Hom. 149; very freq. at present in Icel., and used nearly as Engl. very, e. g. allra best, the very best; a. hæst, neðst, fyrst, the very highest, lowest, foremost, etc.

C. alls is used as a prefix to several nouns in the gen., in order to express something common, general, universal. COMPS: alls-endis or alls-hendis, adv.—scarcely to be derived from 'hönd'—in every respect, quite, thoroughly, used almost exclusively in connection with a preceding negative, eigi, eingi, or the like, and giving additional force to the negation; er þat hugboð mitt, at vér berim eigi a. gæfu til um váu skipti, it is my foreboding, that we shall not carry luck with us to the very end of our dealings, Ld. 160; eigi til allsendis, id., Eg. 75; þat er reynt at eingi maðr heldr sinum þrifnaði til allsendis, it is proved that no man holds his thriving thoroughly, Fms. i. 295. alls-háttar, adv. [hátt], of every sort, kind; a. kurteysi, thoroughly good manners, Fms. i. 17 (freq.) alls-herjar, an old, obsolete gen. from herr; Drottinn Sabaoth is in the Icel. transl. of the Bible rendered by Drottinn Allsherjar, the Lord of Hosts. It is esp. used as an adv. in some political and legal ms, denoting something general, public, common. allsjerjar-búð, the booth in the parliament (alþingi) belonging to the allsherjargödi. site is fixed, Sturl. ii. 44, 126 (referring to events in the year 1215). allsjerjar-dómur, m. a doom of the supreme court, a lawful public sentence, judgment of the full court; þér rufud allsherjardóm, violated lawful judgment, the law of the land, Fms. iv. 205. allsjerjar-fé, n. public property, a domain, Íb. ch. 3, viz. the ground of the Icel. alþingi. allsjerjar-goði, a, m. (v. goði), the supreme priest, pontifex maximus. As e alþingi (q. v.) was within the jurisdiction of the great temple (hof) at Kjalarnes, the keeper or priest of that temple—the descendant of its under Thorstein Ingólfsson—had the title of supreme priest, and opened e alþingi during the heathen age. At the introduction of Christianity his office remained with the supreme priest, who retained his name; and he, and not the bishop of Skalholt, opened the alþingi every year; Þorsteinn Ingólfsson lét setja fyrstr manna þing á Kjalarnesi ádr alþingi r sett, ok fylgir þar enn (still, viz. in the 13th century) sökum þess því þorði (viz. the priesthood of Kjalarnes, aliter allsherjar godorð) alþingis lgun, Landn. 336 (the text as found in the Melabók), Landn. 39, þórð. (Ed. 1860), and Landn. Mantissa. allsjerjar-lið, n. public troops, army (Norse), Fms. x. 411. allsjerjar-lýðr, pl. ir, m. the people, nationality, Hkr. iii. 194. allsjerjar-lög, n. pl. public law, statute of the land, in the phrase, at alþingis máli ok allsherjar lögum, Nj. 87. allsjerjar-þing, n. general assembly, Fms. i. 224. In Icel. present allsherjar is prefixed to a great many other words in order to press what is public, general, universal. alls-konar [Old Engl. alkyn], pp. an obsolete gen. from a masc. konr: a. as adj. ind. of every day; a. fanga, Eg. 65; a. ár, good season in all respects, Hkr. i. 15; þ. ad simply as adv.; hinn ágætasti a., in every respect, Fms. xi. 157 (rare). s-kostar, adv. [kyn], in all respects, quite, altogether; a. illa, bad together, Ld. 232; þykjast nú a. hafa unninn mikinn sigr (a full victory), Ís. xi. 147; frjáls ok a. geymandi, to be observed in every respect, Á. 50; hann lofði a., made a full allowance, Bs. i. alls-kyns, r. [kyn] = allskonar, Fms. x. 380. ll. 2, 25, where it is spelt alls-is. alls-staðar, adv. [staðr], freq. alstaðar or allstaðar in a ple word, everywhere, ubique; cp. margstaðar, in many places; sumþar, in some places; einhverstaðar, somewhere; nokkursstaðar, anywhere; alstaðar þar sem, Fms. ii. 81, x. 182. Metaph. in every way (rare); nun ek gera at þínu skapi, nema þar, in everything, except that . . ., Nj. alls-valdandi, part. [A. S. ealwadda], 'all-wielding,' of God, W. G. M. D. 100; as a verb, to wield, Fms. i. 121, Bs. several times. allra-handa allskonar, a mod. word. allra-heilagra in compds, a. messa, -dagr, -daga, All-Saints'-day, -church, Bs., K. A., Fms., etc. ALLS and als, *conj. [Ulf. allis = γάπ; Engl. as, contr. = als; cp. the adverbial als in Grimm D. W. sub voce, col. 257 sqq.], as, while, since; cp. in Lex. Poët. in old poets, less freq. in old prose writers, rare in the 13th century; used four times in the treatise of Thoroddr, — hann sjálfir er hebreskr stafr, Skálda 167; alls vér erum einnar tungu, Ís. ii. 366; alls engi grein er enn á gör, 162; alls þeir höfðu ádr allir eitt hljóð, 165, — and as often in the old Heidarv. S. — alls þú ert göðr drengir kall-, Ís. ii. 366; alls Barði var eigi bitr á fébætr, 386; alls þú rekr erendi, 483; alls þú hefir þó hér til nokkora ásjá ætlað, Ld. 42; alls þú máttu ekki sinu vilja fram koma, Boll. 348; alls hann trúir mér F. S. (Hallfr. S.) 90; alls þú hefir þó ádr giptu til mín sótt, Fms. v. 254; alls þeir höfðu frítt lið, viii. 362. With the addition of 'er' (at); en þú ert sá þú ert svá þráhaldur á þínu máli, Fms. i. 305; alls er ek reyni . . . as I . . ., ii. 262, (Grág. i. 142 is a false reading = allt), Fas. ii. 283; with addition of 'þó', alls þó hefir þetta mæð meirum fúðæmum gengið, Ír. en hvort annara, þá vil ek . . ., but considering that . . ., Band. 32 new Í.; cp. Lex. Poët. all-tíð, adv. at all times, Fas. i. 505 (paper MS.), freq. in mod. use. -lúsigr, adj. all-lousy, Fbr. 156. all-vald, n. absolute power. allvalds-konungur, m. sovereign, Fms. x. 378. all-valdr, pl. ar, m. = alvaldr (poët. word), sovereign king. Lex. Poët., Ír. i. 432; heilur allvaldar báðir, a poetical salute, Fms. vi. 195; mikil er alds traun (a proverb), 'tis hard to strive against the powerful, Lv. III. all-lyngis, quite, altogether, v. öllungis. -manna-, gen. pl. from an obsolete almenn [cp. Alemanni], a prefix to some nouns, denoting general, common, universal, Ad. 21. Freq. now in Icel., e. g. almanna-rómur, m. public opinion, in the proverb, sjaldan lýgr vox populi vox Dei. COMPDS: almanna-bygð, f. an inhabited country, Fas. iii. 3. almanna-gjá, *f. local name of the great lava rift due to the alþingi, where all the people met; vide Nj. 244, Sturl. i. 206. almanna-leið, f. a public road, Lv. 29. almanna-lof, n. confession of all, Nj. 251. almanna-skript, f. general confession, Hom. 7. almanna-stofa, u, f. the common hall, a large room in the Icel. dwellings of the 12th and 13th centuries; opp. to litla stofa, Sturl. ii. 153, 194, 198; it seems to be identical with skáli. almanna-tal, n. common reckoning, Íb. 18: β. (Norse), general census, with a view to taking a levy, N. G. L. i. 98; Fr. = almannæging. almanna-vegr, n. a high road, Nj. 261, Fms. ii. 99, = þjóðvegr, þjóðleið. almanna-þing, n. (Norse), a public meeting, = alþing, Fr.

al-máttigr, adj. [A. S. ealmeatig; Hcl. ala-; Germ. allmächtig], almighty, seems to be a Christian (eccl.) word, translated from the Latin omnipotens; but the phrase 'hinn almáttiki áss' in the heathen oath (used of Thor) implies its use in very early times. The old form is contracted before -ir, -ar, -an, -um, etc., and changes g into k; almáttikan, -kir, -kun (now almáttugan, -ugir, -ugum, through all cases), v. máttigr: used of God, Fms. i. 231, Eluc. 10, Sks. 305, etc.: heathen use, Landn. 258, cp. p. 335. al-máttir, ar, m., dat. -mætti, almightiness, omnipotence (eccl.), of God, 671, 3; sinu almátt (acc.), Ísl. i. (Hom.) 386, Fms. i. 226, 655 vi. 2; vide almætti, n. al-menni, n. the people, public, Fr. (Norse). al-menniliga, adv. generally, H. E. i. 465, K. Á. 80. al-menniligr, adj. [Germ. allgemein], general, common, rare in old writers, Stj.; a. (catholic) trú, Mar. 656 b. 8, 623, 18; a. þing, concilium oecumenicum, Rb. 338; a. Kristni, 390, 208, Gpl., etc. Freq. in mod. Icel., = common, good, real. al-menning, f. and almenningr, m. I. in Icel. almost always fem. in the sense of fundus communis, ager compascuus, common land, belonging to a whole 'fjórðungr' (quarter) of the country, and thus wider than the mod. 'afrétt'. It still remains in the local name of the deserts round Cape Horn at the north-west point of Icel., cp. Fbr. and Landn. 124; cp. also the passage in Íb. ch. 3. The word is now seldom used except of wastes belonging to nobody: þat er almenning er fjórðungs meim eigu allir saman, Grág. ii. 392-394, Js. 107, Íb. ch. 3, Grág. ii. 345, 352, 359, 385, K. þ. K. 26, Fbr. 41, Landn. 124, in all those cases fem. II. masc. (Norse), [cp. Swed. almänning, pascuum, and Germ. almende, via publica or ager compascuus, Grimm R. A. p. 498], common or public pasture (answering nearly to the Icel. afrétt), where cattle are grazed during the summer months, cp. the Norse sett, Icel. sel: rarely used in Icel. writers. In Ó. H., ch. 114, used of Grímsey, an island off the north coast of Iceland, Gpl. 450, Jb. 299, 311. 2. the high-street, in a Norse town, N. G. L. ii. 241. 3. the people, the public in general, common now in Icel. in this sense, Stj. 292, 493, Fbr. 194; almennings matr, common food, Bs. ii. 5, 179. 4. a levy, conscription; fullr, allr, hálfir a., a full, half levy of men and ships; fullr a. in Norway meant a levy of one in every seven male adults, N. G. L. ii. 199, Fms. iv. 142, i. 165, D. I. i. 66 (of the milit. duties of Icelanders when residing in Norway). Metaph. (as a phrase) in Nj. 207, of raising the country, the institution being unknown in the Icel. Commonwealth. COMPDS: almennings-bréf, n. a proclamation, Sturl. iii. 29. almennings-drykkja, u, f. a public banquet, Bs. i. 108. almennings-far, n. a public ferry, Gpl. 415. almennings-mörk, f. a public forest, Gpl. 454. almennings-stræti, n. a public street, Grett. 158 A. almennings-tollr, m. a public toll, tax, 126 C. 173 (?). almennings-vegr, m. a public way. al-mennr, adj. common, public, Grett. 115, where MSS. A and B have almætt. Now freq. ALMR, elm-tree, v. úlmr. almusa, u, f. = ölmusa, alms, [Scot. almous, Germ. almosen, (ἐλεημοσύνη)] al-múgi, a, and almúgr, s, m., at present the first form is always used [cp. múgi and múgr, Dan. almue, plebs], prop. the commons, people; konungrinn ok almúginn, king and commons, Stj.; eigi vissi almúginn (people in general) hvat fram fór í sóttinni, Bs. i. 74; almúgrinn (the people) geystist, Bret. 37, 94; alvinsæli við almúgann, having very many friends among the commonalty, Fms. i. 184. β. now in Icel. = plebs, the masses, opp. to the bigger classes; so in many compds, e. g. almúga-maðr, m., almúga-legr, adj., etc. al-mæli, n. what all people say, a common saying, general report; þat er a. at . . ., all people say, agree that . . ., Fms. xi. 326, Hkr. iii. 398; þat vörn almæli um dalinn, at . . ., Sd. 155, Ld. 332. β. a saying, proverb; þat er a. (common saying) at menn sjóði þau ráð, er þeir hafa lengi í hug sér, Hom. 83; þótt almælit sannaðist, at mödurbræðrum verði menn líkastir, though the saying proved sooth, that men are likeliest to their uncles by the mother's side, Ísl. ii. 29. al-mæltr, adj. part. spoken by all, what all say; esp. in the phrase, almælt tíðindi, news; spyrjast almæltra tíðinda, what news? Nj. 227, Ld. 80, Fms. xi. 118 (a standing phrase). β. of a child that has learnt to talk; en þá er sveinninn var tvævetur, þá rann hann einn saman ok var a. sem fjögura verna gömul börn, but when the boy was two years old, then he ran alone and could say everything as well as bairns of four years, Ld. 34, (altalandi is the word now used). al-mætti, n. omnipotence, Skálda 161; esp. theol., now more freq. than the masc. almáttir. al-naktr, adj. part. quite naked, Rd. 295; now alnakinn. aln-bogi, a, m. = ölbogi, elbow, Edda 110. al-nýr, adj. quite new, Fms. viii. 61, Grág. i. 491. al-ogaðr, adj. quite in earnest, = alhugaðr. ALPT, swan, v. álpt. ALR, s, m. pl. ir, awl, Edda 71. β. in the phrase, 'leika á als oddi,' skjálfa þótti hásit, sem á als oddi léki (MS. allsolla), the house quivered, as if it were balanced on the point of an awl, Fas. i. 89; the Icel. now use the phrase, að leika á als oddi, of the excitement produced by joy, to be merry, in high spirits, full of life and vigour, (cp. the Engl. to be on pins and needles.)

al-rauðr, adj. quite red, Rd. 298. al-ráðinn, adj. part. quite determined, Fms. viii. 145.
 al-ránn, adj. utterly plundered; þeir munu görvir fyrst alránír er næstir eru, Ísl. ii. 93 (dub.) al-reyndr, part. fully proved, Fms. xi. 441, Mirm. 74.
 alri, elder-tree, v. elri.
 al-roskinn, adj. quite grown up, Fms. i. 5, Ld. 256.
 al-rotinn, adj. all rotten, Stj. Exod. xvi. 20.
 al-ræmdr, adj. part. a. neut. rumoured of all, of bad news; a. ct. all people say, Nj. 76, Fms. vii. 113, Stj. β. in mod. Icel. both masc. and fem. in a bad sense, e. g. a. þjófr, a noted thief.
 al-sagðr, adj. part. spoken of by all, Fms. ii. 50.
 al-sátt, f. in the phrases, sátt aláttum, completely reconciled, atoned with a full atonement, Dipl. ii. 11; sættast aláttum, Grág. ii. 141.
 al-sátttr, adj. fully reconciled, Nj. 120, Boll. 362.
 al-sekr, adj. a law term, an utter felon, an outlaw of the greater degree, = skógarmaðr, opp. to fjörbaugsmáðr, Nj. 240, Hrafn. 18, Grág. i. 463.
 al-siða, adj. ind. [siðr, faith], cn er Kristin var a., but when the Christian faith was universally accepted, Hkr. ii. 97; en þó Kristin væri nú a. þá . . . , Grett. 150 (the old Ed. wrongly á landi).
 al-skipaðr, adj. part. fully manned: a. of a ship; skúta, tvítugscssa, langskip a., Nj. 280, Eg. 13, Fms. iv. 70, Hkr. i. 176. β. a law term, bekr, pallr a., full court, Grág. i. 7. γ. of a bench in a banquet-hall, quite full, Eg. 43.
 al-skjaldaðr, adj. part. lined, covered with shields: a. of ships lined with shields along the bulwarks from stem to stern, as a ship of war, Landn. 156, Sturl. iii. 61. β. of troops in full armour, Sturl. ii. 47.
 al-skrifaðr, adj. part. written all over, of vellum, Th. 76.
 al-skyldr, adj. quite binding, Sks. 636.
 al-slitinn, adj. part. quite ragged, worn out, Vm. 161.
 al-slíkr, adj. quite the same, Fms. iv. 157.
 al-smíðaðr, part. completely built, Fms. xi. 436.
 al-snotr, adj. all-wise, Hm. 54: very clever, þkv. 26, 28.
 al-spakr, adj. all-wise, cognom., Eg. 466.
 al-staðar, everywhere, v. alls-staðar, sub allr.
 al-stýfðr, part. a metre in masculine rhymes (stýfa), Edda (Ht.) 134. Masculine final rhymes are called stýft.
 al-stýfingr, m. an animal with close-cropped ears; he who marked sheep in this way was liable to the lesser outlawry, unless it were publicly announced in the lögrétta, Grág. i. 426.
 al-svartr, adj. quite black, Nj. 80.
 al-sveittr, adj. all-sweaty, Al. 22.
 al-sveitugr, adj. reeking with sweat, now kófsveittr, Gísl. 137.
 al-sýkn, adj. a law term, altogether free, released from all punishment, Grág. ii. 160.
 al-sýkna, u, f. complete immunity from punishment, pardon, Grág. i. 359. al-søtt, f. complete reconciliation, Nj. 101, Js. 40, B. K. 126.
 ALTARI, n. and rarely altara, n. or altari, a, m.; mod. heteroclitic altari, n. pl. ölturu; the forms -eri, -era [altare] also appear:—an altar, a Christian word, the altar in heathen temples being called 'stallr,' Nj. 279, K. Á. 28, 208, Stj. freq.; altaris, 625, 84; altari þin, 655 xxiii. 2; altari (nom. pl.), xiv B. 2, Pm. 47: masc., altara (acc.) fim alna langan . . . , but þat (neut.) skal með ciri búa, a little below, altarans (gen.), altarann (nom. sing.), altaris (gen. neut.), altarit (neut. nom.), Stj. 307, 308, indifferently neut. or masc., Symb. 24; alteri, 1812. 17; altera (dat. neut.), 655 iii. 2, 623, 54. COMPS: altaris-blæja, u, f. an altar-cloth, Am. 33, Vm. 37, B. K. 83; altara-blæja, D. I. i. 401. altaris-bók, f. an altar-book, Vm. 6, Dipl. v. 18. altaris-brík, f. an altar-piece, Vm. 12. altaris-búnaðr, m. altar-furniture, H. E. i. 489. altaris-dagr, m. anniversary of the foundation of an altar, H. E. i. 310. altaris-dúkr, m. an altar-cloth, Vm. 1, D. I. i. 244. altaris-förn, f. a victim offered on an altar, Mart. 122. altaris-gólf, n. the floor round an altar, N. G. L. i. 160. altaris-horn, n. the horn of an altar, Fms. xi. 444. altaris-hús, n. a chapel, Bs. ii. 80. altaris-klæði, n. an altar-cloth, Hkr. iii. 81, D. I. i. 266; altara-, Fms. iii. 28, Vm. 1. altaris-likneski, n. an image placed on an altar, Pm. 61. altaris-messa, u, f. mass at an altar, Bs. ii. 81. altaris-plata, u, f. a candlestick, Pm. 93. altaris-skrá, f. an altar-book, Pm. 109. altaris-staðr, m. the place where an altar stands, Fg. 768. altaris-steinr, m. an altar-slab, D. I. i. 266, 443, K. Á. 28, Vm. 31, Am. 55, Pm. 106. altaris-stíka, u, f. a candlestick for an altar, Vm. 3. altaris-þjónusta, u, f. altar-service, 655 xxxii. 1. al-tíliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. civilly, Bs. i. 812.
 altingis = alþingis, adv. [þing, res], quite, altogether, Pm. 24.
 al-tjaldaðr, adj. part. hung with tapestry all round, Fms. xi. 17, Sturl. iii. 193, Háv. 52.
 al-ugaðr, sincere, v. alhugaðr.
 al-úð, f. and in old writers almost constantly ólúð (with changed vowel), alýð, Clem. 43, [a contracted form from al-hugð, -hugr], affection, sincerity, freq. in mod. Icel. in this sense. But in old writers prop. use of hospitality, in such phrases as, taka við e-m með ó., to give a hearty reception, Ld. 196, Fær. 156, Fs. 15; veita með ó., to give hospitable treatment, Fms. v. 120. β. affection; hann gaf mér hringinn með mikilli ó. Fms. ii. 171; sakir gæzku þeirrar ok alúðar (affection) er Guð hafði við Abraham, for the sake of that kindness and love which God had toward Abraham, Ver. 78; Björn spyr tíðinda heldr tómliga af engri a., coolly, Bjart. 53. Mod. also alúðliga, adv. heartily; alúðligr, adj. kind, hearty COMPS: alúðar-maðr, m. devoted friend, Fms. v. 34. alúðar-vinr, m. sincere friend, Hkr. ii. 210, Ver. 15; ólúðarvinr, Fms. iv. 287.

 al-valdr, almighty; alvald, omnipotence; v. allv-al-vara, u, f. [appears neither in Engl. nor Germ.; Dan. alvor]. I seriousness, earnestness; Gunnarr segir sér þat alvöru, Nj. 49, Þorst. Stang. 50; áhyggjusamliga ok með mikilli a., with much earnestness, Fms. i. 141 taka e-t fyrir a., to take it in earnest, x. 77; víska ek eigi at þér var e við at taka, that you were in earnest, Band: 3. 2. affection = alú (not used at present in that sense); hvergirir lögðu fulla alvöru til annarr. Bs. i. 288; elsukig a. til e-s, hearty love, Fms. iii. 63; með alvöru ó blíðu, 144; er öll hans a. (inclination) til Ólafs konungs, v. 32. COMPS: alvöru-liga, adv. earnestly, Fms. ii. 211. alvöru-ligr, adj. earnestly devoted; a. vinátta, Fms. ii. 144. alvöru-samligr, adj. earnestly loving, devoted; a. þjónosta, Fms. i. 261.
 al-varliga, adv. (-ligr, adj.), seriously, earnestly, 655 xxxii. 21. intimately, devotedly; fagna e-m a., to receive heartily, Grett. 98 A. al-vaskligr, m. brisk, martial, Ld. 196, (Ed. allvaskligr.) al-vaxinn, adj. part. quite grown up, Ld. 132.
 al-vápnaðr, adj. part. in full armour, Eg. 422, 460, Fms. i. 81.
 al-vátr, adj. thoroughly wet, Fær. 184, Fbr. 23, K. Þ. K. 10.
 al-vell = allvell, adv. very well; albetr at sér, of much better appearance Ld. 332, Glúm. 353; so the vellum MS. A. M. 132 in both these passages al-vepni = alvepni, full armour.
 al-verki and alverkja, adj. ind. aching, feeling pains all over the body [cp. the Scot. wark and werk and the provincial Engl. wark in the sense of ache, racking pain], Fms. v. 223, Bs. i. 615.
 al-virkr and alyrkr, adj. [verk], a. dagr, a working day, opp. to a ho day, N. G. L. i. 429, 153; cp. virkr.
 al-vista, adj. ind. paralysed, FéL. ix. 186.
 al-vitr, adj. all-wise, now partic. used of God, Clem. 33; superl. alvít astr. of greatest wisdom, used of a man of science, Sturl. i. 167. MS. Br Mus. 1127.
 al-vænn, adj. fair.
 al-væpni, n. [vápn], complete arms; hafa a., to be in full armour, full armed, Nj. 93, 107, Eg. 46, 74, 88; með a., fully armed, Íb. ch. 7.
 al-værð, f., almost constantly ólværð (the change of vowel being caused by the following v), Bs. i. 593, l. 19, even spelt ólbærð, probably akin vi alvara; hospitality, hearty reception, good treatment; taka við e-m með ó. Fms. xi. 52, 27, Fas. iii. 79; var þar uppi öll ó. af Grims hendi, i. 17: bjóða honum með allri ó., kindness, hospitality, ii. 510; cp. also Bs. l. c., where full er ólbærð öllum means there is open house; the word now obsolete.
 al-værliga and ólværliga, adv. hospitably, Ísl. ii. 348.
 al-yrkr, adj., a. dagr, a working day, v. alvirkr.
 al-þakinn, adj. part. thatched all over, Fms. i. 89; older form -iðr.
 al-þiljaðr, adj. part., old form -þilðr, completely wainscotted, Sturl. i. 193; the vellum MS. has -þilðir, the Ed. -þiljaðir.
 al-þingi, n. [þing], mod. form alþing, by dropping the inflective the gen., however, still remains unchanged, alþingis. The parliament general assembly of the Icel. Commonwealth, invested with the super legislative and judicial power, consisting of the legislative lögrétta (q. v. and the courts, v. dómr, fimtardómr, fjórðungsdomar; v. also go goðorð, lögsögumaðr, lögsaga, lögbörg, and many other words referring the constitution and functions of the alþingi. It was founded by Ulfr about A. D. 930, Íb. ch. 3; and reformed by Thord Gellir A. D. 964, v. instituted the courts and carried out the political divisions of Icel. in goðorð, fjórðungar, and þing, ch. 5. In the years 1272 and 1281 t alþing, to some extent, changed its old forms, in order to comply with the new state of things. In the year 1800 it was abolished altogether. A kind of parliament, under the old name alþingi, was again established in the year 1843, and sat at Reykjavík. Before the year 930 a gene assembly was held in Kjalarnes, whence it was removed under the name of alþingi to the river Öxará, near to the mountain Ármannsfell. This much-debated passage in Hænsaþ. S. ch. 14—en þingit var þá nu Ármannsfelli—therefore simply means that the events referred to happened after the removal of the Kjalarnesþing. The parliament at first met on the Thursday beginning the tenth week of the summer, which fell between the 11th and the 17th of June; by a law of the year 9 its opening was deferred to the next following Thursday, between the 18th and 24th of June, old style; after the union with Norway, after A. D. 1272 or 1281, the time of meeting was further deferred. June 29; July 2 (Vis. B. V. M.) is hence called þing-Mariumessa. The parliament lasted for a fortnight; the last day of the session, cal vápnatak, because the weapons having been laid aside during the session were again taken (cp. Engl. waepentake), thus fell on the first or second Wednesday in July. As to the rules of the alþingi, vide esp. the first chapter of the p. þ. Grág. (Kb.) i. p. 38 sqq. The most eventful years in the history of the alþingi are, A. D. 930 (foundation), 964 (reform), 1000 (introduction of Christianity), 1004 (institution of the Fifth Court), 1024 (repudiation of the attempt of the king of Norway to annex Iceland), 1096 (introduction of tithes), 1117 (first codification of laws), 1262-1264 (submission to the king of Norway), 1272 and 1281 (new codes introduced). In the year 1238 there was no alþingi held because of civil disturbances, eytt alþingi ok þóttu þat údæmi, Ann. s. a., Grág. (p. þ.) Ísland. bók, Kristni S., Njálá, Sturl., Árna b. S., O. H. (1853), ch. 114; of modern writers, vide esp. Maurer, Entsteh. des Isl. Staates; Dasent, Introd. to Burnt Njal; some of the Introductions by Jón Sigurðsson in D. I., esp. that to the Gamli Bättmáli of the year 1262. COMPS: alþingis-dóm, m. the court of justice in the a., Grág. i. 87, 130. alþingis-för, f. a journey to the a., Js. 6. alþingis-helgum, f. ballowing, inauguration of the a., cp. allsherjar goði, Landn. 36. alþingis-lof, n. permission, leave given by parliament; cf. . . sættist úg víg fyrir a. fram, against the rules of the a. = unlawfully, Grág. ii. 173. alþingis-mál, n. parliamentary rules, proceedings of parliament; ef þeir taka eigi af alþingismáli, do not infringe the parliamentary rules, Grág. i. 103; in the legal phrase, at alþingismáli réttu ok allsherjar lögum, where the first rather denotes the form, the last the substance of the law. alþingis-nefna, u, f. nomination to the legislative body and the courts, including dómnefna and ögréttuskipan, Grág. i. 5; cp. Íb. ch. 5. alþingis-reið, f. a journey o the a., Nj. 100, Grág. ii. 78. alþingis-sátt, f. an agreement entered into at the a. alþingissáttar-hald, n. the keeping of such an agreement, Grág. i. 217, Sturl. i. 66. alþingis-sekt, f. a conviction in the courts. alþingissektar-hald, n., Sturl. i. 66 (seems to be a false reading); v. the preceding word.

al-þingis = öllingis or öldungis, quite, altogether, D. N. (not Icel.) al-þjóð, f. rare and obsolete = alþýða, the commons, Adv. verse 17, onatorr. 9, 15; a. manna, Sturl. iii. 229, 125, Fms. vii. 240. al-þykk, adj. quite thick, foggy, Stj. i Kings xviii. 45. al-þýða, u, f. the public, people; svá at a. vissi, Sd. 167; sagði þá allri þýðu, told all people, Eg. 271. Þ. people assembled in a body; er þat ænarstáðr minn til allrar alþýðu, all the assembled commons, Nj. 189, ms. i. 33. γ. í alþýðu lífi, in common life, öfvs. xxi. 3. With gen., a. manna = öll a., everybody, the overwhelming majority, bulk of people assembled, Eg. 193, where it is used of the household; a. manna var á brott urin, nearly all people bad left, 220; a. manna gerðu (pl.) göðan róm at máli hans, the whole meeting cheered his speech, Fms. vii. 242. It is now almost solely used of the common people, all fólk, bæði ríka menn vealdyri ok alþýðu, Fms. v. 113; cp. alþýðis-fólk. COMPS: alþýðu-rykkja, u, f. a common banquet, Sturl. ii. 245. alþýðu-leið, f. a high road, Eg. 579, Bjarn. 49. alþýðu-lof, n. popularity, general raise, Hkr. iii. 31. alþýðu-maðr, m. a working man, Vd. 172 old Ed., wrongly instead of alþýða manna, Fs. 67. alþýðu-mál, u. common, general report, þat er a. at, Hkr. iii. 34. alþýðu-skap, n., in the phrase, vera ekki við a., to be unpopolar, úvinsall ok lítt við a., Fs. 63. alþýðu-tal, n. reckoning, common calculation, Íb. ch. 7, Rb. 18. alþýðu-vápn, n. common weapons, Fas. iii. 620. alþýðu-vegr, m. public road, Sturl. i. 36, Hkr. iii. 54. alþýðu-virðing, f. public opinion, consensus popularis, Bs. i. 158. alþýðu-vitni, n. universal testimony, Sks. 12. alþýðu-þyss, m. a general tumult, Bs. i. 46, Hom. 46. al-þýðask, dd, dep. in the phrase, a. til e-s, to incline towards, attach oneself to, Fms. vi. 135.

al-þýði, n. = alþýða, and alþýðis-fólk, id., Bs. i. 805. al-þýðligr, adj. common, general; a. maðr = menskr maðr, a common man, Fas. ii. 251; í alþýðligri ræðu, common parlance, Skálda 185; hitt eri alþýðlegra (more plain), at segja, 208; a. fyrir sakir síðferðis, of plain manners, Finn. 298. al-þægr, adj. [þiggja], quite acceptable, pleasant to, Hom. 75. al-þæstr, adj. part. excited, stirred up, Sks. 230. AMA, að, to vex, annoy, molest; with dat. of the person, eigi skuluð þér Ruth, Stj. 423, Fms. i. 244. β. dep. (more freq.), amast við e-n, to annoy, molest, in order to get rid of one, Landn. 66, Nj. 130, 199, v. 1.; núðust líðsmenn lítt við hana, Fms. v. 305, vii. 166, Fs. 32; at hann undi eigi a. við (object to) bygd hans, Sd. 139; absol. to dislike, Nj. 57. ami, a, m. vexation, annoyance, is now used in the phrase, að vera m til ama, to become a cause of vexation to: ama-samr, adj. and ama-emi, f. bad humour; cp. also ómunrligr, distressing; amatligr, loathsome. amallera, að, to enamel (Fr. word émailler), Fms. xi. 427, Vm. 152, 65.

amathysti, a, m. amethyst (for. word), Str. amatligr or amatlígtr, adj. loathsome, hideous (freq. at the present y), Hkv. i. 38. amban, f., ambana, að, and ambun, ambuna, recompense (Norse); ömbun, ömbuna. AMBÁTT, pl. ir, f. [cp. Ulf. audl ahts = διάκονος, ὑπηρετής; A. S.

ambight; Hel. ambaht, servitium; O. H. G. amþabt; hence the mod. Germ. amt, Dan. embede, Icel. embætti; the mod. Rom. ambassador, ambassade are of the same stock; Ital. ambasciadore, nuntius; cp. Caes. Bell. Gall. 6. 15—circum se ambactos clientesque babent, v. Diez on this root. The Icel. am- is an assimilated form from and-, a bondswoman, baudmaid; þrell eðr a., Grág. ii. 152, 156 (where the older form ambótt), N. G. L. i. 76; konungs a., freq. of a royal concubine, Fms. i. 14, Fagtsk. ch. 21; cp. embætta and embætti. Cp. also mod. ambaga, u, f. an awkward person; amböguligr, adj. and ambögu-skapr, m. clumsy manners, perh. all of them related to ambótt. COMPS: ambáttar-barn, n. child of an a., Fms. i. 72. ambáttar-dóttir, f. daughter of an a., Eg. 345. ambáttarligr, adj. vile, like an a., Fas. i. 244. ambáttar-mót, u, expression of an a., Fas. i. 147. ambáttar-sonr, m. son of an a., Grág. i. 363, Ld. 70, 98. ambátta-fang, u, a term of contempt, a woman's tussle, as it were between two bondswomen, Sd. 162 (of wrestling).

amb-höfði, a, m. a nickname of uncertain signification. Egilsson supposes that of bi-ceps: most probably amb- denotes some animal; cp. Hjart-höfði, Hart-bead, and Orkn-höfði, Seal-bead, Sturl. i. 35 (in a verse). AMBOÐ, n. utensils, v. andboð.

AMLÓÐI, a, m. 1. the true name of the mythical prince of Denmark, Amlethus of Saxo, Hamlet of Shakespeare. 2. now used metaph. of an imbecile, weak person, one of weak bodily frame, wanting in strength or briskness, unable to do his work, not up to the mark. It is used in phrases such as, þú crt mesti Amlóði, what a great A. you are, i. e. poor, weak fellow. In a poem of the 10th century (Edda 67), the seashore is called the flour-bin of Amlode (meldr-líð Amlóða, navis farinae Amlodii), the sand being the flour, the sea the mill: which recalls the words of Hamlet in Saxo,—sabulum perinde ac farra aspicere jussus eadem albicantibus maris procellis permolita esse respondit. From this poem it may be inferred that in the 10th century the tale of Hamlet was told in Icel., and in a shape much like that given it by Saxo about 250 years later. Did not Saxo (as he mentions in his preface) write his story from the oral tradition of Icelanders? In Iceland this tale was lost, together with the Skjöldunga Saga. The Icel. Ambaas Saga MS. in the Brit. Mus. is a modern composition of the 17th century. COMPS now in freq. use: amlóðaligr, adj. imbecile; amlóða-skapr, m., or amlóða-hátt, imbecility; also amlóðast, dep. Torfaeus, in his Series Reg. Dan. p. 302, quotes an old Swedish rhyme running thus: 'Tha slog konungen handom samman | och log fast och gorde aff gamman | rett some han vore en Amblode | then sig intet godt forstode,' where it means a fool, simpleton, denoting a mental imbecility. [Perhaps the A. S. homola is cognate; thus in the Laws of King Alfred, 'Gif he hine on hismor to homolan bescire,' if he in mockery sbave his (a churl's) head like a fool, which Lambard renders moriouis in morem: see Thorpe's Anc. Laws ii. Gloss. sub voce, and cp. the quotation from Weber's Metrical Romances ii. 340.]

AMMA, u, f. [cp. afi], grandmother; now in freq. use, but rarely in the Sagas, which use föður-móðir and móður-móðir, Hým. 7, Rem. 16, Edda 109, Nj. 119, Ld. 328. In compds, ömmu-bróðir, ömmu-systir, etc.; lang-amma, u, f. is a great-grandmother. [In Germ. amma means a nurse.] ampli, a, m. and hömpull, s, m. [ainpulla], a jug, Vm. 6, 47, Dipl. iii. 4, B. K. 31. COMPS: ömpuls-brot, n. a potsberd, Pm. 93. amra, að, to bowl piteously, Fs. 45 (of cats); cp. ómunrligr, piteous, and ómunrligr, adj. id.

amstr, n. [cp. Germ. amsteig = palearium], a rick, Orkn. 448, an án. ley: amstr now means toil: cp. amstrast, að, to toil.

AN, conj. thau, Lat. quam, is the old form, and constantly used in MSS. of the 12th century, instead of 'en' or 'enn,' q. v.

ANA, að, to rush on, now freq.

AND-, a prefixed prep. [Ulf. uses a separate prep. and; A. S. and; Germ. ant-, ent-, empf-; it exists in Engl. in an-swer; Lat. ante-; Gr. avri-], denoting whatever is opposite, against, towards, and metaph. hostile, adverse; freq. spelt and pronounced an- or am-; it is used in a great many compds, v. below. If followed by v, the a changes into ö, e. g. öndverðr, adversus; in andvirði, prize, however, the a is unchanged.

ANDA, að, [Ulf. has us-anan = εἰσπνεῖν; cp. Gr. ἀνεμος, wind, and Lat. animus, anima, spirit, breath: the Germans say geist, spirit, and athenen, spirare: Ulf. translates πνεύμα by abna, vois by aba; Hel. spiritus by gæst and atbom, whence Germ. atmen: cp. Swed. ånd, ånde, spiritus, spirare.] I. act. to breathe, and of the wind, to waft; meðan þeir megu anda ok upp standa, Bs. i. 224, Karl. 95; þóðr andar nú handan, Sturl. i. 21 (in a verse). II. dep. andast, to breathe one's last, expire; Möðr Gígja tók sótt ok andaðist, Fiddle Mord 'took sick' and breathed his last, Nj. 29; en ef svá ferr at ek öndumk, but if it fares so that I die, Eg. 127; þar hefir andast faðir minn, Fas. iii. 619. Part. andadr, dead; hön var þá önduð, had breathed her last, Ld. 16; jarlinn var þá a., Fms. i. 149.

anda- and andar-, the compds belonging to önd, anima, and önd, a duck, v. sub voce önd.

and-blásinn, adj. part. [önd], inflated, Skálda 169.

and-dyri and anddyri, n. [Lat. atrium; from önd, atrium, q. v.], a porch; hón dró hann fram yfir dyrnar ok svá í anddyrit, Gret. 140, Nj. 140, Fms. ii. 148, Bs. i. 804.

and-fang, n. esp. pl. [Germ. empfang], reception, hospitality, Vpm. 8. and-fælur, f. pl. [önd], 'the horrors,' in the phrase, vakna með andfælum, of one suddenly awakening from a bad dream, or from being frightened when asleep, Fas. iii. 256, Fél. ix. 188.

and-fættingr, s, m. [and-], transl. of Antipodes in Pliny, Stj. 94. Now used in the mod. sense of Antipodes; also in the phrase, sofa andfætis, or andfætting, of two sleeping in a bed 'heads and heels.'

and-hlaup, n. suffocation, Eg. 553.
and-hvalr, s, m. balaena rostrata, now called andarnefja, u, f., Edda (Gl.), Sks. 123 A.

and-hæli, n. monstrosity, absurdity; medic. the heels being in the place of the toes, Fél. ix. 188. andhælisigr, adj. absurd.

andi, a, m. 1. prop. breath, breathing; af anda fiskins, Edda 19; cp. hvær andalaus lífir, who lives without breathing, in the Riddles of Gestumblindi, Fas. i. 482; af anda hans, Greg. 20, Sks. 41 B; andi er Ingimundar, ekki göðr á bekkinn, of foul breath, Sturl. i. 21 (in a verse). 2. a current of air; andi handar þinnar, air caused by the waving of the hand, 623, 33: now freq. of a soft breeze. 3. (gramm.) aspiration; línr, snarpr a., Skálda 175, 179.

II. metaph. and of Christian origin, spirit. In the Icel. translation of the N. T. andi answers to πνεῦμα, sál to ψυχή (cp. Luke i. 46, 47); Guð skapaði líkamann ok andann, Mar. 656; taki þér við líkamannu en Drottinn við andanum, id.; gjalda Guði sinn anda, Mar. 39 (Fr.); hjarta, andi ok vizka, id. In some of these cases it may answer to ψυχή, but the mod. use is more strict: as a rule there is a distinction between 'önd,' f. anima, and 'andi,' m. animus, yet in some cases both are used indifferently, thus Luke xxiii. 46 is translated by 'andi,' yet 'önd' is more freq., Pass. 44. 21, 45. 1. 2. spirit, spiritual being (önd is never used in this sense); John iv. 24, Guð er andi, and, tilbiðja í anda, Ev. þveipari. 3. the Holy Ghost, Nj. 144, Rb. 80. 4. angels; þessháttar eldr brennir andana, Stj. 41. 5. in a profane sense; álfir eða a., Fas. i. 313. 6. spiritual gift; í krapti ok í anda Helix, Hom. 104, Luke i. 17, Sks. 565.

COMPDS: anda-gipt, f. inspiration, gift of the Holy Ghost, Fms. iv. 48. anda-kast, n. breathing, Fas. iii. 348. andaliga, adv. spiritually, = andliga, Fms. v. 230. and-ligr, adj. spiritual, = andligr, Stj. 8, Dipl. ii. 11.

and-kostr = amukostr, purpoe.
and-langr, m. (poët.) name of one of the heavens, Edda (Gl.) and-lauss, adj. [önd], breathless, lifeless, exanimis; a. hlutir, Eluc. 9. and-lát, n. [önd, anima; lát, dammum], 'loss of breath,' death; þá er þú fregn a mitt, 623, 43; a. Magnús konungs, Gizurar biskups, etc., Bs. i. 65, 70, Eg. 119, 367.

β. the last gasp, the very moment of death; þá var konungur nær andlát, Hkr. i. 160; var hann þá beint í andlát, Fms. vi. 230; ok er hann fann at nær dró at andlát hans, his last moments drew near, viii. 446; andlát has the notion of a quiet, easy death; lífát, a violent death; but both are only used in a dignified sense.

COMPDS: andláts-dagr, m. day of death, Bs. i. 466. andláts-dægr, n. id., 686 B. andláts-sorg, f. grief for a death, Stj. 196. andláts-tíð, f. and -tími, a, m. time of death, Greg. 78, Stj. 9.

andliga, adv. spiritually, Sks. 614, 649, Stj. 27, 34, Hom. 57.

andligr, adj. [Hel. translates spiritualis by gëstlic, Germ. geistlich, Ulf. πνευματικός by abmeins], spiritual; in the N. T. πνευματικός is translated by andligr, I Cor. xv. 44; a. fagnaðr, 656 C; a. herklæði, 656 A. ii. 18; a. skilning, Greg. 23; a. líf, Skálda 199; biskup hefir andligr vald til andliga hluta, a bishop has spiritual power in spiritual things (opp. to veraldligr, κοσμικός). Gpl. 73; andligr skíru, Hom. 52.

and-lit, n. and annlit, [and-, adversus, and lita; Ulf. andavleizn = ἀπόστροφον; A. S. andlíte; Germ. antlitz], a face, countenance; á andliti þeirra, 623. 61; sá ek annlit þitt, id., Nj. 16; þangat horfi annlit er huakki skyldi, N. G. L. i. 12; Hom. 7, renders in faciem by í andliti. Metaph. anglit is used as more dignified; í anglitu Guðs (not andliti), ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, in the eyes or sight of God. COMPDS: andlits-björg, f. visor, Sks. 406. andlits-farinn, adj. in the phrase, vel a., of fair, well-formed features, better in two words (andliti farinn), Sturl. iii. 178 C. andlits-mein, n. cancer in the face, Sturl. ii. 185.

andlits-sköp, n. pl. lineaments of the face, N. G. L. i. 339; vel andlits sköpum, of well-formed features, Fms. viii. 238.

and-marki, ann-, and an-, a, m. [and-, mark], a fault, flaw, blemish; ókostir eðr andmarkar, Grág. i. 313; ef annmarkar þeir verða á búfénu, 429; þú lýndir annmarka á honum, Nj. 5. β. metaph. in moral sense, trespasses; íðran annmarka, 625, 90; used as a nickname, Gisl. 32.

COMPDS: annmarka-fullr, adj. full of faults, Fms. vi. 110. annmarka-lauss, adj. faultless, Grág. i. 287.

and-máligr, adj. contentious, quarrelsome, Fms. ii. 154, Magn. 448.
and-mæli, n. contradiction, 4. 25.
and-nes, n. and annes, [and-, nes], a promontory or point of land, Hkr. i. 313, Fms. viii. 147, Fer. 83.

and-orða, adj. ind. [cp. Ulf. andavard; Germ. antwort], the Icel. use svar or andsvar (Engl. answer) in this sense; andorða only appears in the phrase, að verða a., to come to words with, Rd. 300, Korm. 110 (rare).

and-ófr, n. prob. = and-þóf, prop. a paddling with the oars, so as to bring the boat to lie against wind and stream. Metaph., við nokkuru andófr, after a somewhat hard struggle, Fbr. 84. 2. a division in a ship, fremsta rúm í skipi kallast a., Fél. ix. 3.

and-ramr, adj. (andremma, u, f.) having foul breath, Sturl. i. 20.

ANDRAB, m. pl. [Ivar Aasen aander], snow shoes, in sing. prob. öndurr, cp. the compds öndor-dís and öndor-goð, used of the goddess Skaði, in the Edda; found only in Norway, where the word is still in use; in Icel. only remaining in the proverb snægla snuggir kváðu Finnar, áttu andra fala, Fms. vii. 20, of a silly act, to sell one's snow shoes just when it begins to snow. Prob. a Finnish word; v. skíð.

and-rá, f. [contr. = andrag (?), mod. word], breath, in the phrase, í sömu a., at the very same breath, instantly.

and-röð, a, and andróðr, rs, m. the later form more freq. [and-, róð], pulling against stream and wind; Einnarr átti gildan andróða, E. had a hard pull, Fms. vi. 379, v. l. andróðr; róða andróða, vii. 310, (andróðr, Hkr. iii. 440); þeir tóku mikinn andróða, they had a hard pull, Fms. viii. 438, v. l. andróðr; ok er þá sem þeir hafi andróða, Greg. 31; taka andróða (acc. pl.), Fms. viii. 131, Hkr. iii. 440: cp. the proverb bíðendr eigu byr en bráðir andróða, those who bide have a fair wind, those who are hasty a foul, festina lente, 'more haste worse speed'; the last part is omitted in old writers when quoting this proverb.

and-saka, að, (annsaka, Bret. 162), [A. S. ansæc], to accuse, with acc., Al. 23; hann andsakaði (reprimanded) sveinana hardliga, Sturl. iii. 123.

and-skoti and annskoti, a, m. [and-, adversus; skjóta, skoti], prop. an opponent, adversary, one who 'shoots from the opposite ranks'; a lýðs várs ok laga várra, 655 xvi. B; þeir höfðu heyrt at andskotar þeirra vildi verja þeim vígi þingvöllinn, they had heard that their adversaries would keep them by a fight from the parliament field, Íb. ch. 7; eigi mun ek vera í andskota flokki móti honum, Fms. v. 269. 2. metaph. a fiend, devil, transl. of Satan, now only used in that sense and in swearing; nú hefir a fundit ferri á at freista yðvar, Post. 656; far í brott a., úræy Σατανά, 146; a. ok þeir englar er eptir honum hurfu, Ver. 1; dökvir þik, anskoti (voc.), 623, 31, Hom. 108, 109, K. Á. 20. comp. 2: andskota-flokkur, m. a band of enemies, Fms. v. 269, Grág. ii. 19.

and-spilli and andspjall, n. colloquy, discourse, Skm. 11, 12.

and-spænis, adv., a. móti e-m, just opposite, the metaph. being taken from a target (spánn), Snót 127.

and-stefna, d, to stem against, Fas. iii. 50 (rare).

and-streymi, n. prop. against the tide or current; metaph. adversity, Fr. and-streymir, adj. running against stream; metaph. difficult, cross; Sig-hvatar var heldr a. um eptirmálin, bard to come to terms with, Sturl. ii. 42; andstreym örlög, ill-fate, Al. 69; kvað Svein jafnan andstreyman verit hafa þeim frændum, had always set his face against, Orkn. 390.

and-stygd, f. disgust; vera a. af e-u (now, at e-u), dislike, Róm. 265.

and-styggiligr, adj. odious, abominable, Hkr. iii. 273.

and-styggr, adj. id., Hom. 102, 623, 31, Sks. 539.

and-svar and annsvar, n. [A. S. andsvaru; Hel. uses andvordi and andvordian = respondere; Ulf. andavaurd], an 'answer,' response, but in old writers esp. a decision; vera skjótr í andsvörum, prompt in deciding, Fms. i. 277; sagðist til hans hafa vikit um answerit, put the case under his decision, vi. 354; munu vit tala feira áðr ek veita því andsvör, before I decide, Ld. 80; in N. G. L. i. 86 it seems to mean protest, intervention; used of the echo in Al. 35. comp. 2: andsvara-maðr, m. a law term, a respondent, defender, Jb. 30.

and-svara and annsvara, að, to answer; þá annsvarar konunginn, Fms. xi. 56, rare, and in a more formal sense than the simple verb svara. β. answer, to be responsible for; sem ek vil a. fyrir Guði, as I will answer before God, Gpl. 66; v. anza or ansa.

and-syptir, m. [önd, anima, or and-?], sobbing, sighing, hysterical fit, Hom. 121; [Engl. sob; Germ. seufzen].

and-sellis, in common talk andhælis, adv. [sól], against the course of the sun (cp. the Scot. 'widdershins,' that is, going against the sunshine or the sun's light), a direction universally considered both in England and Scotland to be most unlucky; see the quot. in Jamieson sub voce), Jsl. ii. 154, Rb. 134; esp. used of witches and 'uncanny' appearances; þat gekk öflugt um húsit ok a., it went backwards about the house and against the sun's course, Ede. 268, Gisl. 33, cp. Fs. (Vd.) 43, 59; hon gekk öng a. um tréit, ok hafði þar yfir mörg róm unumæli, Gret. 151. β. anselis or andhælis is used of everything that goes backwards, wrong, or perversely; cp. andærr and anderis.

and-vaka, u, f. sleeplessness, ἀγπνυία, caused by care or grief, Fms. i. 82; mostly used in pl. β. medic. agrypnia, Fél. ix. 189, Bs. i. 251. γ. wakefulness, Hom. 108. In the Máfhlið, visur, Ede. ch. 19, andvaka unda = a sword, the 'awakener' of wounds; (cp. vekja blóð).

and-vaki, adj. ind. sleepless, now andvaka; liggja a., to lie awake, Al. 71, Barl. 10, Mag. 80.

and-vana and andvani, adj. ind., and now andvanr, adj. I. [and- and vanr, solitus], destitute, wanting; with gen., a. átu, lífs a., auðs alls gamans a., Hkv. 2. 31, Völs, kviður, Lex. Poët.; alls a. nema s ok vesaldar, Fms. iii. 95; a. heilsu, Magn. 512; alls a., of the beggar zarus, Greg. 24; a. þeirrar þjónustu, in want of, Post. 656 B; margs a., et. 174; a. eigna vátta, having lost our lands, 208.

II. [önd, ima], now = exanimis; andvana lík, a lifeless corpse, Pass. 4. 23. nd-varða, ad, to band over [cp. Dan. overantvoorde], rare, Fr. nd-varí, a, m. I. a fish of prey, gurnard, Lat. milvus, Edda l.; the name of the gurnard-shaped dwarf, Edda 72; the owner of a al ring, hence called andvara-nautr: cp. Skv. 1. 2, Andvari ek heiti margan hef ek fors um farit. II. in mod. usage, a soft breeze, d metaph. watchfulness, vigilance, in such phrases as, hafa andvara á sér, ss. 15. 6: andvara-lauss, adj. heedless; andvara-leysi, f, mostly in heal. sense, etc. COMPD: andvara-gestr, m. an unwelcome guest, the phrase, vera e-m a., Fbr. 7, 24 new Ed. (now freq.)

nd-varp, n. the act of heaving a sob, sigh, 655 xx. 4, Sks. 39, 688. eq. in theol. writers, Pass. 40. 7. nd-varpa, ad, to sob, sigh, breathe deeply, Fms. x. 338, Hom. 155, s. 225 (freq.)

nd-varpan, f. sobbing, Hom. 124, Stj. 149.

nd-vegi, throne, v. öndvegi.

nd-verðr, adverse, v. öndverðr.

nd-viðri, n. [væðr], bead wind, Fbr. 67, Eg. 87, Fms. i. 203.

nd-virði, n. [verð], worth, equivalent, value, price; þá skal þat kaup þga aprt en hinn hafi a. sitt, Gpl. 491; haf þú nú allt saman, þakktjuna a., Lv. 50; allt a. hvalsis, the whole value of, Greg. ii. 375; hann r þar á móti ofdrykkjuna ok hennar a., reward, Fms. viii. 251.

nd-virkir and annvirkir, n. [önn, labour (?); cp. old Germ. ant-ke = machina]. I. in Icel. writers esp. used of hay and hay-eks; ef eldr kemr í hús manns eðr a., K. þ. K. 78, 82; færa, reiða a., carry into the barn, Grág. ii. 122, Lv. 211; nema fé gangi í akr, engi, ur eðr a., Grág. ii. 299; nauafjöldi var kominn í tún ok vildi brjóta ... throw down the cocks, Glúm. 342, Boll. 336; sendi Úlfarr menn upp álsinn at sjá um a. sitt þat er þar stóð; cp. little below, stórsæti, large beds, Eb. 152. II. in Norway more generally used of crop, tillage, agricultural implements; garð þann sem um a. (barley ricks?) stendr, l. 381; ef menn brenna a. manna, N.G.L. i. 244; a. (produce) manna (teki sem er, 251, Jb. 312; þá skal hann þar etja öllu sínu a. á, 357; arkóst, timbr, grindr, sleða eðr önnur a., implements (some MSS. read boð), 258, v. l. Metaph., legit hafa mér a. nær garði, en at berjast í þik fyrir sakleysi, business more urgent than to ... , Grett. 110 A. nd-vitni, n. a law term. I. Icel. contradictory testimony, such was contrary to law. Thus defined: þat er a. er menn bera gegn því si áðr er borit, vætti í gegn kvið, eðr kvið í gegn vætti, svá at eigi í hvártveggja rétt vera, Grág. i. 59, 60; it was liable to the lesser outcry, skoluð menn a. bera ok hér á þingi, en ef menn bera, ok varðar útlegr, enda á þat einkis at meta, id.; en ef menn bera þat a. varðar fjórbaugsgarð, ii. 272; bera þeir a. guðnum, false witness against the is, 655 xiii. B. 1. II. Norse, where it appears to mean contradictory testimony, such was usually admissible; ok koma eigi a. móti, G.L. ii. 89, v. l.; svá er ef einn ber vitni með manni sem engi beri, en þir sem tíu, ef maðr uggir eigi a. móti, if one bears witness for a man it is though no man bore witness for him, but two are as good as ten, if a man b not fear that contradictory evidence will be brought against him, 150.

nd-vigr, adj. in the phrase, vera e-m a., a match for ... , as good a wordsman as ... ; hann var eigi meiri enn a. einum þeirra bræðra, Fms. i. 65; sagði Gellir sik fleirum mönnum a. en einum, Bs. i. 649.

nd-yrði, n. pl. [v. andorða], objection, Sks. 76.

nd-æfa, ð, [v. andóf; Ivar Aasen andvöa and andov], a boating term, saddle against tide, current, and wind, so as to prevent the boat from cutting astern; þá féll á stormr svá mikill, at þeir fengu eigi betr en læft, bad nothing better than to lay to, Sturl. ii. 121; the vellum of S. wrongly andhætt.

2. metaph. in the corrupt form andæpti, reply feebly against; with dat., ekki er þess getið at þóðrðr andæpti sari visu, Tb. returned no reply to this libel, Sturl. i. 22. Now absol. to speak in a disjointed way, to ejaculate; andæpti skáld upp úr móðu, n. er u feigs götur; skilja sköp, skamt er að landi, brosir þakki mótt, rhymed incoherent words of a poet in the act of sinking beneath waves, vide Espól. Isl. Árb. the year 1823, Sigurðr Breiðfjörð in a poem in the Smámunir.

nd-ærís, adv. [ár, remus], crossly, perversely, a figure taken from pulling, Lex. Poët.; freq. in the corrupt form andhælis.

nd-æriligr, adj. cross, odd, Lex. Poët.; now andhælislegr.

ng, n. sweet savour, fragrance; með unað ok ang, Bs. ii. 10.

NGA, ad, [Norse aanga; Swed. änga], to give out a sweet scent, cur; ilmr angur mjök sætliga, Mar. Fr.; now freq.

ngan, f. sweet odour; angan Friggjar, the love of Frigga, Vsp. 54; the MSS. read angantýr, the sweetheart, husband of Frigga.

ngi, a, m. [Norse angie]. I. sweet odour; þvilikan ilm ok á sem cedrus, Stj. 73, etc.

II. [cp. A.S. angra = aculeus, spinulus], a spine or prickle, in the phrase, þetta mál hefir anga, has a sting, is not good to touch, Bs. ii. 52. Now often used in pl. and used of a sprout, fibre in fruits or plants; metaph. a spoiled boy is called angi, 'a pickle:' as to the root, cp. öngull, bamus, and the English angle: angilja, u, f, is, according to Björn, one of the bones of a fish.

angist, f. [Lat. angustia; Fr. angoisse; Engl. anguish; Germ. angst], anguish, esp. in theol. writers, Stj. 31, 51, 55, 106, 114. COMPS: angistar-ár, n. a year of misery, Stj. angistar-neýð, f. distress, Stj. angistar-tími, a, m. an hour of pain, Stj. angistar, ad (?), dep. to be vexed, Stj. 121.

ANGR, m. (now always n., Pass. 1. 4, and so Bs. i. 195); gen. rs. [cp. Engl. anger, Lat. ancor.] I. grief, sorrow; þann angur, Ber. 12; upp á miuu a. ok skaða, Stj. 215; minn harm ok a., Ber. 14; með margskonar angri, Fms. x. 401; sorg eðr a., Háv. 51; ekki angr(s), Hkv. Hjörv. 10. II.

in Norse local names freq. = bay, firth, e. g. Staf-angr, Harð-angr, etc. etc. (never in Icel.): kaupangr in Norway means a town, village, sinus mercatorius, [cp. the English 'Chipping' in Chipping Norton, Chipping Ongar, etc., and in London, 'Cheapside,'] these places being situated at the bottom of the firths: fjörðr hardly ever occurs in local names in Norway, but always angr; cp. the pun on angr, moeror, and angr, sinus, Fas. ii. 91. The word is obsolete in the historical age and scarcely appears as a pure appellative, Edda (Gl.), Fms. xii, Munch's Map and Geogr. of Norway. [Root probably Lat. ang- in ango, angustus, angiportus.]

angra, ad, to anger, grieve, vex, with acc., Fms. xi. 393; mik hefir angrað hungri ok frost, Fms. ii. 59; with dat., hvárt sem mér a. reyrk eða bruni, Nj. 201, Stj. 21; impers. to be grieved, a. honum mjök, Fas. ii. 296: more freq. with acc., Finnb. 234, Bs. i. 289; mik angrar mart hvað, Hallgrím.

β. reflex., angrask, to be angered: a. af e-u, to take offence at, Bs. i. 280; við e-t, Fas. iii. 364. γ. part. angraðr, used as adj. sorrowful, angry; reiðr ok a., EL 14; pronounced angráðr, concerned; in the phrase, göra sér angrátt, um, to feel a pang, Gisl. 85.

angran, f. sorrow, Fas. iii. 364.

angr-fullr, adj. full of care, Str. 55.

angr-gapi, a, m. a rude, silly fool, [the French gobemouche], Bs. i. 806, Mag. 64 (Ed.); sem a. at svara fólsku tignum mönnum, Sturl. iii. 138.

angr-lauss, adj. free from care, Lat. securus, Hkv. 2. 45.

angr-ligr, adj. sad, Bs. ii. 163.

angr-ljóð, n. pl. funeral songs, dirges, nemiae, Hkv. 2. 44.

angr-lyndr, n. [lund], concern, low spirits, Gisl. 85.

angr-mæðask, dd, dep. to be in low spirits, Fr.

angr-samligr, adj. and angr-samliga, adv. sorrowful, sorrowfully, Stj. 655 xxxii.

angr-samt, adj. full of grief, depressed, downcast, Stj., Barl., Vápn. 17; neut., e-m er a., to be in low spirits, Fms. viii. 29. β. troublesome, Stj. (of gnats).

angr-semð and angrsemi, f. grief, Mar., Ver. 2.

angr-væri, f. dejection, Hkr. iii. 253; now also angr-værr, adj. dejected.

angr-æði, f. moody temper, sullenness, Fr.

an-könn, f. [and-kenna], a flaw, fault, = anmarki, only as gen. pl. in the comps ankanna-fullr, adj. full of faults, Sks. 76 new Ed., v. l.

ankanna-laust, n. adj. a law term, uncontested, used of an inheritance or possession where there is no legal claimant; skal hann eignast a. allt Noregs konungs veldi, he shall hold as his own all the power of Norway's king without a rival, Fagrsk. 97; Magnús konungur hafði þá ríki einn-saman ok a., i. e. there were no pretenders, Fms. x. 413.

ann- in several comps, v. and-.

ANNA, ad, [önn, labor; Ivar Aasen anna: the root is not found in Goth.] I. act. but rare; with dat. in the sense to be able to do; eg anna því ekki, I cannot manage that: absol., geldingar svá holdir, at þeir anni á degi ofan í Odda, ellipt. = anni at ganga, that they can walk, Vm. 28.

II. dep. freq.: I. with acc., a. a law term; in cases involving support, to take care, provide for, to support; þá skal móðirin þau börn annast, Grág. i. 240; a. úmaga, 243, 294; a. sik, to support oneself, Fms. vi. 204; únegð, Rd. 234. β. more generally to take care of; mál þetta mun ek a., Glúm. 358. γ. to engage in battle; tveir skyldi annast einnhvern þeirra; þeir Bardi ok Steinn skyldi a. Ketil brúsa, Isl. (Hvs.) ii. 356. 2. a. um e-t, to be busy about, trouble oneself about; a. um matreiðu, to cook, Nj. 75; hann a. ekki um bú, Glúm. 342, 359.

annarligr, adj. strange, alien, Stj. 188; metaph., Skálda 193.

ANNARR, önnur, annat, adj.; pl. aðrir; gen. pl. annarra; dat. sing. f. annarri, [Ulf. anþar; A.S. oþar; Engl. other; Germ. andere; Swed. andra and annan: in Icel. assimilated, and, if followed by an r, the m changes into ð.] I. = ετερος, alter: I. one of two, the other; tveir formenn þeirra, hét annarr, the one of them, Fms. ix. 372; sá er af öðrum ber, he that gets the better of it, Nj. 15; a. augat, Fms. ii. 61; á öðrum fæti, Bs. i. 387, Edda 42; annarri hendi ... , en annarri, with the one hand ... with the other, Eb. 250, 238; á aðra hönd, on the one side, Grág. i. 432, Nj. 50; a. kné, Bs. i. 680; til annarr handar, Nj. 50; annarr—annarr, one—other; gullkross á öðrum en ari af gulli á öðrum, Fms. x. 15. Peculiar is the phrase, við annan, þriðja, fjórða ... mann, = being two, three, four ... altogether; við annan, oneself and one besides, Eb. 60; cp. the Greek τρίτων ημράλαντων, two talents and a half, Germ. anderthalb. 2. secundus, a cardinal number, the second; sá maðr var þar a. Íslenzkr, Fms. xi. 129; í annat siun, for the second time, Íb. ch. 1, 9; a. vetr aðrs hans, Bs. i. 415; höggur hann þegar annat (viz. högg), a second blow, Sturl. ii. 118. β. the next following, Lat. proximus; á öðru hausti, the next autum, Ísl. ii. 228; önnur misseri, the following year, Bs. i. 437, 417; a. sumar eptir, 415, Fms. i. 237. Metaph. the second, next in value or rank, or the like; annat mest hof í Norgei, the next greatest temple, Nj. 129; a. mestr höfðingi, the next in power, Ísl. ii. 202; fjölmennast þing, annat eptir brennu Njáls, the fullest parliament next to that after the burning of N., 259; vistrast lögmanna annarr en Skapti, the wisest speaker next after S., Bs. i. 28; a. mestr maðr í Danmörk, the next greatest man, Fms. xi. 51; annat best ríki, v. 297; var annarr sterkastir er hét Freysteinn, the next strongest champion, Eb. 156; mestrar náttúru a. en Þorsteinn, Fs. 74, Fms. iv. 58.

II. = állos, alios, one of many, other, both in sing. and pl.; hon lék á gölfium við aðrar meyjar, Nj. 2; mart var með heimi annara kvenna, i.e. many women besides, 50; jafnt sakar sem aðrir menn, as guiltily as anybody else, Grág. i. 432; einginn annarra Knúts manna, none besides, Fms. x. 192; ef þeir gerði lönd síns helgari enn aðrar jarðir, ... than all other grounds, Eb. 20; er þorólfir hafði tignað um fram aðra staði, ... more than any other place, id.; kalla þá jörð nú eigi helgari enn aðra, id.; tók Bórkr þann kost er hann hafði öðrum ætlað, 40; þórarinn vann eið ... ok tíu menn aðrir, Tb. and ten men besides, 48; þeir þóttust fyrir öðrum mönnum, ... over all other people, 20; góðr drengur um fram alla menn aðra, 30; af eyjum ok öðru sjófangi, other produce of the sea, 12; hann skal tvá menn nefna aðra en sik, ... besides himself, Grág. i. 57; hann var örvári af fé eum nokkurr annarr, ... than anybody else, Bret.; jafnt sem annat fúlgufé, as any other money, Grág. i. 432.

2. other, different, in the proverb, öl er annarr maðr, ale (a drunken man) is another man, is not the true man, never mind what he says, Grett. 98; the proverb is also used reversely, öl er innri (the inner) maðr, 'in vino veritas.' annað er gæfa ok görfuleiki, luck and achievements are two things (a proverb); önnur var þá æfi, viz. the reverse of what it is now (a proverb), Grett. 94 (in a verse); ætla ek þik annan mann en þú segir, Fms. xi. 192; hafi þér Danir heldr til annars gört, you deserve something different, worse than that, id.; varð þá annan veg, otherwise, Hkr. ii. 7; Björn varð þess viss at þau höfðu annan átrúnað, ... different religion, Eb. 12.

3. like ó állou, reliqui, the rest, the remains; þá er eigi sagt hversu öðrum var skipað, Nj. 50; at hönd b. sé fyrir innan n., en annarr líkamni hans (the rest of his body) fyrir utan, 1812. 18. III. repeated in comparative clauses: annarr—annarr, or connected with einu, hvárr, hverr, ymsir; gékk annarr af öðrum at biðja hann, alios ex alio, one after another, Bs. i. 128; hverja nótt aðra sem aðra, every night in turn, Mag. 2; annat var orð Finns harðara enn annat, every word of Finn was harder than that which went before it, of a climax, Fms. v. 207: einn—annarr, alios atque alios, one and another, various; eina hluti ok aðra, Stj. 81; einar afleiðingar ok aðrar, Barl. 36; einir ok aðrir, various, Stj. 3; ef maðr tlv svá, at hann var einn eðr annarr (that he was anybody, this or that man, viz. if he does not give the name precisely), ok er hinn eigi þá skyldr at rísa öf dómi, Grág. i. 28; ymsir—aðrir, in turn, now this, now the other; ymsir eiga högg í annars garð (a proverb); heita á helga menn, ok nefna ymsa ok aðra (now one, now another), Mar. 35; þágu þessir riddarar veizlur ymsir at öðrum, gave banquets one to another in turn, id.; færðu ymsir aðra niðr, now one was under water and now the other, of two men struggling whilst swimming, Fms. ii. 269; hvárr—annan, hverir—aðra, each other; mæltu hvárir vð fyrir öðrum; hétu hvárir öðrum atförmum: of a rapid succession, hvort vandæði kom á bak öðru, misfortunes never come singly, but one on the back of the other, Fr.; við þau tíðindi urðu allir gláðir ok sagði hverr öðrum, one told the news to another, man to man, Fms. i. 21; þóttust hvárirveggju meira vald at hafa í borginni en aðrir, 655 xvii. 1; hvárriveggja—aðrir, ἀλλήλοισ, mutually, reciprocally; skulu nú h. ganga til ok veita öðrum gríð, Nj. 190.

IV. annat, n. used as a subst.; þetta sem annat, as other things, Fas. i. 517; skaltu eigi þora annat, en, Nj. 74; ef eigi bæri a. til, unless something happened, Bs. i. 350; at öllu annars, in everything else, Grág. ii. 141, K. þ. K. 98; annars simply used adverb. = else = now very freq. but very rare in old writers; stendr a. ríki þitt í mikilli hættu, Fas. i. 459, from a paper MS. and in a text most likely interpolated in the 17th century.

comps: annars-konarr, annars-kostarr, adv. else, otherwise; hvárt er hann vill ... eðr a. vill hann, either he should prefer ..., K. A. 58. annars-staðarr, adv. elsewhere, in other places; sem a., as in other similar cases, Grág. i. 228. annars-vegar, adv. on the other hand, Fms. viii. 228, those on the opposite side. annarra-gen. pl. is used in annarra-bræðra, -bræðri, pl. fourth cousins, Grág. i. 285, ii. 172; cp. D. I. i. 185; v. næsta-bræðra = third cousins, þriðja-bræðra = fifth cousins.

annarr-hvárr (or in two words), adj. pron. in dual sense, [A. S. oþar-bveðar], Lat. alteruter, either, one of the two; with gen., annan hværn þeirra sona Skallagrims, Eg. 256; vantir mik at aðra hvára (acc. sing. fem., now aðra hverja) skipan taki brátt, Fms. viii. 444. Dual, aðrir hværn, in a collect. sense, either party, Sd. 138; neut. used as adv., annaðhvárt—eða, either—or (Lat. aut—aut), Fms. i. 127, Skúlda 171, Nj. 190. annarr-hværr, adj. pron. every other alternately; annan hværn dag, Fms. iv. 81, Symb. 57; annathvert orð, every other (second) word, Nj. 33, Fas. i. 527; at öðruhverju, used as adv., every now and then, Eg. 52 Sturl. i. 82, Hkr. ii. 292.

annarr-tveggja and annarr-tveggi, adj. or used adverbially, [-tveggi] is a gen. form, [-tveggi a nom.], plur. (dual) adriertveggju, dat. plur. -jum; in other cases tveggja, tveggi are indecl.:—one of twain, either annattveggja þeirra, Grág. i. 236; ok er annattveggja til, at vera hér hinn er annarr, there is choice of two, either to stay here, or ..., Fms. xi. 143, N. G. L. i. 117; ef annarrtveggi hefir haldit öðrum, Grág. i. 29; við gen., a. þeirra, either of them, 149; dual, either of two sides, en þá er þeir skildir er aðriertveggju eru lengra í burt komnir en öðrag, but they are they parted when either of the twain is come farther away than an arrow's flight, of combatants on the battle-field, Grág. ii. 19; neut. annattveggja, used as adv.; annattveggja—eðr, either—or; a. vestna eðr batna, Clem. 50. The word is rare in old writers, and is now quite out of use; as adv. annaðhvort—eða, either—or, is used.

annarsligr = annarligr; annarstaðarr, elsewhere, v. annarsstaðarr. ANNALI, s. m. [Lat. annalis], an annal, record, chronological register Bs. i. 789, 415, 13. It sometimes, esp. in deeds, appears to mean histories in general (cp. Lat. annales); annálar á tólf bókuðum norrænir, Vm. in a deed of the 14th century, where it probably means Sagas: fróðir annálar ok vísindabækur, histories, Pr. 402, Al. 29. The true old Icel. annalists cease in the year 1430, and were again resumed in the middle of the 16th century.

ann-boð, n. pl., rare in sing., pronounced amboð, [old Swed. ambud; Iva Aasen ambo', from önn, labor (?)], agricultural implements, tools; a nokkur, Dipl. v. 18, Jb. 258.

ann-fetlar, n. pl. a sword belt or shield belt; = handfetlar, Lex. Poët. ann-fríðr, ar, m. [önn], 'work-peace, work-truce, commonly during April and May, the time when there were to be no lawsuits (Norse N. G. L. iii. 19, 94, 95).

ann-kostur, m., also spelt öndkostr and önnkostr [önn], used only in the adverbial phrase, fyrir annkost (önn-önd-kost), unwillingly, on purpose Fms. viii. 367; en þó hafa ek fyrir önnkost (on purpose) svá ritað, Skáld 164; en þat er illvirki, er maðr vill spilla fé manna fyrir ö., Grág. 5, 130, 416, ii. 93, 94.

ann-kvista, t. (= ann-kosta?), to take care (önn) of, Grág. ii. 251 á. 1. 7. spelt anquista; the word is somewhat doubtful.

ann-laust, n. adj. easily, without toil, Lex. Poët.

ann-ríkti, n. adj. and annríki, n., eiga a., to be very busy, Rd. 283.

ann-samligr, adj. toilsome, laborious, Sks. 549, 550.

ann-samt, n. adj. in the phrase, eiga a., to be busy, Rd. 283; v. l. fa angrsamt, full of cares, Fms. viii. 29.

ann-semð, f. business, trouble, concern; fá a. af e-u and bera a. fyrir e-u, to be troubled, concerned about, Bs. i. 686, 690.

annt, n. adj. [önn], in such phrases as, vera a. um e-t, to be busy, concerned, eager, anxious about, Hkr. i. 115; mörgum var a. heim, man were eager to get home, Fms. xi. 278; hví muu honum svá a. at hitt mik, why is he so eager? Eg. 742; ekki er a. um þat, it is not pressing Sd. 174; Hánefir kvad sér a. um daga (had so much to do) svá at han mátti þá eigi at vera, Rd. 241; vera antnt til e-s, to be in a very great hurry, eager for, Fms. ii. 150, 41. Compar. annara, in impers. phrase to be more eager, Fms. ii. 38; mér er ekki a. at vita forlög min en frat koma, Fs. 19. Superl., vera annast til e-s, to be most eager, Fms. iii. 187 without prep., hvat er mi antnt minum eingasyni, what baib my darling son at heart? Gg. 2. antifona, u, f. antipbon (Gr. word), Hom. 137.

anti-kristur, m. Anti-Crist, Hom. 132, 71.

antvarða, að, to hand over (Germ. word), H. E. i. 435, in a Norse deed.

anugr, adj., commonly önugr, cross, uncivil, froward; also önugr lyndi, f. fraks, ill-temper.

anz, n. reply, now freq. in common language, v. following word.

anza, að, contr. form = andsvara, to pay attention to, take notice of with dat., (peim) sem hóu a. minnr ok vanrækr, cares less about, Stj. 9; 81, 195.

2. to reply, answer (now freq.); a. e-u and til es; ill mun furða, ef nokkurr a. til, where it means to reply, but without the notion of speaking, Fms. i. 194; Oddr anzaði ok heldr stutt, where it seems to mean to return a greeting, but silently by signs, Fb. i. 254; konungur a. því ekki, a reply to a letter, Fms. ix. 339; hann sat kyrt a. a. engu, Bárð. 180; Mirnant heyrði til ræðu hennar ok a. fá, Mirm. 69.

apa, að, [Engl. to ape; Germ. äffen = deludere], to mock, make sport of; margan hefir aðrat (a proverb), 'auri sacra fames', Sl. 34, q. Hm. 74; pass., apask at e-u, to become the fool of, Sl. 62. Now, i. e-t eptir, to mock or imitate as an ape; also, a. e-n útúr, to pervert one's words in a mocking way.

apaldr, rs, m. pl. rar, [O. H. G. apaltrá; A. S. apuldre; Dan. abil, Swed. apel], doubtless a southern word, the inflective syllable dr being a mutilation of 'tré', arbor, a word now almost extinct in Germany (for a homely, common word such as 'tré' could not have been corrupted in the native tongue);—apaldr thus, etymologically as well as properly, means an apple-tree; fruits and fruit-trees were doubtless ported into Scandinavia from abroad; the word appears only in the later poetic poems, such as the Hkv. Hjörv. 6; the verses in Sdm. 5 are in a different metre from the rest of the poem, and probably interpolated, Fas. 20; epli á apaldri, Sks. 106; tveir apaldar (with the radical r dropped), Sdm. iii. 60; apaldrs flúr, Karl. 200, 311; as the etymological sense in the transmuted word soon got lost, a fresh pleonastic compound was made, viz. apaldrs-tré. COMPS: apaldrs-garðr, m. [Dan. apeldrærd], orchard of apple-trees, Þidr., D. N. apaldrs-klubba, u. f. made of an a., El. 22. apaldrs-tré, n. apple-tree, Þidr. 58. al-grár, adj. dapple-gray, i. e. apple-gray, having the streaky colour of an apple (cp. Fr. prommelé), of a horse, Nj. 274, Karl. 426, Landn. 93; here it is used of a river horse); of an ox, uxi a., at lit. Ld. 120. API, a, m. [A.S. apa; Erse apara; Bohem. op; Germ. affe; all of them dropping the initial guttural tennis; Sanskr. kapi], an ape. It occurs in early times in the metaph. sense of a fool in the old poem Hm. even in a proverb; so also in the poems Fm. 11 and Gm. 34, vide Lex. 2. A giant is in Edda (Gl.) called api, no doubt because of the stupidity of the giants. Apavatn, a farm in Icel., probably got its name from a nickname of one of the settlers, at the end of the 9th century. Fm. 20 a giant is called átrunnr apa, the kinsman of apes. The giant in the Hm. verse 74 appears to be corrupt, and ought to be read thus, margr verðr af aurum api, the fool of earthly things, cp. the passage in Sl. 34, margan hefir auðr apat, which is another version of the same proverb. It is esp. used in the connection, ósvinnu-api or þra-api, a baboon, big fool, Gm. l. c., Fm. l. c.; (the passage in Hm. ought perhaps to be restored to ósvinnu-apa or ósvinnra-apa in a like word; the sense is no doubt the same in all these passages.) Rare old prose in the proper sense of ape, vide however 673. 55. COMPD: -mynd, n. form of an ape, Th. 76. PLI, a, m. in Edda (Gl.), α. an ox, or β. a horse, backney; applying to Björn s. v. means the embryo of animals, e. g. apla-kálfr a lamb, n. abortive lamb or calf; apalengr, adj. a backney, a be-goer. Björn also mentions apalgrýti, n. aspretum, (an unknown dubious word.) apella and apellera, að, to cite, summon to the pope (eccles. Lat.), ix. 339, 486 (v. l.), x. 99, Bs. i. 776, K. Á. 218. ÞR, adj. gen. rs (and thus not akin to api), cold, sharp, chilly; en sta hrið, sharp fighting, Ó. T. 59; sterkastr ok aprastr við at eiga, worst to deal with, Þidr. 183; enda vóru allöpr tilbrigðum (cold, gnant), 89; því föru vér aprir, we feel sad, chilly, a verse written in 7, Lex. Poët.: a word quite obsolete. (Björn however mentions it as a living word.) Mod. Icel. nappr, adj. nearly in the same sense, cold, dry, of weather; cold, spiteful, snappish, of temper: neppja, u. f. a chill, living cold: neppringr, m. id.: [are these words identical (?).] reigr, adj. cold, chilly, of weather; a. veðr, Vápn. 11. MS. PTAN and aftan, s. m., dat. aptni, pl. aptnar, sometimes spelt apni apnar, [Hel. aband; Germ. abend; Engl. even, evening; in Ulf. we find andanabti = Gr. ὄψέ, ὄψια; Swed. afton, Dan. afsen,—as it is often], evening; not very freq. in prose, where kveld is the common word. optan meant the time from 3 till 9 o'clock, like the Old English 'even'; aptan (middle-even) is 6 o'clock; at 9 o'clock the night sets in, stímal: a distinction is made between aptan and kveld, cinn aptan 2t dið, an afternoon when the kveld (twilight) sets in, Edda 35: but gener. kveld, um aptaninn síð er myrkt var orðit, Fms. iv. 308, viii. 228, xi. 3; at aptni, 623, 55, Fms. viii. 201, Grág. i. 146; of aptna (apna), 3. ii. 224; á öptnum, Bjarn. 23; miðraptan, Hrafn. 9, Nj. 153; ns bíðr ófram sök, a laggard's suit bides till even (a proverb). atan and aftan, adv. prop. from behind, behind, opp. to framan; augu hnakka, N. G. L. i. 339, a. á milli herða, Vgl. 26; þá greip hann a. fr hendr honum (from behind), Eg. 747; hala sem leo, ok gadd í a., ... the tip of the tail, Al. 168: now aptan i is opp. to framan i. II. ap, as prep. with acc., behind, opp. to fyrir framan; ek hjó varginu ndr fyrir a. bóguna, I beewed the wolf in sunder, just behind the ears, Nj. 95; standa fyrir a., to stand behind, Fas. ii. 516. β. a. at, dat.; ganga, koma a. at e-m, to approach from behind. atan-drykkja, u. f. an evening carouse, Pr. 419. atan-langt, n. adj. even-long, all the evening, Karl. 95. atan-skæra, u. f. twilight, Lat. crepusculum (cp. morginskæra, dawn, ora), Sighvat (in a verse). atan-stjarna, u. f. the evening star, Al. 54, Stj. 92; now kveldna. atan-söngur, m. even-song, evening service, Fms. vii. 152, K. þ. K. 58. atari and aptastr, compar. and superl. latter, posterior, and last, v. i. epztr. atari and aptarliga, adv. behind, far in the rear, Lex. Poët. (freq.) atna, að, to become evening; partil at apnaði, Fms. iii. 181. Dep., apnaðisk, Greq. 51; now kvelda. PTR and afttr (aptar, N. G. L. i. 347), adv., compar. aptar, superl. st, [Ulf. aftra = πάλιν], the spelling with p is borne out by the Gr. I. Loc. back, back again: I. WITH MOTION, connected with verbs denoting to go or move, such as fara, *gang*a, koma, leiða, senda, snúa, sækja, etc., where aptr almost answers to Lat. re-, remittere, reducere, reverti . . . ; gefa a., reddere; bera a., refillere; kalla a., revocare; reka a., repellere: a. hverfr lygi þá er sönnu matir (a proverb), a lie turns back when it meets truth, Bs. i. 639. 'aptr' implies a notion a loco or in locum, 'eptir' that of remaining in loco; thus skila a. means remittere; skilja eptir, relinquere; taka a., recipere, in a bad sense; taka eptir, animum attendere; fara a., redire; vera e., remanere, etc.; fara, snúa, koma, senda, sækja, hverfa a., Nj. 260, 281, Fms. x. 395, iv. 300, Edda 30, Eg. 271, Eb. 4, Fs. 6; kera a., to repay, N. G. L. i. 20; snúast a., Lækn. 472. Without actual motion,—as of sounds; þeir heyrðu a. í rjóðrit óp, they heard shouting behind them, Fms. iv. 300; nú skal cigi prestr ganga svá langt frá kirkju at hann heyrir eigi klokkur hljóð aftar (= afttr), be shall not go out of the sound of the bells, N. G. L. i. 347. β. backwards; fram ok a., to and fro (freq.); reið hann suðr aptr, rode back again, Nj. 29; aptr á bak, supine, bent or turned back, Eg. 380; þeir settu hnakka á bak sér a., bent their necks backwards in order to be able to see, Edda 30; skreidast a. af hestinum, to slip down backwards from the croup of a horse, to dismount, Fs. 65. γ. connected with many verbs such as lata, lúka a., to close, shut, opp. to lata, lúka upp, Fær. 264, Eg. 7, Landn. 162; in a reverse sense to Lat. recludere, reserere, rescindere, resolvere. 2. WITHOUT MOTION = apant, the hind part, the back of anything; þat er maðr fram (superne), en dýr a., the fore part a man, the hind part a beast, 673. 2; síðan lagði hann at tennum a. við huppinn, he caught the bip with his teeth, Vgl. 21. The English aft when used of a ship; bæði a. ok fram, stern and stem (of a ship), Fms. ix. 310; Sigurðr sat a. á kistunni, sate aft on the stern-chest, vii. 201; a. ok frammi, of the parts of the body (of a seal), Sks. 179. Compar. aptrarr, farther back, Fms. vi. 76. II. TEMP. again, pálv, iterum: this use of the word, general as it is at present, hardly appears in old writers; they seem to have had no special expression for again, but instead of it said síðan, enn, or used a periphrase, ú nýja leik, öðru sinni, annat sinn, or some other substitute. It is, however, very freq. in Goth. aftra = πάλιν, Swed. åter, Dan. atter; some passages in the Sagas come near to the mod. use, e. g. bæta a., resituere, to give back (but not temp.); segja fríði a., to recal, N. G. L. i. 103; hann mælti at engi mundi þann fald a. falda, El. 20, uncertain whether loc. (backward) or iterum, most likely the former. It is now used in a great many compounds, answering to Lat. re-, cp. also enðr. aptra, að, to take back, hinder, withdraw; with dat., a. ferð sinni, to desist from, delay, Fms. x. 17; þorgrimr bað þá niðr setjast, ok skal eigi boði a., i. e. you shall be welcome as before, Valla L. 217; eigi mun ek a. mér (besitate) at þessu, Grett. 116 A; hversu þeir óþrúðu sér þá er þeir kómu á þingit, how they hesitated, wavered, withdrew, Bs. i. 741, Flor. 7: now a. e-ri is to hinder, prohibit. aptran and óþrun, f. a revoking, renouncing, keeping back, 655 xxvii. aptr-bati, adj. iud. convalescent, on the road to recovery, Al. 150, Korm. 220: now used as a masc. (-bati, a, m.), vera í aptrbata, to be getting better, Fas. iii. 524. aptr-beiðilligr, adj. reciprocal, Skálda 195. aptr-borinn, adj. part. regenerate, born again; þars hún aptrborin aldri verði, the sense is doubtful, it seems to mean = enðrborin, regenerate; it will suit the context only if we suppose that suicides could not be born again; they certainly could walk again, v. aptrganga. Högni seems to fear that, if she died a natural death, Brynhilda would perhaps be enðrborin, Skv. 3. 44. aptr-byggi, ja, m., esp. in pl. stern-sitters (opp. to frambyggjar) in a ship of war, Fms. ii. 312, Hkr. iii. 243. aptr-drátttr, m. the undertow, outward suck of the tide, Barl. 130. aptr-drepa, u. f. relapse, shock, adversity; niðan þeir vissu sér enga ván a., Bs. i. 752, Finnb. 312. aptr-elding, f. = elding, dawning, Anal. 193. aptr-ferð and aptr-för, f. return, Eg. 279. aptr-færsla, u. f. bringing back, Gpl. 361. aptr-ganga, u. f. [ganga aptr], a ghost, apparition, the French revenant; about this superstition vide Ísl. Þjóðs. i. 222–317, Grett. ch. 34–37 (the ghost Glám), Eb. ch. 34, 50–55, 63 (Thorolf Bagífót), Ld. ch. 17, Sd. ch. 17–22, 30 (Klaufi), Háv. 41, Flóam. ch. 28, etc. etc. aptr-gangr, m. = aptrganga, Grett. ch. 78 New Ed. aptr-gjald, n. repayment, Bs. i. 734. aptr-hald, n. a checking, balking back. COMPD: aptrhalds-maðr, m. who impedes a thing, Bs. i. 733. aptr-hlaup, n. a burling back, recoil, Fs. 158. aptr-hnekkning, f. a bending backwards, metaph., Fms. ix. 509. aptr-hryggtr, m. the chine, the lower part of the back, of a slaughtered animal, Dipl. vi. aptr-hvarf, n. a turning back, return, Sturl. ii. 16; illr aftrhvarfs, disinclined to face the enemy again, Fms. vii. 325. β. relapse, Fms. ii. 47, where it is used of apostasy. Since the Reformation always used by theologians in a good sense, repentance, turning away from sin; iðran ok a. are freq. used together, iðran being repentance, the internal condition, aptrhvarf the movement away from sin, or the repentance put into act.

aptr-kall, n. withdrawal, recalling, Fr.
aptr-kast, n. a curling back, repulse, Stj. 288.
aptr-kemba, u, f. one whose hair is combed back, Finnþ. 250.
aptr-kvama and later form aptrkoma, u, f. return, coming back, Sks. 550 B; Fms. xi. 312, a vellum MS. of the end of the 15th century, has aptrkonia.
aptr-kvæmt, n. adj. return from exile, used substantively as a law term in the phrase, eiga (eigi) a., of a temporary or lifelong exile; þat varðar skóggang . . . eigi eigi a. nema lof biskupa ok lögrétumanna faist frammar, . . . not to be suffered to return from exile unless the leave of the bishops and the legislature be first got, Grág. i. 347: in a gener. sense, synist mér sem engum várum sé a., ef hans er eigi hefnt, it seems to me that not one of us can shew his face again, if he be not revenged, Glím. 332.
aptr-laun, f. redemption, ransom, Hom. 118; a law term, right of redeeming, Gpl. 304: hence compd aptrlausnar-jörð, f. land which is redeemable, N. G. L. i. 344.
aptr-mjór, adj. tapering behind, Edda 40 (of the salmon's tail).
aptr-mundr, m. [munnr], in the phrase, vera a. at e-u, to want a thing back again, Fas. iii. 278.
aptr-reka and aptr-reki, adj. ind. (navig.), verðr a., to be driven back by stress of weather, Landn. 148, Bs. i. 76, Grág. i. 274; a. skip, Ann. 1347, Bs. Laur. S. aptr-rekstr, rs, m. a driving back, repulse, Grág. ii. 230 (of cattle grazing).
aptr-sjá, f. regret, longing, v. eptirsjá.
aptr-velting, f. recoil, rolling back, Stj. 49.
ap-ynja, u, f. [old Swed. epin], a she-ape, Stj. 68, 95, Sks. 115.
AR, n. (qs. arð?), an atom in a sunbeam, mote, Germ. sonnenstäubchen, vide Vidal. Post. 276 (Ed. 1829), Njóla. arða, u, f. medic. scabrum, a little wart.
arða, að, to make upright, and arðrig, adj. erect, arduous, v. örð.
ARÐR, rs, m. [Lat. arabrum; Gael. arad; cp. erja, Ulf. arjan, arare; A. S. erian; Old Engl. ear, etc.; in Norse ar or al is a small plough], a sort of plough, probably different in size and shape from plögr, which is a later word, of foreign stamp, as are all that have p for their initial letter. The poem Rm. distinguishes between both, göra arðr (acc.) and keyra plög, 19. The first colonisers of Iceland used arðr, as shewn by Landn. 35 (relating events of the year 875); hann átti einn oxa, ok lét hann þræla draaga arðrinn; eykr fyrir plögi eðr arðri (plough or ard), N. G. L. ii. 115; ef maðr stel jarni af arðri eðr plögi, id.; höggva má maðr sér til plögs eðr arðs (gen. dropping the radical r), id.; draaga arðr, Al. 52; arðri (dat.), Karl. 471, Mar. (Fr.), Stj.: um allt þat er miklu varðar er betri sigandi arðr en svifandi (emend. of Dr. Hallgrím Scheving), a proverb, better a slow but deep trenching plough than a quick and shallow one, Bs. i. 139; the old arðr was probably bulky and heavy. 2. metaph. in Icel. at present arðr (gen. arðs, arðar, Snót 90), as well as plögr, means gain, produce, profit: arðsamr, adj. profitable. compd: arðs-geldingr, m. a plough-ox, Fms. vii. 21.
arðr-för, f. a plough-furrow, trench, Stj. 593, I Kings xviii. 32. arðr-gangr, n. a coultter, goad, N. G. L. iii. 198. arðr-járn, n. a coultter, ox goad, Stj. 386, Judges iii. 31.
arðr-oxi, a, m. a plough-ox, Grág. i. 502, Jb. 346. arfa, u, f. [Ulf. arbio], an heiress, N. G. L. i. 191 (rare).
arf-borinn, adj. part., prop. a legitimate son or daughter, Fms. i. 86; defined, sú er a. er kominn er til alls rættar, N. G. L. ii. 211. Freq. spelt árborinn by suppressing the f (so N. G. L. ii. 50), and used in Norse law of a freeman, v. the quotation above from N. G. L., which clearly shews the identity of the two words), i. 171; algildis vitni tveggja manna árborinna ok skilvænna, ii. 211: the alliterated phrase almir ok árborinn (the phrase aldir ok úbornir may be a corruption from árþ.), freeborn and freebred, 310. The passage in Stor. verse 2 is in Lex. Pöet. explained by olim ablatus; the poet probably meant to say genuine, pure, in a metaph. sense, of the true poetic beverage, not the adulterated one, mentioned in the Edda 49; the cup from the right cask.
arf-gengr, adj. entitled to inherit, legitimate heir, Grág. i. 178, Eg. 345. arfi, a, m. [Ulf. arbia; O. H. G. arps, erpo; Germ. erbe; Hel. abaro = filius; A. S. eafora, afora per metath.], an heir, heiress (and poët. a son in gener.): with gen. pers., arfar veganda, his heirs, Gpl. 131; þar næst var Ósk hennar a., her heiress, heir to her property, Ld. 58; Guðríd ok þorgerðr lögligr arfar (heiresses) Sölva, Dipl. v. 1: with gen. of the thing, er hann þá a. hvárstveggja, heir of both things, Grág. i. 221; a. óðala, Gpl. 294; a. at e-u, heir to a property, Sturl. ii. 197. Not freq., erfingi being the common word. II. an ox, bull, Edda (Gl.), vide arfi.
ARFI, sometimes spelt arbi, a, m. chickweed, alsine media; arfa-sáta, u, f. a weed rick, Nj. 194.
arfingi, ja, m. an heir, Eg. (in a verse), vide erfingi.
arf-kaup, n. sum paid for inheritance, Grág. i. 200.
arf-leiða, dd, to adopt as an heir, = atleicða, Jb. 144 A. arf-leiðing, f. adoption, Ann. 1271.
arf-nyti, ja, m. (poët.) an heir, Eb. (in a verse).
ARFR, s, m. [Ulf. arbi, neut.; A. S. yrfe.] It originally meant cattle, pecus, pecunia, as may be inferred from the A. S. orf = pecus, cattle, and yrfe = opes; Hel. arf and urf; Ormul. errfe; v. Ihre, Glossar., and Grimm R. A. p. 467. Edda (Gl.) also mentions an arfi or arfr, bos, v. above. I. inheritance, patrimony; taka arf eptir e-n, Grág. i. 170, 178; hon á allan arf eptir mik, is my sole heir, Nj. 3, Eb. 162, Gpl. 252. II. a bull, v. above. compds: arfs-skípti, n. and arfs-sókn, f., v. arf-below, Gpl. 267, Grág. i. 170. arfa-þáttur, m. section of law treating of inheritance, Grág. i. 170.

arf-rán, n. injustice, cheating in matters of inheritance, Háv. 52.
arf-ræning, f. id., Mar. 656.
arf-ræningr, m. one stripped of his inheritance, Al. 105.
arf-sal, n. cession of right of inheritance, Grág. i. 205, 225, 227, (cp. branderfð, Dan. fledföre, mod. Icel. prófenta, and gefa prófentu sína); a law term, to hand over one's own property to another man on condition of getting succour and support for life. In the time of the Commonwealth, arfsal had a political sense, and was a sort of 'clientela'; the chiefs caused rich persons, freedmen, and monied men of low birth to bequeath them all their wealth, and in return supported them in lawsuits during life. Such is the case in Vápn. 13, Hænsapór. S. ch. 7, Eb. ch. 31; eptir þat hand-salaði Úlfarr (a wealthy freedman) Arnkatli fé sitt allt, ok gerðist hann (viz. Arnkell) þá varnarmaðr (protector) Úlfarr; Úlfarr: S., hann bjó á landi Skeggja ok hafði gürzt arfsalsmaðr hans (his client), 50: it was humiliating; engar mátti hann (the bishop) ölmusur gefa af líkamlegri eign, heldr var hann haldinn sem arfsalsmaðr, Sturl. ii. 119. To the chiefs in olden times it was a source of wealth and influence, often in an unfair way. compds: arfsals-maðr, m., v. above. arfsals-máldagi, a, m. a deed concerning arfsal, Grág. i. 227.
arf-skípti, n. sharing of arfr, Grág. i. 172, Gpl. 266, Fas. iii. 39.
arf-skot, n. fraud, cheating in matters of inheritance, Eb. 178, Grág. i. 202, 203, 267.
arf-sókn, f. a suit in a case of arfr, Gpl. 263.
arf-stóll, m. an hereditary throne, Eg. (in a verse).
arf-svik, n. pl. fraud, cheating in matters of arfr, Eb. 178, Gpl. 254, 292.
arf-svipting, f. disinheriting, cheating in matters of arfr, Stj. 425.
arf-tak, n. and arf-taka, u, f. the act of receiving arfsal; taka e-n arftaki, Grág. i. 267, 268, 187, 229. compd: arftöku-maðr, m. an heir, successor to an inheritance, Grág. i. 62, Sturl. i. 98, Fms. v. 53.
arf-takari, a, m. and arf-taki, a, m. = arftökumaðr, Jb. 148 A, N. G. L. i. 234, Barl. 199.
arf-tekinn, adj. part. taken by inheritance, Fms. xi. 306.
arf-tekja, u, f. = arftaka, Grág. i. 219. compd: arftekju-land, n. land taken by inheritance, patrimony, Fms. i. 117.
arf-tæki, n. = arftaka, Stj. 232.
arf-tækr, adj. = arfengr, Eg. 343.
arfuni, a, m. [an old obsol. form], an heir, Edda 108 and in the compd skaporfoni (the vowel change is caused by the following o), legal heir, q. v.
arf-ván, f. hereditary expectancy, Grág. i. 200, Jb. 177, Sturl. i. 94.
arf-vörðr, m. [A. S. yrfeveard; Hel. erbiward], (poët.) an heir, Lex. Pöet.
arf-þegi, ja, m. [cp. Ulf. arbinumja], (poët.) an heir, Id. 28. arga-fas, n. [argr, craven, and fas = flax by dropping the l (?); flax, n. means precipitatio, and flasa, að, precipitare, which are common words; this etymology is confirmed by the spelling of the word in Gpl. 188, where some of the MSS. have faas or fias, the last is perh. a false reading = flax; fas, n. gait, manner, is a modern word: v. Pál Vidal. in Skýr; his etymology, however, is doubtless bad], a law term, a feint, a cowardly assault, an aiming at one's body and drawing deadly weapons without carrying the threat into effect, termed 'a coward's assault'; in Icel. it was punishable by fjörbaugsgarðr, cp. Grág.; ef maðr mundar til manns ok stöðvar sjálf, ok varðar fjörbaugsgarð, ok á hinn eigi vígt í gegn (the injured party must not kill the offender on the spot) skal steina heiman ok kveðja til níu heimilisbúa þess á þingi er sótt er, Vsl. ch. 90: ef maðr hleypr at manni, ok heldr hann sér sjálf; þat er a. ok er þat sektalaust (liable to no punishment), only a dishonourable act; so the Norse law), N. G. L. i. 164, Gpl. 188.
arga-skattur, m. an abusive word, a dog's tax, Ölkofr. 36.
arg-hola, u, f. scortum, Hb. 31 (1865).
ARGR, adj. [Paul Diac. inertem et inutilen et vulgari verbo 'arga', 6. 24; A. S. arg, ignavus; the Scottish arcb or arbh, v. Jamieson sub voce; and the mod. Engl. arcb, arcbness; Germ. arg; Gr. ἀργός], emasculate, effeminate, an abusive term; hefir þú hörn borit, ok hugða ek þu argr aðal, Ls. 24; mik munu zsir argan kalla, ef ek bindast læt brúðarlíni, Þkv. 17: it is more abusive than thrall, cp. the proverb, þrællinn hefnir en argur aldrí, a thrall takes revenge, but not the a., Grett. 92; and, argr er sá sem engu verst (a proverb), he is truly an 'argr' who does not defend himself; argr and ragr are synonymous, vide the Grág.: þau eru orð þrjú er skóggang varða öll, ef maðr kallar mann ragan eðr stroðinn eðr sórdinn, ii. 147. 2. metaph. a wretch, craven, coward; örg vættr, Fas. ii. 254, Fs. 147: cp. ergi and úargr.
arg-skapr, m. cowardice, cowardliness, Fas. i. 487 (in a verse).
arg-vitugr, adj. infamous, (cant.)
ARI, a, m. [Ulf. ara; O. H. G. aro; cp. Germ. adler = edel-aro; cp. also the lengthened Icel. form örn, A. S. earn, Engl. earn], an eagle, rare and sty in poetry; örn is the common word; Hom. 89, Stj. 71, Al. 160. The Gloss. Royal Libr. Old Coll. Copenh. 1812 aquila is translated by COMP: ara-hreiðr, n. an eyrie, nest of an eagle, Fagrsk. 146. ara is also a common pr. name.

rin-dómr, m. gossip, 'judgment at the hearth-side', Hom.; now palldómr.

rin-eldr, m. hearth-fire, Lat. focus; þeir eru a., there are three hearths (a Norse dwelling), Gpl. 376.

rin-elja, u, f. a concubine if kept at home, med. Lat. focaria; the sense in N. G. L. i. 356, 16 (Norse).

rin-greyptr, adj. covers thrice in poetry as an epithet of the benches in hall and of a helmet, encompassing the hearth, or shaped as an eagle's, Akv. 1, 3, 17.

rin-haukr, m. a chimney-sitter, an old man; in the phrase, áttæðr er þek eldskári, an octogenarian is an a. and a poker, Lex. Run.

rin-hella, u, f. [Norse aarhelle or aarstadhjell, the pavement around a hearth], hearth-stone; í a. þar í stofunni, Bs. i. 680. Now in Icel. used in nursery tales of treasures or the like hidden under the arinbella.

RINN, s, m., dat. aarni = úrni, Fs. 42, Rm. 2, [a word still freq. in Denmark and in Norway; Dan. arne, arnested; Norse arrestad, Ivarsen; in Icel. it is very rare], a hearth, Fs. (Vd.) 42; kom maðr um tina ok tók glaðr af úrni, Sturl. ii. 101; þrjú vissa ek elda (fíres), á vissa ek arna (hearth-stones), Gh. 10; mæli malts af arni hverjum, i. three for each farm (cp. arineldar, Gpl. 376), Hkr. ii. 384, Fms. x. 3, v. 101. 2. as a law term, used in the phrase, fara eldi ok i., to remove one's homestead, fire and hearth together, Grág. ii. 253, 334 here iarni is a corrupt reading). Now in Icel. eldstó. 3. metaph. elevated balcony, pavement, story, scaffold; stafir fjórir stóðu upp ok ur upp í milli, ok var þar a. á, Fms. viii. 429; í miðju húsinu var a. r (raised floor) . . . en uppi á arminum var sæng mikil, v. 339, Karl. 3, Stj. 308. β. of a ship, a batchway, Edda (Gl.) COMPs: arins-rn, n. chimney-piece, chimney-corner; hann á mold at taka sem í lögum næt, taka at arinshornum fjórum ok í öndvegis sæti, of an act of conance, N. G. L. i. 96, cp. Eb. ch. 4, Landn. 254; arinn is symbolical of sacredness of home, just as stall is of a temple, or an altar of a church: the phrase, at drekka at arinshorni, Hkr. i. 43, reminds one of large chimney-corners in old English farms. arins-járn, n. iron ingotting to a hearth, a poker, used in ordeals (járnburðr); karlmaðr l ganga til arinsjárns en kona til kettiltaks, the man shall betake him to the poker and the woman shall grasp the kettle, N. G. L. i. 389.

ARKA, ad, to limp, bobble, of a sluggish gait; láta arka at auðnu, to let others take their own course, slow and sure like fate, Nj. 185, v. l., Am. 96. arka or arkar, what belongs to a chest, v. örk.

ARMA, u, f. misery (ἀρ. λέγ.), Mart. 123; Martinus sá örmu á héranum; v. sjú aumr á e-m, to feel pity for: cp. Germ. arm (poor, wretched).

arm-baugr, m. an armlet, Ls. 13.

arm-brýsti, n. [Engl. armbrust; old Dan. arburst], a cross bow, Fas. 03 (for word).

arm-fylkingr, f. a wing (armr) of an army, Fms. x. 403; more freq. kingar armr.

armingr, ja, m., in Norse sense, a poor fellow, Hom. 117, 119; in Icel. wretch.

arm-leggr, jar, and s, m. the arm, lacertus; hann fékk hvergi sveigt is armleggr, Gret. 61; ofan eptir a. mjök at ölnboga, Sturl. i. 71, Ab. 25, Stj. 265. Exod. vi. 1 (with a strong band), Anecd. 4 (where it opp. to handleggr, the fore arm). Sometimes armleggr and handleggr are idifferently; ek mun bera þik á handlegg mér, I will carry thee on my arm; but below, ok þar þær í vinstra a. sér, Gret. ch. 67, Karl. 517.

armliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. pitifully, Fms. iv. 56, Gkv. 3, 11.

ARMR, s, m. [Lat. armus; Ulf. arms; Engl. arm; A.S. earm; m. arm].

1. Lat. brachium in general, the arm from the shoulder to the wrist; sometimes also used partic. of the upper arm or fore arm; context only can decide. It is rare in Icel.; in prose armleggr and handleggr are more common; but it is often used in dignified style or in metaph. sense; undir brynstíkkuna í arminn, lacertus (?), Fms. viii. 387; þringir á armi, in the wrist, Odd. 18; þá lýsti af höndum hennar þi lopt ok lög, Edda 22, where the corresponding passage of the poem n. reads armar, armar lýsa, her arms beamed, spread light. β. poët. uses; sofa e-m á armi, leggia arma um, to embrace, cp. Germ. um-uen; koma á arm e-m, of a woman marrying, to come into one's embraces, Fms. xi. 100, Lex. Poët. Rings and bracelets are poët. called log, armbliki, armlinnr, armsól, armsvell, the light, snake, ice of the arm arist; armr sólbrenninn, the sunburnt arms, Rm. 10. 2. metaph. the wing of a body, opp. to its centre; armar úthafsíns, the arms of the ocean the bays and firths, Rb. 466; armar krossíns, Hom. 103; a wing a house or building, Sturl. ii. 50; borgar armr, the flanks of a castle, s. v. 280; the ends, extremities of a wave, Bs. ii. 50; the yard-arm, s. v. 6; esp. used of the wings of a host in battle (fylkingar armr), in an arm fylkingar, Fms. i. 169, 170, vi. 406, 413, Fær. 81; in a seat, of the line of ships, Fms. vi. 315; the ends of a bed, sofa upp í henn, opp. to til fóta; and in many other cases.

ARMR, adj. [Ulf. arms; A.S. earm; Germ. arm], never occurs in the sense of Lat. inops, but only metaph. (as in Goth.), viz.: 1. Norse, poor, in a good sense (as in Germ.); þær armu sáður, poor souls, Hom. 144; sá arni maðr, poor fellow, 118. 2. Icel. in a bad sense, wretched, wicked, nearly always used so, where armr is an abusive, aumr a benevolent term: used in swearing, at fara, vera, manna armast; þá mælti hann til Sigvalda, at hann skyldi fara m. a., Fms. xi. 141; en allir mæltu, at Egill skyldi fara allra manna a., Eg. 699; enn arni Bjarngrím, the wretch, scoundrel Bjarngrim, Fær. 239; viðvan arma, the accursed wretch, Fms. iii. 214; þetta arma naut, Fas. iii. 498; örm vætrr, Gkv. i. 22, Þkv. 29, Sdm. 23, Og. 32; en arma kerling, the vile old witch, Gret. 154, Fas. i. 60; Inn arni, in exclamations, the wretch!

arm-skapaðr, adj. part. [A.S. earmsceapen], poor, miserable, misshapen, Hom. 114, 107 (Norse).

arm-vitugr, adj. (in Mart. 123 spelt harmv.), charitable, compassionate; Glúmr er a. ok vel skapi farinn, Rd. 308; er hann lítt a., hard-hearted, Sturl. iii. 209; a. við fátækja menn, Bs. i. 356.

ar-mæða, u, f. (qs. ör-mæða), distress, toil, Fas. i. 405, Bs. i. 849.

arnar, belonging to an eagle, v. örn.

arningr, f. [erja, arare], earring, tillage, ploughing, Bs. i. 350, 732, 17.

arn-súgr, m. (an ἀρ. λέγ.) periphr. from the poem Haustlöng, 'the 'sough' (A.C.C.) or rushing sound caused by the flight of an eagle (örn), Edda 16.

ARTR, n. [Sauskr. arus, Engl. and Scot. arr], a scaw, v. örr.

ars, m. podex, (later by metath. rass, Bs. i. 504, l. 2, etc.), Sturl. ii. 17, 39 C; ekki er þat sem annarr smali, engi er skaptr fyrir a. aprt hali, not like other cattle, having no tail, in a libel of the year 1213, Sturl. ii. 17. COMP: ars-görn, f. gut of the anus, Nj. rass.

ARTA, u, f. a bird, = Swed. ärt, anas querquedula Linn., Edda (Gl.) articulera, ad, to articulate (Lat. word), Stj.

asalabía, u, f. an animal, perh. the sable; mjúkt skinn af dyri því er a. heitir, Bær. 19.

AST, a, m. burry (mod. word); cp. yss and ös.

ASKA, u, f. [a common Teut. word], ashes, lit. and metaph., Fms. i. 9, Stj. 208; mold ok aska, Nj. 161, 208; dust eitt ok a., 655 xi. 3; pl. öskum, Stj. 74 (transl. from Latin). COMPs: ösku-bakaðr, part. baked in ashes, Stj. 393, Judg. vii. ösku-dagr, m. Ash-Wednesday, Fms. viii. also ösku-ðóðinsdagr, Stj. 40. ösku-dreifðr, part. besprinkled with ashes, Sturl. ii. 186. ösku-dyngja, u, f. a heap of ashes, Fas. iii. 217. ösku-fall, n. a fall of ashes (from a volcano), Ann. 1300. ösku-fölr, adj. ashy-pale, pale as ashes, Mag. 4. ösku-haugr, m. a heap of ashes, Eb. 94. ösku-stó, f. ash-pit.

ask-limar, f. pl. branches of an ash, Hkv. 2, 48.

ask-maðr, m. [A.S. äsæmen, vide Adam Brem. below], a viking, pirate, a cognom., Eg., Fms., Hkr.

ASKR, s, m. [A.S. äse, whence many Engl. local names; Germ. esche], an ash, fraxinus, Edda (Gl.); a. ygdrasil, Edda 10, 11, Pr. 431. 2. anything made of ash: a. a spear, prop. asþen spear shaft (cp. δόρυ μείλιον, ἔμμελιός), Þiðr. 304, Edda (Gl.) β. a small ship, a bark (built of ash, cp. δόρυ, abies); en þeir sigla burt á einum aski, Fas. ii. 206, i. 421; it appears only two or three times in Icel. prose writers; hence may be explained the name of asæmanni, viking, pirate, in Adam Brem. ch. 212 [A.S. äsæmen], cp. askmaðr. γ. a small vessel of wood (freq. in Icel., and used instead of deep plates, often with a cover (asklok) in carved work); stórir askar fullir af skyri, Eg. 549, 550; cp. kyrnu-askr, skyr-askr. δ. a Norse measure for liquids, equal to four bowls, or sixteen justur, Gpl. 525, N. G. L. i. 328, H. E. i. 396, Fms. vii. 203. COMPs: aska-smiðr, m. ship-wright (vide β.), Eg. 102. aska-spillir, m. a ship-spoiler, i. e. a pirate, a cognom., Ghími., Landn.; v. l. akraspillir, less correctly.

askraki, a, m. probably a Finnish word; bjór (beaver), savala (sable) ok askraka (?), some animal with precious fur, Eg. 57; an ἀρ. λέγ.

askran, f. [askrast, to shudder, Ivar Aasen], horror, v. afskr-, B. K. 107. askan-viðr, ar, m. ash-tree, Str. 17.

asna, u, f. Lat. asina, a she-ass, Stj. 183. COMP: ösnuligr, adj., ö. steinn, 655. Matth. xviii. 6, transl. of οὐκὶς λίθος, the upper millstone.

ASNI, a, m., Lat. asinus, an ass, Mart. 131, Fas. iii. 416, Band. 12, = asellus, 1812, 16. COMPs: asna-höfuð, n. donkey-head, Stj. asna-kjálki, a, m. jawbone of an ass, Stj., Greg. 48.

aspiciens-bók, f. a service-book, Vm. 6, 117, 139, Am. 35, Pm., D. I., etc.

aspiciens-skrá, f. id., Pm. 104, 75, etc.

ASSA, u, f. (qs. arnsa), an eagle.

AT and að, prep., often used ellipt. dropping the case and even merely as an adverb, [Lat. ad; Ulf. at = ἄπος and παρὰ, A.S. at; Engl. at; Hel. ad = apud; O. H. G. az; lost in mod. Germ., and rare in Swed. and Dan.; in more freq. use in Engl. than any other kindred language, Icel. only excepted]: —the mod. pronunciation and spelling is að (ah); this form is very old, and is found in Icel. vellum MSS. of the 12th century, e. g. ah, 623, 60; yet in earlier times it was sounded with a tenuis, as we may infer from rhymes, e. g. jófurr hyggi at | hve ek yrkja fat, Egill: Sighvatr also makes it rhyme with a t. The verse by Thorodd—þar vastu at er fjáðr kleið þvat (Skálda 162)—is hardly intelligible unless we accept the spelling with an aspirate (að), and say that þvad is = þvá = þváði, lavabat; it may be that by the time of Thorodd and Ari the pure old pronunciation was lost, or is

'þvat' simply the A. S. þvæt, secuit? The Icelanders still, however, keep the tenuis in compounds before a vowel, or before b, v, or the liquids l, r, thus—atyrða, atorka, athöfn, athugi, athvarf, athlægi; atvinna, atvik; atлага, atliðandi (slope), atriði, atreið, atróðr: but aðdjúgr, aðfinsla (critic), aðferð, aðkoma, aðsókn, aðsúgr (crowding), aðgæzla. In some words the pronunciation is irregular, e. g. atkvæði not atkv-; atburðr, but aðbúaðr; aðhjúkran not atjúkran; atgörf not aðgörf. At, to, towards; into; against; along; by; in regard to; after.

Mostly with dat.; rarely with acc.; and sometimes ellipt.—by dropping the words 'home,' 'house,' or the like—with gen.

WITH DAT.

A. Loc. I. WITH MOTION; gener. the motion to the borders, limits of an object, and thus opp. to frá: I. towards, against, with or without the notion of arrival, esp. connected with verbs denoting motion (verba movendi et eundi), e. g. fara, ganga, koma, lúta, snúa, rétta at . . . ; Otkell laut at Skamkatli, O. louted (i. e. bowed down) towards S., Nj. 77, Fms. xi. 102; sendimárium sneri (turned) hjöltum sverðsins at konungi, towards the king, i. 15; hann snéri egginni at Ásgrími, turned the edge towards A., Nj. 220; rétta e-t at e-m, to reach, band over, Ld. 132; ganga at, to step towards, Isl. ii. 259.

2. denoting proximity, close up to, up to; Brynjólfr gengr . . . allt at honum, B. goes quite up to him, Nj. 58; Gunnarr kom þangat at þeim örnum, G. reached them even there with his arrows, 115; þeir kómust aldri at honum, they could never get near him, to close quarters, id.; reið maðr at þeim (up to them), 274; þeir höfðu rakit sporin allt at (right up to) gammanum, Fms. i. 9; komu þeir at sjó fram, came down to the sea, Bárð. 180.

3. without reference to the space traversed, to or at; koma at landi, to land, Ld. 38, Fms. viii. 358; riða at dyrum, Boll. 344; hlaupa at e-m, to run up to, run at, Fms. vii. 218, viii. 358; af sjáfanganginum er hann gekk at landinu, of the surf dashing against the shore, xi. 6; vísa ólmum hundi at manni, to set a fierce hound at a man, Grág. ii. 118; leggja e-n at velli, to lay low, Eg. 426, Nj. 117; huíga at jörðu, at grasi, at moldu, to bite the dust, to die, Njardr. 378; ganga at dómi, a law term, to go into court, of a plaintiff, defendant, or bystander, Nj. 87 (freq.)

4. denoting a motion along, into, upon; ganga at stræti, to walk along the street, Korm. 228, Fms. vii. 39; at isi, on the ice, Skálda 198, Fms. vii. 19, 246, viii. 168, Eb. 112 new Ed. (á is perh. wrong); máttu menn ganga þar yfir at skipum einum, of ships alone used as a bridge, Fas. i. 378; at höfðum, at nám, to trample on the slain on the battle-field, Lex. Poët.; at ám, along the rivers; at merkiósum, at the river's mouth, Grág. ii. 355; at endilöngu baki, all along its back, Sks. 100.

5. denoting hostility, to rush at, assault; renna at, hlaupa at, ganga, fara, riða, sækja, at e-m, (v. those words), whence the nouns atrenna, atlaupa, atgangr, atfór, atreið, atsókn, etc. β. metaph., kom at þeim svefnhöfði, deep sleep fell on them, Nj. 104. Esp. of weather, in the impers. phrase, hríð, veðr, vind, storm görir at e-m, to be overtaken by a snow storm, gale, or the like; görði þá at þeim þoku mikla, they were overtaken by a thick fog, Bárð. 171.

6. denoting around, of clothing or the like; bregða skikkju at höfði sér, to wrap his cloak over his head, Ld. 62; veftri motri at höfði sér, to wrap a snood round her head, 188; sauma at, to stick, cling close, as though sewn on; sauma at höndum sér, of tight gloves, Bs. i. 453; kyrtill svá þröngr sem saumaðr væri at honum, as though it were stitched to him, Nj. 214; vafit at vándum dreglum, tight laced with sorry tags, id.; hosa strengd fast at beini, of tight hose, Eg. 602; hann sveipar at sér íðrunum ok skyrturnu, he gathers up the entrails close to him and the skirt too, Gisl. 71; laz at síðu, a lace on the side, to keep the clothes tight, Eg. 602.

β. of burying; þera grjótt at einum, to heap stones upon the body, Eg. 719; var gör at þeim dys ór grjóti, Ld. 152; göra kistu at líki, to make a coffin for a body, Eb. 264, Landn. 56, Ld. 142.

γ. of summoning troops or followers; stefna at sér mönnum, to summon men to him, Nj. 104; stefna at sér líði, Eg. 270; kippa mönnum at sér, to gather men in haste, Ld. 64.

δ. denoting a business, engagement; riða at hrossum, at saudum, to go looking after horses, watching sheep, Glúm. 362, Nj. 75; fara at fé, to go to seek for sheep, Ld. 240; fara at heyi, to go a-baymaking, Dropl. 10; at veiðum, a-bunting; at fuglum, a-fowling; at dýrum, a-shooting; at fiski, a-fishing; at veiðiskap, Landn. 154, Orkn. 416 (in a verse), Nj. 25; fara at land-skuldum, to go a-collecting rents, Eg. 516; at Finnkaupum, a-marketing with Finns, 41; at féföngum, a-plundering, Fms. vii. 78; ganga at beina, to wait on guests, Nj. 50; starfa at matseld, to serve at table, Eb. 266; hitta e-n at nauðsýjum, on matters of business; at máli, to speak with one, etc., Fms. xi. 101; rekast at e-m, to pursue one, ix. 404; ganga at líði sér, to go suing for help, Grág. ii. 384.

β. of festivals; snúa, fü at blóti, veizlu, brullaupi, to prepare for a sacrificial banquet, wedding, or the like, henga at-fangadagr, Eb. 6, Ld. 70; koma at hendi, to happen, befall; ganga at sínu, to come by one's own, to take it, Ld. 208; Egill drakk hvert full er at honum komi, drained every horn that came to him, Eg. 210; komast at keyptu, to purchase dearly, Háv. 46.

8. denoting imaginary motion, esp. of places, cp. Lat. spectare, vergere ad . . . ; to look or lie towards; horfði botninn at höfðanum, the big eye of the bay looked toward the headland, Fms. i. 240, Landn. 35; also, skeiðgata liggir at læknum, leads to the brook, Isl. ii. 339; á þann arminn er vissi at sjánum, on that wing which looked toward the sea, Fms. viii. 115; sár þau er horft höfðu at Knúti konungi, xi. 309. β. even connected with verbs denoting motion; Gilsáreyri gengr austan at Fljótinu, G. extends, projects to F. from the east, Hrafn. 25; há sjón því, er at gengr þingstöðinni, Fms. xi. 85. II. WITH MOTION; denoting presence at near, by, at the side of, in, upon; connected with verbs like sitja, standa, vera . . . ; at kirkju, at chúreb, Fms. vii. 251, K. Þ. K. 16, Ld. 328, Isl. ii. 270, Sks. 36; vera at skála, at húsi, to be in, at home, Landn. 154; at landi, Fms. i. 82; at skipi, on shipboard, Grág. i. 209, 215; at öldri, at a banquet, inter pocula; at áti, at dinner, at a feast, inter edendum, id. 169, 170; at samförum ok samvistum, at public meetings, id.; at dómi, in a court; standa (to take one's stand) norðan, sunnan, austan, vestan at dómi, freq. in the proceedings at trials in lawsuits, Nj.; at þingi, present at the parliament, Grág. i. 142; at lögbergi, on the bill of laws, 17, Nj.; at baki e-m, at the back of.

2. denoting presence, partaking in; sitja at mat, to sit at meat, Fms. i. 241; vera at veizlu, brullaupi, to be at a banquet, nuptials, Nj. 51, Ld. 70: a law term, vera at vígi, to be an accessory in manslaying, Nj. 89, 100; vera at e-u simply means to be about, be busy in, Fms. iv. 237; standa at máli, to stand by one in a case, Grág. ii. 165, Nj. 214; vera at fóstri, to be fostered, Fms. i. 2; sitja at héggoma, to listen to nonsense, Ld. 322; vera at smíð, to be at one's work, Þórd. 62: now absol., vera at, to go on with, be busy at.

3. the law term vinna eíð at e-u has a double meaning: α. vinna eíð at bóki, at baugi, to make oath upon the book by laying the hand upon it, Landn. 258, Grág., Nj.; cp. Vkv. 31, Gkv. 3, Hkv. 2, 29, etc.: 'við' is now used in this sense. β. to confirm a fact (or the like) by an oath, to swear to, Grág. i. 9, 327. γ. the law phrase, nefna vátta at e-u, of summoning witnesses to a deed, fact, or the like; nefna vátta at þenjum, to produce evidence, witnesses as to the wounds, Nj., Grág.; at görð, Eg. 738; at svörum, Grág. i. 10; this summoning of witnesses served in old lawsuits the same purpose as modern pleadings and depositions; every step in a suit to be lawful must be followed by such a summoning or declaration.

4. used ellipt., vera at, to be about, to be busy at; kval-ararnir er at vóru at pína hann, who were tormenting him; þar varstu at, you were there present, Skálda 162; at várum þar, Gísl. (in a verse); as a law term 'vera at' means to be guilty, Glúm. 388; vartattu at þar, Eg. (in a verse); hence the ambiguity of Glum's oath, vask at þar, I was there present: var þar at kona nokkur (was there busy) at binda sár manna, Fms. v. 91; hann var at ok smíðaði skot, Rd. 313; voru Varbelgir at (about) at taka af, þau lög . . . , Fms. ix. 512; ek var at ok vafk, I was about weaving, xi. 49; þeir höfðu verit at þrjú sumur, they had been busy at it for three summers, x. 186 (now very freq.); koma at, come in, to arrive unexpectedly; Gunnarr kom at í því, G. came in at that moment;

hvaðan komtu nú at, whence did you come? Nj. 68, Fms. iii. 200. 5. denoting the kingdom or residence of a king or princely person; konungr at Danmörk ok Noregi, king of . . . , Fms. i. 119, xi. 281; konungr, jarl, at öllum Noregi, king, earl, over all N., Íb. 3, 13, Landn. 25; konungr at Dyflinni, king of Dublin, 25; but í yfir Englandi, Eg. 203; cp. the phrase, sitja at landi, to reside, of a king when at home, Hkr. i. 34; at Jómi, Fms. xi. 74; used of a bishop; biskup at Hólum, bishop of Hólar, Íb. 18, 19; but biskup í Skálalholti, 19; at Rómi, king at Rome, Fbr. 198.

6. in denoting a man's abode (vide p. 5, col. I, l. 27), the prep. 'at' is used where the local name implies the notion of by the side of, and is therefore esp. applied to words denoting a river, brook, rock, mountain, grove, or the like, and in some other instances, by, at, e. g. at Hofi (a temple), Landn. 198; at Borg (a castle), 57; at Helgafelli (a mountain), Eb. constantly so; at Mosfelli, Landn. 190; at Hálsi (a hill), Fms. xi. 22; at Bjargi, Grett. 90; Hálsnum, Landn. 143; at Á (a river), 296, 268; at Bergsá, 212; Giljá, 332; Myrká, 211; Vatnsá, id.; Þverá, Glúm. 323; at Fossi (a 'force' or waterfall), Landn. 73; at Lækjámóti (waters-meeting), 332; at Hliðarenda (end of the lithe or hill), at Bergþórshváli, Nj.; at Lundí (a grove), at Melum (sandhill), Landn. 70: the prep. 'á' is now used in most of these cases, e. g. Á, á Hofi, Helgafelli, Felli, Hálsi, etc.

β. particularly, and without any regard to etymology, used of the abode of kings or princes, to reside at; at Uppsölum, at Haugi, Alreksstöðum, at Hlödum, Landn., Fms. γ. konungr lét kalla at stofudyrum, the king made a call at the hall door, Eg. 88; þeir kölluðu at herberginu, they called at the inn, Fms. ix. 475.

7. used ellipt. with a gen., esp. if connected with such words as gista, to be a guest, lodge, dine, sup (of festivals or the like) at one's home; at Marðar, Nj. 4; at hans, 74; þingfesti at þess bóanda, Grág. i. 152; at sín, at one's own home, Eg. 371, K. Þ. K. 62; hafna máttast at Freyju, at the abode of goddess Freyja, Eg. 603; at Ránar, at Rán's, i. e. at Ran's house, of drowned men who belong to the queen of the sea, Ran, Eb. 274; at hins heilaga Ólafs konungs, at St. Olave's church, Fms. vi. 63; cp. ad Veneris, eis Kíþavos.

B. TEMP. I. at, denoting a point or period of time; at upphafi, at first, in the beginning, Ld. 104; at lykturnum, at síðustu, at lokum, at last; at lesti, at last, Lex. Poët., more freq. á lesti; at skilnaði, at parting, at last, Band. 3; at fornu, in times of yore, formerly, Eg. 267, D. I. i. 635; at sínu, as yet, at present; at nýju, anew, of present time; at eilífum, for ever and ever; at skömumu, soon, shortly, Ísl. ii. 272, v. 1.

the very moment when anything happens, the beginning of a term; denoting the seasons of the year, months, weeks, the hours of the day; Jólum, at Fule, Nj. 46; at Pálmadegi, on Palm Sunday, 273; at skum, at Easter; at Ólafsvöku, on St. Olave's eve, 29th of July, Bs.; at vetri, at the beginning of the winter, on the day when winter begins, Grág. i. 151; at sumarmálum, at vetrnátum; at Tvimánaði, when the Double month (August) begins, Ld. 256, Grág. i. 152; at heild, at eventide, Eg. 3; at því meli, at that time; at eindaga, at the end of a term, 395; at cykð, at 4 o'clock p.m., 198; at öndverðri æfi Abrahams, Ver. 11; at sinni, now at once, Fms. vi. 71; at öðruhverju, every year and then.

β. where the point of time is marked by some event; þingi, at the meeting of parliament (18th to the 24th of June), Ld. 12; at féranáðmi, at the court of execution, Grág. i. 132, 133; at glausnum, at the close of the parliament (beginning of July), 140; at armálum, eðr at eiginorði, at betrothal or nuptials, 174; at skilnaði, when they parted, Nj. 106 (above); at öllum minnum, at the general drinking of the toasts, Eg. 253; at fjöru, at the ebb; at flæðum, at flood-tide, Fms. viii. 306, Orkn. 428; at hrörum, at an inquest, Grág. i. 50 (f. ii. 141, 389); at sökum, at prosecutions, 30; at sinni, now, as yet, v. t. word.

III. ellipt., or adding 'komanda' or 'er kemr,' of the future time: I. ellipt., komanda or the like being understood, with reference to the seasons of the year; at sumri, at vetri, at hausti, at vári, next summer, winter . . ., Ísl. ii. 242; at miðju sumri, at Midsummer, next year, Fas. i. 516; at miðjum vetri, Fms. iv. 77.

2. adding 'komanda' or 'er kemr,' at ári komanda, Bárd. 17; at vári er kemr, Dipl. iii. 6.

IV. used with an absolute and with a pres. part.: I. with pres. part.; at morni komanda, at the coming morrow, Fms. i. 263; at sér lifanda, se vivo, in his life, Grág. ii. 202; at þeim sofundum, illis dormientibus, Hkr. i. 234; at öllum ásýndum, in the sight of all, Fms. x. 329; at útítanda konungi, nesciente, without his knowledge, 227; at áheyraða höfðingjanum, the chief's bearing, 235.

2. of past time with a past part. (Lat. abl. cl.); at hræjum fundnum, on the bodies being found, Grág. ii. 87; at num dómum ok föstu þingi, during the session, the courts being set, i. 4; at liðnum sex vikum, after six weeks past, Band. 13; at svá búnu, goru, svá komnu, svá mæltu (Lat. quibus rebus gestis, dictis, quo to, dicto, etc.), v. those words; at úreyndu, without trial, without putting one to the test, Ld. 76; at honum önduðum, illo mortuo. 3.

pt. without 'at;' en þessum hlutum fram komnum, when all this has been done, Eb. 132. V. in some phrases with a slight temp. notion; at gördum gildum, the fences being strong, Gpl. 387; at vörmu spori, at e, whilst the trail is warm; at úvörum, unawares, suddenly, Nj. 95, Ld. 3; at þessu, at this cost, on that condition, Eb. 38, Nj. 55; at illum, to have a narrow escape, now við illan leik, Fms. ix. 473; at því, it granted, Grág. ii. 33; at því, at þessu, thereafter, thereupon, Nj. 2.

2. denoting succession, without interruption, one after another; at öðrum, annarr maðr at öðrum, aðrir at öðrum; eina konu at annri, Eg. 91, Fms. ii. 236, vi. 25, Bs. i. 22, 625, 80, H. E. i. 522.

C. METAPH. and in various cases: I. denoting a transformation or change into, to, with the notion of destruction; brenna at ösku, köldum kolum, to burn to ashes, to be quite destroyed, Fms. i. 105, Ld. 3, Sturl. ii. 51: with the notion of transformation or transfiguration, such phrases as, verða at e-u, göra e-t at e-u, to turn it into: a. by spell; verða at ormi, to become a snake, Fms. xi. 158; at flugdrökum, plp. 7; urðu þau bönd at járn, Edda 40. β. by a natural process it often be translated by an acc. or by as; göra e-n at urðarmanni, to make him an outlaw, Eg. 728; græða e-n at örkuhlamanni, to heal him so to maim him for life, of bad treatment by a leech, Eb. 244: in the law, sár görst at ben, a wound turning into a ben, proving to be mortal, Grág. Nj.; verða at ljúgvætti, to prove to be a false evidence, Grág. i. 44; verða at sætt, to turn into reconciliation, Fms. i. 13; göra e-t at reiðilum, to take offence at, Fs. 20; at nýjum tíðindum, to tell as news, Nj. 77; verða fátt at orðum, to be sparing of words, 18; kveðr (svá) at orði, speak, utter, 10; verða at þrífnaði, to get on well, Fms. vii. 196; verða at skada, to be a help or hurt to one; at bana, to cause one's death, 223, Eg. 21, Grág. ii. 29; at undrum, at hlátri, to become a wonder, Raubing-stock, 623, 35, Eg. 553.

II. denoting capacity, where may be translated merely by as or for; gefa at Jólágjöf, to give for a Christmas-box, Eg. 516; at gjöf, for a present; at erfð, at láni, launum, an inheritance, a loan; at kaupum ok sölum, for buying and selling, Grág. ii. 223, Grág. i. 423; at sölum, ii. 204; at herfangi, as spoil plunder; at sakkbótum, at niðgjöldum, as a compensation, væregeld, 39, ii. 171, Hkr. ii. 168; taka at gisingu, to take as an hostage, Edda 77; fæða, eiga, at sonum (syni), to beget a son, Edda 8, Bs. i. 60 (but a at dóttur cannot be said); hafa möttul at yfirhöfn, Fms. vii. 201; verða at öllum at manni (mómum), to turn out to be a worthy man; verða at á manni, to turn out a worthless person, xi. 79, 268.

2. such phrases as, verða at orðum, to come to words, Nj. 26; verða at erindum, Eg. 148; hafa at veizlum, to draw veizlur (dues) from,

Fms. iv. 275, Eg. 647; göra e-t at álítum, to take it into consideration, Nj. 3.

III. denoting belonging to, fitting, of parts of the whole or of the like; vóru at honum (viz. the sword) hjölt gullbúin, the sword was ornamented with a hilt of gold, Ld. 330; unigörð at (belonging to) sverði, Fs. 97 (Hs.) in a verse; en ef mór er cigi at landinu, if there be no turf moor belonging to the land, Grág. ii. 338; svá at cigi brotnaði nokkuð at Orminum, so that no harm happened to the ship Worm, Fms. x. 356; hvatki er meidir at skipinu eðr at reiðinu eðr at víðum, damage done to . . . Grág. ii. 403; lesta (to injure) hús at lásum, vid eðr torfi, 110; ef land hefir batnað at húsum, if the land has been bettered as to its buildings, 210; cp. the phrase, göra at e-u, to repair; hamlaðr at höndum eðr fótum, maimed as to hands or feet, Eg. 14; heill at höndum en hrumr at fótum, sound in hand, palsied in foot, Fms. vii. 12; lykill at skrá, a key belonging, fitting, to the latch; hurð at húsi; a key 'gengr at' (fits) skrá; and many other phrases. 2. denoting the part by which a thing is held or to which it belongs, by; fá, taka at . . ., to grasp by . . .; þú tókt vid sverði hans at hjöltunum, you took it by the hilt, Fms. i. 15; draga út björninn at hlustum, to pull out the bear by the ears, Fas. ii. 237; at fótum, by the feet, Fms. viii. 363; mæla (to measure) at hrygg ok at jafri, by the edge or middle of the stuff, Grág. i. 498; kasta e-m at höfði, head foremost, Nj. 84; kjósa e-n at fótum, by the feet alone, Edda 46; hefja frændsemi at bræðrum, eða at systkyngum, to reckon kinsbip by the brother's or the sister's side, Grág. i. 28; kjósa at afli, at álítum, by strength, sigbt, Gs. 8, belongs rather to the following.

IV. in respect of, as regards, in regard to, as to; auðigr at fé, wealthy of goods, Nj. 16, 30, 51; beztir hestar at reið, the best racehorses, 186; spekingr at viti, a man of great intellect, Ld. 124; vænn (fagr) at áliti, fair of face, Nj. 30, Bs. i. 61; kvenna vænst at ásönun ok vitsmunum, of surpassing beauty and intellect, Ld. 122; fullkominn at hyggju, 18; um fram aðra menn at vinsældum ok harðfengi, of surpassing popularity and bardibood, Eb. 30. 2. a law term, of challenging jurors, judges, or the like, on account of, by reason of; ryðja (to challenge) at mæðgum, guðsifjum, frændsemi, hrörum . . .; at leiðarlengd, on account of distance, Grág. i. 30, 50, Nj. (freq.) 3. in arithm. denoting proportion; at helmingi, þriðjungi, fjórðungi, tíunda hluta, cp. Lat. ex asse, quadrante, for the half, third . . . part; mátt skal at magni (a proverb), might and main go together, Hkr. ii. 236; þú munst vera at því mikill fræðimaðr á kvæði, in the same proportion, as great, Fms. vi. 391, iii. 41; at e-s hluta, at . . . leiti, for one's part, in turn, as far as one is concerned, Grág. i. 322, Eg. 309, Fms. iii. 26 (freq.): at öðrum kosti, in the other case, otherwise (freq.) More gener., at öllu, öngu, in all (no) respects; at sumu, einhverju, nokkrum, partly; at festu, mestu, chiefly.

4. as a paraphrase of a genitive; faðir, móðir at barni (= barns); aðili at sök (= sakar a.); mörðingi at barni (= barns), faðerni at barni (barns); illvirki at fé manna (cp. Lat. felo de se), niðrfall at sökum (saka), landgangr at fiskum (fiska), Fms. iv. 274, Grág. i. 277, 416, N. G. L. i. 340, K. þ. K. 112, Nj. 21. 5. the phrase 'at sér,' of himself or in himself, either ellipt. or by adding the participle gör, and with the adverbs vel, illa, or the like; denoting breeding, bearing, endowments, character . . .; væn kona, kurteis ok vel at sér, an accomplished, well-bred, gifted lady, Nj. 1; vitr maðr ok vel at sér, a wise man and thoroughly good in feeling and bearing, 5; þú ert maðr vaskr ok vel at þér, 49; gerr at sér, accomplished, 51; bezt at sér gör, the finest, best bred man, 39, Ld. 124; en þó er hann svá vel at sér, so generous, Nj. 77; þeir höfðingar er svá vóru vel at sér, so noble-minded, 198, Fms. i. 160: the phrase 'at sér' is now only used of knowledge, thus maðr vel að sér means clever, a man of great knowledge; illa að sér, a blockhead.

6. denoting relations to colour, size, value, age, and the like; hvitr, svart, grár, randr . . . at lit, white, swarthy, gray, red . . . of colour, Bjarn. 55, 28, Ísl. ii. 213, etc.; mikill, lítill, at stærð, vexti, tall, small of size, etc.; ungr, gamall, barn, at aldri, young, old, a child of age; tvitugr, þrítugr . . . at aldri, twenty, thirty . . . years of age (freq.): of animals; kýr at fyrsta, öðrum . . . kálfi, a cow having calved once, twice . . . Jb. 346: value, amount, currency of money, kaupá e-t at mörk, at a mark, N. G. L. i. 352; ok er eyririnn at mörk, amounts to a mark, of the value of money, Grág. i. 392; verðr þá at hálfri mörk vaðmála eyrir, amounts to a half a mark, 500.

β. metaph. of value, connected with verbs denoting to esteem, bold; meta, hafa, halda at miklu, litlu, vettugi, engu, or the like, to hold in high or low esteem, to care or not to care for (freq.): geta e-s at göðu, illu, öngu, to mention one favourably, unfavourably, indifferently . . . (freq.), prop. in connection with. In many cases it may be translated by in; ekki er mark at draumum, there is no meaning in dreams, no heed is to be paid to dreams, Sturl. ii. 217; bráð er at þá barnið flunn, it goes too far, when even a child takes offence (a proverb); hvat er at því, what does it mean? Nj. 11; hvert þat skip er vöxtr er at, any ship of mark, i. e. however small, Fms. xi. 20.

V. denoting the source of a thing: I. source of information, to learn, perceive, get information from; Ari nam ok marga fræði at þurði, learnt as her pupil, at ber band, as St. Paul at the feet of Gamaliel, (just as the Scotch say to speer or ask at a person); Ari nam at þorgeiri afraðskoll, Hkr. (pref.); nema kunnáttu at e-m, used of a pupil, Fms. i. 8; nema þræði at e-m, xi. 396.

acquiring, buying, from; þiggja e-t at e-m, to receive a thing at his hands, Nj. 51; lif, to be pardoned, Fms. x. 173; kaupá land at e-m, to buy it from, Landn. 72, lb. 11, (now af is more freq. in this sense); geta e-t at e-m, to obtain, procure at one's hands, impetrare; þeirra manna er þeir megu þat geta at, who are willing to do that, Grág. i. 1; heimta e-t at e-m (now af), to call in, demand (a debt, money), 279; fala e-t at e-m (now af), to chaffer for or cheapen anything, Nj. 73; sækja e-t at e-m, to ask, seek for; sækja heilræði ok traust at e-m, 98; leiga e-t at e-m (now af), to borrow, Grág. ii. 334; eiga e-t (fé, skuld) at e-m, to be owed money by any one, i. 399; to deserve of one, Nj. 113; eiga mikít at e-m, to have much to do with, 138; hafa veg, virðing, styrk, at, to derive honour, power from, Fms. vi. 71, Eg. 44, Bárð. 174; gagn, to be of use, Ld. 216; mein, tálma, mischief, disadvantage, 158, 216, cp. Eg. 546; ótta, awe, Nj. 68.

VI. denoting conformity, according to, Lat. secundum, ex, after; at fornum síð, Fms. i. 112; at sögn Ara prests, as Ari relates, on his authority, 55; at ráði allra vitrustu manna, at the advice of, Ísl. ii. 259, Ld. 62; at lögum, at landslögum, by the law of the land, Grág., Nj.; at líkindum, in all likelihood, Ld. 272; at sköpum, in due course (poët.); at hinum sama hatti, in the very same manner, Grág. i. 90; at vánum, as was to be expected, Nj. 255; at leyfi e-s, by one's leave, Eg. 35; úlofi, Grág. ii. 215; at ósk, vilja e-s, as one likes . . .; at mun, id. (poët.); at sólu, happily (following the course of the sun), Bs. i. 70, 137; at því sem . . ., as to infer from . . ., Nj. 124; 'fara, láta, ganga at', denotes to yield, agree to, to comply with, give in, Ld. 168, Eg. 18, Fms. x. 368.

VII. in phrases nearly or quite adverbial; gróa, vera græddr, at heilu, to be quite bealed, Bárð. 167, Eb. 148; bita at snöggu, to bite it bare, Fms. xi. 6; at þurru, till it becomes dry, Eb. 276; at endilöngu, all along, Fas. ii; vinnast at litlu, to avail little, 655 x. 14; at fullu, fully, Nj. 257, Hkr. i. 171; at vísu, of a surety, surely, Ld. 40; at frjálusu, freely, 308; at líku, at sömu, equally, all the same, Hom. 80, Nj. 267; at röngu, wrongly, 686 B. 2; at hófi, temperately, Lex. Poët.; at mun, at ráði, at marki, to a great extent; at hringum, utterly, all round, (rare), Fms. x. 389; at einu, yet, Orkn. 358; svá at einu, því at einu, allt at einu, yet, however, nevertheless.

VIII. connected with comparatives of adverbs and adjectives, and strengthening the sense, as in Engl. 'the, so much the more, all the more'; 'at' heldr tveimr, at ek munda gjarna veita yðr öllum, where it may be translated by so much the more to two, as I would willingly grant it to all of you; hon grét at meir, she grat (wept) the more, Eg. 483; þykir oss at líkara, all the more likely, Fms. viii. 6; þess at hardari, all the harder, Sturl. iii. 202 C; svá at hinn sé bana at nær, Grág. ii. 117; at auðnara, at hlöpnara, the more happy, Al. 19, Grett. 116 B; þess at meiri, Fms. v. 64; auvirðismaðr at meiri, Sturl. ii. 139; maðr at vaskari, id.; at feigri, any the more fey, Km. 22; maðr at verri, all the worse, Nj. 168; ok er 'at' firr . . ., at ek vil miklu heldr, cp. Lat. tantum abest . . . ut, Eg. 60.

β. following after a negation; eigi at síðr, no less, Nj. 160, Ld. 146; eigi . . . at meiri maðr, any better, Eg. 425, 489; erat héra at borgnara, any the better off for that, Fms. vii. 116; eigi at minni, no less for that, Edda (pref.) 146; eigi at minna, Ld. 216, Fms. ix. 50; ekki at verri drengi, not a bit worse for that, Ld. 42; er mér ekki son minn at bættari, þótt . . ., 216; at eigi vissi at nær, any more, Fas. iii. 74.

IX. following many words: I. verbs, esp. those denoting, a. to ask, enquire, attend, seek, e. g. spyja at, to speer (ask) for; leita at, to seek for; gæta, eymeia at, to pay attention to; huga, hyggja at; hence atspurn, to enquire, aðgæzla, athugi, attention, etc.

β. verbs denoting laughter, play, joy, game, cp. the Engl. to play at . . ., to laugh at . . .; hlæja, brosa at e-u, to laugh, smile at it; leika (sér) at e-u, to play at; þykja gaman at, to enjoy; hæða, göra gys at . . ., to make sport at . . .

γ. verbs denoting assistance, help; standa, veita, vinna, hjálpa at; hence atstöð, atvinna, atverk:—mode, proceeding; fara at, to proceed, hence atfór and atferli:—compliance; láta, fara at e-u, v. above:—fault; e-t er at e-u, there is some fault in it, Fms. x. 418; skorta at e-u, to fall short of, xi. 98:—care, attendance; hjúkra at, hlýja at, v. these words:—gathering, collecting; draga, reida, flytja, fú at, congerere:—engagement, arrival, etc.; sækja at, to attack; ganga at, vera at, to be about; koma at, ellipt. to arrive: göra at, to repair: lesta at, to impair (v. above); finna at, to criticise (mod.); telja at, id.: bera at, to happen; kveða at e-m, to address one, 625, 15, (kveða at (ellipt.) now means to pronounce, and of a child to utter (read) whole syllables); falla at, of the flood-tide (ellipt.): metaph. of pains or straits surrounding one; þreyngja, herða at, to press hard: of frost and cold, with regard to the seasons; frjósa at, kólna at, to get really cold (Sl. 44), as it were from the cold stiffening all things: also of the seasons themselves; hausta, vetra að, when the season really sets in; esp. the cold seasons, 'sumra at' cannot be used, yet we may say 'vára að' when the spring sets in, and the air gets mild.

δ. in numberless other cases which may partly be seen below.

2. connected ellipt. with adverbs denoting motion from a place; norðan, austan, sunnan, vestan at, those from the north, east . . .; utan at, innan at, from the outside or inside.

3. with adjectives (but rarely), e. g. kærr, elskr, virkr (affectionate), vandr (zealous), at e-m; v. these words.

WITH ACC.

TEMP.: Lat. post, after, upon, esp. freq. in poetry, but rare in prose writers, who use eptir; nema reisi niðr at nið (= maðr eptir mann), in succession, of erecting a monument, Hm. 71; in prose, at þat, postbac, deind Fms. x. 323, cp. Rm., where it occurs several times, 2, 6, 9, 14, 18, 2, 28, 30, 35; sonr á at taka arf at föður sinn, has to take the inheritance after his father, Grág. i. 170 new Ed.; eiga féránsdóm at e-n, Grág. i. 89 at Gamla fallinn, after the death of G., Fms. x. 382; in Edda (Gl.) 113 ought to be restored, grét ok at Óð, gulli Freyja, she grat (wept) tears of gold for her lost husband Óð. It is doubtful if it is ever used in a purely literary sense; at land, Grág. (Sb.) ii. 211, is probably corrupt; at hönd = á hönd Grág. (Sb.) i. 135; at mót = at móti, v. this word.

4. In compounds (v. below) at- or að- answers in turn to Lat. at or in- or con-; atráttir e. g. denotes collecting; atkoma is adventus: may also answer to Lat. ob-, in atburðr = accidence, but might also be compared with Lat. occurrere.

AT and að, the mark of the infinitive [cp. Goth. du; A.S. and Eng to; Germ. zu]. Except in the case of a few verbs 'at' is always placed immediately before the infinitive, so as to be almost an inseparable part of the verb.

I. it is used either, 1. as a simple mark of the infinitive, only denoting an action and independent of the subject, e. g. s ganga, at hlupa, at vita, to go, to run, to know; or, 2. in an objective sense when following such verbs as bjóða segja . . ., to invite, command . . .; hann bauð þeim at ganga, at sitja, be bade, ordered them to go, sit, or the like; or as gefa and fá; gefa e-m at drekka, at eta, to give one to drink or to eat, etc. etc.

β. with the additional notion of intention, esp. when following verba cogitandi; hann ætlaði, hafði í hyggju a fara, he had it in his mind to go (where 'to go' is the real object t ætlaði and hafði í hyggju).

3. answering to the Gr. iva, denoting intention, design, in order to; hann gókk í borg at kaupá silfr, in order to buy, Nj. 280; hann sendi riddara sína með þeim at varðveita þær, 62; 45: in order to make the phrase more plain, 'svá' and 'til' are frequently added, esp. in mod. writers, 'svá at' and constr. 'svát' (the last however is rare), 'til at' and 'til þess at,' etc.

II. in the earlier times th infin., as in Greek and Lat., had no such mark; and some verbs remain that cannot be followed by 'at'; these verbs are almost the same in Ice as in Engl.: a. the auxiliary verbs vil, mun (μέλλω), skal; as in Eng to is never used after the auxiliaries shall, will, must; ek vil ganga I will go; ek mun fara, (as in North. E.) I mun go; ek skal göra þat, I shall do that, etc.

β. the verbs kunna, meiga, as in Engl. I can or may do, I dare say; svá hygginn at hann kunni fyrir sökum ráða, Grág. ii. 75 í öllu er þrýða má góðan höfðingja, Nj. 90; vera má, it may be; vera kann þat, id.: kunnu, however, takes 'at' whenever it means to know, and esp. in common language in phrases such as, það kann að vera, but vera kann þat v. above.

γ. láta, biðja, as in Engl. to let, to bid; hann lét (bað) þá fara he let (bade) them go. δ. þykkja, þykjast, to seem; hann þykir vera, he is thought to be: reflex., hann þykir vera, sibi videtur: impers., mér þykir vera, mihi videtur, in all cases without 'at.' So also freq. the verbs huga hyggja, ætla, halda, to think, when denoting merely the act of thinking but if there be any notion of intention or purpose, they assume the 'at'; thus hann ætlaði, hugði, þá vera góða menn, he thought them to be, acc. c. inf.; hann ætlaði at fara, meant to go, etc. ε. the verbs denoting to see, hear; sjá, líta, horfa á . . . (videre); heyra, audire, as in Engl. I saw them come, I heard him tell, ek sá þá koma, ek heyrði hann tala. ζ. sometimes after the verbs eiga and ganga; hann gókk steikja, he went to roast, Vkv. 9; eiga, esp. when a mere periphrasis instead of skal móður sína á maðr fyrst fram færa (better at færa), Grág. i. 232 á þann kvíð einisk meta, 59; but at meta, id. l. 24; ráða, nema göra . . ., freq. in poetry, when they are used as simple auxiliary verbs e. g. nam hann sér Högna hvetja at rúnum, Skv. 3. 43. η. hljóta and verða, when used in the sense of must (as in Engl. he must go), and when placed after the infin. of another verb; hér muntu vera hljóta Nj. 129; but hljóta at vera: fara hlýtr þú, Fms. l. 159; but þú hlýtr at fara: verða vita, ii. 146; but verða at vita: hann nam verð: sækja, þú verð (=skal) maðr eptir mann lífa, Fms. viii. 19, Fas. ii. 552, are exceptional cases.

θ. in poetry, verbs with the verbal neg suffix '-at,' freq. for the case of euphony, take no mark of the infinitive where it would be indispensable with the simple verb, vide Lex. Poët. Exceptional cases; hvárt sem hann vill 'at' verja þá sök, eða, whatevers he chooses, either, Grág. i. 64; fyrr viljum ver engu kórónu at bera, er nokkut ófélisi á oss at taka, we would rather bear no crown than . . . Fms. x. 12; the context is peculiar, and the 'at' purposely added. It may be left out ellipt.; e. g. þá er guð gefr oss finnast (= at finnast), Dipl. ii. 14; gef honum drekka (= at drekka), Pr. 470; but mostly in unclassical writers, in deeds, or the like, written hastily and in an abrupt style.

AT and að, conj. [Goth. þatei = uri; A.S. þæt; Engl. that; Germ. dass, the Ormul and Scot. at, see the quotations sub voce in Jamieson; in all South-Teutonic idioms with an initial dental: the Scandinavian idioms form an exception, having all dropped this consonant; Swed. att, Dan. at] In Icel. the Bible translation (of the 16th century) was chiefly based upon that of Luther; the hymns and the great bulk of theol. translations of that time were also derived from German; therefore the germanised form það frequently appears in the Bible, and was often employed by theol. authors in sermons since the time of the Reformation. Jón Vídalín, the greatest modern Icel. preacher, who died in 1720, in spite of his thoroughly classical style, abounds in the use of this form; but it never took root in the language, and has never passed into the spoken dialect. After a relative or demonstr. pronoun, it freq. in mod. writers assumes the form eð, hver eð, hverir eð, hvað eð, þar eð. Before the prep. þú (tu), þ changes into t, and is spelt in a single word atú, which is freq. in some MS.;—now, however, pronounced addú, aðdeir, aððið . . . = add þú . . . with the soft Engl. th sound. It gener. answers to Lat. ut, or to the relat. pron. qui.

I. that, relative to svá, to denote proportion, degree, so . . ., þat, Lat. tam, tantus, tot . . ., ut; svá mikill lagamaðr, at . . ., so great a lawyer, that . . ., Nj. 1; hárdi svá mikill, at þat . . ., 2; svá komma sýnir því máli, at Sigvaldi, it came so far, that . . ., Fms. xi. 95, Edda 33. Rarely and unclass., ellipt. without svá; Bæringr var til seinnr epitr honum, at hann . . . (= svá at), Bær. 15; hlífði honum, at hann sakaði ekki, Fas. iii. 441.

II. it is used, I. with indic. in a narrative sense, answering partly to Gr. ὅτι, Lat. quod, ut, in such phrases as, it came to pass, happened that . . .; þat var einhverjur sinni, at Höskuldur hafði vinaboð, Nj. 2; þat var á palm-drottinsdag, at Ólafur koungrr gekk út um stræti, Fms. ii. 244.

2. with subj. answering to Lat. acc. with infin., to mark the relation of an object to the chief verb, e. g. vilda ek at þú réðist, I wished that you would, Nj. 57.

β. or in an oblique sentence, answering to ita ut . . .; ef svá kann verða at þeir láti . . ., if it may be so that they might . . ., Fms. xi. 94.

γ. with a subj. denoting design, answering to Gr. ἵνα or Lat. ut with subj., in order that: at öll veraldar byggðin viti, ut sciat totus orbis, Stj.; þeir skáru fyrir þá melinn, at þeir dæi eigi af sulti, ut ne fame perirent, Nj. 265; fyrsti hlutr bókarinnar er Kristindómsbálkr, at menn skili, in order that men may understand, Gpl. p. viii.

III. used in connection with conjunctions, I. esp. þó, því, svá; þó at freq. contr. þótt; svát is rare and obsolete. a. þóat, þótt (North. E. thof'), followed by a subjunctive, though, although, Lat. etsi, quamquam (very freq.); þóat nokkurum mönnum sýnist þetta með freku sett . . . þá viljum vér, Fms. vi. 21: phrases as, gef þú mér þó at úverðugri, etsi indignae (dat.), Stj. MS. col. 315, are unclass., and influenced by the Latin: sometimes ellipt. without 'þó'; eigi mundi hón þá meir hvata göngu sinni, at (= þóat) hon hráddist bana sinn, Edda 7, Nj. 64: 'þó' and 'at' separated, svarar hann þó rétt, at hann svari svá, Grág. i. 23; þó er rétt at nýta, at hann sé fyrr skorinn, answering to Engl. yet—though, Lat. attamen—etsi, K. þ. K.

β. því at, because, Lat. nam, quia, with indic.; því at allir vóru gefliligr sýnir hans, Ld. 68; því at af íþróttum verð maðr fróðr, Sks. 16: separated, því þegi ek, at ek undrunst, Fms. iii. 201; því er þessa getið, at þat þótti, it is mentioned because . . ., Ld. 68.

γ. svá at, so that, Lat. ut, ita ut; grátrinn kom upp, svá at eingi mátti öðrum segja, Edda 37: separated, so . . . that, svá úsvát at . . ., so bad weather, that, Bs. i. 339, etc.

2. it is freq. used superfluously, esp. after relatives; hver at = hverr, quis; því at = því, igitur; hverr at þekkr ok þægilig mun verða, Fms. v. 159; hvern styrk at hann mundi fá, 44; ek undrunst hvé mikil ógnarraust at ligger í þér, iii. 201; því at ek mátti eigi þar vera elligr, því at þar var kristni vel haldin, Fas. i. 340.

IV. 1. temp. when, Lat. quum; jafnan er (est) mér þá verra er (quum) ek fer á braut þaðan, en þá at (quum) ek kem, Grettr. 150 A; þar til at vér vitum, till we know, Fms. v. 52; þá at ek lýsta (= þá er), when, Nj. 233.

2. since, because; ek færi yðr (hann), at þér eruð í einum hrepp allir, because of your being all of the same Ræpe, Grág. i. 260; eigi er kynlegt at (though) Skarphéðinn sé hraustr, at þat er mælt at . . ., because (since) it is a saying that . . ., Nj. 64.

V. in mod. writers it is also freq. superfluously joined to the conjunctions, ef að = ef, si, (Lv. 45 is from a paper MS.), meðan að = meðan, dum; nema að = nisi; fyrst að = fyrst, quoniam; eptir að, síðan að, postquam; hvárt að = hvárt, Lat. an. In the law we find passages such as, þá er um er dæmt eina sök, at þá eigu þeir aprt at ganga í dóminn, Grág. i. 79; ef þing ber á hina helgu viku, at þá á eigi fyrir þeim málum at standa, 106; þat er ok, at þeir skulu reifa máll manna, 64; at þeir skulu með váttröð þá sök sækja, 65: in all these cases 'at' is either superfluous or, which is more likely, of an ellipt. nature, 'the law decrees' or 'it is decreed' being understood. The passages Sks. 551, 552, 568, 718 B, at lokit (= at ek hefi lokit), at hagleitt (= at ek hefi h.), at sent (= at ek hefi sent) are quite exceptional.

AT and að, an indecl. relat. pronoun [Ulf. þatei = ds, ds av, dsotis, dsaterp, olos, etc.; Engl. that, Ormul. at], with the initial letter dropped, as in the conj. at, (cp. also the Old Engl. at, which is both a conj. and a pronoun, e. g. Barbour vi. 24 in Jamieson: 'I drede that his grett wassalage, | And his travail may bring till end, | That at men quhile full litil wend.' | 'His mestyr speryt quhat tithings at he saw.'—Wyntoun v. 3. 89.) In Icel. 'er' (the relat. pronoun) and 'at' are used indifferently, so that where one MS. reads 'er,' another reads 'at,' and vice versa; this may easily be seen by looking at the MSS.; yet as a rule 'er' is much more freq. used. In mod. writers 'at' is freq. turned into 'ed,' esp. as a superfluous particle after the relative pron. hverr (hver eð, hvað eð, hverir eð, etc.), or the demonstr. sá (sá eð, þeir eð, hinir eð, etc.):—wbo, whicb, that, enn bezta grip at (whicb) hafði til Íslands komið, Ld. 202; en engi mun sá at (cui) minnisamara mun vera, 242; sem hlótnaut at (quae) starst verða, Fms. iii. 214; þau tiliðendi, at mér þætti verri, Nj. 64, etc. etc.

AT, n. collision (poët.); odda at, crossing of spears, crash of spears, hlöfuðl, 8. β. a fight or bait of wild animals, esp. of horses, v. hesta-at and etja.

AT, the negative verbal suffix, v. -a. ata, u, f. an obscure word, and probably a corrupt reading; ní skýtr maðr á hvali í atu ok hnekkir Guðs gáfu, N. G. L. i. 59.

ata, að, to stain, defile, smear; líkþrá Naaman skal atast á þik ok þína ætt, Stj. 618. 2 Kings vi. 27 (now freq.).

atall, ötul, atalt, adj. [at, n.; Ormul. atell = turpis], fierce, Lat. atrox; ötul augu, fierce, piercing eyes, Hkv. i. 3; þetta fólk er atalt ok illt, Hkv. iii. 313; ötul, amatlig, fierce and loathsome, use of a witch, Hkv. i. 38: Atli ek heiti, a. skal ek þér vera, where the poet plays on the likeness between the pr. name Atli and the adj. atall, my name is 'Savage'; savage shall I prove to thee, Hkv. Hjörv. 15. At the present day, freq. in the changed form ötull, in a good sense, brisk, strenuous.

atan or ötun, f. defiling. atatata, an onomatopoeitic interj., imitating the chattering of the teeth through cold, Orkn. 326 (in a verse).

at-beini, a, m. assistance, support, Fms. vi. 66; vera í a. með e-m, to assist one, Fas. i. 265.

at-bót, f. repair (now aðgjörð), Vm. 4, Dipl. ii. 13.

at-burðr, ar, m. pl. ir, [bera at, accidere.] 1. a chance, hap, accident; verðr sá a., it so happened, Nj. 54, Vápn. 49; af (með) atburð, accidentally, perchance, Mart. 126, El. 5, 9, Mar. 656 ii. 16; með hverjum atburðum, how, by what chance? Róm. 287, Eluc. 12; slíkt kalla ek a. en eigi jarstein, such things I call an accident but not a miracle, Sturl. ii. 54; fyrir a. sakir hreysti hans, because of his valour, Skálda 189, Sks. 147.

2. esp. in pl., events, matters, circumstances; dráp Bárðar ok þá atburði er þar höfðu orðið, Barð's death and the events that had happened, Eg. 222; Ólafur sagði honum alla atburði um sitt mál, O. told him minutely how his matters stood, Hkr. i. 193; þær sem skýra í hverjum atburðum menn fella á sik fullkomið þann, under what circumstances . . ., H. E. i. 462.

at-búnaðr, ar, m. attention, care, especially of funeral rites; veita a. dauðum mönnum, to lay out dead bodies, Eg. 34, v. l. 2. now gener. accommodation or assistance in all that regards domestic life, esp. clothing; góðr, illr a.

at-djúp and atdýpi, n. deep water close to shore, Háv. 48.

at-djúpt, n. adj. id., 623. 45; superl. aðdjúpast, Fms. xi. 70.

at-drátt, ar, m. pl. drættir, [draga at], provisions, supplies for household use; hafði hann a. at þeirra bú, he supplied their household, Háv. 39; atdrættir ok útvegjar, means and provisions, Fms. xi. 423; a. af fiskum, Hrafn. 22. β. metaph. support, H. E. i. 244. COMPD: atdrátta-maðr, m., mikill a., a good housekeeper, Eb. 26.

at-dugnaðr, m. [at-duga, to assist], assistance, Fas. ii. 296.

at-eggjan, f. eggung on, instigation, Al. 5.

at-fall, n. [falla at], 'on-fall,' = of the flood-tide, Ld. 56, Orkn. 428.

at-fang, n. [fá at, to provide], only in pl., provisions, victuals, Bs. i. 130. Esp. used with dagr, or kveld, of the eve of great festivals, and partic. that of Yule: atfanga-dagr, pronounced affanga-, m., a Jola, Yule Eve, Christmas Eve, Grettr. 97, 140, Fms. ii. 37, Ísl. ii. 232, Orkn. 186 old Ed., where the new Ed. p. 242 reads atfangs- (in sing.), which is very rare, þórð. II. atfangadags-kveld, n. Christmas Eve, Bárð. 176.

atfanga-maðr, m. = atdrátta-maðr, Grettr. 119 A.

at-fara-, v. atfór.

at-ferð, f. (neut. 655 xxxii.) a. aggression, incursion, in a hostile sense, Fms. ix. 11, v. l.

β. more freq. in a good sense, exertion, activity, Fs. 4; vikjast eptir atferðum eina fyrri frænda þinna, to imitate their good deeds, id.; atferð ok eljum, energy, Ld. 318.

γ. a law term, execution; með dómrofum ok atferðum, Gpl. 183.

δ. behaviour, proceeding, conduct; hverja a. vér skulum hafa, Nj. 194, Rb. 390, Sks. 239, 655 xxxii. 2;—now freq. in the last sense. COMPD: atferðar-leysi, n. idleness, inactivity, helplessness, Fær. 232, 544. 23. atferðar-maðr, m. a skilful man, Bs. i. 639.

atferð-ligr, adj. fit or manly, Fms. viii. 53, v. l.

at-ferli, n. [ferill], action, proceeding, used esp. as a law term, proceeding, procedure; með eum sama a., Grág. ii. 405: plur. skal sá slík atferli hafa öll um lýsingar sem aðr er tint, 27, H. E. ii. 75. β. method; þá eru mörg a. jafnrétt til þess, Rb. 38. γ. hann spurðist fyrir um a. héraðsmanna, what they were doing, Grettr. 123 A. δ. gramm., a. parta (modi partium orationis) eru tólf, Skálda 185.

at-flutning, f. (now -ingr, m.), purveyance, supply, in plur., Eg. 275, Fms. ii. 68, viii. 179.

at-fylgi, n. and atfylgja, n. f. help, backing, support, Fms. ii. 105, Stj. 384, Hom. 139, Fms. x. 60, v. l.

at-færsla, n. f. exertion, courage, K. þ. K. 94 (rare). COMPD: at-færslu-maðr, m. a man of vigour, Bret. 12, 155.

at-för, ar, f. 1. prop. a going to; as a Norse law term, execution, dómr ok atfór, Gpl. 361, 389; mod. Dan. adfær, cp. atferð, γ. 2. in Icel. commonly of an onslaught or armed aggression, Fms. i. 54, Nj. 92, 93, 99, 113, Sturl. iii. 237, Ann. 1252. 3. method = aðferð, Fms. ii. 328.

COMPS: atfarar-dóm, m. sentence of execution for payment, Gpl., N. G. L. i. 154. atfarar-þing, n. court of execution, MS. 302, 172 (Norse). atfara-laust, n. adj. quiet, with no act of violence between two hostile parties, Eb. 244, Sturl. ii. 40.

at-ganga, u. f. 1. attack in a fight, onslaught, Fms. i. 36, Nj. 36, Lv. 13, Bret. 6. 2. peaceful help, Fms. xi. 86, Nj. 99, Isl. ii. 210. COMPD: atgöngu-mikill, adj. unruly, quarrelsome, aggressive, Fs. 41.

at-gangr, m. 1. fighting, combat, aggression, Isl. ii. 268, Korm. 242: injury, violence, = ágangr, Fms. vi. 239. 2. help, co-operation, Grett. 157, 162, Vigl. 19. 3. now, redress, recovery of a claim.

COMPD: atgangs-mikill, adj. = energetic, Grett. 129 A. at-geirr, m. (false spelling argeirr), a bill or halberd, undoubtedly a foreign weapon, rarely mentioned in the Sagas, but famous as the favourite weapon of Gunnar of Hlíðarendi; mentioned besides in Sks. 392, Landn. 163, Eb. 120, Fm. iii. 100, v. 249, Fas. iii. 462, but esp. Nj. 44, 45, 84, 95, 97, 108, 114, 119: in the Nj. used generally of thrusting, but also of hewing; Högni hjó í sundr spjótt skaptið með atgeirinum, en rekr atgeirinn í gegnum hann, H. hewed in sunder the spearshaft with the bill, and drives the bill through him, Nj. 119; in Landn. 163 mentioned as a javelin.

at-gengiligr, adj. acceptable, inviting, Bs. i. 372. at-gerð, atgervi, atgeyrð, v. atgörð, -görvi. at-gæzla, u. f. superintendance, care, caution, Sturl. iii. 58 (now freq.) atgörð, f. 1. plur. measures, steps taken; lídar atgörðir, small measures, Isl. ii. 355, Fs. 4; var eigi vænt til atgerða, few expedients, Grett. 124. 2. repair of a building or the like (now freq.), Dipl. v. 145. β. a surgical operation, medical help, Bs. i. 108, 618, 644; Sturl. i. 43 is a bad reading. COMPS: atgörða-lauss, adj. helpless, lazy, inactive, Al. 25; neut., atgörðarlaust er um e-t, no steps are taken, Fms. vi. 38. atgörða-maðr, m. a ready man, El. 15, Sturl. ii. 127. atgörðar-mikill, adj. active, Nj. 56.

at-görvi, atgerfi, atgjörfi, f.; neut., Fms. x. 293 C. [görr at sér, accomplished]; endowments, accomplishments derived from good training added to natural gifts; in olden times esp. those of an athletic or physical kind; friðleik, vöxt, afl, ok alla a., beauty, stature, strength, and all accomplishments whatever, Eg. 29, Fbr. 56, Fms. vi. 5, 268, i. 30, viii. 140, x. 293; at íþróttum, a. ok vinsæld, Hkr. i. 212: of spiritual qualities and character (rare in old writers), af Guðs göðgött ok sjálfs síns a. göfgastr maðr á Íslandi, Bs. i. (Hv.) 70; at lærðómi, vitrleik ok a., 130. Páls S. COMPD: atgörvi-maðr, and more freq. atgörvis-maðr, m. a man of great (physical) accomplishments, Fms. i. 17, Eg. 685 (where it is used of a young promising poet), 22, Ld. 12; used of an artist, Isl. ii. 171: a. um marga hluti, man of great capacity, 191; used of a musician, Grett. 158.

at-hald, n. constraint, coercion, restraint, Fbr. 2, Fms. xi. 228. at-hjúkan (now aðhjúkrun), f. [hjúka at e-m], heed, attention, care in the most tender sense of that word, e. g. that of a mother to her sick child; attention to a sick, frozen, shipwrecked, or destitute person, Fms. viii. 444, Fimb. 234, v. 1.

at-hlaup, n. onslaught, assault, Fms. viii. 35, Bjarn. 37; í einu a., in one rush in a battle, Ld. 64; veita manni a. eðr sár, violence or wound, K. Á. 48; tókst nú þegar a., a band to hand fight, Gullp. 12. at-hlát, m. [hlægja at], a laughing-stock, Fms. ii. 182.

at-hlægi, u. ridicule, mockery; með a. ok sköm, ridicule and shame, Fms. x. 279; ef a. er vert, if it be ridicule, vi. 208; a. eðr úmannan, a laughing-stock and a wretch, Sturl. iii. 240.

at-hlægiligr, adj. ridiculous, Band. 13. at-huga, að, to heed, betink oneself, pay attention to, consider; a. sik, to take heed, Sturl. iv. 75 in a mod. MS.; cp. Bs. i. 744 (now freq.) at-hugall, adj. heedful, careful, Sturl. iii. 125, Sks. 296.

at-hugi, a. m. heed, care, attention, consideration, Hom. 52; af öllum a., carefully, Post. 656 B; hið elzta (barn) hefir ekki a. hit minsta, the eldest bairn has no heed on his shoulders, El. 19, Sks. 482; með a. ok áhyggju, with care and concern, Fms. x. 281. COMPS: athuga-lauss, adj. heedless. athuga-leysi, n. heedlessness, Stj. 6, Fas. i. 245; hlýtr jafnan illt af a., 'Don't care' comes over to a bad end (a proverb), Grett. 118 A. athugaliga, adv. attentively, Sks. 360. athuga-litill, adj. little careful, heedless, Bs. i. 190. athuga-samliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. attentively, attentive, Sks. 600, 360, 6, 472. athuga-samr, adj. heedful, attentive, Hom. 58, Fms. viii. 447. athuga-verðr, adj. worthy of attention, Fms. x. 276.

at-hvarf, n. [hverfa at, to turn towards]: a. in the phrase, göra e-m a., to pay one compliments, pay attention to, Bs. i. 801; hann er vel við þormóð ok gördi meir at athvarfi við hann, be treated Tb. respectfully or cultivated his friendship, Fbr. 119; Sigthvarr gördi at athvarfi um sendimenn konungs, ok spurði þá marga tíðenda, be communicated with them or paid them visits, attended to them, Hkr. ii. 214. β. athvarf is now freq. in the sense of shelter, refuge.

at-hygli, f. [athugall], heedfulness, attention; með a., Sks. I, 445 B, 564, Fms. vi. 446, (now used as neut.) at-hyllast, t. dep. (qs. athyglast), to lean towards, be on the side of,

do homage to; with acc., af því skolu vér a. þenna engil í beonum várum, to cultivate his friendship, Hom. A. M. 237. 7; at a. ok sækja e-t ar maðar örvi, 655 xiii. B. 4, Bs. i. 202; ætlum vér þann yðvarn at i er mestan görvi várm sóma, take his part, who . . ., Fms. v. 273.

at-hæfi (not athæfi, víða Sks. B., which carefully distinguishes between æ and æ), n. conduct, behaviour; a. kristinna manna, their rites, service, Fms. ii. 37, cp. Ld. 174; í öllu sínu a., conduct, proceeding, Fms. xi. 71 viii. 253; manners, ceremonies, Sks. 301; konunga a., royal manner, Hom.: þetta hefir verið a. (instinct) þessa skrimsls, Sks.: deeds, doings; sk: nú þar standa fyrst um a. þeirra, Mag. 11. Now freq. in a theol. sense.

at-hæfiligr, adj. fit, fitting, due, Eg. 103, Finnb. 228. at-höfn, f. [hafast at, to committ], conduct, behaviour, business; hva er hann hafði frétt um a. Skota konungs, bis doings and whereabouts, Eg. 271; feugin var þeim önnur a., occupation, Fbr. 19; ganga til skripta ok segja sínar athafur, to go to shrift and confess his behaviour, Fms. i. 301; í athöfnum margin, en sumir i kaupferðum, Orkn. 298; er þat ok líkligt at þú fylgir þar eptir þinni a., (ironically) that you will go you own foolish way, Fs. 4. COMPS: athafnar-lauss, adj. inactive, Fm. iii. 128, 154. athafnar-leysi, n. inactivity. athafnar-maðr an athafna-, m. a busy enterprising man, Hkr. ii. 255, Fær. 209. In a ba sense, a laughing-stock: göra e-n at athafnarmanni, to make a butt of him, Sturl. i. 24, 181, this last sense seems to be peculiar to the first and second part (þátrr) of the Sturl., which were not written by Sturla himself, but by an unknown author.

at-kall, n. demand, call, request, solicitation, Bs. i. 735, Al. 64, Ver. 48. at-kast, n. a casting in one's teeth, a rebuke, reproach, Mag. 65. at-keri, anebor, v. akkeri.

at-kvæma, and later form aðkoma or atkoma, u. f. arrival, Ld. 78 Fms. vi. 239; metaph. (eccl.) pain, visitation, Hom. 68, 121. Now used in many compds: aðkomu-maðr, m. a guest, etc.

at-kvæði, u. [kveða at orði]. I. a technical phrase, esp. in law; svá skal sækja at öllu um fjártökuna, sem þjófsök fyrir utan a. the proceeding is all the same with the exception of the technical terms Grág. ii. 190; at þeim atkvæðum er Helgi hafði í stefnu við þik, the expressions used by Helgi in summoning thee, Boll. 354. β. a word, expression in general; þat er þrifast a., mannvit, siðgæði ok hæverska, Sks. 431 303; en þó vér mælum alla þessa hluti með breiðu a., in broad, general terms Anecd. 21, Þidr. I. γ. now used gramm. for a syllable, and in many compds such as, eins atkvæðis orð, a monosyllable; tveggja, þriggja . . . atkvæða . . . etc., a dissyllable, etc.: 'kveða at' also means to collect the letters into syllables, used of children when they begin to spell. Ok writers use atkvæði differently in a grammatical sense, viz. = pronunciation sound, now framburð; þeir stafir megu hafa tveggja samhljóðenda a., hver einn, Skálda (Thorodd) 165; eins stafs a.; a. nafns hvers þeirra; þá er þat a. hans í hverju máli sem eptir lífir nafnsins (in the last passage = the name of the letter), 168.

II. a decision, sentence, almost always in plur.; beið hann þinna atkvæða, Nj. 78; var því vikitt til atkvæða (decision) Marðar, 207; bíða atkvæða Magnúss konungs um álog ok pytingar, Fms. vi. 192: sing., var þat biskups a., bis decision, v. 106; hví gegnir þetta a. (sentence) jarl, rangliga dæmir þú, 656 B; þínu boði ok a., command and decisive vote, Stj. 203; af atkvæði guðanna, by their decree, Edda 9, Bret. 53. β. now a law term = vote, and in a great many compds: atkvæða-greiðsla, division; atkvæða-fjöldi, votes, a. munr, majority, etc.

III. a decree of fate, a spell, charm, in a supernatural sense, = ákvæði; af forlögum ok a. ramra hluta, Fs. 23; konungur sagði úhægt at göra við atkvæðum, . . . to resist charms (MS. akvedni, where it is uncertain whether the reading is ákv- or atkv-); a. Finunnar, the spell of the Finnish witch, 22; svá mikil a. (pl.) ok ílska fylgði þessum álogum, Fas. i. 404, iii. 239, Fms. x. 172. COMPS: atkvæða-lauss, adj. [kveða at, to be important], unimportant, of no consequence, Fas. ii. 242. atkvæða-maðr, m. a man of weighty utterance, of importance, Fms. xi. 223. atkvæða-mikill, adj. of weight, note, authority, Nj. 51.

atla, að, to 'ette', intend, purpose, Bret. 144; so according to the modern pronunciation of æta, q. v.

at-laga, u. f. an attack in a sea fight, of the act of laying ships alongside; skipa til a., Fms. i. 169, iv. 103; hörd a., bard fight, xi. 133, Hkr. ii. 272, Nj. 125, Sturl. iii. 63, etc.: more rarely of an attack on land, Fms. vii. 244, Al. 122, Isl. ii. 83, Bret. 50. β. an advance, landing, without notion of fight, Fms. ix. 430. COMPS: atlögu-flokk, m. the name of a poem describing a battle by sea, Sturl. iii. 63. atlögu-skip, n. a ship engaged in battle, Fms. viii. 382.

at-lát, n. [láta at e-u, to comply with], compliance, Hom. 47; synda a., indulgence in sin, Greg. 31. Now, atlæti, n. and atlot, n. pl. treatment; gott atlæti, kindness; ill atlot, barsness, esp. in respect to children.

at-lega, u. f. shelter for sheep and cattle on the common pastures; hagbeit á vetrum ok a. fé sínu at selinu, Dipl. v. 4 (rare).

at-mæli, n. abuse, offensive language, Bs. ii. 181. atoma, u. f. an atom, Rb. 114; a. weight, subdivision of an ounce, 532. I.

at-orka, u. f. energy, activity. COMPS: atorku-maðr, m. an active man. atorku-samr, adj. active. atorku-semi, f. activity.

t-rás, f. an on-rush, charge, attack, Fms. viii. 413, v. árás.
 t-reið, f. (milit.) a riding at, a charge of horse, Fms. vi. 417, in the description of the battle at Stamford Bridge: Hkr. iii. 162 has úreið, but the MSS. areið, vii. 57. β. the act of riding at or over, Nj. 21; esp. the translation of French romances of tilting in tournaments, Str. (freq.)
 t-reiðar-áss, m. a quintain pole, at which to ride a-tilt, El. 15.
 t-rekandi, m. pressing efforts, exertions; svá mikill a. var görð um hina, the search was carried on so thoroughly, Band. 4 C; cp. reki.
 t-renna, u, f. a slip. COMPD: atrennu-lykkja, u, f. a running ol, a noose, Fms. vi. 368.
 t-rið, now atriði, n. 1. = atrið, movement, in the phrase, hann riði allt eitt atriðið, he did both things at once, in the twinkling of an eye, Grett. 95 new Ed. 2. a gramm. term in the compd atriðskaup, f. probably = ἀσινδερων, Edda (Ht.) 124, cp. Ed. Havn. ii. 154, Skálda 193; atrið would thus mean a word, sentence. It is now very q. in the form atriði, n. in a metaph. sense, the chief point in a sentence, a part, paragraph, and used in many compds. Atriðr, m. is one of: pœt. names of Odin, the wise (?).
 t-róðr, rs, m. a rowing at, i. e. an attack made (by a ship) with oars, is. ii. 310, Hkr. ii. 272, etc. β. gener. rowing towards, Jb. 308.
 t-samr, adj. [at, n.], quarrelsome, an ἄμ. λέγ., Fms. iv. 205; cp. Hkr. l. c. t-seta, u, f. a royal residence; hafa a., to reside, used especially of kings, Fms. i. 23, x. 209, Hkr. i. 63, Eg. 170, Nj. 5, etc.
 t-setr, rs, n. id., vidc konungs-atsetr.
 t-skiljanligr, adj. [Dan. adskellig], various, different, Karl. 206, (an class. word.)
 t-skilnaðr, ar, m., in mod. Icel. = parting, separation. β. discórd, ett. 88; A. B. C, however, have áskilnaðr.
 t-sókn, f. [sækja at], onslaught, attack, Fms. i. 64, Nj. 100, etc. β. throng of guests or visitors seeking hospitality; fóng vóru litil en a kill, Bs. i. 63 (now freq.) γ. in popular superstition, the foreboding a guest's arrival; sleep, drowsiness, or the like, caused, as people believe, the fylgja or 'fetch' of the guest, his sure forerunner; the Icelanders ak of a good, agreeable aðsókn, or a bad, disagreeable one; a man may sjá vel eðr illa að, as he is an agreeable guest or not. Only a 'fey' n's fylgja follows after him. Vide Ísl. Þjóðs. i. 354 sqq. COMPD: sóknar-maðr, m. aggressor, Fs. 70.
 t-spurning, f. [spyrja at], 'speering' at, inquiry, in the phrase, leidda þurningum, which ought, however, to be in two words, Fb. i. 216.
 t-staða, u, f., now aðstoð, n. a standing by, backing, support, Bs. i. 6. β. earnest request, Mar. (Fr.)
 t-stuðning, f. and -ingr, m. [styðja at], support, Fas. i. 24.
 t-súgr, m. prop. pressure [súgr] caused by crowding; now freq. in the case, góra a. að e-m, to mob one. β. the phrase, bora frekan at súgr e-t (where the metaphor is taken from boring), to deal barsbly with, see through to the marrow, Orkn. 144: cp. Fms. vii. 29.
 t-svif, n. incident, bearing, Sks. 682. β. medic. lipotymia, a faint-fit, swoon, FéL. ix. 185; cp. að svifa yfir e-n, to be taken in a fit, Sturl. 286.
 t-tú, by assimilation = at þú, that thou, freq. e. g. in the Orkn. new Ed.
 t-tönn, f. [at, n.], a tusk, Fas. i. 366.
 t-veizla, u, f. [veita at], assistance, Fms. x. 60, v. l. t-verknaðr, m. work, especially in baymaking; Þórgunnu var ætlað atsóðr til atverknaðar, to toss and dry it, Eb. 26: now, vinna at heyl, toss it for drying.
 t-vik, n. [vikja at], mostly in plur. details, particulars; in the phrases, fir atvikum, according to the circumstances of each case, Gpl. 403; atvik ar, the particulars of a case, Sks. 663; með atvikum, circumstanti-y, chapter and verse, Fas. iii. 330: in Stj. 179 it seems to mean ges-II. an onset, prob. only another way of spelling atvigi, G. L. ii. 65; at ek geta eigi hefnt þessa atviks er mér er görð, that cannot get this affront avenged which has been done me, Grett. 151 A. t-vinna, u, f. means of subsistence, support, Grág. i. 294, Jb. 151, Fræ. i. Stj. 143, 291, 623. 41, 656 A. 655. 20, Clem. 56, Jb. 151, Fms. v. 239: our, occupation, Anecd. 20, Sks. 603, (now very freq.) COMPD: vinnu-lauss, adj. without means of subsistence, Fms. ii. 97.
 t-vist, f. [væsa at], presence, esp. as a law term, opp. to an alibi, the of being present at a crime: the law distinguishes between ráð (plot-g), tilfór (partaking), and a. (presence), Grág. ii. 37; vera í atsókn a., to be present and a partaker in the onslaught, Nj. 100. β. transl. the Lat. assiduitas, 677. 12.
 t-vígi, n. onset, onslaught, N. G. L. ii. 65, cp. i. 126, Fas. ii. 244.
 t-yrið, n. pl. abusive words, Fs. 5, Fms. iii. 154.
AUÐ-, adverbial prefix to a great many adjectives, adverbs, and particles, seldom to subst. nouns, [not found in Ulf.; A. S. eað-, as in eað-du, humilitas, and also as a separate adj. eáde, facilis; Old Engl. 'eath,' 'neath,' for 'easy,' 'uneasy;'] Hel. óð and óði, facilis, unóði, difficilis], y, opp. to tor-. To this 'auð' and not to 'old' may perhaps be referred some of the compds of auð and auð in Scottish and provincial glish. Thus 'audie' in Scotch means an easy careless fellow; 'auð farand,' or 'auð farand,' may both mean easy going: v. the words in Jamieson and the Craven Glossary. auða, u, f. desolation, þiðr. 2. auð-bœðinn, adj. part. [A. S. eáðbede], easily persuaded to do a thing, with gen. of the thing, Eg. 17, 467.

 auð-bættir, adj. part. easily compensated for, Glúm. (in a verse).
 auð-eggjaðr, adj. part. easily egged on to do, with gen., Fms. v. 62. auð-fenginn, adj. part. easy to get, Fs. 62, Grett. 113 A, Mag. 1, where it is spelt auðu-; cp. toru- = tor-. auð-fengr, adj. id., Hým. 18; a. var lið, 655 xxviii, Fms. v. 274.
 auð-fundinn, adj. part. easy to find, in promptu, Hkr. ii. 111; neut. used metaph. easy to perceive, clear, Eg. 54, Ld. 194, v. l. auð-fyndr, adj. an older form, id., used only as neut. easily perceived, clear; þat var a., at . . . it could easily be seen, that . . . , Ld. 194.
 auðga, að, [Ulf. auþgjan = μακάρι(ε)ν; A. S. eáðgjan = beatum facere], to enrich, Bs. i. 320, Stj. 68; reflex., hafði Noregr mikil auðgast, N. bad grown very wealthy, Fms. vi. 448:—to make bappy, er alla elskar ok auðgar, i. 281, Th. 77.
 auð-gengr, adj. easy to pass; stigr a., 677. 5. auð-ginntr, adj. part. easily cheated, credulous, Lex. Poët. auð-gætligr, adj. easy to get, common, Fms. i. 261. auð-gætt, n. adj. easy to get, = auðfundit, Lex. Poët., Hb. 6 (1865).
 auð-görðr and later form auð-görðr, adj. part. easily done, Fas. i. 74.
 auð-heyrtr, n. adj. part. easily heard, clear, evident, Ld. 266.
 auðigr and auðugr, adj. [Ulf. auþgás = μακάριος, auþgæi, f. = μακα-ρισμός; Hel. ódag = beatus, dives; A. S. eáðig, beatus, opulentus; O. H. G. ótag], contracted before an initial vowel into auðgan, auðgur, auðgum; uncontr. form auðigan = auðgan, Fms. i. 112, etc.; now used uncontracted throughout, auðgigr, auðugar, etc.; rich, opulent; ríkr ok a., powerful and opulent, Eg. 22, 83; at fé, wealthy, Fas. i. 49, Ísl. ii. 323, Nj. 16, Post.
 656 C; skip mikit ok a., with a rich lading, Fms. xi. 238; a. at kvikíc, Ld. 96; superl. auðgastr, Eg. 25, Ísl. ii. 124; England er auðgast at lausafé allra Norðrlanda, Fms. xi. 203.
AUÐIT, u. part. of an obsolete verb analogous to auka ('ablaunt' aujó—au), [cp. Swed. öde, fatum; auða, luck; auðr, opes, etc.], used in many phrases, and often answering to the Gr. ἀλα, περιπέμνω, with dat.
 pers. and gen. of the thing; e-m er, verðr, auðit e-s, it falls to one's lot; úlík-ligt er at oss verði þeirrar hamingju a., it is unlikely that this good fortune is destined for us, Eg. 107; koma mun til mín feigðin . . . , ef mér verðr þess a., if that be ordained for me, Nj. 103; þó at mér verði lífs a., though life may be granted to me, Fms. i. 47; konungr lét græða menn sína sem lífs var a., those whose lot it was to live, who were not mortally wounded, Eg.
 34; hafði þeim orðit sigrs a., bad won the day, Eg. 86; var þeim eigi erfingja a., to them was no heir granted by fate, 625. 83; with 'at' and an infin., mun oss eigi a. verða at fá þvilkan, Fms. x. 339; absol., hafi þeir gagn er a. er, let them gain the day to whom the god of battles grants it, xi. 66; with the addition of 'til'; ek ætla okkr lítt til ástafunda a. hafa orðit, we have had bad luck in love, 310: auðinn, masc. appears twice or thrice in poetry, auðins fjár, means possessed, Skv. 3. 37; in prose in Al. 21 (by Bishop Brand), láta auðins bíða, to submit to fate, to be unconcerned; even in compar., hvárt hyggit ér manni nokkuru at auðnara (any more chance), at hann fái knúta þessa leysta, of the Gordian knot, 19, at auðnu, v. auða [cp. A. S. eáden, datus, concessus; Hel. ódan, genitus, natus: cp. also jóð, proles, a word perhaps of the same root.] auð-kendr, adj. part. easy to 'ken' or recognise, of distinguished appearance, Al. 21, Fms. i. 44.
 auð-kenni, n. (= einkenni), mark, distinction, Karl. 180.
 auð-kennilligr, adj. = auðkendr, Hrafn. 13.
 auð-kennning, f. a clear mark, sure sign, Sturl. i. 70. MS. A. M. 122 B; áminning suits better, so the Ed. and Brit. Mus. 11, 127.
 auð-keyptr, adj. part. easily bought, cheap, Hkr. iii. 246.
 auð-kjörinn, adj. part. easily chosen, easy to decide between, Sd. 170.
 auð-kumall, adj. (now viðkvæmr), very touchy, tender, sensitive; a. ok lasmeyr, of a snake's belly, easy to wound, Stj. 98; óngvæt (depressed) ok auðkumul, (fem.) touchy, Bs. i. 323; a. í skapi, irritable, 353.
 auð-kvisi, v. aukvisi.
 auð-kvæðr, adj. easily talked over, easily moved, obsequious, pliable; eptirlátr ok a., N. G. L. ii. 400; ertú ok eigi a. (hard to move) til fylgðar, Grett. 122 new Ed. = auðbœðinn. auð-kymli, f. [auðkumall], touchiness, sensitiveness; a. konunnar, a woman's touchiness or weakness, 623. 36. auð-kýfingr, m. [kúfa, accumulare], pœt. a beaper up of riches, a wealthy man, a Croesus; örri maðr er a., Edda 107; in prose in Sturl. i.
 38, Al. 5; rikismenn ok a., Post. 656 C. 30.
 auð-lagðr, adj. part. wealthy, whence auðlegð, Lex. Poët. auð-láttr, adj. part. docile, easily kept in check, Glúm. 396 (in a verse).
 auð-látinn, adj. [lát, manners], of easy affable manners, Str. 36.
 auð-legð, f. easy circumstances, wealth, Bs. i. (Laur. S.) 836; now freq. auð-ligr, adj. bappy, lucky, Fms. vi. 420 (in a verse).
 auð-maðr, m. a wealthy man, Fms. ii. 21, Ísl. ii. 385, 125.
 auð-mjúkliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. bumbly, Bs. i. 773, Grett. 207 new Ed.

auð-mjúkr, adj. bumble, meek, compar. auðmjúkari, Sturl. i. 45; a. íðran, devoted repentance, H. E. i. 510.

auð-munaðr, adj. part. easily remembered, not to be forgotten, Fms. vi. 249, v. 1.

auð-mýkja, t and ð, to bumble; a. sik, to bumble oneself, Bs. i. 854.
auð-mýkt, f. meekness, humility, Fms. viii. 54, v. 1.; now freq. in theol. writers.

auðn, f. [auðr, adj.], a wilderness, desert; auðn Sinai, Stj. 300. β. land which has no owner or is waste, uninhabited; bygðust þá margar auðnir víða, many wide wastes were then peopled, Eg. 15; alla auðn landsins, Fms. i. 5, viii. 33, Greg. 33: the auðn was claimed as a royal domain; konungur á hér a. alla í landi, Fms. xi. 225; um þær auðnir er menn vilja byggja, þá skal sá ráða er a. á, the owner of the waste, N. G. L. i. 125; different from almenningr, compassion or common. 2. more specially a deserted farm or habitation; sá bætt hét síðan á Hrapstöðum, þær er nú a., Ld. 24; liggja í a., to lie waste, 96, Grág. ii. 214, cp. 278.

3. destruction; auðn borgarinnar (viz. Jerusalem), Greg. 40, Rb. 332, Ver. 43, Sd. 179 (where auðnu, f.); ríki mitt stendr mjök til auðnar, is in a state of desolation, Fms. xi. 320, Bret. 68: insolvency, utter poverty, Grág. i. 62. COMPS: auðnar-hús, a deserted butts, on mountains or in deserts, Grág. ii. 158. auðnar-óðal, n. impoverished estates, Sks. 333. auðnar-sel, n. deserted shielings, Orkn. 458.

auðna, u, f. desolation, Sd. 179, bad reading.
auðna, u, f. [auðit], fortune, and then, like αἶσα, good luck, one's good star, happiness, (cp. heill, hamingja, græfa, all of them feminines,—good luck personified as a female guardian), in the phrase, a. ræðr, rules; auðna mun því ráða, Fate must settle that, Nj. 46, Lv. 65; ræðr a. lífi (a proverb), Orkn. 28; arka at auðnu (or perh. better dat. from auðinn), v. arka, Nj. 185, v. 1.; at auðnu, adv. prosperously, Sl. 25; blanda úgíptu við a., Fms. ii. 61; með auðnu þeirri at þorkati var lengra lífs auð, by that good fortune which destined Þorkell for a longer life, Orkn. 18 (50). Cp. the Craven word auud in the expression I's auud to'ot, 'I am ordained to it, it is my fate.' COMPS: auðnu-lauss, adj. luckless, Fas. ii. 240. auðnu-leysi, n. ill fate. auðnu-leysingi, a, m. a luckless man. auðnu-maðr, m. a lucky man, luck's favourite, Gullþ. 28, Ld. 40, Fas. i. 340. auðnu-samliga, adv. fortunately, Finn. 344.

auðna, að, impers. to be ordained by fate; ef honum auðnaði eigi aprt at koma, if it was not ordained by fate that he should come back, Fms. i. 350; sem auðnar, as luck decides, Fb. i. 160, Fas. iii. 601, Lv. 30: with gen., ef Guð vill at þess auðni, that it shall succeed, Bs. i. 159, v. 1., þat is fully correct: now freq. in a dep. form, e-m auðnast, one is successful, with following infin.

auð-næmiligr, adj. [nema], easy to learn, teachable, Sks. 16.
auð-næmr, adj. easily learned, soon got by heart, Sks. 247 B; auðnæm er ill Danska, bad Danish is soon learnt (a proverb); auðnæmast þó hið vonda er, Pass. 22, 10.

auð-prófaðr, adj. part. easily proved, Laur. S. MS. 180. 85.
AUÐR, f. [Swed. öde, fatum], fate, destiny, only used in poetry in the phrase, fá auðar, to die, Isl. ii. 389 (in a verse); haga til auðar, to avail towards one's happiness, Gísl. 59 (in a verse). Auðr is also a fem. pr. name.

AUÐR, adj. [Ulf. axþs = επιπος; O. H. G. odi; Hel. odi = inanis; cp. A. S. ydan and édan, vastare; Germ. öde and öden: the root is rare in A. S. and lost in Engl.]:—empty, void, desert, desolate; húsin voru auð, uninhabited, Ld. 96; koma at auðu landi, of the first colonists when coming to Iceland, Landn. 316, opp. to 'koma at bygðu landi,' or 'land numið'; auð búið, Eg. 727; auð borð, void of defenders, of ships that have lost their men in fight, Fms. ii. 329; auð skip (= hroðin), all the crew being slain or put to flight, Hkr. iii. 126. β. metaph., auðr at yndi, cheerless, distressed, Stj. 421; sitja auðum höndum, now used of being idle: in the Ad. 22, með a. hendr means empty-handed, without gifts; so also in Stj. 437. 1 Sam. vi. 3, answering to 'empty' in the Engl. text.

AUÐR, s, and poet. ar, m. [Goth. auðs = μακαρία is suggested; it only appears in Ulf. in compds or derivatives, auðags adj. beatus, auda-gí f. beatitudo, audagian, bear; A. S. éad, n. means opes; Hel. od = bonum, possessio: it is probably akin to óðal; cp. also feudal (A. S. feob = fee), alodial]:—riches, wealth, opulence; auð fjár (only in acc.), abundance, is a freq. phrase; also, auð landa ok fjár, Edda 15; oss er þar mikil af sagt auð þeim, Band. 8, Fms. ii. 80, 623, 21; draga saman auð, id. In proverbs, margan hefir auðr apat; auðrinn er valtastr vina, wealth is the ficklest of friends, Hm. 77, etc.

auð-ráðinn, adj. easily to 'read' or explain, Fas. iii. 561. β. easy to manage, v. úauðráðinn.

auð-ráðr, adj. easily guided, pliable, yielding, Bs. i. 265.
auðræði, n. pl. means, property, wealth, Bs. i. 146, 129, 136 (where it = income), 158, 68 (where the gen. auðráða = auðræða), Stj. 345, Hom. 68, Fms. iv. 111; not very freq., auðæfi is a more current word.
auð-sagt, part. easily told.

auð-salr, m. treasury (poët.), Fsm. 7. auð-sénn, part., now auðsédrr (cp. however Pass. 6. 4, 7), easily seen, evident, Hrafn. 13, K. A. 214.

auð-skeptr, part. (in a proverb), Ad. 21, eigi eru a. almanna spjör, it is not easy to make shafts to all people's spear heads, i. e. to act so that a shall be pleased, cp. Hm. 127; auð-skæf (as given in the Skálda, where this line is cited) may be a better reading = not easily carved or made as to suit everybody.

auð-skilligr, adj. easy to distinguish, understand, Skálda 167.
auð-skæðr, adj. part. easily injured, Eg. 770; delicate, tender, Stj. 345 Deut. xxviii. 56, Bs. i. 353.

auð-snúit, n. part. easily turned, Hkr. ii. 271.
auð-sóttligr, adj. easy to perform, an easy task, Fms. xi. 282.
auð-sótt, part. easily won, easy to win; mál a., Eg. 38, 200, in bot cases of a happy suitor; a. land, land lightly won, Fms. iii. 49; auðsótt til bæna, pliable, yielding, Al. 4: eigi a., not easily matched, Valla L. 205.

auð-sveipr (and now also auðsveipinn, whence auðsveipni, f.), adj. pliable, yielding, now esp. used of good, obedient children, Bs. auð-sýna, d, to sbew, exhibit, Bs. i. 274; má þat vel auðsýna, to be seen, Stj. 13.

auð-sýniligr, adj. evident, and -līga, adv. clearly, Fms. i. 142, Stj. 14, 26.

auð-sýning, f. show, exhibition, Skálda 199. transl. of Lat. demonstratio; H. E. i. 517. proof, demonstration.

auð-sýnn, adj. easily seen, clear; hon var síðan kölluð Delos svá sen a., Stj. 87, 250: neut. = evident, Hom. 154, Eg. 736, Fms. i. 72.

auð-sæligr, adj. id., Fms. vii. 148.
auð-sær, adj., neut. auðsætt, fem. auðsæ, easily seen, clear, Bjarn. 63 Fms. x. 175, 655 xi. 1: metaph. clear, evident, Magn. 436, 625. 174 neut. evident, Fms. i. 42, Hrafn. 13: compar. auðsærri, more conspicuous Fms. ii. 322: superl. auðsæstr, Ld. 236; auðsæust, Fms. iv. 321.
auð-trúa, adj. ind. credulous, Lex. Poët. (freq.)

auð-tryggi, f. ind., now auðtryggni, f. credulity, Gísl. 62.
auð-trygr, adj. credulous, Stj. 199, Grett. 130 A, Fms. viii. 447.

auð-van, n. bad luck, Lex. Poët.
auð-vandr, adj. very painstaking in doing one's duties, Bs. i. 141, a. æp. ley.

auð-ván, f. expectancy of fortunes (poët.), Lex. Poët.
auð-velda, d, to take lightly, make easy, Orkn. ch. 68.

auð-veldi, n. easiness, facility, Hom. 7. transl. of Lat. facultas; með a., as adv. easily, Fms. vii. 116, Karl. 131, 142: auðvelda-verk, n. an easy task, Grett. 127 new Ed.

auð-veldiga and -velliga, adv. easily, lightly, Fms. i. 87, Stj. 99, Hkr. i. 200; taka a. á e-u, to make light of a thing, Fms. xi. 124: compar. -ligr, i. 262, Stj. 130.

auð-veldigr and -velligr, adj. easy, Stj. 8, 356. Josh. vii. 2. auð-veldr, adj. easy, Eg. 39: superl. -veldastr, Ld. 14; metaph. compliant, Bs. i. 256, Sturl. i. etc.

auð-vinr, m. (poët.) a charitable friend [A. S. eāðvine]; in the old poets freq. spelt otvin, v. Lex. Poët. β. as a pr. name Auðunn; the etymology in Hkr. i. 12 is bad; and so is also the popular etymology of this word = none, fr. auðr, vacuus.

auð-virðiligr, etc., v. auðvirð-auð-vitað, n. part. easy to know, clear, evident, Ld. 78, Finn. 232 now often adv. = clearly, to be sure.

auð-víst, n. adj. sure, certain, Karl. 181.
auð-þeystr, adj. part. easy to make flow, Stor. 2 (dub. passage).

auð-þrífgr, adj. [probably = ör-þrífgr, fr. ör-priv. and þrífgr robust, strong], feeble, weakly, Isl. ii. 456, Fb. i. 275 (of weak frame).

auð-æfi qs. auðöfl, n. pl. ['auðr', opes, and 'of', = ofa-fé, q. v.; Lat. opes], opulence, abundance, wealth, riches, in the Grág. freq. = means of subsistence, emoluments, i. 269, 277 (twice), ii. 213, cp. Íb. 16, where it means emoluments: in the proper sense wealth, Hkr. i. 13, where it means gold and treasures, Sks. 334, 442; veg ok a., power and wealth, Greg. 23; himnesk a., Joh. 21; jarðlig a., Greg. 32. Matth. vi. 19, 20; mörk a., Eluc. 53, Hom. 151, etc.

auð, iuterj. [a. for. word; Germ. au web], woe! alas! used with dat., a. mér, Mar. 167; acc., a. mik, 175; absol., 147: after the Reformation 'ávi' and 'ó vei' occur, or 'vei' alone.

afusa, u, f., in Norse MSS. spelt afusa, Dipl. i. 3; avusa, Str. 27, 54 Sks. 775 B; afusna, N. G. L. i. 446. In Icel. always spelt with au, av or ö, by changing the vowel, öfusa, afusna, Ö. H. 155, where, however, some MSS. have afusna, avfusna, Fms. viii. 39, 250; öfusa, Fs. 123; ofusa, 677, 3, Band. 6; öfussa, Bs. i. 481: the change of vowel is caused by the following f (v). The word is now quite obsolete, and its etymology is somewhat uncertain; it may be qs. á-fúss, or af-fúss, ar 'af-' intens. and 'fúss', willing, this last suggestion would best suit the Norse form. Its sense is thanks, gratitude, satisfaction, pleasure, and is almost exclusively used either as a supplement to 'þökk' or in such phrases as, kunna e-m au, or e-m er au. á e-u, to be pleased, gratified with; þakka með mikilli a., to thank heartily, Str. 27; ef yðr er þar nokkur a. á, if it be any pleasure to you, Fms. ix. 495; kunna e-m au. e-s, or with 'at', to be thankful, Fb. ii. 257, Eg. 111, Ö. H. 56, Fms. viii. 1 c., Bs. i. 471, H. E. i. 432, Eg. 522, Sturl. iii. 125, Fær. 209, 677, 3; leggja at móti þökk ok au., Ö. H. 155; virjun vör au, gefa þeim göðum mönnum, we will thank them, Fms. viii, 250; var mönnum mikil ö. á því, much pleased by it, Fs. 123; hafa í móti þökk ok ö., Band. 19 new Ed. COMPDS: aufusugestr, m. a welcome guest, Valla L. 217, Sturl. i. 178. aufusu-ord, n. thanks, Gisl. 100. aufusu-svipr, m. friendly mien; sýna á sér au., Fs. 14.

au-fúss, adj. in a verse by Arnór, perhaps akin to the above, meaning eager, Orkn. 126: vide, however, Lex. Pöet. s. v. ófur.

AUGA, n., gen. pl. augna, [Lat. oculus, a dimin. of an obsolete ocus; Gr. ὀφθαλμός (Boeot. οὐκταλμός)]; Sanskr. aksha: the word is common to Sanskrit with the Slavonic, Greek, Roman, and Teutonic idioms: Goth. augo; Germ. auge; A. S. éage; Engl. eye; Scot. ee; Swed. öga; Dan. öje, etc. Grimm s. v. suggests a relationship to Lat. acies, acutus, etc. The letter n appears in the plur. of the mod. northern languages; the Swedes say 'ögon', oculi, the Danes 'øjne'; with the article 'ögonen' und 'øjnene'; Old Engl. 'eyne'; Scot. 'een']:—an eye It is used in Icel. in a great many proverbs, e. g. betr sjá augu en auga, 'two eyes see better than one,' i. e. it is good to yield to advice: referring to love, unír auga meðan á sér, the eye is pleased whilst it can behold (viz. the object of its affection), Fas. i. 125, cp. Völs. rim. 4. 189; eigi leyna augu, ef ann kona manni, the eyes cannot bide it, if a woman love a man, i. e. they tell their own tale, Ísl. ii. 251. This pretty proverb is an itr. leyf. l. c. and is now out of use; it is no doubt taken from a poem in a fróttkvætt metre, (old proverbs have alliteration, but neither rhymes nor assonance, rhyming proverbs are of a comparatively late date): medic., eigi er sá heill er í augun verkir, Fbr. 75; sá drepr opt fæti (slips) er augnanna missir, Bs. i. 742; hætt er einu auganu nema vel fari, be who has only one eye to lose will take care of it (comm.); húsbóndans auga ér best, the master's eye sees best; glögt er gests augat, a guest's eye is sharp; mörg eru dags augu, the day has many eyes, i. e. what is to be hidden must not be done in broad daylight, Hm. 81; náid er nef augum, be nose is near akin to the eyes (tua res agitur paries quum proximus rdet), Nj. 21; opt verðr slíkt á sæ, kvad selr, var skotinn í auga, this often happens at sea, quoth the seal, when he was shot in the eye, of one who is in a scrape, Fms. viii. 402. In many phrases, at unna (to owe) e-m sem augum í höfði sér, as one's own eye-balls, Nj. 217; þótti sér slökt í sætasta ljós augna mína, by his death the sweetest light of my eyes was quenched, 187; hvert grætr þú nú Skarphéðimi? cigi er at segir Skarphéðinn, en hitt er satt at stúrnir í augum, the eyes smart from smoke, 200; renna, líta augum, to seek with the eyes, to look upon: t is used in various connections, renna, líta ástaraugum, vánaraugum, inaraugum, trúaraugum, ófundaraugum, girndarauga, with eyes of love, of hope, friendship, faith, envy, desire: mæna a. denotes an upward or praying look; stára, fixed; horfa, attentive; lygna, blundskaka, stupid or low; blína, glápa, góna, vacant or silly; skima, wandering; hvesa augu, threatening look; leiða e-n a., to measure one with the eyes; gjóta, or skjóta hornauga, or skjóta a. í skjál, to throw a side glance of dislike or ill-will; gjóta augum is always in a bad sense; renna, líta mostly in a good sense: gefa e-u auga, oculum adiciere alicui; hafa auga á e-u, to eep an eye on it; segja e-m e-t í augu upp, to one's face, Orkn. 454; at augum, adverb. with open eyes, Hervar. S. (in a verse), etc. As regards arrior movements of the eyes; ljúka upp augum, to open the eyes; láta þrú augum, to shut the eyes; draga auga í pung, to draw the eye into a urse, i. e. shut one eye; depla augum, to blink; at drepa titlinga (Germ. ugeln, blinzen), to wink, to kill tits with the suppressed glances of the eye; glóðarauga, a suffusion on the eye, hyposphagma; kýrauga, proptosis; agl á auga, a beam in the eye; skjálgr, Lat. limus; ský, albugo; tekinn l. augnanna, with sunken eyes, etc., Féi. ix. 192; a. bresta, in death: afa stýrur í augum, to have prickles in the eyes, when the eyes ache for want of sleep: vatna mísum, 'to water mice,' used esp. of children weeping silently and trying to hide their tears. As to the look or expression of the eyes there are sundry metaph. phrases, e. g. hafa fékróka í augum, to have wrinkles at the corners of the eyes, of a shrewd money getting fellow, Fms. ii. 84, cp. Orkn. 330, 188, where krókauga is a cognom.; venna-króka, one insinuating with the fair sex; hafa æghishjalm í augum, a metaphor of one with a piercing, commanding eye, an old mythical term for the magical power of the eye, v. Grimm's D. Mythol. under Æghishjalmr: vera mjótt á milli augnanna, the distance between the eyes being short, is a popular saying, denoting a close, stingy man, hence mjóeygr means close: e-m vex e-t í augu (now augum), to shrink back from, of a thing waxing and growing before one's eyes so that one dares not face it. As to the shape, colour, etc. of the eye, vide the adj. 'eygr' or 'eygør' in its many compds. Lastly we may mention the belief, that when the water in baptism touches the eyes, the child thereby in future life prevented from seeing ghosts or goblins, vide the words úfreskr and skygn. No spell can touch the human eye; en hann sá augu hans (that of Loki in the shape of a bird), þá grunadann (the giant) at maðr mundi vera, Edda 60; í þessum bími þykist hón enna augu Bjarnar konungs sonar, Fas. i. 51, vide Ísl. þjóðs. II. action, and metaph. auga is used in a great many connections: a. stron.; þjaza augu, the eyes of the giant Tbiazi, is a constellation, probably the Dioscuri, Castor and Pollux; the story is told in the Edda 47, cp.

Harbarðsljóð 19; (Snorri attributes it to Odin, the poem to Thor.) β. botan., auga=Lat. gemma, Hjalt. 38; kattarauga, cat's eye, is the flower forget-me-not. γ. the spots that form the numbers on dice, Magn. 530. δ. the hole in a millstone; kvarnarauga, Edda 79, 221, Hkr. i. 121: the opening into which an axe handle is fastened, Sturl. ii. 91: a pit full of water, Fs. 45; nálarauga, a needle's eye: vindauga, wind's eye or window (which orig. had no glass in it), A. S. eag-dura (eye-door); also gluggi, q. v.: gleraugu, spectacles. ε. anatom., the pan of the hip joint, v. augniakarl, Fms. iii. 392; gagnaugu, temples. ζ. hafsauga, the bottom of the ocean, in the popular phrase, fara út í hafsauga, descendere ad tartara. η. pöet. the sun is called heimsauga, dagsauga, Jónas 119. COMPDS either with sing. auga or pl. augna; in the latter case mod. usage sometimes drops the connecting vowel a, e. g. augndapir, augndepira, augn-fagr, etc. auga-bragð (augna-), n. the twinkling of an eye, Hm. 77; á einu a., in the twinkling of an eye, Ver. 32, Edda (pref.) 146, Sks. 559, Rb. 568: a glance, look, smart a., Fms. ii. 174; mikít a., v. 335; úfaggligt a., Fs. 43; hafa a. af e-u, to cast a look at, Fbr. 49, Fms. xi. 424: in the phrase, at hafa e-n (or verða) at augbragði, metaph. to make sport of, to mock, deride, gaze at, Stj. 627, 567, Hm. 5, 29. auga-brún, f. the eye-brow. auga-staðr, m. an eye-mark; hafa a. á e-u, to mark with the eye. auga-steinn (augna-), m. the eye-ball, Hkr. iii. 365, Fms. v. 152. augna-bending, f. a warning glance, Pr. 452. augna-blik, n. mod.=augnabragð, s. augna-bólga, u, f. ophthalmia. augna-bráf, f. the eye-lid, D. N. i. 216. augna-fagr and aug-fagr, adj. fair-eyed, Fas. ii. 365, Fms. v. 200. augna-fró, f. a plant, eye-bright, euphrasia, also augna-gras, Hjalt. 231. augna-frø, n. lychnis alpina. augna-gaman, n. a sport, delight for the eyes to gaze at, Ld. 202, Bær. 17, Fsm. 5 (love, sweetheart). augna-gróm, n. (medic.) a spot in the eye; metaph., ekki a., no mere speck, of whatever can easily be seen. augna-hár, n. an eye-lash. augna-hvarmr, m. the eye-lid. augna-hvita, u, f. albugo. augna-karl, n. the pan of the hip joint; slita or slitna or augniaköllunum, Fas. iii. 392. augna-kast, n. a wild glance, Barl. 167. augna-kláði, a, m. psorophthalmi. augna-krókr, n. the corner of the eye. augna-lag, n. a look, Ld. 154. augna-lok, n. 'eye-covers,' eye-lids. augna-mein, n. a disease of the eye. augna-mjörkvi, a, m. dimness of the eye, Pr. 471. augna-rúd, n. expression of the eye. augna-skot, n. a look askance, Gþl. 286, Fs. 44 (of cats). augna-slim, n. glaucoma. augna-staðr, m. the socket of the eye, Magn. 532. augna-sveinn, m. a lad leading a blind man, Str. 46. augn-tepra, u, f. hippus. augna-topt, f. the socket of the eye. augna-verkr, m. pain in the eye, Hkr. ii. 257, Bs. i. 451, Pr. 471, Bjam. 58. augnavik, n. pl.=augnakrókr. augna-þungi, a, m. beaviness of the eye, Hkr. ii. 257. aug-dapir, adj. weak-sighted, Fms. ii. 8: augdepra, u, f. amblyopia, Féi. ix. 191. aug-lit, n. a face, countenance; fyrir a. alls lýðs, Stj. 326; fyrir Guðs a., before the face of God, Orkn. 170; í a. postulans, 623, 25, Ver. 7. Gen. viii. 1 ('before me'); fyrir konungs a., Sks. 283. Now much used, esp. theol. aug-ljós, n. 'eye light,' in the phrase, koma í a., to appear, Fas. i. 80. aug-ljóss, adj. clear, manifest, Fms. i. 229, Hkr. ii. 225. aug-lýsa, t, to make known, manifest: subst. auglýsing, f. aug-sjándi, part. seeing ocularily, Mart. 117. aug-súrr, adj. blear-eyed, Stj. 171 (of Leah): síreygr is more freq. aug-sýn, f. sight; koma í a. e-m, to appear before him, Eg. 458, 623, 12; í a. e-m, in the face of, Blas. 46. aug-sýna, d, to shew, Fms. v. 200. aug-sýnilligr, adj. and -liga, adv. evident, visible, Gþl. 42. AUK, adv. [cp. Goth. auk, freq. used by Ulf. as translation of Gr. γὰρ; jab auk=καὶ γὰρ; A. S. éac; Engl. eke; Germ. auch]. I. it originally was a noun=augmentum, but this form only remains in the adverbial phrase, at auk, to boot, besides, Bs. i. 317 (freq.): adverbially and without 'at,' besides; hundráð manna ok auk kappar hans, a hundred men and eke his champions, Fas. i. 77; þriggja marka fé, en konung þat er auk er, the surplus, N. G. L. i. 350: cp. also such phrases as, auk þess at, besides that; auk heldr, v. heldr. II. as a conj. also, Lat. etiam, occurs in very old prose, and in poetry; svá mun ek auk bletza þá konu es þú baðsk fyr, 655 ix. B. 2 (MS. of the 12th century), Hkr. ii. 370 (in a poem of Sigvat); this form, however, is very rare, as the word soon passed into ok, q. v. III. used to head a sentence, nearly as Lat. deinde, deinceps, the Hebrew ו, or the like; the Ormulum uses ac in the same way; in MSS. it is usually spelt ok; but it may be seen from poetic assonances that it was pronounced auk, e. g. auk und jöfri fræknum; hitt var auk at eykir, Vellekla, Hkr. i. 216; auk at járna leiki, Lex. Pöet.; it is sometimes even spelt so, e. g. auk nær aptni skaltu Óðinn koma, Hm. 97, Hkr. i. 29, v. l.; it is also freq. in the Cod. Fris. of the Hkr. This use of 'auk' or 'ok' is esp. freq. in old narrative poems such as the Ynglingatal (where it occurs about thirty-five times), in the Háleygatal (about six times), and the Vellekla (about ten times): vide ok. IV. simply for ok, and, as spelt on some Runic stones, but seldom, if ever, in written documents.

AUKA, jók, jóku (mod. juku), aukit [Lat. augere; Gr. αὔξω; Ulf. aukan; A. S. eacan or ecan; Engl. to ecbe or eke; O. H. G. aubon]; pres. ind. eyk; subj. cyki or yki, mod. jyki. A weak form (aukar, aukaði, aukat) also occurs, esp. in Norse, and (as a Norwegianism) in Icel. writers, esp. after the year 1260, e. g. aukaðu, augebant, Barl. 138; aukaðist, augebatur, aukaði, augebat, Barl. 180, Fms. i. 140, 184, x. 21 (MSS. aukuðu or aukaði, and some even jóku), Róm. 234; subj. aukaðist, augeretur, Fms. vii. 158 in three Icel. vellum MSS.; only one has ykist, the strong genuine form. Pres. aukar, auget, and aukast, augetur, instead of eykr, eykst, Stj. 32: part. aukat (= aukit), O. H. L. 46; aukuð, aucta, Fms. x. 236. Even Snorri in the Edda has aukaðist, p. 3, both in the vellum MSS. Ob. and Kb.,—a form which is thoroughly unclassical; the poets use the strong form, and so Ari, who has jókk = jók ek, in the preface to Íb.;—so also the great bulk of the classical literature. Since the Reformation the strong form is the only one used either in speaking or writing.

I. Lat. augere, to augment, increase, with acc., eykr hann þar ætt sína, Fms. iii. 82; jók Njáll ekki hjón sín, Nj. 59; hét hann þeim at auka virðing þeirra, Eg. 33; þessi orð jóku mjök sök Adams, Sks. 542; jók nafn hans, Hom. 51, Nj. 33; var þá síðan aukuð (= aukin) veizlan, Fms. x. 236: absol., þat hálf er eykr, þat half which is over and above, Js. 75: in the phrase, aukanda ferr um e-t, a thing is increasing, Nj. 139.

II. Lat. addere, to add to the whole of a thing; with the thing added in the dat., ok jókk (= jók ek) því es mér varð síðan kunnara, Íb. (pref.): impers., jók miklu við, increased greatly, Ld. 54; þá eykst enn ellefu nóttum við, eleven nights are still added, Rb. 28: followed by 'við', auka e-u við e-t, to add to it, Nj. 41; 'til' is rare and unclassical, and seems almost a Danism, as 'föie til', þetta til aukist, Vm. 7: auka synd (dat.) á synd (acc.) ofan, to heap sin upon sin, Stj. 274: aukast orðum við, to come to words, speak, Eg. ch. 58, v. l. (rare); ef þú eykr orði, if thou say'st a word more, Lex. Poët. β. with acc. (a rare and unclassical Latinism), auka ný vandræði (= nýjum vandræðum) á hin fornu, Bs. i. 751.

γ. impers. in the phrase, aukar á, it increases, Róm. 234. III. Lat. superare, to surpass, exceed; þat er eykr sex aura, þá á konungur hálf þat er eykr, if it exceeds six ounces, the king takes half the excess, N. G. L. i. 281, Js. § 71; en ármaðr taki þat er aukit er, wbat is over and above, N. G. L. i. 165. Esp. used adverbially in the part. pass. aukit, aukin, more than, above, of numbers; aukin þrjú hundruð manna, three hundred men well told, Eg. 530, Fms. ix. 524, v. l.; með aukit hundrað manna, x. 184, Ld. 196; aukin hálf vætt, Gretl. 141 new Ed. β. in the phrases, þat er (eigi) aukit (aukit), it is no exaggeration, Jd. verse 22, the Ed. in Fms. xi. 169 has 'árla' (a false reading); þat er aukat, O. H. L. l. c.; orðum aukid, exaggerated, Thom. 73.

aukan, f. increase, K. Á. 20. auki, a, m. eke [A. S. eaca; Old Engl. and Scot. eke or eik], increase, addition; Abram tók þann auka nafns síns, Ver. 14; a. ófundur ok hatrs, Stj. 192: cp. also in the phrase, verða at moldar auka, to become dust, to die, in a verse in the Hervar. S. Fas. i. 580; cp. maðr er moldu samr, man is but dust, Sl. 47; and another proverb, lauki er litid gæft til auka, used by Sigvat. (Lex. Poët.), the leek needs but little care to grow; sársauki, pain, Mirm. 47; Danmerkr auki is a poet. name of Zealand used by Bragi, Edda 1: the phrase, í miklum auka, in a huge, colossal shape, Glúm. 345 (in a verse); hence perhaps the popular phrase, að ferast í aukana (or haukana), to exert to the utmost one's bodily strength, Glámr færðist í alla auka (óf enu wrestling), Gretl. 114 A, (Ed. 1853 has færðist í aukana.) 2. metaph. seed, germs, thou hast given me no seed, Stj. 111. Gen. xv. 2; esp. the sperm of wbales, amber, Sks. 137. β. produce of the earth, Barl. 193, 200. γ. interest of capital, N. G. L. ii. 380; vide áauki, sársauki, sakaauki, i. 187. COMPS: auka-dagr, m. 'eke-day', dies intercalaris, Rb. 488. auka-hlutr, m. in the phrase, at aukahlut, to boot, Hom. 129. auka-nafn, n. 'eke-name', nickname, or additional name, Sks. 272. auka-smíði, n. a superfluous thing, a mere appendix, Fms. ii. 359. auka-tungl, n. intercalary moon, Rb. 116. auka-verk, n. by-work, Bs. i. 326. auka-vika, u, f. 'eke-week', intercalary week, v. hlaupár.

auk-nafn, n. = aukanafn, 'eke-name.'
auk-nefna, d, to nickname, Landn. 243.
auk-nefni, n. 'eke-name', a nickname: α. a defamatory name, punishable with the lesser outlawry, Grág. ii. 146. β. in a less strong sense; hann var svartur á hák ok höruð, ok því þótti honum a. gefit er hann var Birtingr kallaðr, be was swarthy of hair and skin, and for that it seemed a nickname was given him when he was called 'Brighting', Fms. vii. 157: Helgi átti kenningar nafn, ok var kallaðr hvít; ok var þat eigi a., því at hann var vænn maðr ok vel hærðr, hvítur á hák, Helgi had a surname (in a good sense), and was called 'White'; and that was no nickname, for he was a handsome man and well-haired, white of hair, Fbr. So: þú hyggst at ek muna vilja giptast einum bastardi,—eigi eni ek bastardr nema at a., of William the Conqueror, Fb. iii. 464. In old times, esp. at the time of the colonisation of Iceland, such nicknames were in freq. use, as may be seen from the index in the Landnama; they gradually went out of use, but still occur now and then throughout the whole of the Saga period in Icel. down to the 14th century.

aukning, f., Old Engl. 'eeking', increase, Stj. 100, 176, Sks. 137. au-kvisi, a, m. [prop. auð-kvisi, from auð, easy, and kveistinn, touchy cp. kveisa, f. ulcus, dolor]; in old writers it is spelt with au or au and sometimes with a double k, ökkvisi, Bs. i. 497 vellum MS. A. M. 499; auðkvisi, Ld. 236 C and the vellum MS. A. M. 122 A to Sturl. i. 8; aukvisi, MS. 122 B; O. H. (Ed. 1853) reads aucvisi; it means a weakly irritable, touchy person. Used esp. in the proverb, einu er au. ætt hverrar, cp. the Engl. there is a black sheep in every flock, Hkr. ii. 238 mun ek son minn láta heita Gizur; litt hafa þeir aukvisar verit í Hauk dæla ætt er svá hafa heitið hér til, Sturl. ii. 8, at the birth of earl Gizur [The name Gizur was a famous name in this family, Gizur hvít, Gizur biskup, Gizur Hallsson, etc.]

AULANDI, an indecl. adj., qs. al-landi, an ἄρ. λεγ. in the prover Nj. 10, illt er þeim er au. er alinn. [The root is prob. al- (Lat. alius land, cp. A. S. ellend or elland (Hel. elilendi), alienus, peregrinus; O. Engl. alyant; O. H. G. alilanta (whence N. H. G. elend, miser); there in Icel. also a form erlendr, prob. a corruption for ellendr. This root quite lost in the Scand. idioms with the single exception of the prover mentioned above, and the altered form er-] The MSS. of the Nj. l. differ; some of them have á úlandi in two words, in terra malá; Johannus has not made out the meaning; the proper sense seems to be ex-ubique infelix. In olden times peregrinus and miser were synonymous the first in a proper, the last in a metaphorical sense: so the Lat. bos (= bosques) passed into the sense of enemy. The spelling with ö (öland) ought perhaps to be preferred, although the change of vowel cannot be easily accounted for.

auli, a, m. a dunce, aulaligr adj., aula-skapr m., aulast dep., etc., é not occur, as it seems, in old writers; prop. a slug (?); cp. Ivar Aasen s. v. aula, auling.

aum-hjartaðr, adj. tender-hearted, charitable, Stj. 547, Hom. 109. aumindi, n. painful feeling from a wound or the like, Fé l. ix. 192.

aumingi, ja, m. a wretch, in Icel. in a compassionate sense; Guðs 655 xxxii. 15, Bs. i. 74, Hom. 87.

aukma, að, to bewail, to complain, esp. in the impers. phrase, a. sik, feel compassion for, Bær. 11, Al. 10, Róm. 182, Bret. 98, Fagrsk. ch. 32 now freq. used in reflex., *aukma*st yfir e-t, to pity.

aumkan, f. lamentation, wailing, El. 10.

aumleikr, m. misery, Stj. 428, Bs. i. 321; now also used of the so, feeling of a wound or the like, v. aumr.

aumligr, adj. and -liga, adv. [A. S. earmlíc], poorly, wretched, Gretl. 161, Fms. i. 138, v. 218, Sturl. ii. 13, Bær. 4, Magn. 432, H. E. iii. 366 aum-neglur, more correctly anneglur, cp. the Engl. agnail, bangnail or naugnail, Fé l. ix. 192; the lunula unguis is in Icel. called anneglu and so is the skin round the finger-nail, id.

AUMR, adj. [Ulf. has arms = miser; Dan. and Swed. öm], seems with all its compounds to be a Scand. word. It originally probably meant sore, aching, touchy, tender. In mod. Icel. it is sometimes used in this sense, in Dan. and Swed. only = sore, and metaph. tender. 2. metaph. poorly, miserable, unhappy; styrkstú, aumr, strengben thyself, wretch man, Orkn. 153, Hom. 15, 16, Th. 6, 16: in a bad sense = armr, Fm ix. 414.

aum-staddr, adj. part. in a poor, wretched state, Stj. 475.

AUNGR, adj. pron., Lat. nullus, none, v. engi, enginn.

AUNGR, adj. narrow, Lat. angustus, v. öngur.

aung-vit, n., medic. lipothymia, a fainting-fit, Fé l. ix. 193.

AURAR, m. pl. money, aura- in compds, v. eyrir.

aur-borð, n. the second plank from the keel of a boat, Vellekla at Edda (Gl.)

aur-falr, s, m. [aur, lutum, falr], the spike at the butt-end of a spear Gr. σπωρῆς; þeir settu niðr aurfalra er þeir stóðu ok studdu v. spjóti sín, Fms. i. 280; síðan mældi hann grundvöll húsgörðarinnar fyrir þórhalli með aurfalnum á spjóti sínu, ii. 230; Abner sneri spjótinu hendi sér ok lagði aurfalnum framan í kviðinn, Stj. 497, 2 Sam. ii. 2 (in Engl. Vers. 'the hinder end of the spear'), Art. 105. β. used of an arrow, Fb. iii. 406.

aur-gáti, a, m. [qs. ör-gáti, ör- and geta], a tit-bit, good beer, good treatment, a rare and now obsolete word; mun ekki af sparar, at ver oss allan þann a. er til er, Fms. xi. 341; um tilföng veizlunnar, sem þu býndi allan a., Mar. 97; af þeim örgáta sem hon hafði framast föng t. 655 xxxi. 2.

aurigr, adj., only in the contr. forms aurgan (acc.), aurgu (dat.), clay, muddy, Vsp. 31, Ls. 48; cp. úrigr, madidus.

AURR, s, m., prop. wet clay or loam, but also in Eggert Itin. p. 68 of a sort of clay, cp. Ivar Aasen s. v. aur. In A. S. éar is bumus; i the Alvismál one of the names of the earth is aurr (kalla var uppreign In the Völuspá the purling water of the well of Urd is called aurr hence the paraphrase in the Edda, þær taka hvern dag vatn í brunnum ok með aurinn (the clay, bumus) er liggr um brunnin, ok ausa upp yf askinn. Elsewhere used simply of mud, wet soil, aurr er iljar en ofa kuldi, Gs. 15; auri tröðd und jóa fótum, Gh. 16; ok við aur ægir hjarnbragnings burs of blandinn varð, his brains were mixed with the mu Ýt. 16; áurr ok saurr, mud and dirt, Ann. 1362; hylja auri, humo condere, in a verse in the Korm. S.

aurriði, örriði, mod. urriði, a, m. salmo trutta, salmon-trout, Fél. i. 11; salmo squamias argenteis, maculis nigris brunneo cinctis, pinna pectorali punctulis sex notata, Eggert ltm. p. 595: deriv. from ör, celer, and -riði, or from aurr (?) ; the Norse form aurr indicates a diphthong, Gpl. 421, Edda (Gl.) COMPS: aurriða-bekkr, m. a 'beck' full of trout, Bolt. aurriða-fiski, f. trout-fishing, Bolt. aurriða-net, n. a trout-net, Gisl. 104. aurriða-vatn, n. a water stocked with trout, Bolt.

aur-skór, m. (prop. 'mud-shoe'), a horse shoe, an ἀρ. λεγ. in the story Fms. iii. 210, each of the shoes weighing 1½ lb. The story is a pendant to that told of king Augustus of Poland and the blacksmith.

aur-skriða, u, f. a land slip, avalanche, Fbr. 84, Fs. 59.

aurvandils-tá (aurvantá, Ub.), f. Aurvandil's toe, probably the star Rigel in Orion, v. Edda 59.

AUSA, jós, jósu (mod. jusu), ausit; pres. ind. eyss; subj. eysi or ysi, mod. jysi (hairret), cp. Lat. aurio, baus-it; not found in Goth. or in Germ. I. to sprinkle, with dat. of the liquid, and the object in acc. or with a prep.; þær taka hvern dag vatn í brunnum, ok ausa (viz. því) upp yfir askinn, . . . pour it over the ash-boughs, Edda II; ef maðr eyss eldi (fire, embers), Grág. ii. 128; a. silð ör netjum, to empty the nets of the herrings, Gpl. 427: a. út, to pour out, fé, Gret. 126.

2. ausa moldu, to sprinkle with mould, bury; hlóðn þeir at grjóti ok jósu at moldu, Eg. 300; er hann höfðu moldu ausit, Bjarn. II; salr ausium moldu, his chamber sprinkled with mould (poët.), Hervar. S.; ausium haugi, Ýt. 26. β. ausa vatni is a standing phrase for a sort of baptism used in the last centuries, at least, of the heathen age. The child when born was sprinkled with water and named, yet without the intervention of a priest; this rite is mentioned as early as in the Hávmál, one of the very oldest mythological didactic poems on record, where it is attributed even to Odin; ef ek skal þegn ungan verpa vatni á, if I am to throw water on a youngthane, 159; Jósu vatni Jarl létu heita, Jód ól Edda jósu vatni, hörvi svartan, hétu þræl, Rm. 7, 31; sá var síðr göfgrá manna, at vanda menn mjök til at ausa vatni ok gefa nafn; . . . Sigurðr jarl jósu sveinnum vatni ok kallaði Hákon, Hkr. i. 118; Eiríkr ok Gunnhildr áttu son er Haraldr konungr jósu vatni ok gaf nafn sitt, 122; eptir um daginn jósu Hákon konungr þann svein vatni ok gaf nafn sitt, 135, Fms. i. 66, xi. 2; fæddi þóra sveinarn ok var Grimr nefndr er vatni var rusinn, Eb. 26; enn áttu þau Skallagrímur son, sá var vatni ausium ok nafn gefit ok kallaðr Egill, Eg. 146, 147, 166, Ld. 108, Gisl. 32 (of Snorre Gode); and so in many instances from Icel., Norway, and the Orkneys, all of them of the heathen age. The Christian term is skira, q. v.

3. metaph. of scolding or abuse; hrópi ok rógi ef þú eyss á holl regin, Ls. 4; ausa sauri á e-n, to bespatter with foul language, ausask sauri í (recipr.), Bjarn. 33; a. e-m e-u í augu upp, to throw in one's face, Eg. 576; hann jósu upp (poured out) þær fyrir alþýðu öllum glæpum föður síns, Mart. 80; um verka þann er hvern jósu á annan, Bjarn. 42.

II. III. to pump, esp. a ship, with the ship in acc.; Hallfréðr jósu at sínum hlut, Fs. 113, Gret. 95 A, Fbr. 173, N. G. L. i. 102: a. bát sinn, to make water, Fms. vii. 331.

ausa, u, f. a ladle, ekki er sopið kálið þó í ausuna sé komit (a proverb), many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip, Gret. 132, Þórð. 51.

aus-ker, n. = austr-ker, Shetl. auskerrie, a scoop, v. Jamieson Suppl. sub voce, Fs. 147.

ausli, v. auvlið.

austan, adv. [A. S. eastan; Hel. östan], from the east, Eg. 183, Eb. 4: of the direction of the wind (cp. vestan, sunnan, norðan), used with preceding prep. á, ú, vestan, austan, . . . blowing from west, east, . . ., Bs. i. 48. β. fyrir a. used as a prep. with acc. east of; fyrir a. mitt haf, Grág. ch. 85, p. 142 new Ed., Nj. 36, 81, Eg. 100, Landn. 228. γ. with gen. in phrases like austan lands, a fjardar, cp. norðan, sunnan, vestan, Hkr. iii. 201. COMPS: austan-ferð, f. a journey from the east, Fms. vii. 128. austan-fjarðar, gen. loci, used as adverb, in the east of the firth, Hkr. ii. 295, Fms. i. 278, iv. 37. austan-gola, f. a light breeze from the east, Sturl. iii. 59 (Ed. austræn).

austan-kvama, u, f. arrival from the east, Fms. vi. 23. austan-maðr, m. a man from the east, Old Engl. easterling, Sturl. iii. 248. austan-tjófr, m. the east sea, nickname of a man, Fms. ix. 316. austan-verðr, rs, m. an easterly gale, Rb. 438. austan-verðr, adj. eastern cp. norðan-, sunnan-, vestan-verðr), Landn. 25, Stj. 75, A. A. 286.

austan-vindr, m. an east wind, Sks. 38, cp. norðan-, vestan-, sunnan-vindr.

austarliga, adv. and -ligr, adv. easterly, Fms. xi. 389.

austastr, superl. easternmost, v. eystri.

austfirðingr, m., esp. in pl. an eastfirber, one from the east of Iceland, Sturl. ii. 158. COMPS: austfirðinga-búð, f., v. búð. austfirðinga-dómr, m. the court for the east quarter, v. dómr. austfirðinga-fjórðungr, m. the east quarter of Iceland, v. fjórðungr.

austr-firðir, m. pl. the east firths of Iceland, opp. to vestfirðir, Landn.

austr-firzkr, adj. one from the east firths in Icel., Nj. 54, Lv. 57.

austr-för, f. = austrfór.

austr-ker, n. a scoop, bucket, v. auss-ker.

austr-kyllfir, m. pl. easterlings, cp. Kyllingar, an old Russian population, Kolbiager, east of the Baltic; in a poem of Hornklofi, Fagrsk. 9.

austr-lægr, adj. easterly, of the wind.

austr-maðr, m., pl. austomenn, in Icel. and in the northern part of the British Islands a standing name of those who came from the Scandinavian continent, esp. Norse merchants, vide the old Irish chronicles, and the Sagas, passim. The English used 'easterling' in the same sense, and sterling is an abbreviation of the word from the coin which the 'easterlings' brought with them in trade. Eyvindr austrmaðr, Landn., Nj. 81, Eg. 744, Ísl. ii. 192, 128, Sturl. ii. 47, Lv. 23, Valla L. 216, Landn. 36, 290, 305, Eb. 104, 196, etc. In the Norse Gpl. 450 it is used of Swedes in Norway: austrmanna-skelfir, m. 'skelper' (conqueror, terror) of the east men, a nickname, Landn. 305.

austr-marr, m. the east sea, the east Baltic (Estmere of king Alfred, Oros. Ed. Bosworth, p. 22), Ýt. 18.

austr-mál, n. = austrmál, N. G. L. i. 335.

austr-mörk, f. the east mark, i. e. the east, Ýt. 4.

AUSTR, rs, m. [A. S. and Engl. east; Hel. óstar; Germ. ost, osten], the east; sól í austri, Grág. ii. 224, Rb. 92, Landn. 276; ór austri, Sturl. ii. 25. 2. as adv. towards east, eastward, Nj. 151, Eg. 72, Grág. i. 96, 180.

austr, rs and rar, m. [ausa], the act of drawing water in buckets, pumping; v. dæluaustr and byttaustr, Gret. ch. 19; standa í austri, to toil hard at the pump, Fas. ii. 520, Sturl. iii. 68; til austrar, Gret. 94 B. β. the water pumped or to be pumped, bilge water, Gr. ἀντλος, Sturl. iii. 67, 68; skipið fullt af austri, full of bilge water, Fb. ii. 204 (Fbr.), Finn. 234; standa í a., v. above. COMPD: austrs-ker, austrker (N. G. L. i. 59), a scoop, pump-bucket (cp. ausker), Gpl. 424.

austr-álfa, v. austrhálf.

austr-átt and -ætt, f. eastern region, east; í austr., towards east, in eastern direction, Fms. ii. 49, x. 267, Sks. 38, 655 xiv. B. 1.

austr-bití, a, m. a cross-beam nearest the pumping-place in a ship, Fs. 153.

austr-ferð and austr-för, f. voyage to the east, esp. to Russia or the east Baltic, Fb. i. 130, Ls. 60, the last passage in a mythical sense. COMPS: austrfarar-knórr, m. a vessel bound for the Baltic, Fms. vii. 256. austrfarar-skip, n. id., Fms. viii. 61, Orkn. 274 old Ed., where the new Ed. 334 has útfararskip, a ship bound for the Mediterranean (better).

austr-hálfa, u, f. [Hel. óstarbalba = oriens], often spelt -álfa by dropping the b; the east, in old writers freq. of the Austria of the peace of Verdun, A. D. 843, including the Baltic and the east of Europe; sometimes also of the true east; um Garðaríki (Russia Minor) ok víða um a. heims, Fms. i. 96; í Góðröum austr ok austrhólfum, x. 275; í a. heims eru þrjú Indíalönd, A. A. 283; Licinius lagði undir sik víða v., Blas. 37; Adam ok Eva bygðu síðan í a. þar sem Hebron heitir, Ver. 5, Stj. 67, 43: now used in Icel. = Asia, Vestrhálfa = America, Suðrhálfa = Africa, Norðrhálfa = Europe, Eyaálfa = Australia. COMPS: austrhálfa-lýðr, m. people of the east, Stj. 392. Judges vi. 33. austrhálfa-lýðr, f. id., Stj. 389.

austr-kendr, adj. part. eastern, of wind, Bs. i. 388.

austrligr, adj. eastern, Stj. 336.

austr-lönd, n. pl. the east, orient, the eastern part of Europe, in old writers often synonymous to Austr-hálfa, and opp. to Norðrlönd, Scandinavía; Suðrlönd, South Germany, etc.; Vestrlönd, the British Islands, Normandy, Bretagne, etc., Post. 656 C. 39, Fms. ii. 183, Post. 645. 102, Hkr. i. 134 in a poem of the 10th century used of Russia; cp. Brocm. 101.

austr-mál, n. (navig.), the pumping-watch, the crew being told off two and two, to hand the buckets up, one of them standing in the bilge water down below and the other on the deck, vide the Fbr. 131, Gret. ch. 19; en hverr þeirra manna er síðar kemr en a. komi til hans, þá er hann sekr níu ertogum, N. G. L. i. 335 [ausmaal, bilge water, Ivar Aasen].

austr-oka, að, [austr], to lavish, squander, with dat. an ἀρ. λεγ. as it seems, Fas. iii. 198, 202, where a. fé sínu; cp. Gr. ἀντλέω.

austr-riki, n. the eastern empire, esp. the east of Europe (Russia, Austria, sometimes also including Turkey of the present time); the term is often vague, and synonymous to Austrvegr, Austrlönd, or referring to the German of the year 843; (the mod. sense is = Austria); Ívarr víðföðmi eignaðist allt Danaveldi, ok mikinn hluta Saxlands ok allt A., Hkr. Yngl. S. ch. 45, Fms. vi. 8; Constantinopolis er æðst borga í A., Ver. 49; þeodisum inn mikli var sex vetr konungr í A., 50; Licinius hét konungr í A., Blas. 37, in these last passages = the eastern empire (of Rome); þá er ek (viz. king David) lifða ok vask konungr kallaðr í A. (in the east), Níðrst. 4, cp. Baut. nos. 780, 979.

austr-rúm, n. the part of a vessel's hold near the stern where the pump is, Hkr. i. 82, Stj. 57, Fbr. 158, Edda 35; au aft and fore pumping-place (epra ok fremra austrúm) is mentioned Fms. viii. 139.

austr-trog, n. a scoop, bucket.

austr-vegr, s, m. the eastern way, east, esp. Russia, Wenden, the east Baltic; fara í Austrveg is a standing phrase for trading or piratical expeditions in the Baltic, opp. to viking or vestr-viking, which only refer to expeditions to the British Islands, Normandy, Brittany, etc.; austr-viking, Landn. 221, is a false reading; hann var farmaðr mikill (Hólmgarðs-fari) ok kaupmaðr; fór opt í Austrveg (Baltic), Landn. 169, Nj. 41, Eg. 228, Fms. freq., vide vol. xii, s. v. In the Edda fara í A. is a standing phrase for the expeditions of Thor against giants. Þórr var farinn í A. at berja tröll, 26, cp. Ls. 59, where a. means the eastern region of heaven. Sometimes it is used of the east in general, Ver. 9, Rb. 412, 623, 13, Baut. no. 813. COMPS: austrvegs-konungar, m. pl. the three kings or Magi ('wise men') from the east, Stj. 16; a king of Russia, Fms. x. 397. austrvegs-maðr, m. an inhabitant of Austrvegir, Hkr. i. 44.

austr-øtt, v. austrátt.

austr-ræna, u, f. eastern breeze.

austr-rænn, adj. [Hel. ostroni; A. S. easterne; cp. norrænn, suðrænn], eastern, of the wind; a. gola, eastern breeze, Sturl. iii. 59; vindr, Orkn. (in a verse); viðr, timber from Norway or Scandinavia, Grág. i. 149, the Eistland tynmer of the old Scotch inventories (Jamieson, Suppl. s. v.); Austrænrir menn, Norsemen in Iceland, Fms. ix. 276; as a nickname, Eb. 12, and Landn. The name denotes the inhabitants of the Scandinavian continent as opp. to the British Islands and Iceland.

austr-skota, u, f. = austrsker, Grág. ii. 171; Ísl. ii. 382 spelt ausskota.

au-virð and auvirði, mod. auðvirði, n. [af, off, and verd, value; the change of letter caused by the following v; a purely Icel. form, the Norse being 'afv-'; the mod. Icel. form is auð-v., as if it were to be derived from auð- and verd]; 1. a worthless wretch, a laggard, bungler; sel þú upp, auvirði, knálegar bytturnar, Bungler! band thou up stoutly the buckets, Fbr. 131; hygg ek at eingi maðr eigi jafnmikil a. at frændum sem ek, Hrafn. 11; verða at a., Bret. 163, Sturl. i. 73.

2. a law term, damage, anything impairing the value of a thing; hann ábyrgist við þeim auvirðum er þat fær af því skaða, Grág. i. 431. COMPS: auvirðs-maðr, m. a wretch, laggard, 655, vide Sturl. ii. 139, Fær. 74, Þorf. Karl. 426. auvirðs-skapr, m. naughtiness, Gullþ. 12.

au-virðast, d, to become worthless, Eg. 103, Glúm. 377 C. 2. in the act. to think unworthy, disparage, Barl. 21, 57, 123, 190, Mar. 83; seldom used except in Norse writers, and consequently spelt with an 'af-' in reflex. sense, Stj. 483.

au-virðliga, Norse afvirð-, and mod. Icel. auðvirðil-, adv. despiciously, Sturl. iii. 220, Fs. 71.

au-virðligr, etc., adj. worthless, Fas. i. 87, Bret. 31, 72, Sturl. iii. 225, Barl. 75; at skurðarskírni sé afvirðilig (indigna) Kristnum mönnum, 159.

au-visli, and contr. ausli and usli, a, m.; etym. uncertain, ausli, Gpl. 385 A; usli, N. G. L. i. 246, Fms. i. 202, viii. 341, xi. 35, Edda (Gl.). In the Grág. auvisli, spelt with au or av; in the Ed. of 1829 sometimes with ö where the MSS. have au:

I. a law term, damages, Lat. damnum; bæta auvisla is a standing law term for to pay compensation for damages done, the amount of which was to be fixed by a jury; bæta skal hann a. á fjórtán nóttum sem búar fimm virða, Grág. i. 383, 418, ii. 229, 121, 223 (Ed. 1853), 225 (twice): hence auvislabót. In Norse law, gjalda a., Gpl. 384; ábyrgi honum garðinn ok allan ausla þann er, 385 A: beida usla bótar, N. G. L. i. 246.

II. metaph. hurt, injury in general; mundi þeim þá ekki vera gjört til auvisla, Ld. 76; ok er þat þó líkast, at þú setir eigi undan öllum avvisla (thou wilt not get off unscathed), cf þú tekur eigi við, Fms. iii. 144.

2. devastation, Fms. xi. 81: esp. by fire and sword in the alliterative phrase, eldr (fire) ok usli; fara með eld ok usla, i. 202; heldr en þar léki yfir eldr ok usli, viii. 341; þá gördi á mikitt regn, ok slökði þann eld vandliga, svá at menn máttu þá þegar fara yfir usla þann inn mikla (embers and ruins), xi. 35. In the Edda (Gl.) usli is recorded as one of the sixty names of fire: cp. also the mod. verb ösla, to plunge through: auvisli is now an obsolete word, usli a common word, gjöra usla, to desolate, in the metaph. sense. COMPS: auvisla-bót and usla-bót (N. G. L. i. 246), f. a law term, compensation fixed by a jury of five, cp. above; distinction is made between a. hin meiri and hin niðri, first rate or second rate compensation, Grág. ii. 344: in pl. 225: auslagjald and usla-gjald, n. compensation, Gpl. 387.

AX, n. [Goth. aks, cp. Goth. asans = barvest], an ear of corn, Stj. 201, Thom. 98.

axar-, v. öx, an axe.

ax-helma, u, f. a blade of corn, ear and stem, Stj. 422, Ruth ii. 2 (Engl. Vers. 'ears of corn').

ax-korn, n. an ear of corn, Edda (Ub.) ii. 283.

axla, að, to shoulder, Fms. iii. 228.

axlar-, v. öxl, shoulder.

axl-byrdr, f. a shoulder-load, Orku. 346, Grett. 177 new Ed.

axl-hár, adj. shoulder high, Js. 101.

axull, m., v. öxull, axis, an axle-tree.

ay, interj. dolendi, ay mér veslugri, Mar. Fr.

Á

Á, á, prep., often used elliptically, or even adverbially, [Goth. ana; Engl. on; Germ. an. In the Scandinavian idioms the liquid n is absorbed. In English the same has been supposed to happen in adverbial phrases, e. g. 'along, away, abroad, afoot, again, agate, ahead, aloft, alone, askew, aside, astray, awry,' etc. It is indeed true that the Ormulum in its northern dialect freq. uses o, even in common phrases, such as 'o boke, o land, o life, o slæpe, o strande, o write, o naht, o loft,' etc., v. the glossary; and we may compare on foot and afoot, on sleep (Engl. Vers. of Bible) and asleep; A. S. a-butan and on-butan (about); agen and ongean (again, against); on bæc, aback; on life, alive; on middan, amid. But it is more than likely that in the expressions quoted above, as well as in numberless others, as well in old as in modern English, the English a as well as the o of the Ormulum and the modern Scottish and north of England o-are in reality remains of this very á pronounced au or ou, which was brought by the Scandinavian settlers into the north of England. In the struggle for supremacy between the English dialects after the Conquest, the Scandinavian form á or a won the day in many cases to the exclusion of the Anglo-Saxon on. Some of these adverbs have representatives only in the Scandinavian tongues, not in Anglo-Saxon: see below, with dat. B. II, C. VII; with acc. C. I. and VI. The prep. á denotes the surface or outside; í and ór the inside; at, tíl, and frá nearness measured to or from an object: á thus answers to the Gr. ἐν the Lat. in includes á and í together.]

With dat. and acc.: in the first case with the notion of remaining on a place, answering to Lat. in with abl.; in the last with the notion of motion to the place, = Lat. in with acc.

WITH DAT.

A. Loc. I. generally on, upon; á gólfi, on the floor Nj. 2; á hendi, on the hand (of a ring), 48, 225; á palli, 50; á steini 108; á vegg, 115; á sjá ok á landi, on sea and land. In some instances the distinction between á and í is loose and wavering, but in most cases common sense and usage decide; thus 'á bók' merely denotes the letters, the penmanship, 'í the contents of a book; mod usage, however, prefers 'í lesa bók, but stafr bók. Old writers on the other hand; á bóku Enskum, in English books, Landn. 24, but í Aldafars bók, 23 (in the book De Mensurá Temporum, by Bede) cp. Grág. i. 76, where á is a false reading instead of at; á bréfi, the contents of a letter: of clothing or arms, mítr á höfði, sverð á hlið mítre on bead, sword on side, Fms. i. 266, viii. 404; hafa lykil á sér, on one's person, 655 xvii. 22; möttull á tyglum, a mantle hanging on (i. e. fastened by) laces, Fms. vii. 201: á þingi means to be present at a meeting í þingi, to abide within a jurisdiction; á himni, á jörðu, on (Engl. in heaven and earth, e. g. in the Lord's Prayer, but í helviti, in hell; í Gimli, Edda (of a heavenly abode); á báti, á skipi denote crew and cargo, 'í the timber or materials of which a ship is built, Eg. 385; ver í stafni á skipi, 177; á skógi, to be abroad in a wood (of a hunter robber, deer); but to be situated (a house), at work (to fell timber), skógi, 573, Fs. 5, Fms. iii. 122, viii. 31, xi. 1, Glúm. 330, Landn. 173; í mörkinni, Fms. i. 8, but í mörk, of a farm; á firðinum means lying in a firib, of ships or islands (on the surface of the water), þær eyjar liggj á Breiðafirði, Ld. 36; but í firði, living in a district named Firth; í landi, Nj. 98, Fms. xi. 386.

II. á is commonly used in connection with the pr. names or countries terminating in 'land,' Engl. in, Englandi, Írlandi, Skotlandi, Bretlandi, Saxlandi, Vindlandi, Vínlandi, Grænalandi, Íslandi, Hálogalandi, Rogalandi, Jótlandi, Frakklandi, Hjaltlandi, Jämtlandi, Hvítamannalandi, Norðrlandum, etc., vide Landn. an the index to Fms. xii. In old writers í is here very rare, in modern authors more frequent; taste and the context in many instances decide. An Icelander would now say, speaking of the queen or king, 'á Englandi,' ruling over, but to live 'í Englandi,' or 'á Englandi,' the rule is the last case not being quite fixed.

2. in connection with the names of countries: á Mæri, Vörs, Ögðum, Fjöllum, all districts of Norway, v. Landn.; á Mýrum (in Icel.), á Finnmörk, Landn., á Fjóni (Danish island); but í Danmörk, Svíþjóð (á Svíþjóð is poet., Gr. 13).

3. before Icel. farms denoting open and elevated slopes an spaces (not too high, because then 'at' must be used), such as 'staði völlr, ból, hjalli, bakki, heimr, eyri,' etc.; á Veggjum, Landn. 69; Hólmblátri, id.: those ending in '-staðr,' á Geirmundarstöðum, Þóris stöðum, Jarðlangsstöðum . . . Landn.; '-völlr,' á Möðruvöllum: á Fitjum (the farm) í Stord (the island), í Fenhring (the island) á Áski (the farm), Landn., Eg.: '-nes' sometimes takes á, sometimes í (in mod usage always 'í'); á Nesi, Eb. 14, or í Krossnesi, 30; in the last case the notion of island, vīrōsus, prevails: so also, 'fjörðr,' as, þeir börðust á Vigra firði (of a fight on the ice), Landn. 101, but orusta í Hafrsfirði, 122 with '-bær,' á is used in the sense of a farm or estate, hón sa á e-m b: mikitt hús ok fagr, Edda 22; 'í bær' means within doors, of the buildings with 'Bær' as pr. name Landn. uses 'í,' 71, 160, 257, 309, 332.

4. denoting on or just above; of the sun, when the time is fixed by regardin the sun in connection with points in the horizon, a standing phrase in Icel.; sól ú gjáhamri, when the sun is on the crag of the Rift, Grág. i. 26, cp. Glúm. 387; so, brú á ú, a bridge on a river, Fms. viii. 179, Hrafn. 20; taka húsi á e-m, to surprise one, to take the house over his head, Fms. i. 11.

III. ú is sometimes used in old writers where we should now expect an acc., esp. in the phrase, leggja sverði (or the like) á e-m, or á e-m miðjum, to stab, Eg. 216, Gísl. 106, Band. 14; þá stakk Starkaðr sprotanum á konungi, then Starkaðr stabbed the king with the wand, Fas. iii. 34; bita á kampi (vör), to bite the lips, as a token of pain or emotion, Nj. 209, 68; taka á e-u, to touch a thing, lay bold of it, v. taka; fá á e-u, (pöet.); leggja hendr á (better at) síðum, in wrestling, Fms. x. 331; koma á úvart á e-m, to come on one unawares, ix. 407 (rare).

B. TEMP. of a particular point or period of time, at, on, in: I. gener. denoting during, in the course of; á nótt, degi, nætrþeli . . ., Bs. i. 139; or spec. adding a pron. or an adjunct, á næsta sumri, the next summer; á því ári, þingi, misseri, hausti, vári, sumri . . ., during, in that year . . ., Bs. i. 679, etc.; á þrem sumrum, in the course of three summers, Grág. i. 218; á þrem vörum, Fms. ii. 114; á hálf mánaðar fresti, within half a month's delay, Nj. 99; á tvítugs, sextugs . . . aldri, á barns, gamals aldri, etc., at the age of . . ., v. aldr; á dögum e-s, in the days of, in his reign or time, Landn. 24, Hrafn. 3, Fms. ix. 229.

II. used of a fixed recurrent period or season; á vörum, sumrum, haustum, vetrum, ú kveldum, every spring, summer . . ., in the evenings, Eg. 711, Fms. i. 23, 25, vi. 394, Landn. 292; with the numeral adverbs, cp. Lat. ter in anno, um sinn á mánuði, ári, once a month, once a year, where the Engl. a is not the article but the preposition, Grág. i. 89.

III. of duration; á degi, during a whole day, Fms. v. 48; á sjau nóttum, Bærd. 166; á því meli, during that time, in the meantime, Grág. i. 259.

IV. connected with the seasons (á vetri, sumri, vári, hausti), 'á' denotes the next preceding season, the last winter, summer, autumn, Eb. 40, 238, Ld. 206; in such instances 'á' denotes the past, 'at' the future, 'í' the present; thus í vetri in old writers means this winter; á vetri, last winter; at vetri, next winter, Eb. 68 (in a verse), etc.

C. In various other relations, more or less metaphorically, on, upon, in, to, with, towards, against:

I. denoting object, in respect of, against, almost periphrastically; dvelja á náðum e-s, under one's protection, Fms. i. 74; hafa metnað á e-u, to be proud of, to take pride in a thing, 127.

2. denoting a personal relation, in; bæta e-t á e-m, to make amends, i. e. to one personally; misgöra e-t á e-m, to inflict wrong on one; hafa elsku (hatr) á e-m, to bear love (hatred) to one, Fms. ix. 242; hefna sín á e-m, to take revenge on one's person, on any one; rjúfa sætt á e-m, to break truce on the person of any one, to offend against his person, Nj. 103; hafa sár á sér, 101; sjá á e-m, to read on or in one's face; sér hann á hverjum manni hvárt til þin er vel eðr illa, 106; var þat brátt auðséð á hennar höfum, at . . ., it could soon be seen in all her doings, that . . ., Ld. 22.

3. also generally to shew signs of a thing; sýna fúleika á sér, to shew marks of displeasure, Nj. 14, Fs. 14; taka vell, illa, lítt, á e-u, to take a thing well, ill, or indifferently, id.; finna á sér, to feel in oneself; fann lítt á honum, hvárt . . ., it could hardly be seen in his face, whether . . ., Eb. 42; líkindi eru á, it is likely, Ld. 172; göra kost á e-u, to give a choice, chance of it, 178; eiga vald á e-u, to have power over . . ., Nj. 10.

II. denoting encumbrance, duty, liability; er fimtardómsmál á þeim, to be subject to . . ., Nj. 231; the phrase, hafa e-t á hendi, or vera á hendi e-m, on one's bands, of work or duty to be done; einðagi á fé, term, pay day, Grág. i. 140; ómagi (skylda, afvinna) á fé, of a burden or encumbrance, D. I. and Grág. in several passages.

III. with a personal pronoun, sér, mér, honum . . ., denoting personal appearance, temper, character, look, or the like; vera þungur, léttr . . . á sér, to be heavy or light, either bodily or mentally; þungur á sér, corpulent, Sturl. i. 112; kátr ok léttr á sér, of a gay and light temper, Fms. x. 152; þat bragð hafði hann á sér, be looked as if, . . . the expression of his face was as though . . ., Ld., cp. the mod. phrase, hafa á sér svip, bragð, æði, síð, of one's manner or personal appearance, to bear oneself as, or the like; skjótr (seinn) á fæti, speedy (slow) of foot, Nj. 258.

IV. as a periphrasis of the possessive pronoun connected with the limbs or parts of the body. In common Icel. such phrases as my hands, eyes, head . . . are hardly ever used, but höfuð, eyru, hárr, nef, munnr, hendr, fætr . . . á mér; so 'í' is used of the internal parts, e. g. hjarta, bein . . . í mér; the eyes are regarded as inside the body, augun í honum: also without the possessive pronoun, or as a periphrasis for a genitive, brjóstið á e-m, one's breast, Nj. 95, Edda 15; súrnar í augum, it smarts in my eyes, my eyes smart, Nj. 202; kvíðinu á sér, its belly, 655 xxx. 5, Fms. vi. 350; hendr á hermi, ber hands, Gísl. (in a verse); í vörunum á honum, on his lips, Band. 14; ristín á honum, his step, Fms. viii. 141; harðr í tungu, sharp of tongue, Hallfred (Fs. 114); kalt (heitt) á fingrum, höndum, fótum . . ., cold (warm) in the fingers, bands, feet . . ., i. e. with cold fingers, etc.; cp. also the phrase, verða vísa (orð) á munni, of extemporising verses or speeches, freq. in the Sagas; fastur á fótum, fast by the leg, of a bondsman, Nj. 27; of the whole body, díla fundu þeir á honum, 209. The pers. pron. is used only in solemn style (poetry, hymns, the Bible), and perhaps only when influenced by foreign languages, e. g. mitt hjarta hví svo hryggist þú, as a translation of 'warumb betrübst du dich mein Herz?' the famous hymn by Hans Sachs; instead of the popular hjartað í mér, Sl. 43. 44: hjartað mitt is only used as a term of endearment, as by a husband to his wife, parents to their child, or the like, in a metaphorical sense; the heart proper is 'í mér', not 'mitt.'

2. of other things, and as a periphrasis of a genitive, of a part belonging to the whole, e. g. dyrr á húsi = húsyrr, at the house-doors; turn á kirkju = kirkju turn; stafu, skutr, segl, úrar . . . á skipi, the stem, stern, sail . . . of a ship, Fms. ix. 135; blöð á lauk, á tré . . ., leaves of a leek, of a tree . . ., Fas. i. 469; egg á sverði = sverðs egg; stafur á bók; kjálur á bók, and in endless other instances.

V. denoting instrumentality, by, on, or a-, by means of; afla fjár á hölmgöngum, to make money a-duelling, by means of duels, Eg. 498; á verkum sínum, to subst. on one's own work, Njarð. 366; as a law term, sekjast á e-ju, to be convicted upon . . ., Grág. i. 123; sekst með þar á sínu eigni (a man is guilty in re sua), of hann tekr af þeim manni er heimild (possessio) hefir til, ii. 191; falla á verkum sínum, to be killed flagranti delicto, v. above; fella e-n á bragði, by a sleight in wrestling; komast undan á flótta, to escape by flight, Eg. 11; á hlaupi, by one's feet, by speed, Hkr. ii. 168; lifa á e-u, to feed on; bergja á e-u, to taste of a thing; svala sér á e-u, to quench the thirst on.

VI. with subst. numerals; á þriðja tigi manna, up to thirty, i. e. from about twenty to thirty, Ld. 194; á öðru hundraði skipa, from one to two hundred sail strong, Fms. x. 126; á níunda tigi, between eighty and ninety years of age, Eg. 764, v. above; used as prep., á hendi, on one's band, i. e. bound to do it, v. hönd.

VII. in more or less adverbial phrases it may often be translated in Engl. by a participle and a- prefixed; á lopti, aloft; á floti, afloat; á lífi, alive; á verðgöngu, a-begging; á brautu, away; á baki, a-back, behind, past; á milli, a-tween; á laun, alone, secretly; á launungu, id.; á móti, against; á enda, at an end, gone; á huld, hidden; fara á hæl, to go a-beel, i. e. backwards, Fms. vii. 70;—but in many cases these phrases are transl. by the Engl. partic. with a, which is then perh. a mere prefix, not a prep., á flugi, a-flying in the air, Nj. 79; vera á gangi, a-going; á ferli, to be about; á leiki, a-playing, Fms. i. 78; á sundi, a-swimming, ii. 27; á verði, a-watching, x. 201; á hrakningi, a-wandering; á reiki, a-wavering; á skjálfi, a-sivering; á hleri, a-listening; á tali, a-talking, Ísl. ii. 200; á hlaupi, a-running, Hkr. ii. 268; á verki, a-working; á veidum, a-bunting; á fiski, a-fishing; á beit, grazing: and as a law term it even means in flagranti, N. G. L. i. 348.

VIII. used absolutely without a case in reference to the air or the weather, where 'á' is almost redundant; þoka var á mikil, a thick fog came on, Nj. 267; niðamykr var á, pitch darkness came on, Eg. 210; allhvast á norðan, a very strong breeze from the north, Fms. ix. 20; þá var á norðrant, a north wind came on, 42, Ld. 56; hvaðan sem á er, from whatever point the wind is; var á hríð veðrs, a snow storm came on, Nj. 282; górdi á regn, rain came on, Fms. vi. 394, xi. 35, Ld. 156.

WITH ACC.

A. Loc. I. denoting simple direction towards, esp. connected with verbs of motion, going, or the like; hann gékk á bergsnös, Eg. 389; á hamar, Fas. ii. 517.

2. in phrases denoting direction; leggja á útbörða, lying on the outside of the ship, Eg. 354; á annat borð skipinu, Fms. vii. 260; á bæði borð, on both sides of the ship, Nj. 124, Ld. 56; á tvær hliðar, on both sides, Fms. v. 73, Ísl. ii. 159; á hlíð, side-wards; út á hlíð, Nj. 262, Edda 44; á aðra hönd henni, Nj. 50, Ld. 46; höggva á tvær hendr, to bew or strike right and left, Ísl. ii. 368, Fas. i. 384, Fms. viii. 363, x. 383.

3. upp á, upon; hann tók augu þjaza ok kastaði upp á himin, Edda 47; with verbs denoting to look, see, horfa, sjá, líta, etc.; hann rak skygnur á land, he cast glances towards the land, Ld. 154.

II. denoting direction with or without the idea of arriving: 1. with verbs denoting to aim at; of a blow or thrust, stefna á fóttum, Nj. 84; spjótið stefnir á hann miðjan, 205; of the wind, gékk veðrit á vestr, the wind veered to west, Fms. ix. 25; sigla á haf, to stand out to sea, Hkr. i. 146, Fms. i. 39; with 'út' added, Eg. 390, Fms. x. 349.

2. conveying the notion of arriving, or the intervening space being traversed; spjótið kom á miðjan skjöldum, Eg. 379, Nj. 96, 97; langt upp á land, far up inland, Hkr. i. 146; to reach, taka ofan á belt, of the long locks of a woman, to reach down to the belt, Nj. 2; ofan á bringu, 48; á þá ofan, 91. III. without reference to the space traversed, connected with verbs denoting to go, turn, come, ride, sail, throw, or the like, motion of every kind; hann kastar honum á völlum, he flings him down, Nj. 91; hlaupa á skip sitt, to leap on board his ship, 43; á hest, to mount quickly, Edda 75; á lend hestinum, Nj. 91; hann gengr á súðland sitt, he walks on to his fields, 82; on, upon, komast á fætr, to get upon one's legs, 92; ganga á land, to go a-shore, Fms. i. 40; ganga á þing, vii. 242, Grág. (often); á skóg, á merkr ok skóga, into a wood, Fb. i. 134, 257, Fms. xi. 118, Eg. 577, Nj. 130; fara á Finnmörk, to go travelling in Finmark, Fms. i. 8; koma, fara á bæ, to arrive at the farm-house; koma á veggin, Eg. 578; stiga á bát, skip, to go on board, 158; hann gékk upp á borg, he went up to the burg (castle), 717; en er þeir komu á loptrið, 236; hrinda skipum á vatn, to float the ships down into the water, Fms. i. 58; reka austr á haf, to drift eastwards on the sea, x. 145; ríða ofan á, to ride down or over, Nj. 82.

IV. in some cases the acc. is used where the dat. would be used, esp. with verbs denoting to see or bear, in such phrases as, þeir sá boða niðrinn inn á fjörðinn, they saw great breakers away up in the bight of the fjord, the acc. being due perhaps to a notion or direction of the eye or ear towards the object, Nj. 124; sá þeir fólkít á land, they saw the people in the direction of land, Fas. ii. 517; in phrases denoting to be placed, to sit, to be seated, the seat or bench is freq. in the acc. where the dat. would now be used; konungur var þar á land upp, the king was then up the country, the spectator or narrator is conceived as looking from the shore or sea-side, Nj. 46; sitja á miðjan bekk, to be seated on the middle bench, 50; skyldi konungssæti vera á þann bekk . . . annat úndvegi var á hinn úædra pall; hann setti konungs háseti á miðjan þverpall, Fms. vi. 439, 440, cp. Fagrsk. l. c., Sturl. iii. 182; eru víða sjallbyggðir upp á mörkina, in the mark or forest, Eg. 58; var þar mörk mikil á land upp, 229; maunnsafnað er á land upp (viewed from the sea), Ld. 76; stóll var settur á mótið, Fas. i. 58; beiða fars á skip, to beg a passage, Grág. i. 90.

V. denoting parts of the body; bíta e-n á barka, to bite one in the throat, Ísl. ii. 447; skera á háls, to cut the throat of any one, Nj. 156; brjóta e-n á háls, to break any one's neck; brjóta e-n á bak, to break any one's back, Fms. vii. 119; kalinn á kné, frozen to the knees with cold, Hm. 3.

VI. denoting round; láta reipi á háls hesti, round his horse's neck, 623, 33; leggja söðul á hest, Nj. 83; and ellipt., leggja á, to saddle; breiða feld á höfuð sér, to wrap a cloak over his head, 164; reyta á sik mosa, to gather moss to cover oneself with, 267; spenna hring á hönd, á fingr, Eg. 300.

VII. denoting a burden; stela mat á tvá hesta, hey á fimtán hesta, i. e. a two, a fifteen horse load, Nj. 74; metaph., kjósa feigd á menn, to choose death upon them, i. e. doom them to death, Edda 22.

B. TEMP.

I. of a period of time, at, to; á morgun, to-morrow (if morgun now means the past morning, the morning of to-day), Ísl. ii. 333.

II. if connected with the word day, 'á' is now used before a fixed or marked day, a day of the week, a feast day, or the like; á Laugardag, á Sunnudag . . . on Saturday, Sunday, the Old English, a-Sunday, a-Monday, etc.; á Jóládaginn, Páskadaginn, on Yule and Easter-day; but in old writers more often used ellipt. Sunnudaginn, Jóládaginn . . . by dropping the prep. 'á,' Fms. viii. 397, Grág. i. 18.

III. connected with 'dagr' with the definite article suffixed, 'á' denotes a fixed, recurring period or season, in; á daginn, during the day-time, every day in turn, Grett. 91 A. IV. connected with 'evening, morning, the seasons,' with the article; á kveldit, every evening, Ld. 14; á sumarit, every summer, Vd. 128, where the new Ed. Fs. 51 reads sumrum; á haust, every autumn, Eg. 741 (perh. a misprint instead of á haustin or á haustum); á vetrinn, in the winter time, 710; á vátit, every spring, Gpl. 347; the sing., however, is very rare in such cases, the old as well as mod. usage prefers the plur.; á nættar, by night, Nj. 210; á vátin, Eg. 710; á sumrin, haustin, á morgnana, in the morning (á morgin, sing., means to-morrow); á kveldin, in the evening, only 'dagr' is used in sing., v. above (á daginn, not á dagana); but elliptically and by dropping the article, Icelanders say, kveld og morgna, nótt og dag, vetr sumar vor og haust, in the same sense as those above mentioned.

V. denoting duration, the article is dropped in the negative phrase, aldri á sinn dag, never during one's life; aldri á mína daga, never in my life, Bjarn. 8, where a possess. pron. is put between noun and prep., but this phrase is very rare. Such phrases as, á þann dag, that day, and á þenna dag, Stj. 12, 655 xxx. 2. 20, are unclassical.

VI. á dag without article can only be used in a distributive sense, e. g. tvísvar á dag, twice a-day; this use is at present freq. in Icel., yet instances from old writers are not on record.

VII. denoting a movement onward in time, such as, líðið á nótt, dag, kveld, morgun, sumar, vetr, vár, haust (or nóttina, daginn . . .), jól, páska, föstu, or the like, far on in the night, day . . ., Edda 33; er á leið vetrinn, when the winter was well on, as the winter wore on, Nj. 126; cp. áliðinn: also in the phrase, hnignin á inn eftra aldr, well stricken in years, Ld. 68.

C. Metaph. and in various relations:

I. somewhat metaphorically, denoting an act only (not the place); fara á fund, á vit e-s, to call for one, Eg. 140; koma á ræðu við e-n, to come to a parley with, to speak, 173; ganga á tal, Nj. 103; skora á hölm, to challenge to a duel on an island; koma á gríð, to enter into a service, to be domiciled, Grág. i. 151; fara á veidar, to go a-hunting, Fms. i. 8.

β. generally denoting on, upon, in, to; bjóða vöxtu á féit, to offer interest on the money, Grág. i. 108; ganga á berhögg, to come to blows, v. berhögg; fá á e-n, to make an impression upon one, Nj. 79; ganga á vápn e-s, to throw oneself on an enemy's weapon, meet him face to face, Rd. 310; ganga á lagið, to press on up the spear-shaft after it has passed through one so as to get near one's foe, i. e. to avail oneself of the last chance; bera fé á e-n, to bribe, Nj. 62; bera öl á e-n, to make drunk, Fas. i. 13; snúinn á e-t, inclined to, Fms. x. 142; samuælast á e-t, to agree upon, Nj. 86; sættast, verða súttur á e-t, in the same sense, to come to an agreement, settlement, or atonement, 78, Edda 15; Eb. 288, Ld. 50, Fms. i. 279; ganga á mála, to serve for pay as a soldier, Nj. 121; ganga á vald e-s, to put oneself in his power, 267; ganga á sætt, to break an agreement; vega á veittar trygðir, to break truce, Grág. ii. 169.

II. denoting in regard to, in respect to: I. of colour, complexion, the hue of the hair, or the like; hvítir, jarpr, dökr . . . á hárf, having white, brown, or dark . . . hair, Ísl. ii. 190, Nj. 39; svartir á brúin ok brá, dark of brow and eyebrow; dökr á hörund, id., etc.

2. denoting skill, dexterity; hagr á tré, a good carpenter; hagr á járn, málni, smíðar . . ., an expert worker in iron, metals . . ., Eg. 4; fímr á boga, good at the bow: also used of mastery in science or arts, meistari á hörpu-slátt, a master in striking the harp, Fas. iii. 220; fræðimaðr á kvæði, knowing many poems by heart, Fms. vi. 391; fræðimaðr á landnámsögur ok forna fræði, a learned scholar in histories and antiquities (of Are Frode), Ísl. ii. 189; mikill á íþrótt, skilful in an art, Edda (pref. 148; but dat. in the phrase, kunna (vel) á skíðum, to be a cunning skater, Fms. i. 9, vii. 120.

3. denoting dimensions; á hæð, lengd, breidd, dýpt . . ., in the height, length, breadth, depth . . ., Eg. 277; á hvern veg, on each side, Edda 41 (square miles); á annan veg, on the one side, Grág. i. 89. β. the phrase, á sik, in regard to oneself, vel (illa) á sik kominn, of a fine (ugly) appearance, Ld. 100, Fas. iii. 74.

III. denoting instrumentality; bjargast á sínar hendr, to live on the work of one's own hands, (á sínar spýtur is a mod. phrase in the same sense); (vega) á skálin, pundara, to weigh in scales, Grág. ii. 370; á hann hefði tvá pundara, ok hefði á hinn meira keypt en á hinn minna selt, of a man using two scales, a big one for buying and a little one for selling, Sturl. i. 91; á sinn kostnað, at one's own expense; nefna e-n á nafn, by name, Grág. i. 17, etc. The Icel. also say, spinna á rokk, snældu, to spin on or with a rock or distaff; mala á kvern, to grind in a 'querne', where Edda 73 uses dat.; esp. of musical instruments, syngja, leika á hljóðfæri, hörpu, gígju . . .; in the old usage, leika hörpu . . ., Stj. 458.

IV. denoting the manner or way of doing: I. á þessa lund, in this wise, Grág. ii. 22; á marga vega, á alla, ýmsa vega, in many, all, respects, Fms. i. 114; á sitt hóf, in its turn, respectively, Ld. 136, where the context shews that the expression answers to the Lat. mutatis mutandis; á Þýðersku, after German fashion, Sks. 288.

2. esp. of language; mæla, rita á e-a tungu, to speak, write in a tongue; á Írsku, in Irish, Ld. 76; Norrænu, in Norse, Eb. 330, Vm. 35; á Danska tungu, in Danish, i. e. Scandinavian, Norse, or Icelandic, Grág. i. 18; á Vára tungu, i. e. in Icelandic, 181; rita á Norræna tungu, to write in Norse, Hkr. (pref.), Bs. i. 59;—at present, dat. is sometimes used.

3. in some phrases the acc. is used instead of the dat.; hann sýndi á sik mikit gaman, Fms. x. 329; hann lét ekki á sik finna, he shewed no sign of motion, Nj. 111; skaltú önga fáleika á þik gera (Cod. Kalf.), 14.

V. used in a distributive sense; skal mörk kaupar gæzlu á kú, eðri oxar fim vetra gaman, a mark for every cow, Grág. i. 147; alin á hvert hross, 442; á mann, per man (now freq.); cp. also á dag above, lit. B.

VI. connected with nouns, I. prepositional; á hendr (with dat.), against; á hæla, at heel, close behind; á bak, at back, i. e. past, after; á vit (with gen.), towards. 2. adverbially; á brant, away, abroad; á víxl, in turns; á mis, amiss; á við ok dreif, a-wide and a-drift, i. e. dispersedly.

3. used almost redundantly before the following prep.; á eptir, after, behind; á undan, in front of; á meðal, á milli, among; á móti, against; á við, about, alike; á frá (cp. Swed. ifrån), from (rare); á fyrir—fyrir, Hausti. I.; á hjá, beside (rare); á fram, a-head, forwards; á samt, together; ávalt = of all, always: following a prep., upp á, upon; niðr á, down upon; ofan á, epitir á, post eventum, (temp.) á eptir is loc., id., etc.

VII. connected with many transitive verbs, answering to the Lat. ad- or in-, in composition, in many cases periphrastically for an objective case. The prep. generally follows after the verb, instead of being prefixed to it as in Lat., and answers to the Engl. on, to; heita kalla, hrópa á, to call on; heyrja, hlusta, hlýða á, to hearken to, listen to; hyggja, hugsa á, to think on; minna á, to remind; sjá, líta, horfa, stara, mæna, glápa, koma auga . . . á, to look on; gírast á, to wish for; trúa á, to believe on; skora á, to call on any one to come out, challenge; kærta á, to accuse; heilsa á, to greet; herja, ganga, ríða, hlaupta, ríða . . . á, to fall on, attack, cp. ágangr, áreið, áhlaup; ljúga á, to tell lies of; slánder, telja á, to carp at; ausa, tala, hella, kasta, verpa . . . á, to pour, throw on; ríða, bera, dreifa á, to sprinkle on; vanta, skorta á, to fall short of; ala á, to plead, beg; leggja á, to throw a spell on, lay a saddle on; hætta á, to venture on; gízka á, to guess at; kveða á, to fix on, etc.: in a reciprocal sense, haldast á, of mutual strife; sendast á, to exchange presents; skrifast á, to correspond (mod.); kallast á, to shout mutually; standast á, to coincide, so as to be just opposite one another, etc.

á, interj. denoting wonder, doubt, or the like, etc. Á, f. [Lat. aqua; Goth. abva; Hel. aba; A. S. ea; O. H. G. awa, owa; cp. Germ. ach and au; Fr. eau, eaux; Engl. Ax-, Ex-, etc., in names of places; Swed.-Dan. å; the Scandinavians absorb the u, so that only a single vowel or diphthong remains of the whole word]—a river. The old form in nom. dat. acc. sing. is aw, v. the introduction to A, page 1, 333 sq. where óen, ó (acc.), and óna; so also Greg. 677; the fragn. of Grág. ii. 222, 223, new Ed. In the Kb. of the Edda old form occurs twice, viz. page 75, óna (acc.), (but two lines v. ána), í ónni (dat.) The old form also repeatedly occurs in Kb. and Sb. of the Grág., e.g. ii. 266, 267; gen. sing. ár; nom. pl. en. á contracted, dat. ám, obsolete form óm; Edda 43, Eg. 80, 33, 185; proverbs, at ósi skal á stemma, answering to the Lat. ipis obsta, Edda 60; hér kemur á til safar, bere the river runs into sea, metaph. = this is the very end, seems to have been a favourite of old poems; it is recorded in the Húsrápa and the Nordseta-v. Edda 96, Skálda 198; cp. the common saying, öllu vötn renna til sea, 'all waters run into the sea.' Rivers with glacier water are in called Hvítá, White river, or Jökulsá: Hitá, Hot river, from a hot geyser, opp. to Kaldá, v. Landn.: others take a name from the fish in it, as Laxá, Lax or Salmon river (freq.); Örríða á, etc.: a tributary is þvera, etc.: ár in the Njala often means the great rivers Ölfusá, Þjórsá in the south of Iceland. Áin helga, a river in Sweden, Hkr. is also suffixed to the names of foreign rivers, Tempsá = Thames; Danube (Germ. Don-ou), (mod.), etc. Vide Edda (Gl.) 116, 117, joining the names of over a hundred North-English and Scottish rivers. Þos: ár-áll, m. the bed of a river, Hkr. iii. 117. ár-bakki, a, the bank of a river, Ld. 132, Nj. 234. ár-brot, n. inundation of a river, Bs. ii. 37; at present used of a shallow ford in a river. ár-á, n. a pool in a river, Bs. i. 331. ár-farvegr, m. a water-course, 53. ár-fors, m. a waterfall or force, Barl. 190. ár-gljúfr, m. basin of a river, Fms. viii. 51, Fær. 62. ár-hlutr, m. one's portion of a river, as regards fishing rights, Fms. x. 489, Sturl. i. 202. ár-n and ár-megn, n. the main stream of a river, Stj. 251. ár-ú, n. the mouth of a river, Fms. ix. 381. ár-mót and á-mót, n. waters-meet; Lat. confluentia, H. E. i. 129. ár-óss, m. the 'oyce' mouth of a river, Eg. 99, 129, 229; whence the corrupt local name of Danish town Aarhus, Fms. xi. 208. ár-reki, a, m. drift, the ice and flotsam (of fish, timber, etc.) in a river, Jm. 25. ár-ström, m. the current in a river, Fms. vii. 257, 260. ár-strönd, n. strand of a river, Stj. 268, 673, 53. ár-vað, n. a ford of a river, 34. ár-vegr = árfarvegr, Fas. i. 533. ár-vöxtr, m. the swell of a river, Fms. i. 286. ár-á, a, m. increase, Bs. i. 182. β. interest of money, K. Á. 208, L. ii. 381. ár-á, rs, m. out-pouring, foul language, Sturl. i. 21. ár-á, f. a thrashing, flogging, = barsmíð, Sturl. iii. 237. ár-á, a, m. profit, gain, Fms. xi. 441 (now freq.) ár-á, f. a tasting, Barl. 72. ár-á, a, m. an accuser, prosecutor (bera á, accusare), Jb. 252 A; an law term.) ár-á, f. a disposition to accuse, Hom. 86. ár-á, n. inspired, transl. from Lat.; á. af Heilögum Anda, Fms. 3, Hom. 12. ár-á, n. inspiration, Skálda 175, 179, 180; the old. inspiration, Fms. x. 371. ár-á, rs, m., dat. áblaestri, a breathing upon, Fms. x. 210; theol. in- ion, ii. 164, v. 217, Eluc. 4; medic. pustula laborum, Féf. ix. 184. ár-á, n. a manor-house, = aðalból, B. K. 40. ár-á, f. used only in pl. ábætr, of improvements, esp. on a farm or á; ár. jarðar, D. N., D. I. i. 199. COMPD: ábóta-vakt, n. adj. coming, imperfect, Hkr. ii. 89, Sturl. i. 162. ÓTI, a, m. [Lat. abbas, from Hebr. abba], an abbot. ábbati, a form is nearer to the Lat., is rare, but occurs, 655 iii, 656 A, i. om. 237. 2. The Icel. form ábóti answers to the Engl. abbot, Fms. 7, Bs. i. ii. freq., Sks., etc. COMPDS: ábóta-dóm, m. and á-dæmi, n. an abbey, 655 xxxii, Bs. i. 831. ábóta-laust, n. without an abbot, vacant, Ann. 1393. ábóta-son, m. son of an abbot, Bs. i. 679. ábóta-stétt, f. and -stétt, m. the rank of an abbot, Ann. 1325. ábóta-stofa, u, f. the abbot's par- lour. ábóta-sseti, n. the seat of an abbot, 655 xxxii. ábóta-á, n. the power, dignity of an abbot, Ann. 1345. ár-á, u, f. a evening, counterpane, Korm. 206, Stj. 304. ár-á, n. a bed-covering, quilt, Str. 5, 22, Vm. 93,—in the last pas-age of a winding-sheet or fall; á. kúpa, Vm. 67. ár-á, f. pl., v. áfr-á. ár-á, ar, m. a charge (bera á, accusare); varði mik eigi þess áburðar, ii. 57, Rd. 236. β. medic. salve, ointment (bera á, to smear), Bs. 0. γ. pomp or bravery in dress (berast á, to puff oneself up), in COMPDS áburðar-kleði, n. fine clothes, showy dress, Ber. 5. δ. horse load: áburðar-hest, m. a pack-horse, = klyfja hest. ár-á-maðr, m. a dressy, showy person, a dandy, Fms. iv. 255, 208. áburðar-mikill, adj. puffed up, showy, Ld. 248. ár-á-samliðr and áburðar-samr, adj. id., Sks. 452, 437. ár-á, f. [þúa á], an abode or residence on an estate or farm, tenancy; ... á annars manns land til ábúðar (as a tenant), Grág. ii. 253; á.

jarðar (possession) heimilar tekju, Gpl. 329; en ef land spillist í á, hans, during his tenancy, K. þ. K. 170; þá öðlast hann leigu (rent) en hinn á (tenancy), N. G. L. i. 94: whatever refers to the right and duties of a tenant, landskyld ok alla á. jarðar, Jb. 210, 346, 167. COMPDS: ábúðar-maðr, m. inhabitant, Stj. 368. ábúðar-skylda, u, f. duties of a tenant, Jb. 211. á-búnaðr, ar, m. = ábúð, N. G. L. i. 240. á-byrgð, f. responsibility, liability, weight; leggja sína á. á, Grág. i. 208; eiga í á., to have at stake, Band. 18 new Ed., N. G. L. i. 223, Ld. 58; lands á., Grág. ii. 248; vera í á. um e-t, to answer for, Fms. xi. 82, Sks. 762; pl. ábyrgðir, pledges, Bær. II, 686 B. 5. COMPDS: ábyrgðar-hluti, a, m. and -hlutr, ar, m. an object, step involving risk and responsibility, Nj. 199. ábyrgðar-lauss, adj. free from risk, Fms. x. 368; eigi með öllu á., i. e. a weighty, serious step, no trifling matter, Sturl. iii. 234. ábyrgðar-ráð, n. a step involving risk, Nj. 164, Post. 656 B. ábyrgðar-samliðr, adj. momentous, important, Sks. 452. á-byrgja, ð, 1. in the act. form (very rare), to answer for; á. e-m e-t, Gpl. 385; á. e-t á hendi e-m, to place a thing for security in a person's hands; hann á. þau á hendi Jóhanni postula, 655 ix. A. 2. as a dep.; ábyrgjast (very freq.), to answer for, take care of, Gpl. 190, Grág. i. 140; hver skal sik sjálf á., 256, ii. 119, Fms. v. 361; á. e-t við e-n, Grág. i. 410; sá maðr ábyrgist vápu er upp festir, ii. 95; hver ábyrgist þat (warrants) móðir, at góðráðr verði, ek mun ábyrgjast (I will warrant) at eigi mun heimskr verða, Fms. iv. 83. á-byrgja, u, f. = ábyrgð (very rare); halda e-u ábyrgju, to be responsible for, Grág. ii. 335, 399. á-byll, n. = ábúð, freq. at present and in several compds, as, ábyllis-jörð, a tenant farm; ábyllis-maðr, a tenant, etc. á-bæli, n. = ábúð, H. E. i. 495. ÁÐAN, adv. [cp. Ulf. áþn = ἐπιαντός, Gal. iv. 10, and atapni, id.], a little before, a little while ago, erewhile; Koll frá frá seli á., Nj. 55; á. er vit skildum, Lv. 34; slíkt sem á. talða ek, as I said just above (of the Speaker reading the law in the lögréttá), Grág. i. 49, ii. 242; nú á., just now, 656 C. 39. ÁÐR, adv. [cp. Hel. adro = mane], ere, already, soon; er ek hef á. (soon) ráðit brullup mitt, Nj. 4; er Guð hafði á. bannat, Sks. 533; ok vóru þeir því á. (already) heim komur, Eg. 222; at nú sé lægra í horninu en á., than before, Edda 32; litlu á., a little while ago, Fms. viii. 130; þar sem ek em á. (already) í fullri reidi Guðs, Sks. 533. 2. á. en, Lat. præus quam, ante quam: a. with subj.; á. en þeir gegir, Fms. xi. 13; á. en í biskups garð falli, N. G. L. i. 145. β. with indic.; var eigi langt á. en byggðin tók við, Eg. 229. γ. áðr simply = áðr en; þeir höfðu skamma hríð settið, á. þar Gunnhildr, they had sat a short while ere G. came thither, Nj. 6; en á. hann reid heiman, 52; en þat var svipstund ein á. (til) stofan brann, Eg. 240; en áðr hann lét setja söguna saman, Sturl. iii. 306. á-dreif, n. a splashing, the spray, Stj. 147. á-dreifing, f. a sprinkling upon, Stj. 78. á-drykkir, m, pl. a 'sea' or wave dashing over a ship, Sks. 231. á-drykkja, u, f. [drekkja á], prop. a drinking to, pledging, esp. used in the phrase, at sitja fyrir ádrykkju e-s;—a custom of the olden time. The master of the house, for instance, chose one of his guests as his 'cup-fellow,' seated him over against himself in the hall, drank to him, and then sent the cup across the hall to him, so that they both drank of it by turns. This was deemed a mark of honour. Thus, Egill sat fyrir ádrykkju Arinbjarnar, Egill sate over against Arinbjorn as his cup-mate, Eg. 253; skal hann sitja fyrir á. minni í kveld, in the pretty story of the king Harold and the blind skald Stuf, Fms. vi. 391; cp. annat öndvegi var á hinn æðra pall gegnt konungi, skyldi þar sitja hinn æðsti ráðgjafi (the king's highest councillor) konungs fyrir hans á. ok þótti þat mest virðing at sitja fyrir konungs á., 439; sat Gizurr fyrir á. konungs innarr enn lenðir menn, Bs. i. 19. See also the description of the banquet in Flugumýri on the 19th Oct. in the year 1253,—drukku þeir af einu silfrkeri ok mistvist við jafnan um daginn þá er hvorr drakk til annars, Sturl. iii. 183. COMPD: ádrykkju-ker, u, f. a 'loving-cup,' or 'grace-cup,' Vigl. 17. á-eggjan, f. egging on, instigation, Hkr. i. 102, Fms. i. 139; af á. e-s, Landn. 214, Orkn. 416, Isl. ii. 340, Fms. x. 379. COMPD: áeggjanar-fiff, n. a fool or tool egged on by another; hafa e-n at á., Sturl. i. 81, to use one to snatch the chestnuts out of the fire; cp. the Engl. cat's-paw. á-fall, n. 'on-fall,' esp. 1. a nautical term, of a 'sea' dashing over a ship, Bs. i. 422, Korm. 180, Nj. 267, Sks. 227, Fs. 113, 153; hence the phrase, leggja undir áföllum, of one in danger at sea. 2. a law term, the laying on of a fine or the like; á. sekðar, Grág. i. 138. β. a condemnatory sentence in an Icel. court; ef þeir vilja á. dæma ... vér dæmum á. honum, Grág. i. 67, 71, of the formula for summing up and delivering a sentence in court. 3. metaph. and theol. = áfelli, a visitation, calamity, 623. 19, Magn. 470, H. E. i. 236. COMPD: áfalls-dóm, m. a sentence of condemnation, doom, Clem. 50, Eluc. 39, 655 xviii. 2 Corin. xi. 29, Stj. 265 (visitation).

á-fang, n. (áfangi, m., Grág. i. 433), [fú á, to grasp], a grasping, seizing, laying hands upon, esp. of rough handling; hann hló mjök mót áfangi manna, Fms. v. 203; varð hann fyrir miklu spotti ok áfangi, 209.

2. a law term, a mulet, fine, incurred by illegal seizure of another man's goods; ef maðr hleypir á bak hrossi manns úlofat, þat varðar sex auru á., if a man jumps on the back of another man's horse without leave, that is visited with a fine of six ounces, Grág. i. 432, Gpl. 520; hvatki skip er tekr skal sitt á. gjalda hverr . . . á. á maðr á hrossi sínu hvárt er hann ekr eðr ríðr, N. G. L. i. 45; at hann hafi ríðt hrossi mannis um þrjú bæi . . . varðar skóggang ok áfanga (where it is used masc. acc. pl.) með, Grág., vide above.

á-fangi, a betting-place, v. ái-fangi.

á-fastr, adj. made fast, fastened to, joined to; ef hapt er á. hrossi, Grág. i. 436; eldhúsit var á. útibúrinu, Nj. 75; þær (the comets) eru á. himni, Rb. 478: metaph., andligum hlutum áfastar, connected with, H. E. i. 511.

á-fátt, n. adj. defective, faulty, Nj. 49, Barl. 74: with gen., mikils er á., H. E. i. 244.

á-felli, n. a bardship, shock, calamity; þat á. (spell) hafði legit á því fólki, at hver kona féddi dauðan frumburð sinn er honól, Mar. 656; afskapligr á., Stj. 90 (also of a spell); þreynging ok á., 121; með hvernu miklu á. (injustice) Sigurðr konungur víldi heimta þetta mál af honum, Hkr. iii. 257; standa undir á., to be under great bardship, Fms. iv. 146, vi. 147; með miklu á. (of insanity), vii. 150; þeir vóru sex vetr í þessu á., viz. in bondage, x. 225; hvert á. jafn hafði veitt honum, what penalties the earl had laid upon him, Orkn. 284, Fms. iv. 310. β. damnation, condemnation, =áfáll; nú vil ek at þú snúir eigi svá skjótt málinu til áfellis honum, Band. 4. COMPD: áfellis-dómur, m. condemnation, Grág. Introd. clxviii, Gpl. 174.

á-fenging, adj. part. [Eit á, to lay hold on, to intoxicate], intoxicating, used of drinks, cp. the Engl. 'stinging ale'; mjóðr, Edda 76; drykkir, Fms. viii. 447; vín, Stj. 409, Joh. 84.

á-fengr, adj. now more freq., id., Hkr. i. 244, Bárð. 174.

áf-ergja, u, f. (qs. af-ergja, af-intens.?), eagerness, and-ligr, adj. impetuous.

á-flog, n. pl. [fljúgast á], a brawl, fighting, Fms. vi. 361.

á-flutningr, m., Vm. 157, of rivalry of laying up fish.

á-form, n. a design, purpose, H. E. ii. 167, in a deed of the 14th century, (Lat. word).

á-forma, ad. prop. to form, mould; steina sem ádr höfðu þeir áformat, Stj. 562, 1 Kings v. 17 ('hewn stones'). In mod. usage only metaph. to design, perform, Fas. iii. 449; verðu vér at á. (design) ok ræða, Fms. vii. 89; á. um e-t, því mundi hann þetta hafa vakit, at hann mundi á. vilja um gleðina, . . . carry it out, vr. 342, Pass. 7. 2.

ÁFR (perh. better afr), m. [the r belongs to the root, cp. áfr, f. pl.] 1. a beverage, Eg. 204, translated by Magnæus by sorbitio avenacea, a sort of common ale brewed of oats; this explanation is confirmed by the Harbarðsljóð, verse 2, where Thor says, át ek í hvið ádr ek heiman fór sildir ok afra (acc. pl.), saðr em ek enn þess; the single vellum MS. (Cod. Reg.) here reads hafra. In the Eg. l. c., the Cod. Wolf. reads afra, the Cod. A. M. 132 afr, acc. sing.: cp. the passage Ls. 3, where jüll seems to be the Scot. yill (v. Burns' Country Lassie), and áfo in Cod. Reg. a false spelling for áfr,—jüll ok áfr færi ek ása sonum, ek blend ek þeim svá meini mjóð: áfr, pronounced áfr, now means buttermilk (used in Icel. instead of common beer): cp. also ábrystur, f. pl. curds of cow's milk in the first week after the cow has calved; the milk is cooked and eaten warm and deemed a great dainty; opt eru heitar ábrestur, Snót 299 (Ed. 1865); probably qs. áfr ystr.

á-fram, adv. a. loc. with the face downward, forward; féll hann á., on the face, Nj. 253, Vd. 52, Grett. 99 new Ed. β. temp. along, forward (rare); hann er nú með jarli sunarit á., he is now with the earl till late in the summer, Finnb. 274. γ. further on; komst aldri lengra á. fyrir honum nú skáldskapinn, he never got any further on with his poem, Fms. iii. 102; héldu þeir á. leiðina, they held forward on their way, Ó. T. 31. In mod. usage freq. with verbs denoting to go, move; halda, ganga . . . áfram, to go on.

á-frá = oífrá = frá, from, cp. Swed. ifrån.

á-frýja, ð, to reprove, blame; áfrý ek þó engan (better engum) yðar, Fas. i. 103.

á-frýja, u, f. reprobation, scolding, Bs. i. 622.

á-fýsa and áfýsi, f. 1. =aufusa, gratification, q. v. 2. in mod. usage = exhortation, and áfýsa, t, to exhort, á. e-m til e-s.

á-færa, ð, to reprobation, Fms. v. 90.

á-færi, n. a law term; thus defined, af tveir menn fella einn við jörðu, þú skal annarr þeirra bæta rétt, því at þat verðr á. at lögum, where it seems to mean unfair dealing, shame, N. G. L. i. 309.

á-ganga, u, f. task-work, forced labour, the French corvée, =atverk, q. v.; hóu (the church) á tveggja manna á. á hval í Kjölsvík, Vm. 155; veita e-m á., D. N. ii. 133.

á-gangr, m. aggression, invasion; fyrir á. Skota ok Dana, Eg. 267, Fms. i. 224, iii. 143, Eg. 337. COMPDS: ágangs-maðr, m. an aggressive man, Lv. 79, Stj. 65. ágangs-samr, adj. aggressive, Fs. 9, Fms. vi. 102, Sks. 208.

á-gauð, n. [geyja á], barking, metaph. foul language, Gisl. 53; cp. þú geyr hón á þú, 139.

á-gengiligr, adj. plausible; görði hann þetta á. fyrir Hæringi, Grett. 149 A, mod. aðgengillt.

á-gengt, n. adj. trodden, beaten, of a place or path, Finnb. 336: metaph., e-m verðr á., to be trodden upon; hón byggir hér í miðri frændleif sinni, ok verðr henni því hér ekki á., Stj. 613, 2 Kings iv. 13. The mod. use of the phrase e-m verðr á. is to succeed or make progress in a thing.

á-gildi, n. value of a ewe (ær), Vm. 159, Pm. 40.

á-gildir, adj. of a ewe's value, Grág. i. 502; cp. kúgildi and kúgildr.

á-girnast, d and t, dep. to lust after, in a bad sense, with an acc., Fms. i. 76, 223, Orkn. 38; with an inf., Orkn. 6 old Ed.

á-girnd, f. in old writers always for greed of power or passion generally: α. ambition, Sks. 113 B, Fms. ix. 460; á. ok ofsi, greed and insolence, viii. 195, Stj. 143, 145, 146. β. passion; ágirndar-logi, Rb. 424; á. blindleiki, blind passion (in love), H. E. i. 505, 655 xxx; thirst for revenge, Sks. 739. γ. since the Reformation it has been exclusively used of avarice or greed of gain; in old writers the signification is more general; we, however, find á. fjár, Hom. 68; hann hafði dregit undir sik Finnskattinn með á., Fms. vii. 129.

á-girnðligr, adj. passionate, Sks. 720 B.

á-girmi, f.; used as neut., Mar. 91, O. H. L. 22: α. =ágirnd, ambition; mikit á., great ambition, O. H. L. l. c., Sks. 343. β. cupidity; á. mauna lofs, Hom. 83; á. áts ok drykkjñ, 53; fjár, 25, 623, 20; á. fjár ok metnaðar, Edda (pref.) 144, 145.

á-gjarn, adj. ambitious; ér ernd ágjarnir heima í héraði ok ranglátir, ambitious and wrongful, Nj. 223, Orkn. 38, 66; á. ok fjégjarn, ambitious and covetous, Fms. xi. 294, Hkr. ii. 146; á. til ríkis, iii. 174; á. til fjár, covetous, Fms. xi. 440, Orkn. 66: dauntless, fierce, kappar ágjarnir ok óhræddir, fierce and fearless champions, Fms. x. 179; hógvænr í friði sem lamb, en í úfriði á. (fierce) sem leon, vii. 253. The use since the Reformation is solely that of avaricious, greedy after money.

á-gjarnliga, adv. insolently, Sks. 450 B.

á-gjarnligr, adj. insolent; á. rín, Sks. 336, 509 B, 715.

á-góði, a, m. gain, profit, benefit, D. l. i. 476, Isl. ii. 432 (freq.) COMPD: ágóða-hlutr, ar, m. a profitable share, Grág. ii. 359.

á-grip, n. [grípa á, to touch], in the phrase, litill ágrípum, small of size, D. N. iv. 99. β. at present ágríp means a compendium, abridgement, epitome.

á-gæta, tt, to laud, praise highly, Ld. 220, Fms. vi. 71.

á-gæti, n. renown, glory, excellence; göra e-t til ágætis sér, as a glory to himself, Fms. xi. 72, 109; reyna á. e-s, to put one on his trial, 142; þú hyggst at engu öðru en ákafa einum ok á., only bent upon rushing on and showing one's prowess, 389; vegr ok á., fame and glory, Fas. i. 140, Sks. 241. In pl. glorious deeds; mikil á. vöru sögð frá Gunnari, Nj. 41: in the phrase, göra e-t at ágætum, to laud, praise highly, Fms. viii. 139, vii. 147: in the proverb, hefir hverr til síns ágætis nokkuð, every one's fame rests upon some deed of his own, no one gets his fame for naught, the context implies, and thou hast done what will make thee famous, Nj. 116.

2. in COMPDS ágætis- and ágæta- are prefixed to a great many words, esp. in mod. use, to express something capital, excellent; ágæta-skjóðr, adj. very swift, Fms. vii. 169; ágæta-vel, adv. excellently well, Nj. 218: and even to substantives, e.g. ágæta-gripur and ágætis-gripur, m. a capital thing, Fms. ix. 416, x. 254, Ld. 202; ágæta-naut, n. a fine ox, Eb. 318; ágætis-maðr, m. a great man, Landn. 324, Fms. vii. 102, xi. 329.

á-gætingr, m. a goodly man, O. H. L. 55 (rare).

á-gætliga, adv. capitally, Fms. i. 136, vi. 307, Boll. 346, Sks. 623.

á-gætligr, adj. excellent, goodly, Fms. ii. 300, x. 223, 231, xi. 396, Sks. 622, Hom. 132, Ver. 42.

á-gætr, adj. [v. the words above, from á- intens. and gæta—gat—gátu, to get and to record; the old etymology in glossaries of the last century from the Greek ἀγαθός cannot be admitted], famous, goodly, excellent; á. maðr um allt land, Nj. 106; á. at afi, Edda 19; ágætr gimsteinar, precious stones, Fms. i. 15; á. skjöldr, Eg. 705; compar., mun hann verða ágætari (more famous) en allir þínir frændr, Fms. i. 256; superl., ágætaztr, Nj. 282, Eg. 311; ágætr, contr., Edda 5, Íb. 14, Fms. vii. 95, Greg. 53. In the Landn. 'maðr ágætr' is freq. used in a peculiar sense, viz. a noble man, nearly synonymous to gæðingr in the Orkneys, or hersir in Norway, e.g. 143, 149, 169, 190, 198, 201, 203, 279, 281, 308, 312; hersir á., 173, etc.; cp. also Kristni S. ch. 1.

á-görð, f. gain, profit, =ávöxtr; til sölu ok á., for sale and profit, Bs. i. 426.

á-hald, n., prop. laying band on: 1. used esp. in pl. áhöld = brawl, fight, Eb. 152, Fas. i. 92; verða á. með mönnum, they came to a tussle, Sturl. iii. 262, Bs. i. 635; the phrase, hafa eingi áhöld við e-m, to have no power of resistance, to have so great odds against one that there is no chance, Eg. 261: hence comes probably the popular phrase, áhöld eru um e-t, when matters are pretty nearly equal. 2. sing. very rare, to keep back; veita e-m á, Niðrst. 3. β. veita, göra á. um e-t, to claim the right of holding; hann gördi á, um Halland, he claimed H., Fms. x. 70, v. l.; honum þótti leikdómurinn meira á. hafa á kirkjum en klerkdómurinn, . . . bad a stronger claim or title, Bs. i. 750, 696, Fms. x. 393.

á-hankast, að, dep. [hönk, a bank or coil], in the phrase, e-m á., one gets the worst of it. But it is twisted to another sense in the dream of king Harold, Fms. vi. 312. Shortly before the battle at the river Niz, the king dreamt that king Sweyn pulled the hank of rope out of his hand,—réðu svá flestir at Sveinu mundi fít þat er þeir keptust um, þá mælti Hákon jarl: vera má at svá sé, en vænna þyki mér at Sveini konungi muni áhankast, most men read it so that S. would win the prize of contest, then said earl H.: well that may be so, but it seems more likely to me that king S. will be caught.

á-heit, n. mostly or always in pl. vows to a god, saint, or the like, invocations, Hkr. i. 14, ii. 386; hón (the goddess Freyja) er nákvæmst mánnum til áheita, Edda 16, Bs. i. 134. β. sing. in a peculiar sense; meir af nauðsyn en af áheiti, more of impulse than as a free vow, Magn. 534.

á-henda, d, to lay hands upon, seize; finna ok á., Grág. ii. 311; part. pass. áhendr, as adj. within reach; þeir vóru svá langt komnir at þeir urðu eigi áhendir, . . . out of reach, Sturl. ii. 185, Eg. 160; þau urðu á., they were seized, Ld. 152.

á-heyrandi, part. within bearing, present, Grág. ii. 143, Fms. i. 248. á-heyrliga, adv. worth bearing, Fms. i. 74.

á-heyrligr, adj. worth bearing, well sounding, Nj. 77, Fms. i. 141; á. orð, fine words, Orkn. 454.

á-heyris, adv. within bearing, Bs. i. 771.

á-heyrsi and á-heyrsla, adj. ind., verða e-s á., to get to bear, bear the rumour of, Sturl. i. 22, Orkn. 278, Fms. ii. 295.

á-hlaup, n. mostly in pl. onsets, onfalls, attacks; veita e-m á., Eg. 284; við áhlaupum (incursions) Dana, Fms. i. 28; at eigi veitti hann þau á. í bræði sinni, at geig setti, Post. 686 B. β. a carnal assault, Stj. 71; metaph., með svá stórum áhlaupum, so impetuously, Fms. ix. 252. compd: áhlaupa-maðr, m. a hot-headed, impetuous person, Korm. 8, Þórd. 43; now used of a man that works by fits and starts, not steadily.

á-hleypinn, adj. rash, Sks. 383, 437.

á-hlýðast, dd, dep. to listen or give ear to; á. við e-t, to agree with, Fs. 141; en er þeir fundu at hann vildi eigi á. við frændr sína, when they found that he turned a deaf ear to his kinsmen, Eb. 7 new Ed., v. l., perhaps the right reading, v. öðlast.

á-hlýðinn, adj. giving a willing ear, listening readily; ekki á., obstinate, self-willed, Fms. vi. 431; á. um fjártökur, greediness of gain, vii. 209, where, however, the Morkinsk. (p. 337) reads, á. um förtökur, easy to persuade, which suits the context better; á. til grimleiks, Fms. x. 380, Thom. 28.

á-hrin, n. [hrína ú, of spells], used in the compd áhrins-orð, n. pl., esp. of spells that come true, in the phrase, verða at áhrinsorðum, spells or prophecies that prove true, Þórd. 81, Fas. ii. 432.

á-hugi, a, m., prop. intention, mind; með þeim á. at . . . , transl. of Lat. intentio, Hom. 80, 655 xxiii; ok nú segir hann öllum hver fyrirætlan hans (honum?) er í áhuga, . . . what he is minded to do, Isl. ii. 355. β. eagerness, impulse of the mind (now freq. in that sense); ekki skortir ykkir á., Nj. 137. γ. mind, opinion; eigi er því at leyna, hverr minni á. er um þetta, ek hygg . . . , Fær. 199. δ. care, solicitude, = áhyggja, Fms. ii. 146. compds: áhuga-fullr, adj. full of care, Fs. 98. áhuga-litill, adj. slow, Fms. iv. 77. áhuga-maðr, m. an eager, aspiring man, Bs. i. 686. áhuga-mikill, adj. eager, vigorous, Fms. viii. 266. áhuga-samt, n. adj. being concerned about, Bs. i. 824. áhuga-verðr, adj. causing concern, Sturl. i. 106 (serious, momentous).

á-hyggja, u, f. care, concern, Hrafn. 12; bera á. fyrir, to be concerned about, Gpl. 44; færi þat honum mikillir á. ok reiði, concern and anger, Nj. 174, Bret. 24; i. pl. cares, Hákon hafði svá miklar áhyggjur um vetrinn, at hann lagðist í rekkju, Fms. i. 82. compds: áhyggju-fullr, adj. full of care, anxious, Fms. ii. 225, x. 249, Blas. 35. áhyggju-lauss, adj. unconcerned, Rb. 312. áhyggju-mikill, adj. anxious, Bs. i. 328, Band. 8. áhyggju-samligr, adj. and -liga, adv. with concern, gravely, anxiously, Fms. i. 141, Sturl. ii. 78, 136. áhyggju-samr, adj. anxious, careful, 655 xiii, 656 B. 7, Sturl. iii. 234. áhyggju-svifr, m. a grave, anxious face, Fms. vi. 239, vii. 30. áhyggju-yfirbragð, n. id., Fms. vi. 32.

á-hyggjast, að, á., um e-t, to be anxious about, Stj. 443, Róm. 307.

á-hættla, u, f. risk, Vd. 144 old Ed.; cp. Fs. 57; (now freq.)

á-höfn, f. the freight or loading of a ship, Fas. ii. 511; used to express a kind of tonnage; tíu skipkunn í lest, tólf lestir í á., 732. 16; luggage, Jb. 377, 394, 408; cp. Pál Vidal. s. v.

á-högg, f. slaughter of a ewe, Sturl. i. 69, 70 C, Ed. ærhögg.

ÁI, a, m. [cp. afi and Lat. avus]. great-grandfather, answering to edda, great-grandmother (at present in Icel. langafi and langamma), Rm. 2; födur eðr afá, á. er hinu þríði, Edda 208. In Sæm. 118 it seems to be an exclamatory dolentis, göróttir er drykkurinn, ai! unless ai be here = ai in the sense of father; cp. the reply of Sigmund, láttu grön sía, sonr,

In mod. poetry áar in pl. is used in the sense of ancestors; údr áar fæddust áa (gen. pl.) vorra, Bjarni 71, Eggert (Bb.) 1. 20.

á-fangr, s, m.; áfangi (dat.), Grág. (Kb.) 160, and áfang (acc.), Isl. l. c., follow the old declension (so as to distinguish the dat. and acc. sing.); áfangi, a, m., Fb. ii. 340; mod. áfangi, Grett. 29 new Ed., Fb. i. 165, [æja, to bait, and vangr, campus; as to the f, cp. vetfangr = vetvangr, and hjórfangr = hjórvangr; Pál Vidal. derives it from fanga, to take]—a resting-place; á úiföngum, Grág. i. 441; taka hest sinn á úiföngum, ii. 44; taka úifang (acc. sing.), Isl. ii. 482; in the extracts from the last part of the Heiðarv. S. MS. wrongly spelt atfang (at = ái); höfu þeir dvöl nokkura á úifanga, Fb. ii. l. c., Jb. 272. In mod. use áfangi means a day's journey, the way made between two halting places, cp. σταθμός; hence the phrase, 'í tveim, þremr . . . áföngum,' to make a journey in two, three . . . stages:—the compd áfanga-staðr, m., is used = áfangr in the old sense; but 'staðr' is redundant, as the syllable 'fangr' already denotes place.

á-föðr, n. fodder for baiting, provender, Jb. 430, Stj. 214, Gen. xlii. 27.

á-kafast, að, dep. to be eager, vehement; á. á c-t, Fær. 262 (cp. Fb. ii. 40), Fms. xi. 20; absol., Bret. 14, 60.

á-kafi, a, m. [ákaftr], eagerness, vehemence; þá gördist svá mikill á. á, at . . . , it went to such an excess, that . . . , Nj. 62, Fms. i. 35, xi. 389; með á. miklum, vehemently, Eg. 457; í ákafa, adverbially, eagerly, impetuously, Nj. 70, Fms. xi. 117. 2. the gen. ákafa is prefixed, a. to a great many adjectives, in the sense of a big degree, very, e. g. á. reiðr, furious, Fms. vii. 32, x. 173; á. fjölmennr, very numerous, Isl. ii. 171; á. fögr, beautiful (of Helena), Ver. 25. β. to some substantives; á. drífa, a heavy snow drift, Sturl. iii. 20; á. maðr, an eager, hot, pushing man, Eg. 3, Fms. i. 19, vii. 257, Grett. 100 A; in this case the ákafa may nearly be regarded as an indecl. adjective.

á-kafleikr, m. eagerness, vehemence, Fms. x. 324.

á-kafliga, adv. vehemently, impetuously; of motion, such as riding, sailing; fara á., to rush on, Fms. ix. 366; sem ákafligast, in great speed, at a great rate, Eg. 160, 602; also, biðja á., to pray fervently. 2. very, Fær. 238, Fms. x. 308, Ld. 222.

á-kafligr, adj. hot, vehement; á. bardagi, orosta, styrjöld, Fms. x. 308, 656 B. 10.

á-kaflyndi, n. a hot, impetuous temper, Hkr. ii. 237.

á-kaflyndr, adj. impetuous, Fms. viii. 447.

á-kafr, adj. [cp. A. S. caf, promptus, velox, and 'á-' intens., cp. af D. II.], vehement, fiery; á. bardagi, a hot fight, Fms. xi. 95; of whatever is at its highest point, þenna dag var veizlan (the banquet) allra áköfust, 331; vellan sem áköfust, Nj. 247; ardent, svá var ákaft um vináttu þeirra, at . . . , 151; neut. as adv., kalla ákaft á Bárð, to pray to B. fervently, Bárð. 169; ríða sem ákafast, to ride at a furious rate, Eg. 602; blást sem á., 86; en þeir er eptir Agli vóru sóttu ákaft, . . . pulled hard, 362.

á-kall, n. a calling upon, invocation; á. á nafn Guðs, 656 B. 10, Sks. 310, Bs. i. 180. β. clamour, shouting; af orðum þeirra ok ákalli, Fms. xi. 117, Orkn. 344 old Ed., new Ed. 402 reads kall; esp. a war cry, Fms. ix. 510. 2. a claim, demand; veita á. til e-s, Eg. 470, Hkr. ii. 195, Fms. ix. 433, xi. 324, Orkn. 20 old Ed.; cp. new Ed. 54, Korm. 110. compd: ákalls-lauss, adj. a law term, free from encumbrance, Vm. 11.

á-kals, n. an importunate, urgent request, Fms. ii. 263, vi. 239.

á-kast, n. a throwing upon, casting at, Sks. 410; metaph. an assault, á. djöfla, Hom. 14; plur. taunts, Sturl. i. 21. compd: ákasta-samr, adj. taunting, Ghim. 364.

á-kastan, f. casting upon, Js. 42.

á-kefð, f. = ákafi; vægilega en eigi með á., Fms. vi. 29, vii. 18, x. 237, K. Á. 202, Sks. 154. compd: ákefðar-orð, n. rash language, Mar.

á-kenning, f. 1. in the phrase, hafa á. es or af e-u, to have a smack of a thing, to savour of, Bs. i. 134. 2. a slight reprimand, (kenna á., to feel sore); göra e-m á., to administer a slight reprimand, Sturl. i. 70, Bs. i. 341, in the last passage it is used as masc.

á-keypi, n. the right of pre-emption, a law term, Fr.

á-klaga, að, to accuse, (mod. word.)

á-klagan and áklögum, f. an accusation, charge, Bs. i. 856.

á-klæði, n. a carpet, covering, Pm. 109.

á-kneyki, n. burt, metaph. shame, Konr. MS.

á-kúfótt, adj. spherical, Sks. 630 B; cp. ávalr.

á-kúran, a doubtful reading, Eg. 47, v. l. for áþján, bondage: ákúrrur, f. pl., means in mod. usage reprimands: in the phrase, veita e-m á., to scold, esp. of reprimands given to a youth or child.

á-kváma, mod. ákoma, u, f. 1. coming, arrival; úfriðar á., visitation of war, Stj. 561. 2. but esp. a hurt received from a blow, a wound, = áverki, Nj. 99, Fms. ii. 67, Gpl. 168; medic. of a disease of the skin, an eruption, Fél. ix. 186, esp. on the lips, v. áblástr.

á-kveða, kvað, to fix; part. ákveðinn, fixed, Orkn. 10; á. orð, marked, pointed words, Bjarn. 57, Fbr. 72, 73.

á-kveðja, kvaddi, = ákveða, Bs. i. 773; ákveðdi is perhaps only a misspelling for ákveði.

á-kviðr, m. a verdict against, perhaps to be read bera á kviðu (acc. pl.) separately, Bs. i. 439.

á-kvæði, n. 1. an uttered opinion; mun ek nú segja yðr hvað mitt á. er, Nj. 189, Sturl. i. 65 C; Ed. atkvæði (better): a command, Stj. 212, 208; með ákvæðum, expressly, Sks. 235; cp. atkvæði. 2. in popular tales and superstition it is specially used of spells or charms: cp. Lat. fatum from feri; cp. also atkvæði: the mod. use prefers ákvæði in this sense, hence ákvæða-skáld, n. a spell-skald, a poet whose words have a magical power, also called kraptaskald; v. Ísl. Þjóðs. i, where many such poets are mentioned; indeed any poet of mark was believed to possess the power to spell-bind with his verses; cp. the tales about Orpheus. COMPS: ákvæðis-teigr, m. a piece of field to be mowed in a day, a mower's day's work (in mod. usage called dags-látta), Fms. iii. 207. ákvæðis-verk, n. piece-work; þat er titt á Íslandi at hafa á., þykjast þeir þá komnir til hvíldar eptir crvíði sitt er verki er lokit, Fms. v. 203, Jb. 374. á-kynniss, adv. on a visit, Sd. 158. á-kæra, ð, to accuse, (mod. word.) á-kæra, u, f. a charge, accusation, Bs. i. 852. COMPS: ákæru-lauss, adj. undisputed, Finnþ. 356; blameless, Stj. 523. ákærumaðr, m. an accuser, Stj. 42. á-kærsla, u, f. = ákæra, Fr. ákærslu-lauss = ákæru-lauss, id. Á.L, f. old form nom. dat. acc. sing. ál; öl heitir drykkir, en ál er band, Skálda (Thorodd) 163; gen. sing. and nom. pl. álar; (the mod. form is ál, keeping the ó throughout all the cases; gen. pl. álar):—a strap, esp. of leather; ál löng, Fms. vi. 378, Edda 29, Sks. 179; a proverb, sjaldan er bagi að bandi eðr byrdi að öl. β. esp. the leather straps for fastening a cloak, etc. to the saddle, = slagálar, Orkn. 12, Bjarn. 68, Fbr. 57 new Ed. γ. a bridle, rein; beislit fanst þegar ok var komit á álna, Bs. i. 314, note 2. COMPS: álar-endi, a, m. the end of a leather strap, Edda 29. álar-reipi, n. a rope of leather, etc. á-lag, n. and áлага, u, f. [leggja á]; in some cases, esp. dat. pl., it is often difficult to decide to which of these two forms a case may belong; they are therefore best taken together. In the neut. pl. the notion of spell, in the fem. pl. that of tax, burden, hardship prevails. In sing. both of them are very much alike in sense. I. fem. pl. a tax, burden, burdensome impost; sagði at bændr vildi eigi hafa frekari álög (álögur?) af konungi en form lög stæði til, Fms. xi. 224; undan þessum hans álögum... liggja undir slíkum álögum, tyranny, yoke, Bárð. ch. 2; gangit til ok hyggit at landsmenn, at ganga undir skattgjafar Ólafs konungs ok allar álögur, burdens, taxes, Fms. iv. 282, in the famous speech of Einar þverægir, O. H. ch. 134; það jarl vægja mönnum und álögur, Fms. iv. 216; jarl hélt með freku öllum álögum, Orkn. 40; hvárt mun konungr sá ekki kunna hóf und álögur ok harðleiki við menn, Fms. vi. 37; þórsteinr kvad ekki um at leita, at þórðr kæmist undan neinum álögum, burdens, oppressive conditions, Bjarn. 72. 2. a law term, an additional fine; með álögum ok leigum, duties and rents, Grág. i. 260; binda álögum, to charge, 384; hálfá fimtu mörk áлага, a fine of three marks, 391. 3. metaph. in plur. and in the phrase, í álögum, in straits, at a pinch, if needful, Vm. 18; vitr maðr ok ágætr í öllum álögum, a wise and good man in all difficulties, Fs. 120. 4. a metric term, addition, supplement; þat er annat leyfi háttanna at hafa í dróttkvæðum hætti eitt orð eða tvau með álögum, cp. álagshátt below, Edda 124. 5. theol. a visitation, scourge, Stj. 106, 647, 2 Kings xxi. 13 (answering to plunnet in the Engl. transl.); sing. in both instances. II. neut. pl. álög, spells, imprecations. In the fairy tales of Icel. 'vera í álögum' is a standing phrase for being spell-bound, esp. for being transformed into the shape of animals, or even of lifeless objects; leggja á., to bind by spells, cp. Ísl. Þjóðs. by Jón Árnason; var því líkast sem í fornun sögum er sagt, þá er konunga börn urðu fyrir stjúpmaðra álögum (v. l. sköpum), Fms. viii. 18 (Fb. ii. 539); hóu lýstr til hans með úlfis hanzka ok segir at hann skyldi verða at einum híðbirni, ok aldri skaltú ör þessum álögum fara, Fas. (Völs. S.) i. 50, 404; sing. (very rare), þat er álag mitt, at þat skip skal aldri heilt af hafi koma er hér liggir út, Landn. 250. At present always in pl., cp. forlög, örlög, ólög, COMPS: álags-bætr, f. pl. a kind of fine, N. G. L. i. 311. álags-háttur, m. a kind of metre, the first syllable of the following line completing the sentence, e.g. Ískalda skar ek öldu | eik; Edda (Ht.) 129. álögu-laust, n. adj. free from imposts. álar-, ála-, v. sub voce ál and ál. á-lasa, að, to blame, with dat. of the person. á-lasan and álösun, f., and álas, n. a reprimand, rebuke, Vigl. 25. ál-belti, n. a leathern belt, Stj. 606. ál-borinn, adj. part. [álbera], measured with a thong or cord, of a field, N. G. L. i. 43. In Icel. called vaðbera and vaðborinn. ál-burðr, m. mensuration with a line, N. G. L. i. 43, = vaðburðr. á-leiðis, adv. on the right path, opp. to aleiðis; (leið) snúa e-m á., metaph., 655 xiii. B; snú þeim á. er þú hefir áðr vilta, id. β. forwards, onwards; fóru á. til skipa, Fms. i. 136; snúa ferð á., to go on (now, halda áfram), Korm. 232, K. þ. K. 94 B; metaph., koma e-u á., to bring a thing about, Hkr. i. 169, iii. 104; koma e-u til á., id., Fas. i. 45 (corrupt reading); snúa e-u á., to improve, Bs. i. 488; vikja á. með e-m, to side with, Sturl. iii. 91.

á-leikni, f. a pertness, Grett. 139 (Ed.) á-leikr, m. [leika á], a trick, Grett. 139 C. á-leiksi, adj. ind. who had got the worst of the game, Bret. á-leitaðr, part. assailed, Stj. 255. á-leiting, f. = áleiti, Fr. á-leitinn, adj. pettish, Fms. ii. 120, Orkn. 308. á-leitligr, adj. reprehensible, Greg. 26. á-leitni, f. disposition, Fms. vii. 165, Sturl. ii. 228, Fs. 8; eigi fyrir á. sakar heldr góðvilja, Al. 129, 153; spott þórðar ok á., invectives, Bjarn. 3, Joh. 623, 19. á-lengdar, adv. along; engum fríði heit ek þér á., Fms. iii. 156; eigi vildi hann vitst hans þar á., be should not be staying along there, i. e. there, Grett. 129 A, Sturl. iii. 42. β. now used loc. far off, aloof, Lat. procul. á-lengr, adv. [cp. Engl. along], continuously; þessi illvirki skyldi eigi á. úhefnd vera, Bs. i. 533; á. er, as soon as; á. er goðar koma í setr sínar, þá . . . Grág. i. 8; á. er hann er sextán vetra, 197; á. svá sem þeir eru búinir, in turn as soon as they are ready, 61. álfa, v. hálfá, region. álfkona, u, f. a female elf, Fas. i. 32, Bær. 2, Art. 146. álf-kunnigr, adj. akin to the elves, Fm. 13. ÁLFER, s, m. [A. S. alf, muot-alfen, sæ-alfen, wudu-alfen, etc.]; Engl. elf, elves, in Shakespeare ouphes are 'fairies'; Germ. alb and elfen, Erl- in Erlkönig (Goethe) is, according to Grimm, a corrupt form from the Danish Ellekonge qs. Elver-konge; in the west of Icel. also pronounced álf: I. mythically, an elf, fairy; the Edda distinguishes between Ljósálfar, the elves of light, and Dökkálfar, of darkness (the last not elsewhere mentioned either in mod. fairy tales or in old writers), 12; the Elves and Ases are fellow gods, and form a favourite alliteration in the old mythical poems, e. g. Vsp. 53, Hm. 144, 161, Gm. 4, Ls. 2, 13, Þkv. 7, Skm. 7, 17, Sdm. 18. In the Alvismál Elves and Dwarfs are clearly distinguished as different. The abode of the elves in the Edda is Álfheimar, fairy land, and their king the god Frey (the god of light), Edda 12; see the poem Gm. 12, Álfheim Frey gáfu í árdaga tívar at tannfé. In the fairy tales the Elves haunt the hills, hence their name Huldúfólk, hidden people: respecting their origin, life, and customs, v. Ísl. Þjóðs. i. 1 sqq. In old writers the Elves are rarely mentioned; but that the same tales were told as at present is clear; —Hallr mælti, hví brosir þú nú? Þórhallr svarar, af því brosir ek, at margr höll opnast ok hvert kvikindi býr sinn bagga bæði smá ok stór, ok gera fardaga (a foreboding of the introduction of Christianity), Fms. ii. 197, cp. landvættir; álfamenn, elves, Bs. i. 417, Fas. i. 313, 96; höll einn er hér skamt í brott er álfar búa í, Kn. 216; álfrek, in the phrase, ganga álfreka, cazare, means dirty, excrement, driving the elves away through contamination, Eb. 12, cp. Landn. 97, Fms. iv. 308, Bárð. ch. 4: álfróðull, elfin beam or light, a poet. name of the sun; álfavakir, elf-boles, the small rotten holes in the ice in spring-time in which the elves go a fishing; the white stripes in the sea in calm weather are the wakes of elfin fishing boats, etc.: medic. álfabruni is an eruption in the face, Fél. ix. 186; Ivar Aasen mentions 'alvgust, alveblaast, alveld', the breath, fire of elves (cp. St. Vitus' dance or St. Anthony's fire); 'alvskot,' a sort of cancer in the bone:—græti álfa, elfin tears, Hðm. 1, is dubious; it may mean some flower with dew-drops glittering in the morning sun, vide s. v. glýstamr (glee-steaming). Jamieson speaks of an elf's cup, but elf tears are not noticed elsewhere; cp. Edda 39. In Sweden, where the worship of Frey prevailed, sacrifices, álfa-blót, were made to the elves, stóð húsfreyja í dyrum ok það hann (the guest) eigi þar innkoma, segir at þau ætti álfa blót, Hkr. ii. 124 (referring to the year 1018), cp. Korm. ch. 22. 2. metaph., as the elves had the power to bewitch men, a silly, vacant person is in Icel. called álftr; hence álfalegr, silly; álfaskapr and álfaháttur, silly behaviour. II. in historical sense, the Norse district situated between the two great rivers Rauneflir and Gautelfir (Albis Raunarum, et Gotbarum) was in the mythical times called Álfheimar, and its inhabitants Álfar, Fas. i. 413, 384, 387, Fb. i. 23, vide also P. A. Munch, Beskrivelse over Norge, p. 7. For the comps v. above. álfrek, n., álfróðull, m., v. above. á-liðinn, adj. part. far-spent, of time; dagr, Grett. 99 A; sumar, Orkn. 448, Ld. 14. á-lit, n. [lita á], prop. a view: I. aspect, appearance, esp. that of a person's face, gait, etc.; vænn at áliti, fair, gentle of aspect, Nj. 30; fagr álitum, Edda 5, Eluc. 35, Bær. 7; of other animate or inanimate objects, dókkir álits, black of aspect, Fms. vi. 229; eigi réttur álits, crooked, not straight (of a broken leg), Bs. i. 743; smíði fagr áliti, Hom. 128; the whole form, shape, hvert á. sem hann hefði, Fms. xi. 433; hann hafði ymsa manna á. eða kykvenda, Post. 656 C. 26. II. of a mind, a view, thought, consideration, reflection; með áliti ráðsmanna, Fms. vii. 139; með skjótu áliti, at a glance, Sks. 3; esp. in pl., þú ferr með góðum vilja en eigi með nógum álitum, inconsiderately, Lv. 38; meir með ákefð en álitum, Stj. 454. Hom. 24; gjöra e-t at álitum, to take a matter into (favourable) consideration, Nj. 3, Lv. 16. 2. in mod. use, opinion; does not occur in old writers (H. E. i. 244 it means authority), where there is always some additional notion of reflection, consideration.

mpds such as almennings-álit, n., public opinion, arc of mod. e. β. it is now also used in the sense of reputation; vera í miklu álitu álitu. COMPDS: álita-leysi, n. absence of reflection, Fas. iii. 91. álita-litill, adj. inconsiderate, Fas. ii. 388. álita-mál, n. pl., gjøra at álitamálum = góra at álitum, v. above, Lv. 16. álitliga, adv. divinely (but not heartily); tók hann þeim á., be received pretty well, Fms. x. 132; fór allt á með þeim en eigi sem þá er þá var, ix. 454, Bjarn. 8. 2. in the present usage, considerably, a high amount, etc. litligr, adj., Lat. consideratus, Hom. 28. 2. considerable, respectable, (mod.) litning, f. = álit, Thom. 259. líkr, adj. like, resembling, Sks. 164: á-líka, adv. alike, nearly as. ljótr, m. [ljótr, deformis], gen. s and ar, dat. áljóti; a law term, a vous bodily injury that leaves marks, wilfully inflicted; only once, lg. ii. 146, used of a libellous speech; áljótsráð is the intention to infringe, if not distinguished from fjórð (against one's life), sárráð, dréðráð, Grág. ii. 127, 117, 146; áljótr cór bani, i. 497; áljótsráð, well as fjórð, if carried out in action, was liable to the greater outcry (ii. 127), but áljótr, in speech, only to the lesser, and this too even if charge proved to be true; ef maðr bregðr manni brigsllum, ok mælr þót, þótt hann segi satt, ok varðar fjörbaugsgarð, ii. 146; an intended árráð, if not carried into effect, was also only liable to the lesser outcry, 127; every one was to be brought to trial for the actual, not the intended injury; as, vice versa, a man was tried for murder, if the wound ved mortal (ben), though he only intended to inflict a blow (drep) or und (sár), 117; cp. also i. 493. COMPDS: áljóts-eyrir, s, m. a fore, N. G. L. i. 171 (for cutting one's nose off). áljóts-ráð, n., Grág., v. above. LKA, u, f. an ank, alca L., Edda (Gl.): álku-ungi, a, m. a young, Fs. 147; metaph. a long neck, in the phrase, teygja álkuna (cant). LL, m. I. an eel, Lat. angrullus, Km. 236, Edda (Gl.), 655 s. 2, Stj. 69. II. a deep narrow channel in sea or river; eru þeir einir álur til lands er ek get vaðit, Fms. iii. 60; þeir lögðu út á n (in a harbour) ok lágu þar um strengi, Sturl. i. 224; djúpur eru náðs álar, f. of the channel of the Atlantic between Norway and Iceland, roverb touching the giants who tried to wade from Norway to Iceland, Ísl. þjóðs. III. in names of horses, or adjectives denoting the colour of a horse, 'ál' means a coloured stripe along the back, in mó-ál-óttir, brown striped, bleik-ál-óttir, yellow striped; Kingóla. Bleikáling are names of horses, referring to their colour. IV. port of seed, Edda (Gl.); cp. Ivar Aasen, aal, a sprout, and aala, aal-ne, to sprout, of potatoes. COMPDS: ála-fiski, f. fishing for eels, N. ála-garðr, m. an eel-pond, stew for eels, D. N. ála-veidr, f. fishing, Gpl. 421. ála-virki, n. a pond for eel fishing, Gpl. 421. ma, u, f., gener. a prong, fluke of an anchor, or the like, as cognom., s. v. 63:—properly perh. a branch of an elm. m-bogi, a, m. a sort of bow, cross-bow, Lex. Poët. LMR, m. [Lat. ulmus; Engl. elm; Germ. ulme], an elm, Edda (Gl.), l. 310; metaph. a bow, Lex. Poët. m-sveigr, m. an elm-twig, Fas. i. 271. m-tré, n. an elm-tree, Karl. 166. m-víðr, n. id. past qs. aplast, dep. to totter, v. apli. LPT, more correctly álftr, f. the common Icel. word for swan, Lat. cygnus; svan is only pöpt; all local names in which the swan appears, in those of the end of the 9th century, use 'álftr,' not 'svan,' Álftra-fjörðr, s, -mýri, v. the local index to the Landn.; Svanshóll comes from a per name Sván. Probably akin to Lat. albus; the t is fem. inflexion; p, instead of f, a mere change of letter; cp. the proverb, þegar hrafninn ör hvitr en álftrinn svört, of things that never will happen: pl. álftr, sometimes, esp. in Norse, elptr or elftr; the change of the original á (á) into á (álftr) is of early date, Grág. ii. 338, 346, Eg. 132, Landn. 57; all these passages pl. álftr; but elptr, Jb. 217, 309. Respecting the mythical origin of the swan, v. Edda 12; they are the sacred birds at well of Úrða. COMPDS: álftrar-hamr, m. the skin of a swan, Fas. 373. álftrar-líki, n. the shape of a swan, Fas. ii. 375, etc. álftr-veidr, f. catching wild swans, Landn. 270, Vm. 69; álftrveidar p. 68. -reip, n. a strap of leather, Dipl. v. 18; vide ál. lútr, adj. louing forwards, stooping, Thom. 201. lygi, n. slander, Glúm. 340, Fær. 203. lykkja, u, f. the loop (lykkja) in the letter á, Skálda 171. lykt, f. issue, decision, Gpl. 23. COMPDS: ályktar-dómr, m. final doom or judgment, Sks. 668. ályktar-orð, n. the last word, peroration, Eg. 356, Hkr. ii. 215, Fms. vii. 116. ályktar-vitni, n. conclusive testimony, defined in Gpl. 476. lykta, ad, to conclude, (mod. word.) lyktan, f. conclusion, final decision, Sturl. iii. 179. lægja, adj. ind. at beat, of a mare, Grág. i. 427. MA, u, f. (and ámu-sótt, f.) erysipelas, Sturl. ii. 116; in common talk corrupted into heimakona or heimakoma. 2. pöit. a giantess, Edda (Gl.); hence the play of words in the saying, gengin er gygr or fati en harðsperra aprt komin, gone is the giantess (erysipelas), but a worse (sceloturbe) bas come after. 3. a tub, awme, Germ. abm. 4. in Norse mod. dialects the larva is called aama (v. Ivar Aasen); and ámu-maðkr, spelt ánu-maðkr, a kind of maggot, lumbricus terrestris, is probably rightly referred to this. Fé. ix. states that it has this name from its being used to cure crabs. á-málga, ad, to beg or claim gently, Gpl. 370. ám-átligr, adj. loathsome, piteous, Fms. v. 165, of piteously crying; Fas. ii. 149, of an ogress; Finn. 218, Ber. 7. ám-áttigr, adj. [cp. old Germ. amabtig = infirmus], contr. ámáttkir, ámáttkar, etc., used in poetry as an epithet of witches and giants, prob. in the same sense as ámátligr, Vsp. 8, Hkr. Hjör. 17. Egilsson translates by praepotens, which seems scarcely right. á-minna, t, to admonish. á-minning, f. warning, admonition, reproof; ádr menn urðu til á við hann um þetta mál, . . . reminded him, called it into his recollection, Fms. xi. 286, Sks. 335; fjandans á., instigation, Fms. viii. 54; heilsusamligar á., vi. 281; Guðs á., Ver. 6, Stj. 116; var þó mynd á., (many foregoing symptoms) ádr þessa lund fór . . . ; góðrar áminningar, beatæ memoriae (rare), H. E. i. 514. COMPDS: áminningar-maðr, m. monitor, Fms. v. 125. áminningar-orð, n. warnings, Fms. vi. 44. áminningar-vísa, u, f. a song commemorating deeds of prowess, etc., Hkr. ii. 345. ÁMR, adj. occurs twice or thrice in poetry (by Arnór and in a verse in Bs. i. 411), seems to mean black or loathsome; í ámu blóði and ámu hre, loathsome blood and carcasses of the slain, Orku. 70, Fms. vi. 55; akin with ámátligr. Egilsson omits the word. Metaph. of a giant, the loathsome, Edda (Gl.) á-munr, adj. [á-intens. and munr, mens], eager, only in poetry; á. augu, piercing, greedy eyes, Vkv. 16; and á. e-m, eager for revenge, in a bad sense, Hkr. 2. 9. COMP: ámuns-aurar, m, pl. additional payment [munr, difference], D. N. (Fr.) á-mæla, t, to blame; á. e-m fyrir e-t, Eg. 164, Nj. 14, Hkr. ii. 285, Orku. 430; part. ámælandi, as subst., a reprover, Post. 645. 61. á-mæli, n. blame, reproof, Nj. 33, 183, Ísl. ii. 338, Fs. 40, El. 22. COMPDS: ámælis-laust, n. adj. blameless, Ölk. 37, Ísl. ii. 54. ámælis-orð, n. reproof, Valla L. 218. ámælis-samt, n. adj. shameful, Sturl. ii. 131, Hrafn. 11. ámælis-skor, f. [cp. the Engl. score], a dub, word attached to an account of numbers in Edda 108; átta þera á., a short (not full) score (?). ámælis-verðr, adj. blamable, Glúm. 369, Fms. ii. 182. ÁN, prep. [Goth. inub; Hel. and O. H. G. ano; Germ. ohne; Gr. ávev], without: the oldest form in MSS. is ón, Eluc. 25, Greg. Dial. (freq.), 655 xvii. 2, Fms. xi. 111, 153; anon, Hom. 19 sqq.; the common form is án; with gen. dat. and acc.; at present only with gen. I. with gen., þess máttu Gautar illa án vera, Hkr. ii. 70. O. H. 49 has 'þat' án manna valda, Fms. iii. 98; á. allra afarkosta, x. 7; mættim ver vel þess án vera, Ísl. ii. 339; in the proverb, án er ills gengis nema heiman haf, Gísl. 63, but án er illt gengi (acc.), 149, Nj. 27, Ísl. ii. 142, l. c.; án allra klæða, Al. 171; án allrar vægðar, Sks. 229; ón lasta synda, Eluc. 25. II. with dat., esp. in translations or eccles. writings, perh. in imitation of the Lat., and now quite out of use; esp. in the phrase, án e-s ráði, without (against) one's will, Nj. 38, Bjarn. 71, Korm. 142, Fms. xi. 153, 111; ón góðum verkum, Greg. 13; án áfláti, incessantly, Bs. i. 97; ón dómi, Eluc. 39; sanur ok ón gildingi, 655 xxviii. 2. III. with acc., esp. freq. in the Grág., án er illt gengi, v. above; þá skal hann án vera líðit, Grág. i. 276; án ráð lögráðanda, 334; hann mun þik ekki þykjast mega án vera, Fms. vii. 26; án allan verma, Sks. 210; án alla flæðr, 522 B; ón líkamligan breyskleik, ok ón dómi, Eluc. 38; án leyfi, without leave, Fms. vii. 141. IV. ellipt. without case, or adverbially, hvatki es betra es at hafa en ón at vera (to be without), 677. 8; þau er mönnum þykir betr at hafa en ón at vera, Gpl. 379; eiga vilja heldr en ón vera þat hit mjallhvita man, Alvm. 7; acc. with inf., án við löst at lífa, sine culpa vivere, Hm. 68; used substantively, in the proverb, alls áni (omniūm expers) verðr á er einisk biðr, Sl. 28; Egilsson also, on Hdl. 23, suggests a form án, n.; but the passage (the poem is only left in the Fb.) is no doubt a corrupt one. Probably 'áni ómi' is a corruption from Arngrimi (arngrni, the lower part of the g being blotted out: Arngrimi | óru bornir | öfgir?) án | ok Eyfuru, or the like). ÁN and ÖN, a mythical king of Sweden, hence ána-sótt, f. painless sickness from age, decrepid old age; þat er síðan kölluð á. ef maðr deyr verlauss af elli, Hkr. i. 35; the word is mentioned in Fé. ix. s. v., but it only occurs l. c. as an án. Áey, and seems even there to be a paraphrase of the wording in the poem, knátti endr | at Uppsölum | ánasótt | Ön of standa, Ýt. 13; even in the time of Snorri the word was prob. not in use in Icel. 2. the hero of the Áni's Saga, a romance of the 14th or 15th century, Fas. ii. 323-362; hence áni, a, m., means a fool, lubber. ánalegg, adj. clownish; and ánaskapr, m. clownishness, etc. ánaud, f. bondage, oppression; á. ok þrælum, Fms. x. 224, v. 75; in pl. ánaudir, imposts, x. 399, 416, 129 (grievances), Sks. 61 (where sing.)

COMPDS: ánauðar-ok, n. yoke of oppression, Stj. 168. ánauðar-vist, f. a life of oppression, bondage, 655 viii. 4.
 á-nauða, ad, to oppress, Js. 13, Gþl. 44. á-nauðigr, adj. oppressed, enslaved, Hkr. i. 40, Grág. ii. 292, N. G. L. i. 341, Sks. 463. á-nefna, d, to appoint, name, Jb. 161 B, Fms. i. 199, ix. 330. á-netjast, ad, dep. to be entangled in a net; metaph., ú. c-u, Bs. i. 141.
 á-neyða, dd, to force, subject, Sks. 621 B. á-ning, f. [æja, ái-], resting, baiting, Grág. ii. 233.
 án-ótt, n. adj. a pun (v. Án 2), a lot of Aus, Fas. ii. 431.
 á-nytt, f. ewe's milk, = amytt, Landn. 197.
 á-nyja, ð or ad, to renew, Sturl. iii. 39.
 á-nægja, u, f. pleasure, satisfaction, formed as the Germ. vergnügen; mod. word, not occurring in old writers.
 á-nægja, ð, impers., prop. to be enough, and so to content, satisfy; eptir því sem oss ánægir, Dipl. v. 9: part. ánægðr is now in Icel. used as an adj. pleased, content.

ÁR, n. [Goth. jēr; A. S. gear; Engl. year; Germ. jahr; the Scandin. idioms all drop the j, as in ungr, young; cp. also the Gr. ῥάρα; Lat. bora; Ulf. renders not only *ēr*os but also sometimes καρπός and χρῆσις by jēr].

I. a year, = Lat. annus, divided into twelve lunar months, each of 30 days, with four intercalary days, thus making 364 days; as the year was reckoned about the middle of the 10th century (the original calculation probably only reckoned 360 days, and made up the difference by irregular intercalary months). About the year 960 Thorstein Surt introduced the súmarauki (intercalary week), to be inserted every seventh year, thus bringing the year up to 365 days. After the introduction of Christianity (A. D. 1000) the súmarauki was made to harmonize with the Julian calendar; but from A. D. 1700 with the Gregorian calendar; v. the words súmarauki, hlauþár, mánuður, vika, etc., Ib. ch. 4, Rb. 6, Fms. i. 67; telja árum, to count the time by years, Vsp. 6; í ári, used adverb., at present, as yet, O. H. 41, 42 (in a verse).

II. = Lat. annona, plenty, abundance, fruitfulnes, the phrase, fríðr ok ár, Fms. vii. 174, Hkr. Yngl. ch. 8-12; ár ok fézæla, Hkr. l. c.; þá var ár um öll lönd, id.; létu hlaða skip mörg af korni ok annarri gæzku, ok flytja svá ár í Danmörku, Fms. xi. 8, Sks. 323, Fas. i. 526, Hom. 68; gott ár, Eg. 39; blóta til árs, Fms. i. 34.

III. the name of the Rune ⚊ (A), Skálda 176; in the A. S. and Goth. Runes the j has the name jēr, gēr, according to the Germ. and Engl. pronunciation of this word; vide p. 2, col. 1. COMPDS: ára-tal, n. and ára-tala, u. f. number of years; fimtugt at áratáli, Stj. 110, Rb. 484, Mar. 656 A. i. 29; hann (Ari Frodi) hafði áratál fyrst til þess er Kristni kom á Ísland, en síðan allt til sinna daga, Hkr. (pref.), seems to mean that Ari in respect of chronology divided his Íslandingabók into two periods, that before and that after the introduction of Christianity; Stj. 112 (periode). árs-bót, f. = árbót, Bs. i. 343, q. v.

ÁR, adv. I. Lat. olim [Ulf. air = παλαί; Engl. yore], used nearly as a substantive followed by a gen., but only in poetry; in the phrase, ár var alda, in times of yore, in principio, Vsp. 3, Hkv. 2. 1; also, ár var þaz (= þat es), the beginning of some of the mythical and heroic poems, Skv. 3. 1, Gkv. 1. 1; cp. árdagar. II. Lat. mane [A. S. ær; O. H. G. ēr; cp. Gr. ἤρι; Engl. early, Icel. árla], rare, (the prolonged form árla is freq.); it, however, still exists in the Icel. common phrase, með morgunárinu (spelt and pronounced in a single word), primo diluculo; elsewhere poet. or in laws, ár of morgin, early of a morning, Hðnu. verse 1, Grág. ii. 280; rísa ár, to rise early, Hm. 58, 59; ár né um nætr, Hkv. 2. 34, etc.; í ár, adverb. = early, Ísl. ii. (Hænsa þór. S.) 161; smemna í ár, Ld. 46, MS., where the Ed. um morginun í ár, Fas. i. 503; it also sometimes means for ever, svá at ár Hýmír ekki mælti, for an age he did not utter a word, remained silent as if stupefied, Hým. 25, Lex. Poët.; ara þífu á skaltu ár sitja, Skm. 27; cp. the mod. phrase, ár ok síð og allan tíð, early and late and always. In compds = Lat. matutinus.

ÁR, f. [A. S. ár; Engl. oar; Swed. åre], an oar, old form of nom., dat., acc. sing. ár; dat. áru or áru, Eb. 60 new Ed., but commonly ár; pl. árar, Eg. 221, 360, Fms. viii. 189, 417: metaph. in the phrases, koma cigi á sinni fyrir borð, to be under restraint, esp. in a bad sense, of one who cannot run as fast as he likes, Eb. 170; vera á árum e-s = undir ára burði e-s, v. below; draga árum um e-t, to contend about a thing, the metaphor taken from a rowing match, Fær. 159; taka djúpt í árinu, to dip too deep, overdo a thing. COMPDS: ára-burðr, m. the movement of the oars, in the phrase, vera undir ára-burði e-s, to be in one's boat, i. e. under one's protection, esp. as regards alimentionation or support, Hrafn. 30; ráðast undir áraburði e-s, to become one's client, Ld. 140. ára-gangr, m. splashing of oars, Fas. ii. 114. ára-lag (árar-), n. the time of rowing, e. g. seint, fjótt á., a slow, quick, stroke; kunna á., to be able to handle an oar, þórð. (Ed. 1860), ch. 4. árar-hlumr, m. the handle of an oar, Glúm. 395, Sturl. iii. 68. árar-hlutr, m. a piece of an oar, Glúm. l. c. árar-stubbi, a, m. the stump of an oar, Ísl. ii. 83. árar-tog, n. a stroke with the oar. árar-tré, n. the wood for making oars, Pni. 138.

ár-, v. the compds of á, a river.

ár-angr, rs, m. [ár = annona], gener. a year, season, = árferð; also the produce of the earth brought forth in a year (season), which is at present in the east of Icel. called ársáli, v. árferð; skapadist árangrinn eptir spásögu Jóseps, 655 vii. 4; ok at liðnum þeim vetrum tók á. at spillast, Gþl. 77; mun batna á. sem vátar, þorf. Karl. (A. A.) 111: the mod. use is only metaph., effect, result; so e. g. árangrs-laust, n. adj. without effect, to no effect.

ár-rás, f. assault, attack, Fms. i. 63, ix. 372.

ár-borinn, v. arborium; Egilsson renders ἡριγένεια by árborin (in his transl. of the Odyssey).

ár-bót, f. improvement of the season (ár = annona), Fms. i. 74, Bs. i. 137, Hkr. ii. 103; fem., surname, Landn.

ár-búinn, part. ready early, Sks. 221 B.

ár-býll, adj. dwelling in abundance, plentiful, Fms. v. 314.

ár-dagar, m. pl. [A. S. geardagas], í árdaga, in days of yore, Ls. 25 (poët.)

ár-degis, adv. early in the day, Eg. 2, Grág. i. 143.

ár-reið, f. a charge of cavalry, Hkr. iii. 162, Fms. vii. 56; an invasion of horsemen, x. 413; at present a law term, a visitation or inspection by sworn franklins as umpires, esp. in matters about boundaries.

ár-reitingr, m. [reita, Germ. reizen], inducement, Finnþ. 310.

ár-reitinn, adj. grasping after, Ld. 318, v. l.: now in Icel. pettish; and árreitni, f. pettishness.

ár-renniligr, adj., in the phrase, eigi á., hard or unpleasant to face.

ár-reyðr, f. [á acc. of ær, and reyðr], salmo laevis femina, Fé. i. 13, Landn. 313.

áréttí, n. [and árétta, t], a thin wedge used to prevent a nail from getting loose, cp. Ivær Aasen.

ár-ferð, f., mod. árferði, n. season, annona, Fms. i. 51, 86, ix. 51; árferð mun af taka um alla Danmörk, i. e. there will be famine, xi. 7; göð á., Stj. 420; engi á., Grett. 137 A.

ár-fjóttr, adj. 'oar-fleet', of a rowing vessel, Fms. vii. 382, Hkr. iii. 94.

ár-gali, a, m. 'the early crying', i. e. perh. chanticleer, used in the proverb eldist árgalium nú, of king Harold, Fms. vi. 251.

ár-galli, a, m. failure of crop, Sks. 321, 323. árgalla-lauss, adj. free from such failure, fertile, Sks. 322.

ár-gangr, m. a year's course, season, Fms. xi. 441, Thom. 85; margantíma í þessum á., 655 xxxii: in mod. usage, a year's volume, of a periodical.

ár-gjarn, adj. eager for a good harvest (poët.), Yt. 5.

ár-goð, m. god of plenty, the god Frey, Edla 55.

ár-gæzka, u, f. a good season, Thom. 83.

ár-hjálmr, m. an helmet of brass, A. S. ár = eir, Hkm. 3.

ár-riða, u, f. a smearing, rubbing, [riða á], Hkd., Bs. i. 611.

árla, adv. [qs. árliga], early, Lat. mane, Fms. iii. 217, v. 285, Stj. 208, Hom. 86: with gen., árla dags, Fms. x. 218, Pass. 15. 17. β in times of yore, Sks. 498, 518.

ár-langt, n. adj. and ár-lengis, adv. during the whole year, D. N.

ár-liga, adv. I. [ár, annus], yearly, Fms. ii. 454, x. 183, Vm. 12. II. = árla, early, Hkv. i. 16. 2. [ár, annona], in the phrase, fá árliga verðar, to take a hearty meal, Hm. 32; cp. Sighvat, Ó. H. 216, where it seems to mean briskly.

ár-ligr, adj. 1. annual, Thom. 24. 2. in the phrase, árligum hrósar þú verðinum, thou hast enjoyed a hearty meal, Hbl. 33; the word is now used in the sense of well fed, well looking.

ár-maðr, m. [árr, nautius, or ár, annona], a steward, esp. of royal estates in Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, also of the earls' estates in the Orkneys. As Icel. had neither earls nor kings, it is very rare, perhaps an árr. In Landn. 124 (of the stewards of Geirmund heljarson). In Norway the ármenn of the king were often persons of low birth, and looked upon with hatred and disrespect by the free noblemen of the country, cp. e. g. Ó. H. 113, 120 (synonymous with konungs þræll), Eb. ch. 2; the ármenn were a sort of royal policemen and tax gatherers, Fms. xi. 261, Orkn. 444, Eg. 79, 466, Gþl. 122 (where it is different from sýslumaðr); erkebiskups á., N. G. L. i. 175. COMPDS: ármanns-rétr, m. the right of an á., i. e. the fine to be paid for molesting an áрмаðr, N. G. L. i. 70.

ár-mánaðr, m. a year-month, i. e. a month, Stj. 320.

ár-mening, f. [áрмаðr], stewardsþip, the office or the province, Orkn. 444, Fms. iv. 268; sýslur ok á., Hkr. i. 303.

ár-morgin, adv. [A. S. armorgen], early to-morrow, Am. 85.

árna, ad, I. [A. S. yrnan, pret. arn, proficisci]; cp. Icel. árt, eyrendi, etc.], as a neut. verb, only in poetry and very rare, to go forward; úrgar brautir á. þú aþtr héðan, Fsm. 2, Gg. 7, Fms. iv. 282, v. 259; hvern þann er hingað árnar, whoever comes here, Sighvat, Ó. H. 82.

II. [A. S. earnian, to earn; Germ. erdnen], act. verb with acc. and gen.:

1. with acc. to earn, get, Lat. impetrare; hvat þú árnar í Jótunheima, Skm. 40; hon... spurði, hvat hann árnar, ... wbat he has gained, how he had sped (of a wooer), Lv. 33; á. vel, to make a good bargain, Fms. vi. 345: reflex., þykir vel árnast hafa, they had made a good bargain, Bret. 40.

2. with gen. of the thing, to intercede for, pray; á. e-m göðs, to pray for good to one, bless him; á. e-m lífs, to curse one, Fas. iii. 439; lífs, to intercede for one's life, Magu. 532.

id., Sturl. ii. 224; var þat flestra manna tillaga, at á. Gizuri kván-ins. . . to favour him, to give him the bride, Fms. iv. 33; á. esþóð, to intercede for one with God (of Christ and the saints), Bs. i.
ii. 32.
aðr, m., theol. intercession, Th. 7. COMPS: árnaðar-maðr, m. an cessor, esp. of Christ and the saints, Magn. 504. árnaðar-orð, ercession, K. þ. K. 76, Grág. ii. 166, Bs. i. 181.
an and -un, f. intercession, =árnaðr, Fms. vi. 352, Bs. i. 180, Fbr.
655 xii, Ver. 22, 625, 81.
andi, part. an intercessor, Fms. x. 318, Hom. 149.
næmi, n. a Norse law term, perh. qs. örnæmi [nema], indemnity; á. kuldafar, N. G. L. i. 177, cp. 182.
á (aróvi), a, m. a Norse law term; of doubtful origin, perh. akin of and öreñi, an aged witness, a freeborn man, born and bred in the ct, who must have been at least twenty years of age at the death of ther. He was produced as a witness (as an old document in modern in lawsuits about local questions as to possession of landed property, and mod. Icel. usage the witness of 'gamli menn'); thus defined,—þá hann fram fara óðalsvitni sín, arova þrjá, þá er tvítugir vóru þá er þeirra varð dauðr, N. G. L. i. 87, (ok óðalbornir í því fylki, add.
208); skal hann setja þar dóm sinn ok kveðja hann jarðar jafnt sem þar væri, ok leida (produce) arova sína þar ok öll vitni, sem him æri, N. G. L. i. 94.
R, m. [Ulf. árus; Hel. eru; A. S. ær; cp. Icel. eyrindi, A. S. ærend, errand], a messenger; old gen. árar (as ásar from áss); dat. æri xl. 144); acc. pl. áru, Hkv. I. 21, Og. 25, Greg. 35, later ára; pl. árur, Pd. 35 (12th century), later árur, v. Lex. Poët.: very rare obsolete in prose, except in a bad sense, but freq. in old poetry; also in the sense of a servant, Lat. minister, famulus; konungs árr, Guðs ex. Poët.; Ásu árr, Ýt. 25. 2. theol., in pl.: a. the angels; görrir anda áru sína, Greg. 35; engla sveitir, þat eru ærir ok höfuðid. B. evil spirits; now almost exclusively used in this sense; nn ok hans árar, Fms. vii. 37; satan með sínum árum, ii. 137; cp. viti, ár (dat.) og álf, öldin trúði sú, Snót 140. γ. used of the er eleven, ærir eru ellefu, Edda 108. ár, adj. Lat. matutinus; at árum degi, Hom. 121. Cp. ár (adv.) II.
isull, adj. one who rises early, Fms. vi. 241.
ársal and ársali, a, m. [a foreign word, introduced from Britain], nus bangings of a bed, Eb. 262, Edda 18 (ársali); ársal allan, Gkv.
; allan ársala, Js. 78; an obsolete word. II. in the east of ársali [árs, annona, and selja] means annual produce, the stores or of a year.
samr, adj. fertile, Ver. 17.
sáinn, part. early sowed, Hom. 87. sima, n. metal wire, Eg. (in a verse). Cp. A. S. ár. skýld, f. yearly rent, D. N. iii. 195 (Fr.). sæli (and ársæld), f. a blessing on the year, plenty; svá var mikil líðanar, so great was the plenty during his reign, Fagsk. 2.
sæll, adj. bappy or blest in the year, fortunate as to season, an epithet king; good or bad seasons were put on the king's account, cp. Fms.
xi. 294; góðr höfðingi ok á., i. 198; á. ok vinsæll, Fagsk. 2, Bret.
allra konunga ársælstr, Fms. x. 175.
sal, n. tale or reckoning by years, Vpm. 23, 25.
sali, a, m. the year-teller, i. e. the moon (poët.), the heathen year lunar, Alm. 15.
sekja, u, f. yearly rent, D. N. iv. 231 (Fr.).
sið, n. the anniversary of a man's death, Bs. i. 139, Fms. v. 121, ix.
Bret. 70, Blas. 51. COMPS: ártíðar-dagr, m. id., Vm. 116.
sar-hald, n. an anniversary mass, B. K. 8, 25. ártíðar-skrá, obituary, Vm. 4, Ám. 45; some of the Icel. obituaries are published E. at the end of the 1st vol. and in Langeb. Scriptt. Rer. Dan.
vakr, adj. (and árvekni, f. mod.), early awake, early rising, Lv.
ks. 19: the name of one of the horses of the Sun, Edda, Gm. 37.
vænliggr, adj. promising a good season, Sks. 335.
vænnr, adj. id., Fms. i. 92, ii. 76.
væða, dd, to dare, have the courage to do, to attack, cp. ráða á., Sturl.
56. væði, n. courage, daring, pluck, Eg. 1, Korm. 242, Al. 9, Nj. 258, Ísl.
5: attack, veita e-m á., to attack, Hom. 113. COMPS: áræðisgr, adj. daring, Fas. i. 119. áræðis-litill, adj. of small courage, ii. 79. áræðis-maðr, m. a bold man, Grett. 141 A, Fbr. 149.
bis-mikill, adj. daring, Sturl. iii. 21, Rd. 285. áræðis-raun, of of courage, pluck, Fms. vi. 166. áræðis-snarr, adj. of great ge, Al. 9.
væðiliggr, adj. and -liga, adv. [ráða, to guess], likely, probable, Glúm.
Gisl. 60, Clem. 18. β. daring, dangerous, Fas. iii. 165. γ. ekki líligt = ekki árenniligt, not easy to face, Fms. viii. 64.
væðinn, adj. daring, Sks. 299.
væð, a mod. sea term, to move the yard of a sail.
væka, að, to accuse, censure; with acc., Fms. ii. 174, Bs. i. 786, Stj.
H. E. i. 500.

á-sakan and ásókun, f. a charge, censure, Fms. ii. 225, II. F. i. 404.
COMPS: ásakanar-efni, n. a matter for censure, Th. 77. ásakanarorð, n. a word of reprimand, Stj. 500.
á-sakari, a, m. an accuser, Th. 76.
á-samt, adv. along with: 1. loc., in the phrase, vera á., to be together (now saman), esp. of married people, Sturl. 199, Fms. i. 198, cp.
Skm. 7. β. koma á., to agree, (in mod. usage, koma vel, illa, saman, to be on good, bad terms); þat kom litt á., they disagreed, Fms. iv.
369; þau kómu vel á., they lived happily together, of married people, Nj.
25, (in mod. usage, þeim kom vel saman); kómu allar ræður á. með þeim, Eg. 750; svá sem þeim kemr á. (impers.), as is agreed on by them, Jb. 116.
á-sannast, dep. to prove true, (mod. word.)
á-sauðr, ar, m. a ewe, Dipl. v. 10, Hrafi. 6, 8, Vm. 9. á-sáld, n. a sprinkling, metaph. of a snow storm, Sturl. iii. 20.
á-sáttr, adj. part. agreed upon, Edda 10, Grág. i. 1.
ás-brú, f. the bridge of the Ases, the rainbow, Edda. ás-drengr, m. a pillar (drengr, a short pillar), N. G. L. ii. 283.
ás-endi, a, m. the end of a beam, Ld. 280.
á-seta, u, f. a sitting upon, settlement, esp. =áúð, tenure of a farm, Bs. i.
730. ásetu-garðr, m. (Icel. ábylisjörð), a tenant's farm, D. N. iv. 581 (Fr.). á-setning, f. a putting on, laying on; á. stolunnar, the investment of . . .
Fms. iii. 168: in mod. usage, masc. ásetningr, purpose, design; and also ásetja, tt, to design.
ás-garðr, m. the residence of the gods (Ases), Edda; also the name of a farm in the west of Icel.: the mod. Norse 'aasgaardsreid' is a corruption from the Swed. åska, thunder.
ás-grindr, f. pl. the rails surrounding the ásgarðr, Edda 46. á-sigling, f. a sailing upon, Gpl. 518, N. G. L. i. 65, ii. 283.
á-sjá (old form ásjó, Niðrst. 5, Hom. 35), f., gen. ásjá, the mod. gen. ásjár seems only to occur in late or even paper MSS. I. a looking after, help, protection; ætla til ásjá, to hope for it, Lv. 75, Ld. 42, Fms. i. 289; biðja e-n ásjá, to ask one for help, protection, Nj. 26 (Ed.
ásjár prob. wrongly); sækja e-n til ásjá, to seek one's help, Bs. i. 82 (ásjár the paper MSS.). β. superintendence, inspection; með spekiráðum ok á., Fms. x. 178; með á. Magnúss konungs, Js. 23, Hom. 35. II. one's look, appearance, shape, Fms. i. 97; í manns ásjó, in the shape of man, Niðrst. 5 (=ásýnd). COMPD: ásjá-mál, n. pl. a matter worthy of consideration, Ísl. ii. 159, Band. 15. á-sjálligr, adj. handsome, pretty, Ísl. ii. 208, Art. 98. á-sjón, f. superintendence, inspection, Js. 46; gen. ásjónar, used as
adv. =eye's view (=sjónhending), in a straight direction, Vm. 135.
á-sjóna (ásjána older form, Ld. 122, Niðrst. 6), u, f. one's look, aspect, countenance; líkami Njáls ok á., Nj. 208; kvenna vænst bæði at ásjánu (appearance) ok vitsumun, Ld. 122; greppligr í á., ugly looking, Fms.
i. 155; yfirbragð ok á., 216, Greg. 45. β. form, shape; í þræls ásjónu (in form like a slave) festr á kross, Niðrst. 6; andi Drottins í dífu á., in form like a dove, 686 B. 13; engill í elldrigi á., Hom. 81, Eluc.
17. γ. =Lat. persona; eigi skaltú lita á. í dómi, Hom. 19 (non accipies personam in iudicio).
á-skelling, f. [skella á, to chide], chiding, Niðrst. 6. á-skilnaðr, m. [skilja á, to disagree], discord, Fas. iii. 335, B. K. 121, Stj. 13, 8. β. separation [skilja, to part], Stj. 130. á-skoran, f. (áskora, u, f., Fagsk. 171, bad reading?), an earnest request, challenge, Nj. 258, Fs. 22, Boll. 342. á-skot (áskaut, Sks. 416; áskeyti, Thom. 83), n. a shot at, only used in pl.; at menn fái eigi mein at áskotum þeirra, by their heavy fire (of arrows), Fms. viii. 201; svá mikil á., at menn megi eigi í vígskörðum vera, so hard shooting that . . ., Sks. l. c. á-skunnigr, adj. akin to the gods, Fm. 13.
á-skurðr, ar, m. carving, in wood or stone, Bs. i. 680. β. carving of meat, (mod.)
á-skynja, adj. ind., in the phrase, verða e-s á., used in old writers in the sense to learn, of arts or knowledge, á. íprótta, Fer. 46, Fms. ii.
270, Sks. 25, 53, 573; with dat. Fb. i. 462: now only used of news, to bear, be aware; not of learning, sensu proprio.
á-skynjandi, part. id., Barl. 24.
á-slákr, m., poët. a cock, Edda (Gl.): a pr. name, Fms., Landn. á-sláttr, m. an attack; á. djöfuls, Hom. 68; mod. a feeler, a vague proposition.
ás-liðar, m. pl. [liði, a champion], the champion of the Ases, Skm. 34.
ás-megin (ásmegn, Edda 15, 29), n. gener. the divine strength of the Ases, but esp. used of Thor in the phrases, at færast í á., vaxa á., neyta á., when he displayed his strength as a god by grasping the hammer Mjöllnir, by putting on the gloves, or the girdle (mekingjarðar, q. v.), Edda 15, 60, 61, Hým. 31. ás-megir, m. pl. =ásliðar, Vtkv. 7. ás-móðr, m. the divine strength of Thor, shewn in his wrath by thunder and lightning; því næst sú hann eldingar ok þrumur stórar; sá hann þá þór í ásmóði, Edda 58: the proper name þormóðr is equivalent to ásmóðr, cp. Landn. 307 (the verse).

á-sókn, f. an impetuous unreasonable desire after a thing, (common word.)

á-spyrna, u, f. a pressing against with the feet, Grett. (in a verse).

ás-ríki, n. the power of the Ases, Kristni S. Bs. 10.

ÁSS, m. [Ulf. ans = δοκός; cp. Lat. asser, a pole], gen. áss, dat. ási, later ás, pl. ásar, acc. ása:

1. a pole, a main rafter, yard; a. of a house; selit var gört um einn ás, ok stóðu út af ásendarnir, Ld. 280, Nj. 115, 202; drengja við ása langa (acc. pl.), Fms. vii. 54, Sks. 425, Pm. 11, Dipl. iii. 8, Hom. 95; sofa undir sótkum ási, Hkr. i. 43; cp. Caes. Bell. Gall. i. ch. 36, Fs. 62: in buildings áss gener. means the main beam, running along the house, opp. to bitar, þvertre, a cross-beam, v. maniráss, brúnáss, etc.: the beams of a bridge, Fms. ix. 512; in a ship, beitiáss, a yard of a sail: also simply called áss, Ýt. 23, Fs. 113; vindáss, a windlass (i. e. windle-ass, winding-pole).

2. metaph. a rocky ridge, Lat. jugum, Eg. 576, Fms. viii. 176. Ás and Ásar are freq. local names in Iceland and Norway.

COMP. áss-stubbi, a, m. the stump of a beam, Sd. 125.

ÁSS, m. [that the word existed in Goth. may be inferred from the words of Jornandes—Gothi proceres suos quasi qui fortunã vincebant non pares homines sed semideos, id est Ases, vocavere. The word appears in the Engl. names Osborn, Oswald, etc. In old German pr. names with n, e. g. Ansgár, A. S. Oscar: Grimm suggests a kinship between áss, pole, and áss, deus; but this is uncertain. In Icel. at least no such notion exists, and the inflexions of the two words differ. The old gen. ásar is always used in the poems of the 10th century, Korm. 22 (in a verse), etc.; dat. ási, in the oath of Glum (388), later ás; nom. pl. ásir; acc. pl. ásu (in old poetry), ási (in prose). The old declension is analogous to árr; perhaps the Goth. form was sounded anus; it certainly was sounded different from ans, δοκός]:—the Ases, gods, either the old heathen gods in general, or esp. the older branch, opp. to the new one, the di ascripti, the Vanir, q. v., Edda 13 sqq. β . the sing. is used particularly of the different gods, e. g. of Odin; ölverk Ásar, the brewing of the As (viz. Odin), i. e. poetry, Korm. 208 (in a verse); of Loki, Bragi, etc.; but kar' éfoxyn it is used of Thor, e. g. in the heathen oaths, segi ek þat Æsi (where it does not mean Odin), Glúm. 388; Freyr ok Njörðr ok hinn almátki Áss, Landn. (Hb.) 258: in Swed. áska means lightning, thunder, qs. ásk-ekja, the driving of the As, viz. Thor: áss as a prefix to pr. names also seems to refer to Thor, not Odin, e. g. Ásbjörn = Þorbjörn, Ásmódr = Þormódr (Landn. 307 in a verse). In Scandinavian pr. names áss before the liquid r assumes a t, and becomes ást (Ástríðr, not Ástríðr; Ástráðr = Ásráðr); and sometimes even before an l, Ástlákr = Áslákr, Fb. i. 190; Ástleifr = Ásleifr, Fms. xi. (Knytl. S.) comps: ása-gisling, f. hostage of the Ases, Edda 15. ása-heiti, n. a name of the Ases, Edda (Gl.)

Ása-Þórr, m. Thór the As' par excellence, Edda 14, Hbl. 52.

ása-ætt, f. the race of Ases, Edda 7.

áss, m. [a French word], the ace at dice, in the game kvátra, q. v., Sturl. ii. 95, Orkn. 200: mod. also the ace in cards.

ÁST, f., old form ást, [Ulf. anst = χάψις; A. S. est or aest; O. H. G. anst; old Fr. eust; cp. unna (ann), to love]:—love, affection; mikla ást hefir þú sýnt við mik, Eg. 603; fellu ást til e-s, to feel love to, Sturl. i. 194, Fms. x. 420; líkanleg ást, 656 A. ii. 15, Ver. 47: with the article, ástin, or ástin mín, my dear, darling, pet, love, a term of endearment used by husband to wife or parents to child; hér er nú ástin mín, Sighvatr bóundi, Sturl. ii. 78.

β . in pl. love between man and woman, the affection between man and wife; vel er nú ástir okkar, sagði hón, Nj. 26; takast þar ástir miklar, Ld. 94 (of a newly-wedded pair), 298: love of a woman, þá mælti Frigg, ok spurði hvær sá væri með Ásum er eignast vildi ástir hennar ok hylli, Edda 37: metaph. the white spots on the nails are called ástir, since one will have as many lovers as there are spots, Isl. Þjóðs., Fé. ix; vide elska, which is a more common word.

COMPDS: ásta-fundur, m. = ástarfundur, Lex. Poët. ásta-lauss, adj. loveless, Helr. 5. ástar-andi, a, m. spirit of love, H. E. i. 470. ástar-angr, m. grief from love, Str. 55. ástar-atlot, n. pl. = ástarhót. ástar-augu, n. pl. loving eyes, v. auga; renna, líta ástaraugum til e-s, to look with loving eyes, Fms. xi. 227, Isl. ii. 190. ástar-ákefð, f. passion, Str. ástar-band, n. band of love, 656 C. 37. ástar-brími, a, m. fervent love, Flov. 36. ástar-bruni, a, m. ardent love, Stj. ástar-eldr, m. fire of love, Bs. i. 763, Greg. 19. ástar-fundur, m. affectionate meeting, Fms. xi. 310. ástar-gyðja, u, f. the goddess of love (Venus), Edda (pref.) 149, Al. 6. ástar-harmr, m. grief from love, Stj. 4. ástar-hirting, f. cbastisement of love, 671 C. ástar-hiti, a, m. passion, Greg. 19. ástar-hót, n. pl. the shewing kindness and love, Pass. 12. 23 (sing.) ástar-hugi, a, and -hugr, ar, m. love, affection, Bs. i. 446, Fms. i. 34, Stj. 126. ástar-hygli, f. [hugall], devotion, Bs. i. 48. ástar-ilmr, m. sweetness of love, Str. ástar-kveðja, u, f. hearty greeting, Sturl. ii. 185. ástar-kveikja, u, f. a kindler of love, Al. 57. ástar-logi, a, m. flame of love, Hom. 67. ástar-mark, n. token of love, Greg. 46. ástar-orð, n. pl. words of love; mæla ástar orðum til e-s, to speak in words breathing love, 655 xxxi. ástar-pallr, m. step of love, 656 A. i. 10. ástar-reiði, f. anger from love, Sks. 672. ástar-samband, n. band of love, Stj. ástar-sigr, m. victory of love, Str. ástar-sætleikr, m. sweetness of love, Hom.

13. ástar-várkunn, f. compassion, sympathy, Greg. 72. ástar-vekka, u, f. the dew of love (poët.), Hom. 68. ástar-verk, n. charity, Sks. 672, Magn. 468. ástar-vél, f. Ars Amatoria, of Ovid so called, Str. 6. ástar-vili, ja, m. desire, passion, Str. 27. ástar-vængur, m. wing of love, Hom. 48. ástar-þjónusta, u, f. service of love, Hom. 2, Fms. ii. 42. ástar-þokki, a, m. affection for, inclination, of a loving pair, Fms. ii. 99, Fær. 63. ástar-æði, n. fury of love, Bær. 7. á-staða, u, f. [standa á], an insisting upon, Ann. 1392, Thom. 37. á-stand, n. state, (mod. word.)

ást-blindr, adj. blind from love, Lex. Poët.

ást-bundinn, part. in bonds of love, Str. 36, 55.

ást-stemma (dóstemma), u, f. damming a river, D. I. i. 280.

ást-fólginn, part. beloved, dear to one's heart, warmly beloved; á e-m, Fms. vi. 45, xi. 3.

ást-fóstr, rs, m. love to a foster-child, (also used metaph.) in phrases such as, leggja á. við e-n, to foster with love, as a pet child, Fms. iii. 90; fæða e-n ástfóstri, to breed one up with fatherly care, x. 218.

ást-gjöf, f., theol. grace, gift; á. Heilags Anda, Skálda 210, Skv. i. 7, Andr. 63; in pl., Magn. 514.

ást-góði, a, m. a darling, good genius; hann þótti öllum mönnum á., be (viz. bishop Paul) was endeared to all hearts, Bs. i. 137: the old Ed. reads ástgóði, endearment, which seems less correct, v. góði: góði in the sense of good genius is still in use in the ditty to the Icel. game 'goða-tafl' (heima ræð' eg goða minn).

ást-hollr, adj. affectionate, Sks. 687 B.

ást-hugaðr, adj. part. dearly loving, Njard. 380.

á-stig, n. a treading upon, Sks. 400, 540: a step, 629.

ást-igr, adj., contr. forms ástgir, ástgar, etc., dear, lovely, Vsp. 17.

ást-kygni, n. a hearty welcome, Am. 14.

ást-kærr, adj. dearly beloved.

ást-lauss, adj. loveless, heartless, = ástalaus, Hom. 43.

ást-leysi, n. want of love, unkindness, Hrafn. 5.

ást-menn, m. pl. dearly beloved friends, Sturl. i. 183, Hkr. iii. 250, Stj. 237, Blas. 44.

ást-mær, f. a darling girl, sweetheart, Flov. 28.

ást-ráð, n. kind (wise) advice, Fms. ii. 12 (ironically), Skálda 164, Hom. 108, Hým. 30.

á-stríða, u, f. passion, (mod. word.)

ást-ríki, n. paternal love; in the phrase, ekki hafði hann á. miklit af föðr sínum, i. e. he was no pet child, Fms. iii. 205, Ld. 132; á. Drottins, 655 v. 2.

ást-ríkr, adj. full of love; á. Faðir, of God, Mar. 3, 24.

ást-samliga, adv. (and -ligr, adj.), affectionately, Hkr. iii. 250, Fms. ix. 434, Fas. i. 91, 655 xxvii. 25, Sks. 12, Sturl. i. 183, Hom. i. Stj.

ást-samr, adj. id., Hom. 58, Sks. 12.

ást-semð, f. love, affection, Hkr. iii. 261, Fms. x. 409: ástsemðar-ráð, n. = ástráð, Sks. 16, Anecd. 30: ástsemðar-verk, n. a work of love, Sks. 673: ástsemðar-vinátta, u, f. loving friendship, Sks. 741.

ást-snaudr, adj. without love, Lex. Poët.

ást-sæld, f. the being loved by all, popularity, Íb. 16.

ást-sæll, adj. beloved by all, popular, Íb. 16, Fms. xi. 317.

á-stunda, ad, to study, take pains with, H. E. i. 504, 514.

á-stundan, f. pains, care, devotion, Fms. i. 219; hafa á. (inclination) til Guðs, Bær. 12; til illra hluta, Stj. 55; Sks. 349, 655 xxxii, Thom. 335.

ást-úð, f. [properly ástúð], Clem. 40, contr. from ást-hugð, from hugr or hygd, cp. öllúð, þverúð, harðúð, kind, stubborn, hard disposition; v. A. S. bydig], love, affection, Rb. 390. COMPDS: ástúðar-frændsemi, f. affectionate kinship, Sturl. ii. 81. ástúðar-vinr, m. a dear friend, Fms. vi. 198, v. l. aldavinr, a dear old friend.

ást-úðigr, adj. loving, Eg. 702, Fms. i. 55: as neut., ástúðigt er með e-m, they are on friendly terms, Ld. 236.

ást-úðligr, adj. lovely, Fms. vi. 19, Bs. i. 74, Sturl. i. 2: as neut., á er með e-m, to be on terms of love, Lax. 162.

ást-vina, u, f. a dear (female) friend, Thom. 14.

ást-vinátta, u, f. intimate friendship, Eg. 728.

ást-vinr, ar, m. a dear friend; Þóroflr gekk til fréttar við Þór ástvin sinn, Eb. 8, Fms. i. 58, Thom. 10.

ást-þokki, a, m. = ástarþokki, Fms. vi. 341.

á-stæði, n. [standa á], no doubt a bad reading, Eg. 304: cp. ástæða, u, f. (a mod. word), argument, reason.

Ás-ynja, u, f. a goddess, the fem. of Áss; Æsir ok Ásynjur, Vtkv. I, Edda 21.

á-sýn, f. countenance, presence; kasta e-m burt frá sinni á., Stj. 651: appearance, shape, Hom. 155; dat. pl. used as adv., hveru var hann ásynnum, how did he look? Hom. 91; ágætr at ætt ok á., fair of race and noble, Hkr. i. 214: gen. sing. used as adv., minna ásynar, apparently less. Grág. ii. 29. 2. metaph. a view, opinion; með rangri á., Sks. 344.

á-sýna, ð, to shew, Fms. v. 345.

á-sýnd, f. = ásyn, and dat. pl. and gen. sing. used in the same way, v. above, Fms. i. 101, v. 345, x. 228, Fs. 4, Ld. 82: metaph. the face of the earth, Stj. 29, 276.

á-sýnis, adv. apparently, Sturl. i. i, Fms. x. 284.

þnt, n. adj. [sjú á], to be seen, visible; ef eigi verðr á., if no marks be blown can be seen, Grág. ii. 15; þat er á., evident, Sks. 185.
þekni, n. (ásækin, adj. vexation), vexation, Finnþ. 240.
þelast, d. dep. (ásælni, f.), á. e-n, to covet another man.
þeni, f. [sitja], tarrying long, Ísl. ii. 440 (of a tiresome guest).
þe, n. [éta, át, edere, A. S. dél], the act of eating, in the phrase, at ok at áti, inter bibendum et edendum, Grág. ii. 170, N. G. L. i. 29; drykkja, Fas. ii. 552, Orkn. 200; á ok atvinnu, Stj. 143: of beasts, nafnaði átinu, the cow (being sick) would not eat, Bs. i. 194.
þu, u, f. 1. food to eat, but only of beasts, a prey, carcase; húðta, of a slaughtered beast, N. G. L. i. 246; svá er þar ekki þrotur átu (for seals), Sks. 176; þar stóð tilfr í átu, Jd. 31. 2. g; góðr átu, 'good eating,' Sks. 136, 137. 3. medic. a cancer, átu-mein, n. id., Fél. ix. 190; the old word is eta, q. v. þýp, n. a law term, eatable things stolen, Grág. ii. 192.
þk, n. (átaka, u, f., Hom. 17), [taka á], touching: gen. átaks, soft, etc. to the feeling; svá á. sem skinn, Flov. 31, Magn. 522: medic. þing, v. læknihendst, Stj. 248: pl. grips, útök ok sviptingar, in ling, Fas. iii. 503, Fms. xi. 442. þla, u, f. [telja á, incusare], a rebuke, reprimand, N. G. L. i. 309; u pl., Fms. v. 103, ix. 384, Hkr. ii. 6, Fær. 218: átölu-laust, n. undisputed, Jb. 251.
þ, n. [cp. úatan], an eatable, N. G. L. i. 19. þkja, u, f. (áttekt, f., Fbr. 151, Thom. 273), prop. touching; in pl. ph. disposition for or against a thing, liking or disliking, Bjarn. 54 aka vel, illa á e-n). þkning, f. touching, Stj. 35.
þrekr, adj. greedy, voracious, Hkv. 2. 41.
þrni, f. greediness of food, Hom. 72, and átgjarn, adj. greedy.
þr, n. older form áttján, as shewn by assonances such as, áttján dr sáttir, Fms. vi. 159, in a verse of the middle of the 11th cen.—[Swed. adertán; Dan. atten; Engl. eighteen; Germ. achtzehn]:—Edda 108, Hkr. ii. 289, N. G. L. i. 114.
þr, n. older form áttjándi, eighteenth, Hom. 164, N. G. L. i. 348.
þr-sessa, u, f. [cp. tvítug-, þrítugessa], a ship having eighteen row-men, Fms. ix. 257, xi. 56.
þr, n. (átroði, a, m., Hom. 95), a treading upon, Magn. 468: ph. intrusion, Hom. 95.
þr, ar, m. [trúa á], belief, creed, religion; forn á., the old (þen) faith, Nj. 156, Fms. v. 69, K. Á. 62, Joh. 623, 18, Eb. 12: þaðar-maðr, a believer, [trúmaðr], Andr. 66.
Þ, f. a family, race, v. ætt and compds.
Þ and ætt, f., pl. áttir and ættir [Germ. acht=Lat. ager, prædium, and obsolete word in Germ.], plaga caeli, quarter; just as quarter to the number four, so átt seems to refer to eight: átt properly that part of the horizon which subtends an arc traversed by the sun in course of three hours; thus defined,—meðan sól veltist um átta ættir, 34; ok þat eru þá þrjár stundir dags er sól veltist um eina ætt, id.; umes of the eight áttir are, útnorðr á., north-west; norðr á., north; orðr á., north-east; austr á., east; landsuðr á., south-east; suðr á., útsuðr á., south-west; vestr á., west; four of which (the compounds) subdivisions; átt is therefore freq. used of the four only, Loki gördi þús ok fjórar dyrr, at hann mátti sjá ór húsinu í allar áttir, ... to all (four) sides, Edda 39: or it is used generally, from all sides, þá drífr ór öllum áttum, Edda 40; drífa þeir til ór öllum áttum (=hvaði), Hkr. i. 33; norðrætt, Edda 4, 23; hence a mod. verb átta, að; to find the true quarter, to set oneself right, cp. Fr. s'orienter.
Þ: átta-skipan, f. a division of the átt, Sks. 37. átta-skipti, átta-viltr, adj. bewildered.
ÞA, card. number [Sansk. ashṭan; Goth. abtau; Gr. ὄκτώ; Lat. A. S. eight; Germ. acht], eight, Landn. 73, Edda 108.
Þ, n. and áttundi, old form átti, ord. number eight, Lat. octavus; (þim) átta man, Landn. 304; hálf átti tógr, Clem. 47; átti dagr, Fms. iii. 137, Rb. 8, K. Á. 152, 218. The form áttandi occurs early, in Norse writers, N. G. L. i. 10, 348, 350, Sks. 692 B: in Icel. writers changed vowel áttundi, which is now the current form, Mar. 656 A, i. ii. 286, where the old vellum MS. Ó. H. 173 has átta.
Þ-r- (the compd form of ætt, a family), v. ætt.
Þ-tigr (mod. áttatiu as an inclcl. single word), eighty, Landn. Edda 108; vide tigr.
Þ-tugasti, the eightieth, Sturl. ii. 156 C, =áttugandi, q. v.
Þ-tugi and ættþogi, a, m. lineage, Landn. 357, Eluc. 26, Stj. 425, i. 287, Post. 686 B, 14.
Þ-tugmingr, m. measuring eight fathoms, Vm. 80, Am. 60.
Þ-tugi, a, m. one's native place, home, country, where one is bred and í áthaga sínum, Ld. 40, Fs. 61: freq. in pl.
Þ-tugndr, adj. octagonal, Alg. 368.
Þ-tugndr and ættjörð, f. =áthagi, Ísl. ii. 186, A. A. 252: in mod. =Lat. patria, and always in the form ætt-Þ-konr, m., poet. kindred, Ýt. 21.
Þ-leggr and ættleggr, m. lineage, Stj. 44.

átt-lera, adj. degenerate, v. ættlera.
átt-mælt, n. adj. name of a metre, a verse containing eight lines, each being a separate sentence, Edda (Ht.) 125.
átt-niðr, n. kindred, Hým. 9. átt-runnr, m., poet. kindred, Hým. 20.
átt-ræðr, adj. [for the numbers twenty to seventy the Icel. say tvítugr, ... sjautugr; but for eighty to one hundred and twenty, áttæðr, níraðr, tíraðr, tólfraðr]. 1. temp. numbering eighty years of age, (hálf-áttæðr, that of seventy-six to eighty); á. Karl, an octogenarian, Ld. 150. Eighty years of age is the terminus ultimus in the eyes of the law; an octogenarian is no lawful witness; he cannot dispose of land or priesthood (godörð) without the consent of his heir; if he marries without the consent of his lawful heir, children begotten of that marriage are not to inherit his property, etc.; ef maðr kvángast er á. er eðr ellri, etc., Grág. i. 178; á. maðr né ellri skal hvárki selja land né godörð undan erfingja sínum, nema hann megi eigi eiga fyrir skuld, 224; ef maðr nefnir vátta ... manni tólf vetra gamlan eðr ellra ... áttroðan eðr yngra, ii. 20. 2. loc. measuring eighty fathoms (ells ...) in height, breadth, depth ... also of a ship with eighty oars [cp. Germ. ruder], Eg. 599, Vm. 108; vide áttærr.
átt-stafr, m., poet. kindred, Hkv. 1. 54.
áttugandi=áttatugasti, Stj. (MS. 227), col. 510.
áttungr, m. I. [átta], the eighth part of a whole, either as to measure or number; cp. fjórðungr, þriðjungr, etc., Rb. 488; á. manna, N. G. L. i. 5: as a Norse law term, a division of the country with regard to the levy in ships, Gþl. 91, N. G. L. i. 135. II. [átt or ætt, familia], poet. kindred, kinsman; Freys á., the poem Hlt., Edda 13, Ýt. 13, 14, Al. 98 (esp. in pl.), v. Lex. Poët.: áttungs-kirkja, u, f. a church belonging to an áttungr (in Norway), N. G. L. i. 8.
átt-vísi and ættvísi, f. genealogical knowledge or science, Skúlda 161, 169, Bárð. 164, Bs. i. 91, Fms. vii. 102; the áttvísi formed a part of the old education, and is the groundwork of the old Icel. historiography, esp. of the Landnama.
átt-væringr, m. an eight-oared boat (now pronounced áttahringr), Vm. 109. átt-værr, adj. [ár, remus], having eight oars, Eg. 142, 600 A. át-vagi, m. a glutton, Germ. freszbauch.
á-valr, adj. round, sloping, semi-rotundus; cp. sívalr, rotundus [from völr or from oval?]; it seems not to occur in old writers.
á-valt and ávallt, adv. always, Lat. semper, originally of-allt (from all)=in all; but as early as the 12th century it was sounded as ófalt or óvalt, which may be seen from this word being used in alliteration to v in poems of that time, þars á valt er vísir bjó, Kt. 16; vestu á valt at trausti, Harmsól verse 59; styrktu of valt til verkja, Leiðarv. 34 (the MS. reads ávalt); even Hallgrim in the 17th century says, víst á valt þeim vana halt | vinna, lesa ok iðja. In MSS. it is not unfreq. spelt ófalt, as a single word, e. g. Bs. i. 150-200; yet in very early times the word seems to have assumed the present form ávalt, pronounced á-valt, as if from á and valr: ófalt, of allt, Orkn. 90, Fms. v. 205, Fbr. 77, 87, Fær. 22: of valt, Eluc. 3, Bs. i. 349, Fms. v. 160: ávalt or ávallt, freq. in the old miracle book,—Bs. i. 335, 343, 344, 345, 351, Hom. MS. Holm. p. 3, Hom. (MS. 619), 129, Grág. (Kb.) 116, Landn. 86, Fms. xi. 112, etc. etc.,—through all the Sagas and down to the present day; cp. the mod. alltaf (per metath.), adv. always.
á-vani, a, m. habits, (mod. word).
á-vant, n. adj. in the phrase, e-s er á., wanted, needed, missed, Ld. 26, Hkr. ii. 34, Korm. 92.
á-varðr, adj. [from á- intens. and verja, part. variðr, contr. varðr, protectus], an interesting old word; with dat., á. e-m, protected by one, but only used of a man in relation to the gods, in the phrase, godum ávarðr, a client or darling of the gods, used as early as by Egil, Ad. 20, and also three or four times in prose; at hann mundi Frey (dat.) svá á. fyrir blótnu, at hann mundi eigi vilja at freri á milli þeirra, Gisl. 32; skilja þeir at þeir eru mjök ávarðir godnum, Róm. 292; so also of God, ef hann væri svá á. Guði, sem hann ætlaði, Bs. i. 464.
á-varpi, n. (cp. verpa tölu á, to count): 1. a computation, calculation, in round numbers; þat var á. manna, at fyrir Norðnesi mundi eigi færa falla en þrjú hundruð manna, Fms. viii. 143, x. 64, 139; kalladr ekki væn maðr at ávarpi flestra manna, in the suggestion, account of most people, Bs. i. 72. 2. in mod. usage, an address, accosting, Lat. allocutio; and ávarpa, að, to address, Lat. alloqui; cp. the old phrase, verpa orði á e-n, alloqui. á-vaxta, að, to make to wax greater, make productive: of money, á. fé, to put out to interest, Nj. 111: pass. -ask, to increase, Fms. i. 137, Stj. 12.
á-vaxtan, f. a making productive, Stj. 212.
á-vaxt-lauss, adj. unproductive, barren, Al. 50.
á-vaxt-samligr, adj. (and -liga, adv.), productive, Hom. 10.
á-vaxt-samr, adj. productive, Stj. 77, 94: metaph., H. F. i. 513.
á-vân, f. (now ávæningr, m.), a faint expectation or hint; segja c-m á. e-s, to give some hint about it, Grág. ii. 244.
á-veiðr, f. river fishery, D. l. i. 280.
á-verk, n. I. as a law term, a blow (drep); thus defined,—þat er drep annat er á. heitir ef maðr lýstr manni svá at blátt eðr rautt verðr eptir, eðr þrútnar höruð eðr stökkur undan hold, eðr hrytr ór munni eðr ór nösium eðr undan nöglum, Grág. ii. 15; the lesser sort of drep (blow), 14; but in general use áverk includes every bodily lesion, a collective expression for wounds and blows (sár and drep); lýsa sár eðr drep ok kveða á hver á. cru, i. 35; baud húskarlinn honum í móti öxi ok á., Bs. i. 341, vide áverki below.

II. in pl. work in a household; göra brúar ok vinna þau á., Grág. ii. 277: of unlawful work, e. g. cutting trees in another man's forest; verðr hann þá útlagr þrem mörkum ok sex auru á., ef hann veit eigi, at þeir eigu báðir, 292.

á-verki, a, m. I. a law term, lesion in general, produced by a weapon or any deadly instrument, more general than the neut.; lýsi ek mér á hönd allan þann áverka; . . . sár, ef at sírum görísti; víg, ef at vígi görísti, Grág. ii. 32, Nj. 86, Fær. 223, Sturl. i. 148.

II. (Norse) the plant of a household, produce of a farm; landskyld heimilal lóð (Lat. fundus) ok allan áverka þann er í kaup þeirra kom, . . . as agreed upon between landlord and tenant, Gpl. 329; skipta gördum eptir jarðarhöfu (Lat. fundus) ok öllum áverka (including buildings, fences, crop, etc.), 380; skal hann löggærd göra . . . ok vinna þann áverka á landi hins þar er hvárki sé akr né eng, 277.

β. unlawful; útleð ok sex auru áverki, Grág. ii. 296; hvervetna þar sem maðr hittir á. í mörk sinni, þá skal hann burt taka at ósekju, Gpl. 368. COMPDS: áverka-bót, f. compensation for an áverki (II. β.), Gpl. 363. áverka-drep, n. a stroke, blow producing áverki (I.), Grág. ii. 16. áverka-maðr, m. a perpetrator of an áverki (I.), Grág. ii. 13. áverka-mál, n. an action concerning áverki (I.), Grág. ii. 96, Nj. 100.

á-viðris, mod. áveðra (áveðrasamr, adj.), adv. on the weather side, Fms. viii. 340, 346, 378.

á-vinna, vann, to win, make profit, v. vinna á.

á-vinningr, m. profit, gain, Fms. xi. 437, Gpl. 212.

á-vinnt, n. adj. a naval term, prob. from the phrase, vinda á e-n, to turn upon one in a rowing race, or of giving way in a sea-fight; ef Orminum skal því lengra fram leggja sem hann er lengri en önnur skip, þá mun á. um sóxin, . . . then they in the bow will have a hard pull, will be hard put to it, Fms. ii. 308, Thom. 17, 58; þá görðist þeim á. er næstir lágu, their ranks began to give way, Sturl. iii. 66 (of a sea-fight); ætla ek þat mund er ek reinn frá Haraldri unga, at yðr afburðarníumium mun á. þykkja eptir at standa, Orkn. 474.

á-virðing, f. blame, fault.

á-vist, f. abode, = ábúð, Bs. i. 725.

á-vita, adj. ind. in the phrase, verða e-s á., to become aware of, learn, Andr. 625. So, Fms. x. 171; á. mannvits eðr íþróta, Sks. 26.

á-vitull, m. a law term, the indicia of a thing; skuli þeir rannsaka allt; ok svá göra þeir, ok finna þar öngan ávitöl (acc.), Fær. 186; grunar hann nú, at kerling muni hafa fengit nokkurn (MS. wrongly nokkura, acc. fem.) ávital, hverr maðr hann er, Thom. 158.

á-víga, adj. ind. in the phrase, verða á., of a chief on whose side most people are killed in a battle, in respect to the pairing off of the slain in the lawsuit that followed; þat vóru lög þá, þar at (in the case that) menn féllu jafnarmargir, at þat skyldi kalla jamvegð (they should be paired off) no compensation, or 'wergeld,' should be paid, and no suit begun, þótt manna munr þætti vera; en þeir er á. urðu skyldi kjósa mann til eptir hveru mæli skyldi, Glúm. 383; vide Sir Edm. Head, p. 93.

á-visa, að, to point at, indicate, Lex. Poët.

á-visan, f. an intimation, indication, Stj. 78 (of instinct), Fas. iii. 541; eptitharum þat er á., 732, 15.

á-vit, [viti], n. pl., ávítan, f., Thom. 246, Th. 19 (mod. évítur, f. pl.), a reprimand, rebuke, castigation; ávita, gen. pl., Fær. 23; beira ávit (acc. pl.), Sks. 541, Hkr. ii. 200, Hom. 43. COMPDS: ávita-laust, n. adj. blameless, Sks. 802, Hom. 160. ávita-samligr and ávit-samligr, adj. blamable, Sks. 577. ávit-samr, adj. chiding, severe, zealous, Bs. i. 392, Greg. 64.

á-víta, að, to chide, rebuke; á. e-n, Fs. 58; á. e-n um e-t, Fms. x. 372, Landn. 51; á. e-t (acc. of the thing), Bs. i. 766: pass., Hom. 84.

á-væni, n. (ávænigr, m.) = ávæn, Gpl. 51.

á-vöxtr, ar, m., dat. ávexti, acc. pl. ávóxtu (mod. ávexti), prop. 'on-wax,' 'on-growth,' i. e. fruit, produce, growth, Stj. 35, Fms. ix. 265; metaph., á. kvíðar þíns, 655 xiii. β. metaph. interest, rent [cp. Gr. τόκος], Grág. i. 195; verja fé til ávaxtar, Fms. v. 194, 159, iii. 18: gain, Bs. i. 141. COMPDS: ávaxtar-laust, adj. unproductive, Grág. i. 173, Fms. x. 221. ávaxtar-tíund, f. a Norse law term, a sort of income tax, opp. to höfuðtíund; nú er hverr maðr skyldr at göra tíund sá er fjár má afla, bæði h. (tithe on capital) ok á. (tithe on interest), N. G. L. i. 346.

á-þekkr, adj. similar, Fms. ii. 264, xi. 6, Vsp. 39.

á-þétti, n. or áþétr, ar, m. a law term in the compd áþéttis-orð or áþéttar-orð, n. defamatory language, invective, liable to the lesser outlawry, Grág. (Sb.) ii. 143, Valla L. 204.

á-þjá, ð, to oppress, Eg. 8, Fms. i. 21.

á-þján, f. oppression, tyranny, oppressive rule, Eg. 14, 47, Fms. v. 26: servitude, heavy burdens (= álögur), vii. 75, x. 416 (where áþjánar, pl.), Sks. 79, v. l. coercion. COMPD: áþjánar-ok, n. the yoke of tyranny, Al. 7.

á-þrætni, f. mutual strife, Stj. MS. 227, col. 491.

á-þyngd, f. exaction, oppression, Js. 13.

á-þyngja, d, á. e-m, to oppress one.

á-þyngsl, n. a burden, (mod. word.)

B

B (bé) is the second letter. In the Phœnician (Hebrew) alphabet the three middle mutes, b, g, d, etc., follow in unbroken order after a. In the Greek the same order is kept; in Latin, and hence in all European alphabets, a confusion arose, first, by giving to the < (the old Greek gamma) the value of k (c), and thereby throwing g out of its original place: secondly, by placing e and F (identical in form with F, the old Greek digamma) immediately after the d; thus, instead of the old Greek (and Hebrew) a, b, g, d, e, f, we got a, b, c, d, e, f, g, etc. In the old Slavonian alphabet v (vidil) was inserted between the b and g (Grimm Introd. to lit. B). In the old Runic alphabet the order became still more disjointed; the common rude Scandinavian Runes have no special g or d, and their b is put between t and l, nearly at the end of the alphabet (. . . t, b, l, m, y). In all the others b kept its place at the head of the consonants, immediately after a, which stands first in almost all alphabets.

A. Among the vowels a begins more words than any other vowel: it contains the three great prepositions, af, at, and á, which, with their compounds, along with those of al- and all-, make up more than half the extent of the letter; it abounds in compound words, but is comparatively poor in primitive root words. Again, b is in extent only surpassed by the consonants b and s; in regard to the number of root words it is equal to them all, if not the foremost. It is scanty in compounds, has no prepositions, but contains the roots of several large families of words, as, for instance, the three great verbs, bera, bregða, and búa; besides many of secondary extent, as binda, biða, biðja, etc.; and a great number of nouns. The extent of b is greatly reduced by the fact, that the Scandinavian idioms have no prefix be-, which in the German swells the vocabulary by thousands (in Grimm it takes up about 300 pages); the modern Swedes and Danes have during the last few centuries introduced a great many of these from modern German; the Icel. have up to the present time kept their tongue pure from this innovation, except in two or three words, such as betala or bítala (to pay), befala or bífala (to commend), behalda or bíhalda (to keep), which may, since the Reformation, be found in theol. writers; the absence of the prefix be- is indeed one of the chief characteristics of the Icel. as opposed to the German; the English, influenced by the northern idiom, has to a great extent cut off this be-, which abounds in A. S. (v. Bosworth, A. S. Dictionary, where about 600 such words are recorded); even in the Ormulum only about thirty such words are found; in South-English they are more frequent, but are gradually disappearing. Again, b represents p in Scandinavian roots; for probably all words and syllables beginning with p are of foreign extraction; and the same is probably the case in German and English, and all the branches of the Teutonic (vide Grimm D. G. iii. 414); whereas, in Greek and Latin, p is the chief letter, containing about a seventh of the vocabulary, while b contains from one seventieth to one ninetieth only. It might even be suggested that the words beginning with b in Greek and Latin are (as those with p in the Teutonic) either aliens, onomatopœic, provincialisms, or even cant words.

B. PRONUNCIATION.—The b is in Icel. sounded exactly as in English: I. as initial it is an agreeable sound in all the branches of the Teutonic, especially in the combinations br and bl, as in 'bread, brother, bride, bloom, blithe, blood, bless,' etc. etc. The Greek and Roman, on the other hand, disliked the initial b sound; but the difference seems to be addressed to the eye rather than the ear, as the π in modern Greek is sounded exactly as Icel. b, whilst β is sounded as Icel. v; thus the Greek βίσιον in Icel. rendered phonetically by visundur, but ἐπίσκοπος (biskup, bishop) is in all Teutonic dialects rendered by b, not β, probably because the Greek π had exactly this sound. II. but although agreeable as the initial to a syllable, yet as a middle or final letter b in Icel. sounds uncouth and common, and is sparingly used: 1. after a vowel, or between two vowels, b is never sounded in Icel. as in modern German geben, haben, tauen, leben, leib, lieb; in all those cases the Icel. spells with an f, sounded as a v. Ulfilas frequently uses b, e. g. graban, haban, saban, íba, gabei, etc.; yet in many cases he vacillates, e. g. giban, graban, gëban, gröbun, tvalb, but gaf and gróf, etc. So gahalaiban on the Gothic-Runic stone in Tune, but hlaifs, Ulf., Luke vi. 48. The Greek and Latin abound in the use of the b (bb) in the middle of syllables and inflexions (-bus, -bilis, -bo) in Icel. only a double b may be tolerated, but only in onomatopœic or uncouth words, as babbi (pa of a baby), bobbi (a scrape), stubby (Germ. stumpf), lubbi (Germ. lump), nabbi (a knob), krabbi (a crab), gabb, babbl, babbla, etc.; cp. similar words in English. 2. joined to a consonant; a. in old Swedish b is inserted between m and r or m and l (as in mod. Greek μπ and μλ are sounded μβρ and μβλ), e. g. Swed. domber, komber, varmbër, bambri, gamblar = Icel. dómr, kómrr (venit), varmr, hamri, gamlar; Swed. kumbl and kubl (Icel. kunil, monumentum) are used indifferently. Even in old Icel. poems we find sumbl = suml, symposium, simbli = simli, Edda i.

Ed. Havn.): mp is only found in adopted words, as in kempa Germ. kampf), lampi (Lat. lampas), and is almost assimilated to pp (kappi): mb is tolerated in a few words, such as umb, lamb, þ, dumbr, kambr, vömb, timbr, gymbr, strambr, klömbr; cp. the lamb, comb, timber, womb, where the b is not pronounced (except word timber): in limb, numb the b is not organic (cp. Icel. limr, inn); it occurs also in a few diminutive pet names of children, = Sigmundur, Innba = Ingibjörg. In the 16th and 17th centuries the names used much to write mb or mp before d or t, as sambt or sampt (cum), kombt or kompt (venit); but this spelling again became obsolete.

β, the modern High German spells and pronounces rb and rben, korb, kalb, halb, etc., where the middle High German has ld, korw, kalw; the modern Scandinavian idioms here spell and pronounce rf, lf, or rv, lv, e. g. Dan. kalv, Swed. kalf, vítulus; the Icel. with f, arf, kálfr, but pronounces f like v. Yet in Icel. rb, lb are in a few old MSS., especially the chief MS. (A. M. folio 107) of the Áma, and now and then in the Sturlunga and Edda: nay, even to this time a few people from western Icel. speak so, and some authors use it in their writings, such as the lexicographer Björn Hallgrímsson, e. g. álbr, kálbr, hábr, sjábr, sílbr, úlbr, kólbr, orb, arbi, karbi, = álfr, etc.; only the word úlubúð, qs. úlúð, is used all over the island.

γ, fl and fn are in mod. Icel. usage pronounced bl and bn, skafl, sfl, = skabl, tabl, nabl; nafn, höfn, safn, nefna, = nabn, möbn, sabn; without regard whether the radical consonant be f or m, as in and safn, qs. namn and samn. This pronunciation is in Icel. purely native, no traces thereof are found in old vellum MSS.; the modern Dan., Danes, and Norse pronounce either mu (the Swedes spell mu in Icel. use fu or bu) or vl (Dan.), ffl (Swed.). δ, ð is in Icel. commonly pronounced as bð, e. g. hafði, hefð, sofðu = habði, hebð, sobðu; few people in the west still preserve the old and genuine pronunciation vd (havdu, sovdu, not habðu, sobðu), even in the phrase, ef þú, pronounced ebði. The prefixed particles of- and af- are often in native speech sounded as ob-, ab-, if prefixed to a word beginning with m, l, e. g. ofboð, afburðr, afbindi, afagi, afmáan, as obboð, abmáan, Hm. 138; abbúð, Korm. 116; abburðr, Fms. x. 321; ablag, = gef mér, lofa mér, konung, gebmér or gæmmér, lobmér or lommér (bi, permitte mibi); af mér (a me), pronounced abmér or ammér; but common language, and never spelt so; cp. Sunnan Póstr, A. D. 180, note . ε, b = m in marbendill = marmennill.

According to Grimm's Law of Interchange ('Lautverschiebung'), the mute consonants in a triangle thus:

Scandinavian and Saxon-Teutonic form of a Greek-Latin root is to be sought for under the next letter following the course of the sun; thus the Greek-Latin f (φ) answers to Icel. and Teutonic f; the Greek-Latin b (β), on the other hand, to Teutonic p. Few present so many connections, as our b (initial) does to the Greek, either in whole families or single words; some of the instances are, many clear: φάλαγγς, cp. Icel. balkr; φάπ, Lat. far, cp. barr; φάρος, Lat. firare, cp. bora; φάρυγγς, cp. barki; φόβος, φοβέω, cp. bæra; φέρω, φορέω, Lat. fēro, cp. bera, borinn; φόρτος, cp. byrðr; φύγον, Lat. fūgio, cp. beygja, boðinn, bugr; φηγός, Lat. fāgus, cp. beyki; φλέγω, φλόξ, Lat. fulgere, fulgur, cp. blik, blika; φύλλω, cp. flúra, cp. blása, bólgin, Lat. follicis, cp. belgr; φλογμός, Lat. blóm; φονή, φόνος, φεν-, cp. bani, ben; φορμός, cp. barmr; φράσσω, cp. borg, byrgja; φράξω, φραδίη, cp. birta; φραγίη, cp. bróðir; φρίαρ, cp. brunnr; φρίσσω, cp. brattr (brant), brá; φρίγγανον, φρίγγω, cp. brúk; φύα, Lat. fūo, fūo, cp. brjó, Engl. to be, and the particle be- (v. Grimm s. v. be- and phyllo-, Lat. phylum, cp. bláð; φύγω, Lat. ficus, cp. baka; cp. the Lat. fācio, fācio, cp. byggja; fastigium, cp. bust; favilla, cp. berja; ferox, ferus, cp. ber-, björn; fervere, cp. brenna; fēdus, cp. binda; fūdo, fūdi, cp. bita, beit; flūgellum, cp. blaka; cp. bregða; fluctus, cp. bylgja; fōdío, cp. bauta, Engl. to beat; cp. botn; fors, forte, cp. 'burðr' in 'at burðr'; frango, frēgi, cp. breki, brak, brjóta; fraus (fraudis), cp. brjóta, braut; frūges, cp. björk; fulcio, cp. búki; frēmo, cp. brim; frenum, cp. beisl, idle; frons (frondis), cp. brum;—even frons (frondis) might be traced to Icel. brandr and brattr, cp. such phrases as frontati lapides; fama, fāma, cp. boð, boða, etc. The Greek φίλος, φιλεῖν might be identical to our bl- in bláðr. The change is irregular in words like Lat. pangere, Icel. banga; petero = biðja; parcere = bjarga; perire; πηγή, cp. bekkr; probably owing to some link being broken in words imported either from Greek or Roman idioms the names remains unchanged; as the Byz. Greek φεγγάριον is fengari, phyllo-, sometimes the common rule is reversed, and the Latin or Greek becomes b, as episcopus = biskup; leopardus = hlébarðr, Old Engl.

libbard; ampulla = bolli; cp. also Germ. platz = Icel. bletr; again, plank is in the west of Icel. sounded blanki: on the other hand, Latin words such as bracca, burgus are probably of Teutonic or Celtic origin. γ, the old High German carried this interchange of consonants still farther; but in modern High German this interchange remains only in the series of dental mutes: in the b and g series of mutes only a few words remain, as Germ. pracht (qs. bracht), cp. Engl. bright; Germ. pfand, cp. Engl. bond; otherwise the modern Germans (High and Low) have, just as the English have, their braut, bruder, brod, and butter, not as in old times, prút, etc.

D. In the Runic inscriptions the b is either formed as B, so in the old Gothic stone in Tune, or more commonly and more rudely as β in the Scandinavian monuments; both forms clearly originate from the Greek-Roman. The Runic name was in A. S. beorc, i. e. a birch, Lat. betula; 'beorc byð bléda léás . . .', the A. S. Runic Poem. The Scandinavian name is, curiously enough—instead of björk, f. a birch, as we should expect—bjarkan, n.; the name is in the old Norse Runic Poem denoted by the phrase, bjarkan er lauf grænst lima, the b. has the greenest leaves, cp. also Skúlda 177: both form and gender are strange and uncouth, and point to some foreign source; we do not know the Gothic name for it, neither is the Gothic word for the birch (betula) on record, but analogously to airþa, hairða, Icel. jörð, hjørð, björk would in Gothic be sounded hairca, f.; the Scandinavian form of the name points evidently to the Gothic, as a corruption from that language,—a fresh evidence to the hypothesis of the late historian P. A. Munch, and in concord with the notion of Jorndane, that the abode of the Goths in Scandinavia at early times. Thorodd (Skúlda 166) intended to use b as a sign for the single letter, B for a double b, and thus wrote uBi = ubbi; but this spelling was never agreed to.

babbli, n., bábilja, u, f. a babble; babbli, ad, to babble.

BAÐ, n. [in Goth. probably baþ, but the word is not preserved; A. S. bæð, pl. bæðo; Engl. batb; Germ. bad; cp. also Lat. balneum, qs. badneum (?); Grimm even suggests a kinship to the Gr. βάρω];—batb, batbing. In Icel. the word is not very freq., and sounds even now somewhat foreign; laug, lauga, q. v., being the familiar Icel. words; thus in the N. T. Titus iii. 5. is rendered by endrettingar laug; local names referring to public bathing at hot springs always bear the name of laug, never bað, e. g. Laugar, Laugarnes, Laugardalr, Laugarvatn, etc. The time of bathing, as borne out by many passages in the Sturl and Bs., was after supper, just before going to bed; a special room, baðstofa (batb-room), is freq. mentioned as belonging to Icel. farms of that time. Bathing in the morning seems not to have been usual; even the passages Sturl, ii. 121, 125 may refer to late hours. This custom seems peculiar and repugnant to the simple sanitary rules commonly observed by people of antiquity. It is, however, to be borne in mind that the chief substantial meal of the ancient Scandinavians was in the forenoon, dagverðr; náttverðr (supper) was light, and is rarely mentioned. Besides the word bað for the late bath in the Sturl and Bs., baðstofa is the batb-room; síð um kveldit, í þann tíma er þeir þórðr ok Einar ætluðu at ganga til baðs, Sturl, iii. 42; um kveldit er hann var genginn til svefnis, ok þeir til baðs er þat líkadi, ii. 117, 246, iii. 111; þat var síð um kveldit ok vóru menn mettir (after supper) en Ormr bóndi var til baðs farinn, ok var út at ganga til baðstofunnar, Bs. i. 536; eptir máltíðina (supper) um kveldit reikadi biskupinn um baðferðir (during bathing time) um gólf, ok síðan fór hann í sang sína, 849; hence the phrase, skaltú hafa mjúkt bað fyrir mjúka rekkju, a good bathing before going to bed, of one to be burnt alive, Fig. 239. In Norway bathing in the forenoon is mentioned; laugardags morguninn vildu liðsmenn ráða í bæinn, en konungr vildi enn at þeir biði þar til er flestir væri í baðstofum, Fms. viii. 176; semma annan dag vikunnar . . ., and a little below, eptir þat tóku þeir bað, vii. 34, iii. 171; þá gengr þéttleifr til baðstofu, kembir sér ok þvær, eptir þat skœðir hann sik, ok vápnar, Þidr. 129, v. 1; Icel. hann kom þar fyrir dag (before daybreak), var þórðr þá í baðstofu, Sturl. ii. 121, 125; vide Eb. 134, Stj. 272. COMPS: bað-ferð, f. time for bathing, Bs. i. 849. bað-hús, n. a bathing-house, G. H. M. ii. 128 (false reading), vide Fs. 149, 183. bað-kápa, u, f. a bathing-cloak, Sturl. ii. 117. bað-kona, u, f. a female bathing attendant, N. G. L. iii. 15. bað-stofa, u, f. (v. above), a batb-room, Eb. i. c., B. i. c., Þidr. i. c., Fms. viii. i. c., Sturl. ii. 121, 167, iii. 25, 102, 176, 198. baðstofu-gluggur, m. a window in a b., Eb. i. c., Sturl. i. c. In Icel. the bathing-room (baðstofa) used to be in the rear of the houses, cp. Sturl. ii. 198. The modern sense of baðstofa is sitting-room, probably from its being in modern dwellings placed where the old bathing-room used to be. The etymology of Jon Olafsson (Icel. Dict. MS.), baðstofa = bakstofa, is bad. In old writers baðstofa never occurs in this modern sense, but it is used so in the Dropl. Saga Major:—a closet, room, in writers of the 16th century, Bs. ii. 244, 256, 504, Safn. 77, 92, 95, 96. baðast, ad, dep. (rare), to bathe, Fms. iii. 171; in common Icel. act., baða höndum, to gesticulate, fight with the arms, as in bathing. BAÐMR, m. [Goth. bagms; A. S. beam, cp. Engl. baribeam; Germ. baum], a tree, only used in poetry, v. Lex. Poët., never in prose or common language, and alien to all Scandin. idioms: it seems prop. to be used of the branches of a tree (in flower); hárf b., the high tree, Vsp. 18; á berki skal þær rista ok á báðni víðar, Sdm. 11 (referring to the lim-rúnar). Even used metaph. = gremium, sinus; er þá Véa ok Vilja | létu þær víðris kvæn | báða í baðm um tekið, when thou tookest both of them into thy arms, embraced them both, Ls. 26; vaxi þú á báðni (bosom) barr, Hkv. Hjörv. 16. Cp. hróðrbáðmr (barmr is a bad reading), Vtkv. 8, a fatal twig.

BAGALL, m. [Lat. baculus], an episcopal staff, crozier, Fms. i. 233, iii. 168, Bs. i. 42, Vm. 68.

bagga, að, to bind, with dat.

BAGGI, a, m. [Engl. bag, baggage; Germ. pack, gepäck], a bag, pack, bundle, Edda 29, Eg. 218, Fms. ii. 197, Fas. ii. 516.

bagi, a, m. inconvenience; bagalegr, adj. inconvenient.

baglaðr, part. [cp. bagr, begla], broken, maimed, Fas. iii. 195.

bagr, adj. [cp. bágr], awkward, clumsy, clownish, opp. to hagr, q. v., Fas. iii. 195; bagga, u, f., in mod. usage means a plain common ditty; böguligr and amböguligr, adj., means awkward.

BAK, n. [A.S. bac], Lat. tergum, back, Eg. 218, Edda 29, 30, Hkr. i. 337: in metaph. phrases, bera sök á baki, to be guilty, Gpl. 539; leggja bleyðiorð á bak e-m, to load, charge one with being a coward, Fas. ii. 530; háfa mörg ár á baki, to carry a weight of years, Ísl. ii. 456: of horseback, létr á baki, Sturl. ii. 195; fara á bak, to mount; stiga á baki, to dismount, Eg. 397, Grág. ii. 95: in other relations, as adv., at hurðar-baki, behind the door; at húsa-baki, at the back of the houses; að fjalla-baki, behind the mountains: handar-bak, the back of the hand. 2. á bak or á baki used as a prep. or as an adv.; á bak (acc.) if denoting motion, á baki (dat.) if without motion: a. loc. behind, at the back of; á baki húsum, Háv. 49, Nj. 28; at baki þeim, at their back, Eg. 91, Nj. 261, 262, 84, Eg. 583; Hrótr kveðst þat atla, at hans skyldi lítt á bak at leita, he should not be found in the rear, Ld. 278; berr á baki, unbacked, helpless, in the proverb, Nj. 265, Grett. 154: metaph., ganga á bak e-u, orðum, heitum . . . , to elude, evade one's pledged word, Fms. ii. 209, Ísl. ii. 382; göra e-t á baki e-m, in one's absence, behind one's back, N. G. L. i. 20; á bak apr (=aptr á bak), backward; falla á b. a., Eb. 240, Nj. 9, Eg. 397, Háv. 48 new Ed.; til baks, better til baka, to back, Sturl. ii. 203; brjóta á bak, prop. to break one's back, Fms. viii. 119; to break, subdue, and also to make void, annul; brjóta á bak Rómverja, to 'break the back' of the R., defeat them, 625, 65; Heiðrekr villi öll ráð fóður síns á bak brjóta, Fas. i. 528. β. temp. with dat. past, after; á bak Jólum, after Yule, Fms. viii. 60; á b. Jónsvöku, ix. 7: metaph., Héðinn kvaðst eigi hirða hvat er á bak kæmi, H. said he did not care for what came after, Fas. i. 402; muntú eigi vera mót Njáli, hvat sem á b. kemr, Nj. 193.

baka, að, [Gr. φάγειν, cp. also the Lat. focus; A.S. bacan; Engl. to bake; Germ. backen]. 1. prop. to bake; b. brauð, N. G. L. i. 349; b. ok sjóða, to bake and cook, Gpl. 376. In Icel. steikja is to roast; baka, to bake; but in mod. usage steikja may also be used of baking on embers, opp. to baka, baking in a pan or oven; elda ofn til brauðs ok b., Hom. 113; b. í ofni, Fas. i. 244; people say in Icel. steikja koka (on embers), but baka brauð. 2. metaph. and esp. in the reflex. bakast, to bake, i. e. to warm and rub the body and limbs, at a large open fire in the evening after day-work; v. bakeldr and bakstreldr; v. also the classical passages, Grett. ch. 16, 80, Fms. xi. 63, 64 (Jómsv. ch. 21), Orkn. ch. 34, 89, 105, Hkr. iii. 458. In Icel. the same fire was made for cooking and warming the body, Ísl. ii. 394, Eb. ch. 54, 55; hence the phrase, hvárt skal nú búa til seyðis (is a fire to be made for cooking) . . . svá skal þat vera, ok skaltú eigi þurfa heitara at baka, it shall be hot enough for thee to bake, Nj. 199 (the rendering of Johnsonius is not quite exact); skaltú eigi beiðast at baka heitara en ek mun kynda, Eg. 239: used of bathing, bakaðist hann lengi í lauginni, Grett. ch. 80, MS. Cod. Upsal. This 'baking' the body in the late evening before going to bed was a great pastime for the old Scandinavians, and seems to have been used instead of bathing; yet in later times (12th and 13th centuries) in Icel. at least bathing (v. above) came into use instead of it. In the whole of Sturl. or Bs. no passage occurs analogous to Grett. l. c. or Jómsv. S. β. bóndi bakar á báðar kinnr, blushed, Bs. ii. 42; þanneg sem til bakat er, as things stand, Orkn. 428; bakaði Helgi fóttinn, H. baked the (broken) leg, Bs. i. 425; vide eldr. γ. (mod.) to cause, inflict; b. e-m öfund, hatr, óvild (always in a bad sense): af-baka means to distort, pervert. II. to put the back to, e. g. a boat, in floating it, (mod.)

bakari, a, m. a baker, Stj. 200. bakara-meistari, a, m. a master-baker, Stj. 201.

bak-borði, a, m. (bakborð, n., Jb. 407 A.), [Dutch baakbord], the larboard side of a ship, opp. to stjórnborði, Fb. i. 22, Jb. l. c., Fms. vii. 12, Orkn. 8.

bak-brjóta, braut, to violate, transgress, B. K. 108.

bak-byrdingar, m. pl. the crew on the larboard side, opp. to stjórnb-yrdingar, Fms. viii. 224.

bak-byrdör, f. a burden to carry on the back, Ísl. ii. 364.

bak-eldr and bakstreldr, m. an evening fire to bake the body and limbs at (v. baka); sitja við bakelda, Fs. 4, Orkn. 112, 74, Korm. 236, Gre 91: metaph., bændr skulu eiga ván bakelda, they shall get it hot enough, Fms. viii. 201; göra e-m illan bakeld, 383, ix. 410. bakelda-hr n. pl. rubbing the back at a b., Grett. l. c. A. As the evening bakeld are not mentioned in the Sturl., it may be that bathing had put them off use because of the scarcity of fuel.

bak-fall, n. falling backwards, Fas. iii. 569: esp. in pl. in the phrase, r bakföllum, to take a long pull with the oars, i. 215: milit. attack from behind=bakslag, Fms. viii. 115, ix. 405.

bak-ferð, f. mounting on horseback, Grett. 91 A.

bak-ferla, að, [ferill], prop. to step backwards; þat (viz. the word at sýnir öfgað, bakferlað (real backwards) nafnit Éva, 655 xxvii. 18, break, annul; b. ofbelði e-s, Stj. 233; at b. þat allt er Domitianus hal boðit, 623, 13; rjúfa ok b., to break and make void, Sturl. i. 171 C.

bak-hlutr, m. the hind part, Stj. 253, Fs. 48.

bak-hold, n. pl. the flesh on the back of cattle, Grett. 91.

bak-hverfask, ð, reflex. to turn one's back upon, abandon, Eg. 20, v bak-jarl, m., milit. a foe attacking in the rear, Sturl. iii. 66, Karl. 16 bakki, a, m. [Engl. and Germ. bank], a bank of a river, water, chasm, etc árakki, sjávarbakki, marbakki, flæðarbakki, Gisl. 54; sikisbakki, gjt bakki; út eptir ánni ef Hákon staði á bakkanum, Fms. vi. 282, ix. 40 Nj. 158, 224: Tempsar b., banks of the Thames, Fms. v. (in a verse). an eminence, ridge, bank; genu þeir á land ok kómu undir bakka eru Drolp. 5; hann settist undir b. í hrisrunni, Bjarn. 15; cp. skotbakki, bu on which the target is placed; setja spán í bakka, to put up a target, Fm ii. 271. β. heavy clouds in the horizon. 3. [= bak], the back a knife, sword, or the like, opp. to edge; blað skilr bakka ok egg, Jón: Grett. 110 new Ed. COMPS: bakka-fullr, adj. full to the brim-full; bera í b. lækinn, a proverb, cp. Lat. ligna in silvum feri and Engl. to carry coils to Newcastle. bakka-kólfur, m., prob. bird-bolt, thick arrow without a point, to be shot from a cross-bow, Fm iii. 18. bakka-stokkar, m. pl. the stocks on which a ship is built Gpl. 80, Hkr. i. 293.

bak-klæði, n. tapestry, Hkr. iii. 437.

bak-lengja, u, f. the dark stripe along the back of cattle, Grett. 9 Eg. 149, v. 1.

bak-máligr (and bakmáll), adj. backbiting, Hom. 34, 656 B. I.

bak-mœlgi, f. and bakmœli, n. backbiting, Hom. 86; liable to t lesser outlawry, Grág. ii. 145.

bak-rauf, f. anus, a cognom., Fms. vii. 21.

bak-sárr, adj. a horse with a sore back, Lv. 58.

bak-sig, n., medic. exania, FéL. ix.

bak-skiki, a, m. a back flap, a cognom., Bjarn. 12.

bak-skyrta, u, f. the back flap of a skirt, Fms. vii. 21.

bak-slag, n. a back-stroke, attack in rear, Fms. viii. 399.

bak-sletta, u, f. and bakslettur, m., Al. 27, 44; acc. pl. bakslett 90: milit. an attack in rear, Fms. viii. 319, ix. 357: drawback, at rét þann bakslett, Al. l. c.

bak-spyrna, d, to spurn or kick against; N. T. of 1540 (Acts ix. πρὸς κέντρα λακτίζειν is rendered by b. móti broddunum.

bak-stakkr, m. the back part of a cloak, Fas. ii. 343.

bakstr, rs, m. baking, Fms. ix. 530: baked bread, pund b., B. K. 8 esp. wafers, Bs. ii. 15: a poultice, fomentation, i. 786: warming, heating ii. 10. COMPS: bakstr-brauð, n. baked bread, B. K. 89. bakst buðkr, m. a box in which wafers were kept, Pm. 5.

bakstr-eld v. bakeldr. bakstr-hús, n. a bake-house, Fms. ix. 531.

bakst járn, n. an iron plate for baking sacramental wafers, Vm. 15, 3 bakstr-kona, u, f. a female baker, N. G. L. iii. 15.

bakstr-mum laug, f. a vessel in which wafers were kept, Dipl. iii. 4.

bakst sveinn, m. a baker boy, N. G. L. iii. 15.

bak-verkr, m., medic. a pain in the back, lumbago, Nj. 130, FéL. ix. bak-verpast, ð and t, dep., b. við e-m, to turn the back to, set at de ance, Stj. 362, 431, 449, Eg. 20.

bak-þúfa, u, f. a horse block.

BAL, n. vagina, in poems of the 15th century.

bala, d and að, to drudge, live hard, (cant word.)

baldakin, and bald forms baldrsskinn (the skin of Balder) or baldskinn [from Baldak, i. e. Bagdad], a baldquinn, canopy, Bs. i. 71 803, Sturl. iii. 306, Fms. x. 87, Dipl. v. 18, Vm. 52, 97, 117, Ám. 4 Hb. 544, 22. COMPS: baldrsskinns-hökull, m., literally a surplus of b., Ám. 87.

baldrsskinns-kápa, u, f. a cape of b., Ám. 15.

baldinn, adj. [A. S. beald], untraversable, unruly, Grett. 90 A, Fms. 2 445; cp. bellinn, ballr, ofbelði.

BALDR, rs, m. [A. S. baldor, princeps, seems to be a different root from the Goth. balps, A. S. bald, which answers to the Icel. ball- or bald-wit out r], prop. = Lat. princeps, the best, foremost; in compds as mann-bald her-baldr, fólk-baldr.

β. meton. the god Balder, because of his nob disposition, Edda. Baldrs-brá, f. Balder's eye-brow, botan. cotu foetida, Ivar Aasen ballebraa and baldurbraa, pyrethrum inodorum Edda 15; the B. is there called the fairest and whitest of all flowers (all grasa hvítast). Perhaps the eye-bright or euphrasy.

baldrast and ballrast, að, dep. [cp. Germ. pohteru; Ivar Aasen balðra, Ihre ballra = strepere], to make a clatter; þeir sneru hestunum ok böldrúðust sem þeir væri úrúrnir hvart þeir skyldi ríða, Sturl. iii. 279: adding saman, þeir böllrúðust saman, Ingt. 34.

baldrekr, m. (for. word), a belt, baldrick, Lex. Poët.

BALI, a, m. a soft grassy bank, esp. if sloping down to the shore, Grett. 116 A.

BALLR, adj. [Goth. balps, audax, may be supposed from Jornandes, ob audaciam virtutis baltha, id est audax, nomen inter suos acceperat, 109; Ulf. renders πάππρία by balpis, f., and balþjan is audere; in Icel. the þ (tb) becomes ll; A.S. beald, audax; Engl. bold]:—bard, stubborn: only used in poetry, and not in quite a good sense, as an epithet of a giant, Hým. 17; böll rúð, telling, fatal schemes, Hom. 27; ballir draumar, bad, deadly dreams, Vtkv. 1; ballr dólg, Haustl.; böll þrá, heavy grief, Ls. 30, etc., vide Lex. Poët. [So old German names, Bald, Leo-pold, etc.]

BALSAM, m. (now always n.), a balsam, Bs. i. 143, (for. word.)

baná, að, [bani; Gr. root φένω], to kill, with dat., ef gríðungr banar manni, Grág. ii. 122, Rb. 370, Fms. iii. 124; b. sér sjálftr, to commit suicide, Ver. 40; metaph., Hom. 17.

BAND, n. pl. bönd, [binda; Ulf. bandi, f. δεσμός; O.H.G. pfand, whence the mod. Dan. pant; N.H.G. band; Engl. band and bond; Dan. baand].

I. prop. in sing., any kind of band; mjótt band, a thin cord, Edda 20, Grág. ii. 119. β. a yarn of wool, v. bandvetlingar.

γ. metaph. a bond, obligation; lauson ok b. allra vandamála, Fms. v. 248, Bs. i. 689. II. in pl., also: I. bonds, fetters, Lat. vincula; í böndum, in vinculis, Bs. i. 190, Fms. ii. 87, 625, 95: theol., synda bönd, 656 A; líkamis bönd, Blas. 40.

2. a bond, confederacy; ganga í bönd ok eíð, to enter into a bond and oath, Band. 22; cp. hjónaband, marriage; handaband, a shaking of hands, etc.

3. poët. the gods, cp. hapt; of providence ruling and uniting the world, Hkm. 10; banda vé, the temples, Hkr. i. 204; at mun banda, at the will of the gods, 210; vera manu bönd í landi, the gods (i. e. lares tutelares) are present in the land, Bs. i. 10; gram reki bönd af löndum, Eg. (in a verse); blóta bönd, to worship the gods; vinir banda, the friend of the gods; bönd ollu því, the gods ruled it, Haustl.; vide Lex. Poët., all the instances being taken from heathen poems. Egilsson suggests a reference to the imprisoning of the three gods, Odinn, Hœnir, and Loki, mentioned Edda 72; but bönd is that which binds, not is bound; (band means vinculum not vincitus.)

4. metric. a kind of intricate intercalary burden (klofastef). This seems to be the meaning in the word Banda-drápa, where the burden consists of five intercalary lines occurring in sets of three verses | Dregr land at mun banda | Eirirk und sik geira | veðmildir ok semr hildi || guunbliör ok réð síðan | jarl goðvörðu hjarli; but as this metrical term is nowhere else recorded, the name of the poem may have come from the word 'banda' (gen. pl. deorum), Hkr. i. 210 sqq.

COMPDS: banda-dagr, m. vincula Petri, the 1st of August, Fms. vi. 222. banda-menn, m. pl. confederates, Band. 5, and many other modern compds. banda-ríki, n. (mod.) the United States.

banda-þing, n. the late German Bund, etc.

banda, að, [cp. Ulf. bandvian = σημαίνειν, and bandva, vexillum; Germ. banner; is probably alien to binda], to make a sign with the hand, esp. in the phrase, b. móti, to drive back sheep or flocks, Háv. 41, Fas. ii. 124, v. 1. The chief MSS., however, spell bandaði; the word is at present freq., but only in the above phrase, or gener. to remonstrate slightly against as by waving the hand; v. banda.

bandingi, ja, m. a prisoner, Stj. 200, Fms. vi. 16, 623, 25.

band-veltingr, m. a knitted woollen glove, Fms. iii. 176; and band-vötr, id., a horse's name, Gisl. 19.

BANG, n. hammering, Sturl. iii. 256; mod. also bangá, að, [Scot. and North. E. to bang], to hammer.

bang-hagr, adj. knowing a little bow to use the hammer, Sturl. ii. 195.

BANI, a, m. [Ulf. banja = πληγή; A.S. hana; Engl. bane; O.H.G. bano; v. ben below]. I. bane, death, natural or violent (properly violent); Egill tók sótt þá er hann leiddi til bana, Eg. 767; lostinn öru til bana, Fms. i. 118; kominn at bana, sinking fast, of a sick person, vii. 166.

II. a bane, and so = banadrá, a slayer; fjögurra manna b., Nj. 8, Grág. ii. 88, Ld. 326; pl., N.G.L. i. 163: the phrase, verða e-m at bana, to slay one, may refer to I. or II: poët. fire is called bani víðar, the bane of wood, and bani Háls, the bane of king Half, Ýt. 6; the winter is bani orma, the bane of worms, etc., Lex. Poët.

baná-blöð, n. blood shed in death, Stj. 432. baná-dagr, m. the day of death, Fas. i. 52. baná-drykkir, m. a baneful potion, poison, Fms. i. 18. baná-dægr, n. = banadagr (freq.), Fas. i. 160. baná-högg, n. a death-blow, mortal wound, Nj. 8, Eg. 193. baná-kringla, u, f. vertebra coli, atlas (in animals).

baná-lag, n. stabbing to death, Sturl. iii. 62. baná-maðr, m. a slayer, Fms. i. 215. baná-orð, n. death, in the phrase, bera b. af e-m, to put one to death, slay in fight, Edda 42; beta þykir mér frændi at þiggja b. af þér en veita þér þat, Ld. 222, Bs. i. 106; kenna e-m b., to charge one with slaying one, N.G.L. i. 306. baná-ráð, n. pl. the planning a person's death, a law term, Grág. ii. 116; cigi róð ek honum b., Nj. 21; slá banaráðum við e-n, Ld. 218. baná-sár, n. a mortal wound, Nj. 9, Eg. 258. baná-skot, n. a mortal shot, Jb. 324. baná-sótt, f. death-sickness, the last sickness, Jb. 192, Isl. ii. 38, Gullþ. 11, Bs. i. 426.

baná-spjót, n. pl. in the poët. phrase, berast banaspjótum eptir, to be deadly enemies, Glúm. 354, Hkr. iii. 76. baná-sæng, f. the death-bed. baná-sök, f. a deed worthy of death, Fms. i. 199. baná-tílræði, n. a mortal attack, Fas. i. 406. baná-þúfa, u, f., in the phrase, drepa fóttum í banáþúfu, to stumble against a fatal mound, Anal. 179, Hdl. 28.

banlaga-ráð, n. = banaráð, Str. 14.

BANN, n. [cp. Ulf. bandva; Hel. bann, mandatum; Engl. ban; Germ. bann; A.S. geban; mid. Lat. banuum], prob. of foreign origin: 1. eccles. excommunication, interdict; míma b. (excommunicatio minor), þat sem forboð er kallat á Norrænu, K. A. 226 (App.); meira b. (excommunicatio major), Ann. A. D. 1255; England í banni, id. A. D. 1208; Bs., H. F. several times. 2. in secular sense, prohibition of trade or intercourse; leggja b. fyrir mjöl eör vöru, N.G.L. i. 204, 103; cp. farbann, forbidding ships to set sail.

3. gener. a protest, prohibition, in phrases, boð ok b., Gpl. 76; lof né b., Eg. 349; leggja b. fyrir, to prohibit, Isl. ii. 265. 4. = bannan, a curse, swearing. The notion of jurisdiction common in Germany (v. Grimm) is unknown in the Scand. idioms; yet the Laufás' Edda, Ed. A. M. i. 586, v. 1. 14, has bann as one of the names of the earth, cp. the O.H.G. banz, regio. The passage Gisl. 16, náttlangt né lengra banni, is an ἀπ.λεγ. and probably corrupt, = á lengr or the like; lengra banni might, however, be equivalent to lengra meli, bann here denoting spatium temporis, a while. COMPDS: bann-atkvæði, n. a sentence of excommunication, H. E. i. 465. bann-áfall and -áfalli, n. the condemnation of excommunication, H. E. ii. 70. bannsdómur, m. a ban-doorn, sentence of excommunication, H. E. ii. 74. bannsmál, n. a case liable to excommunication, H. E. i. 254. bannspína, u, f. the punishment of excommunication, H. E. i. 477. bannspjót, n. a spear of excommunication, H. E. ii. 77. bannsværk, n. an act liable to excommunication, H. E. i. 390.

banna, að, [A.S. bannan = jubere; Germ. bannen; mid. Lat. bannire], to forbid, binder, prohibit (freq.); h. e-m e-t, or with infin., Fms. i. 254, Nj. 157, Ld. 256, Orkn. 4; b. fiskiför, Grág. ii. 350, N.G.L. i. 117. 2. to curse, [Scot. ban], with dat., Stj. 37; with acc., Hom. 31, Stj. 199, Post. 656 A, ii. 12: reflex., bannast um, to swear, Sturl. ii. 126, Fms. viii. 174. 3. = banda, to stop, drive back; hann sá tröll við ána, þat b. honum, ok víldi taka hann, Fas. ii. 124.

bannan, f. swearing, Hl. ii. 134. bannanar-orð, n. id., Stj. 153. bann-bóla, u, f. a bull of excommunication, Anecd. 8.

bann-færa, ð, to place under ban, K. A. 134, Sturl. ii. 3. bann-setja, tt, id., K. A. 64, Sturl. ii. 3, H. E. i. 471; part. pass. under ban, accursed, Fas. iii. 423, Stj. 417.

bann-setning, f. an excommunication, Sturl. ii. 3. bannsetningar-sverð, n. the sword of excommunication, H. E.

bann-syngja, söng, to pronounce the ban of excommunication, Fms. ix. 486.

ban-orð, n. = banáorð, Fms. x. 400, Bret. 76.

ban-væni, f., medic. prognosis mortis, Fél. ix.

ban-vænligr, adj. mortal, deadly, Bret. 56, Edda 154.

ban-vænn, adj. deadly, Eg. 34. 2. medic. deadly sick, just before death; ok er dró at því at hann (the sick) var b., when all hope of life was gone, Eg. 126, Fms. i. 86; snerist um allt sárit svá at Grettir gördist b., Grett. 153.

BARAR, mod. börrur, f. pl. [A.S. bār; Hel. bara; Engl. bier and barrow; Lat. feretrum], a band-bier; borinn í börum um fjallit, Fms. vii. 9. Bs. i. 352: sometimes to be carried on horseback (by two horses), báru þeir Guðmund í börum suðr til Hvítar, . . . bararnar hrutu ofan, Bs. i. 508 (Sturl. ii. 49 C spells barir): esp. the funeral bier, bearse, to be carried on horseback, lagði þegar kistuna í búnar barar, 655 xxii, Fms. x. 149; mæddust hestarnir undir börunum, Finnb. 322, cp. líkbörrur; now also leggja á nátrjúam (nátré) in like sense. The sing. in D.N. i. no. 70 is perh. a bad reading.

bar-axlaðr, adj. part. high-shouldered, with sharp prominent shoulder bones, Fms. vii. 321.

bar-átta, u, f. [North. E. barett obsolete], gener. a fight, contest: a. a row, Gpl. 176. β. a fight, battle, Fas. i. 26. γ. now freq., esp. = strife, contest. COMPDS: baráttu-maðr, m. a warrior, þiðr. 67.

baráttu-samr, adj. troublesome, Barl. 137.

barberr, m. (for. word), a barber, N.G.L. iii. no. 15.

BARÐ, n. [identical in etymology but not in sense to Lat. barba, Engl. beard, Germ. bart; the Scand. dialects all call the beard skegg; Swed. skugg; Dan. skjæg; barð in the sense of barba is quite alien from the Scand. idioms; the passages, Edda 109 (skegg heitir barð) and höggva börum í gras, Ld. 12, a poem of the end of the 13th century, are isolated instances: bart in Dan. is a mod. word]:—Lat. ora, margo: a. a brim of a helmet or hat (hjálmbarð, hattbarð), Fas. iii. 341. β. the verge, edge of a hill (holtbarð, túnbarð, brekkubarð, hólarbarð, etc.), freq. in local names of farms in Icel. γ. the wing or side fin of some fishes, e.g. whales, cp. barðhvalr; of flat fishes, raja pastinaca (skötubard). ð. the beak or armed prow of ships, esp. ships of war, [cp. A. S. barða, a beaked ship]; so barded, of a horse in armour; hence Barði or Járnbardi is the name of a sort of ram in olden times, e.g. the famous Járnbardi (Iron Ram) of earl Eric, described, Fms. ii. 310; cp. also Fb. i. 280: the stenn, Gr. στεινή, Jb. 308; róa fyrir bard e-m, to thwart one, Gpl. 519, Eg. 386, Fms. vii. 195; skulu vér binda akkeri fyrir bard hverju skipi, xi. 66, ii. 273, Lex. Poët. e. several compds are used in Icel. referring to parts of the head, e.g. hökubard, kinnbard, kjálkabarð, ora genae, maxillae, but without any notion of 'beard,' cp. Isid. granos et cinnabar Gothorum, 19, 23; the cinnabar and the present Icel. kimubarð seem to be etymologically identical.

barða, u, f. a kind of axe (barbata), Edda (Gl.) bar-dagi, a, m., prop. a 'battle day,' cp. endagi, máldagi, skil-dagi: 1. a law term, a beating, flogging, thrashing; cf. maðr lýstr maun þrjú ögg eðr þrim fleiri, þat heitir b. fullr, N. G. L. i. 73, Grág. ii. 155, Post. 656 B, Blas. 42. 2. a fight, battle (very freq.) = orrosta, Eg. 745, Nj. 45, etc.: metaph. a calamity, scourge (theol.), Sks. 112, 328, Fms. v. 214, Bs. i. 70. COMPDS: bardaga-frest, n. delay of battle, Al. 24. bardaga-fýst, f. eagerness to give battle, Al. 24. bardaga-gjarn, adj. eager for battle, Stj. 230. bardaga-guð, n. a god of battle, Mars, Al. 33. bardaga-gyðja, u, f. a goddess of battle, Bellona, Al. 41. bardaga-laust, n. adj. without battle, Al. 14. bardaga-list, f. the art of war, Stj. 45, Al. 4. bardaga-lykt, f. the close of a battle, Al. 5. bardaga-maðr, m. a warrior, Fms. vi. 56, Stj. 456. bardaga-stef, n. and bardaga-stefna, u, f. a term, fixed meeting for a fight, Al. 54, Fms. ix. 488.

barð-hvalr, m. a sort of whale, Sks. 124, Edda (Gl.) barði, a, m. a ship, a sort of ram, v. above, Fms. ii. 310, Edda (Gl.) β. a sort of fish (Germ. barfisch), Edda (Gl.) γ. a shield, Edda (Gl.) barda-mikill, adj. with a great bard (ð.), epithet of a ship, Hkr. iii. 268. bar-efni, n. a club, (common word.) bar-eyskr, adj. from Barra, one of the Hebrides, Grett.

BARKI, a, m. [Gr. φάρυγξ; alien from the South-Teut. idioms?], the windpipe, weazand, Eg. 508, Fas. i. 131, Fms. i. 217, vii. 191, Nj. 156: metaph. the stem of a boat; cp. háls, sviri. COMPDS: barka-kýli, n. Adam's apple, Bs. i. 382. barka-lok, n. epiglottis. barka-op, n. glottis.

BARKI, a, m., mid. Lat. barca, a sort of small ship (for. word), Fms. vii. 82. barka-bazi, a, m., a cognom., Sturl. bark-lauss, adj. without bark (börkr), Lex. Poët.
BARLAK, n. (for. word), barley, Edda (Gl.); the Icel. common word is bygg, Dan. byg, Swed. bygg.

bar-lómr, m. wailing, complaining, v. lómr. barm-fagr, adj. with fine sides, epithet of a ship, Lex. Poët.
 barmi, a, m., poët. a brother, prop. frater geminus, not qs. ἀδελφός, vide the following word, Lex. Poët.

BARMR, m. [Gr. φορμός; cp. Ulf. barms = κόλπος and σῆθος; O. H. G. param; Hel. barm; A. S. barm; all in the sense of gremium: this sense, however, is entirely unknown to old Icel. writers, who only apply the word in like sense as barð, namely, Engl. brim; Lat. ora]—a brim:
a. the brim of a vessel (fötubarmr, pottbarmr, etc.), Bs. ii. 173; hence barma-fullr, adj. or fullr á barma, full to the brim; the rim of a bell, Pm. 106. β. the edge of a brook or well (lækjarbarmr, brunnbarmr) = a chasm (gjárbarmr). γ. the border of the shore; eybarmr, ora insulae, Hervar. S. (in a verse); vikrbarmr; also used in many local names of farms in Icel. δ. the wing of anything; lyptingarbarmr, the gunwale of the stern; kastalabarmr (wing of a castle), Orkn. (in a verse); barmr hvarma, the edge of the eye-lids, Lex. Poët. e. the flaps of a thing; reif hann allan í sundr ok kastaði börmunum á eldinu, Fms. iv. 339 (rare if not an ἀπ. λέγ.) ζ. the notion of gremium, bosom, only appears after the Reformation, and even then rare; cp. the bosom of a coat, e.g. geyma e-t á barmi sér; hægri, vinstri b., etc.; stinga hendinni í sinn eigin barm, Exod. iv. 6. barma, að, b. sér, to lament, is also a mod. word, Germ. barmen qs. bearmen; vide, however, baðnr.

barm-tog, n. a rope for contracting the nets during fishing, Ivar Aasen barna, Gpl. 427.

BARN, n. pl. börn, [Ulf. barn; O. H. G. parn; A. S. bearn; Scot. and North. E. bairn; cp. bera and Lat. parēre]—a bairn, child, baby. This word, which in olden time was common to all the Teut. idioms, was lost in Germany as early as the 13th century (Grimm. s. v.); in the South of England it went out of use at an early time, and was replaced by 'child'; even the Ormulum uses barn only four times, else always 'child.' In North. E. bairn is still a household word, and freq. in popular Scottish writers, Burns, Walter Scott, etc. In the whole of Scandinavia it is in full and exclusive use; the Germ. 'kind' is in Icel. entirely unknown in this sense, v. the funny story Ísl. Þjóð. ii. 535; ('kind' in common Icel. means a sheep.) In Danish barn is the only word which, like the Icel., changes the radical vowel in pl. into ö (börn). Proverbs referring to barn; barnið vex en brókin ekki; þetta verðr aldri barn í brók; bráð er barnslundin (barnæskan); nema börn hvað á bæ er titt; allir haða börnin verið; því læra börnin málið að þá er fyrir þeim haft; tvisvar verðr gamall maðrinn barn; bragð er at þá barnið finnr; suemna taka börn til meina; Guð gefr björg með barni, cp. Eggert (Bb.) I. 14; sex börn, dætr þrjár ok þrjú sonu, Nj. 30, Ísl. ii. 198, Vsp. 36; eiga þrjú sonu barna, Fms. xi. 43; og svikast um að eiga börn, Eggert (Bb.) I. 14; vera með barni, to be with child, Fms. ii. 212, i. 57, 68, Ísl. ii. 197; fara með barni, to go with child, Nj. 130; frá blautu barni, from a child, Fms. iii. 155; ummi honum hvert barn, every child, i. e. every living creature, loved him, i. 17; hvert mannsbarn, every man: metaph. (rare), offspring, Niðrst. 10: barn, barnið gott, börn, barnið mitt (τέκνον, τέκνα) is with many a favourite term of endearment in talking with another, Láttum líða ög bíða, börn, Pál Vid. in a popular ditty: eptirlætisbarn, a pet, spoiled child; olbogabarn, a bard-treated child; óskabarn, a child of adoption; sveinbarn, a boy; meybarn, a girl; ungbarn, a baby. COMPDS: barna-börn, n. pl. grand-children, Grág. i. 185. barna-eign, f. procreation of children, v. barneign. barna-færi, n. the phrase, ekki b., no task for children, Þórd. 97 (1860). barna-gaman, n. child's play, El. I. barna-karl, m. child's friend, nickname of an old pirate; hann var víkingr mikill, hann lét eigi henda börn á spjótsodduum sem þá var víkingum títt, því var hann b. kallaðr, he was a great pirate, but he did not spit babies as pirates then used to do, wherefore he was called b., Landn. 308; in mod. usage, one who has many children, mesti b. barna-kensla, u, f. fathering a child upon one (kenna e-m barn), N. G. L. i. 410: mod. training children in a school. barna-leikr, m. a child's play, Grett. 107 A, vide barnleikr. barna-messa, u, f., now barnadagr, m. Holy Innocent's Day, Dec. 28, N. G. L. i. 377. barna-mold, f. argilla apyra, also called Pétrs mold, argilla St. Petri, Eggert Itin. p. 125. barna-mosi, a, m., botan. spbagnum cymbi folium, Hjalt. barna-skap, n. in the phrase, hafa ekki b., to be no baby, Fs. 138. barna-spil, n. a childish play, Fas. i. 88 paper MS.: spil is a Germ. for. word. barna-vipr, n. childish trifles, gewgaws, Ld. 122. barna-páttur, m. the section of law concerning infants, baptism, etc., in the Icel. Jus. Eccl., K. þ. K. 8. barns-aldur, m. childhood, Eg. 118, Fms. ii. 267. barns-bein, n. in the phrase, frá blautu b., v. above, Al. 71. barns-farir, f. pl. in the phrase, deyjfa af barnsförum, to die in childhood. barns-full, adj. pregnant, Fr. 185,—a rude phrase; Icel. now say, kálfull kýr, but not barnsfull kona. barns-fylgja, u, f., medic. secundinae, a baby's caul, Björn. barns-grátr, m. the cry of a baby, Fms. x. 218. barns-hafandi, part. pregnant, Jb. 114. barns-húfa, u, f. a baby's cap, D. N. barns-lík, n. a baby's corpse, Hkr. iii. 184. barns-mál, n. babble, El. 15. barns-skírsl, f. infant baptism, N. G. L. i. 131 (Norse). barns-sótt, f. = jóðsótt, the pains of childbirth, Bs. i. 327. barns-útkast, n. and barns-útburðr, m. exposure of infants, N. G. L. i. 303. barns-verk, n. child's work, Fms. ix. 35.

barna, að, to get with child, Nj. 98: metaph. in the phrase, að barna söguna, to interrupt a tale while being told. barn-aldur, m. childhood, Hkr. ii. 35. barn-alinn, part. native, Bs. i. 808.

barn-beri, a, m. pregnant, with child, N. G. L. i. 317. barn-burðr, ar, m. childbearing, childbirth, Grág. i. 375.
 barn-bær, f. capable of bearing children, opp. úbyrja, Grág. i. 323, Stj. 89: pregnant, Grág. i. 294.

barn-dómur, m. childhood, Stj. 195, 25, 655 xxx. 21.
 barn-eign, f. getting children, Stj. 196: metaph. children, furðu illa b. gat Loki, Edda 20; vera ör b., to be past childbearing.

barn-eskja, u, f. [Goth. barniskj], childhood, Hom. 122. barn-faðir, m. a child's alleged father, H. E. ii. 111. barna-móðir was in popish times the name for a priest's concubine.

barn-fóstr, n. 'bairn-fostering,' a kind of adoption in olden times; at bjóða e-m b., to offer b. to another man, is a standing custom in the Sagas; men of wealth, but of low birth, in order to get security for their property, offered barnfóstr to noblemen, as in Ld. ch. 16 and ch. 28, Hænsa þór. S. (Ísl. ii. 125), Harð. S. ch. 9 (Ísl. ii. 23); or it was done as a matter of policy, it being regarded as a homage to be the foster-father of another man's son; því at sá er mælt at sá sé útgarni sem öðrum fóstrar barn, Fms. i. 16; ok er sá kallaðr æ minni maðr, er öðrum fóstrar barn, Ld. 108; thus Jon Loftsson offered b. to the young Snorri, in order to soothe the wounded pride of his father Sturla, Sturl. i. 106; Ari Frodi was fostered by Hall í Haukadal, Íb.; Njal offered to adopt as a son the young Hoskuld, in order to atone for the slaying of his father, Nj. ch. 95; cp. also the interesting story of the kings Harold and Athelstan and the young Hacon, Fms. i. l. c.: as a matter of friendship, Ld. 144, Bs. i. 73, 74, Sturl. i. 223, Ld. 25, and many other instances. COMPDS: barnfóstr-laun, n. pl. a reward, fee for b., N. G. L. i. 91.

barn-fóstra, u, f. a foster-mother of a child, Mar.; now a nurse. barn-fóstri, a, m. a foster-father, Eg. 401, Ísl. ii. 144. barn-fúlgja, u, f. (now in Icel. meðgjöf), pay for the maintenance of a child, N. G. L. i. 30.

barn-fæddr, adj. part. native, Bs. i. 80; borinn ok b., born and bred. barn-fæði, n. nativity; eiga b., to be a native, Fr.
 barn-getnaðr, m. the procreation of children, Grág. i. 349, Greg. 29: pregnancy, Stj. 514.

barn-getnaðr, m. the procreation of children, Grág. i. 349, Greg. 29: pregnancy, Stj. 514.

barn-getnaðr, m. the procreation of children, Grág. i. 349, Greg. 29: pregnancy, Stj. 514.

barn-getnaðr, m. the procreation of children, Grág. i. 349, Greg. 29: pregnancy, Stj. 514.

barn-getnaðr, m. the procreation of children, Grág. i. 349, Greg. 29: pregnancy, Stj. 514.

barn-getnaðr, m. the procreation of children, Grág. i. 349, Greg. 29: pregnancy, Stj. 514.

barn-getnaðr, m. the procreation of children, Grág. i. 349, Greg. 29: pregnancy, Stj. 514.

barn-góðr, adj. fond of children.
barn-gælur, f. pl. lulling sounds, nursery rhymes, Fas. ii. 234.
barngringr, m. [berja], thrashing, v. lamabarngring: now, 'thrashing the water,' i. e. bard pulling against wind and tide.
barn-lauss, adj. childless, Eg. 318, Grág. i. 185, Landn. i. 304, Hkr. i. 99. barn-leikar, m. pl. child's play; leika barnleikum, of play-fellows, Bs. i. 417, 473, Fms. vi. 403, Sturl. i. 62.
barn-leysi, n. the being childless, Stj. 428, Mar. 656.
barn-ligr, adj. childish, Sks. 153.
barn-maðr, m. the bearer of a baby to be christened; þar á at ala líkmenn ok barnmenn, Vm. 77.
barn-skikkja, u, f. a child's cloak, Sturl. iii. 278.
barn-skirn, f. the christening of infants, K. þ. K. 14. barnskírnar-orð, n. pl. formula in b., 655 xi.
barn-sæng, f. childbed, H. E. i. 492.
barn-teitr, adj. glad as a child, Hým. 2.
barn-ungr, adj. very young, youthful, Fms. ii. 98, Mirm. 31.
barn-úmagi, a, m. an orphan child, Grág. i. 305.
barn-úmeð, f. minority, Grág. i. 305.
barn-æði, n. childishness, FéL. 12. 56, transl. of Iliad ix. 491. barn-æska, u, f. childhood, Eg. 116, Grág. ii. 392, Fms. i. 4, x. 273; brúð er b., the youth is impatient, a proverb, cp. Am. 75.
BARR, n. [Norse and Swed. barr means the needles of the fir or pine, opp. to 'lauf' or leaves of the ash, elm; cp. barland, taxus baccata, and barskógr, 'needle-wood,' i. e. fir-wood, Ivar Aasen]. I. the needles or spines of a fir-tree; the word is wrongly applied by Snorri, Edda 11, who speaks of the 'barr' of an ash;—Icel. has no trees. In Hm. 50 (Norse poem?) it is correctly used of a pine, hrórnar þöll er stendr þorpi á, hlýrat henni börkr né b., Hkv. Hjörv. 16, Edda 11. II. = barley, [Scot. and North. E. bar, A. S. bere, is four-rowed barley, a coarse kind; bigg in North. E. and Scot. is six-rowed barley, also a coarse kind: cp. the Bigg-market, a street in Newcastle-upon-Tyne: barlog, sweet wort, made of barley, Ivar Aasen]; bygg heitir með mönnum, en barr með goðum, men call it 'bygg', but gods 'bar', which shews that barr sounded foreign, and that bygg was the common word, Alvm. 33; Edda (Gl.) 231 ras b. under sáðsheiti, v. Lex. Poët. Common phrases in Icel., as þerá ekki sitt barr, of one who will never again bear leaves or flourish, metaph. from a withered tree: so Persarum vigui rege beatoris rendered, líf nins blómgaðra bar, en buðlungs Persa var, Snót 129. barlegr, adj. vigorous, well-looking.
barr, adj. ready (paratus), Jd. 13; strong, vigorous, Lex. Poët.
barr-haddaðr, adj. barley-baired, poët. epithet of the earth, Lex. Poët.
barri, a, m. a grove, Skm. 39.
bar-skeptr, adj. high-shafted, of an axe; breiðöx b., Bs. i. 658.
bar-skógr, m. needle-wood.
bar-smíð, f. thrashing, flogging, Bs. i. 792, Grág. i. 456; pl. figbt, ous, Íb. 12, Grág. ii. 114.
BARÚN, m. [for. word, mid. Lat. baro; A. S. beornas], a baron; heita þeir hersar eðr lendir menn í Danskrí tungu, greifar í Saxlandi, en barnar í Englandi, Edda 93, Thom., Art.; the title was introduced into Norway by king Magnus, A. D. 1277, vide Ann. s. a., Gþl. 512. barúna-afn, n. the title of b., Ann. l. c. barúnia, u, f. a barony, Thom. 36.
bar-viðr, m. the wood of the fir, D. N. (Fr.) iii. 473. bar-viðri, n. a beating storm, Sturl. iii. 127.
basinn, m. [for. word], basin xylinum, a tree, Edda (Gl.) ii. 256.
BASMIR, f. pl. an ár. λεγ. in a verse in Hervar. S. (Ed. 1847), p. 56; and ek þér brúðir basmir óskerðar, fé ok fjöld meidma; a dub. word, p. Germ. besem, Engl. besom; mod. Germ. besen, North Germ. besemer, Dan. bismer (Icel. reizla), which are all connected. Ivar Aasen records the Norse word basm or basma; the Norse basm means twenty threads of the warp (basm here means loom?):—the Ed. in Fas. i. 207 gives a wrong pelling, óskir tvær (qs. óskertar), and skips the word basmir.
bassi, a, m. a bear, Lex. Poët.
BAST, n.; bestí (Vkv. 12) seems to be a dat. masc. from böstr; in Germ. the word is freq. used masc.; the passage l. c. is perh. to be restored hús—þeir er af létu bestí (tiliæ) byr sima (annulos), who did pull the ings from the cord? (cp. v. 8); [Engl., A. S., and Germ. bas]:—bast, be inner bark of the lime-tree; bast at A. S. Rm. 9; bast né band, Gþl. 86, N. G. L. i. 59; sá þeir á bast bauga dregra, Vkv. 7. bastá, að, to bind into a parcel, D. N. ii. 560 (Fr.), Fms. v. 301.
bastarðr, m. bastard, appears for the first time as the cognom. of William the Conqueror. The etymon is dubious; Grimm suggests a Scandinavian origin; but this is very doubtful; the word never occurs in Scandinavian writers before the time of William, sounds very like a foreign word, is rarely used, and hardly understood by common people in Icel.; neither does it occur in A. S. nor O. H. G.; so that Adam of Bremen says, iste Willelmus quem Franci bastardum vocant; whence the word seems to come from some southern source; cp. the Játv. S. (Ed. 852), and Fl. iii. 463 sqq.; the MS. Holm. spells bastarðr, the Fb. bastardr. 2. name of a sword, Fms. vii. 297, referring to A. D.

1163. 3. a kind of cloth, in deeds of the 14th and 15th centuries, Vm. 46, 136, D. N. ii. 165. bastari, a, m. a bastbinder, D. N. ii. 246.
bast-bleikr, adj. pale as bast, Fms. vii. 269, v. 1.
bastl, n. turmoil; bastla, að, to turmoil.
bast-lína, u, f. a cord of bast, Eg. 579.
bast-taug, f. a tie or cord of bast, Eg. 579, v. 1.
bast-vesall, adj. = bastbleikr, Karl. 167.
bast-öx, f., prob. a false reading, Fas. ii. 177, v. 1. bátöx.
BATI, a, m. improvement, advantage, Fs. 155, Grett. 13 A, Fas. ii. 247, Grág. (Kb.) i. 160. bata-ván, f. hope of convalescence, recovery of health, cp. Grág. l. c.; cp. also ábati, gain.
batna, að, [v. bati; Ulf. gabatan], to improve, get better, Nj. 52, Grág. i. 206. 2. impers. medic. term; e-m batnar, one recovers, Fms. iv. 369, v. 22; the disease is added in gen., e-m b. sins meins, sjúkleika, sóttar, Bs. i. 343, Hkr. ii. 312, Eb. 280: at present also with nom.: proverb, batnanda manni er best að lífa.
batnaðr, ar, m. improvement, 623. 15, Hom. 50, 134, Hkr. ii. 178: convalescence, Grág. ii. 45.
batnan, f. id., Lex. Poët. baug-bót, f. a law term, compensation (v. baugr II.), Grág. ii. 173.
baug-bæstandi, pl. -endr, part. a law term, those who have to pay the baugr (II.); opp. to baugþiggendr, the receivers, Grág. ii. 172.
baug-eiðr, m. the oath upon the sacred temple ring in heathen times; b. Öðinn hygg ek at umit hafi, hvat skal hans trygðum trúa, Hm. 110; cp. the phrase, vinna eið at baugi, v. baugr below; the baug-eiðr of heathen times answers to the Christian bókeiðr and vinna eið at bók, to swear, laying the hand upon the Gospel.
baug-gildi, n. a law term, the 'weregild' to be paid to the 'agnates' of the slain; opp. to nefgildi, the same amount to be paid to the 'cognates'; defined, Grág. (Bt.) ii. 176, N. G. L. i. 186: metaph. agnatic relationship, vera ór b. eðr nefgildi, lífa í b. etc., to be an agnate or a cognate, id.
bauggildis-menn, m. pl. agnates, who are bound to pay and receive the bauggildi, Grág. ii. 180.
baug-gildingr, m. = bauggildismaðr, cp. nefgildingr, Grág. ii. 178. baug-gildir, adj. payable, fit to pay as bauggildi, N. G. L. i. 176.
BAUGR, m. [the root þjúg—baug—bog; A. S. beág; O. H. G. þouc = armilla; lost in N. H. G. and in Engl.]. I. a ring, armlet, esp. in olden times to be worn on the wrist plain, without stones: a. the sacred temple ring (stallhringr) on the altar in heathen temples; all oaths were to be made by laying the hand upon the temple ring; at sacrificial banquets it was to be dipped in the blood, and was to be worn by the priest at all meetings. The ring was either of gold or silver, open (mótlaus), its weight varying between three, and twenty ounces (the last is the reading of Eb. new Ed. p. 6, v. 1.), the classical passages in the Sagas are—Eb. l. c. (and cp. 44), Glúm. 388, Landn. (Hb.) 258, Þórð. S. 94 (Ed. 1860); cp. also the note at the end of the new Ed. of Eb., referring to an interesting essay of the Norse Prof. Holmboe upon the matter, Christiania, A. D. 1864. β. baugr is at present in Icel. used of a spiral ring without a stone (e. g. a wedding ring); the third finger is called baugfinger, transl. from Lat. digitus annuli, for the wearing of wedding rings is not in use in Icel. (unless as a Dan. imitation). Icel. also say einbaugr, tvíbaugr, a single or double spiral ring. II. metaph. in olden times, before minted gold or silver came into use, the metals were rolled up in spiral-formed rings, and pieces cut off and weighed were used as a medium of payment; hence, in old times, baugr simply means money, used in the poets in numberless compounds; hringum hreyttí, hjó sundr baug, Rm. 35; cp. baugbroti, baugskynidr, baugskati, baughati, one who breaks, throws, bates gold, epithets of princes, etc., v. Lex. Poët. A. S. poetry abounds in epithets such as, beageafa, dator auri; the Heliand speaks of 'vunden gold.' In the law the payment of weregild is particularly called baugr, v. the compounds: baugatal is the Icel. section of law treating of the weregild, Grág. ii. 171–188; höfuðbaugr, lögbaugr (a legal baug, lawful payment). In the Norse law vide esp. N. G. L. i. 74 sqq., 184 sqq. 2. the painted circle on the round shield (clypeus); á fornum skjöldum var titt at skríra rönd þá er b. var kallaðr, ok er víð þann baug skildir kendir, Edda 87, Eg. 699; often embellished with scenes from the mythical age. Some poems are preserved or on record, describing such shields, two Berudrápur by Egil (bera, a shield), Haustöng by Thjóðolf, Ragnarsdrápa by Bragi Gamli (of the 9th and 10th centuries). Some of these poems were among the chief sources used by Snorri in composing the Edda. The shield is metaph. called baugr, Edda (Gl.). 3. a fish-book; man eigi þú draga Leviathan á ǵngli eðr bora kiðr hans með baugi (very rare, if not an ár. λεγ.), Post. 686 C. 2. 4. the phrase, eiga (kost) á baugi, to have (a single) chance left; þótti þat vera et mesta hætturáð at berjast, en sá mun á baugi, ef eigi er sæzt, there will be no other chance unless we come to terms, Sturl. iii. 244; þú munt eiga slíkan á baugi brátt, thou wilt soon have the very same chance (viz. death), the turn will come to thee, Nj. 58; nú mun ek eiga þann á baugi, at . . . , there will be no other chance for me, than . . ., Orkn. 46; cp. einbyggðr kost, dira necessitas, 58; kvaðst þá heldr vilja liggja hjá henni, ef sá væri á baugi, if there were no other chance, Fas. ii. 150. The explanation of this metaphor is doubtful, cp. Vkv. verses 5 and 7 (?), or is the metaphor taken from the weregild?

5. baugr also occurs in mod. usage in many compds, astron. and mathem., spor-baugr, the ecliptic; hádegisbaugr, a meridian. COMPDS: bauga-brot, n. pl. cut off pieces of baugr, bad money, Band. 12. bauga-maðr, m. = bauggildismaðr, N. G. L. i. 81, 82, 186. bauga-tal, n. the section of law about weregild, Grág. ii. 171-188; β. fixing of the weregild, Grág. i. 158. baugs-helgi, f. personal sacredness, (one's death to be atoned for by a weregild); þræll á b. á sér ef hann fylgir drotni sínum til þings . . ., N. G. L. i. 70.

baug-reið, f. a law term, an official inspection (in Norway) to measure the breadth of the highway, defined, Gpl. 412-414.

baug-rygr, jar, f. pl. ir, a law term, an only daughter entitled to receive and pay weregild, in default of heirs male. The Norse law defines thus, ef hon er einberni, ok til arfs komin, þar til er hón sezt á brúðstól, . . . up to her wedding day, N. G. L. i. 184, 92; the Icel. law does not limit the right to her marrying; sú er kona ein er bæði skal baugi bæta ok baug taka, ef hon er einberni, en sú kona heitir b., en hon er dóttir hins dauða, Grág. ii. 183.

baug-þak, n. [þekja baug], a law term, 'baug-covering,' i. e. the supplemental payment to be added in due proportion to the amount of weregild (baugr), defined, Grág. ii. 171, 172; hence 'at baugþaki' metaph. means in addition, to boot; þá kom at honum síðan at b. brotfallit, he was taken with fits of epilepsy to boot, Bs. i. 336.

baug-þiggjandi, pl. -endr, part. a receiver of weregild.

BAUKA, að, [Swed. böka], prop. to dig, to rummage; hann b. til fiskanna, viz. in order to steal them, Grett. 137; aldri skal ek í belginn bauka, says the giant in the tale, Ísl. Þjóðs. ii. 458.

BAULA, u, f. a cow, Bs. i. 635. COMPDS: baulu-fall, n. the carcass of a slaughtered cow, Bs. i. 593. baulu-fótr, m. cow's foot, cognom., Sturl. iii. 71; mod. baula, að, to low.

BAUN, f. [A. S. beān, cp. Lat. faba], a bean, Gpl. 544, Rb. 394. bauna-lögr, m. bean-broth, Karl. 452.

bausn, f. the fore fins of a shark, Björn.

BAUTA, the remnant of an obsolete strong verb analogous to hlaupa—hljóp, [A. S. beātan; Engl. beat; Germ. botzen, pulsare], to bunt, beat; bautu, 1st pers. pl. pres. indic., Fms. v. 83 (O. H. 1853 spells bavtu); svá bavtu vér þjórnuna, so do we beat (chase) the bears, Gs. 13; part. pass. bautinn, beaten, slain, Lex. Poët. s. v. sverðbautinn; Farbauti, beater of ships, is the name of the giant father of Loki; hylbauti, beater of the waves, a ship, Edda (Gl.); cp. Swed. bauter, strings for catching birds, Ihre.

bauta-steinn, Snorri (Hkr.) constantly uses the pl. form, but bautaðarsteinn, Fagrsk. 19, and bautarsteinn, Hm. 72; m. the stone monuments of the olden age, esp. in Sweden and Denmark; the Hávamál l. c. (sjaldan bautarsteinar standa brautu nær, nema reisi niðr at nið) tells us that these stones used to be placed along the high roads, like the sepulchral monuments of old Rome; cp. the standing phrase on the Swedish-Runic stones—hér skal standa steinn 'nær brautu'; or, má eigi 'brautar-kuml' (a road monument) betra verða; the high roads of old Sweden seem to have been lined with these monumental stones; even at the present time, after the destruction of many centuries, the Swedish-Runic stones (of the 11th and 12th centuries) are counted by thousands. A great collection was made and drawings executed during the 17th century (Buræus, etc.), but only published A. D. 1750, under the name of Bautil. The etymology of this word is much contested; some render it by 'stones of the slain' (bauta, to slay), but this is contradicted by the passage in Hm. l. c. and by the inscriptions themselves. The bauta stones were simply monuments erected by the piety of kindred and friends without any respect to sex or manner of death, either in war, on sea, or through sickness; some were even erected to the memory of living persons. They were usually tombstones; but many of them are memorial stones for men that died in foreign lands, Greece, Russia, the British Islands, etc. Neither is Snorri right in saying (Hkr. pref.) that the bautaesteinar belonged to the old burning age (brunaöld), and were replaced by the cairns (haugar) in the subsequent cairn age (haugaöld)—þá skyldi brenna alla dauða menn ok reisa eptir bauta-steinna, en síðan er Freyr hafði heygðr verit at Uppsölum þá gördu margir höfðingjar eigi síðr hauga en bautasteinna. Svíar tóku lík hans ok var hann brenndr við á þá er Skúta heitir, þar vóru settir bautaesteinar hans, Hkr. Yngl. ch. 17—the passage in Hávamál and the monuments refute this statement. The great bulk of the Scandinavian bauta stones seem to be of the 11th and even 12th century. In Icel. no stones of that time are on record: var hann þá hér heygðr skamt frá bænum, ok settir upp bautaesteinar, þeir er enn standa hér, Hkr. i. 269; hávir bautaesteinar standa hjá haugi Egils ullskeris, 153,—where Fagrsk. reads, í þau skíp var lagðr í valrinn, ok ornnir þar haugar utan at; þar stendur ok bautaðarsteinn (= bautarsteinn in Hm.?) há sem Egill féll, p. 19;—en eptir alla þá menn er nokkut mannsmót var at, skyldi reisa bautasteinna, ok hélzt sá síðr lengi síðan, Hkr. Yngl. ch. 8. It is worth remarking that the word 'bautaesteinn' never occurs out of Icel. literature, and there only in the above passages, viz. once in the old Hm., once in the Fagrsk., four times in the Hkr., whence it has passed over to modern writers. The word is most probably only a corruption from brautarsteinar, lapides viae, (by dropping the r); cp. the analogous Swedish word, brautarkuml, monumentum viae, which occurs in the inscriptions themselves.

BÆÐIR, adj. pron. dual, gen. beggja, neut. bæði rarely, (Norse); báði, gen. báðra, sometimes occur in MSS. of the 14th century, but both of them are Norse forms, [Goth. bai, baiþs; A. S. ba; Engl. both; Germ. beide; cp. also Gr. ἀμφω, Lat. ambo]:—both, Nj. 82, Sturl. iii. 314, Eg. 257, Grág. i. 368, N. G. L. i. 33, Ísl. ii. 348, Fms. x. 118, etc. etc.

BÁGI, a, m. (not bagi), an adversary, Stor. 23, Lex. Poët.

bágindi, n. pl. distress, difficulties.

bágliga, adv. (-ligr, adj.), adversely, Vigl. 30.

bág-lundr, adj. ill-disposed, bad-tempered, Lex. Poët.

bágr, adj. uneasy; honum verðr bág höndin, Fas. iii. 370; eiga bágt is now in Icel. to be poor, hard up: bág-staðr, adj. distressed.

bágr, m. [cp. Hel. bāgan = contendere, and Icel. bægja below], contest, strife, in such phrases as, fara í bág, to come atwart; fór í bág með þeim, they came across, Bjarn. 28; í bága (pl.), Bs. i. 622; brjóta bág við e-m, to make a struggle against, Al. 49; Páll postuli braut þar helzt bág við ávalt er öðrum þótt torveldast, Post. 656 C. 24, Fms. viii. 42; koma í bága, to come into strife or collision with.

bág-ráðr, adj. difficult to deal with, Fms. ii. 11.

bág-rækr, adj. difficult to drive, of geese, Grett. 90.

BÁKN, n. for. word [A. S. becn; O. H. G. pauban], a beacon, v. sigrbákn: bákn now means a big, monstrous thing.

bákna, að, [A. S. becan], to beckon; þeir báknuðu vápnunum til þeirra Hákonar, Fms. vii. 276, xi. 366.

BÁL, n. [old Scot. bale, i. e. a beacon-fagot, Lay of Last Minstrel 3. 27 note]. I. a flame, Nj. 199, Ld. 100, Stj. 45 (freq.)

II. Lat. rogus, a pyre, funeral pile; hlada b., rogam struere, Eb. 314, 264; Fms. v. 328, esp. for burning dead bodies; a funeral pile in the old heathendom, til brands eðr báls, an old law term, ad urnam, N. G. L. i. 50; the phrase, vega e-n á bál, or, bera á bál, to carry to the pyre, Vkv. 14, cp. Vpm. 54, Fas. i. (Hervar. S.) 487; graphical description of those funerals, vide Edda 37, 38 (Baldrsbrenna), Fas. i. (Völs. S.) 204; cp. 333, Hkr. Yngl. S. ch. 27; cp. also the funeral of the mythical king Sigurd Ring, recorded by Arngrím Lærde in his Supplementum ad Compendium Hist. Norv. MS. (composed A. D. 1597), probably taken from a lost leaf of Skjöldunga Saga (Sögubrot), and mentioned by Munch, Norske Folks Hist. i. 274; mod. of a foaming wind, wrath, etc.—bálviðri, n. and bálhvass, bálreiðr, adj., etc.

bál-för, f. a funeral, Edda 37.

bál-gerð, f. id., Edda (Ub.) 288 (Ed. 1852).

bálki, a, m., v. the following word.

BÁLKR, old form bákr, Grág., dat. bæki, N. G. L. i. 399, acc. pl. báiku or báku, Lex. Poët. [A. S. bælc], a balk, partition [cp. naval bulk-heads]; b. um þveran hellinn, of a cross wall, Fms. iii. 217, Fas. ii. 333, Grett. 140; sá studdi höndunum á bálkinn, of a balk of wood across the door, Orkn. 112. β. a low wall in a stall or house, N. G. L. i. 399.

2. metaph. a law term, a section in a code of law; þjófa bákr, Kristindóms b., etc., criminal, ecclesiastical law . . ., Grág., Jb. γ. a body, a host, in compds as frændbákr, ættbákr, herbákr; sýndist honum úárennilligr b. þeirra, of a host in line of battle, Bs. i. 667; a pr. name. COMPDS: bálkar-brot, n. the breaking a fence, crib, Gpl. 350, 391. bálkar-lag, n. a sort of metre (from a pr. name Balkr), Edda (Hft.) 142.

BÁRA, u, f. [berja?], a wave, billow, v. alda; as a rule bára denotes the smaller waves caused by the wind (on the surface of larger billows), alda the rollers or swell, Bs. ii. 82, Fas. i. 186, Fms. x. 324 (of a breaker = boði), Gkv. i. 7: the proverb, sigla milli skers ok báru, cp. inter Scyllam et Charybdin, Fms. ii. 268, Fb. iii. 402; sjaldan er ein báran stök, there is seldom a single billow: of misfortune, cp. Aesch. Prom. 1015 κακῶν τρικυμία, cp. also Ísl. Þjóðs. i. 660. β. metaph.

of undulations or rough stripes on the surface of a thing, e. g. the crust of a cheese, F. 146; a scull, cp. Eg. 769; báruskel, f. cardia testa cordata pectinata, a shell, Eggert Itin. p. 1010. COMPDS: báru-fall, n. a swell at sea, Al. 50. báru-skel, f., v. above. báru-skot, n. waves from a fresh breeze, wrinkling the surface of the sea, Hkr. i. 59. báru-stormr, m. an unruly sea, Stj. 89. báru-stórr, adj. the waves running high, Bs. ii. 82, Fas. i. 72; vide móð-bára, objection.

bár-óttur, adj. waved, of a skull, Eg. 769.

bása, að, = bæsa, to drive cattle into a stall, Gisl. 104.

bás-hella, u, f. a stone wall between two stalls in a cowhouse, Grett. 112.

BÁSS, m. [Ulif. bausts = ἀποθήκη; A. S. bōs; Engl. provincial boose; Germ. banse], a boose or stall in a cowhouse; kýr á bási, binda kú á bás, etc., Bjarn. 32, Bs. i. 171; a cow and a bás go together, e. g. in the nursery rhyme hulling children to sleep; sofi, sofi . . . selr í sjá . . . kýr á bi, köttir í búri . . . cp. the Engl. in the cow's boose, Bosworth s. v.; bás, is an interj. exclam. for driving cows into stall: also used in Icel. of rains formed in rocks, e. g. at the foot of a waterfall; in local names, Far, Bäsendar, etc.: the phrase, hafa sér markaðan bás, to have one's share of life marked out, Ísl. þjóðs. i. 538; einginn veit sér ætlaðan bás í laganna solli, no one knows what boose is kept for him in the turmoil of the fates, Grönd. 194; vide bjarnbáss.

BÁSUNA, f. f. (for. word), bassoon, Fas. ii. 511.
ÁT-festr, u. f. a rope by which a boat is made fast, Jb. 398, 655 xvii.
ÁT-lauss, adj. and BÁTleysi, n. being without a boat, Eb. 142, Jb. 2.

ÁT-maðr, m. a boatman, Hkr. iii. 128, Fms. vi. 320.

ÁTR, m. [a Scand. and Low Germ. word used in A. S., Engl., Icel., but alien to O. H. G. and middle H. G.; even Luther (v. Grimm) never uses the word; it was later introduced into mod. High Germ., and has a foreign sound there, (Engl. t answers to High Germ. z); the word is in Germ. borrowed from Dutch or English]:—a boat, either small open fishing vessel or a ship-boat. In Icel. only small boats are called so, those of two or four oars; an eight-oared boat is a skip, Eg. 121, 373, Eb. 142, Nj. 122, Jb. 398, Bs. i. 422, 423: in various cases, ausa bát sinn, Fms. vii. 331; sjá fyrir báti sínum, to go on one's own course, to mind one's own business, Sturl. iii. 247: alliteration, eiga bygd í báti, metaph., Bs. i. 422. COMPDS: báts-borð, the side of a boat, Sturl. i. 119. báts-farmr, m. a boat's freight, n. 1342.

ÁT-stafn, m. a boat's prow, Fms. viii. 223.

ÆÐ, n. a bed in a garden, (mod. and rare, cp. reitr.)

ÆÐ-dúkr, m. a bed-covering, Dipl. iii. 4.

ÆÐja, u. f., poët. a wife, bed-fellow, Lcx. Poët.

ÆÐ-mál, n. pl. a curtain lecture, Hm. 85.

ÆÐR, jar, m. pl. ir, [Ulf. badi; Hel. bed; A. S. bedd; Engl. bed; Gm. bet], a bed; in Icel. sæng is the common word, bedr poët. and in the N. T. κρεβάτιον is always rendered by sæng (tak sæng a og gakk, Mark ii. 9); bedr is used in alliterative phrases, e. g. bedr blæja, Jb. 28; í bedjum eðr bólstrum, N. G. L. i. 351; deila bedr ok þu, φιλόνητι καὶ ἐνὶ, Od. v. 126; and mostly in the sense of bolster; it nam í bedinum staðar, Ld. 140, Gisl. 114: the sea-shore is poët. eð sævar-bedr (sofa ek né máttá'k sævarbedjum á, Edda 16 (in a verse)); hvil-bedr, a resting bed, Akv. 30; rísa upp við bedr, to lift the body against the pillow, Bkv. 2. 23: the conjugal bed, bjóða á bedr, Ls. 1; sitja á bedr, Gh. 19; ganga á bed e-m, to marry, 14: pl., sofa á þjum, Hm. 96, 100: metaph. a swelling sea, laudr var lagt í bedi c. pl.), Fms. vi. 180 (in a verse); cp. skybólstrar, 'bolster-clouds,' my piles of cloud. COMPDS: bedjar-dýna, u. f. a feather-bed, n. 177. bedjar-ver, n. a bolster case, Dipl. 4.

ÆÐ-vina, u. f. = bedja, Lex. Poët.

Ægla, u. f. [bagr], a bungle; sem b. hjá fögru smíði, hence the name ðegla, Rb. (pref.)

ÆIDA, dd, [cp. A. S. beade; Old Engl. bead-roll, bidding-prayer, bes-man; biða, bad, beidd, Lat. orare, and biða, beid, bedit, Lat. precare.] I. to ask, beg, with the notion of right; almost a law term, to request [but biða, orare]; b. e-n e-s, or b. e-m (for e) e-s; beida gríða Baldri, Edda 36, Gs. verse 2; beida sér bjargiðar báa sína firmu, Grág. i. 113, 275; b. sonar bóta, Nj. 21; b. e-s e-m, Fms. i. 47: with acc., in the law term, b. lögbeiðing, to make a verful request, Grág. (freq.); ef hann vill eigi eið vinna þá er hann er ddr (requested) þá verð hann sekur um þat tólf mörkum, þá er hann ddr (requested) er hann er beðinn (asked), K. þ. K. 146: adding út, e-s út, to request the payment of a right, etc., Gpl. 375; b. til e-s, to request, 656 B. β. reflex., beiddast, to request on one's own behalf; b. laga, 176; fars, Grág. i. 90; gríða, Fms. viii. 423, x. 172, Nj. 10, 76, Eg. 9, Fms. i. 11: in active sense, Land. 293; beiddast út réttar sins, to im as one's right, Gpl. 187: with infin., Grág. i. 489: with 'at' and a pl., Fms. i. 12, Grág. i. 7.

II. [Dan. bede], as a hunting term, bunt, chase; b. björnu, to hunt bears: part. beiddr and beiddr, hunted about, Gisl. 112; hann kvað sveininn hafa verið illa beiddan, Fs. 39, Mirm. 39: the phrase by Kormak, sá er bindr beiddan (i. e. beiddan) n. seems to mean one who pinions the young hunted bear, viz. as if it were sheep or cattle, Edda 96 (in a verse), symbolical of the earl Sigurd, mighty Nimrod, who surpassed the wild deer in strength and swiftness; ldr (= beiddr) fór ek heiman at biða þín Guðrún, Am. 90, seems to mean hunted by love, amore captus: the verse of Kormak,—bands man beida rindi, fascinating, charming woman (?), by whom the poet is made prisoner in love; cp. the poët. compds beiddi-hlökk, beiddi-sif, iðdi-rindr, all epithets of women, Lex. Poët., v. beita.

ÆIÐING and BEIÐNING (Mar. Fr.), f. request, demand, El. II: waiting, as. viii. 151 (dub. reading).

ÆIÐNI, f. a request, demand, Fms. i. 208; pl., 655 iii. 4; holds b., carnal 4, Hom. 17, 25 (Lat. petulantia).

ÆIÐSLA, u. f. a request, demand, Sturl. iii. 231, Sks. 772. BEIÐSLU-

ÆIÐR, m. a person asking, Sks. 776, Anecd. 88.

BEIGR or BEYGR, m. fear; hafa b. af e-m (freq.):—beiguðr, m. an athlete, one who inspires fear (?), Edda.

BEIMAR, m. pl. [etym. uncertain], poët. men, heroes, the followers of king Beini, according to Edda 109; it is more likely that it is a relation to Engl. beam, beaming, and means illustrious, Lex. Poët.

BEIN, n. a word common to the Teut. idioms and peculiar to them; [the Goth. word is not on record, as Luke xxiv. 39 and John xix. 36 are lost in Ulf.; A. S. bân; Engl. bone; Germ. bein; Swed.-Dan. ben (been). Sansk., Gr., Lat., and the Slav. languages agree in a totally different root; Sansk. asthi; Gr. ὀστέον; Lat. os; the Slav. branch all with an initial c, cp. the Lat. costa. Vide Grimm (s. v.), who suggests a relation to Gr. βάλω; but the native Icel. words beinn, rektus, and beina, promovere, are more likely roots; the original sense might thus be erus, Gr. σκέλος, but Lat. os the secondary one]:—a bone. I. spec. the leg from the knee to the foot; freq. in Swed. and Dan., but very rare and nearly obsolete in Icel., where legg is the common word; hosa strengd at beini, Eg. 602, Fms. x. 331; kállar á beinum fram, N. G. L. i. 339. II. gener.=Lat. os, a bone, but originally the bones with marrow (Germ. knochen), as may be inferred from the passages, þá er mergund ef b. er í sundr til mergjar, þat er nigrer er í Grág. ii. 11, i. 442, Fms. viii. 118, Vápn. 21, Fas. i. 66, Vígl. 20; stór bein í andliti, with a strongly-marked, high-boned face, Band. 7, whence stórbeinotr, q. v.; viðbeina, a collar-bone; höfuðbein, pl. bead-bones, the skull around the temples and the forehead; er gamlir grásir skyldu halda mér at höfuðbeinum, Grett. (in a verse); strjúka höfuðbeinin; málbein, os loquendi, a small bone in the head; hence the phrase, láta málbeinið ganga, of one talking incessantly and foolishly: metaph. in phrases, láta ganga með beini, to deal blows to the very marrow, deal severely, Ld. 230; hafa bein í hendi (the Danes say, hafa been í næsen), to have a boned hand, i. e. strength and power, Hrafn. 10, Al. 29.

2. pl. relics, remains (asbes); the phrase, bera bein, to repose, rest, be buried; far þú út til Íslands, þar mun þér auðt verða beinin at bera, Grett. 148, Nj. 201; ok iðrast nú að aprt hvarf að bera b. blá við hrjóstr, Bjarni, 57:—of the relics of saints, Bs. 468, 469; hence beina-færsla, u. f. removal of bones (translatio); in the Catholic age, when churches were removed, the churchyard was dug up and the bones removed also, vide Eb. (in fine), Bjarn. 19, K. þ. K. 40, Eg. (in fine). COMPDS: beina-vatn, n. water in which relics have been washed, Bs. ii. 173. Féi. ix. records many medic. terms; beina-grind, f. a skeleton; bein-áta, u. f. necrosis, caries ossium; bein-brot, n. fractura ossium, Lv. 68, Grág. ii. 17; bein-króm, f. rachitis; bein-kveisa, u. f. osteocopus; bein-sullr, m. sarcostosis; bein-verkir, m. pl. lassitudo febrilis dolorosa universalis, Gisl. 48, cp. Féi. ix. As a poët. circumlocution, the stone is foldar bein, bone of the earth; sævarbein, bone of the sea, Hlt., Edda (Ht.) 19, 23; cp. the Gr. myth of Deucalion.

BEINA, d. I. to stretch out, to put into motion; b. flug, of birds, to stretch the wings for flight, Edda 13, Orku. 28; b. skrið, of a serpent, Stj. 98; b. raust, to lift up the voice, speak loud, Gisl. 57. II. metaph. to promote, forward; b. för (ferð) e-s, to help one forwards, Fms. vi. 63, Grág. i. 343, Bret. 38; b. til með e-m, to lend one help; ek vil b. til með þér bænum mínum, I will assist thee in my prayers, Bs. i. 472; b. e-u til e-s, to contribute to a thing; þessu vil ek b. til brennu þinnar, Fb. i. 355; b. at með e-m, to help, assist one; hlauptu hér út, ok mun ek b. at með þér, Nj. 201; b. at e-u, to lend a hand to, Bjarn. 64; b. fyrir e-m, to entertain, of alms or hospitable treatment (whence beini); b. fyrir fátækum, Post. 656 B.

BEIN-brjóta, braut, to break one's bones, Bård. 167.

BEIN-brot, n. the fracture of bone, v. above.

BEIN-fastr, adj., b. sár, a wound to the bone, Sturl. ii. 222, 655 xi.

BEIN-fiskr, m., v. beitifiskr.

BEIN-gjald, n. a law term, compensation for a lesion of bone, N. G. L. i. 172.

BEIN-gróinn, part. healed (of a bone fracture), Fas. ii. 295.

BEIN-hákkall, m. squalus maximus.

BEIN-hinna, u. f. periosteum.

BEIN-högg, n. a blow injuring the bone, opp. to svöðu sár, Sturl. i. 13.

BEINI, m. help, but exclusively used of hospitable entertainment, kind treatment, hospitality; vinna, veita, e-m beina, Eb. 268; þykir yðr eigi sá b. beztr, at yðr sé borð sett ok gefinn náttverðr ok síðan fari þér at sofa, Eg. 548; ofgörr er beinninn, too much trouble taken, too much attendance, Lv. 38 (Ed. badly 'beinan'); höfuð þar blíðan beina, Fms. ii. 248, iv. 336; mikil er nú um beina þinn, what hospitable treatment! Ísl. ii. 155, Bjarn. 53-55, Fas. i. 79; ganga um beina, to wait upon the guests, in old times (as at present in Icel.) an honourable task; in great banquets the lady or daughter of the house, assisted by servants, did this office; Þórhildr (the daughter) gókk um beina, ok báru þær Bergþóra (the mother) mat á borð, Nj. 50, cp. Lv. l. c., Fms. xi. 52; Hít (the hospitable giantess) gókk um b. Bård. 174; Þiðrandi (the son of the house) gókk um beina, Fms. ii. 194;—but it is added, 'because he was humble and meek,' for it was not regarded as fit work for a man; cp. þá er konur gengu um b. um dagverð, Sturl. i. 132. COMPDS: beinabót, f. accommodation, comfort for guests; þar var mörgu við segit til b., 625. 96; sagði at honum þætti þat mest b. at eldr væri kveykr fyrir honum, Fas. i. 230; þar var jafnan nýtt mjöl haft til beinabótar, Sturl. i. 23. beina-maðr, m. a promoter, H. E. ii. 93. beina-spell, n. spoiling of the comfort of the guests, Bs. i. 313, Sturl. i. 22. beina-purfi, adj. ind. in need of hospitable treatment, Fas. iii. 373.

bein-knúta, u, f. a joint bone, Bs. ii. 82. bein-kross, n. a cross of bone, Magn. 512. bein-lauss, adj. without bone, Fas. i. 251. bein-leiðis, adv. directly, Fas. iii. 444. bein-leiki, a, m. hospitable treatment, Lv. 5, Eg. 577, Fas. i. 77. BEINN, adj., compar. beinni, superl. beinstr or beinastr. I. Gr. ὀρθος, Lat. rectus, opp. to wry or curved, in a straight line; b. rás, a straight course, Sks. 217; beinstr vegr, the straightest, shortest way, Fms. ix. 361, Bs. ii. 132 (very freq.); neut. beint, beinast, used as adv. straight; sem beint á þá, Eg. 386; svá beint, straight on, 742; just, þat kom mér beint (just) í hug, Fms. vi. 213, 369, 371; b. sextigi skipa, precisely sixty ships, xi. 114; nú beint, just now, iv. 327; var hann þá beint í andlát, just breathed his last, vi. 230. 2. metaph. hospitable; Dagstyggur tók við honum forkunnar vel, ok var við hann hinn beinasti, Sturl. ii. 125; varla náðu þeir at stíga af baki, svá var bóndi beinn við þá, Ísl. ii. 155; Björn var allbeinn við hann um kveldit, Fms. ii. 84; var kerling hin beinasta í öllu, Fas. iii. 394; also as epithet of the inn or house, þar er svá beint (such hospitality), at varla þykkja þeir hafa komit í beinna stað, ... in a more hospitable house, i. 77; sváfu af þá nótt, ok vóru þeir í allbeinum stað, Eb. 268. II. [bein, crus], in compds, berbeinn, bare-legged, Hbl. 6: as a cognom. of king Magnus from the dress of the Highlanders assumed by him, Fms. vii; harðbeinn, hard-legged, cognom., Ld.; mjóbeinn, tape-legged, a nickname, Landn.; Kolbeinn, pr. name, black-legged; hvitbeinn, white-legged, pr. name, Landn., etc. etc.

BEINN, m. ebony, Edda (Gl.), v. basinn. bein-serkr, m., medic. 'bone-jack', an abnormal growth, by which the under part of the thorax (the lower ribs) is attached to the spine; as a cognom., Fas. iii. 326; cp. Björn s. v. bein-skeyti, n. a straight-shooting, good shot, Fms. vii. 120, v. 337, viii. 140, v. 1.

bein-skeyttir, adj. straight-shooting, a good shot, Fms. ii. 320. bein-stórr, adj. big-boned, Sturl. i. 8. bein-stökkull, m. a sprinkle (stökkull) of bone, Am. 105. bein-vaxinn, part. straight-grown, tall and slim. bein-veggr, m. a wedge of bone, A. A. 270. bein-verkr, v. bein. bein-víðr, n. and beinviðr, m. ebony, Sks. 90, Bær. 16; Lat. ilex. bein-víðir, m. salix arbuscula, Hjalt. bein-vöxtr, m. bone-growth, bonyness; lítill (mikill) beinvöxtum, of small (big) frame, Bs. i. 328.

beiska and beiskja, u, f. bitterness, barsbness, sourness, Sks. 532 B. beiskaldi, a, m., Lat. acerbus, a nickname, Sturl. beiskleiki, a, and beiskleikr, s, m. bitterness, barsbness, sourness; Marat, þat er b., Stj. 290, Rb. 336 of sulphur; metaph. acrimony, b. í brjosti, Post. 656 C; hjartans b.; bitr b., Stj. 51, 421, Sks. 730 B, Magn. 502, Bs. i. 743.

beiskliga, adv., esp. in the phrase, gráta b., to weep bitterly, Fms. x. 367, Th. 6, the Icel. transl. of Luke xxii. 62; grenja (to howl) b., Fms. x. 256: bitterly, grimly, bera sik b. hér í móti, Stj. 143. beiskligr, adj. bitter.

BEISKI, adj. [Dan. beedsk; Swed. besk; it is always spelt with s (not z) in the MSS., and cannot therefore well be traced to bita, q̄s. beitskr]:—bitter, sour, acrid; salt vatn ok b., Stj. 93; beiskar súrur, bits berbs, 279. Exod. xii. 8; b. drykk; amara, þat er b. at vóru máli, 421, 625, 70, Sks. 539; metaph. bitter, Th. 6: exasperated, grim, angry, gamlamaðr sagði Hallgerði vígit; hon varð beisk við, Nj. 60, Al. 122.

BEISL, n. a bridle, freq. in old vellum MSS. spelt beils, Fs. 128, 62, Fms. x. 86, xi. 256 C; with z, beizl or mod. beizli, Sks. 84, 87 new Ed., N. G. L. ii. 115, Grett. 122, Fms. viii. 52, v. l., Fas. ii. 508; beisl (with s), Karl. 4, Grág. i. 439 (Kb. and Sb.), Stj. 206, Nj. 33, Fms. x. 86, Flov. 26, etc. The word is not to be derived from bita; this may with certainty be inferred from comparison with the other Teut. idioms, and even in the Roman tongues we find r after the first letter: A. S. bridle and bridles; O. H. G. brittill; Dutch bridel; Engl. bridle; these forms seem to point to the Lat. frenum; the Scand. idioms seem to have elided the r; Swed. betsel; Dan. bidsel; Icel. beils and beisl or beizl; many words referring to horse taming and racing arc not genuine Scandinavian, but of foreign extraction; so is söðull, saddle, derived from A. S. sæðol, Lat. sedile. COMPDS: beisl-ál, f. bridle-rein, Flov. beisl-hringr, m. bridle-ring, Fs. 62. beisl-tamr, adj. used to the bridle, Grág. i. 439. beisl-taumar, m. pl. bridle-reins, Fms. xi. 256, Sturl. iii. 314; cp. bitull.

beisla, ad, to bridle, Stj. 206. BEIT, n. I. pasturage, Grág. ii. 224, 263, 286; á beit, grazing:

[in England the rector of a parish is said to have 'the bite' of the churchyard.] COMPDS: beitar-land, n. a pasture land. beitar-maðr, m. owner of a pasture, Grág. ii. 286, Jb. 245. beitar-tollr, m. a toll or fee for pasturage. II. poët. a ship, Lex. Poët.

BEIT, f. a plate of metal mounted on the brim, e. g. of a drinking horn, the carved metal plate on an old-fashioned saddle, Fms. iii. 190; skálir með gyltum beitu, B. K. 84, Bs. ii. 244; cp. Caes. Bell. Gall. 6. 28 (Germani urorum cornua) a labris argento circumcludunt.

beita, u, f. bait, Bs. ii. 179, Hým. 17, Edda 38; now esp. for fish, and used in many compds, e. g. beitu-fjara, u, f. the shore where shell-fish for bait are gathered; beitu-lauss, adj.; beitu-leysi, n., etc.

BEITA, tt, [v. bita, bait, mordere], prop. mordere facere. I. to graze, feed sheep and cattle; the animals in dat., b. svinum, Grág. ii. 231; nautum, Eg. 721: the pasture in acc., b. haga, Grág. ii. 224, 225; engi, 228; aftrét, 302, 329; land, 329, Eg. 721: absol., Grág. ii. 249; with 'i' and dat., b. í skógi, 209; 'i' with acc., b. svinum í land annars manns, 231: b. upp land (acc.), to spoil the pasture by grazing, lay it bare; beittust þá upp allar engjar, Eg. 712: with dat., b. upp (to consume) engjum ok heyjum, Fms. vi. 104. II. to bundle, manage a (cutting) instrument; with dat., b. skutli, a barpoon, Fbr. 144; sverði, a sword, Fms. viii. 96, xi. 270; vápnum, 289.

III. a nautical term, to cruise, prop. to let the ship 'bite' the wind; undu þeir segl sín ok beittu út at Njörvasundum allfagra byr, Orkn. 356; beita þeir í brott frá landinu, Ld. 76; fengu þeir beitt fyrir Skotland, they sailed round, weathered S., Eg. 405; beittu þá sem pverast austr fyrir landit, 161; b. undir veðrit, to tack, Fb. i. 511; b. í haf út, Orkn. 402: metaph., varð jafnan þeirra hlutr betri, er til hans hnigu, en hinna, er frá beittu, who steered away from him, Fms. viii. 47.

IV. a hunting term, to hunt (cp. beiða), the deer in acc., the dogs or hawks in dat.; b. e-n hundum, to set bounds on him; konungur sagði at hann skyldi afklæða, ok b. hundum til bana, Fms. ii. 173, x. 326; beita haukum, to chase with hawks, Fas. i. 175: to chase, svá beittum vér björnuna, Hkr. ii. 369 MS. B, vide bauta; hann ... hafði beitt fimmu trönur, he had caught five cranes, Fagrsk. 77, where Hkr. l. c. has 'veit'; svá beitu vér þjarnuna á mörkinni norðr, sagði hann, O. H. L. 70, cp.

above; verðr Salomon konungur varr at dýr hans eru beitt, Þidr. 231; þeir beita þar mart dýr, hjörtu ok björnir ok hindr, 232: metaph. and reflex., b. e-m, sögðu þeir mundu eigi þeim birni beitast, at deila um mál hans við ofrefsilinn slíka, they said they would not hunt that bear, Ölk. 34: metaph., b. e-n brögðum, véllum, vélröðum ... to hunt one down with tricks or schemes; þykist þér nú allmjök hafa komizt fyrir mið í viti, ok beittan brögðum í þessu, Ísl. ii. 164; véllum, 623; ulögum, Sks. 22; illu, Fas. i. 208: recipr., við höfum opt brögðum heizt, ... schemed against each other, Fms. xi. 263; stundum beittust þau vélröðum, i. 57. β. to bait; the bait in dat., the angle in acc.

V. to yoke to, of horse or cattle for a vehicle, the cattle almost always in acc.; þá vóru yxn fyrir sleða beittir, Eb. 172; bjó sér vagn ok beitti hest, Fms. x. 373, Gkv. 2. 18; ok beittu fyrir tvá sterka yxn, Eb. 176, Grett. 112, Stj. 206: with dat., b. hestum, vagni, to drive; but acc., beittu, Sigurðr, hinn blakka mar, S. saddle thy black steed, Ghv. 18: metaph., b. e-n fyrir e-t, to put one at the head of it, Sks. 710: reflex., beitast fyrir e-t, to lead a cause, to manage it, Ld. 196, Fms. viii. 22, Hkr. ii. 168.

VI. to batter iron or metal into plates, v. beit, f.

beit-fiskr, m. fish to be caught with bait, in the phrase, bita mætti b. ef at borði væri dreginn, Fbr. 180, Gisl. 135 reads beinfisk, no doubt wrongly: the proverb denotes a fine game, one played with slight trouble.

beiti, n. pasturage, Fbr. 65 (1852).

beiti, n., botan. erica vulgaris, heather, ling, commonly beiti-lyng, Hm. 140.

beiti-áss, m., naut. term, a sail-yard, Fms. ii. 230, iii. 26, Hkr. i. 59.

beittill, m. (v. góibeittill), botan. equisetum arvense, mare's tail, Hjalt.

beiting, f. grazing, Grág. ii. 224, Gullþ. 19, Landn. 289, Ld. 148. beitinga-mál, n. a lawsuit about right of grazing or pasturage, Landn. 287, (Ed. betting, badly.)

beiti-teigr, m. a tract of pasturage, Grág. ii. 227, 246.

beit-lostinn, part. mounted with a metal rim, B. K. 84, D. N. i. 537 (of a book).

beit-stokkr, m., cognom., Fms. viii. 327.

beittr, adj. sharp, cutting (= bitr), of cutting instruments, Eg. 746 (freq.)

bekkjast, ð and t, dep. to envy one, in the phrase, b. til við e-n, to seek a quarrel with, Grett. 127; the metaphor from guests (beggars) elbowing one another off the benches, cp. Hm. 31.

bekkju-nautr, m. a bench-fellow, Fms. ii. 48.

bekk-kleði, n. the covering of a bench, Fms. vii. 307, Js. 78.

BEKKR, jar, m. pl. ir, gen. pl. ja, dat. jum, [A. S. bene; Engl. bench, bank; Germ. bank; Dan. bænk; Icel. per assimil. kk; the Span. banco is of Teut. origin]:—a bench, esp. of the long benches in an old hall used instead of chairs; the north side of a hall (that looking towards the sun) was called æðri bekkur, the upper bench (Gl. 337, Ld. 294); the southern side úðri bekkur, the lower (inferior) bench, Nj. 32, Eg. 547, Fms. iv. 439, xi. 70, Glúm. 336, Ld. l. c.; thus sitja á ena dra or úaðra bekk is a standing phrase: the placing of the benches differed in Icel. and Norway, and in each country at various times; as regards the Icel. custom vide Nj. ch. 34, Sturl. i. 20, 21, the banquet at Reykhólar, A.D. 1120, ii. 182, the nuptials at Flugumýri, Lv. ch. 3, Ld. ch. 68, Gunnl. S. ch. 11, Ísl. ii. 250, cp. Nj. 220: (ú báða bekk, on both sides of the hall, Ísl. ii. 348, cp. Gísl. 41 (in a verse), i.e. as to foreign (Norse) customs, vide esp. Fagrsk. ch. 216, cp. Fms. i. 390, xi. (Jónsv. S.) 70, Glúm. ch. 6, Orkn. ch. 70, Sturl. ii. 126; some more minutely under the words skáli, öndvegi, pallr, etc.; breiða, tré bekkí, is to strew or cover the benches in preparing for a feast or wedding; bekkí breiði (imper. pl., MS. breiða), dress the benches! Alvn. i.; bekkí at strá, Em. verse 1; standit upp jótur ok stráit bekkí, þkv. 2; brynjum um bekkí stráð, the benches (wainscots) covered with coats of mail, Gm. 44: in these phrases bekkir seems to be a collective name for the hall, the walls of which were covered with tapestry, the floor with raw, as in the Old Engl. halls. The passage Vtkv. 10—hveim eru bekkir tungum sánir—is dubious (stráðir?); búa bekkí, to dress the benches; Baldrs feðr bekkí búa veit ek at sumblum, Km. 25; breitt var á bekkí, brúðr sat á stól, Ísl. Þjóðs. ii. 466; vide brúðarbekk. COMPS: bekkjar-bót, f. the pride of a bench, a bride, cognom., Landn. bekkjar-gjöf, f. bench-gift, an old custom to offer a gift to the bride whilst she sat on the bride's bench at the wedding festival, Ld. 188, cp. Fms. ii. 33, and in many passages in Fritznier from D. N. it seems to be synonymous with línfé (lín, a veil), as the bride's face on the wedding day was veiled; ganga und línt is a poet. phrase used of the bride on the bridal night, yet Fms. x. 313, línfé eða b. 2. as a law term, cp. Engl. bench; the benches in the lógrétta in Icel. were, however, usually called lv, v. the Grág. 3. the coloured stripes in a piece of stuff.

BEKKR, s, and jar, m. [North. E. beck; Germ. bach; Dan. bæk; Swed. beck], a rivulet, brook. In Icel. the word is only poet. and very rare; a common word even in local names of the 10th century is lækr (Lækjargr. óss, etc.); Sökkva-bekk, Edda, is a mythical and pre-Icel. name; in prose bekk may occur as a Norse idiom, Fms. vi. 164, 335, i. 8, 217, Jb. 268, or in Norse laws as in Gpl. 418. At present it is hardly understood in Icel. and looked upon as a Danism. The phrase—er (breiðr) bekkir á milli, there is a beck between, of two persons separated so as to be out of each other's reach—may be a single exception; perhaps the metaphor is taken from some popular belief like that recorded in the Lay of the Last Minstrel, note to 3. 13, and in Burns' am o' Shanter—a running stream they dare na cross; some hint of like belief in Icel. might be in Ísl. Þjóðs. i. 356. It is now and then used in poetry, as, yfir um Kedrons breiðan bekk, Pass. i. 15. COMPS: bekkjar-kevern, f. a water-mill, B. K. 45 (Norse). bekkjar-rás, the bed of a beck, Stj. MS. col. 138.

BEKKJAR-BÓT, m. (cp. bekkjarbót), the pride of the bench, epithet of Bragi, Ls. 15.

BEKK-SÖGN, f., poet. the people seated in a hall, Gísl. (in a verse).

BEKK-PILI, n. the wainscoted walls of a hall, Em. 1.

BEKKRI, a, m. a ram, Lex. Poët.; in prose in the form, brjóta kekkrann, to break the ram's neck, Gret. 149: now also bekkra, að, to eat, Dan. bræge (rare).

BEKG-BERA, u, f. a 'wallet-bearer,' a beggar, wretch, in swearing; vándar lögberur, wretches! Nj. 142, v. 1, or a monster, v. the following word.

BEKG-BORINN, part. a monster child, without any trace of face, N.G.L. 339.

BEGLJA, ð, [Hel. belgan, irā inflari], to inflate, puff out, Fms. iii. 201, Íal. 200; b. augun, to goggle, Bárð. 171: to drink as a cow.

BEGLGR, jar, m. pl. ir, [Lat. foliis; Ulf. balgs = áwoks; A. S. biġg; Dutch balg; Engl. belly]:—the skin, taken off whole (of a quadruped; mr is the skin of a bird, hams that of a snake), naufs-belgr, katt-belgr, fers-belgr, melrakka-belgr, hafir-belgr, Grág. i. 500, 501, Fas. ii. 516 (of bear), Edda 73 (otter): they were used as bags, in which to carry flour, jölbelgr, butter (smjörbelgr), liquids (vínbelgr), curds (skyrbelgr), herbs (jafnabelgr), or the like, (bulgos Galli sacculus scorteos appellat, Festus); í laupum eða belgum, Gpl. 492, cp. Gret. 107, and the only taunt in Fms. xi. 157—veríð get ek hafa núkkura þú er þaðan munu hafa boríð rauðfótara belginn (i.e. more of scars and wounds) svá sem þú hefir borit, því at mér þykir sjá bezit til fallinn at geyma afeitimjöl, the rebuke of a lady to her sweetheart on his having died out of battle with whole skin fit to keep flour in it, cp. also Nj. i. 2. 2. bellows (smíðju-belgr), Edda 70, Þidr. 91. 3. the curved part of a letter of the alphabet, Skálda 177.

BEGLI, metaph., letibelgr, a lazy fellow, Fél. 12. 53: belgr also denotes a withered, dry old man (with a skin like parchment), with the notion of wisdom, cp. the proverb, opt ofr skörpum belg skilin orð koma, and, a little above, opt er gott er gamlir kveða, Hm. 135; böll vantú bróðir er þú þann belg leystir, þú or þeim (þurrum?) belg böll ráð koma, . . . deep schemes often come out an old skin, Hdm. 27: the proverb, hafa skal þú óf refsbelg komi, take good advice, even if coming from an old fox-skin! Gullþ. ch. 18. People say in Icel. lesa, tala, læra í belg, to read, talk, learn in a bag, to read or talk on foolishly, or to learn by rote; cp. the tale about the orðabelgr, Ísl. Þjóðs. ii. 479; cp. Asbjörnson, Norse Tales, New Coll. Chr. 1856. 2. botan. gluma, Hjaltr.

BELI, a, m. belly, a cognom., Fas. i. 347: botan. legumen.

BELI, n. dat. bellowing; með bel ok óskri, Fas. iii. 413.

BELJA, að, to bellow, Vápn. 21, Hkr. i. 319, Eb. 320.

BELJAN, f. bellowing, lowing, Gret. 112, Bær. 19.

BELLA, ball, a defect. strong verb [cp. Lat. pello, Gr. πάλλω], to hit, hurt, tell upon; with dat., ekki nú ófœgum bella, i. e. one not fated to die is proof against all shots, Ísl. ii. 305; tólf berserkjum, þeim er þeir ætluðu, at ekki mundi b., Fas. iii. 140, 149; ok ætluðu sér ekki b. mundu, Ver. 10; ball þér nú, Bófi (did it strike thee?) . . . Ball víst, sagði hann, ok ball hvergi meir en þú hugðir, Eb. 240; þykir nú sem þeim mundi ekki b., Sturl. iii. 237.

BELLA, d, [A. S. bealdjan; Hel. beldjan], to deal with one in a certain way, esp. of unfair dealing; with dat., hvar vit menn slíku bellt við konungmann, who did ever see a king thus dealt with, Eg. 415; hvat skal ek gora við biskup, er slíku hefir bellt, . . . who has dared to deal thus, Orkn. 252; hver . . . mun hafa þessu bellt, at brjóta guð várn Bal, Stj. 301. Judges vi. 99; but more freq. in poetry, bella svikum, to deal in treason, Hallfréð; lygi, þkv. 10; bragði, Am. 55; b. gláumii, gleði, to be in high spirits, Gkv. 2. 29; cp. mod. bralla, að, brellur, f. pl. tricks.

BELLI-BRAGÐ, n. knaveish dealing, a trick, Gret. 91, Þorst. hv. 46.

BELLINN (mod. brellinn), adj. trickish, Gret. 22 new Ed.

BELL-VÍSI, f. trickishness, Finn. 294.

BELTI, n. [Lat. balteus; Engl. belt], a belt, esp. a belt of metal (silver) or embroidered, esp. belonging to a woman, Ld. 284, Sturl. iii. 189, Nj. 2, 24: belonging to a man, with a knife fastened to it, Fs. 101, Fms. iv. 27; kníf ok belti ok vóru þat góðir gripir, Gísl. 54, Fms. ix. 25, Fb. ii. 8, Nj. 91. COMPS: belta-dráttir, m. a game, two boxers tied together with one girdle, also in use in Sweden: hence a close struggle, Fms. viii. 181. beltis-púss, m. a belt-pocket, Gullþ. 47, Sturl. l. c., Art. 70. beltis-staðr, m. the belt-waist, Gísl. 71, Fms. iv. 56. In poetry the sea is called the belt of islands or of the earth. 2. Belti, Mare Balticum, is derived from the Lithuanian baltas = albus. 3. astron. a zone, himinbelti, hitabelti, kuldabelti.

BEN, jar, f. pl. jar (neut., N.G.L. i. 387; stór ben, acc. pl. n., Gísl. (in a verse), v. bani above. I. a wound; as a law term, esp. a mortal wound (cp. bani); thus defined, skal sór lýsa, en ben ef at bana verður, Grág. ii. 18, 29, 70; benjar á hinum dauða manni, 28; svá skal nefna vátta at sírum sem at benjum, 30; and in the comps, benja-lýsing, f. a sort of coroner's inquest upon a slain man, Grág. ii. 29; benja-váttir, m. a sort of coroner's jury, defined in Grág. ii. 28—þeir eigu at bera, hve margar benjar eru, they have to give a verdict how many mortal wounds there are; en búakviðr (the jury) hverir sannir eru at; benja-vætti, n. the verdict of a benjaváttir, Grág. id. II. yet commonly 'ben' means a small bleeding wound; þeirri blóðgri ben, er Otkell veitti mér áverka, Nj. 87, Sd. 139, Fs. 144, in the last passage, however, of a mortal wound. It is now medic. the wound produced by letting blood. In old poetry it is used in a great many comps.

BEND, f. = ben, N.G.L. i. 159, 166.

BENDA, u, f. a bundle, Gpl. 492: now metaph. entanglement. 2. a bond, tie, v. höfuðbenda: naut. term, a stay.

BENDA, d, later t, [Goth. bandvian], to beckon, give a sign with the hands or eyes: with dat., hann bendi þeim at fylgja sér, Hom. 113, K. þ. K. 37, Orkn. 426: metaph. to forebode, betoken, Hom. 137, Skálda 170, Stj. 101: with acc. of the thing, Akv. 8.

BENDA, d, mod. t, [band], Lat. curvare, to bend; b. sverð um kné sér, Fms. x. 213; benda boga, to bend a bow, Grág. ii. 21, Fas. ii. 88, 330; b. upp, Nj. 107; benda hlífar, Rm. 39; prob. = Lat. flectere, nectere, to join, as in mod. usage, b. tunnu, to hoop a tub: recipr., bendast á um e-t, to strive, contend about, Fms. viii. 391, v. l.: metaph. to give away, Al. 44.

BENDI, n. a cord, Fms. iii. 209.

BENDILL, m., dimin. a small cord, string, Edda 231. 2. a sort of seed, Edda (Gl.)

BENDING, f., Lat. nutus, a sign, token, Rb. 348, Fms. i. 10; boð ok b., Stj. 36: foreboding, betokening, Fms. vii. 195, Ld. 260.

BENJA, að, to wound mortally, Fm. 25.

BEN-LAUSS, adj. free from wounds, N.G.L. i. 357.

BEN-RÖGN, n. an ἀπ. λεγ., Nj. 107 (cp. the verse, p. 118), bloody rain, a prodigy, foreboding, slaughter, plague, or like events, cp. Eb. ch. 51, Dl. verse 1.

BENZI, n. a bow in a bent state; taka boga af benzlum, to unbend a bow, Str. 44.

BER, n., gen. pl. berja, dat. jum, [Goth. basī; A. S. beria; Germ. beere; cp. also the A. S. basu]:—a berry, almost always in pl., Grág. ii. 347; lesa ber, to gather berries, Jb. 310, Bs. i. 135:—distinguished, vinber, the vine-berry, grape; esp. of Icel. sorts, bláber, the blueberry, bilberry, whortleberry; aðalbláber, Vaccinium myrtillus; krækiber, empetrum; einiber, juniperus; hrútaber, rubus saxatilis; jarðarber, strawberry; sortuber or mulningr, arbutus, Hjaltr. COMPS: berja-hrat, n. the stone in a berry. berja-mór, m. baccetum; fara á b., to go a-black- berrying. berja-vín, n. berry-wine (cp. Engl. gooseberry-, elderberry-wine), Bs. i. 135.

BERA, u. f. I. [björn], a sbe-bear, Lat. ursa; the primitive root 'ber' remains only in this word (cp. berserkr and berfall), björn (q. v.) being the masc. in use, Landn. 176, Fas. i. 367, Vkv. 9: in many Icel. local names, Beru-fjörðr, -vík, of Polar bears; fem. names, Bera, Hallbera, etc., Landn.

II. a shield, poet., the proverb, baugr er á beru sæmstr, to a shield fits best a baugr (q. v.), Lex. Poët., Edda (Gl.); hence names of poems Beru-drápa, Eg.

bera, að, [berr, nudus], to make bare, Lat. nudare; hon beraði líkam sinn, Bret. 22: impers., berar hálsinn (acc.), the neck became bare, Bs. i. 624.

BERA, bar, báru, borit, pres. berr,—poët. forms with the suffixed negative; 3rd pers. sing. pres. indic. berrat, Hm. 10; 3rd pers. sing. pret. barat, Vellekla; 1st pers. sing. barkak, Eb. 62 (in a verse); barkat ek, Hs. 8; 2nd pers. sing. bartattu; 3rd pers. pl. bárut, etc., v. Lex. Poët. [Gr. φέρω; Lat. ferre; Ulf. bairan; A.S. beran; Germ. gebären; Engl. bear; Swed. bära; Dan. bære].

A. Lat. ferre, portare: I. prop. with a sense of motion, to bear, carry, by means of the body, of animals, of vehicles, etc., with acc., Egil tók mjóðdrekkuna eina mikla, ok bar undir hendi sér, Eg. 237; bar hann heim hris, Rm. 9; konungur lét bera inn kistur tvær, báru tveir menn hverja, Eg. 310; bera farm af skipi, to unload a ship, Ld. 32; bera (farm) á skip, to load a ship, Nj. 182; tóku alla ösku ok báru á (annum) út, 623, 36; ok bar þat (carried it) i kerald, 43, K. Þ. K. 92; b. mat á borð, i stofu, to put the meat on table, in the oven; b. mat af borði, to take it off table, Eb. 36, 266, Nj. 75, Fms. ix. 219, etc. 2.

Lat. gestare, ferre, denoting to wear clothes, to carry weapons; skikkja dýr er konungur hafði borit, Eg. 318; b. kórónu, to wear the crown, Fms. x. 16; atgeir, Nj. 119; vápn, 209: metaph., b. ægishjálmu, to inspire fear and awe; b. merki, to carry the flag in a battle, Nj. 274, Orkn. 28, 30, 38, Fms. v. 64, vi. 413; bera fram merki, to advance, move in a battle, vi. 406.

3. b. e-t á hesti (áburð), to carry on horseback; Auðunn bar mat á hesti, Grett. 107; ok bar hris á hesti, 76 new Ed.; þeir báru á sjau hestum, 98 new Ed.

II. without a sense of motion: 1. to give birth to; [the root of barn, bairn; byrja, incipere; burðr, partus; and burr, filius: cp. Lat. parere; also Gr. φέρω, Lat. ferre, of child-bearing.] In Icel. prose, old as well as mod., 'ala' and 'æða' are used of women; but 'bera,' of cows and sheep; hence sauburðr, casting of lambs, kýrburðr; a cow is suembær, síðbær, Jólábær, calves early, late, at Yule time, etc.; var ekki ván at hon (the cow) mundi b. fyr en várit, Bs. i. 193, 194; kýr hafði borit kálf, Bjarn. 32; bar hværtveggji saubörn sinn burð, Stj. 178: the participle borinn is used of men in a great many compounds in a general sense, aptborinn, árborinn, endrborinn, frjálmsborinn, goðborinn, höldborinn, hersborinn, konungsborinn, ódalborinn, samborinn, sundrborinn, velborinn, úborinn, þrælborinn, etc.; also out of compounds, mun ek eigi upp gefa þann söma, sem ek em til borinn, . . . entitled to by inheritance, Ld. 102; hann hafði blindr verit borinn, born blind, Nj. 152, Hdl. 34, 42, Vsp. 2: esp. borinn e-m, born of one, Rm. 39, Hdl. 12, 23, 27, Hdm. 2, Gs. 9, Vpm. 25, Stor. 16, Vkv. 15; borinn frá e-m, Hdl. 24: the other tenses are in theol. prose used of Christ, hans blezada son er virðist at láta berast hingað í heim af sinni blezardi móður, Fms. i. 281; otherwise only in poetry, eina dóttur (acc.) berr álfriðull (viz. the sun, regarded as the mother), Vpm. 47; hann Gjalp um bar, hann Greip um bar . . . , Hdl. 36: borit (sup.), Hkv. 1. 1.

β. of trees, flowers; b. ávöxt, blóm . . . , to bear fruit, flower . . . (freq.); bar aldinviðrinn tvennan blóma, Fms. ix. 265; cp. the phrase, bera sitt barr, v. barr.

2. denoting to load, with acc. of the person and dat. of the thing: a. in prop. sense; hann hafði borit sik mjök vápnum, he had loaded himself with arms, i. e. wore heavy armour, Sturl. iii. 250. β. but mostly in a metaph. sense; b. e-n ofraflí, ofrmagni, ofríði, ofríki, magni, to bear one down, to overcome, oppress one, by odds or superior force, Grág. i. 101, ii. 195, Nj. 80, Hkr. ii. 371, Gpl. 474, Stj. 512, Fms. iii. 175 (in the last passage a dat. pers. badly); b. e-n ráðum, to overrule one, Nj. 198, Ld. 296; b. e-n málum, to bear him down (wrongfully) in a lawsuit, Nj. 151; b. e-n bjóri, to make drunk, Vkv. 26; medic., borinn verkjum, sótt, Bjarn. 68, Og. 5; bólví, Gg. 2: borne down, feeling heavy pains; þess er borin ván, no hope, all hope is gone, Ld. 250; borinn sök, charged with a cause, Fms. v. 324, H. E. i. 561; bráðum borinn, to be taken by surprise, Fms. iv. 111; b. fé, gull á e-n, to bring one a fee, gold, i. e. to bribe one, Nj. 62; borinn baugum, bribed, Alm. 5; always in a bad sense, cp. the law phrase, b. fé í dóm, to bribe a court, Grág., Nj. 240.

3. to bear, support, sustain, Lat. sustinere, tolerare, ferre: a. properly, of a ship, horse, vehicle, to bear, be capable of bearing; þeir hlóðu bæði skipin sem borð báru, all that they could carry, Fb. 302;—a ship 'berr' (carries) such and such a weight; but 'tekr' (takes) denotes a measure of fluids. β.

metaph. to sustain, support; dreif þannig svá mikill mannfjöldi at landit fékk eigi borit, Hkr. i. 56; but metaph. to bear up against, endure, support grief, sorrow, etc., sýndist öllum at Guð hefði nær ætlað hvat hann mundi b. mega, Bs. i. 139; biðr hann friðar ok þykist ekki mega b. reiði hans, Fms. iii. 80: the phrase, b. harm sinn í hljóði, to suffer silently;

b. svívirðing, x. 333: absol., þótti honum mikit víg Kjartans, en þó bar hann drengilega, he bore it manfully, Ld. 226; er þat úvizka, at b. eigi slíkt, not to bear or put up with, Glúm. 327; b. harm, to grieve, Fms. ii. 425: in the phrases, b. sik, b. af sér, berask, berask vel (illa, litt), to bear oneself, to bear up against misfortune; Guðrúnu þótti mikit fráfall þorkels, en þó bar hon skörluga af sér, she bore her bravely up, Ld. 326—328; lézt hafa spurt at ekkjan bæri vel af sér harmana, Eb. 88; berask af; hversu bersk Auðr af um bróðurdaudann? (how does she bear it?); hún bersk af litt (she is much borne down) ok þykir mikit, Gísl. 24; mun oss vandara gört en öðrum at vér berim oss vel (Lat. fortiter ferre), Nj. 197; engi maðr hefði þar jamvel borit sik, none had borne himself so boldly, Sturl. iii. 132; b. sik vel upp, to bear well up against, bear a stout heart, Hrafn. 17; b. sik beiskliga (sorely), Stj. 143; b. sik litt, to be downcast, Fms. ii. 61; b. sik at göra e-t, to do one's best, try a thing.

III. in law terms or modes of procedure: 1. bera járn, the ordeal of bearing hot iron in the hand, cp. járnburðr, skírsla. This custom was introduced into Scandinavia together with Christianity from Germany and England, and superseded the old heathen ordeals 'hólmganga,' and 'ganga undir jarðarmen,' v. this word. In Norway, during the civil wars, it was esp. used in proof of paternity of the various pretenders to the crown, Fms. vii. 164, 200, ix. Hásk. S. ch. 14, 41—45, viii. (Sverr. S.) ch. 159, xi. (Jómsv. S.) ch. 11, Grett. ch. 41, cp. N. G. L. i. 145, 389. Trial by ordeal was abolished in Norway A. D. 1247. In Icel. it is very rarely mentioned, vide however Lv. ch. 23 (paternity), twice or thrice in the Sturl. i. 56, 65, 147, and Grág. i. 341, 361; it seems to have been very seldom used there, (the passage in Grett. S. l. c. refers to Norway.)

2. bera út (hence útburðr, q. v.), to expose children; on this heathen custom, vide Grimm R. A. In heathen Icel., as in other parts of heathen Scandinavia, it was a lawful act, but seldom exercised; the chief passages on record are, Gunnl. S. ch. 3 (ok þat var þá síðvandi nokkurr, er land var allt alheiðit, at þeir menn er félitir voru, en stóð ómegð mjök til handa létu út bera börn sín, ok þótti þó illa gört ávalt), Fs. Vd. ch. 37, Harð. S. ch. 8, Rd. ch. 7, Landn. v. ch. 6, Finn. ch. 2, Þorst. Uxaf. ch. 4, Hervar. S. ch. 4, Fas. i. 547 (a romance); cp. Jómsv. S. ch. 1. On the introduction of Christianity into Icel. A. D. 1000, it was resolved that, in regard to eating of horse-flesh and exposure of children, the old laws should remain in force, Íb. ch. 9; as Grimm remarks, the exposure must take place immediately after birth, before the child had tasted food of any kind whatever, and before it was besprinkled with water (ausa vatni) or shewn to the father, who had to fix its name; exposure, after any of these acts, was murder, cp. the story of Liaburga told by Grimm R. A.); v. also a Latin essay at the end of the Gunnl. S. (Ed. 1775). The Christian Jus Eccl. put an end to this heathen barbarism by stating at its very beginning, ala skal barn hvert er borit verðr, i. e. all children, if not of monstrous shape, shall be brought up, N. G. L. i. 339, 363. β. b. út (now more usual, hefja út, Am. 100), to carry out for burial; vera erfðr ok út borinn, Odd. 20; var hann heygðr, ok út borinn at fornum síð, Fb. i. 123; b. á bál, to place (the body and treasures) upon the pile, the mode of burying in the old heathen time, Fas. i. 487 (in a verse); var hon borin á bálit ok slegit í eldi, Edda 38.

B. Various and metaph. cases. I. denoting motion: 1. 'bera' is in the Grág. the standing law term for delivery of a verdict by a jury (búar), either 'bera' absol. or adding kvið (verdict); bera á e-n, or b. kvið á e-n, to give a verdict against, declare guilty; bera af e-m, or b. af e-m viðinn, to give a verdict for; or generally, bera, or b. um e-t, to give a verdict in a case; bera, or b. vitni, vætti, also simply means to testify, to witness, Nj. 111, cp. kviðburðr (delivery of verdict), vitnisburðr (bearing witness), Grág. ii. 28; eigi eigi búar (jurors) enn at b. um þat hvat lög eru á landi hér, the jurors have not to give verdict in (to decide) what is law in the country, cp. the Engl. maxim, that jurors have only to decide the question of evidence, not of law, Grág. (Kb.) ch. 85; eigi eru búar skildir at b. um hvatvetna; um engi mál eigu þeir at skilja, þau er erlendis (abroad) hafa gört, id.; the form in delivering the verdict—höfum vér (the jurors), orðit á eitt sáttir, berum á kviðburðinn, berum hann sannan at sökinni, Nj. 238, Grág. i. 49, 22, 138, etc.; í annat sinn báru þeir á Flosa kviðinn, id.; b. annattveggja af eðr á b. undan, to discharge, Nj. 135; b. kvið í hag (for), Grág. i. 55; b. lýsingar vætti, Nj. 87; b. vitni ok vætti, 28, 43, 44; b. ljúgvitni, to bear false witness, Grág. i. 28; b. orð, to bear witness to a speech, 43; bera frændsemi sundr, to prove that they are not relations, N. G. L. i. 147; reflex., berask ór vætti, to prove that oneself is wrongly summoned to bear witness or to give a verdict, 44: berask in a pass. sense, to be proved by evidence, ef vanefni b. þess manns er á hönd var lýst, Grág. i. 257; nema jafumæli berisk, 229; þótt þér berisk þat faderni er þú segir, Fms. vii. 164; hann kvadst ætla, at honum mundi berask, that he would be able to get evidence for, Fs. 46. β. gener. and not as a law term; b. á, b. á hendr, to charge; b. e-n undan, to discharge, Fs. 95; eigi erum vér þessa valdir er þú berr á oss, Nj. 238, Ld. 206, Fms. iv. 380, xi. 251, Th. 78; b. e-m á brýnn, to throw in one's face, to accuse, Grett. 51; b. af sér, to deny; eigi mun ek af mér b., at . . . (non diffitebor), Nj. 271;

-m gott vitni, to give one a good . . . , II; b. e-m vel (illa) söguna, bear favourable (unfavourable) witness of one, 271. 2. to bear word of mouth, report, tell, Lat. referre; either absol. or adding þju, orð, orðsending, eyriudi, boð, sögu, njóns, frétt . . . , or by adding 'ep., b. fram, frá, upp, fyrir; b. kveðju, to bring a greeting, compliment, Eg. 127; b. erindi (sin) fyrir e-n, to plead one's case before one, or tell one's errand, 472, 473; b. njóns, to apprise, Nj. 131; b. fram, to utter (a speech), talaði jungheerra Magnús hit fyrsta erindi (M. made first speech in public), ok fanst mönnum mikit um hversu úbernsliga in var borit, Fms. x. 53; (in mod. usage, b. fram denotes gramm. pronunciation, hence 'framburðr,' pronunciation); mun ek þat nú fram b., I shall now tell, produce it, Ld. 256, Eg. 37; b. frá, to attest, relate with basis; má þat frá b., Dropl. 21; b. upp, to produce, mention, tell, of such lygi sé upp borin fyrir hann, though such a lie be told him, Eg. 1. þær (viz. charges) urðu engar upp bornar (produced) við Rút, Nj. þerr Sigtryggur þegar ur erindi sin (cp. Germ. offenbaren), 271, Ld. 1. b. upp gátu, to give (propound) a riddle, Stj. 411, Fas. i. 464; b. er, to plead as an excuse; b. saman ráð sin, or the like, to consult, 191; eyddist þat ráð, er þeir báru saman, which they had designed, t. 656 A. ii; b. til skripta, to confess (eccl.), of auricular confession, N. 124, 655 xx. III. in a metaphorical or circumlocutory sense, and without any sense of motion, to keep, hold, bear, of a title; b. a, to bear a name, esp. as honour or distinction; tignar nafn, haulds nafn, jarls nafn, lends manns nafn, konungs nafn, bónda nafn, Fms. i. 17, 278, xi. 44, Gpl. 106: in a more metaph. sense, denoting endowments, luck, disposition, or the like, b. (ekki) gæfu, hamingju, auðu til to enjoy (enjoy not) good or bad luck, etc.; at Þórólfr mundi eigi endis gæfu til b. um vináttu við Harald, Eg. 75, 112, 473, Fms. iv. 164, 18; úhamingju, 219; b. vit, skyn, kunnáttu á (yfir) e-t, to bring wit, wisdom, etc., to bear upon a thing, xi. 438, Band. 7; hence vel (illa) borinn, well (ill) endowed with wit, Eg. 51; vel hyggjandi borinn, endowed with reason, Grág. ii; b. hug, traust, áráði, þor, til e-s, to be courage, confidence. . . to do a thing, Gullþ. 47, Fms. ix. 220, Band. b. áhyggju, önn fyrir, to care, be concerned about, Fms. x. 318; b. elsku til e-s, to bear affection, love to one; b. hatr, to hate: b. svört ú, to have dark eyes, poet., Korm. (in a verse); b. snart hjarta, Hom. vant er þat af sjá hvar hvergi þerr hjarta sitt, where he keeps his heart, Orkn. 474; b. gott hjarta, to bear a proud heart, Lex. Poët., etc.; b. skyndi at um e-t, to make speed with a thing, Lat. festinare, etc. viii. 57. 2. with some sense of motion, to bear off or away, carry off, gain, in such phrases as, b. sigr af e-m, af e-u, to carry off the victory from or in . . . ; hann hafði borit sigr af tveim orrustum, er þegar hafá verit, he had borne off the victory in two battles, Fms. xi. 10; bera banaorð af e-m, to slay one in a fight, to be the victor; þórr bera banaorð af Miðgardsormi, Edda 42, Fms. x. 400: it seems properly mean, to bear off the fame of having killed a man; verðat svá rík þu, at Regin skyli mitt banaorð bera, Fm. 39; b. herra, lægra hlut, to bear off the bigger or the lower lot, i. e. to get the best or the worst lot, or the metaphor is taken from a sortilege, Fms. ii. 268, i. 59, vi. 1; b. eifa, herra skjöld, to carry the biggest shield, to get the victory, 94, Lex. Poët.; b. hátt (lágt) höfuðit, to bear the head high (low), i. e. to be in high or low spirits, Nj. 91; but also, b. halann bratt (lágt), to cock up or let fall the tail (metaph. from cattle), to be in an exultant low mood: sundry phrases, as, b. bein, to rest the bones, be buried; þú til Íslands, þar mun þér auðið verða beinin at b., Grett. 91 A.; en þygg ek at þú munir hér b. beinin í Norðrálfunni, Orkn. 142; b. fyrir þó, to throw overboard, metaph. to oppress; verð Þórhalli nú fyrir þó borinn, Tb. was defied, set at naught, Fær. 234; b. brjóst fyrir e-m, to be the breast-shield, protection of one, Fms. vii. 263; also, b. hönd fyrir höfuð sér, metaph. to put one's hand before one's head, i. e. to defend oneself; b. ægishljátt yfir e-m, to keep one in awe and submission, Fm. 16, E. A. I. 2. III. connected with prepp., b. af, and (rarely) yfir (cp. burðr, yfirburðr), to excel, surpass; eigi sá hvártveggja féit er af öðrum er, who gets the best of it, Nj. 15; en þó þar Bollf af, B. surpassed all rest, Ld. 330; þat mannvál þar eigi minnr af öðrum mönnum um leik, af ok frækneik, en Ormrinn Langi af öðrum skipum, Fms. ii. 22; at hinn útlendi skal yfir b. (outdo) þann sem Enskir kalla meistara, 431; b. til, to apply, try if it fits; en er þeir báru til (viz. shoes to the hoof of a horse), þá var sem hæði hestinum, ix. 55; bera til hvern til at öðrum at portinu, Thom. 141; b. e-t við, to try it on (hence burðr, experiment, effort): b. um, to wind round, as a cable round a pole or the like, Nj. 115; þá þar hann þá fésti um sik, made it fast round his body, Fms. ix. 219; 'b. e-t undir e-n' is to consult one, ellipt., undir dóm e-s; 'b. e-t fyrir' is to feign, use as excuse: b. á, i, to bear, anoit, b. vatni í augu sér, Rb. 354; b. tjóru í höfuð sér, Nj. 181, m. 70, 73, cp. áburðr; b. gull, silfr, á, to ornament with gold or silver, 114, Finnb. 258: is now also used = to dung, b. á völl; b. vápn á e-n, to attack one with sharp weapons, Eg. 583, Fms. xi. 334: b. eld at, to set fire to, Nj. 122; b. fjótur (bónd) at e-m, to put fetters (bonds) on one, Fms. 72, Hm. 150: metaph. reflex., bönd berask at e-m, a law term, the defence bears against one; b. af sér, to parry off; Gyrðr berr af sér lagit,

G. carries the thrust off. Fms. x. 421; cp. A. II. 3. B.

IV. reflex., berask mikit á (cp. áburðr), to bear oneself proudly, or b. lítið á, to bear oneself humbly; hann var hinn kátasti ok barst á mikit, Fms. ii. 68, viii. 219, Eb. 258; b. lítið á, Clem. 35: láta af berask, to die; Öttar vil skipa til um fjárfar sitt úðr hann láti af b., Fms. ii. 12: berask fyrir, to abide in a place as an asylum, seek shelter; hér munu vit láta fyrir b., Fas. iii. 471; berask e-t fyrir, to design a thing, be busy about, bask hann þat fyrir at sjá aldregi konur, Greg. 53; at njónsna um hvat hann bærst fyrir, to inquire into what he was about, Fms. iv. 184, Vigl. 19. β. recipr. in the phrase, berask banaspjót eptir, to seek for one another's life, Glúm. 354: b. vápn á, of a mutual attack with sharp weapons, Fms. viii. 53. γ. pass., sár berask á e-n, of one in the heat of battle beginning to get wounds and give way, Nj. :—berask við, to be prevented, not to do; ok nú lét Almáttugr Guð við berast kirkjubrunnam, stopped, prevented the burning of the church, Fm. v. 144; en mér þætti gott ef við bærst, svá at hón kæmi eigi til þín, vi. 210, vii. 219; ok var þá búið at haun mundi þegar láta hamarinn skjanna honum, en hann lét þat við berask, be betbought himself and did not, Edda 35; því at mönnum þótti sem þannig mundi helzt úhæfa við berask, that mischief would thus be best prevented, Sturl. ii. 6, iii. 80.

C. IMPERS.:—with a sort of passive sense, both in a loc. and temp. sense, and gener. denotes an involuntary, passive motion, happening suddenly or by chance:

I. with acc. it bears or carries one to a place, i. e. one happens to come; the proverb, alla (acc.) berr at sama brunni, all come to the same well (end), Lat. omnes una manet nox; þar hann þá öfn gegnt Özuri, he happened to come in his course just opposite to Ö., Lat. delatus est, Dropl. 25: esp. of ships or sailors; nú berr svá til (happens) herra, at vér komum eigi fram ferðinni, berr oss (acc.) til Íslands eðr annara landa, it bore us to I., i. e. if we drive or drift thither, Fms. iv. 176; þá (acc. pl.) bar suðr í haf, they drifted southwards, Nj. 124. β. as a cricketing term, in the phrase, berr (þar) út knöttinn, the ball rolls out, Gisl. 26, cp. p. 110 where it is transit.; berr Gísli ok út knöttinn, vide Vigl. ch. II, Grett. ch. 17, Vd. ch. 37, Hallfr. S. ch. 2. γ. Skarphedin (acc.) bar nú at þeim, Sk. came suddenly upon them, Nj. 144; þar at Hróaldi þegar allan skjöldinn, the shield was dashed against H.'s body, 198; ok skyldu sæta honum, ef hann (acc.) bæri þar at, if he should perchance come, shew himself there, Orkn. 406; e-n berr yfir, it bears one, i. e. one is borne onwards, as a bird flying, a man riding; þóttist vita, at hann (acc.) mundi fljóttara yfir bera ef hann ríði en gengi, that he would get on more fleetly riding than walking, Hrafn. 7; hann (acc.) bar skjótt yfir, he passed quickly, of a flying meteor, Nj. 194; e-n berr undan, escapes.

2. also with acc. followed by prepp. við, saman, jafnframt, hjá, of bodies coinciding or covering one another: loc., er jafnframt ber jadrana tungls ok sólar, if the orb of the moon and sun cover each other, Rb. 34; þat kann vera stundum, at tunglit (acc.) berr jafnt á millum vár ok sólar (i. e. in a moon eclipse), 108; ber nokkut jaðar (acc.) þess hjá sólar jaðri, 34; Gunnarr sér at rauðan kyrtil (acc.) bar við glugginn, G. sees that a red kirtle passed before the window, Nj. 114; þar fyrir utan þat skip vápnaburð (acc.) heidngja (gen. pl.), the missiles of the heathens passed over the ship without hurting them, flew too high, Fms. vii. 232; hvergi bar skugga (acc.) á, nowhere a shadow, all bright, Nj. 118; þangat sem helzt mátti nokkut yfir þá skugga bera af skóginum, where they were shadowed (hidden) by the trees, Fms. x. 239; e-t berr fram (hátt), a body is prominent, Lat. eminet; Ólafur konungur stóð í lyptingunni, þar hann (acc.) hátt mjök, king O. stood out conspicuously, ix. 308; b. yfir, þótti mjök bera hljóð (acc.) þar yfir er Ólafur sat, the sound was heard over there where O. sat, Sturl. i. 21; b. á milli, something comes between; leiti (acc.) bar á milli, a bill hid the prospect, Nj. 263; metaph., e-m berr e-t á milli, they come to dissent, 13, v. 1; b. fyrir augu (hence fyrirburðr, vision), of a vision or the like; mart (acc.) berr nú fyrir augu mér, ekk sé . . . , many things come now before my eyes, 104; hann mundi allt þat er fyrir hann hafði borit, i. e. all the dream, 195; eina nótt berr fyrir hann í svefni mikla sýn, Fms. i. 137, Rd. 290; veiði (acc.) berr í hendr e-m (a metaphor from hunting), sport falls to one's lot; hér bæri veiði í hendr nú, here would be a game, Nj. 252; e-t berr undan (a metaphor from fishing, hunting term), when one misses one's opportunity; vel væri þá . . . at þá veiði (acc.) bæri eigi undan, that this game should not go amiss, 69; en ef þetta (acc.) berr undan, if this breaks down, 63; hon bað hann þá drepa einhvörn manna lams, heldr en allt (acc.) bæri undan, rather than that all should go amiss, Eg. 258; absol., þyki mér illa, ef undan berr, if I miss it, Nj. 155; viljum vér ekki at undan beri at . . . , we will by no means miss it . . . , Fms. viii. 309, v. 1. The passage Bs. i. 416 (en fjárhlutur sá er átt hafði Ari, þar undan Guðmundi) is hardly correct, fjárhlutur þann would run better, cp. bera undan, as a law term, below.

II. adding prepp.; b. við, at, til, at hendi, at móti, til handa . . . , to befall, happen, Lat. accidere, occurrere, with dat. of the person, (v. atburðr, viðburðr, tilburðr); engi hlut skyldi þann at b., no such thing should happen as . . . , Fms. xi. 70; svá þar at einn vetr, it befell, x. 201; þat hefir nú vist at hendi borit, er . . . , Nj. 174; þó þetta vandræði (acc.) hafu nú borit oss (dat.) at hendi, Eg. 7; b. til handa, id., Sks. 327; þar honum svá til, so it befell him, Fms. xi.

425; at honum bæri engan váðaligan hlut til á veginum, that nothing dangerous should befall him on the way, Stj. 212; bæri þat þá svá við, at hann ryfi, if then perchance might happen, that . . ., 102; þat bar við at Högni kom, 169, 172, 82; raun (acc.) berr á, it is proved by the fact, event, Fms. ix. 474, x. 185.

2. temp., e-t berr á, it happens to fall on . . .; ef þing (acc.) ber á hina helgu vikunni, if the parliament falls on the holy week (Whitsun), Grág. i. 106; ef Crucis messu (acc.) berr á Drottins dag, Rb. 44; berr hana (viz. Petrus messu, June 29) aldreif svá optarr á öldinni, 78; þat er nú berr oss næst, what has occurred of late, Sturl. iii. 182; b. í móti, to happen exactly at a time; þetta (acc.) bar í móti at þenna sama dag andaðist Brandr biskup, Bs. i. 468; b. saman, id.; þar þat saman, at þá var Gunnarr at segja brennusöguna, just when G. was about telling the story, Nj. 269.

3. metaph. of agreement or separation; en þat (acc.) þykir mjök saman b. ok þessi frásögn, Fms. x. 276; with dat., þar öllum sögum vel saman, all the records agreed well together, Nj. 100, v.1.; berr nú enn í sundr með þeim, Bjarna ok þorkatli at sinni, B. and Th. missed each other, Vápn. 25.

4. denoting cause; e-t (acc.) berr til . . ., causes a thing; ætluðu þat þá allir, at þat mundi til bera, that that was the reason, Nj. 75; at þat beri til skilnaðar okkars, that this will make us to part (divorce), 261; konungur spurði, hvat til bæri úgleði hans, what was the cause of his grief? Fms. vi. 355; þat berr til tunglhlaus, Rb. 32.

β. meiri ván at brátt beri þat (acc.) til bóta, at herviligasta steypi hans ríki, i. e. there will soon come help (revenge), Fms. x. 264; fjórir eru þeir hlutir er menn (acc.) berr í ætt á landi hér, there are four cases under which people may be adopted, Grág. i. 361.

γ. e-t berr undir e-n, falls to a person's lot; hon á arf at taka þegar er undir hana berr, in her turn, 179; mikla erð (acc.) bar undir hana, Mar. (Fr.); berr yfir, of surpassing, Bs. ii. 121, 158; b. frá, id. (fráburðr); herðimikill svá at þat (acc.) bar frá því sem aðrir menn, Eg. 305; er sagt, at þat bæri frá hve vel þeir mæltu, it was extraordinary how well they did speak, Jb. 11; þar þat mest frá hversu illa hann var limaðr, but above all, how . . ., Ó. H. 74.

5. with adverbial nouns in a dat. form; e-t berr bráðum, happens of a sudden; berr þetta (acc.) nú allbráðum, Fms. xi. 139; cp. vera bráðum borinn, to be taken by surprise (above); berr stórum, sternum, it matters a great deal; ætla ek starrum b. hin lagabrotin (acc.), they are much more important, matter more, vii. 305; var þat góðr kostr, svá at stórum bar, xi. 50; hefir oss orðit svá mikil vanhyggja, at stóru berr, an enormous blunder, Gísl. 51; svá langa leið, at stóru bar, Fas. i. 116; þat berr stórum, hversu mér þóknast vel þeirra athæfi, it amounts to a great deal, my liking their service, i. e. I do greatly like, Fms. ii. 37; eigi berr þat allsmám hversu vel mér líkar, in no small degree do I like, x. 296.

β. with dat., it is fitting, becoming; svá mikit sem laudeiganda (dat.) berr til at hafa eptir lögum, what he is legally entitled to, Dipl. iii. 10; berr til handa, it falls to one's lot, v. above, Grág. i. 93.

III. answering to Lat. oportet, absolutely or with an adverb, vel, illa, with infinit.; e-n berr, it be seems, becomes one; berr þat ekki nú stendr þvíilkum höfudfæðr, at falsa, Stj. 132; berr yðr (dat.) vel, herra, at sjá sannindi á þessu máli, Fms. ix. 326; sagði, at þat bar eigi Kristnum mönnum, at serra Guð, x. 22; þú síðu at mér beri vel, Sks. 353 B: used absol., berr vel, illa, it is beseeming, proper, fit, unbeseeming, unfit, improper; at hæfi þat er vel berr fyrir konungs auglitu, 282; þat þykir ok eigi illa bera, at maðr hafi svart skinn til hosna, i. e. it suits pretty well, 301: in case of a pers. pron. in acc. or dat. being added, the sentence becomes personal in order to avoid doubling the impers. sentence, e. g. e-m berr skylda (not skyldu) til, one is bound by duty; veit ek eigi hver skylda (nom.) yðr (acc.) ber til þess at láta jarl einn ráða, Fms. i. 52: also leaving the dat. out, skylda berr til at vera forsjámaðr með honum, vii. 280; eigi berr hér til úviska míu, it is not that I am not knowing, Nj. 135.

IV. when the reflex. inflexion is added to the verb, the noun loses its impers. character and is turned from acc. into nom., e. g. þar (þat?) mun hugrinn míum mest hafa fyrir borizt, this is what I suspected, fancied, Lv. 34; cp. hugarburðr, fancy, and e-t berr fyrir e-n (above, C. l. 2); hefir þetta (nom.) vel í móti borizt, a happy coincidence, Nj. 104; ef svá harðliga kann til at bærsk, if the misfortunes do happen, Gpl. 55; barsk sí úhamingja (nom.) til á Íslandi, that mischief happened (no doubt the passage is thus to be emended), Bs. i. 78, but þar þá úhamingju . . .; þat (nom.) barsk at, happened, Fms. x. 253; fundir várir (nom.) hafa at borizt nokkurum sínum, vii. 256; þat barsk at á einhverju sunni, Eg. 154; bærist at um síðir at allr þingheimrinn berðist, 765; cp. berast við, berask fyrir above (B. V.); berast, absol., means to be shaken, knocked about; var þess ván, at fylkingar mundu berast í hergöngunni, that they would be brought into some confusion, Fms. v. 74; Hrólfur gekk at ramliga, ok barst Atli (was shaken, gave away) fyrir orku sakir, þar til er hann féll, Fas. iii. 253; barst Jökull allr fyrir orku sakir (of two wrestling), Ísl. ii. 467, Fms. iii. 189; vide B. IV.

D. In mod. usage the strong bera—bar is also used in impersonal phrases, denoting to let a thing be seen, shewn, but almost always with a negative preceding, e. g. ekki bar (ber) á því, it could (can) not be seen; að á engu bæri, líta ekki á bera (to keep tight), etc. All these phrases are no doubt alterations from the weak verb bera, að, nudare, and never occur in old writers; we have not met with any instance previous to the Reformation; the use is certainly of late date, and affords a rare instance of weak verbs turning into strong; the reverse is more freq. the case.

ber-baktr, n. adj., ríða b., to ride bare-back, i. e. without saddle Glúm. 362.

ber-beinn, adj. bare-legged, Fms. vii. 63, Harbl. 5.

ber-brynjaðr, part. without coat of mail, Sd. 146, Bs. i. 541.

ber-dreymr, now berdreyminn, adj. [draumr], having 'bare' (i. clear, true) dreams as to the future, v. Ísl. þjóðs. ii. 91, Ísl. ii. 91, Fl. iii. 447, Gísl. 41.

berétt, n. = berfé, N. G. L. i. 70, 225.

ber-fé, n. a female animal, opp. to gradfé, Grág. i. 426, Jb. 431.

ber-fjall, n.

1. [ber = björn and fjall, fell = pellis], a bear-skin Kvk. 10 (2).

2. [ber, nudus, and fjall, fell = mons], a bare fell or rocky bill, (now freq.)

ber-fætt, adj. bare-footed, bare-legged, Bs. i. 83, Hkr. ii. 259, Fms. vii. 63, x. 331. COMPD: berfættu-bræðr, m. pl. a minorite, bare footed friar, Ann. 1265.

BERG, n. [Ulf. bairga = ἡ ὄρεινή; A. S. biorb; Germ. berg; Dan bjerg; Swed. berg; cp. bjarg and borg, in Swed. and Dan. berg means a mountain gener., = Icel. fjall; in Icel. berg is a special name] → rock, elevated rocky ground, as in lögborg; vaðberg, a rock on the shore where the angler stands; móberg, a clay soil, saxum terrestri-arenaceum fuscum, Eggert Itin.; þursberg is a sort of whetstone, cp. Edda 58; and heinberg, bone-stone, id.; silfberg, silver-ore, Stj.; á bergi, on a rock or rocky platform.

β. a rock, boulder; varð b. eitt undir höfði honum Flov. 31. γ. a precipice = björg; framan í bergi, Fms. vii. 81, Eg 581, Hkr. i. 151; meitilberg.

berg-búi, a, m. a berg-dweller, i. e. a giant, Landn. 271, Barð. 164.

berg-danir, m. pl. the Danes, (inhabitants) of rocks, giants, Hým. 17.

berg-hamarr, m. a rocky projection, Hom. 117.

berg-hlið, f. the side or slope of a b., Fms. viii. 57, = Icel. fjallshlið.

berg-högg, n. a quarry, þjal. 8; cp. berhögg.

bergi-bíti, a, m. a bit to taste, Sturl. ii. 132.

bergiligr, adj. inviting to taste, Sks. 528.

berginge (bergning, Eluc. 20), f. tasting, taste, Stj. 292, Hom. 53.

Magn. 486, Eluc. 54.

bergisamlig, adj. = bergiligr, Sks. 528.

BERGJAÐ, ð, [A. S. beorgan; Lat. gustare], to taste; with dat., þórgunga vilði engum mat b., Th. would taste no food, Eb. 262; b. övi, Ls. 9; þeir bergðu engu nema sújú, Fms. viii. 52, 303, Stj. 268, Andr. 70; b. Guðs holdi ok blóði, in the holy supper, 655 xviii; b. dauða., to taste death, Post. 656 C, Fb. i. 323; fú margir sjúkir menn heilsu, er b., thou drink, Fms. i. 232, iii. 12, Hom. 82; b. á e-n, Stj. 39, Fas. i. 246; b. af, Sks. 106, Blas. 43; cp. bjarga, bjargast við e-t, e. g. Eb. 244, Eg. 204, Clem. 26, Fs. 174.

berg-mál, n. an echo, also called dvergmál.

berg-mála, að, to echo.

berg-rifa, n, f. a fissure in a rock, Symb. 56.

berg-rísi, a, m. [cp. berga-troll in the Norse tales], a bill-giant, Hkr. i. 229; hrimþursar ok bergrisar, Edda 10, 15; hon (Gerðr) var b. ættar, 22; mikit fólk hrimþursa ok bergrisar, 38, Gs. 9, 23.

berg-skor, f. pl. ar, [cp. Scot. scour], a chasm in a rocky bill, Hkv. 2.

20, Fms. vii. 202, Stj. 450. I Sam. xiii. 6.

berg-snös, f. [from snös = a projection, Gullþ. 50, ch. 4, not nös, nasus], a rocky projection, Eg. 389, Gullþ. 8, l. c., Fas. i. 156 spelt berg-nös, Sæm. 131.

berg-tollr, m. a rock-toll, paid for catching fowl thereon, Sturl. iii. 225.

berg-vörðr, m. a watch, look-out for rocks and cliffs; halda b., Jb. 407.

ber-hendr, adj. bare-handed.

ber-höfði, berhöfða or berhöfðaðr, adj. bare-headed, Stat. 299.

ber-högg, n. [ber, nudus, or rather = berghögg, metaph. for a quarry], in the phrase, ganga á (i) b. við e-n, metaph. to make open fight, deal rudely with, Fms. xi. 248, Ld. 142; Jóann gekk á b. at banna, St. Jóhn interdicted openly, 625, 93, in all those passages 'á': in mod. usage 'á', so Greg. 80, Sturl. ii. 61, þorst. Síðu-H. 7.

berill, m. a barrel for fluids (for. word), Stj. 367.

BERJA, barði, pres. ber; sup. bart, barzt, O. H. L. 24, Bret. 48, 64, Fms. viii. 214, 215, xi. 16, and later barit, barizt; part. fem. baríð, Am. 84; barðr, fem. börð, Sturl. iii. 154; mod. barinn; either form may now be used: [Lat. ferio. The word is not found in Ulf., and seems to be unknown in Germ. and Engl.; it is lost in mod. Dan.]

I. act. to strike, beat, smite, with acc., Fms. vii. 227, Eg. 582: as a punishment, b. húð af e-m, to scourge one, N. G. L. i. 85: to thrash to death, 341; b. grjóti, to stone, of witches, Am. 84, Ld. 152, Eb. 98, Gísl. 34: to castigate, b. til batnaðar, Hkr. ii. 178; cp. the sayings, einginn verðr óbarinn biskup, and vera barðr til bækr, B. i. 410; b. steinir í andlit e-m, to throw stones in one's face, 623. 31; b. e-u saman vápnum, sverðum, skjöldum, knefum, to dash weapons . . . against each other, Fms. vii. 204; b. gull, to beat gold, x. 206; sem barit gull, beaten gold, Ísl. ii. 206; b. korn, to thresh corn, Magn. 520: ph. to chide, scold, b. e-n illyrdum, ávitum, Nj. 64, Hom. 35:—with 'at,' to knock, rap, strike, b. á hurð, á dyrr (or at dyrum), to rap, knock at a door, Th. 6; b. sér á brjóst, to smite on one's breast, in stance, Fms. v. 122; b. at hurðu, Sturl. iii. 153; b. til e-s, á e-m, to one a thrashing, Dropl. 23; er þú á konum barðir, Hbl. 38; hjartað í undir síðinni, to beat, of the heart, Str. 6 (but hjartsláttir, throbbing heart), in mod. use reflex., hjartað bcrst, hjartað barðist í brjósti, Pass. 2. 12: in the phrase, b. í brestina, to cry off a bargain, the phor is taken from banuering the fissure of a ring or the like, in r to hide the fault, Nj. 32.

II. reflex., berjask, [cp. Fr. se e; Germ. sich schlagen], to fight, Lat. pugnare, Boll. 360, Rd. 296, x. 86, Ísl. ii. 267, Fas. i. 255, lb. 11: of a duel, ok þat með, at vit nk hér á þinginu, Eg. 351; b. við e-n, to fight with, Fms. xi. 86; e-t, Lat. oppugnare, á borgina, i. 103, vii. 93, Stj. (freq.), seems to Latinism; b. til e-s, to fight for a thing; at b. til Englands, to le England, Ísl. ii. 241, v. 1.; b. orrostu, Lat. pugnari pugnare, vii. 79: of the fighting of eagles, Ísl. ii. 195. III. impers., dat., it dasbes against; skýja grjóti barði í augu þeim, the hailstones ed in their eyes, Jd. 31; honum barði við ráfit kirkjunnar, be dashed t the roof, Bs. i. 804; þeim barði saman, they dasbed against each, id.

BERKJA, t, to bark, bluster; with dat., b. yfir e-u, Al. 24; er oss hefir í sumar berkt, Hkr. iii. 386; hefir þú stórt berkt við oss, Fms. xi. cp. barki, digrbarkliga.]

-kykvendi, n. a she-beast, Fms. xi. 94.
-kyrtilladr, adj. without cloak, wearing the kyrtill only, Fms. ii. 29.
-leggjaðr, and berlegg, adj. bare-legged, Fms. vii. 63, x. 415.
-ligr, adj. and berliga, adv. I. [ber, nudus], open, mani- Hom. 134; adv. openly, Fms. iv. 234, ix. 447, Ísl. ii. 317; compar., i. 46. II. [ber, bacca], fruitful, Stj. 15.

-lings-áss, m. [from Swed. bårling, a pole, bar], a pole; b. þrettán langr, Fms. iii. 227, ἀπ. λέγ., l. c., [cp. berling, in Engl. carpentry, ross rafter of a roof.]

-málugr and bermáll, adj. bare-spoken, outspoken, Fms. x. 420.

-mæligi, f. bare-speech, freedom of speech, Fms. vi. 178.

-mæli, n. pl. = bermæli, Fms. ix. 333, Hkr. iii. 77.

-mæltr, part. = bermálugr, Fms. xi. 53, Hkr. iii. 97.

-nská, u, f. [bani], childbood, childishness; proverb, bráðgedr er kan, Fms. vi. 220; vera í b., Nj. 30, Fms. vii. 199, Sks. 596.

ns: bernsku-bragð, n. a boyish trick, Grett. 92, Sturl. iii. 124.

nsku-maðr, m. a youth, childish person, Hkr. ii. 156.

nskligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), childish, Fms. v. 245, Sks. 553, 153, i. 434.

nskr, adj. [Ulf. barnisks], childish, Fms. i. 22, vii. 237, ix. 249, i. 50.

-orðr, adj. = bermáll.

RR, adj. [A.S. bār; Engl. bare; Germ. bar; Slav. bos; Litt.

; the Goth word is not on record, but was prob. sounded basus; radical form is b-s, not b-r, and it is consequently different from Lat.

o (in aperio), or bera, ferre, v. Grimm s. v.]:—Lat. nudus, bare, l; albrynjaðr svá at ekki var bert nema augum, Fms. vii. 45; beran astað, Nj. 9; undir berum himni, under the bare sky, in open air, lio, Karl. 544; á beru svæði, in open field; ber svæð, naked swords,

i. 266; ríða berum hestum = berbakt, Dl. 11. 2. metaph.

l, unprotected, Grág. ii. 8; berr er hvær á baki nema sér bróður eigi (overb), Nj. 265. β. uncovered, open, clear, manifest; segja með in ordum, in clear words, Stj. 447; verða berr at e-u, to be convicted bing, 656 A, 25; berar jartegnir, Fms. ii. 221; göran sik beran at to shew openly, mostly in a bad sense, xi. 55; vóru berastir í því dir, the Tb. were most undisguised in it, Hkr. ii. 57; göra bert, ake known, lay bare, Fms. i. 32, vii. 195.

-serkr, s, m., pl. ir: [the etymology of this word has been much ested; some—upon the authority of Snorri, hans menn fóru 'bryn-sir', Hkr. i. 11—derive it from 'berr' (bare) and 'serkr' [cp. sark, for sbir]; but this etymology is inadmissible, because 'serkr' is a l. not an adj.: others derive it from 'berr' (Germ. bür = ursus), it is greatly to be preferred, for in olden ages athletes and champions to wear hides of bears, wolves, and reindeer (as skins of lions in outh), hence the names Bjálfi, Bjarnhéðinn, Úlfhéðinn, (héðinn, )—'pellibus aut parvis rhenonum tegimentis utuntur', Caes. Bell.

vi. 22: even the old poets understood the name so, as may be in the poem of Hornklofi (beginning of 10th century), a dialogue een a Valkyrja and a raven, where the Valkyrja says, at berserkja vil ek þik spyrja, to which the raven replies, Úlfhéðnar heita, they alled Wolfscoats, cp. the Vd. ch. 9; þeir berserkr er Úlfhéðnar vóru ðir, þeir höfðu vargstakka (coats of wild beasts) fyrir brynjur, Fs.

—a 'bear-sark,' 'bear-coat,' i. e. a wild warrior or champion of the en age; twelve berserkers are mentioned as the chief followers of al kings of antiquity, e. g. of the Dan. king Rolf Krake, Edda 82;

ed. king, Gautr. S. Fas. iii. 36; king Adils, Hrólf. Kr. S. ch. 16 sqq.;

Harald Hárfagri, Eg. ch. 9, Grett. ch. 2, Vd. l. c. (Hornklofi, v. above); the twelve sons of Arngrim, Hverar. S. ch. 3-5, Hdl. 22, 23; the two berserkers sent as a present by king Eric at Upsala to earl Hakon of Norway, and by him presented to an Icel. nobleman, Eb. ch. 25. In battle the berserkers were subject to fits of frenzy, called berserksgangr (furor bersericus, cp. the phrase, ganga berserksgang), when they howled like wild beasts, foamed at the mouth and gnawed the iron rim of their shields; during these fits they were, according to popular belief, proof against steel and fire, and made great havoc in the ranks of the enemy; but when the fever abated they were weak and tame. A graphical description of the 'furor bersericus' is found in the Sagas, Yngl. S. ch. 6, Hverar. S. l. c., Eg. ch. 27, 67, Grett. ch. 42, Eb. ch. 25, Nj. ch. 104, Kristni S. ch. 2, 8 (Vd. ch. 46); cp. also a passage in the poem of Hornklofi—grenjuðu berserkr, | guð var þeim ú sinnum, | emjauðu Úlfhéðnar | ok isarn gnúðu—which lines recall to the mind Roman descriptions of the Cimbric war-cry. In the Icel. Jus Eccles. the berserksgangr, as connected with the heathen age, is liable to the lesser outlawry, K. p. K. 78; it is mentioned as a sort of possession in Vd. ch. 37, and as healed by a vow to God. In the Dropl. S. Major (in MS.) it is medically described as a disease (v. the whole extract in the essay 'De furore Bersericico,' Kristni S. old Ed. in calce); but this Saga is modern, probably of the first part of the 17th century. The description of these champions has a rather mythical character. A somewhat different sort of berserker is also recorded in Norway as existing in gangs of professional bullies, roaming about from house to house, challenging husbandmen to 'holmgangr' (duel), extorting ransom (leysa sik af hólnu), and, in case of victory, carrying off wives, sisters, or daughters; but in most cases the damsel is happily rescued by some travelling Icelander, who fights and kills the berserker. The most curious passages are Glúm. ch. 4, 6, Gisl. ch. 1 (cp. Sir Edm. Head's and Mr. Dasent's remarks in the prefaces), Grett. ch. 21, 42, Eg. ch. 67, Flóam. S. ch. 15, 17; according to Grett. ch. 21, these banditti were made outlaws by earl Eric, A. D. 1012. It is worth noticing that no berserker is described as a native of Icel.; the historians are anxious to state that those who appeared in Icel. (Nj., Eb., Kr. S. l. c.) were born Norse (or Swedes), and they were looked upon with fear and execration. That men of the heathen age were taken with fits of the 'furor athleticus' is recorded in the case of Thorir in the Vd., the old Kveldulf in Eg., and proved by the fact that the law set a penalty upon it. Berserkr now and then occurs as a nickname, Glúm. 378. The author of the Yngl. S. attributes the berserksgangr to Odin and his followers, but this is a sheer misinterpretation, or perhaps the whole passage is a rude paraphrase of Hm. 149 sqq. In the old Hbl. 37 berserkr and giant are used synonymously. The berserkers are the representatives of mere brute force, and it therefore sounds almost blasphemous, when the Norse Barl. S. speaks of Guðs berserkr (a 'bear-coat' or champion of God), (Jesus Kristr gleymdi eigi hölmöggu síns berserks), 54, 197. With the introduction of Christianity this championship disappeared altogether.

bersi, a, m. a bear, Grett. 101 A, Fas. ii. 517, Sd. 165, Finn. 246: the phrase, at taka sér bersa-leyfi, to take bear's leave, i. e. to ask nobody (cp. 'to take French leave'): freq. as a nom. pr., and hence in Icel. local names.

ber-skjaldaðr, adj. bare of shield, i. e. without a shield, Nj. 97.

ber-svæði, n. an open field.

ber-syndugr, adj. (theol.), a sinner, publicans and 'sinners', Greg. 33, Post. 656, H. E. i. 585.

ber-sögli, f. [bersögull, adj.], a free, frank speech; hence bersögils-visor, f. pl. name of a poem by Sigvatr, Fms. vi. 38 sq.

ber-yrði, n. pl. plain-speaking, Fms. vii. 161.

BETR, adv., compar. to vel; and BEZT, elder form bazt, superl., better, best: I. compar., er betr er, luckily, happily, Fms. ix. 409,

Ld. 22; b. þætti mér, I would rather, Nj. 17; vinnu betr, Lat. spe melius, Fms. ii. 101; b. úgört, better not to do, Ld. 59; hafa b., to get the better of it, Fb. i. 174: adding gen., þess b., er . . ., so much the better

. . ., Sks. 426: denoting quantity, more, leggit fram b. hit mikla skipit, advance it farther, better on, Fms. ii. 307; engi maðr tók b. en í öxl honum,

v. 67; b. en tuttugu menn, ix. 339; þrjú hundrð ok þrítig ok sex b., to boot, Rb. 88; ekki máttu sumir menn b. en fá stadir, i. e. they could do no more. were just able to keep up against him, Fms. xi. 136; ef hann orkar b., if he can do more, Grág. (Kb.) ch. 128; nú má hann b., but if he is able to do more . . ., id. 2. superl., bazt búið, best equipped, Fas. ii. 523; with a gen., bezt allra manna, Eg. 34; manna bazt, Nj. 147; kvenna bezt harð, Ld. 151; bazt at báðir væri, cp.

Germ. am besten, am liebsten, soonest, Eg. 256.

betra, að, to better, improve, Ld. 106; bctrask, to become better, Fms.

iii. 160: impers., ef eigi betradist um, Rd. 277; þeir sögðu, at konungi betradist mjök, that the king was much better, Fms. ix. 215.

betran, f. a bettering, improving, esp. in theol., Fms. vi. 217, Stj. 158:

alliter., bót ok betran.

betr-feðrungr, m. a man better than his father, Fms. vi. 286.

BETRI, betra, compar., and BEZTR, baztr, batztr, the superl.

to 'góðr,' which serves as the posit. —in the compar. the primitive a becomes e; thus old poets of the beginning of the 11th century, as Sighvat, rhyme betri—setrs; the old forn batri however occurs, 655 xx. 4: in the superl. the a was kept till the end of the 12th century. Sighvat rhymes, last—bazi; old vellum MSS. now and then still spell with a (bazi, baztr ...), Glúm. 371, Heið. S. Ísl. ii. 324, Grág. ii. 165, 252, Fms. xi. 214, 220, Hm. 13, 26, 47, Hkv. Hjörv. 39, Lb. 12, Pd. 11, Ýt. 27, 625, 42, Fms. x. (Ágrip) 418; baztr (baztra), gen. pl., 398, 401 (but betþt, 385); bazta (acc.), Eluc. 3: sing. fem. and neut. pl. bözt, with a changed vowel, bözt heill, n. pl., Skv. 2. 19; böztu (böþtu), pl., Fms. x. 401, 403, 415: it is spelt with z, tz (in Ágrip even þt), or zz, in mod. spelling often s, as in mod. Engl., and pronounced at present as an s, [Goth. batizo, superl. batisto; A. S. batra and betsta, besta; Engl. better and best; Germ. besser and beste]:—better, best; meira ok betra, Nj. 45, 193; betri, Dipl. v. 18; beztr kostur, Nj. 1, Eg. 25; beztr bóndi, Ld. 22. β. kind, friendly towards one; with dat., er honum hafði baztr verit, 625. 42; er mér hefir beztr verit, Fms. vii. 274: er þér fyrir því beztr ..., it is best for thee, thou doest best to accept it, Nj. 225; því at þinn hlutr má eigi verða betri en góðr, 256; betra byr ok bliðara, 625. 4: with gen., meðan beztr er sumars, during the best part of the summer, Sks. 29, etc. etc., v. góðr.

BEYGA, ð, [baugr], to bend, bow, Fms. ii. 108, iii. 210, x. 174: metaph., b. e-m krök, to make it crooked for one, the metaphor taken from a game or from wrestling, Ld. 40.

BEYGLA, u, f. to dint, of plate, metal, etc., Sturl. ii. 221.

BEYKI, u, beech-wood; BEYKIR, m. a cooper, v. buðkr.

BEYLA, u, f. a bump, Lat. gibbus, swelling, Björn, cp. Snót 98.

BEYSTA and BEYSTA, t, [old Dan. börste; Swed. bösta], to braise, beat; b. korn, to thresh, Fms. xi. 272; the alliterated phrases, berja ok b., to flog, Hom. 119; b. ok bita, Grág. ii. 118; b. bakföllum, to pull hard, beat the waves with the oars, Am. 35.

BEYSTI, u, [Swed. böste], a ham, gammon of bacon, Þidr. 222.

BEYTI, m., v. göbeytill, equisetum hiemale, a cognom., Landn.

BEZTR, BAZTR, BEZT, BAZT, v. betri and betr.

BIBLIA, and old form BIBLA, u, f. the Bible, Am. (Hb.) 10.

BIÐ, u. pl. [A. S. bid], a biding, waiting, delay; skömm bið, Al. 118: patience, mikit megu biðin (a proverb), 119, 623. 60; vera góðr í biðum, to be patient and forbearing, Bs. i. 141; liggja á bið (biðum ?), to bide the events, Fms. x. 407: in mod. usage fem. sing., lífið manns hart fram hleypr, hefir það enga bið, Hallgr.

BIÐA, að, to bide a bit, Stj. 298, Bs. ii. 123: with gen. (= biða), ok biðun þeirra, Fagrsk. 138, Nj. (Lat.) 110 note k, 135 note o.

BIÐAN, f. = bið, H. E. ii. 80.

BIÐ-ANGR and BIÐVANGR, m. a biding, delay, Fms. ix. 259, v. 1.

BIÐILL, m., dat. biðli, pl. biðlar, a wooer, sutor, Fms. ii. 8.

BIÐJA, það, báðu, beðit; pres. bið; imperat. bið and biðdu; poet. forms with suff. neg. 1st pers. pres. biðkat ek, Gísl. (in a verse): [Ulfr. bidian = αἰτεῖν, ἑρωτᾶν; A. S. biddian; Old Engl. bid, bede (in bedes-man), and 'to bid one's beads'; Germ. bitten, beten; cp. Lat. petere]:—to beg; with gen. of the thing, dat. of the person; or in old writers with infin. without the particle 'at'; or 'at' with a subj.: a. with infin., Jarl það þá drepa hann, ... það hann gefa Hallfræði gríð, Fms. iii. 25; hann það alla biða, Nj. 196; það þá heila hittast, Eg. 22, Fms. vii. 351; Skapti það Gizur (acc.) sitja, Nj. 226; Flösi það alla menn koma, Nj. 196, Hdl. 2; inn bið þú hann ganga, Skm. 16, Ls. 16; b. e-n vera heilan, valere jubere, Gm. 3, Hkv. 1, 2: still so in the Ór. 65 (bið ek Ólaf bjarga mér) of the end of the 14th century; in mod. usage prefers to add the 'at,' yet Hallgrímur uses both, e. g. hann það Pétr með hryggri lund, hjá sér vaka um cina stund, Pass. 4. 6; but, Guð bið eg nú að gefa mér náð, id. β. with 'at' and a subj., v. viljum vér þik, at þú sér, Nj. 226, Jb. 17: without 'at,' Pass. 6. 13, 3. 12. γ. with gen., b. matar, Grág. i. 261; er þér þess ekki biðjanda, Eg. 423; b. liðs, liðveizlu, forúneytis, brautargengis, Nj. 226, 223, Ísl. ii. 322; bænar, Fms. iv. 12; b. e-m lífs, gríða, góðs, bóls, to beg for the life ... of one, Háv. 39, Fms. iii. 25, Edda 38, Hm. 127; b. fyrir e-m, to beg, pray for one, Nj. 55; b. e-n til e-s, to request one to do a thing, Grág. i. 450, Fms. v. 34: spec. to court (a lady), propose, with gen. as object of the thing and person here coincide, b. konu, b. sér konu, Eg. 5, Nj. 2, Rm. 37. 2. to pray (to God), absol., hann það á þessa lund, Blas. 41; b. til Guðs, Sks. 308, Fms. iii. 48; b. bæn sinni (dat.), to pray one's prayer, 655 xvi, Hom. 114; b. bæn sína, id., Blas. 50. β. reflex., biðjask fyrir, to say one's prayers, Nj. 196; er svá þaðst fyrir at krossi, Landn. 45, 623. 34, Orkn. 51; biðjast undan, to excuse oneself, beg pardon, Fms. vii. 351: the reflex. may resume the infin. sign 'at,' and even an active may do so, if used as a substitute for a reflex., e. g. bið þórolfr at fara norð á Hálagaland, Tb. asked for furlough to go to H., Eg. 35.

BIÐ-LUND and BIÐLYNDI, Hom. 26. transl. of Lat. longanimitas, f. forbearance, patience, Hom. 97, Stj. 52, Pass. 8. 13, 15, 15. 13. COMPS: BIÐLUNDAR-GÓÐR, adj. forbearing, Fb. ii. 261. BIÐLUNDAR-MÁL, n. a thing that can bide, as to which there is no hurry, Grett. 150.

BIÐ-STUND, f. (biðstóll, Bs. i. 292 is prob. a false reading), biding a bit, Bs. i. 292, 704, Fms. viii. 151, Thom. 104.

BIFAST, ð, mod. að, dep. [Gr. φεβ-, φόβος, cp. Lat. paveo, febr, A. S. beofan; Germ. beben], to shake, to tremble: 1. in old writers on dep., bifóisk, Þkv. 13, Hkv. 23, Þd. 17; bifadóist, Gísl. 60, Grett. 11 to fear, en þó bifast aldri hjartað, Al. 80. 2. in mod. usage al act. to move, of something very heavy, with dat., e. g. eg gat ek bifað því, I could not move it.

BIFR, m., in the compd úbifr, m. dislike, in the phrase, e-m er ú. e-n, one feels a dislike to. COMPD: BIFR-STAUÐ, n. a cup, Eb. (in verse).

BIFRA, u, f. [A. S. beber, befer], a beaver (?), a cognom., Fms. bif-röst, f., the poet. mythical name of the rainbow, Edda 8, (tremula), but Gm. 44 and Fm. 15 read bilröst.

BIFU-KOLLA (BYÐUK-, Safn i. 95), u, f. leontodon taraxacum, Hjalt. 254

BIK, n. [Lat. pix; Gr. πίσσα; A. S. pic; Engl. piteb; Germ. peci a for. word], pitch, Stj. 46; svartr sem b., Nj. 195, Orkn. 350, Rb. 35 COMPD: BIK-SVART, adj. black as pitch.

BÍKA, að, to pitch, Stj. 58, Ver. 8.

BIKARR, m. [Hel. bicere; Engl. beaker; Scot. bicker; Ger. becher; Dan. bæger, cp. Gr. βίκος; Ital. bicchiere], a beaker, lar, drinking cup, Dipl. v. 18: botan. periantium, Hjalt.

BIKKJA, u, f. a bitch; þann graut gaf hann blaðum hundum c mælti, þat er makligt at bikkju eti þór, Fms. ii. 163: as an abusive term Fs. 54, Fas. i. 39; so in mod. Icel. a bad horse is called. COMPD bikkju-hvelpr, m. a bitch's whelp, Fms. ix. 513. bikkju-sonr, i son of a b., Fas. iii. 607. bikkju-stakkr, m. the skin of a b., Fa iii. 417: all of these used as terms of abuse.

bikkja, ð, t, [bikka, to roll, Ivar Aasen], to plunge into water; ha bikði í sjóinn, be plunged overboard, Fms. x. 329; bikti sér út af bordin ii. 183; cp. Lapp. puokjet = to plunge.

BÍLL, n., temp. a moment, twinkling of an eye; í því bili, Nj. 115; þ bil, that very moment, Stj. 149, 157, Fms. i. 45. β. loc., Lat. in te vallum, an open space left; b. er þarna, Fas. ii. 67; orðin standa eiga þá (namely in writing), en þó bil á milli, an Icel. rhyme. γ. the poetic compds such as biltrauðr, bilstyggr, bilgrönduðr ... (all of them epithes of a hero, fearless, dauntless,) point to an obsolete sense of the wor failure, fear, giving way, or the like; cp. bilbugr, bilgjarn, and the ve bila; cp. also tímabil, a period; millibil, distance; dagmálabil, hádegi bil, nónbil, etc., nine o'clock, full day-time, noon-time, etc. I fem. pr. name of a goddess, Lex. Poët.

BIÐA, að, pres. bil (instead of bilar), Fas. ii. 76 (in a verse), to fail þór vill fyrir engan mann bila at koma til einvigs, Tb. will not fail I meet, Edda 57; þorsteinn kvað þat eigi mundu at bila, Tb. said that should not fail, he should not fail in doing so, Lv. 33: with dat., flestur bilar áréðit, a proverb, Fms. ii. 31 (Ld. 170), Rð. 260. 2. impers e-n bilar (acc.), Finnb. 338 (in mod. usage impers. throughout), to break crack, þá er skipit hljóf af stokkunum, þá bilaði í skarir nokkurar, Fm vii. 196; reiði b., Grág. ii. 295; b. at e-n, id., Gpl. 369; bil sterk arma, my strong arms fail, Fas. ii. 1. c.

BIÐ-BUGR (BIÐBUGR, Fas. iii. 150), m. falling of heart; in the phrase láta engan bilbug á sér sjá (finna), to stand firm, show no sign of fear Fms. viii. 412, Grett. 124, Fas. iii. 150, Karl. 233; fá b. á e-m, to throw one back, Karl. 80.

BIÐ-EYGR, adj. a nickname of Odin, of unsteady eyes, Edda (Gl.)

BIÐ-GJARN, adj., occurs only in the compd úbilgjarn, overbearing.

BIÐ-RÖST, f. via tremula, the rainbow, v. bifröst.

BIÐ-SKIRNIR, m. the heavenly abode of Thor, from the flashing of lightning, Edda.

BIÞT, prob. an old n. part. from bila; only used in the phrase, e-m verð biþt, to be amazed, astonished; en þá er sagt, at þór (dat.) varð biþt ein sinni at slá hann, the first time that Thor's heart failed him, Edda 29; var þeim biþt, Korn. 40, Nj. 169.

BIUMBULT (now pronounced bumbult), n. adj., only in the phrase, e-n verð b., to feel uneasy, Gísl. 33, of a witch (freq., but regarded as a slang word), mér er hálf bumbult ...

BINDA, batt, 2nd pers. bazuþ, pl. bundu, bundist; pres. bind; 3rd pers reflex. bizt; imperat. bind, bind þú; 2nd pers. bittú, bitt þú, Fm. 40 [Goth., A. S., Hel. bindan; Engl. bind; Germ. binden; Swed. binda, 2nd pers. bandt; in Icel. by assimilation batt; bant, however, Hb. 20, 3: (1865)]:—to bind: I. prop. to bind in fetters, (cp. bönd, vincula banding, prisoner), Hom. 119, Fms. xi. 146, Gpl. 179: 1. to tie the fasten, tie up, b. hest, Nj. 83; naut, Ld. 98, Bs. i. 171; b. hund, Grág. ii. 119; b. við e-t, to fasten to; b. stein við háls e-m, 655 xxviii; b. blæju við stöng, Fms. ix. 358; b. skó, þvengi, to tie the shoes, Nj. 143, Þorst. St. 53 Orkn. 430: to bind in parcels, to pack up, b. varning, Fms. iii. 91, ix. 241 (a pun); b. hey, to truss hay for carting, Nj. 74; klyf, Grett. 123

b. at, til, to bind round a sack, parcel, Fms. i. 10; to bind a book (band, bindi, volum, are mod. phrases), Dipl. i. 5, 9, ii. 13. β medic. to bind wounds, to bind up, b. sár, Eg. 33, Bs. i. 639, Fms. i. 41 (cp. Germ. verbinden); b. um, of fomentation, Str. 4. 72: metaph. phrase, eiga um sárt at b., to have a sore wound to bind up, one feeling sore; hefir margr hlotið um sárt at b. fyrir mér, i. e. I have inflicted det sounds on many, Nj. 54: the proverb, bezt er um heilt at b., or eiga um eilt at b., to bind a sound limb, i. e. to be safe and sound; þykir mér ezt um heilt at b., I think to keep my limbs unburt, to run no risk, ms. vii. 263.

 2. with a notion of impediment; b. skjöldur sinn, to entangle the shield: metaph., bundin (closed, sbut) skjaldborg, Sks. 85.

II. metaph. to bind, make obligatory; leysa ok b., of the ope, Fms. x. 11: to make, contract a league, friendship, affinity, wedding, fellowship, oath, or the like; b. ráð, to resolve, Ld. 4, Eg. 30; samfélag, ag, vináttu, eíð, tengdir, hjúskap, Fms. i. 53, iv. 15, 20, 108, 210, ix. 2, Stj. 633, K. Á. 110: absol. with a following infin., binda (fix) þeir þórir at hittast í ákveðnum stað, Ísl. ii. 147.

III. reflex. to bind, engage oneself, enter a league; leikmenn höfðu saman bundizt at eptjast á kirkjueignir, Bs. i. 733; bindask (b. sik) í e-u, to engage in a thing; þótt hann væri bundinn í slíkum hlutum, 655; at b. sik í verald-gu starfi, id.; hann bazt í því, at sylfnumen yörir skyldu eigi koma á þörkina, Eg. 71; em ek þó eigi þessa búinn, nema flýrdu bindist, unless sore people bind themselves, enter the league, Fær. 25, Valla L. 216; indasi í banns atkvæði, H. E. i. 465; binda sik undir e-t, with a following infin. to bind oneself to do, Vm. 25; b. sik við e-t, id., N. G. L. 89; bindask e-m á hendi, to bind oneself to serve another, esp. of the service of great personages; b. á hendi konungum, Fms. xi. 203, x. 215, fs. i. 681, Orkn. 422; bindast fyrir e-u, to place oneself at the head of an undertaking, to lead, Hkr. iii. 40; Öngull vildi b. fyrir um atföri við þretti, Gretz. 147 A.

2. with gen., bindask e-s, to refrain from a thing; eigi bazt hann ferliga orða, i. e. he did not refrain from bad language, 655. 12; b. tára (only negative), to refrain from bursting into tears, ms. ii. 32; hlátrss, Sks. 118; b. við e-t, id., El. 21; b. af e-u, Stj. 56.
bindandi and bindendi, f. (now neut., Thom. 68), abstinent, Stj. 147, 25. 186, Fms. i. 226, Hom. 17.
 COMPS: bindendis-tími, a, m. time of abstinence. bindandis-lif, n. a life of b., Stj. 147, 655 xiii. bindandis-maðr, m. an ascetic, Bs. ii. 146; mod. a teetotaler. bindi, n. a sheaf, = bundin, N. G. L. i. 330; mod. a volume, (cp. Germ. and.)

BINGER, m. a bed, bolster, Korm. (in a verse), prop. a heap of corn r the like, (Scot. bing), Nj. 153; vide Lex. Poët.

birgðir, f. pl. stores, provisions, Sturl. ii. 225, Fær. 53, Fas. ii. 423.

birgilligr, adj. well provided, Bs. i. 355.

BIRGJA, ð, to furnish, provide; skal ek víst b. hann at nökkuru, lj. 73; segir Sigurðr, at hann mun b. þá með nökkuru móti, Fær. 237; in birgði þá ok um búfé, Ld. 144; nú vil ek b. þú pítt at málnytu í umar, Hrafn. 9. [In the Edd. sometimes wrongly spelt with y, as it is uite different from byrgja, to enclose.]

birgr, adj. [O. H. G. birig, fertilis, unbirig, sterilis: sometimes in Edd. wrongly spelt bygr: this form however occurs Bs. i. 868, MS. the end of the 15th century]:—provided, well furnished; b. at kosti, Gretz. 127 A, d. 170; viltú selja mér augun? þá er ek verr b. eptir, Fas. ii. 384.

BIRKI, n. collect. = björk, birch, in COMPS: birki-raptr, m. a rafter of birch-wood, Ísl. ii. 153. birki-viðr, m. birch-wood, Grág. ii. 355. birkjá, t, to bark, strip; b. við, Jb. 235, Stj. 177; cp. Gkv. 2. 12, irkinn viðr (=birki viðr?), Fms. viii. 33; b. hest, to flay a horse.

BIRNA, u, f. a she-bear, Stj. 530, Fs. 26, Magn. 476: astron., Rb. 68; b. er vér köllum vagn, 1812. 16. birnu-gætir, m. the name of one of the constellations, 1812. 18.

BIRTA, t, [Ulf. baibrítan], to illuminate, brighten, Stj. 15; b. sýn, 655 xx; b. blinda, id. 2. impers., þokunni birtir af, the fog lifted, Hrafn. : to brighten with gilding or colouring, a ship, þá var birt allt hlýrit, p. hlýrbjartir and hlýrbirt skip, Fms. iv. 277. 3. metaph. to enlighten; birta hjörta vár, Hom. 67, Rb. 390: to make illustrious, Skálda 04.

BIRTA, ð, to reveal, manifest, Fms. iv. 132, viii. 101: with dat., birti ann ást sinni, x. 418. y, reflex. to appear; birtist þá skáði þeirra, ms. vii. 189, v. 344, Stj. 198, Ann. 1243; b. e-m, Fms. i. 142.

birti, f. and mod. birta, u, f. [Goth. baibrú], brightness, light, the ld form birti is used Luke ii. 9, in the N. T. of 1540, and the Bible of 584, and still kept in the 11th Ed. of Vidal. (1829); otherwise birta, ass. 8. 19, 41. 10; birta also occurs Stj. 81, Fb. i. 122; but otherwise irtd in old writers; birti ok fegrð, Fms. v. 344, x. 347; birti ægis, the old, Edda 69; tunglins birti, Stj. 26, Fms. i. 77.

birting, f. brightness, Sks. 26, 656 A: metaph. manifestation, revelation, Th. 76, Stj. 378, Barl. 199: vision, 655 xxxii. 2. day-break.

COMP: birtingar-tíð, f. time of revelation, Hom. 63.

birtingr, m. a fish, trutta albicolor, Edda (Gl.): a nickname, Fms. vii. 57; pl. illustrious men, Eg. (in a verse).

BISKUP, m., in very old MSS. spelt with y and o (byskop), but commonly in the MSS. contracted 'þþ', so that the spelling is doubtful; ut biscop (with i) occurs Bs. i. 356, byscop in the old fragm. i. 391-94; biskup is the common form in the Edd. and at present, vide Bs. i., Sturl. S., Íb. [Gr. ἐπισκοπος; A. S. biscop; Engl. bishop; Germ. bischof]:—a bishop. Icel. had two sees, one at Skalholt, erected A. D. 056; the other at Hólar, in the North, erected A. D. 1106. They were united at the end of the last century, and the see removed to Reykjavík. Biographies of ten of the bishops of the 11th to the 14th century are contained in the Bs., published 1858, and of the later bishops in the Biskupa Annálar (from A. D. 1606), published in Safn til Sögu Íslands, vol. i. and Bs. ii, and cp. farther the Biskupaæfi, by the Icel. historian Jón Halldórsson (died A. D. 1736), and the Hist. Eccl. (II. E.), by Finn Jonsson (Finnus Johannæus, son of the above-mentioned Jón Halldórsson). During two hundred years of the commonwealth till the middle of the 13th century, the bishops of Skalholt and Hólar were elected by the people or by the magnates, usually (at least the bishops of Skalholt) in parliament and in the lögrétta (the legislative council), vide the Hungrv. ch. 2 (valinn til b. af allri alþýðu á Íslandi), ch. 5, 7, 13, 16, Sturl. 2, ch. 26, Kristni S. ch. 12, Íb. ch. 10, þorl. S. ch. 9, Páls. S. ch. 2, Guðm. S. ch. 40, Jóns S. ch. 7 (þá kaus Gizurr biskup Jón prest Ögmundarson með samþykki allra lærðra manna ok úkerðra í Norðlendinga fjórðungi). Magnús Gizurarson (died A. D. 1237) was the last popularly elected bishop of Skalholt; the bishop Guðmund (died A. D. 1237) the last of Hólar; after that time bishops were imposed by the king of Norway or the archbishop.

COMPS: biskupa-búningr, m. episcopal apparel, Sturl. i. 221. biskupa-fundur, m. a synod of bishops, Fms. x. 7.

biskupa-þáttir, m. the section in the Icel. Jus Eccl. referring to the bishops, K. Þ. K. 60. biskupa-þing, n. a council of bishops, Bs. i. 713, H. E. i. 456.

biskups-brunnr, m. a well consecrated by bishop Guðmund, else called Gvendarbrunnar, Bs. biskups-búr, n. a 'bishop's-bower,' chamber for a bishop, Sturl. ii. 66.

biskups-dómr, m. a diocese, Fms. vii. 173, xi. 229, lb. 16, Pr. 107: episcopate, Fms. i. 118. biskups-dóttir, f. a bishop's daughter, Sturl. i. 207. biskups-dæmi, n. an episcopal see, Sturl. i. 204, iii. 124: the episcopal office, 23, Bs. i. 66, etc.

biskups-efni, n. bishop-elect, Bs. i. cp. ii. 339. biskups-frændi, m. a relative of a bishop, Sturl. ii. 222. biskups-garðr, m. a bishop's manor, Fms. ix. 47. biskups-gisting, f. the duty of entertaining the bishop on his visitation, Vm. 23.

biskups-kjör, n. pl. the election of a bishop, Bs. i. 476. biskups-kosning, f. id., Sturl. i. 33, Fms. viii. 118, v. 1. biskups-lauss, adj. without a bishop, Fb. iii. 445, Ann. 1210.

biskups-maðr, m. one in the service of a bishop, Fms. ix. 317. biskups-mark, n. the sign of a bishop; þá gerði Sabinus b. yfir dúkinum ok drakk svá öruggr (a false reading = kross-mark?), Greg. 50.

biskups-mágr, m. a brother-in-law of a bishop, Fms. ix. 312, v. 1. biskups-messa, u, f. a mass celebrated by a bishop, Bs. i. 131.

biskups-mitr, n. a bishop's mitre, Sturl. ii. 32. biskups-nafn, n. the title of a bishop, Fms. x. 11. biskups-riki, n. a bishopric, diocese, Ann. (Hb.) 19, Fms. xi. 229, Sturl. ii. 15.

biskups-sekt, f. a fine to be paid by a bishop, N. G. L. i. 350. biskups-skattr, m. a duty to be paid to the bishop in Norway, D. N. (Fr.). biskups-skip, a bishop's ship: the bishops had a special licence for trading; about this matter, vide the Arna b. S. Laur. S. in Bs. and some of the deeds in D. I.; the two sees in Icel. had each of them a ship engaged in trade, Fms. ix. 309, v. 1.; vide a treatise by Maurer written in Icel., Ný Fél. xxii. 105 sqq.

biskups-skrúði, a, m. an episcopal ornament, Fms. ix. 38. biskups-sonr, m. the son of a bishop, Sturl. i. 123, Fms. x. 17.

biskups-stafr, m. a bishop's staff, Bs. i. 143. biskups-stofa, u, f. a bishop's study, Dipl. ii. 11.

biskups-stóll, m. an episcopal seat, bishopric, Jb. 16, K. Á. 96, Fms. x. 409. biskups-sýsla, u, f. a diocese, episcopate, Fms. vii. 172.

biskups-tign, f. episcopal dignity, Bs. i. 62, 655 iii, Sks. 802, Sturl. i. 45. biskups-tíund, f. the tithes to be paid to the bishop in Iceland, v. the statute of A. D. 1096, D. I. i. lb., K. Þ. K. 150 (ch. 39), K. Á. 96.

biskupsfundar-mál, n. a lawsuit relating to the bishop, H. E. ii. 185. biskups-vatn, n. water consecrated by bishop Guðmund, Bs. i. 535.

biskups-veldi, n. episcopal power, Pr. 106. biskups-vígsla, u, f. the consecration of a bishop, Fms. viii. 297, Bs. i. 61.

biskupa, að, to confirm, Hom. 99; biskup er skyldr at b. börn, K. Þ. K. 62; Guðmundr biskup biskupaði hann tvævetran, Sturl. iii. 122; tók Glúmr skirn ok var biskupaðr í banasótt af Kól biskupi, Glúm. 397: now in Icel. called að ferma or staðfesta or even kristna börn.

biskupan, f. confirmation; ferming er sumir kalla b., K. Á. 20, ch. 3. biskupligr, adj. episcopal; b. embætti, Stj. 556, Sks. 781, 655 xxxii. (not fit for a bishop.)

BISMARI, a, m. [for word; Germ. besem, besen; Dan. bismer; v. Grimm s. v.], a steelyard, Gjól. 526, Dipl. iii. 4. COMP: bismarapund, n. a sort of pound, N. G. L. iii. 166.

bissa, u, f., Lat. byssus, a stuff, Bar. 21. bistr, adj. [Swed. bister], angry, knitting one's brows, Sturl. iv. 82, v. 1., cp. Bs. i. 750, Pass. 21. 1.

BIT, n. bite, Lat. morsus; at tönnum er bitsins ván, Skálda 163: of cutting instruments, sax vænligt til bits, Fs. 6: of insects, mýbit, bite of gnats, Rd. 295; bit flugdýra, 655 xxx; dýrbit, a fox killing lambs, Bs. ii. 137.

β, pasture = beit, N. G. L. i. 246. bita, að, to divide (a ship) with cross-beams (biti); skip þrennum bitum út bitað, Sturl. iii. 61. β, to cut food, meat into bits.

bit-bein, n., cp. Engl. bone of contention; hafa ríki þessi lengi at öfund orðit ok bitbeinum, Fær. 230.

biti, a, m. 1. a bit, mouthful (cp. mumbiti); konungr at nökkuru bita af hrosslifr, Fms. i. 37, Játv. 26, Rd. 283: in the phrase, biðja bitum, to go begging, Grág. i. 278. 2. an eye-tooth = jaxl, q. v., [Swed. betar]; eru vér ok svá gamlir, ok svá bitar upp komnir, i. e. we are no longer babies, have got our eye-teeth, Fms. viii. 325. 3. a cross-beam, girder in a house, Ld. 316, Gpl. 346: in a ship, Lat. transtrum, Fms. ix. 44, Sturl. iii. 61.

bitill and bitull, m., dat. bitli, the bit of a bridle, Stj. 84, 397, Hkr. i. 27, Hkv. 2, 34, Akv. 30, Fms. iv. 75, Hkr. ii. 31.

bitlingr, m. a bit, morsel; the proverb, víða koma Hallgerði bitlingar, cp. Nj. ch. 48; stela bitlingum, to steal trifles, Sturl. i. 61, v. l.; bera bitlinga frá borði, as a beggar, Fas. ii. (in a verse).

bitr, rs, adj. biting, sharp, Korm. 80, Eg. 465, Fms. ii. 255.

bitra, u, f. bitterness, a cognom., Landn.

bitrliigr, adj. sharp, Korm. 80, Fbr. 58: metaph., Ísl. ii. (in a verse).

bit-sótt, f. contagious disease, poet., Yt. 17.

bit-yrði and bitryrði, n. pl. taunts, N. G. L. i. 223.

bí, bí, and bíum, bíum, interj. Lullaby!

BIÐA, beid, biðu, beðit; pres. bið; imperat. bið, 2nd pers. biðþú, biðdu, [Ulf. beidan; A. S. bidan; Engl. bide; O. H. G. bitan]:—to bide.

I. to bide, wait for: with gen., b. e-s, to wait for one, Eg. 274; skal slíkra manna at visu vel b., such men are worth waiting for, i. e. they are not to be had at once, Fms. ii. 34; the phrase, biða sinnar stundar, to bide one's time: with héðan, þaðan, to wait, stand waiting, bið þú héðan, unz ek kem, 656 C. 35; þaðan beid þengill, Ilkv. 1. 22: also, b. e-s ór stað, Lex. Poët. The old writers constantly use a notion 'a loco,' þaðan, héðan, or stað, where the mod. usage is hér, þar, 'in loco': absol., Fms. x. 37, Nj. 3.

II. to abide, suffer, undergo, Lat. pati: with acc., b. harm, Nj. 250; skaða, Grág. i. 459, 656 C.; ámalji, to be blamed, Nj. 133; bana, dauða, hel, to abide death . . ., to die, Hm. 19, Fms. v. 114; ósigi, to abide defeat, be defeated; svá skal búi bæta at biða annat meira (a proverb), Fb. ii. 336, Al. 57: sometimes in a good sense, biða elli, to last to a great age, 656 A; b. enga ró, to feel no peace, be uneasy, Eg. 493; b. ekki (scent) bætr e-s, of an irreparable loss, Ísl. ii. 172.

III. impers., -t (acc.) biðr, there abides, i. e. exists, is to be bad, with a preceding negative; hvárki biðr þar báru né vindsbla, there is felt neither wave nor blast, Stj. 78; beid engan þann er ráða kynni, there was none that could make it out, 22; varla beid braud eðr fæðu, was not to be bad, 212; slægastr af öllum þeim kvikendum er til biðr á jarðriki, 34. Gen. iii. 1. IV. part. pl. biðendr, v. andróði.

biðandi, f. a biding, waiting, delay, Fms. ii. 216.

bí-fala, að, [Germ. befehlen], to recommend, command, Bs. i. 145 note 7, from paper MS., v. Introd. p. 48.

bildr, m., and bílda, u, f. an axe, Edda (Gl.) and an instrument for bleeding: bíld-spor, n. a scar as from a b., Bs. i. 367. 2. a sheep with spotted cheeks: bíld-óttir, adj. (sheep) spotted on the cheeks, Rd. 240.

bið-ör, f. a blunt arrow, a bolt., Fms. ii. 320, x. 362.

bí-lífi, n. [A. S. biliofa], luxury, Al. 17, 34, 45.

bí-standa, stóð, [Goth. bistandan; Germ. beisteben], (for. word), to assist, Stj. MS. 227, col. 102.

bísunndr, m. (for. word), a besant (Byzantins), a coin, El. 2.

BÍTA, beitt, bitu, bitidi; pres. bit; imperat. bit, 2nd pers. bitú; poet. forms with the negative, beita, Eg. (in a verse); subj. bitía, Hkv. 2. 31, [Ulf. beitan; Engl. bite; Germ. beizen]:—to bite, Lat. mordere: I. properly,

1. with the teeth, Eg. 508, N. G. L. i. 351; b. menn (of a dog), Grág. ii. 119; b. skarð ór, Eg. 605; of a horse, N. G. L. i. 392; foxes killing sheep, Bs. ii. 138, N. G. L. ii. 34 (wolf):—to sting, of wasps, gnats, Landn. 146. 2. of grazing animals; b. gras, lauf, skóg, Grág. ii. 229. (hence beitt, pasture); hvar hestar þínir bitu gras, Fs. 57: absol. to graze, Karl. 71. 3. of sharp instruments, weapons (vápnbitum); engir vóru ósárir nema þeir er eigi bitu járn, except those whom iron could not bite, Eg. 33; sverðit beitt ekki, did not cut, Nj. 45, Edda 7; ljámrí bita, 48; sótrinn brotnaði en eigi beitt, the sword did not cut but broke the leg, Bjarn. 66.

β. e-m bitr, one's weapon (scythe) cuts well, bites; allt bitu honum annan veg vápinu, Eg. 93. 4. of a ship, to cruise; hér er skip. . . er vér köllum bita (bite the wind) allra skipa bezt, the best sail, Fs. 27: impers., beitt þeim eigi fyrir Reykjanes, they could not clear cape R., Landn. 30. 5. in fishing, to bite, take the bait; bitr vel á um daginn, the fishes did bite, Ld. 40; bita mætti beittsitr, q. v. 6. bita á vörriumi, to bite the lip as a token of pain or emotion, Nj. 68; hann hafði bitid á kámpinum, had bitten the beard, 209.

II. metaph.: a. of frost, cold, sickness, and the like. β. to bite, sting, hurt; hvat mun oss heldr b. órd hans, why should his speech sting us any more? Gret. 95 A; eigi veit ek prestr, nema orðin þín hafi bitid, thy words have bit, Fms. vii. 39. γ. as a law term; sekt, sök bitr, the gull strikes the convict, when brought home to him, hence saktbitinn, guilty; þá menn er hvárteggja haða bitid, lög, réttindi ok svá dómar, convicted in the face of law and justice, Sks. 655 B; um þau máll sem sekt bitr, i. e. unlawful cases, liable to punishment, K. Á. 148; um þat er sekt bitr, Gret. 133 A (new Ed. 1853), Sks. 655. 8. b. á e-n, to cut deep, affect, make an impression upon; the phrase, láta ekki á sig b., to stand proof against all; þetta lét Kjartan á sig b., K. felt pain from it, Ld. 204; láttu þetta ekki á þik b., do not mind it, id.; rennr þat öðrum opt mjök í brjóst, er á sumna bitr ekki (of the conscience), 655 xi. ε. e-t bitr fyrir, something 'bites off,' i. e. is decisive, makes a thing impossible or out of question; þat annat (the other reason) er þó bitr skjótara, which is still more decided against it, Fms. ii. 266; þeir kváðust þenna kost eigi vilja, ok kváðu þat tvennt til vera er fyrir þeim, two decided obstacles, reasons against it, Sturl. iii. 47; þú ert miklu erri maðr at aldri, en svá at vér hafim hér lögteknna í Jömsborg, ok bitr þat fyrir, that puts it out of question, makes it impossible, Fms. x. 93; þorgils þykir nú þetta ráð mega fyrir bita, Th. thought this would be quite sufficient,—fyrir hlíta would here be better,—Ld. 264; þeir höfðu jafnan minna hlut ór málum, þó þetta bitu nú fyrir, they always got the worst of it, though this was a thorough beating, Fas. i. 144; (þat er) lögmanni ok lögréttumönnum þykir fyrir b., seems a decisive proof, cuts the case off at once, N. G. L. ii. 21; b. e-m at fullu, to prove fatal to, tell fully upon; hafa Arngrím at fullu bitid hans ráð, Fs. 8; Njáls bita ráðin, a proverb quoted by Arngrím in Brevis Comment., written A. D. 1593, denoting the sagacity of Njáls's schemes; beitt þetta ráð, it was effective, Fs. 153; e-m bitr við at horfa, Band. 7 C, is no doubt a false reading, = býðr, which is the reading l. c. of the vellum MS. 2845, vide bjóða. III. recipr. of horse fight, Rd. 298.

bí-tala, be-tala, að, to pay, (mod.); cp. Germ. bezahlen.

bjá, interj. fie! bíá, to defile.

bjagaðr, part. ury, deformed, cp. bagr. bjag-leitr, adj. ugly, deformed, Fas. ii. 149.

bjalla, u, f. a bell, certainly an Engl. word imported into Icel. along with Christianity; bjöllu gætir, the keeper of the bell, is a nickname given by the heathen Icel. to a missionary, A. D. 998, Kristni S. (in a verse); hann vígði klukkur ok bjöllur, Bs. i. 65, Fms. i. 233; bjalla is now esp. used of small bells, e. g. on the horns of sheep, but klukka of a church bell; cp. dynjabjalla, Gret.

bjannak, n. an ἀρ. λεγ.; þat var háttr hans ef hann (viz. Odin) sendi menn sína til orrostu eðr aðrar sendifarar, at hann lagði áðr herar í höfuð þeim ok gaf þeim bjannak, trúðu þeir at þá mundi vel fændr, Yngl. S. ch. 11; it is commonly interpreted as benedictio, but it is no doubt the Scot. bannock, from Gael. banagb, an oat-cake; cp. Lat. panis. The whole passage in the Hkr. points to Christian rites and ideas brought into the pagan North, but which are here attributed to Odin, (cp. the breaking of bread and the Eucharist.)

BJARG, n. [Ulf. bairegga = ἡ ὄρη; A. S. beorg; Germ. berg; lost in Engl.], rocks, precipices: I. neut. pl. björg, precipices (in a collect. sense), esp. on the sea-side, cp. flugabjörg, sjófargbjörg, hamrabjörg; precipices covered with gulls, and sea fowls are called bjarg, e. g. Látrabjarg, Þórisbjörg, mostly in pl., Bs. ii. 111, Fms. 275, Orkn. 312.

2. sing. rock; bjargit hafði nýliga sprungit frá einum hellismunna, Fms. i. 230; vatn ór bjargi, water out of a rock, 655 xii, Nj. 264, Fas. ii. 29. β. in sing. it chiefly means an immense stone (cp. heljarbjarg), a boulder; hann hefir fært þat bjarg í hellisdyrnar, at ekki má í hellinu komast, Fms. iii. 223; einn stein svá mikinn sem bjarg væri, Gisl. 31; hve stór björg (pl.) at sá hestr dró, Edda 26; at svá ungr maðr skyldi hefja svá stórt bjarg, Gret. 93.

BJARGA, barg, burgu, borgit; pres. berg, pl. björgum; imperat. bjarg; pret. subj. byrga: in mod. use after the Reformation this verb is constantly used weak, bjarga, að, pres. bjargar, pret. bjargat; the only remnant of the old is the sup. borgit, etc. In Norway this weak form occurs very early, e. g. bjargar, servat, Hom. 17; in Icel. the weak seldom occurs before the 15th century; bjargaðist, Fs. 143, and bjargat (sup.) = borgit, Lv. 11, are probably due to these passages being left in paper MSS.; the weak bjargaði, however, occurs in a vellum MS. of the 15th century, þorf. Karl. 388; 1st pers. pres. bjarga, Fms. xi. 150 (MS. 13th century) seems to be a Norse idiom. [Goth. bairegan; Hel. bergan; A. S. beargan; cp. birg]:—to save, help; with dat., bergir hverjum sem eigi er veigr (a proverb), Sturl. iii. 220; sá er öldum bergt, who saves mankind, viz. against the giants, i. e. Thor, Hým. 22; nema þorgeir byrgi honum, Rð. 295: absol., Guð barg (by God's grace) er konunginn varð eigi sátr, Fms. v. 268: in theol. sense, vildu þeir eigi snúast til mín at ek byrga þeim, 656 C. 23, Hom. l. c.: impers., e-m er borgit, is saved, comes safe and sound out of danger, Fær. 178, Hkv. Hjörv. 29.

2. a law term; b. sök, máli, to find a point of defence; hann bergir þeim kosti sökinni, at . . ., Grág. i. 40; bergsk hann við bjargviðinn, he is free by virtue of the verdict, 36; borgit mun nú verða at lögum, i. e. there will be some means of putting it right, Lv. 11, Nj. 36.

3. special phrases; b. skipshöfn, to pick up the shipwrecked, þorf. Karl. l. c., Fms. xi. 412; skipi, to haul a ship out of the reach of tides and waves, Grág. ii. 385; hval, to drag a dead whale ashore, Gpl. 461: to help labouring women (v. bjargrúnar), Sdm. 9; b. nám (v. nábjargir), to render the last service to a dead body, 33; b. kúm, to attend cows casting calf, Bjarn. 32; b. búfé, to milk ewes, N. G. L. i. 10; b. brókum, cacare, Fms. xi. 150.

II. recipr. of mutual help; bjargat at allir saman, to be saved all in common, Hkr. ii. 347.

III. reflex., bjargask vel, to behave well, keep the heart up, esp. in cold or hunger; Oddr bargest vel á fjallinu (in snow storm), Sturl. iii.

5, Orkn. 324, of one shipwrecked; b. úti, of cattle, to graze, N. G. L. 25; b. sjálfr, to gain one's bread, Grág. i. 294; b. á sínar hendr (ytur), to support oneself with one's own hands, Fms. ii. 159; of food drink, cp. bergja; á norri godi fann, at nafni hans bargst lítt við inn, that he got on slowly eating the cheese, Eb. 244; hann spurði, if hann byrgist svá lítt (v. l. mataðist svá seint), . . . why he ate so wily, id.; verði þér nú at bjargast við slíkt sem til er, you must put with what you can get, Germ. fyrir lieb nehmen, Eg. 204; hon bað ír þær matar ok burgust þær við þat, Clem. 26; hon bjargaðist (bargst) lítt við þá fæðu er til var, she could hardly eat the food they (v. l. hjúkjaðist), Fs. 174. Part. borginn, used as adj. and even in npar.; impers., erat héra (héri = hegri = duck) at borgnara þótt hæna í skjöld, the drake is none the better off though a hen shield him, taph. of a craven, Fs. 174, Fms. vii. 116: [Early Engl. to borrow = to e, 'who borrowed Susanna out of wo,' Sir Guy of Warwick.]

arg-aurar, m. pl. = bjargálnir, Mag. 160.

arg-álnir, f. pl. means enough for support. bjargálna-maðr, m. a l-to-do man.

arg-festr, f. a rope or cord used to save men, Vm. 44.

arg-hagr, adj. a dexterous carpenter or smith for household work, im. 355; cp. Sturl. ii. 195.

arg-högg, n. = berghögg, hewing rocks to make a road, Bárð. 166.

arg-kviðr, m. a law term, a verdict of acquittal given by five neighbors for the defendant, proving an alibi or the like, and produced during trial; the b. seems to be, in its strict sense, synonymous with heimilisdr or heimiskviðr, q. v., cp. Grág. i. 60, 61, where it is defined; n. bíar skulu skilja um bjargkviðu alla, heimilis-bíar þess manns óttir er, nema . . ., vide also 48, 49, 53, 55, 56, etc.

arg-leysi, n. starvation, destitution, Grág. i. 238, Gpl. 272, Band. 43.

arg-ráð, n. pl. a law term, help or shelter given to an outlaw, in the ase, úalandi, úráðandi öllum bjargráðum, Grág. ii. 162, etc., Nj. 40.

arg-rifa, u, f. a rift in a rock, Eg. 390, Stj. 450.

arg-rúnar, f. pl. runes for helping women in labour, Sdm. 9.

arg-rýgr, jar, f. pl. ir, a Norse law term, a female witness in a case of maternity, defined, N. G. L. i. 358.

arg-ræði, n. and bjargræðisvegir, m. pl. means for support.

arg-skora, u, f. a scour or scar on a bill, Anal. 177, Ann. 1403, Hkr. 323.

args-maðr, m. a hard-working man, Bs. i. 309.

arg-snöðs, f. = bergsnös, a crag, Fas. i. 324, Eg. 389, v. l.

arg-vel, adv. well enough, Fms. viii. 68, 126, v. l.

arg-vættir, f. (in mod. usage m.), [bjarg, mons, or bjarga, servare], þing friendly sprite, a good genius, answering to the Christian good el; according to the heathen belief, the country, esp. hills and mountains, were inhabited by such beings; in the northern creed the gvatættir are generally a kind of giant of the gentler kind: in mod. age, a supporter, helper in need; muntu verða mér hinu mesti (masc.) Fas. ii. 438, vellum MS. of 15th century; en mesta (fem.) b., Bárð. i. new Ed. 12.

arg-protá, adj. destitute of means to live.

ARKAN, n. the Runic letter B, Skálda, v. Introduction.

ARKEY-, in the word bjarkeyjar-rétrr, m. town-law, used as applied to landslög or landsréttir, county-law, Sks. 22; sökin veit til lands- en eigi til bjarkeyjarréttar, Fms. vii. 130; vide N. G. L. i. 303-336. An illustration of this curious word, that the Danes at present call a 'birkedommer,' and the district 'birk'; cp. local names, as in Jæn,—in Birsch civitate regiã, Johann. Magnus 542 (Ed. 1554); as Birschensis, 556; in Birsch civitate tum maxima, 541; in Norway, key is one of the northern islands, whence the famous Norse family keyingar took their name; v. Munch, the pref. to Norge's Beskrivelse. An. uncertain; bedged in with birk (?).

ARMI, a, m. the beaming or radiance of light, not the light itself; bjarmi, dags-bjarmi; very freq. in mod. usage; no instances from writers are on record; akin to brimi, bjartr, etc. II. pl. bjar (and Bjarmaland n., bjarmarkr adj.), name of a people or tribe of the Russian empire, the Perms of the present day; vide K. Alfred's þius i. I, 14 sq., Ó. H. ch. 122, Fas. ii. 511 sqq.

arnar-, v. björn.

arn-báss, m. a pit for catching bears, Gpl. 457; used proverb., i. 235.

arn-dýri, and mod. bjarndýr, n. a bear, Fms. vi. 298, Nj. 35, Fs. 748, 182.

arn-eggjan, f. the egging a bear on to fight, a Norse law term, of a verbal provocation, N. G. L. i. 74.

arn-feldr, m. a bear's fell, bear-skin cloak, Vm. 91, Pm. 120, Jm. 28.

arn-fell, n. id., Vm. 22, Am. 81.

arn-gjöld, n. pl. 'bear-gild,' reward for killing a bear, Fs. 150.

arn-húnn, m. a young bear, þórd. 17 (Ed. 1860).

arn-ígull, m. ecbinus terrestris ursus, Rb. 348, Hb. 29 (Ed. 1865).

arn-ólpa, u, f. an outer jacket of bear-skin, Korm. 114.

arn-skinn, n. a bear-skin, B. K. 83, Ld. 114, Korm. 112.

bjarn-staka, u, f. a bear-skin, Edda (pref.) 151.

bjarn-sviða, u, f. a large knife for killing bears, Eb. 298, Fas. iii. 546.

bjarn-veiðar, f. pl. bear-hunting, N. G. L. i. 46.

bjarn-ylr, s, m. bear's warmth, the vital warmth of an ice-bear; it was believed in Icel. (vide Isl. þjóðs. i. 610) that a child born on the hide of an ice-bear would be proof against frost and cold; people hardy against cold are therefore said 'to have bear's warmth' (bjarnyl), vide Háv. 39.

bjart-eygr and -eygðr, adj. bright-eyed, Fms. iv. 38, Bs. i. 66, Hkr. iii. 184, O. II. 245.

bjart-haddaðr, adj. a fair-haired lady, Lex. Poët.

bjart-leikr, m. brightness, Hom. 60, Kb. 336, Fms. i. 228, Magn. 468.

bjart-leitr, adj. of bright countenance, bright-looking, Fms. v. 319.

bjart-liga, adv. (and -ligr, adj.), clearly, Stj. 16.

bjart-litaðr, adj. = bjartleitr, Hkv. Hjörv. 27.

BJARTR, adj. [Ulf. bairts = δηλος; A. S. beorht; Engl. bright; Hel. berbt; in Icel. per metath. bjartr; cp. birri, etc.], bright; Lat. clarus is rendered by bjartr, Clar. 128; bjartr ljós, Fms. i. 96; bjartr tungskiu, Nj. 118; sólskin, Fms. ii. 300; veðr, i. 128: of hue, complexion, b. líkami, Hkr. iii. 179, Nj. 208; hönd, Bb. 3. 20. 2. metaph. illustrious; með b. sigri, Fms. x. 253; in a moral sense, Stj. 141.

bjart-viðri, n. bright weather, Bárð. 175.

BJÁLFI, bjálbi, a, m. a fur, skin, Fms. v. 207, 236; esp. in the compds hrein-bjálfi, geit-bjálbi, flug-bjálbi, Haustl. 12. Etym. uncertain, perh. a Slav. word. 2. used as a pr. name, Landn.

BJÁLKI, a, m. [Hel. balco; Swed. and Dan. bjelke; Germ. balke; prob. akin to bákr], a balk, beam, Gpl. i. 346.

BJÓÐA, bauð, buðu, boðit; pres. býð; pret. subj. byða; pret. sing. with the suffixed negative, bauðat, Edda 90 (in a verse); the obsolete middle form buðumk, mibi obtulit, nobis obtulerunt, occurs in Egil Húfuðl. 2; [Ulf. biudan; A. S. biodan; Engl. bid; Germ. bieten; Swed. biuda; Dan. byde].—Lat. offerre, proferre, with dat. of the person, acc. of the thing: I. to bid, offer; þeir höfðu boðit honum laun, they had offered him rewards, Fms. i. 12; þorsteinn bauð at gefa Gunnlaugi hestinn, Isl. ii. 213; b. gríð, to offer pardon, Fms. i. 181; þeir buðu at gefa upp borgina, ix. 41; bauð hann þeim, at göra alla bændr óðalborna, i. 20; býðr, at hann muni görast hans maðr, xi. 232; en ek býð þér þó, at synir minir ríði með þér, Nj. 93; Írar buðu sik undir hans vald, Fms. x. 131. 2. reflex. to offer oneself, volunteer one's service; buðusk honum þar menn til fylgðar, Fms. ix. 4; mun ek nú til þess bjóðask í sumar á þingi, Ld. 104, Sks. 510; þeim er þá býðsk, Grág. i. 284; þjórodr bauðsk til þeirrar farar, Hkr. ii. 247; ef þú býðsk í því, Fms. xi. 121. 3. metaph., b. ófríð, ójöfnuð, rangindi, líðsmun, of ill usage, Ld. 148, Rb. 418; b. e-m rangt, to treat one unjustly, Hom. 155; with an adverb, b. e-m sæmlliga, to treat one in seemly sort, Ld. 66; b. á boð e-s, to outbid one, N. G. L. iii. no. 49. II. to bid, invite, cp. boð, a banquet; prob. ellipt., hospitality or the like being understood; Özurr bauð þeim inn í búðina at drekka, Nj. 4; heim vil ek b. þér í sumar, 93; honum var boðit til boðs, 50; hann bauð þá þegar þar at vera Gizuri Hallssyni, Bs. i. 128; gekk Bárðr móti honum ok fagnaði honum, ok bauð honum þar at vera, Eg. 23; b. mönnum til boðs, to bid guests to a banquet, wedding, or the like, Ld. 104. III. to bid, order, Lat. imperare, cp. boð, bidding; sem lög buðu, as the law prescribed, Fms. i. 81; svá bauð oss Guð, Post. 645. 88; b. af landi, to order one out of the land, make him an outlaw, Fms. vii. 20; b. af embætti, to depose, Sturl. ii. 119; b. út, a Norse milit. term, to call out, levy, cp. útboð, a levy; b. út leiðangri, b. út liði, skipum, to levy troops, ships, Fms. i. 12, 61, vi. 219, 251, 400, x. 118, Eg. 31, cp. N. G. L. i. ii; b. e-m erendi, to commit a thing to one's charge, Fms. vii. 103; b. varnað á e-u, or b. til varnana, to forbid, xi. 94, Edda 59; with prepp., b. e-m um (cp. umboð, charge), to delegate to one, commit to one's charge; þeim manni er biskup hefir um boðit, at nefna vátta, K. þ. K. 64; þess manns er biskup bauð um at taka við fé því, K. Á. 96, Sks. 460 B; hann keypti til handa þorkatli þá hluti er hann hafði um boðit, the things that he had given charge about, Grett. 102 A; Hermundur bauð nú um Vermundi, at vera fyrir sína hönd, Rd. 251. 2. eccl. to proclaim, announce, esp. as rendering of mid. Lat. praedicare; b. síð, trú, Kristni, to proclaim, preach a new religion, Nj. 156, 158, Fms. i. 32; b. messudag, sunnudag, to proclaim a holy day, N. G. L. i. 348. IV. of a mental state, to bode, forebode; e-m býðr hugr (cp. hugboð, foreboding), one's heart bodes, Fms. v. 38, 24, Eg. 21; mér býðr þat eitt í skap (my heart bodes), at þú verðir meira stýrandi en nú ertu, Bs. i. 468; mér býðr þat fyrir, which makes me forbode, Fms. ii. 193; e-m býðr hugr við (whence við-bjóðr, dislike), to abhor, dislike; er honum hafði lengi hugr við boðit, Bs. i. 128. 2. impers., mér býðr ávallt hita (acc.) er ek kem í þeirra flokk, a boding comes over me, i. e. I feel uneasy, whenever . . ., Fms. iii. 189; mér bauð ótta (acc.), I felt a thrilling, Bs. i. 410; b. úþektt, to loathe, Grett. 111 A; b. þektt, to feel pleasure; bauð þeim mikla þektt er þeir sá líkit, Bs. i. 208; the phrase, e-m býðr við at horfa, of a frame of mind, to be so and so minded; miklir eru þér frændr borði, ef yðr býðr svá við at horfa, Baud. 7 (MS. 2845). β. the phrase, þat býðr, it besems, becomes; eptir þat fer veizla fram, eptir því sem býðr, as is due, Fms. x. 15, Fb. l. c. has byrjaði; sem býðr um svá ágætán höfðingja, Fms. x. 149. V. with prepp.; b. fram, Lat. proferre, to produce; b. fram vitni, to produce a witness, Eg. 472; með fram boðnum féggjofum, Sturl. iii. 232; b. upp, b. af hendi, to give up, leave off; þá býðr hann upp hornit, gives up the horn, will not drink more, Edda 32; b. undan, a law term, to lay claim to; er þú kostur at b. undan þeim manni varðveizluna fjárids, Grág. i. 196; eigi skal undan manni b., ádr undir mann kemr féit, id.; cp. the following chapter, which treats 'um undan-boð fjár'; nú eru þeir menn svá þrir, at eigi býðr undan fjárvardveizluna, viz. who are privileged guardians of the property of a minor, viz. father, brother, mother, and who cannot be outbidden, 192; b. við, a trade term, to make a bid; b. við tvenn verð, to bid double, Ld. 146; ek býð þér jafnumörg stóðhross við, id.; at þú býðir Rúti bróður þínum sémiliga, 66; kaupsvá jörð sem ádrir menn b. við, N. G. L. i. 95; b. fyrir is now more usual. VI. part. pass. boðinn used as an adj., esp. in the alliterative phrase, vera boðinn ok búinn til e-s, to be ready and willing to do a thing, to be at one's service; skulu vér bræðr vera búinir ok boðinir til þess sem þér vilst okkr til nýta, Eg. 50; til þess skal ek boðinn ok búinn at ganga at þeim málum fyrir þina hönd, Ld. 292.

BJÖÐR, m., as the word is used masc. in A. S. as well as in Ulf., we have in Haustl. 5 to alter breiðu bjóði into breiðum bjóði; [Ulf. biuds = ῥάπτει; A. S. beoð; Hel. biod; O. H. G. biud.] I. Lat. mensa, a table, Rm. 4. 28, 29, Haustl. l. c. II. soil, ground, cp. the Fr. plateau; á Engla bjóð, on English ground, Höfuðl. 2; ádr Börs synir bjóðum um yppu, Vsp. 4.

bjóðr, m. [bjóða], poet. one who invites, Lex. Poët.; cp. also compds such as við-bjóðr, disgust, from bjóða við.

bjór-blandinn, part. mixed with beer, El. 21.

BJÖRR, m. [O. H. G. pior or bior; Low Germ. and mod. Germ. bier; Fris. biar; A. S. bior; Engl. beer], no doubt a word of German extraction, öl (öldr), ale, being the familiar word used in prose:—bjór hardly ever occurs, vide however Hkr. iii. 447, Bk. 48, 89, 96 (Norse); and is a foreign word, as is indicated even by the expression in the Alvismál—öl heitir með mönnum, en með Ásum bjór, ale it is called by men, by gods beer: bjór however is very current in poetry, but the more popular poems, such as the Hávamál, only speak of öl or öldr, Hm. 11, 13, 65, 80, 132, 138.

BJÖRR, m. [Lat. fiber; A. S. beofar], a beaver, esp. the beaver's skin, Eg. 71, in the phrase, b. ok savali. 2. a triangular cut off piece of skin, [cp. provincial Swed. bjarr]; þat eru bjórar þeir er menn sníða of skóm sínum fyrir tveim eör hæð, Edda 42; still used in Icel. in that sense. II. metaph. a small piece of land (an ἀπ. λεγ. as it seems); bjór lá önuminn fyrir austan Fljót, Landn. 284.

BJÖRR, m., must be different from the preceding word, synonymous with brjóstþili, a wall in a house, a party wall, but also in the 13th and 14th centuries freq. a costly tapestry used in halls at festivals and in churches; hrindum hallar bjóri, let us break down the wall of the hall, Hálf S. Fas. ii. (in a verse); eingi var bjórrinn milli húsanna, there was no partition between the houses, Sturl. iii. 177; gengu þeir í stofuna, var hön vel tjölduð ok upp settir bjórar, 229; annarr hlutrin stökk útar í bjórrinn, svá at þar varð fastr, Háv. 40. β. of a movable screen between choir and nave, of cloth or costly stuff, different from tjöld (hangings) and refnar; hann lét Atla prest penta allt ræfr innan, ok svá allan bjórrinn, Bs. i. 132; kirkja á tjöld umhverfis sik með tvennum bjórum, Vm. 153; kirkja tjölduð sémiligum tjöldum ok þrjú bjórar, 171, D. I. i. 402; bjórr framan um kór, tjöld um alla kirkju, Pm. 103; b. slittin blámerkr yfir altari, 108, Bs. ii. 476, 322; vide bjórrþili.

bjór-sala, u, f. beer-keeping, N. G. L. iii. (Fr.)

bjór-salr, m. a beer-hall (A. S. beor-sele), Vsp. 41.

bjór-skinn, n. a beaver-skin, Eg. 55, 57, Fms. x. 379.

bjór-tappr, m. a tapster, beer-house keeper, N. G. L. iii. 13.

bjór-tjóld, n. tapestry, = bjórr, Vm. 135; b. um sönghús, id.

bjór-tunna, u, f. a beer-tun, barrel of beer, Bs. i. 359.

bjór-verpill, n. a beer-cask, Jb. 378.

bjór-þili, n. a party wall, = bjórr; b. var í milli ok vóru gluggar á, Vápn. Ný Fél. xxi. 124, Bs. ii. 322, v. l.

bjúga, n. (pl. bjúgu), a sausage, v. mörbjúga, Bs. i. 357, Stö.

bjúg-leikr, m. crookedness, MS. 1812. 18.

bjúg-leitr, adj. of crooked countenance (nose), Rb. 344.

bjúg-nefjaðr, adj. with a hooked nose, Fms. i. 155.

BJÚGR, adj. bowed, hooked, crooked, bent; fætr lágu bjúgir við lendar, Hom. 114; með bjúgum þornum, Sks. 419; hann var b. á baki, he sat bent or bowed (from age) on horseback, Fs. 183; b. í vexti, Eg. 710; með bjúgum hring, Sks. 198, Rb. 344, Band. 9; metaph., hvárt er yðr þykir bjúgt eðr beint (MS. brátt), whether it seems to you crooked or straight, i. c. whether you like it or not, Fms. viii. 436; cp. boginn, baugr, etc.

bjúgr, s. m., medic., Lat. tumor; in many compds: skyr-bjúgr, scorbuticus, Engl. scorbutic; vind-bjúgr, tumor aereus; vatus-bjúgr, tumor oedematosis, Fél. ix. 197.

BJÖRG, f., gen. bjargar [v. bjarga], help, deliverance, out of need or danger, e. g. feeding the hungry, saving one's life; unlawful 'björg' is that of giving help to an outlaw, who is 'úráðandi öllum bjargráðum, one on whom no help must be bestowed, neither food, shelter, nor ferry; Grág. in several passages, and there commonly used in plur (bjargir) when in this particular sense; it was liable to a heavy punishment, and the case was to be summoned before the Fifth Court, Grág. p. p. ch. 25, Ld. 42. β. lögmæt björg, a lawful point of defence pleading in the Court (v. bjarga sök), Grág. i. 73.

2. means of subsistence, stores, provisions, food; fjögurra (átta) missera b., Grág. i. 107, 286. 3. a freq. pr. name of a woman, Ingibjörg, Þorbjörg, Guðbjörg etc.; in Swed.-Dan. '-borg,' as in Ingeborg, etc. COMPS: bjargarlauss, adj. starving. bjargar-leysi, n. = bjarg-leysi, Band. 15 bjargar-vist, f. servicing for food and clothing, Hrafn. 6; cp. bjargræð (above).

BJÖRK, f., gen. bjarkar, [A. S. beorc; Swed. björk; Dan. and Scot. birke; Engl. birch; Germ. birke; Lat. betula; v. birki], a birch, Edd (Gl.), Bs. ii. 5, Jb. 236. In compds bjarkar.

BJÖRN, m., gen. bjarnar; dat. birni, pl. n. birnir; acc. björnu, mod. birni, [an enlarged form, cp. Goth. biari, by which word Ulf. renders th Gr. θηρίον, Titus i. 12; A. S. bera; Engl. bear; Germ. bär; but Swed. and Dan. björn];—a bear; hvíta-björn, the white bear or ice-bear; an skóg-björn, hið-björn, við-björn, the black bear or wood-bear, Germ. wald bäer; the ice-bear was unknown in Europe till the discovery of Iceland at the end of the 9th, and Greenland at the end of the 10th centur. The very first ice-bear was brought to Europe by Ingimund the Ó as a gift to the king of Norway about A. D. 900, Landn., Fs. (V) 27; Isleif, the first bishop of Iceland, also brought one as a present to the German emperor about A. D. 1050, Bs. i. 61, Hv. ch. 2; c. the little story of Audun in Fms. vi. 297-307, Sks. 186, Sturl. iii. 8 Grág. ii. 181, Am. 17, where a hvítbjörn is mentioned, Fs. (Flóam. S) 148; as to the black bear, vide esp. Grett. ch. 23, Finnþ. ch. 11, Glútr ch. 3, Fas. i. 50; cp. an interesting paper, 'Waldbär und Wasserbär' by Konrad Maurer, upon this subject. Björn and Bjarni are freq. names; also in compd names, Þorbjörn, Ásbjörn; and as a prefix Bjarngrímur, Bjarnhöðinn, etc.; vide Landn. (Gl.) COMPS: bjarna broðr, m., botan. narbeticum, Hjalt. 166. bjarnar-hamr, m. hide, shape of a bear, Fas. i. 53. bjarnar-hið, n. a black bear's lair, N. G. L. i. 35. bjarnar-hold, n. the flesh of a bear, Fas. i. 5. bjarnar-hrammr, m. a bear's paw, Rb. 382, Ver. 26. bjarna slátr, n. meat of a slaughtered bear, Fas. i. 54; botan., Iv. Aasen recor bjonnabær, rubus caesius; bjonnakamb, osmundua spicans; bjonninn, polytrichum commune. For popular tales of the bear vide Isl. Þjóðs. 608-611.

BLAÐ, n. [A. S. blād; Germ. blatt; Hel. blad. Ulf. renders the φύλλον by laufs, Engl. leaf, Icel. lauf. The Engl. says a blade of grass or corn, a leaf of a tree; and so, in Icel., herbs or plants have blād, tr. lauf];—a leaf; blöð þess grass er . . . heitir, Pr. 472; blöð á lat Hervar. S. (in a verse); metaph. a veil, svá er mér sem hangi b. fy auga, Fms. iii. 126. 2. of leaf-like objects, a leaf in a book, Ger blatt, (never lauf, cp. bladsíða, u, f. a page), Rb. 210, Isl. ii. 460; of painted diptych or the like, þar eru blöð tvau pentuð, Pm. 103. β. skirt of a kirtle (skaut), Stj. 481, Eb. 226, Orkn. 474; Icel. now; kjól-laf, the skirt of a coat. γ. a blade, in various connections: the part of a thing, the blade of an oar, árar-blād, N. G. L. i. 59; of a rudd Fms. ix. 503; knifs-blād, the blade of a knife, Bs. i. 385; a sword blade is in mod. usage called 'blād', but in old writers brandr; spón-blād the mouth-piece of a spoon; herðar-blād, the shoulder-blade, etc. Bota blaðka, u, f., e. g. horblaðka, menyambes; hófblaðka, caltha palustris but rjúpnalauf, dryas, Hjalt.: blaðkr, m. in eyrna-blaðkr, ear-lap.

blaðra, að, prob. an onomatopoeitic word, like Lat. blaterare, Sc blether, Germ. plaudern, in the phrase, b. tungunni, to talk blab, He 115; tungan var úti ok blaðraði, Fbr. 77 new Ed.; hann blaðraði tu unni ok vildi við leita at mæla, Fms. v. 152; metaph. to utter inarticulate sounds, bleat, as a sheep. blaðr, n. nonsense. blaðra, u, f. a bladder, Pr. 472; a blain, watery swelling, Stj. 2, Bs. i. 182. blöðru-sótt, f. a stone in the bladder, Pr. 475.

BLAK, n. a slap; fyrir þústr (a buffet) fjórar merkr, fyrir blak sláp) tver merkr (as a fine), Gpl. 177, 187.

blaka, að, to slap, Ann. 1394. 2. neut. to wave, flutter, of wings of birds, b. vængjum, to flutter with the wings, Stj. 74; of leaves on a tree moved by a soft breeze, lauf víðarins blakaðu hæglí Barl. 161; austan blakar laufið á þann linda, Fornkv. 129; blakir í þari um hnakka, Fms. vi. 376 (in a verse). In mod. usage, blak að or t, is freq. used of leaves, of the flaring of a light, ljós blakti skari, the flame flutters on the wick; hence metaph., öndin blaktir á sk Snúot 128; blaktir önd á brjósti, 121; the phrase, blaktir ekki há höfði, not a hair moves on one's head.

blaka, u, f. a veil of silk, Fas. iii. 337; a fan, Mar. 153; now also bladka, v. above s. v. blad.

blakk-fjallr, adj. black-skinned, epithet of a wood-bear, Akv. 11.

blakkr, m. (for. word), a sort of measure, N. G. L. i. 324.

blakkr, m., poet. a horse, cp. Blanka, the mythical horse of Thideric Dietrich of Bern, Lex. Poët.

BLAKKR, adj. [A. S. blac; Engl. black; O. H. G. plak: in Icel. art., as in A. S. and other kindred tongues swart, etc., represents the st. niger; while blakkr corresponds to the Lat. ater, dead or dusky ack], in poetry used as an epithet of wolves, etc., Lex. Poët., in prose is very rare, Fas. iii. 592; hence blekkja, to defraud: the mod. Icel. ek, n. ink, Swed. blak, Dan. blæk, come from blakkr, corresponding to at. atramentum, Str. 63 (blez), Pr. 474. II. = bleikr, pale; blakkr hestur, Ghv. 18 (perh. corrupt for bleikr, pale, cp. fölván jó, Hkv. 47), the colour of death; to dream of riding on a pale horse forebodes ath, Bjarni 136; on a red horse a bloody death, Fs. (Vd.) 67.

blakra, að, [blakra, Ivar Aasen, to shake, of leaves], to blink; b. gum, Hom. 89; now blakta, að, e. g. b. augum, to move the eyes, d. also used of the beating of the heart; hón fann að hjartað blakti, in the story of the Beauty and the Beast (Skrymslið Góða), Kvöldv. 176: blakra vængjum = blakta vængjum, to flutter with the wings, rl. 88; of sails, Úlf. 3. 14.

bland, n. in the adverbial phrase, í bland, among, Dan. i blandt, Bs. i. 2, Stj. 231, Matth. xii. 25, (rare in mod. usage.)

BLANDA, in early Icel. poetry and prose a strong verb; pres. 1st rs. blend, Ls. 3; 3rd pers. blendr, Grág. ii. 389; reflex. blendsk, Symb. ; pret. 1st pers. blétt, Am. 79, Greg. 50; reflex. blézkr, Orkn. 104; a verse from about A. D. 1046); pl. blénda, bléndum, Ls. 9, Greg. , Edda 47; reflex. bléndusk, Hkm. 8; subj. reflex. bléndisk, Mart. 9; blandinn (freq.), Sdm., Ýt., etc., vide Lex. Poët., Skálda 164; but the 13th century and later the weak form (blanda, að) prevailed all tenses except the part. pass., where the old blandinn = blandaðr y still be used, though the weak is more common; imperat. blanda, Pr. 471, 472, N. G. L. i. 12; pres. blandar, 13; part. blandaðr, s. 349, Pr. 470, 472 (MS. about A. D. 1250), [Ulf. blandan, a lupl. verb; A. S. bland; Engl. blend; O. H. G. blantan; lost in H. G.; Swed. blanda]—to blend, mix, the beverage in acc., the red ingredient in dat.; b. mjöð (drykk), citri, meimi, Greg. l. c.; þtning ok Bárðr blönduðu þá drykkiinn ólyfjan, Eg. 210; adding ið, litíð (acc. instead of dat.) verð ok við blandit, Skálda 164; turt blandin við upsa-gall, Pr. l. c.; þar fellr Jórdan í gegnum, ok mndsk eigi (does not blend) við vötnu, Symb. l. c.; tak skógar síru ok nda (imperat.) við fornt vín, Pr. l. c.; b. með, id., Rb. 164; b. saman, mix together, Pr. l. c.

II. metaph. to mix together, of fellowship or association, but partic. used of carnal intercourse, cp. the Gr. γῆνα, Lat. misceri; b. mótuneyti (dat.) við e-n, to eat together with e, N. G. L. l. c.; blandask í samfélagi, to associate with, Mart. l. c.; megum eigi hjálp né heilsu af Guði fá, nema vér blandimk við hans 625, 181; þeir blönduðusk þá meir við mannfólk enn nú, they had more intercourse with, Fas. i. 391; to have carnal intercourse, vár skal eingi ndask við búfé, N. G. L. i. 18; þat féll í hördómum, ok blönduðusk þær konur er af heidnum þjóðum voru, Sks. 588.

III. part. blandinn is used as an adj. with the notion mixed, mingled, bad, of temper, character, manner; Helgi var blandinn mjök (bad a mixed, angled creed), hann trúði á Krist, en hét á þór til hæræða ok fara, Landn. 206; þú ert maðr vaskr ok vel at þér (thou art bold & brave), en hon er blandin mjök, but she is a woman of mixed report, 49.

blanda, u, f. any mixture of two fluids, Fs. 145 (of watery blood); it esp. a beverage of hot uvey mixed up with water, Vm. 60, Fms. ix. 2. Blanda also is the local name of a stream of glacier water in the north of Icel., v. Landn. β. metaph. the name of a book, miscellanea; bl sjá skrá . . . heita B., því at saman er blandað skyldu tali ok skyldu, Rb. 4, v. l., in MS. Am. 625, 4to. blöndu-horn, n. a cup of blanda, a cognom., Landn. 278.

blandan, f. mixing, N. G. L. i. 153.

blasa, t; sup. blasað, [Engl. blaze], of places, in the phrase, b. við, to full and open before the eye (mod.)

blauð-hugaðr, adj. soft of heart, cowardly, Fbr. 108.

blauð-klæddr, part. soft-clad, b. manna, a rendering of Matth. xi. 8, man clothed in soft raiment, 625. 95.

blauð-liga, adv. and -ligr, adj. cowardly, Hkr. iii. 162.

BLAUÐR, adj. [A. S. blæðe; Scot. blate = bashful, shy; Hel. blotbi; im. blöde; cp. Goth. blauþjan = ἀκροῦν, and Hel. blödan = infirmare], properly means soft, weak, Lat. mollis, Gr. μάλακος, and is opposed to atr, brisk, vigorous; hence the proverb, fær er hvatr er hrórask tekr, ef í mæsku er blauðr, Fm. 6, cp. Fms. viii. 49. β. metaph. blauðr means minine, hvatr masculine, but only used of animals, dogs, cats, fishes; atr-lax = hæingr = salmo mas; bleyða, u, f., is a dam, and metaph. a ward; blauðr is a term of abuse, a bitch, coward; hañ hendr á (hundam, add. p. 149) ok drepi þótt b. sé, take the dog and kill it, though be a bitch, Gisl. 63; blauðir hundar, Fms. ii. 103, xi. 10. 2. metaph., Hallgerðr mælti við Gunnar, jafnkomit er á með ykkur, er ártveggi er blauðr (a taunt addressed to the beardless Njal), Nj. 59; þið nú ef þú ert cigi b., Nj. 205, cp. Skr. 114, 496, in the last passage used = blautr; blauðir eru vér nú orðnir, Niðrst. 6.

blaut-barn, n. a baby, in the phrase, frá blautbarns beini = blautu barns beini, Barl. 41.

blaut-fiskr, m. a fresh fish, cod, Bs. i. 853.

blaut-holdr, adj. having soft, smooth flesh; mæð b., Karl. 479.

blaut-hugaðr, adj. faint, soft-minded, Glúm. 309.

blaut-leikr, m. effeminacy, Stj. 345.

blaut-lendr, adj. soft, moist-soiled, Fms. v. 230.

blaut-liga, adv. and -ligr, adj. faintly, effeminately, Stj. 362; b. kossar, 417; b. kvæði, soft, amorous ditties, Bs. i. 237.

BLAUTR, adj. [A. S. bléat = miser; Germ. blozs = nudus; Scot. blait = nudus (Jamieson); Dan. blød; Swed. blödlig = soft; the Dan. and Swed. blott, blotted, = stripped, are borrowed from Germ.; Ivar Aasen distinguishes between blau = shy, and blaut = wet, damp; blauðr and blautr are no doubt only variations of the same word]. I. soft, Lat. mollis, in a good sense; this sense of the word remains only in a few compds, v. above, and in a few phrases, e. g. frá blautu barns beini, from babyhood, Fms. iii. 155, Magu. 522, Al. 71; b. fiskr, freshest (soft) fish, Bs. i. 853, opp. to harðr (dried) fish; in Swed., however, it means soaked fish: in poetry, b. sæng, a soft bed, Gisl. (in a verse): of stuffs, but only in less classical writers or translated romances; b. purpur, Bret. 32; lérept, Sks. 400 A; dúnn, Mart. 126; blautir vindar, soft breezes, Sks. 214 B: a single exception is, Edda 119, fjötúrin var slétt ok b. sem silkirama, soft and smooth as silk lace. 2. = blauðr, faint, imbecile; blautir menn, Al. 34, Fas. i. 161: a paraphrase of blauðr in Fm. 6.

II. but commonly metaph. = soaked, wet, miry, [cp. Swed. blöt, and the phrase, lägga sit hufud í blöt, to beat one's brains: cp. also bleyta, mud; bloti, tbaw; blotna, to melt]; þar vóru vellir blautir, því at regn höfðu verit, Eg. 528; keldur blautar, 266; þeir fengu ekki blautt um Valbjarnar-völlu, Bs. i. 509, etc.; cp. Scot. and North. E. soft road, soft weather, = wet, Scott's Black Dwarf, ch. 3 note.

blá, f., pl. blár, an ἄπ. λέγ. in a verse Ísl. ii. 233, where it seems to mean the billows, blue waves. Ivar Aasen records 'blaa' a Norse term for the blue horizon; cp. the Icel. phrase, út í bláinn (as from blár, m.), into the blue, of what is thrown away, words spoken without need or end. In the east of Icel. blá means a meadow covered with snow half melted away, Erik Jonsson, Dict. s. v.

blá-ber, n. pl., botan., Lat. vaccinium, as a cognom., Ann. 1393; aðal-bláber, vaccinium myrtillus, the bleaberry, Hjalt.

blá-brúnaðr, adj. dark blue coloured, of stuff, Bs. i. 506.

blá-djúp, n. the blue sea, i. e. deep, open sea, Bs. ii. 179, 181.

blá-eygr and -eygðr, adj. blue-eyed, Nj. 29, Fms. vii. 101, Hkr. iii. 250.

blá-fastr, adj. very strong, Karl. 551.

blá-fáinn, adj. with a blue polish [i. e. to paint], Sks., Rm. 26.

blá-feldr, m. a cloak of blue fur, N. G. L. i. 75.

blá-fjallaðr, adj. blue-black, epithet of the raven, Landn. (in a verse).

blá-góma, u, f. labrus luscus.

blá-gras, n. a sort of geranium, the g. pratense.

blá-grýti, n. blue hard stones rolled in the surf, Eggert Itin. § 477.

blá-hattr, m. scabiosa, Ivar Aasen; a cognom., Sturl. ii. 207.

blá-hvítr, adj. white-blue, Gh. 4.

blá-kaldr, adj. blue-cold, of purling water or iron, cp. the phrase, berja fram blákalt, hammering the iron cold, of obstinate, dogged reasoning.

blá-kápa, u, f. a blue cape or cloak. blákápu-maðr, m. a blue cloaked man, Gisl. 37.

blá-kinn, f. with a blue (black) chin, Landn. 201.

blá-klukka, u, f., botan. campanula rotundi-fovia, Hjalt.

blá-klæddr, part. blue-clad, Fms. iii. 116.

blá-leitr, adj. blue-faced, Karl. 5.

blá-lenzktr, adj. Ethiopian, from Bláland, n. Ethiopia, Nigritia, and North-west Africa in general; Blálendingar, n. pl. Ethiopians; cp. 625. 625, Al. 51, Rb. 568, Stj. 253, 254.

blá-mær, n. a black man, negro, i. e. an Ethiopian, Al. 51, Orkn. 364 (referring to A. D. 1152), distinguished from the Saracens and Arabians; three 'blámenn' were sent as a present to the German emperor Frederic the Second, Fms. x. 3: in romances blámenn are mentioned as a kind of 'berserkers,' q. v., Finn. ch. 16, Kjalnes. S. ch. 15; cp. Scott's Ivanhoe, note B.

bláman, f. the livid colour of a bruise, Stj. 46, Gen. iv. 23.

blá-mengdr and -mengjaðr, part. blue-mingled, Dipl. i. 168.

blá-merktr, part. marked, variegated with blue, Vm. 149, 153.

blá-mær, f. [moerr = moor, cp. landamæri, borders, Caes. Bell. Gall. vi. ch. 23], the blue moor, an ἄπ. λέγ. in the Norse poet Eyvind Skáldaspillir as an epithet of the sea about A. D. 960, Hkr. i. 154; cp. Landn. 54, which reads borðmærar, and attributes the verse to another poet. The word is still in use in Norway in the popular phrase, ut aa blaamyra; vide Ivar Aasen s. v. blaamyrt, the sea.

blána, að, to become black, livid, Nj. 203 (iron in fire); Hkr. i. 103 (of a plague-stricken corpse), Fms. ii. 42.

BLÁR, adj., fem. blá, neut. blátt, [Scot. bla, which has the Icel. sense of dark blue, livid: cp. A. S. bleow; Engl. blue; Germ. blau; Swed.-Dan. blå: cp. also A. S. bleo = colour], prop. Lat. lividus; of the colour of lead, Snót 231; blár senu Hel, cp. Engl. black as death, Eb. 314, cp. Edda 13; of the livid colour caused by a blow, in the alliterative phrase, blár ok blöðugr, Korm. 108; sárir eða lostnir svá blátt eðr rautt sé eptir, Grág. ii. 13; blár is the colour of mourning, tjalda blám refum, Fms. xi. 17; falda blá, to wrap the head in black, Ísl. ii. 351 (in a verse); cp. kolblár, Blámaðr, etc.; blár logi, a pale 'lowe,' of a witch's flame, Gullp. 5; of cloths; möttull, Nj. 24; kápa, 255; kyrtill, 184; mörk, stripes, Ld. 244. β. metaph. foolish, insipid; cp. bláheimskr; hann er ekki blár innan, a popular phrase, he is no goose.

blá-rendr, adj. [röndr], blue-striped; brækr, Nj. 184.

BLÁSA, blés, blásit; pres. bless, [Ulf. blēsan, a redupl. verb; Germ. blasen; Swed. blåsa; cp. Engl. blow (blast); A. S. blāvan; Lat. flare].

I. to blow, Lat. flare, of the wind; the naut. alliterative phrase, blásandi byrr, a fresh breeze, Fms. vii. 287; vindrinn blæs og þú heyrir hans þyt, John iii. 8.

2. act. to blow a trumpet, sound an alarm, with dat. of the people and the instrument, the act of blowing in acc.; b. liðri, Fms. vii. 287; var blásinn herblástr, sounded an alarm, ix. 358; b. liði (troops) til ofangaungu, Orkn. 350, Bret. 46; b. til stefnu, to a meeting, Fms. vii. 286; konungur lét b. öllum mönnum ör bænum, ix. 304; b. til þings, viii. 210; til héraðstefnu, ix. 255, v. l.: absol., þá bað hann b., sound the attack, viii. 403. β. to blow the bellows; blástu (imperat.) meir, Landn. 270 (in a verse), Edda 69, 70.

γ. to melt, cast, the metal in acc.; hann blés fyrstr manna rauða á Íslandi, ok var hann af því kalladr Raudabjörnu, Landn. 71, cp. Sks. 163; b. gullmálm, Bret. 4; sumir blésu ok steypu af málmni Guðs líkneski, Barl. 139; sem af glóanda járnþví er ákafliga er blásit í eldi, Fms. viii. 8; yxu tveir ór eiri blásnir (cast), Bret. 22.

δ. to swell, blow up; létt sem blægr blásinn, Fms. x. 308.

II. to breathe, Lat. spirare; svá sem andr blæsk af munn, Eluc. 4: to blow with the mouth, hann blés í kross yfir drykk sínum, Fs. 103; bléss hann á þá og sagði, með-takið þeir Heilagan Anda, John xx. 22; b. við, to draw a deep breath; hón blés við ok svarar, Clem. 50; jarl blés þá við mæðiliga, Fs. 10, Magu. 444: to sigh, of a sick man, Gisl. 47; b. hátt við, Bjarn. 24: without 'við,' Sturl. i. 20; b. eitri, eldi (of serpents or dragons), to snort, Edda 42; of a horse, Greg. 49.

2. theol. to inspire; Guð blés sínum anda (dat.) í brjóst honum, Fms. i. 142, 199; Guð blés henni því í brjóst, Stj. 160 (cp. innblástr). 3. b. móti e-m, to conspire against one, Fms. vii. 164: in the phrase, 'to blow not a hair off one's head,' Jarl mælti, at eingi skyldi b. hár af höfði Sveini, no one should dare to make a hair move on his head, Orkn. 252.

III. impers.: 1. medic. to 'boulne,' swell, from sickness, wounds, . . . the wound or swollen limb in acc.; hann svall svá ákaflega, at allan blés kviðinn, Bs. i. 319; sár Grims varð illa, ok blés upp fótinn, Dropl. 36, Grett. 153; hann blés allan, Bs. i. 116.

2. of land, to be laid bare, stripped of the turf by wind; hafði blásit hauginn ok lá silfríð bert, Fms. iv. 57.

3. in supine, and partic. the personal construction reappears; á Ormarstöðum þar sem er blásið allt, where all is stripped, barren, Landn. 280; meltorfa blásin mjök, stripped, barren, Hrafn. 27: medic., hin hægr geirvartan var blásin upp, 655 xxxii. 10; hans hárund var allt blásit, Fas. i. 286, Rb. 374; sýndist fótrinn blásinn ok kolblár, Grett. 152.

blá-saumaðr, part. blue-embroidered, Pm. 12.

blá-silfr, n. bad silver, opp. to skírt silfr; þrim tígum sinna skal b. vega móti gulli, tíu sinnum skírt silfr móti gulli, 732. 16: the proportion of bad to pure silver is thus as three to one.

blá-siða, u, f., cp. grásíða, a cognom., Ísl. ii. 52.

blá-stafaðr, adj. blue-striped; segl. b., Fms. x. 345.

blá-stjarna, u, f. the blue star, i. c. Hesperus, Snót 131.

blástr, rs, m., dat. blástri, blásti, Hom. 47; pl. blástrar.

1. to blast, Sks. 213. 2. breath; b. af lopti, Eluc. 19; málit görisk af blástrinum, Skálda 170: the blast of a trumpet, Fms. ix. 30: bissing of serpents, breathing of ubales (hvala blástr), Gullp. 8: blowing a bellows, Edda 70.

3. medic. swelling, mortification, Nj. 209, Dropl. 36, Bs. i. 182. comps: blástr-belgr, m. a bellows, Karl. 18. blástr-hol, u. the blow-hole of a whale. blástr-horn (blástrhorn), n. a trumpet, born, 655. 8, Rb. 372. blástr-járn, n. blast iron, cast, not wrought, Grág. i. 501, Jb. 345.

blástr-svalr, adj. cold blowing, Sks. 41, v. l.

blá-tönn, f. a cognom. having a blue, black tusk, Fas. ii. 390.

bléðja, að, [bláð], prop. to prune, lop trees and plants, Bs. ii. 165, N. G. L. i. 241: esp. in the metaph. phrase, b. af, to destroy, kill off one by one; mun hann svá ætla at b. hirðina, Fms. ii. 55, vii. 36, Fs. 96.

blægðr, m. [bleyg and blöyg, Ivar Aasen; Germ. pflock; Engl. plug], a plug, Krök. 56, where in pl.

bleik-álótrr, adj., bleikálingr, m., and bleikála, f. a dun horse with a dark stripe down the back, Nj. 81, Sturl. ii. 145, Grett. 91.

bleik-hárr, adj. auburn, Hkr. iii. 174, Fms. vii. 101.

bleik-hvítr, adj. of yellowish white colour, Hkr. iii. 250.

bleikja and bleika, u, f. chalk paint; draga með bleiku, Hkr. ii. 341, Fms. iv. 96. 2. salmo levis, Fél. i. 11.

bleikja, t, ð, [Swed. bleka; Germ. bleichen], to bleach; b. lérept, to bleach linen, Fas. ii. 71: in the phrase, b. hadda (cp. haddblik), of ladies, to wash and comb the hair, Edda 75.

BLEIKR, adj. [A. S. blāc or blac; Engl. bleached and bleak; Swed. blek; Germ. bleich and blass]:—pale, wan, of the colour of gold, Fms. v. 345; of bad silver, Grág. i. 500; of fruits, Stj. 161; of ripe barley fields, b. akrar, Nj. 112, and N. T. John iv. 35, a rendering of λευκός in the Gr.; of animals, a fawn-coloured horse is in Icel. called Bleikr, m., a mare Bleik, f., Flov. 33, Vigl.; an ox, Vápn. 21; of hair, auburn, Fær. 156; bleikt hár, the fair locks of a baby, Rm. 31, where 'bleak and bright' are alliterative; Homer's ξανθός is in Icel. rendered by bleik-hárr.

2. = Lat. palidus, the colour of ashes, pale from fright, loss of blood, or emotion, Fms. i. 216; fiskbleikr, pale as a fish, vii. 269; b. sem bast, pale as bast, etc.: of the moonshine, Sks. 627: the colour of death, því ligg ek b. í brúki, of a corpse mouldering at the bottom of the sea, Fms. vi. 376.

blek, n. ink, v. under 'blakkr.' blek-horn, n. an ink-born, Th. 76.

blekkiliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. [blakkr], delusively, Mar., Al. 36.

blekking, f. delusion, fraud, H. E. i. 506, Fms. x. 207, Hkr. iii. 112.

blekkja, t, að, [blakkr], to impose upon, Stj. 335, Fms. i. 215, Hkr. iii. 317, Magn. 466.

blendigr, m. a blending, mixture. 2. metaph. a being half man and half giant, not a downright giant (troll); b. en ekki fullkomit troll, Fas. iii. 179; b. þurs einn, Grett. 135.

BLESI, a, m. and blesóttir, adj. the blaze or white star on a horse's forehead, and as a pr. name of the horse himself, Landn. 70, Fms. vi. 414.

BLESTR and blesmæltr, adj. lispng, Skálda 170, Sturl. i. 60, Barl. 15.

BLETTR, s, m., pl. ir, [Engl. blot; Dan. plet], loc. a spot, blot, Fms. iii. 123 in a paper MS., the vellum MS. Fb. i. 228 reads 'fleckr:' blot, mjök grandvarr af blettum, without stain, blotless, 655 xxxii. 19: now much used in a loc. sense, a spot.

bleyða, u, f. [blauðr], a craven, Hkr. i. 338.

bleyðask, dep. to lose heart as a craven, Fms. vi. 312: impers. with dat., viii. 137.

bleyði, f. cowardice, Fms. ii. 306: softness, in a good sense (rare), Sks 496 B. comps: bleyði-maðr, m. a coward, Nj. 54, Fms. vi. 260.

bleyði-mannligr, adj. cowardly, Fms. ii. 69. bleyði-mark, n. a mark of cowardice, Tistr. bleyði-orð, n. a charge of cowardice Fas. ii. 530; leggja b. á bak e-m, Grett. 102.

bleyta, u, f. [blautr], mud, Clem. 35: mire, Hrafn. 27 (freq.)

bleyta, tt, to soak, moisten; b. hið, a hide, Fas. i. 289; leir, clay, Bret 106. 2. to soften, Greg. 38, 655 v. B (rare in that sense).

bleyti, n. soaking.

BLEZAN, bletza, mod. blessa, að, [A. S. bletzian; Engl. bless; akin to blót, blóta, denoting worship]:—to bless; an English word, which came to Icel. and Norway along with the Gospel; in Norway it never took root, and soon died out, and is at present unknown in Scandinavia whilst in Icel. it grew from a term of worship into a household word of endearment and affection; the guest or traveller is met with a 'Guð bless þig,' God bless thee, in reply to his greeting, 'hér sé Guð,' when enterin a house; it is also the reply to one returning thanks. The Norseman Swede, and Dane say, 'Guð signe dig' (cp. Germ. segnen), whilst 'signa (signare) in Icel. usage only means to make the sign of the cross. Blez is used as a standing epithet of the sun, blessuð sólin, the blessed sun so also the alliterative phrase, blessað barnið, the blessed bairn; blessað blessuð, in addressing, cp. Engl. bless you! In old writers it answers t Lat. benedicere: i. c. with acc., Stj. 28, 655 ix, 'benedicutus' þýðir b xxii, Fms. i. 230, K. Á. 120. β. with dat., rare and now unusual Guð b. fiskum ok fuglum, Stj. 18, Eluc. 40, Blas. 40; blessuð ertú meðal kvenna, N. T. Luke i. 28. 2. reflex. to give good luc. succeed.

blezan, f. a blessing, benediction, Bs. i. 562; bliss, Hom. 13, Greg. 7. compd: blezanar-andi, a, m. spirit of b., Stj. 242.

blezing, f. id., 655 viii. 2.

BLIAT, a kind of stuff, (for. word), El. 21, Str. 12, 79.

BLIK, n. [cp. Germ. blick and blitz; Engl. blink (in ice-blink, the gleam of distant ice-fields), and blaze], gleam, sheen, Scot. glint, Lanitor; barach þýðir b. eðr brjánda, Stj. 389. The original notion fulgor is alien to Icel.; even agnablik, q. v., is of Dan. and Germ extraction; a dead-calm sea is in Danish hævblik and bliksstille, but Icel. blæja-logn. The gleam of metal (shields) is called blik, Edda 8 (poët.): of the sky, Breiðablik is the heavenly abode of the god Balé Gm. 12. 2. bleaching, Dan. bleg; blæjur á bliki, Fas. ii. (in verse); lérept á bliki, N. G. L. i. 381.

3. hadd-blik, Edda 77. II. (for. word), the vizor on a helmet, in writers of the 14 and 15th centuries, Fas. iii. 229, Ann. 1393.

blíka, u, f. light clouds foreboding storms, such as the Engl. call hare's tails, (regn-blika, vind-blika), hence the saying, e-m lizt ekki a kuma, when matters look threatening; freq. in mod. usage, though no instance is on record in old writers. 2. medic. pallor, Dan. blegesot, l. ix. 201.

blika, ad, and blíkja, bleik, bliku, an old obsolete poet. form, of which only remain the forms, 3rd pers. pl. pret. bliku, fulgebant, Vkv. 6, s. i. 186 (in a verse); infun., blikja, Hkr. i. 96 (in a verse); 3rd pers. pl. pres. blikja, fulgent, Grág. ii. 170, in an old law form; part. blikjanda, da 231, [Lat. fulgere; Germ. blicken, cp. blitzen: Engl. to blink]—to am, twinkle, Lat. micare; the stars 'blika', the sun 'skín'; used of arms, ldir bliku þeirra við hinn skarða mána, Vkv. l. c.; bliku reið er Regini, Fas. l. c.; ú baki létu blikja (of the shields), Hkr. l. c.; skildir blika 1 Raudaskríðum, Nj. 143, cp. Grág. ii. 170; blikuðu þar skildir við, 724; blika við sólu, Fbr. 156; blikjanda (part.) böl, gleaming bale, the hall of Hela, Edda l. c.

lík-hvítr, adj. ubi-bleating, of a shield, Lex. Poët.

líki, a, m. a drake; andar-bliki, ædar-bliki, etc.

líkna, ad, [bleikr], to become pale, Fms. ii. 240, iv. 166, Flov. 41.

líkra, ad, [Ivar Aasen blikra, to flutter], to blink; impers. with dat., ldst hann eigi hírða þó bónda blikraði nokkut til hvat fyrir væri bliðskraði, felt a shudder, Grett. 100 A (rare).

línda, ad, [Ulf. blindfan], to blind, deprive of sight, Fms. v. 268, vii. 7, Stj. 619; metaph. to deceive, Fms. ii. 46, v. 217, Gpl. 215.

líndi, f. indecl., mod. blíndni, blindness, Stj. 620, Greg. 35; taph., Blas. 47; snjó-blínda, u, f. snow-blindness; nátt-blínda, nyctana; dag-blínda, hemeralopia, FéI.

líndingr, m. a blind or bidden peg, of pegs used to pin planks together aways, serving the same purpose as tongue and groove, Edda 232.

líndleikr, m. blindness, Fms. ii. 241, Stj. 122; metaph., H. E. i. 462.

LINDR, adj. [Ulf. blínds; A. S. and Engl. blind; O. H. G. plint; n. blind; common to all Teut. idioms, whilst Gr. τυφλος and Lat. us are of different roots]—blind; blindr borinn, born blind, Nj. i, Fms. vi. 389; proverb, misjafnir eru blínds manns bitar; metaph., 1 gen., mjóð er mannfólkít blínt ens sanna um forlögín, blínd as to fate, Al. 23; neut. as adv., dark, ekki er þat blínt hvers þú eggjar, s. iv. 133; Einarr lét sér þat blínt vera, i. e. said that he knew nothing of it, viii. 10; Grettir segir at þeim var blínt til þess at ætla, a blindster for them to guess at, Grett. 148 A; a thick storm is called 'blíndr'; (but the Icel. call thick darkness 'níða-myrrk', Dan. bælgmörke); Germans call blind what is bidden and cannot be seen; this is rare in

., yet blind-sker, a hidden skerry (rock) in the sea; cp. also blindingr, líða, u, f. [Ulf. bleiþei], literally blitiveness, but in usage gentleness, ce, of a woman; alla blíðu lét hón uppi við mik, Nj. 18; hófst þá at nýju b. (friendly intercourse) með þeim mágum, Fms. ix. 450; in l. usage, balminess of the air: fair words, blandishment, Sks. 540.

líða, ad, dep.=blíðask, Thom. 183.

líðka, ad, to render 'blithe', caress, coax, Ld. 286; reflex., Stj. 142.

líðkan, f. caressing, Stj. 186.

líðleikr and -leiki, m. mildness, balminess, of the air, Fms. x. 336, 336; blandishment, Pass. 31. 10.

líðleitr, adj. of mild countenance, Fms. xi. 215, v. l.

líðliga, adv. and -lígr, adj. blithely, graciously; taka, fagna e-m b. 4, Sks. 370, Fms. vii. 107, ix. 411.

líðlundadr and -lyndr, adj. of gentle disposition, Magn. 474.

líðlyndi, n. genule disposition.

líðlæti, n. caressing, Bs. i. 140, Greg. 51.

líðmæli, n. fair words, blandishments, Fms. x. 307, i. 109, Pass. 6. 6.

líðmæltr, adj. bland, Sturl. ii. 189, Fms. xi. 215, vii. 239.

LÍÐR, adj. [Ulf. bleijs, oiktrípan, misericors; and bleipi, oiktrípós; eiþjan, oiktrépan; A. S. blíðe; Engl. blithe; Hel. blíþi=clarus, as]—in usage, mild, gentle, soft; blíðr is a word of endearment, but denotes the outward expression of mildness in the eyes, look, voice, also has a bad sense, bland, fawning, enticing: alliterative proverb, er þætandi hönd; b. ok þekkr, Bs. i. 131; b. orð, Fms. x. 292; k kátr, Eg. 45; blíð ok eþtírmál, mild and charming, of a wife, Nj. of the air, blítt veðr, mild, balmy, Fms. ii. 76, vi. 378; metaph., ok strítt, ubetþer it pleases or not, in fine weather or foul, Sturl. i. fyrir blíðu né stríðu, neither by fair nor foul means, 625. 95; veable, eigi blíð baksletta, Al. 90; e-m er blíðara, 'tis more pleasant one, one is better pleased, Fms. x. 353.

líðskapr, ar, m. mildness, kindness, friendly terms, Fms. i. 102; blíðskap, m. friendly terms, Eg. 740, Stj. 192.

líðveðr and blíðvindr, n. mild weather, 655 xii. 2, Thom. 167.

líðyrði, n. blandishment, Sks. 530, Fms. x. 292.

LÍFA, [Germ. bleiben; akin to leifa, q. v.], to remain; this word taken from Luther's Bible into Icel., and is used by theol. writers; sing. is never used, but pret. pl. blífu, Pass. 50. 4.

LÍGJA, ð, [Swed. bliga = to gaze, stare], to gaze; b, augum, Mirm. 70.

blígr, m. staring, gazing, a cognom., Eb.

blína, d, to stare, gaze, [cp. A. S. blin.]

blístra, u, f. the mouth-piece of bellows, Vm. 177.

BLÍSTRÁ, ad, to whistle, Fb. i. 553, Fas. iii. 337, Bret. 26; the phrase, b. í spor e-m, prob. a hunting term, to run whistling after one, Korm. 62, Fms. viii. 60. 2. of snakes, to hiss, Fr.

blístran, f. (blístr, n.), whistling, Mar. 61, Konr. 58 (Fr.): the mod. phrase, standa ú blístri, to be swollen like bellows, is curious, and indicates a relation between blása and blístra.

bljúgr, adj. [Swed. blyg], bashful, shy, modest, Pass. 16. 14 (penitent).

blóssi, a, m. a flame, Dan. bluss, (mod.), Pass. 3. 2.

BLÓTI, a, m. [blautr], a thaw, melting of snow (freq.)

blotna, ad, to become moist or soft: metaph. to lose courage; blotnar hann eigi við þat, Ísl. ii. 330, Fms. viii. 137.

BLÓÐ, [Ulf. bloþ, common to all Teut. idioms]—the blood, Lat. sanguis; 'dreyri' is cruur; 'hlaut', q. v., is blood shed in sacrifice, cp. Eb. ch. 4, Nj. 107, Eb. 242, Fms. i. 46; nema, láta (mod. taka) b., to take, let blood (blóðlát), vii. 269, Grág. ii. 133; ganga blóði, to have a hemorrhage, Bs. i. 337; the phrase, blanda blóði saman, to mix blood together, Ls. 9, refers to the old heathen rite of entering foster-brotherhood, defined in Gísl. 11, Fbr. 7, Fb. ii. 93, Fas. iii. 376; metaph. offspring, Stj. 47; hjárt-blóð, bear's blood; dauda-blóð, life-blood, gore: metaph. compound words are rare. In poets 'blood of Quasir' means poetry; the blood of the giant Ymir, the sea, vide Edda 47. 5. FéI. ix. 198, 199, records many medic. compounds, blóðfall and blóðlát, menorrhagia; blóðhella, congestio ad viscera; blóðkýli, ulcus; blóðmiga, haematuria; blóðnasir, f. pl. epistaxis; blóðrás, menorrhagia; blóðsött, dysentery; blóðhrækjur, haemoptysis; blóðspýja, haematemesis, etc. Other compounds:

blóða-brúðgumi, a, m., Stj. 42. Exod. iv. 25, the 'bloody husband' of the Engl. text. blóðs-akr, m. the field of blood, Matth. xxvii. 8.

blóðs-litr, m. blood-colour, 656. 6, Eb. 26. blóðs-peningar, m. pl. the price of blood, Matth. xxvii. 6. blóðs-úthelling, f. a shedding of blood, Fas. i. 73.

blóð-band, n., mostly in pl. a bandage to stop bleeding, Bs. i. 625, 376.

blóð-bogi, a, m. a gush of blood, Nj. 210, Fms. vi. 419, Sd. 178.

blóð-drefjar, f. pl. splatterings of blood, Grett. 111 A.

blóð-drekkur, m. one who drinks blood, Fas. iii. 573; epithet of a fox.

blóð-dropi, a, m. a drop of blood, Bs. i. 45, Fms. i. 270.

blóð-drykkja, u, f. drink of blood, Thom. 150.

blóð-fall, n. and blóðfalls-sött, f. bloody flux, dysentery, Bs. i. 317, ii. 108, 618.

blóð-flekkur, m. a fleck or stain of blood, Eb. 242.

blóð-fors, m. a gush of blood, Nj. 244.

blóð-fullr, adj. full of blood, Fbr. 12.

blóðga, ad, to make bleed, Nj. 82; reflex. to become bloody, Str. 78.

blóði, a, m., poet. a brother, consanguineus, Edda (Gl.), Haustl. 14.

blóðigr, adj., contr. blóðgir, -gum, etc.; in mod. usage uncontracted through all cases, and so it is freq. in old writers, e. g. blóðigan (acc.), Bjarn. 50 vellum MS.; blóðugir (dat. f.), Grág. ii. 192; bloody, Nj. 19, Ísl. ii. 271, etc.

blóð-kýll, m. a blood-bag; metaph. a blood-sucker, a leech, Fms. ii. 317.

blóð-lauss, adj. (blóðleysi, n.), bloodless, Str. 5.

blóð-lát, n. loss of blood, Hkr. ii. 24; medic. blood-letting, bleeding, Fms. vii. 269, Str. 28, N. G. L. iii. 15.

blóð-látinn, part. having blood let, bled, Bs. i. 848, Str. 27.

blóð-lífr, ar, f. pl. clotted blood, Nj. 171.

blóð-ligr, adj. bloody, Stj. 161.

blóð-litr=blóðslitr, Landn. 335.

blóð-lækr, jar, m. a river of blood, Fms. vi. 407.

blóð-maðkr, m. a maggot bred in putrefying blood, Stj. 91.

blóð-mikill, adj. plethoric.

blóð-nætr, f. pl. bloody nights; it may originally have been a law term, the night next after a murder or homicide; in the proverb, blóð-nætr eru hverjum bráðastar, i. e. the thirst for revenge rises highest during the bloody nights, Glúm. 344, Fs. 39, Bs. i. 142.

blóð-rauðr, adj. blood-red, Fms. i. 217, Art. 120.

blóð-rás, f. a blood-rush, hemorrhagia, Ld. 140, Fms. x. 395, Pr. 473; mod. also circulation of blood.

blóð-refill, m. the point of a sword, Nj. 246, Eg. 216, 306, Hkr. i. 70; a curious word; does refill here mean a snake? cp. refill-stigar, semita serpentis; cp. also Korm. ch. 9.

blóð-reiðr, adj. very wrath, Fms. iv. 182.

blóð-risa, adj. ind. [Germ. blutrise = saucius, cruentus], bruised and bloody, Eb. 46; in the alliterative phrase, blár ok b., blue and bloody from flows, Grett. 147, Stj. 91; as to the root, cp. hár-ramr, the outside, but hold-rosa, u, f. a tanner's term, the inside of a skin; yet blóðrisa in the MSS. is not spelt with a y.

blóð-segi and blóðsigi, a, m. a clot of blood, Bs. i. 334, Fas. iii. 296.

blóð-skuld, f. blood-guill, Pass. 2. 10, 25. 7.

blóð-sött, f. monthly courses, Stj. 318, 256; dysentery, FéI. ix. 199.

blóð-spýja, u, f. a spitting of blood, Fs. 153, Ann. 1393.

blóð-stjarna, u, f. the bloody star, prob. Mars, Rb. 110.
 blóð-stokkinn, part. (mod. blóð-storkinn, stark with blood), gory all over, Bs. i. 626, Níorstr. 3.
 blóð-straumur, m. a stream of blood, Fas. i. 499.
 blóð-sveiti, a, m. a bloody sweat, Pass. 2. 12 (Luke xxii. 44).
 blóð-tjörn, f. a pool of blood, Eb. 200.
 blóð-vaka, u, f. [vekja blóð, cp. vökvi, m. fluid], a law term, the letting blood flow; svá hart at b. yrði, Bs. i. 871.
 blóð-varmr, adj. blood-warm, warm as blood, Karl. 240.
 blóð-ær, f. a sheep (ewe) fit for slaughter, Fms. xi. 36.
 blóð-æsar, f. pl. (v. æsar), a bad reading instead of blóðnætr, Bs. i. 142.
 blóð-örn, m. 'blood eagle,' in the phrase 'rista b.,' to cut a blood eagle, a cruel method of putting to death in the heathen times, practised, as it seems, only on the slayer of one's father if taken alive in a battle: the ribs were cut in the shape of an eagle and the lungs pulled through the opening, a sort of vivisection described in Orku. ch. 8, Fas. i. 293, 354 (Ragn. S.); so king Ella was put to death by the sons of Ragnar Lodbrok, Fms. iii. 225: it is called a sacrifice to Odin of the victim, cp. the phrase, ok gaf hann Óðni til sigs sér, Orkn. l. c.; the old rite 'marka geirsoddi,' q. v., is analogous, not identical; cp. also upon the subject Grimm D. R. A., and Hm. 139.
 blóð-öx and -ex, f. bloody axe, a cognom. of King Eric, Fms.
 BLÓM, n. [Ulf. bloma, Matth. vi. 28; Engl. bloom; Germ. blume; A. S. blōma, Engl. blossom, answers to blómstr, qs. Lat. flos. The Icel. has not the primitive verb. Hel. blóan; Germ. blüben]:—a bloom, blossom, flower; hvít blóm á grasi, El. 24; lauf ok blóm ok aldin, 19; gras ok blóm, flowers, Edda 145 (pref.), Fms. v. 345; þótti honum á einum kvistinum fegstr b., Bård. 164; ekki þótti henni blómit (the bloom or blossom on the tree) svá mikit á vera sem hön vildi, Ísl. ii. 14; kóróna af dýrliugum blómum, Bret. COMPS: blóma-mikill, adj. rich-blossoming, Bård. l. c. blóm-berandi, part. bloom-bearing, Stj. 14. blóm-beranligr, adj. id., Fms. iii. 174.
 blómgan, f. blooming, flourishing, Stj. 29.
 blómganligr, adj. blooming, Bs. ii. 183. blómgast, ad, dep. to flourish, Magn. 502, Sks. 610: part. blómgast, adj. which has blossom upon it, Fms. xi. 9.
 blómi, a, m. [Ulf. bloma, n., Matth. vi. 28; v. blóm]. 1. pl. blooms, blossoms, flowers; þar hróna aldri fagrir blómar, Clem. 40; hafa rauða blóma (acc. pl.), 655 xiv; allskonar fagra blóma, Fms. x. 241; heilir blómar, flōres integri, Magn. 468; this use is now rare. 2. sing. blooming; þat tré stendur ávalt síðan með blóma, in full bloom, 656 A. 23. 3. esp. metaph. full bloom, prosperity; stóð hagr hans með hinum mesta blóma, Ísl. ii. 14, Band. 2, Fms. v. 346; í blóma aldrs síns (æsku blómi), in the bloom of life, viii. 29, vii. 108 (with blooming face); á þeirra veldi var b. mjök langa hríð, Ver. 45, Sks. 758. 4. the yolk in an egg; the phrase 'lifa sem blómi í eggi,' to live like the yolk in an egg, i. c. to live in perfect comfort.
 blómstr, rs, m. bloom, blossom; allan aksrins blómstr, Stj. 29; setan b., Sks. 630 B, 499; 'flos' is rendered by b., Stj. (pref.): in writers since the Reformation always neut.; allt eins og blómstríð eina, and glóandi blómstríð fritt, Hallgrím, Snót 45; blóm and blómstr are synonymous, but blómi in common usage is metaph. = prosperity.
 BLÓRAR, a, m. [cp. Dan. blår, the refuse of flax, and the phrase, at kaste een blår í ójnene, to throw dust in one's eyes], in Icel. only used in the metaph. phrase, at göra e-t í blóra við e-n, to commit an offence behind another person so that suspicion falls upon him: and blóra-maðr, m., en ef svá verður sem niær er grunn á at, dóttir þín sé með barni, þá eru þar fáir blóramenn, ok vil ek ganga við faderni, Fas. iii. 344.
 BLÓT, n. [Ulf. renders λατρεία and ἑβάσµα by blutinassus, cp. also A. S. compd words such as blótmónd],—gener. worship, and worship including sacrifice, spec. a sacrificial feast or banquet, used freq. in pl. when in general sense; the feasts were, esp. the three great annual feasts, when the winter set in (Oct.), at Yule time and mid-winter (Dec. or Jan.), and when the summer began (April), Ó. H. ch. 94-96, Hkr. i. 139 sqq., Hák. S. G. ch. xvi sqq., and the verse of Kormak, Hañt maðr ask né eski, id., Hkr. (Ó. T.) i. 272, Fms. x. (Ó. T.) ch. 50, Fas. (Hervar. S.) i. 531, 512, Hervar. S. the last chapter, Eb. ch. 10, Eg. 257, Fb. i. 22; at Úpp-sólum voru blót svá mikill í þann tíma, at hvergi hafa verið meiri á Norðrlöndum, Fas. i. 255; þann vetr fékk Ingólfr at blóti miklu ok leitaði sér heilla um forlög sín, Landn. 33, cp. Hým. 1, Vsp. 62; þar voru áðr blót ok hörgar, Bs. i. 20 (Kr. S.), Fms. i. 131, Eb. 4; there are mentioned álfa-blót, dísa-blót, etc. 2. blót, or more correctly blœti, n. an idol, amulet, engi maðr skal hafa í húsum sínum, stalla, við eðr blót (blœti) . . . nú ef blót (blœti) er funnit í húsi láslausu, mat-blót (dough idol) eðr leir-blót (clay idol) gört í mannslíki af leiri eðr deigi, þá . . . N. G. L. i. 383, 389; cp. Fs. (Hallfr. S.) 97. III. metaph. in Christian times the name of the heathen worship became odious, and blót came to mean swearing, cursing, freq. in Sturl. and Bs., and in mod. usage, Sturl. ii. 106, 152, iii. 101, Fs. (Vd.) 36, Gísl. The terms for swearing in the heathen times were 'troll, gramir,' etc., q. v.
 BLÓTA, in old use a strong (and originally a redupl.) verb, blóta—blét—blétu—blóttinn; pres. blœt, and with the suffixed negative blœtka (I worship not), Stor. 22 (the Ed. wrongly blœtka, without change of vowel); this form also occurs K. Þ. K. (Kb.) ch. 7, the Ed. 1853 has wrongly blœt(a)r, but a few lines below blótar (weak), probably altered from blœtr; pret. sing. blœt, Hkr. (Yngl.) 56, 269; pl. blœtu, 56; subj. blœtim, 623, 61; imperat. blœtt, Am. 75; part. blœttinn, and sup. blœttíð are freq., Hkr. i. 34, 35, 239, Landn. 47, Fas. i. 255: more freq. weak, blóta, ad; pres. blótar, blótast, Fas. i. 87, Fbr. 78; pret. blótáði, Landn. 224, 291, 322, Bs. i. 6 (Kr. S.), Nj. 272, Gísl. 140, Fær. 272, Fas. i. 463, 531, Bret., Fms. ii. 203, Hkr. i. 34, 35, Ísl. ii. 109, Fs. 50; only the weak sup. and part. are rare in old writers; blótuð, Hom. 153 (Norse); blótáð (sup.), Bs. i. 5 (paper transcript): [Ulf. blotan (redupl. verb) = λατρεύειν, ἑβέσθαι, cp. gufbloteins = παράκλησις, gufblöstreis = θεοσεβής; A. S. blōtan = immolare; O. H. G. blōzan; the root is probably akin to blœtsian, Engl. to bless]:—gener. to worship, to worship with sacrifice; with acc. of the being worshipped, but dat. of the object sacrificed; thus b. hof, land, furs, goð, álfa, vættir, to worship temple, grove, force, gods, elves, beings; but b. mönnum, þrælum, kvikendum, to sacrifice with men, thralls, beasts, i. e. to sacrifice, slay them: also used absol.: I. with acc. or absol. to worship; skal þórlófr b. ok leita heilla þeim bræðrum, Eg. 257, 623, 61, Landn. 40, Hkr. i. 34 sqq., Fs. 41; heinnar vættir, Nj. 272, Fær. 139, cp. Bret. 84, 94, Landn. 36, Ib. ch. 7, Bs. i. 25; b. til fríðar, sigs, langlífs, árs, byrjar, to make a sacrifice for peace, victory, long life, good season, fair wind, Hkr. i. 239, 34, 56, ii. 97, Fs. 173; of the worship of natural objects, at Giljá stóð steinn (a stone), er (acc.) þeir frændr höfðu blótáð, Bs. i. 5, Harð. S. Ísl. ii. 109; hann blótáði lundinn, he worshipped the grove (cp. Tacitus, sacrum nemus), Landn. 224; hann blótáði forsin, 201: worship of men (rare), Gríms sonar þess er blóttinn var dauðr fyrir þokka-sæld ok kalláðr Kamban, 47, Fb. ii. 7; þau voru bæði blótuð, Edda 83; b. hof, in the phrase, heidnir menn hof b., Grág., Ísl. ii. 381; blót er oss ok kvíðjat, at vér skulum eigi b. heidit goð, né hauga né hörga, N. G. L. i. 18: worship of animals, Ógvaldr konungr blót kú eina, Hkr. i. 269, Fas. i. 255. β. with dat. (extremely rare); blótar hann einum gölt (sic!), prob. corrupt = einm (acc.) gölt, Fas. i. 187 a paper transcript. II. with dat. to sacrifice: sacrifices of men are recorded, Hkr. i. 34, 35, 56, 239, Gísl. 140, Eb. l. c., Fas. i. 452 (Hervar. S.): slaves and criminals were esp. sacrificed, thus representing the executions of modern times; heidngjar blóta enum verstum mönnum, ok hrinda þeim fyrir björg ok hamra . . . enir heidnir menn höfðu þá stefnu, ok tóku þat ráð at b. tveim mönnum ór hverjum fjórðungi, Bs. i. (Kr. S.) 23: captives, Ó. H. ch. 131; kom þat ásamt með þeim at hafa Hallfréð til blóta, Fs. 102; b. þrælum, Fms. x. 323; b. mönnum ok fé, Fs. (Vd.) 50, Am. 75, Fms. i. 174: a sort of self-immolation is recorded Fb. ii. 72. III. to curse, swear, vide blót II; with dat. or absol., hann blótur hestinum, Fbr. 78; eigi kvíð ek því þótt biskup blóti mér eðr banni, Bs. i. 708; blótuð verð þú, Hom. 153: reflex. blótast, to go about swearing, Fms. viii. 294: vide Maurer, Bekehr. ii. 195 sqq. blótan, f. sacrificing, 623, 57. II. cursing, swearing, Fms. viii. 293.

 blót-audigr, adj. rich in sacrifices; b. hof, Mart. 110.
 blót-bað, n. a sacrificial bath, Post. 138.
 blót-biskup, m. a beathen priest, Bret. 34 (Laocoon), Fms. x. 323.
 blót-bolli, a, m. a sacrificial bowl, Fms. ii. 309.
 blót-dómr, m. idolatry, Stj. 106.
 blót-drykkja, u, f. a sacrificial feast, Fms. x. 393, cp. Eg. 257.
 blót-fé, n. a sacred or accursed thing, Stj. 363 (Josh. vii. 11), Edda 83.
 blót-godi, a, m. a beathen priest, Post. 656 B. 10, Hkr. i. 8. blót-grofi, f. a sacrificial den in which to kill the victim, Fs. 49, 50.
 blót-guð, m. a beathen god, Fms. ii. 76.
 blót-gyðja, u, f. a beathen priestess, Hkr. i. 8. blót-haugr, m. a sacrificial mound or cairn, cp. N. G. L. i. 18; defined Fms. v. 164; about cairns of that kind among the Perms (Bjarmar), vide Fms. iv. 299, cp. also Hkr. i. 16.
 blót-hús, n. a beathen house of worship, sometimes less than the 'hof,' used like Christian chapels for private worship, Fms. ii. 263, Ísl. ii. 109; a temple in general, Stj. 391.
 blót-jarl, m. a surname of the heathen lord Hacon, Fms. ii. 122.
 blót-kálf, m. the golden calf, Stj. 312.
 blót-kelda, u, f. a fen near the heathen temples, in which animals (or men) were killed by drowning, Ísl. (Kjaln. S.) ii. 404.
 blót-klæði, n. garments used at sacrifices, Fs. 42.
 blót-kona, u, f. = blótyðja, Stj. 428.
 blót-lundur, m. a sacred grove, Fms. xi. 382, Stj. 391, cp. Landn. 222.
 blót-maðr, m. a beathen worshipper, Bret. 57, Eg. 179, Fms. i. 294, 263, Andr. 65.
 blót-matr, m. the meat of the victims, Hkr. i. 139.
 blót-naut, n. an ox worshipped and enchanted, Hkr. i. 269, Fms. iii. 132, Fas. i. 255; hence in mod. use a mad bull is called blótneyti. n. 2. a bull to be sacrificed, a heathen sacrifice connected with the old holmgang, q. v., Eg. 506, cp. Korm. 212, 214, Gísl. 80.
 blót-neyti, id., Fas. i. 425.
 blót-prestr, m. a beathen priest, Sks. 575.

blót-rísi, a, m. an enchanted champion (?), ἀπ. λεγ., Korm. 242. blót-skapr, m. idolatry, beaten worship, sacrifice, Fms. i. 31, xi. 134, 650, N. G. L. i. 351: things belonging to worship, Stj. 391, Fagrsk. Fms. v. 239.
blót-skógr, m. = blótlundur, Stj. 650, Róm. 199.
blót-spánn, m. divining rods or chips used at sacrifices, cp. Tacitus m. ch. x, and Amm. Marc. xxxi. 2. in the phrase, fella blót-spánn, os sortidicos jactare; þá feldi hann b. ok vitraðist svá, at hann di hafá dagráð at berjast, Fagrsk. 40, in the passage of Vellekla (the ee of the narrative) the poet uses the word teim lautur, çs. hlautar-n, the rod of the sacrificial blood, cp. the phrase, kjósa hlaut-vid, Vsp. and hrista teima, Hým. 1; þá feldi Ónundur blótspánn til, at hann di verða viss . . ., Landn. 193; síðan var felðr blótspánn, ok gékk fréttn, at . . ., Fas. i. 526, 452 (Hervar. S.) blót-staðr, m. a place of beaten sacrifice, Hom. 175, Hkr. i. 6, Fms. o, Fagrsk. 29.
blót-stallr, m. a beaten altar, Stj. 391.
blót-tré, n. a sacred tree, Mart. 115.
blót-trygill, m. [trög], a sacrificial trough, Fs. 108.
blót-veizla, u, f. a sacrificial banquet, Hkr. i. 139, Fms. i. 35, iv. 237.
blót-vidr, m. = blótlundur, Greg. 80.
blót-villa, u, f. a beaten berry, Fms. x. 243.
blót-völlr, m. a bewitched field; eigi munu vér nú optar ganga appá mn, Fms. viii. 157.
blúda, ad, to doze; éta blundandi, Edda 72; cp. mod. ganga blindandi, to blinking, half asleep; b. augum, to shut the eyes, Bs. ii. 481.
blúndr, m. sleep, dozing; a nickname, Landn. 80.
blúnd-skaka, ad, to blink with the eyes, Stj. 81.
blúnd-stafir, m. pl. rods causing sleep, in the phrase, bregða blúnd-m, to awake, Sdm. 3; cp. stínga svefnþorn, Ísl. Þjóðs. blýgð, f. [bljúgr], shame, Gret. 159 A, Vigl. 20. COMPD: blýgðar-s, adj. (-leysi, n.), blameless, Gret. 161 A. blýgða, ð, to put to shame, Fas. iii. 655, Fms. iii. 89. β reflex. to shamed, Sks. 494; = bleyðast, to lose heart, Fas. iii. 411; b. síu, to be med, to repent, (mod.)
blýgðan, f. shame, disgrace, nakedness, Pass. 24. 3. COMPD: blýgð-r-lauss, adj. (-leysi, n.), impudent. blýglast, ð, = blýgðast, Sks. 494. v. 1. blýst, n. [Dan. blus], a torch, Dipl. iii. 4, Bs. i. 804. blý, n. [Germ. blei; O. H. G. pli; Lat. plumbum], lead; sökkva b., Blas. 49, Dipl. v. 18. COMPDS: blý-band, n. a leaden band, l. x. 172. blý-kleppr, m. a plummet, Rb. 472. blý-ligr, leaden, 732. 11. blý-skeyti, n. a leaden missile, Stj. 74, Pr. blý-steyptr, part. cast in lead, Sks. 392. blý-stíka, u, f. an iden candlestick, Vm. 38. blý-stokkr, m. a leaden box, Sd. 191.
blýngur, adj. heavy as lead.
blýþekja, þakði, to thatch, i. e. roof, with lead, Bs. i. 235.
blýþa, dd, to bleed, to flow, of blood, Fr. 473; blæddu nasar hans b-nasir, Bs. i. 521: impers., e-m blæðir, one loses blood, Grág. ii. 11, . iii. 113, Sd. 139, Eb. 242: absol., laust hana í andlititð svá at di, Nj. 18: metaph. phrase, e-m blæðir e-t í augu, it bleeds into one's i. e. one is amazed at a thing.
blýþja, u, f. [cp. Germ. blege = limbus, prob. derived from A. S. bleob = ur; prob. an Engl. word, cp. Enskar blæjur, Eb. 256]—a fine, red cloth; hon hafði knytt um sík blæju, ok vóru í mörk bla, Ld. a burial sheet, Am. 101, Gkv. 1. 13, Grág. i. 207: the cover of a Gg. 7, 25, Rm. 20, Bb. 1. 12, Eb. 1. c. cover of an altar table, Vm. Dipl. iii. 4: poët., hildar b., a shield, the b. of the mast = the sail, etc.: a veil. COMPDS: blæju-endi, a, m. the end of a b., Ld. 1. c. blæju-horn, n. the corner of a b., Ld. 246. blæju-hvalr, m. [Germ. blau], a kind of whale, alburnus, Edda (Gl.) blæzr, m. [cp. Engl. to blow], a gentle breeze, puff of air, esp. with a on of warmth; b. hitans, Edda 4; kenna blæ (to feel a draft) í andliti Clem. 35; vinds blær, Stj. 78; þá kom kaldr blær (a cold stream of & Skútu or jarðhúsínu, Rb. 319: poët. the blue sky, the pure air, undir himins blíðan, Pass. 25. 10; blærinn hýrnar við dagrið hvert, Bb. 8. 2. in mod. usage metaph. the air, character of a speech, writ- or the like; sögu-blær, frásagnar-blær, rit-blær. II. a ram, (Gl.), hence blesma.
blesma, adj. ind. [blær, a ram], a ewe or goat at heat, Grág. i. 427, 212, Stj. 178; cp. yxna of a cow, breyma of a cat, ræða of a sow.
blökku-maðr, m. [blakkr], a blackamoor, sometimes a negro, (mod.) blökumenn, m. pl. Walachians, and Blökumanna-land, Walachia, Fms. v. 283; hann sviku Blakumenn í útfaru, Broc. Runstone, 79.
blöskra, ad, to blench: 1. absol., hann brá sér eigi við né kraði, Fms. vii. 157; hyggt at vandlega hvárt ek b. nökkut, xi. 150, so also Jóns. 47, and Fb. i. 198. 2. e-m blöskrar—ok bað þá at þja hvárt honum blöskraði nökkud, Sturl. iii. 43—ought perhaps to hann; the mod. use is constant, 'e-m b., one blenches, is shocked at thing.

BOBBI, a, m. a snail-shell, Eggert Itin., hence metaph. puzzle, in the phrase, komast í bobba, to get into a puzzle.
BOÐ, n. [Ulf. buzus; Germ. bote, gebot; cp. bjóða]. 1. a bid, offer; konungr bauð (offered) at fá Gunnari kvánfang ok ríki níkit . . . Gunnarr þakkaði konungi boð sitt, Nj. 46; bjóða boð fyrir e-n, to make bids or offers for one, Lv. 25, Vigl. 28; hvat er í boði, what is the bidding? metaph. from an auction, O. H. L. 71. 2. a feast, wedding, banquet, to which the guests are 'bidden'; veizlan fór vel fram, en er boði var lokit, when the feast was past, Nj. 25; fóru þeir allir til boðsins, the wedding feast, Fms. xi. 106; kyndi boð vera at Marðar, Nj. 4; hafá e-n í boði sínu, to entertain at one's feast, Fms. i. 40; haust-boð, Gisl. 27. 3. [A. S. bebod], a bidding, commandment, Fms. ii. 30, 168, xi. 246; boð ok bann, v. bann. β. the right of redemption, a Norse law term; skal sá óðalsmaðr er boði er næstr brigið upp hefja, Gpl. 294; ok svá eigu þær boð ú jórdum jafnt sem karlar, N. G. L. i. 92, 94, 237. 4. a message; góra e-m boð, to call for one, N. G. L. i. 60. β. metaph. and a law term, a summons, being an arrow, axe, or the like sent to call people to battle or council, as symbolical of the speed to be used, or of the punishment to be inflicted, if the summons be not obeyed; cp. herór; so the Swed. budsticka or budkaffe, (till tings, till tings), budkafen går kring borg och dal! (Tegner), and the fiery cross in the Lady of the Lake. In Icel., at least in the west part, a small wooden axe is still sent from farm to farm to summon people to the manials-thing in the spring; vide Gpl. 433 sqq., Jb. 180, and the compds boðburðr, boðfall, boðskurðr, boðleid, etc. COMPDS: boðs-maðr, m. a guest at a feast, wedding, Nj. 11, Fms. ii. 193. boðs-vátttr, m. a witness to a boð, 4. β, N. G. L. i. 237. boðs-vitni, n. id., N. G. L. ii. 99, v. 1. boða, ad, 1. to announce, proclaim, esp. as rendering of the eccl. Lat. praedicare, to preach the Gospel, as a missionary; b. Kristni, to preach Christianity, Nj. 157; trú, 158, Fms. x. 298, H. E. i. 510; sjáið, eg boða yör mikinn söguud, Luke ii. 10. β. hón boðaði þangbrandi heicni, Nj. 160. 2. to bid, order, with dat.; lét hann b. á sínu fund öllum öldungum, Stj. 649; hann boðaði saman mörgu stormenni, Bs. i. 470; konungr boðaði honum á sínu fund, the king bade him come, Fær. 131; b. e-n af löndum, to outlaw one, bid him off the land, Fms. vii. 17, 21. 3. to bode, signify; hvat þetta mundi boða, Eb. 270; e-m b. e-t, he has a foreboding of it; mundi þar til draga sem honum hafði fyrir boðat, Eg. 75; impers., e-m boðar ótta, one feels uneasy, Sturl. i. 109, where Bs. i. 410 spells bjóða ótta (better). boða, u, f. = boð, a command, N. G. L. i. 237.
boðan, f. announcement; b. dagr Maríu, the feast of the Annunciation, the 2nd of July, Mar.: preaching, proclaiming, 623. 11.
boð-burðr, m. a carrying of the boð, 4. β, Gpl. 432, 436, Jb. 180.
boð-fallr, n. dropping the boð, 4. β, Gpl. 435, Jb. 182.
boð-fasta, u, f. a fast ordered by the canonical law, H. E. i. 393.
boð-ferð, f. the course of a boð, 4. β, H. E. i. 393. boð-greizla, u, f. = boðburðr, Jb. 184, Gpl. 437 B; vide boðreizla.
boði, a, m. 1. [vide boð 4, cp. A. S. boda], a messenger, used in poetry; b. hildar, the messenger of war, Lex. Poët.: in prose, Thom. 5, and in compds such as sendi-boði, a messenger, fyrir-boði, a foreboder. 2. esp. as a nautical term, a breaker 'boding' hidden rocks; þeir undruðust mjök þenna atburð, er b. féll í logni, þar er eugi maðr vissi, at b. hefði fallit fyrr, ok djúp var undir, Magn. 488, Fms. ix. 415, x. 324, xi. 10, Eg. 161, Bs. i. 420, Grág. ii. 385: the phrase, vera sem b. á skeri, like a breaker on a skerry (rock), of a hot-tempered man, never at rest. COMPDS: boða-fallr, n. the dash of breakers, Fas. iii. 506. boða-slóð, f. the surf of breakers, Orkn. 322.
boð-leggja, lagði, to offer for sale, Gpl. 302, v. 1. boð-leið, f. a law term, the due course of a boð [4. β] from house to house, defined in Gpl. 432, N. G. L. i. 348, Jb. 181: in the phrase, fara (rétt) b., to go from house to house in due course, skipping none: perhaps the true reading Nj. 185 is, fara boðleið til búðar; some MSS. have bóuleið.
boð-ligr, adj. fit to be offered, Háv. 55.
BOÐN, f. [cp. A. S. byden = dolium, Icel. byðna; Norse biðna, Ivar Aasen], one of the three vessels in which the poët. mead was kept, Edda 47, etc., hence poetry is called the wave of the boðn, Lex. Poët.
boð-orð, n. order, bidding; Guðs b., Hom. 34, Ver. 25, Bs. i. 67, Magn. 448: as a law term, an ordinance, K. Á. 192: = penance in eccl. sense, K. Þ. K. 26: in mod. usage, esp. the Ten Commandments (Tíu-laga-boðorð, or with the article, Boðorðin), Sks. 671, cp. Pr. 437, where they are termed 'Laga-orð'. COMPDS: boðorða-breytni, f. alteration of a b., Bs. i. 545. boðorða-brot, n. breach of a b., Fms. vii. 108. boð-orða-maðr, m. *a public officer, N. G. L. i. 409.
boð-reizla, u, f. = boðgreizla.
boð-ríflr, adj. fair bidding, Fms. iii. 122 (poët.)
boð-seti (beð-seti, N. G. L. i. 315), a, m. a dub. Norse term, the benches in a law-court (?), the bar (?); hverri þeirra manna er gengr fyrir boðseta (acc. pl.) konung ok bæjarmenn, N. G. L. i. 323, 315; beðseti, çs. bekkseti (?). boð-skapr, m. a bidding, ordinance, Stj. 82, H. E. i. 471, 677. 6, Fms. ii. 61. II. in mod. usage, announcement.*

boð-skurður, m. [skera boð, to carve a boð, 4. β], a message, summons to a meeting, N. G. L. i. 153.

boð-sletta (boð-slotti, a, m., Gpl. 200), also boð-flenna, u, f. an intruder at a feast, an unwinvited guest, Jb. 110.

boð-slóð, f. = boðleið, Jb. 181.

boð-stóll, m., in the phrase, hafa e-t á boðstólum, to put a thing out for sale.

BOGI, a, m. [A. S. boga; Engl. bow; Germ. bogen], a bow, Nj. several times; skjóta af boga, 29, 96; benda b., Fas. ii. 88, Landn. 288, Fms. ii. 321, iii. 228; úlm-bogi, hand-bogi, lás-bogi, ý-bogi, q. v. 2.

metaph. an arch, vault, Sks. 116: the rainbow, Stj. 62: metaph., bera mál úr boga, to disentangle a case, Sks. 654; himin-bogi, the sky; blóð-bogi, a gush of blood; regn-bogi, a rainbow; ölm-bogi, an elbow. COMPS: boga-dreginn, adj. bow-shaped, curved. boga-háls, m. the tip of a bow, where the string is fastened, Al. 142, Fas. ii. 88. boga-list, f. archery, now used metaph. boga-mynd, f. the form of a bow, Fas. i. 271. boga-skot, n. bow-shot, shooting with a bow, Fms. ii. 169. boga-strengur, m. a bow-string, Nj. 115, 136. boga-vápn, n. a bow, Fms. viii. 184, v. 1.

boginn, adj. bent, bowed, curved, Al. 8; prop. a part. from a lost strong verb bjúgan; cp. Goth. bjúgan = κάμπτειν.

bog-maðr, m. a bowman, archer, Fas. i. 382, Ingv. 34, Lv. 63, Fær. 56, Fms. vi. 413. bogmanns-merki, n. the zodiacal sign, Arcitenens, Rb. 102.

bog-mannliga, adv. bowmanlike, Fms. ii. 450.

bogna, að, to become curved, bent, Hkr. ii. 365, Flov. 34: to give way, Fms. viii. 403, Al. 57.

bogra, að, to creep along bowed or stooping; þú boru bogtar (creeps) hann inn, Fas. i. 393; bogra fyrir e-m, to bow before one, Þorst. St. 53.

bog-sterkr, -styrkr, adj. stark or strong at the bow, Hkr. iii. 264.

bog-sveigir, m. bow-swayer, a nickname, Fas. ii.

BOKKI, a, m., means probably a be-goat, [cp. Germ. bock; Dan. buk; Engl. bock], a familiar mode of address; Höttir heiti ek, bokki sæll, and, skaltu nú bana mér, bokki, my good fellow, 'old buck,' Fas. i. 66; muntú festa, bokki, tindinn í kambí mínum (the old woman addressing the bishop), Fb. iii. 446: stærri bokkar, bigger men, 352, vide stór-bokki.

bokkr, m. a buck, Lex. Poët.

bola, að, prop. to fell trees, to cut through the body (bolc), Fas. i. 106.

II. [boli, a bull], to bully; b. e-n út, to push one out, as a bull with the horns: reflex. bolast, a wrestling term, of two wrestlers pushing or butting at one another with their heads.

boldang, n. a sort of thick linen, (for. word.)

bol-fimligr, adj. slender, agile of body, Fas. iii. 372.

bol-hliff, f. a covering for the body, opp. to the helmet, Bs. i. 667.

BOLI, a, m. a bull, Boll. 336, Edda 99, Ísl. ii. 26; in Icel. esp. of a bull-calf, bola-kálfur, etc.

bol-járn = bolöx (?), Ingv. 13.

bol-klæði, n. pl. garments (coat, waistcoat) for the body, Grett. 147 A.

BOLLI, a, m. [A. S. bolle], a bowl, Stj. 310, Rm. 4; blótbolli, a measure = ½ ask, Gpl. 525; a pr. name, Ld.

BOLR and bulr, m. the bole or trunk of a tree, Sks. 555 B. 2. metaph. the trunk of a body, N. G. L. i. 80, Nj. 275, Fms. x. 213, Eb. 244, Anc. 4: the phrase, ganga milli bols ok höfuðs á e-m, to go through between one's trunk and head, i. e. to knock one quite dead, deal severely with, Ld. 244, Fb. 240. 3. an old-fashioned waistcoat.

bolungr, v. bulungr.

bol-vöxtr, m. the growth, form of the body; vel at bolvexti, a well-grown, stout man, Bs. i. 66, Fas. iii. 605.

bol-öx, f. [Swed. bolyxa], a pole-axe; in present usage opp. to skaröxi, a carpenter's axe, Stj. 401, Judg. ix. 48, Fms. ix. 357, Fbr. 179, Thom. 343, Ingv. 24, Vápn.

boppa, að, to wave up and down, onomatopœtic and common.

BOFS, n. an onomatopœtic word, [Germ. bumps], bump or plump; mikit fall, svá at b. kváð í skrokkinum, Þórd. 16. β. the faint bark of a dog: also bopsa, að.

borá, u, f. a bore-bole, Grett. 125, 133, Fas. i. 393, Vm. 65. COMPD:

boru-fóli, a, m. a Norse law term, a stoien article put into an innocent man's house; even if officers ransacked a house without having their persons searched, and find something, þá er b. ok liggir ekki búanda við, then it is b. and the farmer is free, N. G. L. i. 255.

BORA, að, [Lat. forare; A. S. borian; Engl. bore; O. H. G. poran], to bore; to bore holes in, Fms. ix. 447, Ld. 116, Edda 48, 49, Eb. 182, D. I. i. 243; metaph., b. atsig at e-n, to do a thing thoroughly, v. atsigur: reflex., borast fram, to press one's way through a crowd, Fms. v. 180, Fb. ii. 112.

BORÐ, n. [Ulf. baurd, in fothbaurd = ὀρθόδοξον; Hel. bord = margo; A. S. borð; Engl. board]. 1. a board, plank, Lat. tabula; tók hann þá borð ok lausa viðu, ok rak um þvera stofuna, Grett. 140, N. G. L. i. 100. β. of a ship, the side (cp. starboard, larboard); höggur hann þá tveim höndum borð (sides) skútunnar, ok gengu í sundr borðin (the planks) um tvau rúm, Nj. 19; þeir Erlingr hjuggu raufar í drómundinum, sumar í kaflí niðri, en sumar uppi á borðunum, Fms. vii. 232, Nj. 42; hence the nautical phrases, á borð, on each side; á tvau borð, á bæði borð, on both sides, Eg. 171; með endilöngum borðum, Fms. ii. 273, Eg. 122; leggja borð við borð = sýbyrða, to lay a ship alongside of another, so as to board, Fas. ii. 534; bera skip borði, to make the bulwarks rise, Fms. ii. 218; fyrir borð, overboard, Eg. 124, Fms. xi. 140; á borði, on land, Jb. 327; borð á stjórni = stjórni-borði, the starboard side, Gpl. 518. The planks in a ship's side have different names, e. g. aur-borð, skaut-borð, sól-borð. 2.

metaph. phrases, at vera mikill (litill, nokkur) borði, to be of a big (or lowly) bearing, metaphor from a ship floating high out of, or deep in, the sea, Eg. 8, Sturl. iii. 196: verða (allr) fyrir borð borinn, to be (quite) thrown overboard, i. e. ill-used, Eg. 126, Fær. 234; verða allr fyrir borði, id., Ölk. 35; hans hlutr mundi eigi fyrir borð vera borinn, id., Rm. 239; e-n brestr á borði, to fail, be beaten (metaphor from rowing), Fms. ix. 507; taka skamt frá borði, to fall short, Lv. 45; ganga at borði við e-n, to come to terms, yield, submit, Bs. i. 889; gékk Egill tregt at borði um þetta mál, E. was hard, unyielding, 696; hverigum skyldi úhætt, nema þeir gengi at borði við hann, unless they came to terms with him, 727, 778; á annað borð, on the other hand; harðr maðr á annat borð, a hard one to pull against, Fms. xi. 39; but also on the other hand, otherwise, else; hann vildi með engu móti kalla á þormóð sér til bjargar, þó at hann félli ofan á annat borð, though he was sure to tumble down otherwise (i. e. unless he called), Fbr. 88; hence freq. in mod. usage, e. g. ef eg á annað borð göri það, i. e. if I do it at all: navig., ganga til borðs, á borð, to go to one's business, Fagrsk. 167, Bárð. 166. 3. [A. S. bord = labrum], the margin between the rim of a vessel and the liquid; er nú gott berandi borð á horninu, Edda 32; hence, fjöru-borð, the shore between big and low water, vide 33, 34; cp. the saying, fullt skal frömuum bera, þó skal borð á vera, i. e. it is clownish to bring a cup full to the brim, and, fullt skal föntum bera og ekkert borð á vera. II. a board, table, Lat. mensa; rísa frá borði, to rise from the board, from table, Rm. 17, or simply and ellipt. rísa, 30; borð is freq. used in pl., as in the old halls small tables were set at meal time, and removed after the meal; hence phrases, borð (pl.) ofan (upp) tekin, the tables being removed, cp. Virgil's mensisque remotis, Nj. 176, Fms. i. 41, iv. 265, v. 126, Bs. i. 854, Eg. 408; til þess er borð fóru brott, 551; setjast undir borð (pl.), to sit down; sitja undir borðum, to be at table, Nj. 68, Eb. 306; ganga undir drykkju borð, Fms. iii. 93; koma undir borð (acc. pl.), 96; ganga til borða, iv. 114, 129; koma til borðs (sing.), 202, cp. Ó. H. 86, Fms. iv. 246; sitja yfir borðum, iii. 155, iv. 113; sitja yfir matborði, v. 126, viii. 212; sitja yfir borð (acc. pl.), id., Bs. i. 843; the rhyming phrase, vera þar at orði, sem hann er ekki at borði, vide Safn i. 91. It was the custom for kings or princes to give audience or receive poets whilst sitting at table, Fms. vi. 195, Eg. ch. 63. β. maintenance at table (cp. Engl. board and lodging); vera á borði með e-m, B. K. 124, D. N. (Fr.): of a chess-board, Bs. i. 635. COMPS: borða-munnr, m. difference in the height of ships (in battle), Fms. viii. 292, cp. 288. borða-víti, n. pl. a 'board-fee', scone, cp. víti, Fms. iii. 155. borðs-tilgangr, m. going to table, Fms. iii. 155.

borða, að, to sit at table, eat, dine, Fas. iii. 219.

borð-búnaðr, m. table-service, Eg. 94, Fms. i. 292, iv. 262, Orkn. 226.

borð-diskr, m. a plate, Fas. iii. 222, vide diskur; (now freq.)

borð-dúkr, m. a table-cloth, Nj. 176, Hkr. ii. 189, cp. Fms. vi. 322, Rm. 28.

borð-fasti, adj. maintained at one's table, Sks. 259.

borð-fjóð, f. a plank, Sturl. ii. 109.

borð-færi, n., in the phrase, taka sér borðfæri, = ganga til borðs, vide above, Grág. ii. 119.

borð-gestr, m. a guest at table.

borð-hald, n. one's 'board', fare, Edda 23, Hkr. ii. 36, Thom. 68.

borð-hár, adj. a ship rising high, Fms. ii. 314, Orkn. 362.

borð-hús, n. a room where the plate is kept, Dipl. iii. 4, v. 18, Sturl. iii. 191 C.

borð-hæð, f. the height of a ship out of the water, Fas. iii. 260.

BORÐI, a, m. [cp. Engl. border; O. H. G. porto; Germ. borti: prob. akin to borð]:—a border, Lat. limbus; byrða á borða (acc.), to embroider, Gkv. 2. 16; bregða borða, to leave off embroidering, 17; reikja borða, to embroider, Helr. i, Og. 18; b. ok hannyrðir, Fas. i. 430, 523; kona sat við borða, a lady sat embroidering, Fms. ii. 148; slá borða, to embroider, Fas. i. 113; cp. borð skögn, gná, etc., a poet. circumlocution of a lady, Lex. Poët.: tapestry, b. fimtigi alna, Dipl. iii. 4, Pm. 10, Bs. i. 77: of the tapestry of a church, esp. the choir, Nj. 6. 2. poet. a shield, Lex. Poët.

borð-ker, n. a cup at table, loving-cup, Hkr. iii. 181; b. er vá átta merkr, Bs. i. 76.

borð-kista, u, f. a box for keeping the table-service in, D. N. (Fr.)

borð-knifr, m. a table-knife, Ann. 1339.

borð-leiðangr, m. a levy commuted for victuals (Norse), D. N. (Fr.)

borð-lægr, adj., b. viðr, timber fit for cutting into planks, Vm. 176.

borð-maðr, m. a table-companion, Sks. 262.

borð-mikill, m. = borðhár, Fms. ii. 50, Hkr. i. 238.

borð-prestr, m. a 'board-priest,' who says grace at a bishop's table, Bs. ii. 129.

borð-prýði, n. the ornaments of a table, Fas. iii. 374.

borð-sálmr, m. a 'board-psalm,' grace, Bb. I. 15 (Mark xiv. 26).
borð-siðir, m. pl. rules for behaviour at table.
borð-skutill, m. a small movable table, Bs. i. 537, Mar.
borð-stokkr, m. the bulwarks of a ship, Grett. 125.
borð-stóll, m. a chair used at table, D. N.
borð-sveinn, m. a butler, waiter, Mag. 66; cp. skutilsveinn.
borð-tafl, n. a chess-board, Sturl. ii. 184, v. 1.
borð-vegr, m. = borðstokkr, Bs. ii. 50, 179, Mar. borð-vers, m. = borðsálmr, N. G. L. i. 406.
borð-viðr, m. boards, planks, Fms. viii. 374, D. N. borð-pak, n. a 'tatch' or covering of planks, Hkr. ii. 11.
borð-þekja, þakti, to cover with planks, Fms. v. 331.
borð-pili, n. the sides of a ship, Gkv. i. 7.
BORG, ar, f., pl. ir, [Ulf. burgs = πόλις, and once Nehem. vii. 2 = castellum; A. S. burg, burh, byrig, = urbs and arx; Engl. borough burgb; O. H. G. þuruc, þurc; late Lat. burgus; Ital. borgo; Fr. g; cp. Gr. πόργος; the radical sense appears in byrgja, to enclose; cp. berg, a hill, and bjarga, to save, defend. Borg thus partly answers own (properly an enclosure); and also includes the notion of Lat. arx, ἀκρόπολις, a castle. Old towns were usually built around a hill, th was specially a burg; the name is very freq. in old Teut. names owns.]
 I. a small dome-shaped hill, hence the Icel. names of s built near to such hills, v. Landn. (Gl.) Hcl. once uses the word in sense, 81; v. the Glossary of Schmeller; brann þá Borgarhraun, þar bærim sem nú er borgin (viz. the volcanic hill Eld-borg), Landn. 78; þum upp á borgina (the hill) ok tölum þar, Ísl. ii. 216; er borgin er kend, Landn. 127; Borgarholt, -hrauni, -dallr, -höfn, -fjörðr, -lækr, -lir; Arnarbælis-borg, Eld-borg (above) in the west of Icel. It may questioned, whether those names are derived simply from the hill on h they stand (berg, bjarg), or whether such hills took their name old fortifications built upon them: the latter is more likely, but no mation is on record, and at present 'borg' only conveys the notion of ill'; cp. hólar, borgir og hæðir, all synonymous, Ním. 2. 99. II. all, fortification, castle; en fyrir innan á jörðunni gördu þeir borg Þ) umhverfis fyrir öfriði jötna... ok kölluðu þá borg Miðgarð, Edda p. also the tale of the giant, 25, 26; borg Ása, Vsp. 28; þeir höfðu steinvegg fyrir framan hellismunnann, ok höfðu sér þat allt fyrir borg ter, (fortification), Fms. vii. 81; hann let göra b. á sunnanverðu hafði (Murrey), Orkn. 10, 310, 312, 396, Fms. i. 124, xi. 393, Eg. ; the famous Moussaburg in Shetland, cp. Orkn. 398. III. y, esp. a great one, as London, Hkr. ii. 10; Lisbon, iii. 234; York; Dublin, Nj. 274; Constantinople, Fms. vii. 94; Nineveh, Sks. ; Zion, Hom. 107, etc. This sense of the word, however, is bor from the South-Teut. or Engl. In Scandinv. unfortified towns have or -by as a suffix; and the termin. -by marks towns founded by the es in North. E. COMPDS: borgar-armr, m. the arm, wing of z, Fms. v. 280. borgar-greifi, a, m. a borough-reeve, bur-grave el.), Stj. borgar-görð, f. the building of a fort, Edda 26, Fms. 180. borgar-hlið, n. the gate of a fort, Edda 26, Stj. 350, Hkr. 7, Ver. 25. borgar-hreysi, n. the ruins of a fort, Karl. 101. borgar-klettr, m. a rock on which a fort is built, Fms. viii. 284. borgar-kona, u, f. a townswoman, Stj. 426. borgar-lið, n. a gar- ar-göf. borgar-lím, n. lime for building a fort, Bret. 106. borgar-lýðr, m. townfolk, Fms. viii. 416, v. 1. borgar-máðr, m. wnsman, citizen, Eg. 244, Fms. i. 103, Sks. 649, mostly in pl., Lat. ivis is rendered by b., Hom. 17. borgar-múgr, m. the mob of y, Fas. i. 4. borgar-múrr, m. a city-wall, Stj. 352. borgar- , m. city-manners, urbanity, Clem. 27. borgar-smíð, f. the ling of a town (fort), Stj., cp. Edda 28. borgar-staðr, m. the of a town, Edda 152. borgar-veggur, m. the wall of a fort (town), n. 376, Fms. i. 104, Hkr. i. 217, Ver. 24. Borgar-þing, n. the th political subdivision (þing) of Norway, founded by St. Olave, cp. i. L. 23, and Munch's Geography of Norway. borga-skipan, f. eographical list of cities, Symb. 32. borga, að, [Engl. to borrow and bargain; Germ. borgen; related to rja and bjarga; O. H. G. þorgen only means parcere, spondere, not care. In Icel. the word is of foreign origin; the indigenous expres- are, lúna, ljá, to lend; gjalda, to pay; selja, veðja, to bail, etc.; word only occurs in later and theol. writers]: — to bail; vil ek b. Árna biskup með mínum peningum, Bs. i. 770 (thrice): now obsol- ers this sense hardly occurs. borgun, borgun, f. bail, security, Bs. i. 749, 770, Dipl. v. 14, Stj. ED: borganar-máðr, m. a bailsmán, Bs. i. 770, Jb. 112, Band. 33. borgari, a, m. [for. word; Germ. bürger; Dan. borger], a citizen, L. iii. 144; rare and hardly before A. D. 1280. COMP: borgara- r, m. civic rights, id. borg-firzkr, adj. one from the district Borgarfjörðr, Landn. borg-hlið, f. = borgarhlið, Edda 30, Bret. 94. borgin-móði, a, m., poet. name of the raven, bold of mood, Lex. Poët.

borgin-orðr, adj. cautious in words, reticent, reserved (= orðvart), Fms. vi. 208; at present b. and borgin-mannligr, adj., mean vain-glorious, braggart.
borr, m. (com. bor-járn, n.), a borer; stórviðar-borr, skipa-borr, Od. ix. 384; metaph. the pipe of a marrow-bone, Eg. (in a verse). II. a less correct form of börr, q. v.
BOSSI, a, m. [Swed. buss; cp. Germ. bursch], a boy, fellow; occurs once in the Jomsv. S., Fms. xi. (in a verse), from A. D. 994. It is still in use in Icel. in the compd word hvata-buss, a boyish fellow who is always in a bustle; hence also hvatabuss-legr, adj. hurried.
BOTN, m. [Lat. fundus; A. S. botm; Engl. bottom; Icel. botni; Germ. boden; Swed. botten; Dan. bund] — the bottom; of a vessel, tunni-botni, kistu-botni, etc., Nj. 133, Sturl. ii. 107, Hkr. ii. 245: the bottom of other things, e. g. of a haycock, Eb. 324; marar-botni, the bottom of the sea. β, the head of a bay, firth, lake, dale, or the like; fjardar-botni, vatns-botni, vágs-botni, dals-botni: Botni is a local name in Icel., Fms. xi. 125; in pl. even = bays, nú er at segja hvat móts gengr við Grænaland og botnum þeim er fyrir eru nefndir, MS. A. M. 294; Hafs-botnar, Trolla-botnar, the Polar Sea between Greenland and Norway; the ancients fancied that these bays were the abode of the giants.
botn-hola, u, f. a pit; in the phrase, at vera kominn í botnholu, to have got into a hole, i. e. into a scrape, metaphor from fox-hunting, Sturl. ii. 62, Fms. viii. 186.
bóand-, v. búand-BÓFI, a, m. [Germ. bube, büberl, spitzbube, v. Grimm], a knave, rogue, in Icel. only in a bad sense; cp. the rhyming phrase, þjófar og bófar, thieves and knaves; no reference from old writers is on record (though it is common enough at the present day), except that in Eb. it is used as a nickname, Freysteinn Bófi; in Swed. it occurs as a pr. name, Baut. 1478, 1483.
bóg-lím, m. pl., poet. = arms, Lex. Poët. bóg-lína, u, f. bow-line, Edda (Gl.) BÓGR, m., old acc. pl. bógu, Nj. 95, Fms. v. 163, etc.: mod. bóga; old dat. bægi, Hlt., Vkv. 31, Stj. 249, [A. S. bóg; Dan. baug; Engl. bow of a ship; and in Old Engl. bowes are the muscles of the shoulder]: — the shoulder of an animal, (arm of a man); á hinum hægra bæginum, Stj. 249; ek hjó varginn í sundr fyrir aptan bóguna, Nj. l. c., Fms. l. c.; lær uxans ívan ok báða bóguna, the shoulder-piece of the ox (the Ob. bóguna, Edda 45; cp. bægsli or bæxli, the shoulder of a whale or dragon, v. Lex. Poët.: — the bow of a ship, v. bóglina above. 2. mod. metaph. of the side of a person or thing; á hinn, þann bógin, on this, on that side; á báða bóga, on both sides, etc.
BÓK, ar, f. [Lat. fāgus; Gr. φηγός; A. S. bōc; Engl. beech; Germ. buche (fem.); Swed. bok; Dan. bøge, etc.]: — a beech, Edda (Gl.), Lex. Poët. Owing to the absence of trees in Icel., the word rarely occurs; moreover the collect. beyki, n., is more freq.
BÓK, gen. bókar, but also in old writers bækr, pl. bækr, [Ulf. renders by bōca the Gr. βίβλος, γράμμαρα, ἐπιστολή, etc.; A. S. bōc; Engl. book; Germ. buch (neut.); Swed. bok; Dan. bog]; the identity between bók fāgus and bók líber seems certain; the gender is in all Scandinavian idioms the same; modern German has made a distinction in using buche fem., buch neut.; both are akin to the Gr.-Lat. fāgus, φηγός; cp. also the analogy with Gr. βίβλος and Lat. líber (book and bark): bók-stafr also properly means a beech-twíg, and then a letter. In old times, before the invention of parchment, the bark of trees was used for writing on]: — a book. I. the earliest notion, however, of a 'book' in Scandinv. is that of a precious stuff, a textile fabric with figures, or perhaps characters, woven in it; it occurs three or four times in old poems in this sense; bók ok bláa, bjartar váðir, Skv. 3. 47; bækr (bækr) þínar enar bláhvítu ofnar völdundum (of bed-sheets?), Hdm. 7, Gh. 4: bók-rúnar, Sdm. 19, may refer to this; or is it = runes engraved on beech-wood? II. a book in the proper sense. Icel. say, rita and setja saman bók (sögu), to write and compose a book (story); old writers prefer saying, rita 'á' bók (dat. or acc.) instead of 'í', perhaps bearing in mind that the earliest writings were on scrolls, or even on stones or wooden slabs—barbara fraxineis pingatur runa tabellis; they also prefer to use the plur. instead of sing. without regard to volumes (as in Engl. writings); það finst ritad á bókum, Fms. i. 157; á bókum Ara prests hús Fróða, iii. 106; historia ecclesiarum á tveim (sjau) bókum, Dipl. v. 18; á bókum er sagt, Landn. (pref.); á bókum Enskum, id.; á bók þessi (acc.) lét ek rita fomar frásagnir, Hkr. (pref.); but svá segir í bók þeirri sem Edda heitir, Skálda 22; þá hluti sem frammi standa í bók þessi, 159; svá sem hann (viz. Ari) hefir sjálfr ritad í sínum bókum, Ó. H. 188; þeir er Styrmir reiknar í sinni bók, Fb. ii. 68; hér fyrr í bókinni. III. a book, i. e. a story, history (Saga), since in Icel. histories were the favourite books; cp. Íslendinga-bók, Konunga-bók, bók Styrmis; Landnáma-bók; bækr þær er Snorri setti saman, Sturl. ii. 123. It is used of the Gospel in the law phrases, sem búar vírða við bók, vinna eíð at bók (bókar-eíðr), of a verdict given or an oath taken by laying the hand upon the Gospel, Grág. (þ. þ.) several times; as the Engl. phrase 'to swear on the book' is common: of a code (of law) = Jóns-bók, after A. D. 1272 or 1281,

Bs. i. 720, 723, vide Ann. those years; hafa bók even means to bold the book, i. e. to bold the office of lögmaðr (law-man, judge); þóðr Narfa son hafði bók, Ann. (Hol.) A. D. 1304; á bókarinnar vegna, on the part of the book, i. e. the law, D. N. ii. 492. Mod. phrases: skrifa, rita, semja bók, to write it; lesa í bók, to read it; þú syngja á bók, to sing from a book; fletta bók, to turn over the leaves; lita, blaða, í bók, to peruse, look into a book (hann lítir aldrei í bók, he never looks into a book); lesa bók ofan í kjólinn, to read a book carelessly, v. lesa bók spjaldanna í milli, to read it from end to end:—sálma-bók, flokka-bók, a hymn-book; kvæða-bók, ljóða-bók, a book of poems; sögu-bók, of histories; lög-bók, of laws; Guðs orða-bók, God's word-book, a religious book:—also of MSS., Flateyjar-bók (Cod. Flateyensis), Orms-bók, Uppsala-bók, Konungs-bók, Stabarfells-bók, Skálholts-bók, etc.:—phrases relating to books: það er allt á eina bókin lært, all learnt from the same book, i. e. all of one piece (esp. denoting one-sidedness); blind er bókláuss maðr, blind is a bookless man; læra utan-bókar, to learn without book, by heart; bókvit, 'book-wit,' knowledge got from books; mannvit, mother-wit, common sense; allra manna vit er minna en þeirra er af bókuum taka mannvit sitt, Sks. 22:—also, setja e-n til bækur, to set one to book, i. e. put one to school in order to make him priest; berja e-n til bækur, to thrash one to the book, i. e. into learning, Bs. i.; a book has spjöld, boards; kjöl, keel, back; snið, cut; brot, size. COMPS: bóka-gull, n. gold for gilding books, Vm. 117. bóka-görð, f. the transcription (or writing) of books, Bs. i. 168. bóka-kista, u, f. a book-box, Bs. i. 423, D. l. i. 402, Vm. 71. bóka-lectari, a, m. a reading-desk, lecturer, Vm. 91. bóka-list, f. book-love, learning, scholarship, Bs. i. 127. bókar-blað, n. a leaf of a book, Mar. bókar-bót, f. an appendix to a book, 1812. 72. bókar-eiðr, m. an oath upon the Gospel, Dipl. ii. 2. bókar-eiðstafr, m. the wording of a b., D. N. bókar-lag, n. a lawful prize fixed in the code, Dipl. v. 5. bókar-skeyting, f. a written deed, Gpl. 225. bókar-skrá, f. an old scroll, Am. 100. bókar-stóll, m. a reading-desk, Vm. 22, 9. bókar-tak, n. the touching the Gospel in taking an oath, D. N. bókar-vitni, n. witness upon the Gospel, Gpl. 400, Jb. 276, D. N. bóka-skápr, m. book-shelves, (mod.) bóka-steinn, m. paint to illuminate MSS., Bs. i. 341. bóka-stokkr, m. a book-case, Pm. 112. bóka, að, to affirm by oath on the book (Gospel), Gpl. 151; bókaðr eiðr, vitni, = bókaeiðr, D. N. i. 81, ii. 230: mod. to record, register. bóka-fell, n. [A. S. bœfell], 'book-skin,' parchment, vellum, Skálda 165, Vm. 12, Dipl. v. 18: an A. S. word, as writing materials were imported from abroad. bóka-fróðr, adj. book-wise, learned, Barl. 129. bóka-fræði, f. book-knowledge, Stj. 46, Bs. i. 138, Barl. 12. bóka-hlaða, u, f. a library, (mod.) bóka-lauss, adj. (bók-leysi, n.), book-less, void of learning, Bs. ii. 125, Mar. 145: = utanbókar, Clem. 60. bóka-lest, f. [lesa], a legend of the saints, N. G. L. i. 347. bóka-ligr, adj. bookish, literary, Bs. i. 680. bóka-list, f. book-love, learning, Stj. 84, Sks. 16. bóka-ljóst, n. adj. so bright that one cannot see to read, Ann. 1341. bóka-lærdr, part. book-learned, Hom. 160: the clergy, Grág. ii. 165. bóka-mál, n. the book language, learned language, i. e. Latin, Hom. 138; en at bókmáli (in Latin) verða öll hundruð tírað, Sks. 57, Rb. 54, 516; Heilagtr b., the Holy Scriptures, Str.; blót þau sem fyrirbóðin eru at bókmáli, i. e. in the canon of the church, N. G. L. i. 351. bóka-mánuðr, m. a calendar month, Clem. 22. bóka-nám, n. (bók-næmi, Bs. i. 793), book-training, learning; setja e-n til b., Bs. i. 793; vera at b., to be a-reading, opp. to at riti, a-writing, 91, 265. bóka-rúnar, v. bók. bóka-saga, u, f. a written narrative; hlýða bók sögum, Bs. i. 108. bóka-setja, setti, to commit to writing, Sks. 6. bóka-skygn, adj. sharp-sighted at reading a book, Sturl. ii. 185. bóka-speki, f. book-wisdom, Greg. 17. bóka-stafr, m. [Hel. bœstabo; A. S. bœstæw; Germ. buchstabe], a letter of the alphabet, Skálda 168, Hom. 1. bóka-sögn, f. = bóksaga, Stj. 6. bóka-tal, n. a 'book-tale,' written computation, Rb. 4. bóka-vit, n. 'book-wit,' learning, erudition, Bs. i. 793. Acts xxvi. 24. bóka-víss, adj. 'book-wise,' a scholar, Landu. 13, Bs. i. 65, (a cognom.) BÓLA, u, f. A. S. bol and bolt, byld, = aedes, mansio; cp. byllian = aedificare; Engl. to build. In Scand. contracted in the same way as nál for naðal: ból and bíll are very freq. in Dan. local names, and even mark the line of Scand. settlements:—'built,' i. e. reclaimed and cultivated land, a farm, abode, esp. in Norway, where ból answers to Icel. jörð, Dan. gård; the value of the Norse farms is denoted by merk-ból, eyris-ból, or the like; taka bóli, to take a farm, Gpl. 328, 354. In Icel. this sense is almost obsolete, and only remains in such words as, ból-staðr, ból-festa; in local names as, Hörðu-ból, Sæ-ból, Lauga-ból, Ból-staðr, Bréiða-ból-staðr; in such phrases as, á bygðu bóli (opp. to wilderness), hvergi á bygðu bóli, i. e. nowhere, nowhere among men; and in a few law passages, Grág. ii. 279, Fms. x. 153. Otherwise, in Icel. ból and báli denote the lair or lying place of beasts or cattle; ból and kvía-ból, the place where sheep and cows are penned; bæla fé, to pen sheep during the night. B. a Den. Eg. 41, Fas. iii. 345. cp. Edda 74 (the lair of a serpent); þokur sumir heyljálma nokkura ok görðu sér af ból, a bed of bay, Fms. vii. 296; liggja í bólinu, to lie a-bed, of a lazy fellow; cp. bæli. BÓLA, u, f. a blain, blister (cp. Engl. boil), Stj. 272, Mar. 655 xxxii. 2. small pox, Ann. 1349: also bólina-sótt, f., Ann. 1310, 1347. bóla, að, impers., b. á e-u, to be just visible. BÓLA, u, f. the boss on a shield, a for. word, perhaps the Lat. bulia, Valla L. 213. bóla-festa, u, f. abode, Gpl. 354: in the phrase, taka sér b., to abide. bólinn, part. of a lost strong verb, swoln, Fas. iii. 307; b. sem nauð, Bs. i. 644: metaph. swollen with anger, reiði b., b. ilsku, Mar.; so, b. af reiði, Fas. iii. 630; cp. bylgja, belgr. bólgna, að, [Engl. 'boulne,' Levins Manipul.], to 'boulne,' grow swollen, Mar.: metaph., 655 xi. 2. bólgölr, m. a pig kept in the homestead, Nj. 109, v. l. bóla-skapr, m. housebold, D. N. (Fr.) bóla-staðr, m. a homestead; hon á þar bóla-staði mikla, Edda, where Ed. A. D. 1848 has bústaði, which is a more household Icel. word; hálfan b., half the farm, Grág. i. 396, ii. 222 A. COMPD: bóla-staðar-görð, f. the building a homestead, Eg. 130. BÓLSTR, rs. [A. S. bolster; Germ. polster], a bolster, N. G. L. i. 351, 362, Am. 6, Gkv. i. 15: rare and poet., metaph. in pl. piles of clouds, Bjarni 59; also sky-bólstrar. BÓN, f. [A. S. bone; Engl. boon, in Chaucer bone], a petition, Fas. i. 408, Ann. 1418; cp. bann. COMPS: bóna-maðr, m. a beggar-man, H. E. ii. 585. bóna-vefr, m. begging winter, Ann. l. c. BÓNDI, a, m.: older form búandi, or even bóandi, pl. búendr or bóendr; gen. búanda, bóanda; dat. búöndum, bóöndum, Edda 28, Grág. i. 370, 371, Ö. H. 203, 209-211, 215, Nj. 14, 220; búanda (gen. pl.), 211, 212, 215-217, 220; búöndum, 219; bóandi, Grág. i. 114, 157, 187, 377, Nj. 52; but the common Icel. form is bóndi, pl. bændr; gen. dat. pl. in old writers either bónda, böndum, or as at present keeping the æ throughout all plur. cases (bænda, (gen.) bændum): properly a part. act. from búa (turned into a noun subst., cp. frændi, fjándi), A. S. buan; Germ. bauer, and therefore originally a tiller of the ground, husbandman, but it always involved the sense of ownership, and included all owners of land (or bú, q. v.), from the petty freeholder to the franklin, and esp. the class represented by the yeoman of England generally or the statesman of Westmoreland and Cumberland: hence it came to mean the master of the house, A. S. bond and búsbond, Engl. husband. I. a husband-man. The law distinguishes between a gríð-maðr a labourer, búðsetu-maðr a cottager, and a búandi or bóndi a man who has land and stock. In the Icel. Commonwealth only the b. (but neither cottager or labourer) could act as judge or neighbour who gave witness in acquittal of a culprit (cp. pingheyjandi); the gríð-maðr could only partly be admitted to the tylptarkviðr, not to the búakviðr, Grág. i. 35, 114; ek ryð þessa trú menn ok kvíðurðinum fyrir þá sök, at þeir eru búðsetu-menn en eigi bændr, Nj. 236; cp. l. c. below, where the distinction between both is defined. The Norse law, on the other hand, distinguishes between hersir or lendir menn (barons) and búandi, cp. the interesting passage Fms. vi. 279 (verð mér þá lends manns nafn ekki at virðingu; nú vil ek heldr heita bóndi sem ek á ætt til); the Norse hauðr- or óðals-bóndi nearly answers to the Engl. 'yeoman.' In the more despotic Norway and Denmark, as in continental Europe, 'bóndi' became a word of contempt, denoting the common, low people, opp. to the king and his 'men' (híðr), the royal officers, etc.; just as the Engl. boor degenerated from A. S. gebūr, Germ. bauer, Dutch boer; and in mod. Dan. bønder means peasants, a boor; such is the use of bóndi in the Fms., esp. Sverr. S. and Hák. S. In the Icel. Commonwealth the word has a good sense, and is often used of the foremost men—Sighvatr bóndi, Sturl. ii. 78; Rafn bóndi (i. e. Sveinbjarnarsson), Bs. i. Rafn. S. several times; Rútr talaði þá til Marðar, hugsa þú svá um bóndi (Mord Gígja), Nj. 3; optar hefir þú gláðari verit, bóndi, eu nú, 174 (of Flosi); Njáll bóndi, id.; Þorsteinm bóndi, Illugi bóndi, Gunnl. S. Ísl. ii.; Björn bóndi, Safn i. 657; Björn bóndi Einarsson (Jórsalafari), Ann. 1393; Ari bóndi, Daði bóndi, Bs. ii. 474, 505; it is only opp. to the clerks (clergy) or knights, etc. This notion of the word (a franklin) still prevails in the mind of Icelanders. 2. a husband, A. S. búsbond; eigi var skegglauss þorvaldr bóandi þinn, Nj. 52, Grág. i. 371, 377, Fms. i. 149; hjá þvíllu búanda þins, Nj. 14. [The learned Icel. clergyman Eyjulf on Vellir (died A. D. 1747) has written a short essay upon the word bóndi, Icel. MSS. Bodl. no. 71.] COMPS: —(in mod. use always bænda-if pl., bónda-if sing.)—bónda-bani, a, m. a slayer of a bóndi, Fms. vi. 104. bónda-ból, n. (bónda-boor, m.), a farm, Grett. 96 A. bónda-dóttir, f. a bóndi's daughter, Eg. 24, Snót 18. bónda-eiðr, m. a bóndi's oath, Gpl. 67. bónda-far, n. a bóndi's ferry-boat, Hkr. ii. 292. bónda-fé, n. a provincial fund, Gpl. 11. bónda-fólk, n. a class of bændr, Fms. vii. 293. bónda-fylking (búanda-), f. a host of bændr, Fms. viii. 126. bónda-herr, m. an army of bændr, Fms. i. 162. bónda-hlutr, m. = bóndatíund bónda-hús, n. a bóndi's house, K. p. K. 26. bónda-hvíla, bóndi's bed, El. 9. bónda-kirkja (bíuanda-), u. f. the church belonging to the bóndi in Thingvall, where the parliament was held; bónda-kirkjugarðr, m. the churchyard to that church, vide Nj. 1. G. This church was erected about the middle of the 11th century, Kristni S., Fms. vi. 266. bónda-kona, u. f. a good wife of a bóndi, I. bónda-lauss, adj. husband-less, widowed, Stj. 420. bónda- u. f. the burial place of bændr, N. G. L. i. 368. bónda-lið, bándaherr, Fms. ii. 48. bónda-ligr, adj. farmer-like. bónda- u. f. a crowd, host of bændr, Fms. xi. 248. bónda-nafn, n. the title of bóndi, Fms. vi. 279, Gpl. 106. bónda-réttr (bíuanda-), right of a bóndi, Fms. ix. 135. bónda-safnaðr (-samnaðr) amúgr, Hkr. ii. 307, Fms. vii. 320. bónda-skapr, m. the state of bændr, opp. to the clergy, Bs. i. 590. bónda-son, m. the son of a bóndi, Eg. 232. bónda-tala, u. f., vera í b., to be told or counted by bændr, Fas. ii. 326. bónda-tíund, f. tithe to be paid by bændr, I. bónda-ungi, a, m. a young bóndi, Hkr. iii. 275. bónda- u. f. the elite of bændr; var þá gott b., there were choice bændr to be Sturl. i. 130, Landn. 236. bónda-ætt, f. a bóndi's extraction, I. 278. bónd, f. a begging path; in the phrase, fara b., to go begging from one house, Nj. 185; in mod. use, fara bónarveg (að e-m) is to enter however bodily. bónd, f. wooing, courtship; hefja b. við, to woo; síðan hóf þórofr sitt við Sigurð ok bað Sigríðar dóttur hans, Eg. 38, 97; vekja b., Nj. 17. COMPDS: bónorðs-för, f. a wooing journey; fara b., wooing, Nj. 16. bónorðs-mál, n. the business of wooing, Ld. s. to wooing and courtship in old times, cp. Ld. ch. 7, 23, 68, Nj. 13, 27, 33, 98, Gunnl. S. ch. 5, 9, Hámsa p. S. ch. 10, Glúm. L. v. ch. 5, Harð. S. ch. 3, Eb. ch. 28, 41, Vd. ch. 3, 12, Korm S. Ísl. 9, Hallfr. S. ch. 4, Bs. i. 53-56 (the story of bishop Ísleif), ch. 5, Sturl. i. 197, 198, 200, 206-208 (the two sisters there), etc. Meeting of the parliament, where people from all parts of the island gathered together, was a golden opportunity for 'bónorð' (v. the s above). 2. = begging, Gísl. 85. bót, ar, f., pl. bætr, [Ulf. bōta; A. S. bōt; Engl. boot, booty, to boot; Þ. bōz; Germ. būsse; akin to bati, better, etc.]:—bettering, remedy: 1. a cure, remedy, mental as well as bodily, from loss, sorrow, etc.; fá bót e-s, meina, Fms. vii. 251, ix. 427, 175; allra meina bót; vinna e-m b., to comfort one, Landn. 212; bóta, to amend, Fms. xi. 236; berja... e-n til óbóta is to beat... that he never recovers from it. 2. as a law term, almost always atonement, compensation, and esp. = mann-bætr, wæregild, cp. vigsak-bætr, etc., Fms. vii. 36, Hrafn. 4, 9, Eb. 106, Ísl. ii. 272, and esp. cases in Grág. (VI.) and Nj.: bætr and mann-gjöld are often discriminately, e. g. tvennum bóttum, or tvennum manngjöldum, a wæregild; cp. also the phrase, halda uppi bóttum, to discharge, pay the sing. is rare in this sense, Nj. 58, Grág. ii. 182. 3. in phrases as, e-t berr til bóta (impers.), it is a comfort, satisfactorily, j. 58, Fms. x. 264; (mikilla) bóta vant, very shortcoming, Ld. 4. a patch, of an old torn garment; enginn setr bót af nýju gamalt fat, Matth. ix. 17; svört bót var milli herða honum, i. 230. COMPDS: bóta-lauss, adj. a law term, 'bootless,' no redress; hafa sár bótaust, Rd. 269: irreparable, Fms. Hom. 121. bóta-maðr, m. a law term, a man who has to 'bætr' for hurt or damage suffered, Ann. 1372, Gpl. 160; hence adr, exlex, an outlaw, who has forfeited his right to 'bætr'. verðr, adj. worth redress, Fbr. 33. I., a, m. [Fr. botte; a for. word], a boot, Nj. 190, Fms. vii. 186, i. iii. 13. eysi, n.; lemja e-n til b. = til óbóta above, Grett. 154. ama, ð, to make better, repair, Grág. i. 123, ii. 335. parfi (-parfa), adj. ind. needing 'bætr' or satisfaction, Fms. vii. turl. iii. 123. a, að, of the northern lights, to flicker, Bjarni 69. GEÐ, n. [cp. bregða]. I. the fundamental notion is that of eu motion: 1. temp. a while, moment, cp. auga-bragð; in phrases, af bragði, at once, Hrafn. 17, Gs. 18, Am. 2; af (á) nu bragði, shortly, Fms. vi. 272, viii. 236, 348; í fyrsta bragði, the me (rare), Gpl. 532, Js. 129; skams bragðs, gen. used as adv., in a short time, Bs. i. 336, 337, Fms. viii. 348, v. l.; cp. 'at a' in 'a brayd', Engl. Ballads. 2. loc. a quick movement; við- (cp. bregða við), knífs-bragð (cp. bregða sverði), a slash with a 3. metaph. in many phrases, verða fyrri (skjótari) at bragði, to gðs, to make the first move; þeir hafa orðit fyrri at b. at stefna en i. 241, Bs. ii. 106; svá at þú verðir skjótari at b. at veiða þenna, Fms. i. 206, ix. 288; vera í bragði með e-m, to lend one a help-nd, mostly in something uncanny, Gísl. 5, Bs. i. 722; snarast í með e-m, id., Ld. 254; taka e-t bragðs, til bragðs or bragð, to me step to get clear out of difficulties, Nj. 263, 199, Fms. ix. 407, 75 new Ed.; þat var b. (step, issue) Atla, at hann hljóp..., Háv. 53; úvitrligt b., a foolish step, Nj. 78; karlmánligt b., a manly issue, 194; gott b., Fs. 30; úheyriligt b., an unheard-of thing, Finn. 212. II. [bregða A. III], a 'braid,' knot, stitch, chiefly in pl.; hekla saumud öll brögðum, a cloak braided or stitched all over, Fms. ii. 70; faguð brögðum, all broided, v. 345, Bret. 34; ristu-bragð, a scratched character. 2. in wrestling; bragð or brögð is the technical phrase for wrestlers' tricks or sleights; mjaðmar-bragð, leggjá-bragð, hál-bragð, klof-bragð..., the 'bragð' of the hip, leg, heel..., Edda 33; [fang-bragð, wrestling], hence many wrestling terms, fella e-n á sjálfs síus bragði, to throw one on his own bragð. 3. gen. a trick, scheme, device, [A. S. brægð, bræd; Engl. braid = cunning, Shakesp.], chiefly in pl., með ymsum brögðum, margskyns brögð, Fas. i. 274, Fms. x. 237; bragð í tafi, a trick in the game, a proverb, when things go not by fair means, Bs. ii. 318; ferr at fornum brögðum, in the old way, Grett. 79 new Ed.: but also sing., sér konungr nú bragð hans allt, Fms. xi. 106; hafði hann svá sett bragðið, x. 305, Eg. 196 (a trick); ek mun finna bragð þar til, at Kristni mun við gangast á Íslandi, Hkr. i. 290; bragð hitta þeir nú í, Lv. 82. β. with a notion of deceit, a trick, crafty scheme; með brögðum, with tricks, Hkr. ii; búa yfir brögðum, to brood over wiles, Fas. i. 290; hafa brögð undir brúnum, to have craft under one's eyebrows, look crafty, Band. 2; undir skauti, under one's cloak, id., Bs. i. 730; beita e-n brögðum, metaphor from hunting, to deal craftily with one, Rm. 42, Ísl. ii. 164; hafa brögð við e-n, Njard. 382, 378; vera forn í brögðum, old in craft, of witchcraft, Ísl. ii. 399; hence such phrases as, bragða-karl, a crafty fellow, Grett. 161; bragða-refr, a cunning fox; brögðóttir, crafty, etc. In Swed. 'bragder' means an exploit, action, whilst the Icel. implies some notion of subtlety or craft; yet cp. phrases as, stór brögð, great exploits, Fb. ii. 209; hreysti-brögð, hetju-brögð, great deeds, (above I. 3.) III. [bregða C; cp. A. S. bræd, Engl. breath], countenance, look, expression; hón hefir hvíti ok b. várt Myramanna, Ísl. ii. 201, v. l.; þannig er bragð á þér, at þú munir fá svífast, thou lookest as if..., cp. brögð undir brúnum above, Fms. ii. 51; heilagleiks b., to look like a saint, Bs. i. 152; þat b. hafði hann á sér sem, Ld. 24; ekki hefir þú b. á þér sem hólrenzkir menn, Fms. x. 227; þannig ertu í bragði sem..., thou lookest as if..., Ísl. ii. 149; með illu bragði, ill-looking, Sturl. i. 170; með hýru, glöðu b., Bs. ii. 505; með beztu bragði, stern, Pass. 21.1; með hryggju bragði, with gloomy look; með betra bragði, in a better mood, Nj. 11; bleyði-mannligr í b., cowardly, Fms. ii. 69; metaph., Sturla gördi þat bragð á, at hann hefði fundar..., S. put that face on a thing, Sturl. ii. 176. IV. [bergja, gustare], taste; vatns-bragð, beisku-bragð, bitter taste, of water; ó-bragð, a bad flavour, etc. 2. [=bragr], mode, fashion; in vinnu-brögð, working; hand-bragð, handicraft; lát-bragð, manners; trúar-brögð, pl. religion, mode of faith; áfa-brögð, mode of gaining one's livelihood, etc.: very freq. in mod. usage, but in old writers no instance bearing clearly upon the subject is on record; cp. however the phrase, bragð er at e-u, a thing is palpable, tangible: lítið bragð mun þar at (it must be very slight) ef þú finnr ekki, Ld. 136; ærit b. mun at því, Nj. 58; gördist þar at svá miklit b., it went so far that..., Fms. i. 187, Grett. 158 new Ed. bragða, að, I. =braga, of light, Sks. 202 B. II. [Engl. to breathe], to give signs of life, of a new-born babe, of one swooning or dying; þá fæddi hón barnið, ok fanst eigi líf með, ok hér eptir bragðaði fyrir brjóstinu, i. e. the infant began to draw breath, Bs. i. 618, ii. 33; þat bragðar sem kvikt er, Þiðr. 114. III. to taste =bergja, freq. in mod. usage. bragðs-alr, m. a brad-awl, used in Icel. for producing fire. bragðalseldr, m. fire produced by a b., Bs. i. 616; hann tók b. millum tveggja trjóa, i. 176. bragðs-illr, adj. ill-looking, Fms. x. 174. bragðs-lauss, adj. (-leysi, f., medic. pallor), pale, insipid. bragðs-ligr, adj. expedient, Karl. 451: mod. well-looking. bragðs-mikill, adj. expressive looking, Sturl. iii. 129. bragðs-samr, adj. crafty, El. bragðs-vísi, f. craft, subtlety, Edda 110. bragðs-vísligr (and -viss), adj. cunning, Fms. ii. 140. BRAGGA, að, [Engl. brag], to throw off sloth, Bb. I. 24. Bragi, a, m. the god of poetry Bragi, also a pr. name: in pl. bragnar, poet. heroes, men, Edda, Lex. Poët.; cp. A. S. brego = princeps. BRAGR, ar, m. [akin to bragð, braga, brego, etc.] I. best, foremost; b. kvenna, best of women, Skv. 2. 15; Ása b., best of Ases, Skm. 34; b. karla eðr kvenna, Edda 17: only used in poetry or poet. language, cp. the A. S. brego (princeps) Egypta, Norðmanna, Israelita, Guмена, Engla, etc.:—hence the compd bragar-full or braga-full, n. a toasting cup, to be drunk esp. at funeral feasts; it seems properly to mean the king's toast (cp. Bragi = princeps), i. e. the toast in the memory of the deceased king or earl, which was to be drunk first; the heir to the throne rose to drink this toast, and while doing so put his feet on the footstool of his seat and made a solemn vow (stíga á stökk ok strengja heit); he then for the first time took his father's seat, and the other guests in their turn made similar vows. For a graphic description of this heathen sacred custom, vide Yngl. S. Hkr. i. 49, Hervar. S. Fas. i. 417 and 515, Ilkv. Hjörv. 32, Ragn. S. Fas. i. 345. It is likely that the b. was mostly used at funeral banquets, though the passages in the Ragn. and Hervar. S. (cp. also Hænsap. S. ch. 12) seem to imply its use at other festivals, as weddings; cp. also the description of the funeral banquet, Hkr. i. 231, where 'míni hans' (the toast of the dead king) answers to bragarfull; cp. also the funeral banquet recorded in Jömsvik. S., where the Danish king Sweyn made the vow 'at bragarfulli' to conquer England within three winters. This is said to have been the prelude to the great Danish invasion A.D. 994, Fagrsk. 44, and Hkr. to l. c. The best MSS. prefer the reading bragar- (from bragr, princeps), not bragar-.

II. nearly like Lat. mos, a fashion, habit of life, in compds as, þajar-bragr, heimilis-bragr, hýbla-bragr, house life; sveitar-bragr, country life; bónda-bragr, yeoman life; héraðs-bragr, lands-bragr, etc. Icel. say good or bad þajarbragr, Bb. i. 15. III. poetry; gefr hann (viz. Odin) brag skáldum, Hdl. 5, Edda 17: in mod. usage chiefly melody or metre. compds: bragar-bót, f. a sort of metre, Edda 130: mod. palinode. bragar-fræði, f. prosody, Icel. Choral Book (1860), pref. 7. bragar-laun, n. pl. a gift for a poem dedicated to a king or great person, Eg. 318, Ísl. ii. 223, 230 (Gunnl. S.), etc. bragar-mál, n. pl. poetical diction, Edda 124; of using obsolete poet. forms, Skálda 189.

BRÁK, n. [Ulf. brakja = πάλη; A. S. and Hel. ge-bræc; cp. Lat. fragor], a creaking noise, Hkr. iii. 139. Bárð. 160, Fms. ii. 100.

braka, að, [cp. Ulf. brikan = κλῶν; A. S. brecan; Engl. to break; Lat. frangere]:—to creak, of timber, Hom. 155, Fs. 132, Gisl. 31, Fas. ii. 76.

brakan, f. a creaking, Fms. iv. 57.

BRÁKUN, m. [Engl. word], a broker, Fms. v. 183; O. H. L. 56 reads brakkarnir.

BRÁLLA, að, to trick, job; hvat er það sem börn ei b., Jón. Þorl.

BRÁML, n. (bramla, að), a crab, Safn i. 93, Ísl. Árb. v. ch. 128.

BRANA, u, f. a freq. name of a cow, [brana = juvenca, cited by Du Cange from old Spanish Latin deeds; it probably came into Spain with the Goths.] brönu-grös, n. pl., botan. Satyrium Albidum; in Icel. lore this flower plays the same part as the German alraun or English mandrake; the b. are also called 'Friggjar-gras' (Frigg = Freyja, the goddess of love), and 'elsku-gras', flower of love, as it is thought to create love between man and woman, Ísl. Þjóðs. i. 648. Gen. xxx. 14.

branda, u, f. a little trout: the Manks call the salmon braddan.

brand-erfð, f. a Norse law term, originating from the heathen age when dead bodies were still burnt, vide arfsal, a sort of clientela, giving life-long support to a man; 'til brands erð báls,' i. e. ad urnam, and inheriting him when dead; defined N. G. L. i. 50.

brand-gás, f. anas tadornia, Edda (Gl.)

brand-krossóttir, adj. brindled-brown with a white cross on the forehead (of an ox), Brand. 59; cp. bröndóttir, a brindled ox.

BRANDR, m. I. [cp. brenna, to burn; A. S. brand (rare)], a brand, firebrand; even used synonymous with 'heartb.' as in the Old Engl. saying, 'este (dear) buith (are) ouu broudes,' E. Engl. Specimens; b. af brandi brenn, Hm. 56; at bröndum, at the fire-side, 2, Nj. 105, 201; hvarfa ek blindr of branda, id., Eg. 759; cp. eldi-brandr. 2. [cp. Dan. brand, Germ. brand], a flame; til brands, ad urnam, N. G. L. i. 50 (rare); surtar-brandr, jet; v. brand-erfð.

II. [A. S. broud, Beow. verse 1454; Scot. brand = ensis; cp. to brandisb], the blade of a sword; brast þat (viz. the sword) undir hjaltinu, ok fór b. grenjandi niðr í ána, Fas. ii. 484, Korm. 82, Eb. 238, Fms. i. 17, Bs. ii. 12; víga-brandr, a war-brand, a meteor. III. a freq. pr. name of a man, Brand.

B. On ships, the raised prow and poop, ship's beak, (svíri and brandr seem to be used synonymously, Konr. S. l. c.); feltr brattir breki bröndum hærri, the waves rise high above the 'branda', Skv. 2. 17; brandar af knerri (a b. on a merchant-ship), Grett. 90 new Ed., Fms. ix. 304; hann tók um skipstafinn; en menn hans tók af hendr hans, því at brád var eigi af brandinum (sing. of the 'high prow' of a ship), viii. 217; leiddist mér fyrir Þorsbjörgum, er brandarnir á skipum Bagla stóðu í augu mér, 372, 247; gyltir brandar ok höfuð, Konr., where some MSS. 'höfuð ok svírar.'

2. ships' beaks used as ornaments over the chief door of dwellings, always in pl.; af knerri þeim eru brandar veðrspáir fyrir dyrum, before (above?) the door, Landn. 231, cp. Grett. 116, where it can be seen that the b. were two, one at each side of the door; hann sá fatahrúgu á bröndum, heaps of clothes on the b., 179; b. ákafliga háfir fyrir hölliinni svá at þeir gnæfðu yfir bust heimar (b. exceeding high over the door so that they rose above the gable), gyltir vörn kuappar ú ofanverðum bröndunum, Konr. S.: these doors are hence called brandadyrr, Sturl. ii. 106, iii. 200, 218.

brand-reið, f. [A. S. brandreda], a grate, Stj. 310, 315, Exod. xxx. 3, xxxvii. 26, Mar. 50; steikja á b., to roast on a grate, Mar. (Fr.)

brand-skjöldóttir, adj. of cattle, brindled, red and white spotted.

brand-stokkr, n. a dub. ἄν. λέγ. a big trunk of a tree in the middle of the hall of the mythical king Völsung, Fas. i. 119; Vr. 142 reads botstokk.

branga, u, f. an ἄν. λέγ. and dub., Hdm. 21: cp. old Germ. braug = pracht.

brasa, að, to braze (Shakesp.), to barden in the fire: cp. brösur, f. pl. in the metaph. phrase, eiga í brösum, to be always in the fire, always quarrelling.

BRASS (cp. brasaðr, Fms. viii; brasi, ix. 8), m. [cp. Germ. bras = epulæ; Swed. brasa; Dan. brase = to roast; Engl. to braze], a cook, an ἄν. λέγ., Am. 59.

brasta, að, [Germ. brasten], to bluster, Band. 8.

bratt-gengni, f. skill in climbing, Fms. ii. 85.

bratt-gengr, adj. skilful in climbing, Fms. ii. 169; steep, Greg. 62.

bratt-leitr, adj. with projecting forehead, Fb. i. 540.

BRATTR, adj. [A. S. brant, bront; Swed. brant; North. E. brant and brunt], steep, of hills, etc.; brött brekka, a 'brunt' bill, Hrafn. 20; bárr, high waves, Sks. 40: metaph., bera bratt halann, metaphor from cattle, to carry the tail high (in mod. usage vera brattr), opp. to lægja halann, to droop the tail, Ísl. ii. 330, cp. Hkv. Hjörv. 20; reynt hefi ek fyr brattara, cp. Lat. graviora passus, I have been in a worse plight, Am. 56; einatt hefi ek brattara átt, Grett. 133; mér hefir opt búið brattara, id., etc.—a metaphor from mountaineers.

bratt-steinn, m. a stone column, Hým. 29.

BRAUÐ, n. [A. S. bræd; Engl. bread; Germ. brod; Dan. brød].

This word, which at present has become a household word in all branches of the Teutonic, was in early times unknown in its present sense; A. S. constantly renders ἄπτος as well as ψωμίον by blaibs; Engl. loaf; A. S. bláf; the old A. S. poetry also has bláf, and the old heathen Scandin. poems only bleifr, Hm. 40, 51, Rm. 4, 28. In Engl. also, the words lord, lady,—A. S. bláfordr, bláfdige, which properly mean loaf-warder, loaf-maid,—bear out the remark, that in the heathen age when those words were formed, bræd, in the sense of panis, was not in use in England; in old A. S. the word is only used in the compd beobrodd of the honeycomb (Gr. κηρίον), cp. Engl. bee-bread; O. H. G. bibrod; Germ. bienebrod; and this seems to be the original sense of the word. The passage in which doubtless the Goths used 'braud', Luke xxiv. 42—the only passage of the N. T. where κηρίον occurs—is lost in Ulf. Down to the 6th century this word had not its present sense in any Teut. dialect, but was, as it seems, in all of them used of the honeycomb only. The Icel. calls thyme 'bráð-björg' or 'bröð-björg' (sweet food?); cp. the Lat. 'redolentque thymo fragrantia mella'; the root of 'braud' is perhaps akin to the Lat. 'fragraré'. The transition from the sense of honeycomb to that of bread is obscure: in present usage the 'bread' denotes the substance, 'loaf' the shape; b. ok smjör, Eg. 204; b. ok kál, Mar.; heilag b., Hom. 137; the Icel. N. T. (freq.) 2. food, hence metaph. living, esp. a parsonage, (mod.) The cures in Icel. are divided into þinga-brauð and beneficia.

brauð-bakstr, m. bread-baking, Greg. 55.

brauð-diskr, m. a bread-plate, Post. 686 B.

brauð-görð, f. bread-making, Stj. 441.

brauð-hleifr, m. a loaf of bread, Greg. 57, Orkn. 116.

brauð-járn, n. a 'bread-iron,' Scot. and North. E. girdle, D. N.

brauð-kass, n. a bread-basket, Fms. ii. 164.

brauð-moli, a, m. a crumb of bread, Stj. 155.

brauð-ofn, m. a bread-oven, H. E. i. 394, N. G. L. ii. 354.

brauð-skífa, u, f. a slice of bread, Andr. 68.

brauð-skorpa, u, f. a bread-crust.

brauð-sneið, f. = brauðskífa.

brauð-sufn, n. spice eaten with bread, Anal. 180.

brauk, n., braukan, f. cracking, Konr. 30, Mag. 5; cp. brak.

BRAUT, f., dat. brautu, pl. ir, [a purely Scand. word, formed from brjóta, braut, as Engl. road from Ital. roita, via rupta]:—a road cut through rocks, forests, or the like, and distinguished from vegr, stigr, gata (path, track); Önnundr konungr lét brjóta vegu um markir ok myrar ok fjallvegu, fyrir því var hann Braut-Önnundr kallaðr, Hkr. i. 46; ryðja b., to cut a road, Ísl. ii. 400; braut... eigi breiðari en götu breidd, Eg. 582. II. as adv. away, either with or without the prep. 'á' or 'í,' á braut or á brautu, which is the oldest form; but the common form in the old writers is brot, or with a double consonant, brott; later by metath. burt, burtu [Dan.-Swed. bor], which are the mod. forms, but not found in very early MSS.: it occurs in a verse in the Skálda—reið Brynhildar bróðir | 'bort' sá er hug né 'skorti':—braut, brautu; braut hvarf or sal sæta, Korm. (in a verse), Hm. 88; þraut, fer ek einn á brautu, Grett. (in a verse); in the Grág. freq., esp. in the old fragment Ed. A. D. 1852, pp. 19–26, where Kb. reads brott; the Miracle-book, Bs. i. 333 sqq., constantly gives braut; so also Ó. H. vellum of the middle of the 13th century: brott, Eg. 603, Nj. 132, Grág. i. 275; burt, burtu, in MSS. of the 15th century; the MSS. freq. use an abbreviated spelling br̄ (= denoting ro and or), so that it is difficult to see whether it is to be read brot or burt or bort. It is used with or without notion of motion; the acc. forms braut, brott, burt, originally denote going away; the dat. brautu, burtu, being away, but in common use both are used indiscriminately; þat var brott frá öðrum húsum, far off from other houses, Eg. 203; vera rekinn brott (braut), to be driven away, Nj. 132; fara braut, to go away, Fms. x. 216; af landi brott, Grág. i. 275, 331, 145, 258, 264, cp. also Nj. 10, 14, 26, 52, 196, Fms. ix. 421, Eg. 319, 370, and endless instances. compds: brautar-gengi, n. a law term, help, furtherance, Ísl. ii. 322, Ld. 26 (advanc brautarmót, n. pl. a meeting of roads, Grág. ii. 114; cp. aut, a high road; vetrarbraut, via lactea, etc. brautar-tak, term, bail, security, N. G. L. i. 44.

in compds, v. brott.

brá, a, m. a beggar, tramp, Hbl. 6, Fms. ii. 73; the proverb, a brautingja erindi, the tramp cannot afford delay, Fas. ii. 262, 27; the poor had in old times to go from house to house; cp. maðr, föru-maðr; therefore misery and tramping are synonymous, dr, miseria; cp. A. S. vædl = ambitus:—not till the establishment of nity were poor-rates and other legal provisions made for the poor.

brá, f. [Ulfr. brav; A. S. bræv; Engl. brow; Germ. brau], an eye-lid; n. sing.), Edda 15; brát (nom. pl.), 6; bráum (dat. pl.), Vfm. 41; n. pl.), Ad. 5; cp. Baldurs-brá, Gull-brá, Ísl. Þjóðs.: in poetry the called brá-tungl, -máni, -sól, -geisli, moon, sun-beam of the brow; brá-regnu, -drift, rain of the brow; the head brá-völlr, field of, etc., Lex. Poët.

bráð, f. [A. S. brad; Germ. braz], meat, raw flesch, esp. venison; bráð (a law term), raw meat, Grág. ii. 192, N. G. L. i. 82; brytja o chop into steaks, Fb. i. 321: pl. metaph. prey of beasts, varnar flv. 2. 41, Fas. i. 209; villi-bráð, venison; val-bráð, black spots ice.

II. sól-bráð, sun-burning.
brá, n. tar, pitch, Fms. viii. 217, Anecd. 60, Vm. 21, Sks. 28, Krók. a undir bráðinu, Fær. 195.

brá, f. (broð, Bs. i. 341), denoting baste (cp. bráðr), but only adverb. phrases, í bráð, at the moment, Sturl. i. 58, Ld. 302. Bráð ok lengðar (mod. í bráð ok lengd), now and ever, Fms. i.

II. in many compds, meaning rash, sudden, hot. COMPDS:
bráðr, m. in the phrases, göra, vinna bráðá-bug at e-u, to baste thing, without a moment's delay, Grett. 98. bráða-fangs, l as adv. at once, in great haste, Fms. iv. 230. bráða-sótt, f. illness, a plague, Fms. vii. 155, Játv. 26: chiefly of cattle, mur- l. 498. bráða-þeyr, m. a rapid thaw, Eg. 766.

þjórg (commonly proncd. blóð-berg, n.), f. thyme, Hjalt., Björn. lauði, a, m. a sudden death, Hom. 12.

lauðr, adj. dead in a moment, in the phrase, verða b., to die —, Ver. 47, Fms. i. 18, Ísl. ii. 45, 59, Stj. 106.

laus, adv. of a sudden, Ld. 192, Fms. viii. 199.

lausari, adj., verða b., to travel in haste, Krók. 59.

lausginn, adj. exceeding glad, Fms. xi. 256.

lausliggr (-feigr), adj. rushing to death, Fs. 74.

lausengis=bráðafangs, Fms. xi. 35, Orku. 28 Old Ed.

lausngr, adj. hot, hasty, Fms. vi. 109.

lausreðr, adj. hot-tempered, Fms. vi. 220, 195.

lausátt, adj. early ripe, of a young man, Fms. vii. 111, xi. 328.

lausörviligr, adj. of early promise, Glúm. 338.

lausættliggr, adj. most dangerous, Lv. 59.

lausjörvit, n. part. hastily chosen, Sturl. iii. 151.

lausvaddir, part. suddenly 'called', verða b., to die suddenly.

lauslaus, adj. not pitched, Hkr. ii. 281.

lausáttinn, part.=bráðauðr, Fms. xi. 444.

lausátr, adj. eager, impatient, Bs. i. 172. lausga (bráðla, brálla), adv. soon, hastily, at once, Sks. 596, i. 12, Fms. x. 419, i. 29: quickly, ii. 180, Hkr. i. 111: rashly, 2, Sks. 775.

lausgátið, n. part. [lita], göra b. á e-t, to look (too) hastily at a thing, 284, Fbr. 141.

lausgöndr, adj. hot-tempered, Anecd. 48.

lausgeeti, n. impatience, Bb. 3. 29.

lausheilt, n. part. hastily spoken, Eg. 251.

lausl, ad, to melt, of snow, etc., Fms. iii. 193, Rb. 356.

lausröðr, adj. hasty of speech, Lv. 85, Bjarn. 14.

lausröðr, adj., neut. brátt, [Swed. bråd: Dan. brad; cp. bráð], sudden, in allit. law phrase, b. bani, a sudden, violent death, Nj. 99, Fms. Sks. 585 (of suicide); b. atburðr, a sudden accident, Fms. x. 328: hot-tempered, eager, rash, bráðr er barn-askan (a proverb), Am. arns-hungir, id., Bev. Fr.; b. í skaplyndi, Nj. 16, Hm. 21; pú óð hölvi b. (too eager, too rash), í þessu máli, Vápn. 13; b. ok sb and headlong, Fms. ix. 245; b. hestr, a fiery horse, Bs. i.

II. brátt, bráðum, and bráðan used adverb., soon, shortly. brátt drunkinn einmenningr, Eg. 551; brátt fanst þat á, it could then that . . ., 147; vánu bráðara (Lat. spe citius), (mod., vonum soon, in a very short time, Fms. xi. 115; sem bráðast, as soon as possible, the sooner the better, Eg. 534: the phrase, e-t berr bráðum þat at, a thing happens of a sudden, with the notion of surprise, öllum féllusk hendr (i. e. were startled), at bráðan bar at, as it suddenly, Hkr. ii. 152, cp. Orku. 50.

bráðinn, part. suddenly or rashly decided, Fms. ii. 25, Fær. 236; sudden news, Fms. v. 289; bráðrakinn, Lex. Poët., seems only read reading=bráðrápin, the lower part of the p having been read.

bráðr, adj. very wrathful, Barl. 25.

bráð-ræði, n. rashness, Fs. 53; glappaverk ok b., 184, Fms. ii. 25. bráð-sinnaðr, adj. hot-tempered, Nj. (Lat. Vers.) 219, v. l. (mod. word.)
bráð-sjúkr, adj. taken suddenly ill, Fms. vi. 104.
bráð-skapaðr, adj. part. of hasty disposition, Sturl. iii. 123, Nj. 219, v. l., Fas. iii. 520: mod. skap-bráðr, hot-tempered.

bráð-skeyti, n. rashness, Sks. 250, Karl. 495.
bráð-skeytliggr, adj. rash, Str. 9.

bráð-skeytttr, adj. rash, Fms. vi. 109, Ísl. ii. 316, Karl. 341, 343.
bráð-sýnn, adj. soon seen, Fr.

bráðung, f. hurry, O. H. L. 19: gen. bráðungar, as adv. of a sudden, Fms. xi. 70; af bráðungu, at a moment's notice, 27.

bráð-þroska (-aðr), adj. early ripe, early grown (þroski, growth), Finn. 222, v. l., Fs. 126.

BRÁK, f., Engl. brake (v. Johnson), a tanner's implement, in the form of a horse-shoe, for rubbing leather, Eggert Itin. 339: a nickname, Eg. bráka, ad, in the phrase, brákaðr reytr, a bruised reed, Isalah xlii. 3.

BREÐI, a, m. [Norse bræ], a glacier, common in Norway, where the glaciers are called 'braer' or 'fonn'; in Icel. an ἀπ. λεγ., Fas. (Völs. S.) i. 116.

BREF, n. [for. word, from Lat. brève, like Engl. and Germ. brief; Dan. brev], in Icel. proncd. with a long e, bréf:—a letter, written deed, rescript, etc. Letter-writing is never mentioned in the true Icel. Sagas before the end of the old Saga time, about A. D. 1015. Bréf occurs for the first time as a sort of dispatch in the negotiation between Norway and Sweden A. D. 1018; lét þau fara aftur með bréfum þeim er Ingigerðr konungs dóttir ok þau Hjalti sendu jarli ok Ingibjörgu, Ó. H. ch. 71; bréf ok innsigli Engla konungs (viz. king Canute, A. D. 1024), ch. 120: a royal letter is also mentioned Bjarn. 13 (of St. Olave, A. D. 1014–1030). The earliest Icel. deeds on record are of the end of the 11th century; in the D. L., Sturl., and Bs. (12th and 13th centuries) letters of every kind, public and private, are freq. mentioned, vide D. l. by Jon Sigurdsson, Bs. i. 478–481, etc., Fms. vii–x, Sturl. freq. [In the Saga time, 'ord ok jarternir,' words and tokens, is a standing phrase; the 'token' commonly was a ring; the instances are many, e. g. Ld. ch. 41, 42, Bjarn. 7, Gunnl. S.; cp. the interesting passage in the mythical Akv. verse 8, where the sister ties one hair of a wolf in the ring—hár fann ek heiðingja riðit í hring rauðau —as a warning token; cp. also the story of the coin used as a token in Gl. ch. 8. In the old Sagas even runes are hardly mentioned as a medium of writing; but v. rune.] COMPDS: bréfa-bók, f. a register-book, N. G. L. ii. 409. bréfa-brot, n. breach of ordinances, H. E. i. 422, Bs. i. 706. bréfa-görð, f. letter-writing, Bs. i. 475, Fms. ix. 260. bréfa-maðr, m. a letter-carrier, public courier, Fms. ix. 20. bréfa-sveinn, m. a letter-boy, Fms. ix. 467.

bréfa, ad, to give a brief account, of Fms. ii. 257, Al. 66.

bréfer, n. breviary, Dipl. v. 18, Vm. 8.

bréf-lauss, adj. briefless, without a written document, Th. 78.

bréf-sending, bréfa-sending, f. a sending of letters, Fms. viii. 111.

bréf-setning, f. the composition of a letter, Fms. viii. 298.

BREGÐA, pret. sing. brá, 2nd pers. brátt, later brást; pl. brugðit, sup. brugðit; pres. bregð; pret. subj. brygð; reflex. (sk, z, st), pret. brásk, bráz, or brást, pl. brugðusk, etc.: poët. with the neg. suff. brá-at, brásk-at, Orku. 78, Fms. vi. 51.

A. ACT. WITH DAT. I. [A. S. bregdan, brædan; Old Engl. and Scot. to brade or braid; cp. bragð throughout]:—to move swiftly: 1. of a weapon, to draw, brandish; b. sverði, to draw the sword, Gisl. 55, Nj. 28, Ld. 222, Korm. 82 sqq., Fms. i. 44, ii. 306, vi. 313, Eg. 306, 505; sverð brugðit, a drawn sword, 746; cp. the alliterative phrase in Old Engl. Ballads, 'the bright brownie (= brugðinn) sword': absol., bregð (imperat.), Korm. l. c.: b. knífi, to slash with a knife, Am. 59; b. flótu sverði, to turn it round in the band, Fms. vii. 157; saxi, Bs. i. 629: even of a thrust, b. spjóti, Glúm. 344.

2. of the limbs or parts of the body, to move quickly; b. hendi, finger, K. þ. K. 10, Fms. vi. 122; b. augum sundr, to open the eyes, iii. 57, cp. 'he bradde open his eyes two', Engl. Ballads; b. fótum, Nj. 253; b. fæti, in wrestling; b. grönnum, to draw up the lips, 199, Fms. v. 220.

3. of other objects; b. skipi, to turn the ship (rare), Fms. viii. 145, Eb. 324; b. e-m á eintal, einmæli, to take one apart, Fms. vi. 11, Ölk. 35; b. sér sjúkum, to feign sickness, Fagrsk. ch. 51; bregða sér in mod. usage means to make a short visit, go or come for a moment; eg brá mér snöggvast til . . ., etc.

4. adding prepp.; b. upp; b. upp hendi, höndum, to hold up the band, Fms. i. 167; b. upp glófa, 206, Eb. 326: b. e-m á lopt, to lift aloft, Eg. 122, Nj. 108; b. e-u undan, to put a thing out of the way, to bide it, Fas. i. 6; undir, Sturl. ii. 221, Ld. 222, Eb. 230: b. e-u við (b. við skildi), to ward off with . . ., Vápn. 5; but chiefly metaph. to put forth as an example, to laud, wonder at, etc.; þinum drengskap skal ek við b., Nj. 18; þessum mun ek við b. Áslagar örunum, Fas. i. 257; nú mun ek því við b. (I will speak loud), at ek hef eigi fyr náð við þik at tala, Lv. 53: b. e-u á, to give out, pretend; hann brá á því at hann mundi riða vestr til Miðfjarðar, Sturl. iii. 197, Fms. viii. 59, x. 322.

β. to deviate from, disregard; vér höfum brugðit af ráðum þínum, Fær. 50, Nj. 13, 109, Ísl. ii. 198, Grág. i. 359; b. af marki, to alter the mark, 397.

5. to turn, alter, change; b. lit, litum, to change colour, to turn pale, etc., Fms. ii. 7, Vgl. 24; b. sér við e-t, to alter one's mien, shew signs of pain, emotion, or the like, Nj. 116; b. e-m í (or b. á sík) e-s líki, to turn one (by spell) into another shape, Bret. 13; at þú brátt þér í merar líki, Ölk. 37; hann brá á sík ýmissa dýra líki, Edda (pref.) 149.

II. to break up or off. leave off, give up; b. búu, to give up one's household, Grág. i. 153, Eg. 116, 704; b. tjöldum, to break up, strike the tents, Fms. iv. 302; b. samvist, to part, leave off living together, ii. 295; b. ráðahag, to break off an engagement, esp. wedding, 11; b. boði, to countermand a feast, 194; b. kaupi, to break off a bargain, Nj. 51, Rd. 251; b. sýslu, to leave off working, Fms. vi. 349; b. svefni, blundi, to awake, Sdm. 2; smátt bregðr slikt svefni mínum, Lv. 53; b. tali, to break off talking, Vápn. 22; b. orustu, to break off the battle, Bret. 1; esp. freq. in poetry, b. hungri, föstu, sulti, to break or quell the hunger (of the wolf); b. gleði; b. lífi, fjörvi, to put to death, etc., Lex. Poët.

2. to break faith, promise, or the like; b. máli, Grág. i. 148; trínaði, Nj. 141; brugðið var öllu sáttmáli, Hkr. ii. 121; b. heiti, Alvm. 3; absol., ef bóandi bregðr við gríðmanni (breaks a bargain), Grág. i. 153.

3. reflex., bregðsk e-m (or absol.), to deceive, fail, in faith or friendship; Gunnarr kvaðsk aldri skyldu b. Njáli né sonum hans, Nj. 57; bregðsk þú oss nú eigi, do not deceive us, Fms. vi. 17; vant er þó at vita hverir mér eru trúir ef feðmir b., ii. 11; en þeim brásk framhlaupt, i. e. they failed in the onslaught, vii. 298; þat mun eigi bregðsk, that cannot fail, Fas. ii. 526, Rb. 50; fáir munu þeir, at einörd síuni haldi, er slikir bregðusk við oss, Fms. v. 36, Grett. 26 new Ed.

III. [A. S. brædan, to braid, broider], to 'braid', knót, bind, the band, string being in dat.; hann bregðr í fiskinn öðrum enda, he braided the one end in the fish, Finn. 220; hön brá háriunu undir beltí sér, she braided her hair under her belt; (hann) brá (untied) brókabelti sínu, Fas. i. 47; er þeir höfðu brugðið kaðli un, wound a cable round it, Fms. x. 53; hefir strengirn brugðizk líttat af fótum honum, the rope had loosened off his feet, xi. 152; but also simply and with acc., b. bragð, to braid a braid, knít a knot, Eg. (in a verse); b. ráð, to weave a plot, (cp. Gr. πάρτεω, Lat. suere), Edda (in a verse); in the proper sense flétta and ríða, q. v., are more usual.

2. in wrestling; b. e-m, the antagonist in dat., the trick in acc., b. e-m bragð (hæl-krók, sveifu, etc.) 3. recipr., of mutual strife; bregðsk brögðum, to play one another tricks; b. brigzlum, to scold one another, Grág. ii. 146; b. frumhlauptum, of mutual aggression, 13, 48; bregðusk un e-t, to contest a thing, 66, cp. i. 34. 4. part., brögðinn við e-t, acquainted with a thing; munuð þit brátt brögðinn við meira, i. e. you will soon have greater matters to deal with, Fs. 84; hann er við hvártveggja b., he is well versed in both, Gisl. 51.

IV. metaph. to upbraid, blame, with dat. of the person and thing; fúr bregðr hinu betra, ef hann veit hit verra (a proverb), Nj. 227; þörðr blígr brá honum því (Thorð threw it in his face), á þórneshpingi, at . . . Landn. 101; Kálfr brá mér því í dag, Fms. vi. 105; b. e-m brizglum, Nj. 227.

B. NEUT. OR ABSOL. without a case, of swift, sudden motion. I. b. á e-t, as, b. á leik, gaman, etc., to start or begin sporting, playing; Kimibi brá á gaman, K. took it playfully, i. e. laughed at it, Landn. 101; b. á gamamál, Fms. xi. 151; þeir brugðu á glimu ok á glens, they started wrestling and playing, Ld. 220; bregðr hann (viz. the horse) á leik, the horse broke into play, ran away, Fms. xi. 280; Ghimr svaraði vel en brá þó á sitt ráð, Glum gave a gentle answer, but went on in his own way, Nj. 26, Fas. i. 250; the phrase, hönd bregðr á venju, the hand is ready for its old work, Edda (Ht.) verse 26, cp. Nj. ch. 78 (in a verse).

2. b. við, to start off, set about a thing without delay, at a moment's notice, may in Engl. often be rendered by at once or the like; brá hann við skjótt ok fór, he started off at once and went, Fms. i. 158; þeir brugðu við skjótt, ok varð þeim mjök við felmt, i. e. they took to their heels in a great fright, Nj. 105; þeir brugðu við skjótt, ok fara þaðan, 107; bregðr hon við ok hleyp. Grett. 25 new Ed., Bjarn. 60; hrossit bregðr nú við hart, id.; en er Ólafr spurði, at þorsteinum hafði skjótt við brugðið, ok hafði mikit fjölmenni, Ld. 228. β. b. til e-s, þá brá Ingimundr til utanferðar, Ingimundr started to go abroad, Sturl. i. 117; b. til Græulands ferðar, Fb. i. 430.

II. reflex. to make a sudden motion with the body; Ritr brásk skjótt við undan högginu, Nj. 28, 129; b. við fast, to turn sharply, 58, 97; bregðsk (= bregðr) jarl nú við skjótt ok ferr, the earl started at once, Fms. xi. 11; hann brásk aldregi við (he remained motionless) er þeir pinðu hann, heldr en þeir lysti á stökk eðr stein, vii. 227.

2. metaph. and of a circumlocutory character; eigi þætti mér ráðið, hvárt ek munda svá skjótt á boð brugðisk hafa, ef . . . I am not sure whether I should have been so basty in bidding you, if . . . Ísl. ii. 156; bregðsk á beina við e-n, to shew hospitality towards, Fms. viii. 59, cp. bregða sér above.

β. b. yfir, to exceed; heyra þeir svá miklum guý at yfir brásk, they heard an awful crash, Mag. 6; þá brá þat þó yfir jafnan (it surpassed) er konungr talaði, Fms. x. 322, yet these last two instances may be better read 'barst,' vide bera C. IV; bregðsk íkunnur, reiðr . . . við e-t, to be startled at the novelty of a thing, v. 258; b. reiðr við, to get excited, angry at a thing, etc.

C. IMPERS. I. the phrase, e-m bregðr við e-t, of strong emotions, fear, anger, or the like; þeir þáim mjök við, er þau sá hann inn ganga, it startled them much, when they saw him come in, Nj. 68;

Flosa brá svá við, at hann var í andliti stundum sem blóð, 177; en þó brá föstru Melkorku mest við þessi tíðindi, i. e. this news most affected Melkorka's nurse, Ld. 82; aldri hefi ek mannsblóð séð, ok veit ek eigi hver mér bregðr við, I wot not how it will touch me, Nj. 59; brá honum svá við, at hann gerði fölván í andliti . . . ok þann veg brá honum opt síðan (he was oft since then taken in such fits), þá er vigahugr var á honum, Glúm. 342; en við höggit brá Glúsi svá at . . . Eb. 324; þorkell spurði ef honum hefði brugðið nokkut við þessa sýslu.—Ekki sjám vér þér brugðið hafa við þetta, en þó sýndist mér þér ádr brugðið, Fms. xi. 148.

β. bregða í brún, to be amazed, shocked, Fms. i. 214; þá brá Guðrínu mjök í brún un atburð þenna allan saman, Ld. 326, Nj. 14; þat hlægir mik at þeim mun í brún b., 239; nú bregðr mönnum í brún mjök (people were very much startled), því at margir höfðu ádr eigna frétt af haft, Band. 7.

II. with prepp. við, til, í, af; of appearances, kynlignu, undarliga bregðr við, it has a weird look, looks uncanny, of visions, dreams, or the like; en þó bregðr nú kynlignu við, undan þykir mér nú gafaðið hvárt-veggja undan húsinu, Ísl. ii. 352, Nj. 62, 197, Gisl. 83; nú bregðr undrum við, id., Fms. i. 292.

III. e-m bregðr til e-s, one person turns out like another, cp. the Danish 'til slægt en paa;' þat er mælt at fjórðungi bregði til föstrs, the fostering makes the fourth part of the man, Nj. 64; en því bregðr mér til foreldra míns, in that I am like my father, Hkr. iii. 223; er þat líkast, at þér bregði mér í þræla ættina en þveræinga, it is too likely, that thou wilt show thyself rather to be kith and kin to the thrall's bouse than to that of Thwæringar, Fb. i. 434; b. til bernsku, to be childish, Al. 3. β. bregða af vaxi hans frá öðrum selum, his shape differs from that of any other seals, Skk. 41 new Ed. (afbrigði).

IV. to cease; e-u bregðr, it ceases; við hart . . . at nyt (dat.) bregði, (to drive the ewes) so fast that they fall (to give milk), Grág. ii. 231; þessu tali bregðr aldri (= þetta tal bregðsk aldri), this calculation can never fail, Rb. 536; veðráttu (dat.) brá eigi, there was no change in the weather, Grett. 91; skíni sólar brá, the sun grew dim, Geisl. 19; fjörvi feigra brá, the life of the 'feys' came to an end (poët.), Fms. vi. 316 (in a verse); brá föstu, hungri, úls, ara, the hunger of wolf and eagle was abated, is a freq. phrase with the poets.

V. of a sudden appearance; kláða (dat.) brá á hvarmanu, the eye-lids itched, Fms. v. 96; of light passing swiftly by, þá brá ljáma af Logafjöllum, Hkv. i. 15; ljósi bregðr fyrir, a light passes before the eye; mey brá mér fyrir hvarma steina, a maid passed before my eyes, Snót 117; þar við ugg (dat.), at þrjútom brá, i. e. the rogues were taken by fear, 170. breið, f. = breiða.

breiða, dd, [Ulf. bráidjan; Germ. breiten], to 'broaden,' unfold; b. feld á höfud sér, to spread a cloak on the head, Nj. 164; b. út, to lay out for drying, Sd. 179, Ld. 290, Fbr. 17, chiefly of hay; b. völl and b. hey á völl, Jb. 193; b. e-t yfir e-n, to cover one in a thing, chiefly of the bed-clothes, Nj. 20, Fms. viii. 237; b. út hendr, to stretch out the hands, vii. 250, Th. 9; b. fadm, id., Rm. 16, Pass. 34. 2; b. borð (mod., b. á borð), to lay the cloth on the table, Bs. ii. 42.

breiða, u, f. a drift, flock, of snow, hay, or the like; also fjár-breiða, a flock of white sheep; úbreiða, a cover, etc.

breið-bælingr, m. a nickname, a man from Breiðabólstað, Sturl. breidd, f. [Goth. bráidrei], breadth, Alg. 372, Grág. i. 498, Fms. vii. 275.

breið-dælskr, adj. from Broaddale in Iceland, Landn., Nj. Breið-firðingr, m. a man from Broadfirib in Iceland, Nj., Landn., etc.

breið-firzkr, adj. belonging to, a native of Broadfirib, Landn., etc.

breiðka, að, to grow broad, Krók. 52.

breið-leiki (-leikr), a, m. breadth, Stj. 56.

breið-leitr, adj. broad of face, aspect, Hkr. ii. 405, Grett. 90 A.

BREIÐR, adj. neut. breitt, [Ulf. bráids; Scot. brade; A. S. brād; Engl. broad; Germ. breit], broad, Ld. 276, Nj. 35, 91, Grág. i. 500, Fms. iv. 42, vi. 297; fjörðr b. ok langr, Eb. 8; breiða stofa, b. búr, the broad chamber, Dipl. iii. 4, v. 2. β. á breiðan, adv. in breadth, Fms. viii. 416, x. 13; neut. as adv., standa breitt, to spread over a wide space, Edda 10.

breið-vaxinn, part. broad-framed, stout, Grett. 89.

breið-öx, f. [old Dan. breið óxa; Germ. breitax; A. S. brād æx], a broad axe, N. G. L. i. 101, Fms. ix. 33, Ísl. ii. 210, v. 1, Bret. 84, Bjarn. 36, Orkn. 360; 'brand-öx,' Ed. l. c., is a false reading.

BREK, u. a law term, a fraudulent purchase of land, liable to the lesser outlawry, Grág. ii. 241, 242; hence the proverb, sá hafir b. er beiðist, let him have b. that bids for it, i. e. volenti non fit injuria, Grett. 135 new Ed., Fas. iii. 202. 2. pl. freaks, chiefly of children; að bama þinna brekum skalt | brosa ei nó skemtan halt, Húst. 49.

breka, að, to keep asking, of importunate requests, Fms. vi. 246; the proverb, látum barn hafa þat er brekar, Þiðr. 51, 110; neut., b. til e-s, Al. 114.

BREKAN, n. [Gael. braecan = tartan], a stitched bed cover.

brek-boð, n. a fraudulent bidding (of land), Grág. ii. 242.

breki, a, m., poët. a breaker, Edda (Gl.), Lex. Poët.

BREKKA, u, f. [Swed. and Engl. brink], a slope, Orkn. 244, Eg. 766, Gisl. 33, Glúm. 395; b. brún, the edge of a slope, Sturl. ii. 75; hvel, Skk. 64.

local names in Icel.: as a law term, the bill where public meeting held and laws promulgated, etc., hence the phrase, leiða í, to proclaim a bondsman free; cf þræli er gefit frelsi, ok er hann dr í lög eðr b., Grág. i. 358. COMPS: brekku-brún, v. above. u-megin, n. strength to climb the crest of a bill.

laust, n. adj. fraudless, Grág. i. 137, 200.

ráð, n. pl. a law term, an attempt at fraudulent acquisition (v. Glúm. 347. Boll. 352).

sekð, f. a law term, a fraudulent, mock outlawry in order to disse from pleading his case, defined Grág. i. 121.

vísi, f. an importunate request, Ld. 134.

u, u, f. a trick; veiði-brella, a ruse. brellinn, adj. = bellinn.

la, að, to distort, = beygla, Fas. iii.

NNA, an old obsol. form brinna; pret. brann, 2nd pers. brant, ranst; pl. brunnu; sup. brunnit; pres. brenn, 3rd pers. brennr; þr. Grág. ii. 205, Fms. vii. 20 (in a verse); breinn (dropping the n); with the neg. suffix, brennr-at (non urit), 153, [Ulf. brinnan; nan; Early Engl. to 'brenn'; Germ. brennen; the strong form is obsolete in Germ.]—to burn: 1. of a light; þeir þóttust í ljós b., Nj. 118, Fas. i. 340; hrælog brunna (blazed) at vápnun þs. i. 509; of a candle, to burn out, eigi lengr en kerti þat brennr, 41, 342; cp. Fms. viii. 276. 2. to be consumed by fire; n var brunning, Fms. xi. 420; nú breðr víðara en hann vildi, the ads wider than he would, Grág. l. c. β. of a volcano; er hér raunir, en ní stöndu vér á, Bs. i. 22; brann þá Borgarhraun, 78, Ann. several times. γ. b. upp, to be burnt up, Grág. i. 459, 42; b. inni, to perish by fire, Gpl. 252, Nj. 198, 200. δ. to ms. ii. 288. ε. to be scolded, Eb. 198; skulu grónir grautar þeir er þú brant, 200. 3. metaph. in the phrase, e-t or e-s ennr við, one's lot or portion of meat gets burnt in the cooking, the worst of it; broth 'brennr við, is burnt; ortu bændr þegar rdagann (they made an onslaught), en þó brann brútt þeirra hlutr it grew soon too hot for them, Fms. iv. 250; Sigurðr kvað sitt við brenna, quoth Sigurð, he would get the worst of it, i. e. it ever do, Fær. 236: the phrase, e-t brennr fyrir, or e-t raunt brennr bright hopes, rautt mun fyrir b. ok til virðingar snúa, Fs. 68; i nokkurt fyrir b. er þér komit heim, Fas. iii. 81.

a, d, with acc. to burn; b. bál, to burn or light a balefire, S. (in a verse). 2. to destroy by fire, devastate, Fms. xi. n. 1329, 1289; b. upp, to burn up, Eg. 49; b. e-n inni, to burn e., Nj. 115, Grág. ii. 128, Landn. 215, v. 1. 3. medic. to (of hot iron), Grág. ii. 133; b. e-m díla, to burn spots on one's back, edic., Bs. i. 644. β. metaph. to brand one's back; eigi þurftu t hælst við oss Norðmenn, margan díla höfum vér brennt þeim t, Hkr. iii. 148; b. e-m illan díla, id., Fbr. 190 (in a verse). γ. to burn, i. e. make charcoal (cp. charcoal-burner), Grág. i.

δ. part., brennt silfr, gull = skirt silfr, gull, pure silver, gold, 172, 152; eyrir brenndr (= eyrir brennds silfrs), mörk brennd, Fms. Hkr. iii. 12; b. gull, Fms. xi. 77.

a, u, f. fire, burning, Grág. ii. 129, Nj. 158, 199; Njál's brenna, tíls brenna, etc., Ann. 962, 1010: the burning of a dead líla 38 (= bálför). β. astron., according to Finn Magnusson (ythol.) Sirius is called Loka brenna, the conflagration of Loki, to the end of the world. COMPS: brennu-maðr, m. an ry, Nj. 203. brennu-mál, n. action for fire, Nj. 210.

u-saga, u, f. a tale of a fire, Nj. 269. brennu-staðr, m. the here a fire has been, Grág. ii. 128. brennu-sumar, n. a of fires, Sturl. i. 165. brennu-vargr, m. a law term, an ry (outlawed), defined N. G. L. i. 46, Sturl. iii. 261.

andi, m. fire, Fms. i. 63 (in a verse).

ir, m. id., Edda (Gl.).

í-steinn (brennu-steinn, brenna-steinn), m. brimstone,

Sks. 391; Icel. sulphur mentioned in the 12th and 13th cenma b. S., D. L., H. E., etc.; b. logi, a sulphur lowe or flame, Rb.

vain, a sulphur well, Stj. 91; b. þeir, a smell of brimstone, id.

ÞTA, pret. brast, pl. brustu; part. brostin; pres. brest, [A. S.

per metaph.; Engl. to burst; Germ. bersten; Swed. brista; Dan.

—to burst, be rent; jörðin brast (the earth burst) undir hesti

i. 158; steinninn brast, the rock was rent, Bs. i. 5. β. to str a crash; brast þá boginn í tvá hluti, Hkr. i. 342, Gísl. str róng, the rib of a barrel creaks, Jb. 398: the boops of a resta (burst), Fs. 132; skulfu lönd, en brustu bönd (of a tub), brast þá flótti á Vindum, xi. 233; bardagi brestr, the battle bursts out, begins, (rare and as it seems ἀν. Λεγ.), Fas. i. 34. δ. b. or b. á, to burst or break out, a storm, gale, cp. Bs. i. 78 (vide however s. v. bera C. IV): b. or b. út, to ebb, but only of the first turning of the tide, Bb. 2. 15; augu b., the eyes break in death, v. auga; hence helbrostitð auga.

II. impers., e-n (acc.) brestr e-t (acc.), one lacks, falls short of; brast Sigríði (acc.) finnu tigi hundraða, Dipl. v. 3; cf oss brestr á borði, if we fall short, get the worst of it, Fms. ix. 507; eigi brestr mik áréði, Fs. 62; á mið þau er aldri mun fisk (Ed. wrongly fiskr) b., Bárð. 169; ef eitt orð (acc.) brysti, Fms. iv. 71; hann vissi þessa sína ætlan brostna (frustrated), Bs. i. 289; þat mun aldri b., that will never fail, Grett. 24 new Ed.; hamingjuna brestr, Fms. vi. 155 (Ed. hamingjan).

brestr, m. pl. ir. (old acc. pl. brestu, Jd. 25), an outburst, crash, Eb. 230, of a blow against a metal ring; steinarnir kómu saman, ok varð þar við b. há, Glúm. 375 (cp. heraðs-brestr, vá-brestr), Fms. xi. 6, 7, Fbr. 148, Hkr. i. 342; her-brestr, the crash produced by a sort of powder (cp. Albertus Magnus), Bs. i. 798, 799; í þeim eldi léku laus björg str semu kol á afli, svá at í þeirra samkomu urðu brestir svá stórir, at heyrði norðr um land (of a volcano), 803; mátti heyra stóra brestu, i. c. the clash of spears, Flov. 33.

II. a chink, fissure, esp. in jewellery; b. á gulli, Vkv. 25, cp. 24; vóru gimsteinar svá heilir at eigi var b. á þeim, Joh. 623, 20; kom mér þá í hug, at b. hafði verið á hringnum, . . . fleiri brestina, Ld. 126; cp. the phrase, berja í brestina, v. berja, to cry off a bargain, Nj. 32. 2. metaph. a crack, chink; bresti er í þeim ráðahag hafa verið, Ld. 128. β. want, loss; hvert ábati eðr b. í varð, Fms. ii. 441; þar eptir fylgir b. bú, Bb. i. 12; hýbýla-brestr, domestic misfortune, Gísl. 79.

III. a rattle (hrossa-brestr).

brætta, tt, [brattr], to turn upwards; b. halann, Hkv. Hjörv. 20; cp. bera halann bratt: in mod. use of the clothes, sleeves, etc., to fold up; b. nefið, brýrnar: hence brettur, f. pl. comical contortions of the face.

breyma, used as adj. ind., b. kött, a she-cat at heat.

breyska-leikr (-leiki), m. weakness of body, Stj. 21: in moral sense, Magn. 504, K. Á. 200.

BREYSKR, adj. (akin to brjósk), properly brittle; b. leirpott, a brittle earthen pot, Sks. 543; kerin b., Stell. I. 72: chiefly metaph. in moral sense, weak, infirm; andinn er fús, en holdið er b., Matth. xxvi. 41, Stj. 55, 248, Sks. 688, 13: in mod. writing often spent with i.

BREYTA, tt, [braut, via], to alter, change: bregða implies the notion of breach, breyta simply denotes change: with dat.; b. farveg (of a river), to form a new channel, Grág. i. 350, Nj. 4. Ld. 158, Fms. ii. 158, Fb. i. 292; flestar þjóðir þurfa at b. (transform) nafni haus til sinnar tungu, Edda 14; þá vóru snjóvar miklir ok breyttir (changed, become impassable) vegir allir, Eg. 543, Rb. 262 (where the acc. is wrong). β. reflex., hafa þau ekki breyzk síðan, they have not changed since, Fms. viii. 5. γ. to vary; b. háttum, to vary the metre, Edda 121; b. hári sínu, to dress the hair, Greg. 45; b. málum, to speak rhetorically, dress one's words, Fms. vi. 392; réttir ok b., plain and artificial, Edda 120; úbreyttir, plain.

II. metaph., absol. without case, to conduct oneself, act, do, behave; ef við breytum svá, if we do so, Nj. 202, Ísl. ii. 181, Fms. i. 150; b. eptir e-m, to imitate, Symb. 15; b. til e-s, to attempt, Grág. ii. 94. 2. in mod. use chiefly in moral sense, to behave, conduct oneself; b. vel, illa, kristilega, cp. breytni, N. T., Vidal., Pass.

breyti-liga, adv. strangely, Fs. 42, Korm. 54, Lv. 77, Fms. vi. 374.

breyti-ligr, adj. strange, Sturl. iii. 302.

breyting, f. change, N. G. L. i. 382.

breytinn, adj. variable, Post. 645, 90.

breytni, f. change; göra b. á um e-t, to make an alteration in a thing, Fas. iii. 155, Mag. 5, Fs. 98; b. í klæðnaði, fashion, N. G. L. iii. 262: new fashion, Grág. i. 338; ný-breytni, Snót 68; hann kvaðst eigi menna enn um sinn at hafa þessa b., he said that he was not yet minded to, viz. to be baptized, Fs. 77, Nj. 13 (shape, nature). 2. in mod. usage chiefly moral conduct, acting; eptir-breytni, imitation.

Brežkr, adj. Welsh, Fms., etc.; mod. British.

BRIGÐ, f. [bregða A. II], a law term, 'jus retrahendi,' a right to reclaim, chiefly of landed property; eiga b. til lands; fyrmist þá eigi brigðin, then the right of reclamation will not be lost, Grág. ii. 202 sqq.; cp. Landbrigð and Landbrigða-þáttur, one of the sections of the law; cp. also óðals-brigð (Norse), vide Gpl. 295 sqq.: also brigð á dómi, change of a doom or sentence, Sks. 588 B; kaupá e-t í brigð við annan, to purchase a thing already bought by another man, Rd. 252; engi brigð (neut. acc. pl. enga?) mun ek hér á göra, where brigð nearly means protest, Fms. ii. 25. 2. gener. breaking, breach; vináttu-brigð, breach of friendship, fickleness, Hm. 83. COMPD: brigðar-maðr, m. a law term, one whose lands are escheated, but may be redeemed, Grág. ii. 253, Gpl. 290.

brigða, ð, (mod. að), [bregða], a law term, to escheat; with acc., b. land, lönd, Grág. ii. 202 sqq.; b. e-m frelsi, to abrogate, i. 203; b. fé (of the forfeiture of a deposit), 183. In the Norse sense, vide Gpl. 295 sqq., Jb. 188 sqq., Dipl. v. 16. 2. with dat. (irreg.), b. jörðu, Gpl. 300: to make void, b. dómi, 23; b. sáttmáli, Stj. 382: part. brigðandi = brigðarmaðr, Grág. ii. 204.

brigði, n. = brigð, Anecd. 14, Mk. 144: cp. compds lit-brigði, gloaming; veðr-brigði, change of weather; af-brigði, etc.

brigði-ligr (brigðiligr), adj. and -liga, adv. variable, Stj. 117, Sks. 203, 627 B, 677. 8, 2.

brigð-kaup, n. a void bargain, because of another man having a prior right of purchase, N. G. L. iii. 177.

brigð-lyndi, f. fickleness, Hkr. iii. 273.

brigð-lyndr, adj. fickle, Sturl. iii. 123.

brigð-mæli, n. breach of promise, Korn. 56, Fms. vii. 305.

brigðr, adj. faithless, fickle, Hm. 90, 125; brig (unsafe) þyki mér at trúa þrándi, Fær. 226.

brigð-ræði, n. fickleness, a whimsy, Edda 110 (new Ed. i. 544, note 26).

brigð-ull, adj. variable, fickle, unsafe, Fas. iii. 456.

brigð-verpi, n. a cast in another man's fishery, Gpl. 426.

brigzla, að, (derived from brigð and bregða), to upbraid, with dat. of the person and thing; b. oss því, at vér . . ., Fms. ii. 227; honum sé því brigzlat, that it be thrown in his teeth, Fær. 100, Al. 2: with acc. of the thing (rare), Stj. 42, Anecd. 30: in mod. use, b. e-m um e-t, Mar. 153 (Fr.): absol., b. e-m ok hæða, Mar. 1. c. II. medic. of broken bones (bríxla saman) when they are only rudely healed.

brigzli and brigzli, n., chiefly in pl. blame, shame, Stj. 176, Gen. xxx. 23; b. ok álygi, Hom. 76, Fms. i. 270, ii. 69; eilíft b., everlasting shame, x. 222; færa e-m e-t í brigzli, to throw a thing in one's teeth, Lv. 59; hafa at brigzlum, Nj. 223; brigzla-lauss, blameless, Fms. viii. 136. II. medic. callificatio ossium, the callus left after bone-fractures.

brigzli-yrði, n. pl. words of blame, Nj. 223, v. 1.

BRIM, n. [A. S. brim = aestus], surf, Fær. 174, Eg. 99; boðar ok b., Grág. ii. 385; sker ok b., Eg. 161, Landn. 84, 276, Hkr. i. 228. β. poet. the sea.

brim-gangr, m. the dashing of surf, Ann. 1312.

brim-hljóð, n. the roar of surf.

brimill, m. pl. lar, [bremol, Ivar Aasen], phoca fetida mas, also called brim-selr = útselr, a big sort of seal, Höfuðl. 5: Brimils-gjá, a local name.

brim-lauss, adj. (-leysa, u, f.), surfless, calm, N. G. L. i. 139.

brim-orri, a, m. anas nigra, a duck, Edda (Gl.)

brim-rót, n. furious surf.

brim-saltr, adj. salt as the sea.

brim-sorfinn, part. (rocks) surf-worn, Eg. 142.

brim-steinn, m. brimstone (?), a nickname, Fms. ix.

brim-stormr, m. a gale raising surf, Stj. 26, 89.

brim-tog, n. a rope used to tug a boat through the surf, Gpl. 427.

BRINGA, u, f., Lat. sternum, the chest (brjóstr, pectus), Nj. 24, Eb. 182, Eg. 719: the phrase, e-m skýtr skel í bringu, one gets frigidated, Eg. 49, Fb. i. 418. β. the breast-piece, brisket, Stj. 310, Exod. xxx. 27, = bringu-kollr.

γ. metaph. a soft grassy slope, hence Gull-bringur, the golden slopes, whence Gullbringu sýsla in Icel. COMPDS: bringu-bein, n. the breast-bone, Finnb. 256. bringu-breiðr, adj. broad-chested, Ld. 296, Sturl. ii. 133. bringu-kollr, v. above. bringu-sár, n. a wound in the chest, Sturl. ii. 138, Ld. 140. bringu-teinar, n. pl. = bringuspálr, Fas. iii. 392.

bring-spelir, m. pl. (mod. bringuspálr, Ísl. ii. 55, 447, or bring-smalir, f. pl.), the 'breast-ribs, breast-bars, the brisket or part where the lower ribs are joined with the cartilago ensiformis (the brestspone of Chaucer), Isl. l. c., Fms. ii. 151, Gullþ. 21; bringuspöllum (dat.), Grág. ii. 16; bringuspölu (acc.), Gísl. 106; bringspala (gen.), Sturl. i. 140; bring-speli (acc.), Grett. 123 new Ed.: often in such phrases as, fiinna til (to feel pain) fyrir bringuspöllum; [cp. Fr. espalier.]

brinni, a, m. a flame, Haustl. 13.

BRIS, n., medic. scirrhus, gristle, Fél. ix. 208: the phrase, bita á brisnu, metaphor from a gristly piece of meat.

BRÍK, f., gen. ar, pl. bríkr, [Engl. brick; Fr. brigue; Swed. bricka; Dan. brikke = chess-man in a game], properly a square tablet, e. g. altaris-brik, an altar-piece, Vm. 10, Bs. ii. 487: in the Sagas often of a low screen between the pillars (stafr), separating the bedrooms (hvílurúm) from the chief room, Gpl. 345, Fms. v. 339, Sturl. ii. 228, iii. 219, Korn. 182:—in mod. usage brik means a small tablet with carved work, one at the foot and one at the head of a bed, (höfða-brík, fóta-brík). β. in Norway (Ivar Aasen) used of a small table placed at the door; in this sense it seems to be used Bs. i. (Laur. S.) 854. COMPDS: bríkar-búningr, m. and bríkar-klæði, bríkar-tjald, n. covering for a tablet, D. l. i. 268, Vm. 10, 24. bríkar-nef, n. a nickname, Bs. i.

brími, a, m. fire, poet., Edda (Gl.): brímír, m., poet. a sword, Lex. Pöet.: a mythic abode, Vsp. 43.

brjáð, ð, (cp. braga), to flicker, Stj. 389, Þiðr. 114; brjáandi bírti, Bs. ii. (in a verse). brjáandi, part. flickering, Stj. 389.

brjál, n. showy trifles, in a poem of A. D. 1410; cp. orða-brjál, showy words.

brjála, að, to flutter; to confound, disorder: reflex., Orkn. 204 old Ed. (mod. word). brjálaðr, part. one deranged of mind.

BRJÓSK, n. [Swed. and Dan. brusk], gristle, cartilage, Fas. i. 251; bein eða b., Grág. ii. 12, 120.

BRJÓST, n. (brýst, provinc. Icel.), [Ulf. brusts, f. pl. = σρήθος and σπλάγγνα; A. S. breost; Engl. breast; Hel. bríost, n. pl.; Swed. bröst; Dan. bryst, n.; Germ. brust, f.]:—the breast; b. ok kvíðr, Eg. 579, Nj. 95; önd í brjósti, K. Þ. K. 26; Lat. uber, a woman's breast, in pl., fæða barn á brjósti, feed a bairn at the breast, Bs. i. 666, Str. 18, Stj. 429: mod. chiefly in pl. = Lat. mammae; hafa barn á brjóstum; brjósta-njólk, milk from the breast; brjósta-mein, medic. ulcus or abscessus mammarum, Fél. ix. 202; brjósta-verkr, mastodynia (of women), id.

II. the ancients the breast was thought to be the abode of the mind, as well as of feeling, hence it is poet. called hug-borg, mun-strönd, reid rýnis, minnis knörr, etc., the castle, strand, wain, ship of mind, of thought, of memory, etc., vide Lex. Pöet., Edda 105, Höfuðl. i, Stor. 18; thus brjóst freq. metaph. means feeling, temper, disposition; hafa ekki b. til e-s, to have no heart for it; kenna í brjósti um e-n, to 'feel in the breast' for one, feel compassion for; mun hann vera þrályndr sem faðir hans, en hafa brjóst verra, a harder heart, Sturl. iii. 144, Bs. ii. 70, 41; láta eigi allt fyrir brjósti brenna, of a hardy, daring man; e-m rennr í brjósti, of a light slumber, esp. of one sick. β. the front, of a wave, Bs. i. 484; b. fylkingar, of a line, Eg. 268, Fms. v. 77. γ. metaph. the breast-work or protector of one; b. ok hlífskjöldr, Hom. 95; bera (vera) b. fyrir e-m, to be one's defender, to shield one, Fms. vii. 263, x. 235; the phrase, vinna cið fyrir brjósti e-s, on one's behalf, Gpl. 484.

brjóst-aft, n. strength of chest, Sks. 372.

brjóst-barn, n. a child at the breast, Stj. 227, Fs. 154.

brjóst-björg, f. a breast-plate, Sks. 406.

brjóst-bragð, n. compassion, Barl. 4.

brjóst-búnaðr, m. a breast ornament, brooch, Js. 78.

brjóst-drekkur, m. = brjóstbarn, Grág. i. 240.

brjóst-fast, n. adj. fixed in the heart, Fms. xi. 433.

brjóst-festa, t, to fix in mind, Barl. 142.

brjóst-fríðr, m. peace of mind, 655 xxvii. 16.

brjóst-gjörð, f. a saddle-girth, Stj. 397, Judg. viii. 26, Lv. 82.

brjóst-góðr, adj. (brjóstr-gæði, n. pl.), tender-bearded.

brjóst-heill, adj. having a sound chest, Fbr. 94, Mar. 655 xxxii.

brjóst-kringla, u, f. a 'breast-disk', brooch, Vkv. 24, 34.

brjóst-leysi, n. heart-sinking, prostration, Bs. i. 387.

brjóst-megin, n. strength of mind or heart, Bs. i. 238, Mag. 88.

brjóst-mikill, adj. broad-chested, Sks. 227 (of waves).

brjóst-milkingr, n. a suckling, Matth. xxi. 16.

brjóst-reiðr, adj. enraged, Þiðr. 116.

brjóst-reip, n. a breast-ropes, girdle, a nickname, Orkn.

brjóst-stofa, u, f. a front room, D. N. (Fr.)

brjóst-sullr, m. a tubercle in the lungs, Greg. 74.

brjóst-sviði, a, m. heartburn, Fas. iii. 392, Fél. ix.

brjóst-veiki, n. (brjóstr-veikr, adj.), chest-disease, Fél. ix.

brjóst-veill, adj. having a delicate chest.

brjóst-vit, n. mother-wit, Bs. i. 164, Pass. 44. 17.

brjóst-vitra, u, f. id., Bs. ii. 11.

brjóst-þili, n. = bjórþili, a front wall, Sturl. ii. 66, Hom. 94.

brjóst-pungt, n. adj., Bs. i. 644, (-þyngsli and -þreyngsli, n.), asthma.

BRJÓTA, pret. braut; 2nd pers. braut is obsolete; commonly brautz or brautzu, Ó. H. 24 (in a verse), Fms. vi. 139 (in a verse of A. D. 1050); pl. brutu; sup. brotið; pres. brýt: [this word does not occur in Ulí, and is unknown in Germ.; the A. S. has bréatan, bréatan, but rarely and in the sense to destroy, demolish by the Scandin. dialects all have it; Swed. bryta; Dan. bryde; whereas the Goth. braican, Germ. brechen, Engl. break are unknown to the Scandin. idioms. Du Cange records a Latin-Spanish brutare = destruere; it is therefore likely that it came into Spain with the Goths, although Ulílas does not use it]:—

to break; with acc., Nj. 64, Bs. i. 346; þeir brutu báða fötleggj í honum, Hom. 115; sumir brutu (brut) hendr sínar, sunnr fætr, Bs. i. 10; ef maðr brýtr tenmr or höfði manns, Grág. ii. 11; hvárz þat er höggit, eðr brotið, cut or broken, id.; þeir kómu víð sker ok brutu stýri, Fms. ix. 307; þumóðr kvað þetta at róa minna ok brjóta ekki, Grett. ch. 50: phrases as, b. á bak, to break the back, Fms. vii. 119; á háls, the neck, Vigl. 21; b. í hjóli (hovli), to break on the wheel, of capital punishment, Fms. xi. 372, Hom. 147; í þeim hring stendr þórs steinn, er þeir menn vóru brotnir um (on which the men were broken) er til blóta vóru hafðir, Eb. 26.

2. denoting to destroy, demolish; b. skurðgöð, Fms. x. 277, Bs. i. 10; þeir höfðu brotið hof en kristnað land, Fms. i. 32; Valgarðr braut krossa fyrir Merði ok öll heilög tákn, Nj. 167.

β. b. skip, to shipwreck (skip-bröt); brutu þá skipit allt í spán, Nj. 282, Ld. 8, Landn. 149: absol., hön kom á Vikarsskóð, ok braut þar, 110: nú er á (a river) brýtr af annars manns landi, Gpl. 419; cp. land-brot.

3. adding prepp.; niðr, sundr, af, upp, to break down, asunder, off, or the like; sá er niðr braut alla Jerusalema, 673, 51; b. niðr blótskap, Fms. iii. 165, viii. (pref.); brutu þá Baglar af brúna, B. broke the bridge off, x. 331; b. sundr, ix. 482; b. upp, to break up; þeir brutu upp pilit, Eg. 235; þeir brutu upp búr hans (of ars), 593; b. upp kirkju, Fms. ix. 12; b. upp hlið, to break up a K. þ. K. 84. β. b. upp, to break up a package, unpack; brýtr nú upp gersemar sínar, Fær. 6:—as a naut. term, b. upp means to undo victuals for the mess, Dan. bakke of; jarl ok hans menn b. upp ok setjast til matar, Fms. xi. 147; millit., b. upp vápn means to take prepare for battle (in a sea fight); brjóta upp vápn sín ok berjask, 85; menn brutu upp annan öll vápn, Fms. vi. 313 (in a . γ. b. or b. saman, to fold (clothes or the like); b. sundr, to tear, Nj. 171: in mod. usage also b. bréf, to fold a letter (hence brot, note the size of a book); b. upp bréf, to break a letter open, Barl. b. blað, to fold down a leaf in a book, etc.; b. út, to break (a el) through, Landn. 65 (of a river); þú var út brotinn óssinu, 315. 4. various metaph. phrases; b. búg við, to fight, v. Fas. i. 43; b. odd af oflæti sínu, to break the point off one's pride, mble oneself, Nj. 94 (where to disgrace oneself); b. strauum fyrir break the stream for one, metaphor from a post or rock in a i, to bear the brunt of battle, Orkn. 344; b. bekrann, vide bekrí, 5. metaph. to break, violate, lög, rétt, etc.; mun ek þó vrir þínar sakir brjóta lögin né konungs tignina, eða sva landsi, Fms. iv. 263; en þér, konungr, brutud lög á Agli, you broke the i Egil's case, Eg. 416, Fms. x. 401; at þú brjóttir lög þín, xi. 93; kyldi annars ráð brjóta, Bret.; b. á bak, to infringe, Fas. i. 528 ig-brot, laga-brot); b. af við e-u, to wrong one, iii. 551: in theol. H. E. i. 460 (vide af-brot, mis-brot, crime, sin): absol. to trans-brjóta þau ok bæði, ok göra hördóm, K. A. 134. β. denoting to force, compel; b. menn til Kristni, Ld. 178, Fms. i. 142; til Fs. 98; til hlýðni, to force to submission; allt landsfólk var undir ríki þeirra, all people were brought under their rule, Fms. iv. 64; i hernaði ok brýtr undir sik víkinga, Odd. 22; b. konu til svefnis, term, violare, Grág. i. 338. II. reflex., with prepp. i, ór, i, við, or adv. braut; brjótask, to break in, out, etc.; hann brauzk i Hrólfis Kraka, Landn. 169; brjótask vér þá burt ór húsinnu, to out of the house, Fas. i. 88; brjótask á, to break in upon, press; fr brauzk á hurðina, Onund tried to break in the door, Fs. 101, ii. 187; b. fram, to break forth, Bb.; b. milli, to break out between, 634; b. út, to break out, esp. in the metaph. sense of plague, fire, or the like; er út brýzk vökví ok úhræinindi, Greg. 22 (út-breaking out, eruption); b. um, to make a hard struggle (e. g. fettered or pinioned); því harðara er hann brauzk um, Edda 20; einn brauzk um í vök, Fs. 146; af ofgangi elds þess er um (rages) í grundvöllum laudsins, Sks. 151; b. við e-t, to struggle e) hard against; þeir brutusk við skóga eðr stóra steina, of enberserkers, Fas. i. 515: metaph. to fight hard against, hann brauzk önnur lýð, Fms. xi. 396; b. við ofressi, to fight against odds, Ísl. ii. 439; to strive hard, Stj. 411; Hákonar jarli var ekki mikitt um at borgargörðina, Haco did not care to exert himself much about the burg, Fms. ix. 46: with dat., b. við e-u, to fight against (in sense); b. við gæfu sinni, to break with one's good luck, iv. 233; forlögnum, to struggle against fate, Fs. 20; b. í e-u, to be busy, neself in a thing; eigi þarftu í þessu at brjótask lengr, i. e. give Fms. iii. 102; því at þessi maðr Olafur brýzk í miklu ofressi, this slave struggles against great odds, iv. 77. 2. recipr., þeir svá nær, at brutusk úrarnar fyrir, that they broke one another's m. vs. iii. 216. III. impers. in a pass. sense; skipit (acc.) í spán, the ship was broken to pieces, Ld. 142; skip þangbrands austr við Búlandshöfða, Nj. 162; tók út skip þangbrands ok braut Bs. i. 15: of a house, or the like, destroyed by wind or wave, ut kirkju (acc.), the church was blown down, 30: the phrase, ut (acc.) brýtr á skeri, the stream is broken against a skerry (rock); einn braut á öxlinni, the stream broke against bis shoulders, Grett. (new Ed.), the old Ed. straunrininn—not so well; lá (acc.) brýtr, the eaks, abates, Edda (Ht. verse 78). IV. part. brotinn, broken; þæ ok brotinn, Hkr. i. 343: as adj. in such compds as fót-brotinn, rötinn, háls-brotinn, hrygg-brotinn, etc., with broken leg, wing, etc. r, m. one that breaks, a destroyer, mostly in compds or poet., 7, Lex. Poët. β. n. [Engl. brotb; Germ. brodt], brotb: still used in the east of occurs in the compd word broð-gýgr, a brotb-cook, in a verse in the of Edda, and wrongly explained in Lex. Poët. to be = braud-gýgr. γ. l-geiri, a, m. a spear-formed piece (geiri, goar) of land, Dipl. iv. Oct. 89, new Ed. brot- wrongly. δ. l-högg, n. a blow from a pike, Fms. ix. 528. DDR. m. [A. S. brord; O. H. G. brort; Goth. brozds is sug- a spike, Eg. 285. β. a kind of shaft, freq. in Lex. Poët., s. i. 211, Fas. ii. 118; handbogi (cross-bow) með tvennum tylptum N. G. L. ii. 427; örfa skepra (shafts) eðr brodda, i. 202. γ. of an insect, Grönd. 46: metaph., dauði, hvar er þinn b., I Cor. 5. 8. δ. of the spikes in a sharpened horse-shoe or other shoe, mann- ice-shoes, Þorst. Hv. 46, Eb. 238, 240, Acts ix. 5; in a moun- tains staff (Alpen-stock), Bárð. 170. 2. metaph. [cp. O. H. G. =ordo], milit. the front (point) of a column or body of men, opp.

to hali, the rear; b. fylkingar and fylkingar broddr, Al. 56, 32; cp. ferðar-broddr, farar-broddr, Ld. 96, of a train of cattle and sheep. β. the phrase, vera í broddi lífins, to be in the prime of life, Al. 29. γ. the milk of cows and ewes immediately after calving and lambing. δ. botan. a spike on a plant. brodd-skot, n. a shot with a shaft (b.), Fms. viii. 359, ix. 528. brodd-spjót, n. a pike in the form of a bayonet, Fas. ii. 29. brodd-stöng, f. a (mountaineer's) pole with an iron spike, Valla L. 212. brodd-ör, f. a shaft, = broddr, Fas. ii. 344. BROK. n. bad, black grass; hence Brok-ey, an island, Landn.; cp. broki, a, m. a nickname, Fms. ix. brokkari, a, m. [brocarius = a cart, Du Cange], prop. a cart-borse, hence a trotter, Karl. 48; from brokk, n. a trot; brokka, að, to trot; freq. but of foreign origin. BROKKR. m., prop. a badger (?), [Germ., Scot., and Old Engl. brock.] β. the name of a dwarf, Edda. 2. a trotter, of a horse. BROSTI. brosti; pres. brosi; sup. irreg. brosat,—to smile; þá brosti Rútr, Nj. 35, Fms. ii. 197; b. at e-u, to smile at a thing; at því brosi ek, at . . . , id., Þórð. 26, Orkn. 374, Fms. v. 178; b. við, to smile in reply; Guðrún leit við honum ok brosti við, Ld. 246, Fms. vi. 359; b. litinn þann, Lat. subridere, iv. 101. brosa, u, f. so in old writers, in mod. usage always brosi, n.—a smile: in the phrase, mæla, svara, með (við) brosu, to reply with a smile; við brosu, Sturl. ii. 195; með brosu, Orkn. 464. brosi-leitr, adj. of smiling face, Þjal. 18. brosi-ligr, adj. comical, Sturl. i. 24, Fms. iii. 113. BROSMA. u, f. gadus monopterygus, a fish, Norse brosmie, Edda (Gl.) BROT. n. [brjóta, cp. O. H. G. broti = fragilitas], gener. a broken piece, fragment: 1. esp. in pl., gimsteina brot, 623. 20, 544. 39; brota-silfr, old silver broken to be recast; nú eru tlein Grásiðu brot, Gisl. 18; gullhringrinn stökk í tvá hluti, ok þá er ek hugða at brotunum . . . , Ld. 126; trogs brotin, 655 xxi; brutu þar í Víkinni ok ætludu at göra sér skip ór brotunum (a wrecked ship), Grett. 88: in the compds um-brot, fjör-brot, a hard struggle, convulsions, agony; land-brot, desolation of land by sea or rivers. 2. metaph. only in pl. violation; laga-brot, breach of law; mis-brot, af-brot, transgression, freq. in theol. writers; arithm. fractions; tuga-brot, decimals, etc. 3. sing. breaking, bein-brot, q. v.; sigla til brots, to run ashore under full sail, Eg. 405 (ships-brot); cp. haugs-brot, hrygg-brot. β. a fragment; sögu-brot, the fragment of a tale, story; bókar-brot, the fragment of a MS. and the like. γ. a shallow place in a river, a firth, where the stream breaks and widens, Grág. ii. 346. δ. medic. in the phrase, falla brot, to have an epileptic fit; for the etymology see brotfall below: it is not qs. braut (away) because it is constantly spelt with an o, even in MSS. that give 'braut' constantly, e. g. the Miracle-book, Bs. i. 332-356; hann féll í brot, ok vissi þá ekki til sín löngum, 335, 336: a skin eruption (út-brot). ε. a sort of sledge of felled trees = broti; lét hann þá færa undir hann brot (a lever?) ok við þetta kómu þeir honum upp ór dysinni, Eb. 315, Mar. 89 (Fr.). brot-fall, n. [Ormul. brotþ-fall], an epileptic fit; the spelling in the Ormulum shews the true etymology, viz. broð-fall or broð-fall, a sudden fall; brot- is an etymologizing blunder, 544. 39; féll sveinninn niðr ok hafði brotfall, 655 xxx; hann gördi sér órar, ok lét sem hann féll í brotfall, Landn. (Hb.) 214, Bs. i. 335, 317, 120, where spelt brotffall, compd: brotfalls-sótt, f. id., Fms. v. 213, Bs. i. 317. brot-feldr, adj. epileptic, Karl. 547. brot-hljóð, n. a crashing sound. brot-hættir, adj. brittle; b. gler, brittle glass. broti, a, m. trees felled in a wood and left lying, Fms. vii. 320; þröng- var merkr ok brota stóra, viii. 21, 60, ix. 357. brot-ligr, adj. guilty, Fms. xi. 444, Jb. 55, 112, 339. brotna, að, [brotinn], to be broken, Lat. frangi, Nj. 19, K. þ. K. 54, Fms. iv. 263; b. í spán, to be broken to pieces, Eg. 405. This word is used instead of pass. to brjóta. brotning, f. breaking, Hom. 137; rendering of Gr. κλάσις, Acts ii. 42. BROTT- [vide braut II]:—away, in many compds. brott-búningr, m. preparation for departure, Ísl. ii. 59, Fms. ix. 128. brott-ferð, f. an away-going, departure, Fms. i. 69, Grág. i. 274, Sks. 337, Fs. 7, Eg. 750. brottferðar-öl, n. a parting banquet, Hkr. i. 216. brott-flutningr (mod. -ingr, m.), f. carrying off, Grett. 88, Fms. viii. 251. brott-fúsliga, adv. (-ligr, adj.), eager to depart, Hkr. ii. 100. brott-fússi, adj. eager to depart, Fms. ix. 128. brott-fýsi, f. eagerness to come away, Fb. i. 188. brott-fersla, u, f. transportation, Grág. ii. 358, 379, Jb. 219. brott-för, f. = brottferð, Eg. 587, Fms. ix. 129, Grág. i. 151. compds: brottfarar-leyfi, n. leave to go away, vacation, Orkn. 60, Hkr. ii. 158. brottfarar-öl, n. = brottferðaröl, Fms. i. 58. brott-ganga, u, f. departure, Fms. v. 183. brott-gangr, m. = brottganga. β. a law term, divorce, Ld. 134 (spelt brautgangr). brottgangs-sök, f. a divorce-case. brott-hald, n. a going away, Fms. vii. 197. brott-hlaup, n. a running away, Fms. iv. 265, Eg. 422.

brott-hvarf, n. disappearance, Fms. ix. 341.
brott-höfn, f. law term, a taking off, Grág. i. 217, 332, 420.
brott-kváma, u, f. a going away, Fms. ii. 298.
brott-laga, u, f., naut. a retiring, after battle, opp. to atlaga, Fms. ii. 297.
brott-reið, f. a riding away, Sturl. iii. 25.
brott-rekstr, rs, m. a driving away, expulsion, Stj. 43.
brott-sending, f. a sending away, Stj. 41.
brott-sigling, f. a sailing away, Fms. ii. 95.
brott-söngur, m. divine service performed out of the curate's own parish, Bs., Sturl., D. I. brott-taka, u, f. (-teknung, f.), a taking away, Ann. 1218.
brott-tækiligr, adj. removable, Stj. 4. brott-varp, n. a throwing away, Sks. 388.
brott-vist, f. (-vera, u, f.), a being away, absence, Fms. vii. 48.
bróðerni, n. brotherhood, Lat. fraternitas, Bs. ii. 72, Mar. 24 (Fr.)
BRÓÐIR, gen. dat. acc. bróður; pl. nom. acc. bræðr, gen. bræðra, dat. bræðrum: in mod. common usage irregular forms occur, as gen. sing. bróðurs; nom. sing., and gen. dat. acc. are also sometimes confounded, esp. in keeping the nom. form bróðir through all cases, or even the reverse (but rarely) in taking bróður as a nom.; another irregularity is acc. pl. with the article, bræður-nar instead of bræður-na, which latter form only survives in writing, the former in speaking. There is besides an obsolete poetical monosyllabic form bróðr, in nom. dat. acc. sing. and nom. acc. pl.; gen. sing. bræðrs; cp. such rhymes as bræðr—æðri, in a verse of Einar Skúlason (died about 1170); bræðr (dat.) Sinfjöta, Hkv. 2. 8, as nom. sing., Fagrsk. 54, v. l. (in a verse), etc., cp. Lex. Poët. This form is very rare in prose, vide however Nj., Lat. Vers. Johnsonius, 204, 333, v. l., and a few times in Stj., e. g. síns bræðr, sinn bræðr, 160; it seems to be a Norse form, but occurs now and then in Icel. poetry even of the 15th century, e. g. bræðr nom. sing. rhymes with ræðr, Skáld H. 3. 11, G. H. M. ii. 482, but is quite strange to the spoken language: [Gr. φράτερ; Lat. frater; Goth. brōdir; A. S. brōðar; Engl. brother; Germ. bruder; Swed.-Dan. broder, pl. brödre]:—a brother: proverbs referring to this word—saman er bræðra eign bezt at sjá, Gisl. 17; einginn er annars bróðir í leik; móður-bræðrum verða menn líkastir, Bs. i. 134: a distinction is made between b. samsæðri or sammæðri, a brother having the same father or mother, Grág. i. 170 sqq.: in mod. usage more usual al-bróðir, brother on both sides; hálfr-bróðir, a half-brother; b. skilgetinn, frater germanus; móður-bróðir, a mother's brother; föður-bróðir, a father's brother, uncle; afa-bróðir, a grand-uncle on the father's side; ömmu-bróðir, a grand-uncle on the mother's side; tengda-bróðir, a brother-in-law: in familiar talk an uncle is called 'brother,' and an aunt 'sister.' The ties of brotherhood were most sacred with the old Scandinavians; a brotherless man was a sort of orphan, cp. the proverb, berr er hver á baki nema séu bróður eigi; to revenge a brother's slaughter was a sacred duty; nú tóku þeir þetta fastmælum, at hvárr þeirra skal hefna annars eðr eptir mæla, svá sem þeir sé sambornir bræðr, Bjarn. 58: the word bróðurþani signified a deadly foe, with whom there can be no truce, Hm. 88, Sdm. 35, Skm. 16, Hdl. 28; instances from the Sagas, Dropl. S. (in fine), Heidarv. S. ch. 22 sqq., Grett. S. ch. 50, 92 sqq., Eg. ch. 23, Ld. ch. 53 sqq., etc. The same feeling extended to foster-brotherhood, after the rite of blending blood has been performed; see the graphical descriptions in Fbr. S. (the latter part of the Saga), Gisl. ch. 14 sqq., etc. The universal peace of Fróði in the mythical age is thus described, that 'no one will draw the sword even if he finds his brother's slayer bound,' Gs. verse 6; of the slaughter preceding and foreboding the Ragnarök (the end of the world) it is said, that brothers will fight and put one another to death, Vsp. 46.
II. metaph.: 1. in a heathen sense: fóst-bróðir, foster-brother, q. v.; eid-bróðir, svara-bróðir, 'oath-brother;' leik-bróðir, play-brother, play-fellow: concerning foster-brotherhood, v. esp. Gisl. II, Fbr., Fas. iii. 375 sqq., Hervar. S., Nj. 39, Ls. 9, the phrase, blanda blóði saman. 2. in a Christian sense, brother, bretren, N. T., H. E., Bs. β. a brother, friar: Svörtu-bræðr, Blackfriars; Berfættu-bræðr, q. v.; Kórs-bræðr, Fratres Canonici, Bs., etc. COMPS.: I. sing., bróður-arfr, m. a brother's inheritance, Orkn. 96, Fms. ix. 444. bróður-bani, a, m. a brother's bane, fratricide, Ld. 236, Fms. iii. 21, vide above. bróður-baugr, m. wegegild due to the brother, N. G. L. i. 74. bróður-blóð, n. a brother's blood, Stj. 42, Gen. iv. 10. bróður-bætr, f. pl. wegegild for a brother, Lv. 89. bróður-dauidi, a, m. a brother's death, Gisl. 24. bróður-deild, f. = bróðurhluti, Fr. bróður-dóttir, f. a brother's daughter, niece, Grág. i. 170, Nj. 177; bróðurdóttur son, a brother's son, N. G. L. i. 76. bróður-dráp, n. the slaying of a brother, Stj. 43, Fms. v. 290. bróður-gildr, adj. equal in right (inheritance) to a brother, Fr. bróður-gjöld, n. pl. = bróður-bætr, Eg. 312. bróður-hefnd, f. revenge for the slaying of a brother, Sturl. ii. 68. bróður-hluti, a, m. the share (as to wegegild or inheritance) of a brother, Grág. ii. 175. bróður-kona, u, f. a brother's wife, K. Á. 142. bróður-kvæn, f. id., N. G. L. i. 170. bróður-lóð, n. a brother's share of inheritance. bróður-son, m. a brother's son, nephew, Nj. 122, Grág. i. 171, Gpl. 239, 240; bróðursona-baugr, Grág. ii. 179.

II. pl., bræðra-bani, v. bróðurbani, Fbr. bræðra-búr, n. a friar's bower in a monastery, Dipl. v. 18. bræðbörn, n. pl. cousins (agnate), Gpl. 245. bræðra-dætr, f. pl. n. (of brothers), Gpl. 246. bræðra-eign, f. property of brothers, Gisl. bræðra-garðr, m. a 'brothers-yard,' monastery, D. N. bræðra-n. fellowship of brethren, in heathen sense = fóstbræðralag, Hkr. iii. 2 of friars, H. E., D. I.; brotherhood, Pass. 9. 6. bræðra-mark astron., the Gemini, Pr. 477. bræðra-skáli, a, m. an apartment, Friars, Vm. 109. bræðra-skipti, n. division of inheritance among brothers, Hkr. iii. 52, Fas. i. 512. bræðra-synir, m. pl. cousins (brothers), Gpl. 53.
bróður-ligr, adj. brotherly, Fms. ii. 21, Hom. 26.
BRÓK, pl. brækr, [Lat. braca, only in pl.]; this word is of C origin, and identical with the Gaelic braecan = tartan: I. ta or party-coloured cloth, from Gaelic braec = versicolor. Roman wr oppose the Celtic 'braca' to the Roman 'toga'; Gallia Bracata, Ta Gaul, and Gallia Togata; 'versicolore sagulo, bracas, tegmen barba indutus', Tac. Hist. 2, 20, where it exactly answers to the Scot. tan the national dress of Celts; a similar sense remains in the Icel. na lang-brók, a surname to a lady because of her tall stature, Nj., Lan há-brók, the poet. name of the hawk, from his chequered plumage, Gm. 44; loð-brók, the name of the famous mythical Danish k shaggy coat, though the reason for the name is otherwise given, Ragn. S. ch. 1; the name of the Danish flag of war Dannebrog Dana-brók, pannus Danicus. II. breeches, Scot. breeks, sing. denoting one leg; foðinn ok brókina, Eb. 242; ok lét hann l laust knéit í brókinni, Fms. vii. 170: pl. skyrta gyrða í brækr, I. 39, Ld. 136, Stj. 63, Gen. ix. 22, Fbr. 160, Fms. xi. 150, Vápr leista-brækr, breeches with the socks fixed to them, Eb. l. c.; blære (blue-striped) brækr, Nj. 184; the lesser outlawry might be inflicted law on a woman wearing breeches, v. the curious passage in Ld. l. c. 35; the passage, berbeinn þú stend ok hefir brautningja görvi, þú hafir brækr þínar, bare-legged thou standest, in beggarly attire, out even thy breeches on, Hbl. 6—the poet probably knew the High dress; cp. also the story of king Magnús of Norway (died A. D. 1111) hann hafði mjök þá síðu um klæða búnað, sem títt var í Vestrlönd (viz. Scotland), ok margir hans menn, at þeir gengu berleggjaðir, h stutta kyrtla ok svá yfirhafnir, ok kölluðu margir menn hann Beir eðr Berfætt, Fms. vii. 63; proverbs, bornið vex, en brókin ekki báirn grous, but the breeks not, advice to mothers making the first of breeks for a boy, not to make them too tight; þetta verðr aldri í brók, this will never be a bairn in breeks, i. e. this will never COMPS. bróka-belti, n. a breeches belt, to keep them up, Sks. Fas. i. 47, Sturl. iii. 190. bróka-vaðmál, n. cloth or stuff for b., 246. brókar-sótt, f. nymphomania, Fé. ix. 203.
brók-lauss, adj. breechless, Fms. viii. 448.
brók-lindi, a, m. a girdle (lindi) to keep up the b., Fbr. 160, Ld. brúðningr, m. [bryðja], bad bad food, Snót 216.
brúðning, f. (m., Stj. l. c., v. l.), [bregða], breach, violation, Stj. 656 A, Skálda 183. brugg, n. brewing, N. G. L. iii. 197. 2. metaph. machin scheming, Mar. 52, Thom. 37.
BRUGGA, að, [Germ. brauen; A. S. brewan; Engl. brew; brygge; Swed. brygga]:—to brew, but rare in this sense, the cu word being heita or göra öl, to beat or make ale; cp. öl-hita, öl-i cooking, making ale. 2. metaph. with dat. to trouble, confou b. sáttmáli, Stj. 652: more often with acc., 610: to concoct, schem a bad sense, freq.) brugginn, part. brewed, an ἀπ. λέγ., Vtkv. 7 (b. mjöðr): the s of a strong verb answering to the A. S. breovan, bráw, and the old G strong verb.
bruggu-kanna, u, f. a brewing can, Fr.
bruggu-kefill, m. a brewing kettle, Fr.
brullaup, v. brúðkaup.
BRUM, I. neut. a bud, Lat. gemma; þá hit fyrsta brum at þrútna um vátit á öllum aldinviði til laufs, Sks. 105 a bruminn, Bs. ii. 165; birki-brum, a birch-bud, Eyvind (in a ve) Lex. Poët. II. metaph. and masc. spring, only in the ph öndverðan brum (acc.), in the early spring time, Sighvat (in a ve) í öndverðan brum þinna daga, Bs. ii. 7. β. a moment, in the ph í þenna (sama) bruni; í þenna brunn kom Hringr Dagsson, in description of the battle at Stiklastað, O. H. 218, cp. Fms. v (where v. l. tíma); 'í þessu bruni,' Fms. ix. 24, is certainly a spelling for 'í þenna brum?' cp. also the compd word nýja-brunn, not newfangledness. brumadr, part. budded, Lex. Poët.
bruna, að, to advance with the speed of fire; b. fram, of a stan in the heat of battle, Mag. 2: of ships advancing under full sail, S. viii. 131, 188: freq. in mod. usage, Helius rann upp af því fagra v og brunaði fram á það eirsterka himinhlöf, Od. iii. 1, Bb. 3. 18.
brundr, m. [Germ. brunf], semu animalium, Stj. 45.

3, f. the time when the ewes are blæsma (in Icel. usually the month December), Bs. i. 873, Vm. 80.

BRUNI, a, m. [cp. Ulf. brunsts; Engl. to burn, burning], burning, at; sólar-bruni, Hkr. i. 5; þá er húsit tók at falla ofan af bruna (from fire), Orkn. 458; reykr eðr b., Nj. 201, Sks. 197. β. a barren heath burnt lava-field as a local name in the west of Icel.

2. metaph. burning passion, mostly in bad sense; b. öfundar, of envy, Fms. ii. 140; sta b., of lust, K. Á. 104; but also triar b., fire of faith (but rarely), ns. v. 239; medic. caustic, 655 xi. 2.

COMPS: bruna-belti, the torrid zone. bruna-dómr, m. a sentence to be burnt, Stj. 46. bruna-flekkur, m. a burnt fleck (spot), Fms. xi. 38. bruna-hraun, a burnt lava-field, Bárð. 179.

bruna-vegr=brunabelti, Sks. 197. bruna-þefr, m. a smell of burning, 656 B. bruna-öld, f. the Burning-age, i. e. the beaten time when the dead were burnt, preceding the Hauga-öld (airn-age) according to Snorri, Hkr. pref.; at vér munim hafna átrúnaði rum þeim er feðr várir hafa haft fyrir oss, ok allt foreldri, fyrst um una-öld, ok síðan um Hauga-öld, i. 141: the 'Burning-age' is in Scand. -historical; relics are only found in the mythological time (v. above r. bá) and in law phrases and old sayings, such as branderfð, q. v., brands ok báls, v. brandr: 'brendr' is synonymous to 'dead' in the l. Hm.; at kveldi skal dag leyfa, konu er brend er, praise no wife till is 'burnt' (i. e. buried), 70; and blindr er betri en brendr sé, nýtr ngi nás, better to be blind than burnt, i. e. better blind than dead and tied, 80; but it does not follow that burning was used at the time the poem was composed; the saying had become proverbial. brunn-lækr, m. a brooklet coming from a spring, = bæjarlækr, Grág. 289, Jb. 247, Ísl. ii. 91, Fms. ii. 201.

brunn-migl, a, m. 'mingens in puteum,' a kind of boggoblin who luted the wells, Hálf S. ch. 5, Fas. ii. 29, mentioned only here, and known to the present Icel. legends:—name of the fox, Edda (Gl.); cp. proverb, skómm hundum, skitu refar í brunn karls, shame on the foxes, the foxes defiled the carl's burn, Fms. vii. 21. RUNNR (old form brúðr), m. [Ulf. brunna; A. S. berne; Scot. North. E. burn; O. H. G. brunno; Germ. brunn, all of them weak ms, differing from the Scand.-Icel. brunn; Dan. brønd; Swed. brunn]; spring, well; the well was common to all, high and low, hence proverbs, (allir) eiga sama til brunns að hera, i. e. (all) have the same is, wells, wishes, or the like; all ber að sama brunni, all turn to the same well, all bear the same way, Gret. 137; seint að byrgja brunni er nið er í döttið, it is too late to sbur the well when the bairn has fallen in;

the Engl. proverb, 'It is useless to lock the stable door when the steed is stolen.' In mythol., the brunnr of Mímer (Edda 10, 11) is the well wisdom, for a draught of which Odin pawned his eye; probably symcal of the sun sinking into the sea; the pit Hvergelmir (Edda 3) wers to the Gr. Tartarus; Stj. 612, Fms. ii. 83; the word may also used of running water, though this is not usual in Icel., where distinction is made between brunnr and lækr, Grág. ii. 289, vide brunnr.

2. metaph. a spring, fountain; b. hita (the sun), A. A. 5; c. theol. of God, Christ, b. gæzku, miskunnar . . . , Greg. 33; með nni Guðlegar spekdar, 673 A. 49; b. mælsku, Eluc. 56. brunn-valka, u, f. a third horn in the forehead of an ox with which he ned the ice during winter to get at the water; hit fjórða horn stóð ór í, ok niðr fyrir augu honum, þat var b. hans, Ld. 120. brunn-vatn, n. spring-water, Bs. ii. 177.

brunn-vígsla, u, f. consecration of wells, Bs. i. 450, cp. Ísl. Þjóð.

brutla (brutl), n., brutlan, f., að, [brytja]:—to waste, spend, esp. rifies; prop. to chop.

BRÚ, gen. brúar; nom. pl. brúar, Grág. i. 149, ii. 277, Eg. 529; r, Bs. i. 65 (Hungrvaka), is a bad spelling, cp. Landn. 332 (Mantissa);

d. pl. brýr, which last form never occurs in old writers; dat. sing.

, gen. pl. brúa, dat. brúm: [A. S. brycg and brigg; Scot. brigg;

m. brücke; Dan. bro; cp. bryggja]:—a bridge, Sturl. i. 244, 255, β, iii. 24. In early times bridges, as well as ferries, roads, and hosals, were works of charity, erected for the soul's health; hence the nes sálu-hús (hospital), sálu-brú (soul-bridge). In the Swedish-Runic nes such bridges are often mentioned, built by pious kinsmen for the ls of the dead, Baut. 41, 97, 119, 124, 146, 559, 796, 829, 1112,

The Icel. Libri Datici of the 12th century speak of sheltering the cinn mikinn, en á brúðum stólsins var skorinn þórr, ok var þat mikit líkneski, cp. the classical passage Eb. ch. 4; var hárf hennar bundit við stólbrúðurnar, Bárð. 175 (in the vellum MS. distinctly brúð'nar): a distinction in form and inflexion is always made between brúðr, a bride, and brúða, puppet; hence the saying, 'to sit like a brúða,' i. e. motionless, not stirring a limb; bláum skryðr skruða, skikkanlegri en brúða, more quiet than a b., Sig. Pét. 229; the sense of κόρη and νύμφη in Greek is analogous.

brúð-bekkr, m. the bride's bench; in old wedding feasts the bride and bridesmaids were seated on the bride's bench, the bride in the middle; the ladies were seated on the pallr or þverpallr (the dais or ladies' bench), turning their faces to look down the hall; the brúðbekkr was the seat of honour, and the central part of the dais; cp. the phrase, brúð sat 'á miðjum palli,' i. e. 'á brúðbekki,' Ld. 296, Sd. 151, Lv. 37, Ísl. ii. 250, Nj. 50; vide bekkr, pp. 56, 57.

brúð-fé, n. a bride's fee; cp. the 'duty to the priest and clerk' in the Engl. service; the bride's fee is mentioned in the beautiful heathen poem Þrymskviða (our chief authority in these matters), 29, 32; where it is a fee or gift of the bride to the giant maid. It seems to be a fee paid by the guests for attendance and waiting. Unfortunately there is a lacuna in verse 29, the last part of which refers to the bekkjargjöf (vide 57); the poem is only left in a single MS. and the text cannot be restored.

It is curious that þkv. 32 calls this fee 'sbillings,' cp. Germ. braut schilling (Grimm); it shews that the bride's fee was paid in small pieces of money. brúð-ferð and brúð-för, f. a bride's journey, Landn. 304, cp. Fs. 124, Rð. 255, Fms. iv. 180, Eg. 701, Grág. i. 441 A; as a rule the bridegroom was to carry his bride home, or she was carried home to him, and the wedding feast was held at the house and at the cost of the bridegroom or his parents. The bride came attended and followed by her bridesmaids, friends, and kinsmen, sometimes a host of men; hence originate the words brúðferð, brúðför, and perhaps even brúðhlaup, etc. 'Dress the hall! now the bride is to turn homeward with me,' says the bridegroom-dwarf in the beginning of the poem Alvísmál; and the bride Freyja travels to the wedding at the giant's, þkv., cp. Rm. 37;—báðu hennar, ok heim óku, gíptu Karli, gékk hón um líni, Ld. ch. 7, Nj. ch. 34, Harð. S. ch. 4, Sturl. iii. 181 sqq. In some cases, to shew deference to the father of the bride, the feast might be held at his house, Nj. ch. 2 (skyldi boð vera at Marðar), ch. 10, 14, Lv. ch. 12; cp. the curious case, Sturl. i. 226. In Icel., where there were no inns, the law ordered that a bride and bridegroom, when on the bride's journey, had the same right as members of parliament on their journey to the parliament; every farmer was bound to shelter at least six of the party, supposing that the bride or bridegroom was among the number, K. þ. K. 94.

One who turned them out was liable to the lesser outlawry, Grág. i. 441. brúð-gumi, a, m. [Ulf. uses brufjafs, not brufguma; A. S. brydguma;

Hel. brudigomo; O. H. G. brutigomo; Germ. brutigam; Dan. brudgom; Swed. brudgumme; from brúðr, a bride, and gumi, a man = Lat. homo; the Engl. inserts a spurious r, bridegroom]:—a 'bride's man', bridegroom; svá sem gumi er kalladr í brúðför, Edda 107, Grág. i. 175, Nj. 25, Sturl. iii. 182, Ísl. ii. 250. COMPD: brúðguma-reið, f. a 'bridegroom's ride;' at weddings the bridegroom, as the host, had to meet his guests (boðsmenn) a quarter of a mile from his house; here he entertained them in tents, where they remained and enjoyed themselves till evening; when darkness began to set in, the party rode home in a procession drawn up two and two; this was called brúðguma-reið.

The last bridegroom's ride on record in Icel. was that of Eggert Olafsson, just a hundred years ago, at his wedding at Reykholt in the autumn of 1767 A. D. A minute description of this last Icel. b. exists in a MS. (in the possession of Maurer, in Munich). An interesting treatise upon the wedding feasts in Icel. in the Middle Ages, down to the 18th century, is among the Icel. MSS. in the Bodleian Library, no. 130.

brúð-hjón, n. pl. the wedding pair.

brúð-hvíla, u, f. a bridal bed (lectus nuptialis), Bret.

brúð-kaup and brul-laup, n. a wedding feast, bridal; these two words are identical in sense, but different in etymology; brúðkaup, prop. bride's bargain, refers to the old notion, that marriage was a bargain or purchase, not that the bride was bought herself, but the word refers to the exchange of mundr (by the bridegroom) and heimanfylgja (by the bride's father), vide these words; hence the allit. phrase, mey mundi keypt, and mundr and mey ('mund' and maid); again, brullaup, [qs. brúð-hlaup, bride's leap, cp. Germ. brautlauf, M. H. G. bräutlauf, Swed. bröllopp, Dan. bryllup; Grimm mentions an A. S. brydlop (not found in Grein's Glossary or Bosworth's A. S. Dictionary); the full form brúðhlaup scarcely occurs in very old MSS., it is found in the Játv. S.

MS. A. D. 1360, but only assimilated, Grág. i. 303, 311, l. 1] refers either to the bride's journey = brúðför. or to some bridal procession on the wedding day, probably the first; but in fact both words are only used of the wedding feast, the Engl. 'bridal,' A. S. bryd-eala. At the wedding feast the contract, though agreed upon at the espousals (festar), was to be read; to make a lawful 'brúðkaup' there must be at least six guests—þá er brullaup gert at lögum, ef lögráðandi fastnar konu, enda sé sex niðri at brullaupi et festa, ok gangi brúðgömmunni í ljósi í sama sæng konu, Grág. i. 175; ráða b., to fix the wedding day, Nj. 4; vera at brullaupi, Ld. 70; drekka b., to drink, i. e. bold, a wedding, 16, Fms. iv. 196; kona til b., Sturl. iii. 182; göra b., Fms. i. 150; göra b. til, to wed, Eg. 160, Landn. 243; veita b., Eb. 140: as to the time of wedding, vide Grág. i. 311. COMPDS: brúðkaups-ferð, f. = brúðferð, Sturl. iii. 177. brúðkaups-görð, f. holding a wedding, Fs. 21, K. þ. K. 114, N. G. L. i. 16. brúðkaups-klæði, n. a wedding-garment, Matth. xxii. 11. brúðkaups-kostr, m. the cost of a wedding, D. N. iv. 174. brúðkaups-stefna, u, f. a wedding meeting, wedding feast, Nj. 40, Fms. ii. 49, vi. 395. brúðkaups-veizla, u, f. a wedding feast, Fms. vii. 278, ix. 345, Hkr. iii. 404. brúðkaups-vitni, n. a marriage-witness, Gpl. 224.

brúð-kona, u, f. a bridesmaid; hafi hann (viz. the bridegroom) brúðmenn, en hon (the bride) brúðkonur, N. G. L. i. 27; þú skal hann (the bridegroom) sitja millum brúðmanna, en hon (the bride) millum brúðkvenna, ii. 305.

brúð-maðr, m. a bridegroom's man, N. G. L. i. 27: collect. the bridesmen and bridesmaids when on a bride's journey, Grág. i. 436, Eg. 201, Rd. 270.

brúð-messa, u, f. the marriage-service, H. E. i. 527.

BRÚÐR, f., dat. acc. brúði; pl. brúðir: [Ulf. renders the Gr. vúμφη by brups, Matth. x. 35 (where the Gr. word means nurus); John iii. 29 (where it means bride) is lost in Ulf., but no doubt 'brups' was also used there; A. S. bryde; Engl. bride; O. H. G. prut; Germ. brant; Dan.-Swed. brud]:—a bride; Germans use 'braut' in the sense of betrothed, but Icel. call a girl festar-mey (betrothed) from the espousal till she sets out for the wedding journey, when she becomes 'bride'; in mod. usage the word only applies to the wedding day; konur skipuðu pall, ok var brúðrin döpr, Nj. 11; sat Hallgerðr á palli, ok var brúðrin allkát, 18; var brúðrin í för með þeim, 50; brúðr sat á miðjum palli, en til amarrar handar þorgerðr dóttir hennar, 51; brúðr sat á miðjan pall ok þorlaug á aðra ok Geirlaug á aðra (the ladies' seat of honour was nearest to the bride on her right and left hand), Lv. 37; konur sátu á palli, ok sat Helga hin Fagra næst brúðinni, Isl. ii. 251. β. in a wider sense, the bridesmaids (=brúðkonur) sitting on the 'bride's bench' are called brides; sat þá þorgerðr (Ed. and MSS. wrongly þorhalla) meðal brúða, then Thorgerda was seated among the 'brides', i. e. on the bride's bench, being herself bride, Nj. 51; cp. also þkv. 25, hvar sátu 'brúðir' (acc. pl.) bita hvassara? Answ. sáka ek brúðir bita on breiðara: in poetry, girls, maids in general, Lex. Poët.: metaph. and theol., b. Guðs, b. Kristi—the church, H. E., Vidal., etc. COMPDS: brúðar-bekkr, m. = brúðbekkr. brúðar-efni, n. a bride to be, bride-elect, Bárð. 175. brúðar-gangr, m. the bridal procession; both the procession to and from the church (first the maids and women, then the ladies, and the bride, as the chief person, last); and again, the procession of the bride and ladies from the bride's room (brúðarhús) into the hall, where the men were assembled with the bridegroom. After grace had been said, both in the stofa, to the men, and in the bride's-bower, to the ladies, two dishes were served; a toast, called Heilags Anda skál or Heilags Anda miuni (Holy Ghost's toast), perhaps a continuation of the heathen Bragarfull, was then given; at this signal the marshal (síðamaðr) went up to the bride's room and summoned the brides (ladies) to come down to the stofa and join the men; this was the second procession. The bride then sat on the bride's chair, and every one took his lady, and the feast went on in common. This custom is obsolete, but the word remains; a slow, stately walk, with an air of importance in measured steps, is called in Icel. a 'bride's walk,' like that of brides on a wedding day; [cp. Germ. brantgang.] brúðar-hús, n. a bride's chamber, the room where the bride and ladies were seated at a wedding during the morning and the beginning of the wedding feast, 625. 167. brúðar-lín, n. the bride's veil; the bride was veiled during the wedding, and according to þkv. 19 she took the veil when she set out for the 'brúðförr.' This was the only time in life when a woman was veiled, hence ganga und líni, to walk under veil, to be veiled, is synonymous with to wed, marry; giptu Karli, gékk hóu und líni, Rm. 37; setjask und rípti, id., 20; bundu þeir þór þá brúðar líni, þkv. 191, 15; laut und líni, lysti at Kyssa, he (viz. the bridegroom) louted under the veil, him list to kiss, 27; Guðrún (the bride) sat innar á þverpalli, ok þar konur hjó henni, ok hafði lín á höfði, i. e. she sat wearing a veil, Ld. 296. brúðar-stóll, m. the bride's chair, use, Lat. uti (hafa, beita neyta, or other words indirectly bearing sense are used); derived forms—as brúðkandi, brúðkanligr, öbrúðkanligr, adj. unfit, useless—are used, but sound ill. brú f. use, is preferred for brúk, u., Dan. brug = use, etc.

BRÚN, f., old pl. brýnn, mod. brýr; the old form remains in phrase, bera e-m e-á brýn (qs. brýnn)—eye-brow (brá = eye-lid), xi. 274; kom (the blow) á brúnina, ok hljóp hón ofan fyrir aug; bindr upp brúnauna, þorst. St. 49; ór brúnnunum aug nefðr, 368; skegg ok brýnn, Stj. 318; brá eðr brúna, Edda 109, reference to frames of mind; to lift the eye-brows denoting a plausible state; to drop them, a moody frame; in phrases, bregða í (brýnn?), to be amazed, v. bregða; lypta brúnnunum, to lift the eye to be glad, cheerful, Fs. 18; hóf þú upp brýn (impers.), their cleared, Bs. i. 637, Eg. 55; síga lætr þú brýnn fyrir brár, cp. the to knit the brows, Hkv. Hjörv. 19; er hann sá at þórr lét síga br ofan fyrir augun, Edda 28; hleypra brúnnunum, id., Eg. 305, henc brýnn, gláð; þung-brýnn, moody; brún-ólvi, id.; hafa brúðr brúnnunum, to look uncanny, Band.; vera (so and so) undir brún at l look so and so, esp. in an uncanny sense, Nj. 55, Orkn. 284; ber e-t á brýnn (vide bera B. I. β), Greg. 51, Rd. 241.

II. m. the brow of a fell, moor, etc. (fjalls-brún, heidar-brún, veggiar-lís-brún, the edge of ice; á framanverðri brúnninni, efstu brúnninni, mountain edge, Sturl. i. 84: the first beam of day in the sky (dags-litil brún at degi; lands-brúnn, the 'lands-brow', i. e. the first sight mountain above the water. COMPDS: brúna-bein, n. pl. the of the brow, Sturl. i. 180, Heidarv. S. (in a verse). brúna-er adj. heavy-browed, Eg. 304. brúna-siðr, adj. having long overhanging brows, Eg. 304, v. l. brúna-skurðr, m. cutting the hair across the brows (as in the later Roman time), Ld. 272.

BRÚN, f. a kind of stuff or tapestry (for. word), Vm. 24, 31, 146 Pm. 25, Bs. i. 762.

brúnaðr, adj. (dark) coloured, Fms. viii. 217, Sks. 286.

brún-áss, m. the wall-plate, i. e. the beam (áss) along the edge of the walls on which the cross-beams rest, Nj. 114, 202, Bs. i. 80.

brún-gras, n. 'brown-grass,' probably Iceland moss, Finnb. 21 = brónugrös, q. v. (?)

brún-hvítr, adj. white-browed, epithet of a fair lady, Hým. 8.

brún-klukka, u, f. 'brown-bell,' name of an insect found in stone pools, Eggert Itni. § 600.

brún-málottr, adj. (a horse) of mouse-grey colour with a black down the back, Hrafn. 5.

BRÚNN, adj. [A. S. brún; Germ. braun], brown, Hkr. iii. 81, iii. 336; brún klæði, black dress, of the dress of a divine, Bs. i. 'svart' is never used of a horse, but brúnn, dark-brown, whereas is jarpr, Nj. 167, Grett. 122 A, Bs. i. 670, cp. Sturl. ii. 32; a black is called Brúnni, a mare Brúnka; dökk-brúnn, rauð-brúnn, dark-red-brown, etc. The word is not much in use.

brún-siðr, adj. = brúnasiðr, with overhanging brows, Þiðr. 179.

brún-ólvi, adj. a word split in different ways, found in about passages. brúnölr, Bjarn. 62; brúnvolvi, Fb. i. 186; brunvau 357; brúnölvi, Fms. xi. 114; brúnölfr, Jónsv. S. 32 (Ed. 182 frowning, with a wolfish brow, look, [from brún and úlfr, a wolf].

BRÚSI, a, m. a buck, he-goat, Edda (Gl.): name of a giant, Fb. 214. In Norway (Ivar Aasen), a lock of hair on the forehead of a is called 'bruse.' In Icel. a. an earthen jar, to keep wine or sp (cp. Scot. greybeard, Scott's Monastery, ch. 9), no doubt from being in the shape of a bearded head. This has given rise to the little poem of Hallgrím called Skeggkarlsvísur, Skyldir erum við Skeggkarle, a comparison between Man and Greybeard (Skeggkarle = jarle); cp. leir-brúsi = brúsi; flot-brúsi, Hým. 26. β. a bird, col. maximus, called so in the north of Icel., but else heimbrini, Egger § 556.

II. a pr. name of a man, Landn.

brúskr, m. a 'brush,' tuft of hair, crest of a helmet, etc.

brústeinn, m. pavement, Eb. 120.

brýdda, dd, [broddr], to prick, point: a. to sharpen or rough a in shoeing him, Hm. 89; to spit, pin, Sturl. iii. 85 C. β. to the point; svá langt sem bænar-krossinn á Sævarlandi byrddir Melshorni, of a view, just sheaving the point, Dipl. iii. 11: metaph. to torment, Str. 25; b. á illu, ójafnadi, to sbew, utter, evil, injustice. to line a garment, (akin to borb, bordi.)

brydding, f. lining, N. G. L. iii. no. 2 and 10, D. N., freq. in mod.

bryðja, u, f. a sort of trough, Stj. 178. Gen. xxx. 38. II. woman, a bag, v. the following word.

BRYÐJA, bruddi, brutt, no doubt qs. brytja, prop. to chop with teeth, used of chewing biscuits or other hard brittle food; cp. pro Ital. rottà, which is used in the very same sense, from Lat. rump; bryðja comes from brjóta, brytja.

BRYGGJA, u, f. [v. brú, Scot. brigg], a pier, landing-stage, way, Eg. 75, 530, Hkr. ii. 11, Ld. 190, Fms. i. 158, ix. 478, 503, x. The piers were movable, and were carried about in trading ships; such phrases as, skjóta bryggjum (skut-bryggja), to shoot out the gan-embarking or loading the ship. 2. seldom = bridge, D. I. i. 404.

 English local names, Stanfurðu-bryggja, Lundúna-bryggja, Stanfordige, London-bridge, Hkr., Fms. vi. compds: bryggju-búð, f. ter-shop, N. G. L. iii. no. 49. bryggju-fótr, m. the bead (end) of ier, a cognom., Fms. bryggju-ker, u. a tub at the pier, Fms. x. bryggju-lægi, n. a lying with the gangway shot out, Grág. i.
 Hkr. ii. 213. bryggju-mangari, a, m. a 'bridge-monger'; shopner at a landing-pier, N. G. L. iii. bryggju-sporðr, m. the end, d of a pier, Grág. i. 92, Eg. 121, Fms. iv. 41.
ryn-brók, f. war-breeches, Sks. 405.
ryn-glöfi, a, m. a war-glove, gauntlet, N. G. L. i. 247, El., Karl., etc. ryn-hattr and -hötttr, m. and -hetta, u, f. a war-hat, Al. 78, Karl.
 239.
ryn-hosa, u, f. war-bose, greaves, Stj. 461, Sks. 405. I Sam. xvii. 6.
RYNJA, u, f. [Ulf. brynio; A. S. burn; Hcl. bry-nio; O. H. G. brunja; ed. brynja; Dan. brynie]—a coat of mail, in olden times woven of y (hringa-brynja, ring-mail), hence in poetry called hring-skyrta, a in-mail sark or sbirt, with epithets such as 'iron sewed, knit, woven', the like, Lex. Poët.: the breast-plate, spanga-brynja (Fms. vii. 264, viii.
 388), is of later date, viz. of the time of the Crusades and the following s, vide Fms. i. 43, ii. 309, iv. 65, vi. 410, 411, vii. 45, 46, viii. 403, 137, v. l. etc. etc., Bs. i. 526, 528, 624. compds: brynju-bitr, mail-biter, name of a sword, Sturl. brynju-bönd, u. pl. cords fasten the b., Karl. brynju-hattr and -hetta = brynhatr. ryn-hálsbjörg, f. a hauberker. brynju-hringr, m. the ring of a of mail, Fas. i. 197. brynju-lauss, adj. without a coat of mail, vered, Sturl. ii. 146, Fms. vi. 416 (in a verse). brynju-meistari, a smith of a b., N. G. L. ii. 246. brynju-rokk, m. a coat
m. rock] of mail, Kark ynja, að, to cover with a coat of mail, Róm. 219; mostly in part. pass. ynjaðr, wearing a coat of mail, Fms. v. 161, Orkn. 148: reflex. to on a coat of mail, El. 103.
yn-klungr, m. a sort of weapon, = Lat. lupus, Sks. 419.
yn-knifr, m. a war-knife, dirk, Sks. 406.
yn-kolla, u, f. = mid. Lat. collare, a collar of mail, Fms. viii. 404.
ynna, t, [brunnr], to water cattle, with dat. of the beasts; b. nautum, da 163, Dropl. 34.
yn-stakkr, m. a mail-jacket, Fær. 110, Lv. 107.
yn-stúka, u, f. a mail-sleeve, Fms. ii. 323, viii. 387.
yn-tröll, n. a sort of halberd, Ld. 148, Valla L. 208, Eg. 121, 122, K. 170, Thom. 343, Stj. 461. I Sam. xvii. 7, where the translator of the spear of Goliath—slíkt er nú kallat b. yn-þvari, a, m. a sort of halberd, probably synonymous with bryn- defined in Eg. 285, Fas. iii. 387.
RYTI, old gen. brytja, mod. bryta, m. [A. S. brytta = villucus; Dan. brøde], a steward, bailiff. This word occurs twice or thrice in books, of the bailiffs, of private farms, Nj. 201, þorf. S. Karl. 408, 47; also of the two bishops' bailiffs, Bs. i. 247, 477, 839, 848, e bryti is inferior to ráðsmaðr, a steward, and denotes the head- er in the bishop's homestead. In Denmark it was more in use, i. treatise of N. M. Petersen ('Bonde og Bryde') upon the subject, in Ann. for Nord. Oldk. 1847; even used in Denmark as a pr. name, eward, Stewart in the Brit. Isles, Hkr. i. 228; bryta eðr himum manni er í bæ er staddir, Gpl. 428: the bryti was in Norway the bondsman, twær þrælur, þjónn ok bryti, N. G. L. i. 70, 36.
rtja, að, [brjóta-brotinn; A. S. bryttjan = to deal out], to chop, esp.
ntcher's meat, Ísl. ii. 337; svá brytju végr grúna, Sd. 163; b. biúfe, O, Stj. 411. Judg. xiv. 6 (as he would have 'rent' a kid); b. níðr, to own, as a carcass, Fms. vii. 123; b. mat, to chop meat, viii. 221.
rtjan, f. chopping, Grág. i. 148, 466.
rt-skálm, f. a chopper, Gisl. 80.
rt-trog, n. a butcher's trough, Þryml. 3. 60.
na, d, [brún], to whet, sharpen, 'bring to an edge'; b. ljá, knif, sverð, net a scythe, knife, sword, Edda 48, Ísl. ii. 348, Fs. 62. β. nant, to a boat or ship half a-sore, put her on the 'edge' of the sea-board; p skipi, Nj. 19, Fs. 145, 147, Fms. viii. 333, v. l. 2. metaph.
 g on, incite, Al. 33.
na, u, f. uobetting; mowers call 'bryna' the amount of mowing before the scythe wants whetting again.
ni, n. a uobestone, Ísl. ii. 348, Fas. iii. 43, 44. 2. metaph.
 (rendering of the Lat. incitamenta gulae), Róm. 306.
ning, f. a whetting, sharpening, esp. metaph. egging on, sharpening; et görst um yör sonu mína, þurfi þér bryningina, Ld. 240; segir, at þí þeir tekið bryningunni, Hkr. ii. 239.
nligr, adj. = brynn.

having such or such a brow, in compds, þung-brynn, létt-brynn, sam-brynn, q. v.
bræða, dd, [bráð], to melt, Sks. 145; b. jökul, sjú, ís, Fms. iii. 180, ix. 355, K. A. 6; b. lýsi, to make oil. 2. metaph. to hurry; séinkaða ek, en þú bræddir heldr, I tarried, but you hurried, Dropl.
 25. 3. [bráð, n.], to tar, pitch; b. hús, skip, timbr, kirkju, etc., Fms. i. 291, v. 331, Vm. 62, Eg. 90, N. G. L. ii. 247, Gpl. 81.
bræði, f. [bráðr], anger, ire, temper, Eluc. 41; í bræði, in a passion, Fms. vii. 130, Pass. 8. 14; með bræði, with ire, Stj. 153. bræði- mæli, n. pl. angry language, Sks. 25.
bræðrunga, u, f. [bróðir], a female first cousin, Grág. i. 346, Fms.
 vii. 274, Post. 656 A. ii. 15.
bræðrungr, m. [bróðir], a first cousin (agnate), Grág. i. 171, ii. 172;
 also = bræðrunga; hón var bræðrungr, she was first cousin, Ásnyjar, Grett.
 87. compds: bræðrungs-barn, n. child of a first cousin, Gpl. 244.
bræðrungs- and bræðrunga-baugr, n. the share of weregild due to first cousins, N. G. L. i. 75, Grág. ii. 185.
brækja, u, f. a brackish, bad taste. brækir, m. a cognom., Landn.
bræklingar, m. pl. [brók], 'breechings', a nickname of the Irish, Morkinsk. (Fr.)
brækta, t, [Dan. bræge; Ivar Aasen, braka, brækta], to bleat; b. sem geit, to bleat like a she-goat, Fbr. 212 (rare). bræla, d, [Fr. brûler], to burn, in the allit. phrase, brenna ok bræla.
bræla, u, f. thick smoke and fire (= svæla). brögðóttir, adj. [bragð], crafty, cunning, Eg. 283, Glúm. 379, Háv. 56.
brögðu-ligr, adj. cunning-looking, Mag. 7.
BRÓLTA, t, [bratt and bratta, Ivar Aasen], to tumble about (as a cow in a bog), Ld. 328, Nj. 27, Jónsv. S. (Ed. 1824), p. 38 (breylti); Fms. xi.
 129 has a false reading breysti. brólt, n. a tumbling about. brórr, m. [A. S. brær], a briar, Haustl. 14; the explanation given in Lex. Poët. is scarcely right.
BRÖSK, n. a noise, crackling, Eb. 97 new Ed. note 1. bróstuliga, adv. (-ligr, adj.), in the phrase, líta b., to brag, Sturl. i.
 140 C, [cp. braska = to twist, Ivar Aasen.] budda, u, f. a purse, (mod.) BUÐKR, baudkr, Art. 7, mod. contr. baukr, m. [a for. word derived from Gr. ἀνοθήκη; mid. Lat. apoteca; Ital. bottega; Fr. bot- tique; O. H. G. buttick; mod. Germ. büttich; hence Germ. bütteber, Dan. bödker, mod. Icel. beykir = a cooper]—a box, originally a box to keep herbs and balsams in; tvá buðka með balsamum, Bs. i. 872, Mar.
 43; buðkr nokkurr er húsfreyja átti, Glúm. 378, Stj. 215; Bauka- Jón, Pillbox-John, was a nickname given to a bishop in Icel. for having made money by dealing in medicine-boxes; kölluðu óvinir hans hann Bauka-Jón, sögðu hann hafa selt í smá-baukum, þat er hann léti sem væri dýrindi nokkur, Espol. Árb. 1685; hence prob. bauka, q. v. compd: bauka-gröss, n. pl. herbs kept in a box, Str.
buðlungr, m. a king, poet., Edda (Gl.), Lex. Poët. bufteit, n. [Engl. buffet], a buffet, Gisl. 27.
bufteita, tt, (for. word), to buffet, Bær. 20, Mar. 60.
buga, að, to bow; in fishing for trout with nets people in Icel. say, buga fyrir, to draw the net round; but mostly used metaph. and in compds, yfir-buga, to bow down, subdue; 3rd pers. pret. reflex. bugusk, from an obsolete strong verb bjúga, baug, occurs in Eyvind, bugusk álmar, bows were bent, Fms. i. 49.
bugða, u, f. a bow or bent, of a serpent's coil.
BUGR, m. pl. ir, a bowing, winding; so Icel. call the bight or bend of a river, brook, creek, or the like; renna í bugum, to flow in bights, hence úr-bugr, lækjar-bugr: the bight (inside) of a ring, finger, bow-string, etc.; í bug hringinum, Eg. 306; b. fingranna, Sturl. i. 189; gripa í bug snærum, poet. to grip the bight of the bow-string, Jd. 27: the scythe has þjó-bugr, q. v.: the concave side of the sails, sá af landi í bug allra seglanna, Fms. vii. 94: a curve, disorder, of a line of men or ships (in battle), réttta þann bug, er á var orðinn flotaum, i. 174; hence the phrase, aka e-m á bug, vide aka; vinda (góra) bráða-bug að e-u. to make baste, Grett. 98 A: á bug, Scot. abeigh (aloof), Úlf. 3. 27; meið-bugir, impediments. β. convexity; b. jarðar, Rb. 468, unusual in this sense.
bugt, n. bowing, servile homage: bugta, að, to make many bows, Snót 163. β. a bight, bay, Dan. bugt (for. and rare). γ. [boughtes, Spencer] = bugða, Fms. iii. 190, or false reading = beit (?).
BUKKR, m. [A. S. bucca; Engl. buck; Germ. bock; Swed.-Dan.
bukk; cp. bokki]—a he-goat, rare; hafr is the common word, Stj. 177, O. H. 15: = Lat. aries, a battering ram, Al. 89. compds: bukka- blöð, n. the blood of he-goats, 544. 39. bukka-skinn, n. the skin of he-goats, Sks. 184. bukka-vara, u, f. id., Bs. ii. 177, Sks. 184. bukkr-ram, n. a buck-ram, ram, Vm. 124, Dipl. iii. 4 (a for. word).
 compd: bukkrams-hökull, m. the scapular of a ram, Vm. 70.
BUKL, n. [mid. Lat. bucula], the boss of a shield, Al. 40, (a for. word.)
buklari, a, m. [Fr. bouclier], a buckler, shield, Sks. 374, Eg. 202, Fms. viii. 170, 317, ix. 533, Fas. i. 179, Sturl. ii. 44, 221, etc. compds: buklara-bóla, u, f. the boss of a buckler, Sturl. i. 196. buklara- bullá, ad, to boil up; b. og sjóða; cp. Lat. ebullire: metaph. to chat, talk nonsense, and bull, n. nonsense;—all mod.

bullá, u, f. the shaft in a churn or pump. bullu-fótr, m. a pr. name, Grett. bulungr, m., pronounced budlungur, [bolr, bulr], a pile of logs, fire-wood, Stj. 593, Ísl. ii. 417.

bumba, u, f. [onomatopœtic, cp. Engl. bomb, to boom, etc.], a drum, Stj. 289, Sks., Al., Karl., Fas. iii, etc. 2. the belly of a tub, kettle, or any big jar; ketil-bumba, Od. viii. 436.

BUNA, u, f. [akin to ben], a stream of purling water; lækjar-buna, vatns-buna: bunu-lækr, m. a purling brook, Jónas 137; blóð-buna = blóðbogi. 2. one with the stocking hanging down his leg, ungartered; a cognom. (Björn buna), Landn.

buna, ad, to gush out, of blood, water-spring, etc.

BUNDIN, n., mod. byndini, Poss. 17. 27. [binda], a sheaf, bundle, Stj. 192. Gen. xxxvii. 7, Greg. 40; korn-bundi, a sheaf of corn, Blanda MS. bunga, u, f. elevation, convexity.

bunki, a, m. a heap, pile, v. búlki.

bunungr, m. a sort of whale, Edda (Gl.) burdeign, ad, (a for. word; vide burt), to tilt, þidr.

BURÐR, ar, m. pl. ir, [Engl. birth; Hel. giburð; Germ. geburt; cp. bera A. II]—birth, esp. of the birth of Christ; frá Guðs, Drottins, Krists burði, Bs. i. 112, 145, 158, 173; frá hingað-burði Christi, id., 64, 75, 79, 85; til burðar Christi, Rb. 84; of men, sótt burðar = jóðsót, labours, K. Á. 104. 2. of domestic animals, calving, lambing, hence sauð-burðr, the lambing-time; þeim kúm er bezt búast til burðar, Bs. i. 194. 3. birth, the thing born, an embryo; Fyllinn gengr tvö ár með burðinum, Stj. 70; and þær (viz. the ewes) skyldi sínu burð geta, 178; fæða sinn burð, 97; með konum leysisk burðr (abortion), Bs. i. 798. 4. in pl. birth, extraction; heidinn at burðum (MS. sing.), beaten by birth, Ver. 40; burðir ok ætt, kitth and kin, Fms. i. 83; er ekki er til Noregs kominn fyrir burða sakir, ix. 389; Hákon jarl hafði burði til þess, at halda fôðurleifð sinni, ok hafa jarlsnafni, i. 223; þykkjumk ek hafa til þess burði ok frænda styrk, Eg. 474; hence in mod. usage burðir means one's 'physique,' strength; burðamaðr mikill, a mighty strong man; hafa litla burði, to have little strength; yfir-burðir, superior strength (cp. bera A. I), and afburðir, q. v.

II. the bearing of limbs, body; líma-burðr, fôta-burðr, höfuð-burðr. III. [bera C], the compts at-burðr, við-burðr, til-burðr, bap, accident; fyrir-burðr, vision. IV. answering to bera A. I, vide byrðr, and compts like á-burðr. β. saman-burðr, comparison. comps: burða-munr, m. distance of birth, Fs. 125. burðar-dagr, m. a birthday, Hom. 106; b. Mariu, the nativity of the Virgin Mary, Rb. 8. burðar-maðr, m. a bearer, Fms. i. 271. burðar-sveinn, m. an errand-boy, Fms. vii. 222. burðar-tími, a, n. birth-time, Stj. 97; natal hour, 101.

burðugr, adj. [Germ. ge-bürtig], of high birth, Grett. 161 A, Stj. 238 (unclass.)

burgeiss, m. [Fr. bourgeois; Chaucer burgeis; a for. word, of Teut. origin, from burg]—a burgess, Fas. iii. 358; in mod. usage, a big man. buris, m. (a for. word), borax, N. G. L. iii.

burkni, a, m. [Scot. bracken or breckan, cp. Engl. brake], the common fern, Hjalt.

BURR, m., gen. ar, pl. ir, a son, akin to bera and barn, but poët., being used in prose only in allit. phrases such as, cigi buri við bónda sínum, Stj. 428; sem burr eðr bróðir, Fms. xi. 75; áttu börn og buru (acc. pl.) grófu rætr og muru is a standing peroration of Icel. nursery tales, Ísl. Þjóðs. ii. 319, vide Lex. Poët.; else in prose only used in the weak form in the compd words tvi-buri, twins; þri-buri, three at a birth, (in modern statistics even fleir-buri.)

BURST, f. I. [A. S. byrst; Germ. borste; Swed. bösta], a bristle, Hb. (1865) 22; but also of a hog's back and bristles, Edda 70; cp. Gullinbursti, Gold-bristle, the mythical hog of the god Frey; Fas. i. 532 (of the sönargöldr, the sacred hog); Fms. v. 165; the phrase, draga bust ór nefi e-m, to draw a bristle out of one's nose, to cheat, gull one, Ölk. 36, does not occur anywhere else that we know of; the Engl. say, 'to lead one by the nose,' in much the same sense. II. metaph. the gable of a house (hús-burst), Hkr. iii. 14 (of a shrine), Mar. 106, Konr. 57; og gogginn á bustinni hrynir (of a raven sitting on the top of a house and whetting his bill), Sig. Breiðfjörð. comps: burstar-kollr, m. bristle-scalp, a nickname, Nj. 181. burstar-hár, n. bristly hair, Fas. i. 105.

bursti, a, m. a brush, Dipl. v. 18:—from bursta, ad, to brush.

burst-ígull, m. a hedge-bog, Thom. 145, 147; vide bjarnígull.

BURT-, v. brott-

BURT, [Ital. bagordo; Fr. bobournt; bord in Chaucer; vide Du Cange s. v. bobordicum], in the phrase, riða burt, to ride a tilt; hence Burtreið, f. a tilt, tournament, Bær. 17, Fas. ii. 295, Karl., þidr., etc.; freq. in romances. comps: burtreiðar-maðr, m. a tilter, Mag. 8, Fas. iii. 241. burtreiðar-vápn, n. a tilt-weapon, Fas. ii. 281. burtstöng, f. a lance for tilting, Mag. 8, Fas. iii. 369, Karl., etc.

busti, a, m. a bad, clumsy knife.

BUSSEL, n. (a for. word). a cask, bushel. Art. 90.

BUSTLI, n. bustle, Ísl. ii. 59, Snót 217; of a fish splashing in water, Bb. 2. 28: bustla, ad, to bustle, splash about in the water. BUTTR and butraldi, a cognom., Dipl. v. 26, Fbr.: short, cp. Dan. butted.

BUZA, u, f. [a for. word; mid. Lat. bussa; O. H. G. buza; I. buise; Engl. herring-buss], a sort of merchant-ship, Fms. vii. 289, ix. xi. 425; freq. in the Ann. of the 14th century; it occurs first A. D. then 1299; in the 14th century, during the Hanseatic trade with nearly every ship was called buza, vide Ann. compd: buzu-sk = buza, Ann. 1251, etc., Hkr. iii. 118.

BÚ, n. [Hel. bú = domicilium; O. H. G. bū; mod. Germ. bau = ti cultivation; Hel. also uses beo or beu, = seges, cp. also Teut. bonat = in Schmeller Heliand Glossary:—the root of this word will be more closely under the radical form búa; here it is sufficient to note that 'bú' is an apocope form, qs. 'bug' or 'bugg'; the root remained unaltered in the branch to which Icel. bygg, byggja, and other belong]:—a house; bú and bæ (býr) are twins from the same root (the bæ is the house, bú the household; the Gr. oikos (Foikos) em both; þeir eta upp bú mitt, Od. i. 251; biðla til móður minnar og bú hennar, 248; bú mitt er á förum, iv. 318; gott bú, ix. 35; upp bú hans bótausta, xvi. 431; svo hann er fær um að veita forstöðu, xix. 161; hús og bújörð, og góðan kvennkost, xiv. 64. Prose Translation by Eglisson. In the Northern countries 'bú' is the notion of living upon the produce of the earth; in Norway and Icel. that of living on the 'milk' (mályntra) of kine, ewes, or sheep: er bú, er maðr hefir mályntra smala, it is 'bú' if a man has a ing stock, Grág. i. 158; the old Hm. says, a 'bú', however small it better to have than not to have; and then explains, 'though the but two she-goats and a cottage thatched with shingle, yet it is than begging'; Icel. saying, sveltur sauðlaust bú, i. e. a sheepless bo starves: 'bú' also means the stores and stock of a household; göra reisa bú, to set up in life, have one's own bearth, Bs. i. 127, Bb.: Sturl. i. 197, Eb. 40; breðða bú, to give up farming or household við bú, to take to a farm, Sturl. i. 198; eiga bú við e-n, to household with one, 200; ráðask til búis, id.; fara bú, to remove household, flit, 225; hafa bú, hafa rausnar-bú, 226; eiga bú, iii. 137; allit. phrases, börn og bú, Bs. ii. 498; bóndi er bú-stólpi, landstólpi, the 'bóndi' is the stay of the 'bú', the 'bú' is the stay land; búa bú sínu, Fas. iii. 312; búa úmeðgar-búi, to have a heavy bold (many children), K. þ. K. 90; hafa kýr ok ær á bú, Nj. 236: keeping, in the phrase, eiga einkis í bú at biðja, to have plenty of ever. Bs. i. 131, 132; bæði þarf í búit mjól ok skreið, Nj. 18: home, reið Hríur heim til búis síns, 4; á bú, adv. at home, Fms. iv. 251, 82.

2. estates; konungs-bú, royal demesnes; þær er bú hann, Eg. 42, 43, Landn. 124, fara milli búna sinna, to go from one estate to another, id.; eiga bú, to own an estate. 3. the stock in a farm sunir lágu úti á fjöllum með bú sín, Sturl. iii. 75; dræpa niðr bú, bú, take up bú, to kill or destroy one's stock, Fms. ix. 473; comps: bús-afleifar, f. pl. remains of stores, Grág. i. 299.

búhlutir, m. pl. implements of husbandry, Grág. i. 200, 220, 221, iii. 14, Bs. i. D. I. (freq.) bús-efni, n. pl. household goods, Stj. 197. bús-far, n. = búfar, Bs. i. 477. bús-forráð, n. pl. ment of household affairs, Sturl. i. 131, Grett. 107. bús-gagn = l Jb. 166. bús-hagr, m. the state, condition of a 'bú', Fas. i. 18.

bús-hlutir = *bús*hlutir, Hrafn. 22. bús-hægindi, n. pl. able income derived from a 'bú', Bs. i. 688, Hrafn. 22. bús n. movables of a household, Grág. ii. 339 A, 249, where búsk obsolete and dubious word. bús-tilskipan, f. the settling of a household, Fms. ii. 68. bús-umsvif, n. pl. the care, troubles of business, Band. ii. bús-umsvísla, u, f. the management of a 'bú', 22, Eg. 333, 334, Band. i. c.

BÚA, pret. sing. bjó, 2nd pers. bjótt, mod. bjóst; plur. bjoggu, and mod. bjuggu, or even buggu; sup. búit, búid, and (rarely) búð; part. búinni; pret. subj. bjöggi, mod. byggi or bjyggi; pres. indie. bý; pl. búmm; pret. mod. búum: reflex. forms býsk or býst, bjósk, bjóggusk, búisk, etc.: poët. forms with suffixed negative bjó-at, Skv. an obsolete pret. bjoggi = bjó, Fms. ix. 440 (in a verse); bjó; bjósk, Hom. 118. [Búa is originally a reduplicated and contract answering to Goth. búan, of which the pret. may have been bau by búan Ulf. renders Gr. οικεῖν, κατοικεῖν; Hel. búan = habitare; bauen; Swed. and Dan. bo. The Icel. distinguishes between strong neut. and originally redupl. verb búa, and the transit. byggja, q. v.: búa seems to be kindred to Gr. φύω, ἐφύσα (cp. bbū, bbavāmi, Lat. fui); byggja to Lat. fūcio, cp. Swed.-Dan. Scot. and North. E. to 'big', i. e. to build; cp. Lat. œdificare care: again, the coincidence in sense with the Gr. οικος, οικεῖν, vicius, is no less striking, cp. the references s. v. bú above. Bú root word, is one of the most interesting words in the Scand. tongue.

bú, bær, bygg, bygd, byggja, etc., all belong to this family: it was the North E. word to 'bær' in the Germ. bauen (to till) and

A. NEUTER, to live, abide, dwell, = Gr. οικεῖν, Lat. habitare; sú synd sem í mér býr, Rom. vii. 17, 20; í mér, þat er í mínu holdi, býr ekki gott, 18; hann sem býr í ljósinu, 1 Tim. vi. 16; fyrir Heilagan Anda sem í oss býr, 2 Tim. i. 14; Látid Christis orð rikulega búa meðal yðar, Col. iii. 16; þá trú... sem ádr fyr bjó í þinni ömnu Loide, 2 Tim. i. 5; þat hit góða sem í oss býr, 14; hann sem býr í ljósinu, þar einginn kann til að komast, 1 Tim. vi. 16; hence íbúð, living in, etc.; in many of those passages some Edd. of N. T. use bygga, but búa suits better: of a temporary abode, hann bjó í tjöldum, be abode in tents, Fms. x. 413.

2. a naut. term; þeir bjuggu þar um nóttina, they stayed, cast anchor during the night, Fms. vii. 3; on board ship, to have one's berth, sá maðr bjó á skipi næst Haraldi er hét Loðinn, 166; engi maðr skyldi búa á þessu skipi yngri en tvítugt, x. 321.

3. to live together as man and wife; henni hagar að b. við hann, 1 Cor. vii. 2; hagar honum hjá henni að b., 13; b. með hústrú sinni, Stj. 47; b. við; Helgi prestir bjó við konu þá, er þórdís hét (of concubinage), Sturl. i. 141; but búa saman, of wedded life, K. Á. 134.

4. b. fyrir, to be present in the place; at Selþórir muni fyrir b. í hverju holti, Fms. iv. 160; recipr., sjór ok skógr bjoggusk í grend, Skálda 202, Baruch.

5. sp. (v. bú) to have a household, cattle, sheep, and milk; hence búandi, óndi, bær, and bú; búa við mályhtu (milk), ok hafa kýr ok ær at bú, Nj. 236, Grág. i. 168, 335; b. bú (dat.), 153, K. Þ. K. 90; búa búu sinni, 2; big one's ain biggin, have one's own homestead.

β. absol., meðan tú vilt b., so long as thou wilt keep bouse, Hrafn. 9; b. vel, illa, to be a good (bad) housekeeper; vænt er að kunna vel að búa, Bb. 3, 1; Salomon óngur kunni að b., 100; fara að b., to begin housekeeping, 2. 6; b. á hru, to keep a farm, gefa þeim óðul sín er á bjoggu, Fms. i. 21.

γ. úa á ..., at ..., í ..., with the name of the place added, to live at or in place; hann bjó á Velli (the farm) á Rangárvöllum (the county), Nj. 1; löskuldr bjó á Höskuldstöðum, 2; hann bjó at Varmalæk, 22; hann bjó ádr Felli, 16; Gunnarr bjó at Hlíðarenda, 29; Njáll bjó at Bergþórsváli, 30, 38, 147, 162, 164, 173, 174, 213, Landn. 39-41, and in numberless passages; Eb., Ld., Eg., Sturl., Bs., Ísl. ii, etc. (very freq.); also b. þjósti, skapi, huga e-m, to be, dwell in one's mind, with the notion of noted conviction or determination, þess hins mikla áhuga, er þér býr í þjósti, Fms. iv. 80; því er mér hefir lengi í skapi búit, 78; ekki muntu ynask fyrir mér, veit ek hvat í býr skapinu, Lv. 16.

II. metaph. and with prepp.; b. um e-t, or b. yfir e-u, almost in an uncanny sense, to brood over hidden schemes, designs, resentment, or the like; þa um hverfan hug, to be of a fickle mind, Skv. 3. 39; b. eigi um heilt, to brood over something against one, to be insincere, Fms. xi. 365; b. um koll, to brood over some deceit, id.; b. um grun, to be suspicious, ii. 87; í good sense, b. um eitt lunderni, to be of one mind, Jb. 17; b. um þrek, ug, to have a bold heart, Lex. Poët.; b. í or undir e-u, to be at the bottom of a thing; en í þessu vináttu merki bjoggu enn fleiri hlutir, Ó. H. 125; ádr býr í þokunni (a proverb), many things hide in the mist; en þat b. íest undir ferð Áka, at ..., Fms. xi. 45; þóttusk eigi vita hvat undir myndi b., Nj. 62; b. yfir e-u, to brood over something, conceal; (ornrinn) jó yfir eitri, i. e. the snake was venomous, Fms. vi. 351; the saying, litill úkr býr yfir miklu viti, little bulk hides muchle wit, Al.; b. yfir flærð ok ólum, to brood over falsehood and deceit, id.; b. yfir brögðum, Fas. i. 90; b. undir, við e-t, to live under or with a thing, to bide, put up with; iga undir slíkum ofsa at b., to have to put up with such insolence, Fms. xi. 48; at hart mun þykkja undir at b., Nj. 90, 101; ok mun eigi við þat sega b., i. e. it will be too hard to bide, 164; því at bændr máttu eigi við hitt b., Fms. xi. 224.

III. in a half active sense; b. at e-u, r b. e-u (with dat.), to treat; þeir höfðu spurt hvem veg þórólfir hafði vit at herbergjum þeirra, how Tb. had used their premises, Eg. 85; þeir joggu búit sem þeim líkaði (where with dat.), i. e. they treated it recklessly, Is. i. 544; Haraldr jarl fór til bús Sveins, ok bjó þá heldr úspakliga törmum hans, Orkn. 424 (in all passages in bad sense): búa vel saman, to live well together, be friendly, Fms. xi. 312; hence sam-búð, living together; b. við e-n, to treat one so and so; sárt býr þú við mik, þóra, thou treatest me sorely, vii. 203.

B. ACTIVE, to make ready: the sense and form here reminds me of the Gr. ποιεῖν: [this sense is much used in Old Engl., esp. the art. bone, boom, or boun, ready, ('boun to go,' Chaucer, etc.); in later Engl. 'boun' was corrupted into 'bound', in such naut. phrases as bound for a port, etc.: from this part. the ballad writers formed a fresh verb, o boun, 'busk ye, boun ye'; 'busk' is a remnant of the old reflex. biask, see Dasent, Burnt Njal, pref. xvii. note, and cp. below III.] I. to make ready, 'boun', for a journey; b. ferð, för sína; and as a naut. term, to skip, to make ready for sea; bjoggu þeir ferð sína, Fms. ix. 453; en er þeir voru búinr, Nj. 122; ok voru þá mjök brott búinr, they were 'boun' for sea, Fms. vii. 101; bjó hann skip sitt, Nj. 128; en skip er brotið, it is eigi er í för búanda á því sumri, i. e. ship unfit to go to sea, Grág. 92; b. sik til göngu, to be 'boun' for a walk, Ld. 46; b. sik at keyra, to make one ready for ..., Nj. 91. β. as a law term, b. sök, mál, or ódding til, b. til sök, mál á hendr e-m, to take out a summons against one, egin a lawsuit; b. mál í dóm, of the preliminaries to a lawsuit, hence nálatilbúningr, in numberless cases in the Grágás and Sagas. γ. generally to prepare, make; b. smyrsl, to make ointments, Rb. 82. 2. = Old Engl. to boun, i. e. to dress, equip; b. sik, to dress; svá búinn, so dressed, Fms. xi. 272; hence búningr, dress (freq.); vel búinn, well-dressed, Nj. 3, Ísl. ii. 434; spari-búinn, in holiday dress; illa búinn, ill-dressed; síðan bjó hon hana sem hon kunni, she dressed her as well as she could, Finnb. 258; b. beð, rekkjur, to make a bed, Eg. 236; b. upp hvílu, id., Nj. 168; b. óndvegi, hús, to make a big seat, dress a bouse for a feast, 175, (hús-búnaðr, hús-búningr, tapestry); búa borð, to dress the table, (borð búnaðr, table-service); b. stofu, Fms. iv. 75. β.

búa til veizlu, to make 'boun' (prepare) for a feast, Eg. 38, Fms. vii. 307; b. til seyðis, to make the fire 'boun' for cooking, Nj. 199; b. til vetrsetu, to make 'boun' for a winter abode, Fms. x. 42; til-búa, and fyrir-b., to prepare; eg fer héðan að til-b. yðr stað, Jöhu xiv. 3; eignist það ríki sem yðr var til-búid frá upphafi veraldar, Matth. xxv. 34. γ. b. um e-t, in mod. use with the notion of packing up, to make into a bundle, of parcels, letters, etc.; hence um-búningr and um-búðir, a packing, pack-ing-cover; b. um rím, hvílu, to make a bed; búa um e-n, to make one's bed; var búid um þá þórodd í seti, ok lögðusk þeir til svefnis, Tb.'s bed was made on the benches, and they went to sleep, Ó. H. 153; skaltú nú sjá hvar vit leggumk niðr, ok hversu ek bý um okkr (of the dying Njal), Nj. 201; er mér sagt at hann hafir illa um búit, of a dead body, 51; þeir höfðu (svá) um sik búit (they had covered themselves so) at þá mátti eigi sjá, 261; kváðu nú Guðrínu eiga at búa um rauða skór Bolla, said that G. would have to comb B.'s (her husband's) bloody beard, Ld. 244; búa svá um at aldri mátti vökna, pack it up so that it cannot get wet, Fms. vii. 225; þórólfir lét setja upp skip ok búa, he had the ship laid up and fenced it round (for the winter), Eg. 199; b. um andvirki, to fence and thatch hay-ricks, Grág. ii. 335; metaph. to manage, preserve a thing, Fms. ix. 52; aumlega búinn, in a piteous state, Hom. 115.

3. to ornament, esp. with metals or artificial work of any kind, of clothes laced with gold; kyrtill hlaðbúinn, Ísl. ii. 434, Nj. 48, Vm. 129; of gloves, B. K. 84; of a belt with stones or artificial work, Fms. xi. 271; of a drinking-horn, D. N. (Fr.); but esp. of a weapon, sword, or the like, enamelled with gold or silver (gull-búinn, silfr-búinn); búinn gullu ok silfri, Fms. i. 15; búinn knífr, xi. 271; vápu búit mjök, much ornamented, ii. 255, iv. 77, 130, Eb. 226, 228. β. part., búinn at e-u, or vel búinn, metaph. endowed with, well endowed; at flestum í þróttum vel búinn, Nj. 61, Fms. x. 295; at að vel búinn, wealthy, 410; vel búinn at hreysti ok allri atgervi, Eg. 82; best at viti búinn, Fms. xi. 51.

II. particular use of the part. pass. 'boun', ready, willing; margir munu búinr at kaupa, ready, willing to buy, Fms. vi. 218; hann kváðsk þess fyrir löngu búinn, Ld. 66, Fms. iii. 123; nefna vátta at þeir eru búinr (ready) at leysa kvíð þann af hendi, Grág. i. 84; voru allir til þess búinr, Fms. xi. 300; compar., engir menn sýna sik búinri (more willing) til liðveizlu, Sturl. i. 103; the allit. phrase, vera boðinn og búinn til e-s, (vide fjöða VI: denoting fitted, adapted, ekk em gamall, ok lítt b. at (little fit) hefna sona minna, Nj. 200; þótt ek sé verr til b. en hann fyrir vanheilsu sakir, Fms. vii. 275; eiga við búid (mod. vera við búinn), to keep oneself ready, to be on one's guard, Bs. i. 537.

2. on the point of doing, about to do so and so; hann var búinn til falls, he was just about to tumble, Fms. x. 314; en ádr þeir kómu var búid til hús mesta váða, ix. 444, v. l. β. neut. búid is used almost adverbially, on the point of just about to; ok búid við skipbrott, Ísl. ii. 245; búid við váða miklum, Fms. ix. 310; sagði at þá var búit við geig mikinn með þeim feðgum, Eg. 158; this is rare and obsolete in mod. usage; and the Icel. now say, liggja við mér lá við að detta, where an old writer would have said, ek var búinn at detta; the sense would else be ambiguous, as búinn, vera búinn, in mod. usage means to have done; ég er búinn að éta, I have done eating; vera búinn að e-u (a work, business of any kind), to have done with it; also absol., eg er búinn, I have done; thus e. g. vera b. að kaupna, fyrir löngu b., b. at græða, leysa, etc., in mod. sense means to have done, done long ago; only by adding prepp. við, til (vera við búinn, til búinn) the part. resumes its old sense: on the other hand, búinn in the sense of having done hardly ever occurs in old writers.

γ. búid (búid) is even used adverbially = may be, may happen; with subj. with or without 'at', búid, svá sé til atlað, may be, it will come so to happen, Nj. 114; búid, dragi til þess sem vera vill, 185; búid, eigi fari fjarrí því sem þú gatz til, id., Ed. Johns. 508, note c; búid, svá þykki sem ek grípa gulli við þá, 9, note 3; búid, eigi hendi ham þú lígta annat sinn, 42; búid, ek láta annars víti at varnað verða, 106; búid, vér þurfm enn hlífanna, Sturl. ii. 137 (vellum MSS.; um rið, Ed., quite without sense), cp. also Eb. 27 new Ed.: in mod. usage it is freq. to say, það er búid, vel búid, albúid, etc., it is likely, most likely that ...

δ. svá búit, adverbially, and prond. as if one word, as matters stand, or even temp. at present, as yet; eigi mun hlyða svá búit, i. e. it will not do 'so done', i. e. something else must be done, Eg. 507; eigi munu þér fá at unnit svá búid, i. e. not as yet, Fms. vii. 270; stendr þar nú svá búit (i. e. unchanged), um hrið, xi. 81; en berjask eigi svo búit, not fight as yet, Nj. 229; segja Eyjólfir til svá búins, they tell Eyolf the state of things, viz. that nothing had been done, Gísl. 41; þeir skildu við svá búit; þeir lögðu frá við svá búid, implying 'vain effort,' Germ. 'unverrichteter Sache,' Ísl. ii, Hkr. i. 340: at svá búnu, adverbially, as yet, at present; hann kvæðsk eigi fýsask til Íslands at svá búnu, Nj. 123, Fms. xi. 131; þenna draum segjum vér engum manni at svá búnu, this dream we will not tell to anybody as yet, Nj. 212; en at svá búnu tjár ekki, Fas. i. 364. III. reflex. to 'boun' or 'busk' oneself, make oneself ready, equip oneself; gengu menn þá á skip sín, ok bjögusk sem hvatligast, Fms. v. 15; ádding the infinitive of a verb as predicate, bjósk hann at fara norðr til þrándheims, Eg. 18; or ellipt., where búask thus denotes the act itself, nú býsk hann út til Íslands, i. e. be 'busked' him to go . . ., Nj. 10; bjögusk þeir fóstbræðr í hernað, they went on a free-booting trip, Landu. 31; seg Agli at þeir bíúsk þaðan fimmtán, 94; or adding another verb denoting the act, in the same tense, bjósk Haraldr konungr úr þrándheimi með skipaliði, ok fór suðr á Mæri, he 'busked' him . . . and went south, Eg. 7: the journey added in gen., búask ferðar sinnar, Fms. i. 3; búask menn ferða sinna, Ld. 177. β. denoting intention, hidden or not put into action; fór sá kurr, at Skúli byggisk á land upp, Fms. ix. 483. 2. to prepare for a thing; búask við boði, veizlu, etc., Nj. 10, Korm. 10; b. (vel, kristilega) við dauða sínum, andlátí sínu, (eccl.) to prepare for one's death, Fs. 80, Bs. i. 74; búask við vetri, to provide for the winter, get store in, Fms. xi. 415; b. við úfriði, vii. 23. β. to be on one's guard, take steps to prevent a thing; nú ríða hér úvinir þínir at þér; skaltu svá við búask, i. e. be sure of that, make up thy mind, Nj. 264; bústu svá við, skal hann kveða, at . . . Grág. ii. 244. γ. such phrases as, búask um = búu um a sjó, to make one's own bed, encamp, make oneself comfortable, Nj. 259; tjölduðu búðir ok bjögusk vel um, 219; var hörd vedrátta, svá at ekki mátti úti um búask, Fms. x. 13, Ld. 348; in the last passage the verb is deponent. 3. metaph. b. við e-u, to expect, freq. in mod. usage; in phrases, það er ekki við að búast, it cannot be expected; búast við e-m, to expect a guest, or the like. β. to intend, think about; eg býst við að koma, I hope to come; eg bjóst aldrei við því, I never hoped for that, it never entered my mind, and in numberless cases. 4. passive (very rare and not classical); um kveldit er matr bjósk = er m. var búium, Fms. ix. 364.

búandi, a, m. = bóndi, q. v.

búand-karl, m. a farmer; b. eðr þorpari, Fms. ii. 48, Eg. 49.

búand-ligr, adj. yeomanlike, sturdy, stout, Ld. 274.

búand-maðr, m. = búandi, Grág. i. 479, 4So, Fms. v. 77.

BÚÐ, f. I. [Engl. booth; Germ. bude; Dan. bod: not from búa], a booth, shop; farmanna búðir, merchants' booths; setja búðir, Eg. 163; hafa búðir á landi, Grág. i. 91, the booths in the harbour being but temporary and being removed as soon as the ship went to sea. β. specially used of the temporary abodes in the Icel. parliament, where, as the meeting only lasted two weeks a year, the booths remained empty the rest of the year; hence tjalda (to dress) búðir, viz. during the session for the use of its owner. But every goði (priest) and every family had their own 'booth', which also took their names from a single man or ruling family, e. g. Allsherjar b., Sturl. ii. 44; Snorra b., 125; b. Skapta, Nj. 226; b. Hafliða, Sturl. i. 44: from families or districts, Ölfusinga b., Nj. 181; Möðruvellinga b., 182, 247; Skagfirðinga b., 182; Jöklaunnanna b., Sturl. ii. 158; Austfirðinga b., 158, 159; Saurbeinga b., 82; Dalamanna b., Nj. 48; Mosfellinga b., 164; Rangzeinga b., 48, 180; Ljósveitinga b., 183, 223; Norðlendinga b., 228; Vatnsfirðinga b., 248; Vestfirðinga b., Bs. i. 21; Svinfellinga b., Lv. 18; Skarðverja b., Sturl. i. 199, etc.: other names, Byrgis-búð, 31; Grýta, ii. 45; Dikr, 158; Valhöll, 126; Hlað-búð, 82, Nj. 244; Virkis-búð, 247. As the alþing was a public meeting, other booths are also mentioned, e. g. Trúða búðir, booths of jugglers, Troubadours, Grág. ii. 84; Ölbúð, an Ale-booth, beer-shop, Sturl. ii. 125; Sítara búð, a Souter's (cobblers') booth, Grág. ii. 84; Sverð-skriða b., a Tanner's booth, id.; and Göngumanna búðir, Beggars' booths, a troop of beggars being an appendage to any old feast or public meeting, cp. Gísl. 54-56: the law (Grágás) forbade the sheltering of beggars at the parliament, but in vain; see numberless passages referring to alþing or fjórðungsping, esp. Grág. þ. þ., Nj., Sturl., Gísl. i. c., Korm. S., Kristni S. A short treatise, called 'Catastasis of Booths,' composed about A. D. 1700, is mentioned in Dasent's Burnt Njal; but it is the mere work of a scholar, not founded upon tradition. As búð is opposed to bú, as a temporary abode to a permanent fixed one, so búðsetumaðr (búð-seta), a cottager, is opposed to bóndi; fara búðum is to change one's abode, Hkr. ii. 110. γ. in eccl., Tjald-búð is the Tabernacle. II. esp. in compds, i-búð, living in; sam-búð, living together; vás-búð, a cold berth, i. e. wet and cold; hafa harða, kalda búð, to have a barrel, cold abode, Fms. x. 158 (belongs perh. to I.) compds: búðar-dvöl, f. dwelling in a booth, Sturl. i. 147. búðar-dyr, n. pl. door of a booth, Lv. 11, Nj. 37, 165, Eb. 196, Grág. i. 31. búðar-gögn, n. pl. implements of a booth, Grág. ii. 399, 402. búðar-hamarr, m. a pier or rock for embarking, Eb. 196. búðar-kettill, m. a booth-kettle, Eb. 196. búðar-kviðr, m. a law term, a sort of verdict given by the inmates of a booth at the parliament, a kind of búakviðr, defined in Grág. ii. 84, 85, where it is laid down that the inmates of the booths of shopkeepers, jugglers, and beggars cannot be summoned to serve on a jury, nor the dwellers in a booth which has not at least five inmates (five being a minimum in a jury). búðar-lið, n. the inmates of a booth, Sturl. i. 32. búðar-maðr, m. an inmate of a booth, Fær. 222. búðar-nagli, a, m. a booth-peg, Stj. 388. Judges búðar-rúm, n. lodging in a booth, Grág. i. 24, ii. 55, Lv. 93. búð setumaðr, m. = búðsetumaðr, Nj. 236. búðar-staðr, m. a booth-sta N. G. L. i. 342. búðar-sund, n. a passage, lane between two bo Band. 5, Grett. 115. búðar-tópt, f. the walls of a (deserted) bo without thatch, Rb. 274, Nj. 166, Ísl. ii. 194. búðar-vegg, m. wall of a booth, Ld. 290, Eg. 724. búðar-virkí, n. a fortified round a booth, Sturl. ii. 126, cp. Virkisbúð. búðar-vist, f. a lodg in a booth, Lv. 11. búðar-vörðr ok búðar-veðr, m. [veðr = ci the cooking and stewardship in a vessel, work which the crew was bound to do in turn day by day; cooking and dairy work was thought unwor to be the sole business of a man, and therefore the sailors were obliged take it turn about, cp. Eb. 194, 196, 220:—metaph. meat, meal, e hafða ek þína veðra . . . mér til búðarvarðar, the rams of thy flock I b not eaten, Stj. 181, Gen. xxxi. 38; lofa mér at báa þér búðarvörð, me set a morsel of bread before thee, in the Engl. V., Stj. 493, 1 S; xxviii. 22; ráða til b, to prepare for a meal, Fms. v. 287, viii. 3; hann þótti þar gott til blaut-fisks ok búðarvarðar, Bs. i. 853, D. N 311, ii. 16, Fas. ii. 209. bú-deigja, u, f. a dairy-maid; cp. deigja; (Norse.) búð-fastr, adj. living in a booth, Grág. i. 32. bú-drift, f. a drove of cattle, D. N. búð-seta, u, f. living in a cottage. COMPD: búðsetu-maðr, n cottager, answering to 'husband' in Norway, or búandi bóndi in Icel Nj. 236, Grág. i. 294; vide bóndi above. búðu-nautr, m. a fellow inmate of a booth, Grág. i. 34. 35. bú-eyrir, m. value in stock, D. N. bú-fang, n. domestic necessaries, K. Á. 176. bú-far, n. household condition, Sturl. i. 216, Bs. i. 477. bú-fellir, m. a falling of stock, starvation of stock, Bs. i. 743. bú-ferli, n. household, in the phrase, fara búferli, or b. sínu, to me change one's household and home; Olafur þangað b. sínu, Eg. 1 Fms. iii. 107; esp. live stock, Hallsteinnur hit efra með búferli, Gu 12; hafði hann með sér skulda-lið (people, family) ok b. (stock), Eb. but sometimes the word is evidently used masc., an emigrant, mover one's household, cp. Róm-ferlar; en búferla (v. l. búferlar) eigu utan fara þeir er ömögum sínum megu vörð um veita, Grág. ii. 409. bú-ferki, n. = búskerfi, Grág. ii. 339 B. bú-fé, n. live stock, esp. the milk kine, Dipl. v. 28, Grág. i. 414, 4 ii. 301, Jb. 192, Eg. 532. COMPDS: búfjár-eyrir, m. = búeyrir, Gr i. 428. búfjár-ferð, f. = búdrift, D. N. búfjár-fóðr, n. food cattle, Fms. v. 219. búfjár-gangr, m. = búfjárhagi, Grág. i. 4 búfjár-gildir, adj. a being in proper condition, of cattle, D. N. búfjagar, m. pl. the pasture fields on an estate, esp. the home-pastures closes, used daily for the home cattle, and opp. to afrétt., q. v.; he the phrase in Nj., ríða upp 6r b., denoting a pale of about three or f miles, 34; í b., within the pale of the b., Glúm. 355, Eb. 54. búfjagr, m. the condition of stock, Vápn. 30. búfjár-hald, n. the king of stock, Grág. i. 427. búfjár-lauss, adj. living without st Grág. i. 294. búfjár-leiga, u, f. the rent of stock, Gpl. 62. búfj matr, m. food for cattle, stores of fodder, Fms. x. 400. bú-félag, n. fellowship in housekeeping, Fb. ii. 340. bú-færsla, u, f. a removing of one's household, Landn. 207. bú-gagn, n. household utensils, B. K. 20. bú-garðr, m. a farm, esp. a big one, Fms. iii. 85, 251, xi. 422. bú-görð, f. the making a household, Sturl. ii. 21, Bs. i. 658. bú-hlíff, f. a sparing of provender, Fms. v. 306. bú-hlutr = búsbúhlutr above. bú-höldr, m. a thiving householder. BÚI, a, m. [búa]. I. a dweller, inhabitant, only in compds haug-búi, hells-búi, berg-búi, a dweller in cairns, caves, rocks, of a gl or a giant; ein-búi, an anchorite, a bachelor; himin-búi, an inhabitant heaven, an angel; lands-búi, Lat. incola; ná-búi, a neighbour; í-búi inn-búi, incola, Snót 71; stafn-búi, q. v. II. a neighbour = náð kom Steinn at máli við þorbjörn búa sinn, Krók. 36; við Bárðr búi mí Nj. 203; þau syndu búium sínum úpokkasvip, Fs. 31; Steinólfr b. ha Landn. 269; cp. búi-sifjar, búj-graungr, búi-maðr (below), rare in t sense. 2. hence a law term in the Icel. Commonwealth, a neighb acting as juror; the law distinguishes between neighbours of place: person; as, vefvangs-lúar, neighbours of the place where (e. g.) a m slaughter was committed; or neighbours either of defendant or plain e. g. heimilis-búar, home-neighbours, opposed to dómstaðar-búar, Gr ii. 405, and þingvallar-búar, neighbours of court or parliament: number of the neighbours summoned was various; in slight cases, st as compensation for damage or the like, they were commonly t —sem búar fimm meta; in cases liable to outlawry they were usu Nj. 203, Grág. ii. 345; the verdict of the neighbour is called kvíðr, summoning kvöð, and kveðja búa, to summon neighbours; the ca esp. in the Grágás and Njála are almost numberless. The stand Icel. law phrase 'sem búar meta' reminds one of the English me of fixing compensation by jury. According to Konrad Maurer, bygg-brauð, n. barley-bread, 655 xxi. 4.

bygg-hjálmr, m. a barley-rick, Magn. 516.

bygg-hlaða, u. f. a barley-barn, Stj. 344.

bygg-hleifr, m. a barley-loaf, Stj. 393, Rb. 82.

bygg-hús, n. a barley-barn, Orkn. 196.

byggji or byggvi, m. an inhabitant, obsolete, but in compds as Eyrbyggjar, stafrbyggjar, frambyggjar, aprbyggjar, etc.

byggji-ligr, adj. habitable, Hkr. i. 108.

bygging, f. habitation, colonisation, Landn. 24, v. l., Stj. 176.

tenancy, letting out land for rent, H. E. i. 495; in compds, byggingarbréf, b. skilmáli, an agreement between tenant and landlord. β. build-ings or houses, Matth. xxiv. 1; scarcely occurs in old writers in this sense; cp. Dan. bygning, Scot. and North. E. byggin, = building.

BYGGJA, older form byggva, ð. [for the etymology v. búia], gener. to inhabit, settle, people, always in a transitive sense—not neut. as búia—but often used absol. or ellipt., land being understood: α. to settle as a colonist; Hrollaugr bygði austr á Síðu, Ketilbjörn bygði suðr at Mostelli, Auðr bygði vestr í Breiðafirði, Helgi bygði norðr í Eyjafirði; all these instances referring to the first settlers of Icel., lb. ch. i. 2; en þat vas es ham tók byggva landit, id.; sumar þat er þeir Ingólfr fóru at b. Ísland, the summer before Ingolf settled in Iceland, ch. 6; Ingólfr . . . bygði fyrstr landit, i. e. Ingolf was the first settler, id.; so in numberless instances, esp. of the Íb. and Landn., e.g. Landn. 42, 334, Eb. 8, Hrafn. 4, Eg. 99, 100; eptir Nóa-flóð lifðu átta menn þeir er heiminn bygðu (peopled), Edda (pref.). β. to inhabit, live in a country; þesskonar þjóð es Vinland hefir bygt, lb. ch. 6; þá er laudit hafði sex tigi vetra bygt verit, Landn. 321; þeir b. þat hérad á Vindlandi er Ré heitir, Fms. xi. 378, H. E. i. 494, Bret. 100: allit. phrases, á bygðu bóli, i. e. among men, where men live; bygðr bólstaðr, possessed land, Grág. ii. 214: the proverb, með lögum skal land byggja, with laws shall man build land, i. e. law builds (makes) lands and home; and some add, en með ölogum eyða; eyða (to lay waste) and byggja are thus opposed to one another, Nj. 106; b. bæ, to settle on a farm; segi ek af því fyrstr hveru þærinn hefir byggz í Skáláholti . . . Ketilbjörn bygði þann bæ fyrstr er í Skáláholti heitir, Bs. i. 60; hann bygði bæ þann er í Eyju heitir, Gísl. 91, where it does not mean to build houses, as in the mod. use of this phrase, but to settle, Lat. inhabitare.

γ. in more special or law phrases, to dwell in, occupy; b. sæng, to keep one's bed, sleep, Fas. i. 314; b. eina sæng, of married people, Fms. ii. 134; b. með e-m, to cobabit, Stj. 176; b. höll, to occupy a hall, Fms. vi. 147, x. 236; b. á skipum, under tjoöldum, to live aboard ship, in tents, vii. 138; b. hálfrymi, a naut. term, viii. 199; metaph., ef Guð byggvir í þeim, Eluc. 52, cp. also the references from the N. T. above under búia, where most of the Icel. Edd. use byggja. 2. to build a house, ship, or the like, [Scot. and North. E. to big; Dan. bygge; Swed. bygga]: this sense, common over all Scandinavia and North Britain, seems not to occur in Icel. writers before the 15th century or the end of the 14th, but is freq. at the present time; it occurs in the Ann. 1401, 1405, etc. Old writers always say, reisa or göra hús, skip . . . not byggja. 3. reflex. to be inhabited; Ísland byggðisk fyrst ör Noregi, Íb. ch. 1; Grænland fansk ok byggðisk af Íslandi, ch. 6; hundraði ára fyrr en Ísland byggðisk af Norðmönnum, Landn. (pref.); en áðr Ísland byggðisk, id.; þá er Ísland fansk ok byggðisk af Noregi, id. II. [Goth. bugjan, by which Ulf. renders ἀγοράζω, and once παλεῖν, which is elsewhere rendered by frabugjan; A. S. bygean; Engl. buy; Hel. buggean]:—to let out, esp. land or cottage; konungur má b. almennig hverjum sem hann vill, Gísl. 453; ef umbóðsmaðr konungs byggir jarðar (acc.) konungs . . . því at svá skal konungs jarðir b. sem um arðar jarðir skill í lögum, 336; nú byggir maðr dýrra (lets out at a bigger rent) en vandi hefir á verit, 337; Ingimundur bygði þeim Hrolleifi þæinn í Ási, Fs. 34; er þeir bygðu lönd sín eðr tóku sér hjú, Grág. i. 445; hann tók mikit af landnámi Una, ok bygði þat (parcelled it out) frændum sínum, Landn. 244; byggja e-m út, to expel a tenant; b. e-m inn, to settle a tenant on one's estate.

2. more properly, to lend money at interest; þat er ok ef menn b. dauft fé, eðr krefja framaf þeim hlutum er meum ljú, en innsteða, K. Á. 20; engi skal b. dauft fé á leigu, Bs. i. 684; um okr, er menn b. dauft fé, H. E. i. 459; Rútr . . . bygði allt féit, R. put all the money out at interest, Nj. 11. 3. the peculiar eccl. law phrase of the forbidden degrees; b. sífjar, frændseini, to marry into such or such degree; this phrase may refer to buying (cp. brúðkaup), or to cobabitation: þat er nýmáli, at jafn-náit skal b. sífjar ok frændseini at fimta mámi hvárt, i. e. intermarriage in the fifth degree is allowed, according to the decision of the council of Lateran, A. D. 1215, Grág. i. 304; frændseini er eigi byggjandi, i. e. is forbidden, 307, 308, 321, N. G. L. i. 350; en þat var bannat með Ásum at b. svá náit at frændsemi, Hkr. Yngl. ch. 4. III. part. as subst.

bygg-mjöl, n. barley-meal, Gísl. 100.

bygging = byggging, D. N. (freq.), Fr.

bygg-sáð, n. barley-seed, N. G. L. i. 385.

byggvandi, byggjandi, pl. byggendr, byggvendr, inhabitants, mostly in poetry, Stj. 399, Hlaust. 10.

byggvi-ligr = byggiligr.

bygill, m. [Germ. bügel], a stirrup, Gísl. 359.

bygsla, u. f. = byggging, D. N.

BYLGJA, u. f. [cp. Dan. bølge, Swed. bölja, akin to bólginn, Belg. a billow, Stj. 27, Fs. 142, etc.

bylja, buldi, pres. bylr, old byll, to resound, roar, of a gale; byll öllum fjöllum, Al. 35; buldi í hömrunum, Fas. i. 425; freq. in mod. use.

byljótr, adj. gusty, Bs. i. 138.

BYLR, m. pl. bylir, gen. sing. byljar or rarely byls, a squall, gust wind; kom b. á húsit, Gísl. 22; þá er bylirnir kómu, when the squall passed over, Fms. viii. 52.

bylta, u. f. a heavy fall, Grönd. 147; bylting, f. a revolution; a bylta, t. with dat. to overthrow.

byrða, ð. I. [borði], to embroider, Gkv. 2. 16.

[borð], to board, in compds = sí-byrða, inn-byrða, to pull on board; þyk byrt, Fms. viii. 139.

byrða, u. f. a large trough, Stj. MS. 127, Ed. 178 reads bryðju N. G. L. i. 255, B. K. 52.

byrði, n. the board, i. e. side, of a ship, Edda (Gl.), Jb. 147.

byrðingr, m. [old Dan. byrthing, from byrðr], a ship of burth merchant-ship, Eg. 53, Nj. 281, Fær. 12, 195, 196, Fms. iv. 255, v. 283, 286, 310, viii. 208, 274, 372, ix. 18, 44, 46, 299, 470, x. 25, 430, etc.; this is the genuine Scand. word, wilst kjóll, kuggr, karfi (q. are all of foreign origin. COMPDS: byrðings-maðr, m. a merchant seaman, Fær. 4, Fms. ix. 18. byrðings-segl, n. the sail of byrðingr, Fms. iv. 259.

byrðr (mod. byrði), f., gen. ar, pl. ar, mod. ir, [bera A. I]:—a burth Nj. 19, Edda 74, Fas. ii. 514, Fms. v. 22, vi. 153, Fb. i. 74; hver ei mun sína byrði bera, Gal. vi. 5. β. metaph. a burthen, task, Fms. 330; hafrí þá byrði er hann bindr sér sjálfum, 671. 1.

byrgi, n. [borg; A. S. byrgan = sepulcrum], an enclosure, fence, I. 132; helvítis byrgi, the gates of hell, Stj. 420, Post. 656 C. 6; metap. b. hugar = hugarb, the breast, Hom. 148. COMPDS: byrgis-kona, f. a concubine, N. G. L. i. 327 (where spelt birg-), Bs. i. 663. byrgiskapr, m. concubiniatus, Fms. iii. 145.

byrging, f. a shutting up, Grág. ii. 110.

byrgja, ð. [borg; cp. A. S. byrgan, byrian; Engl. to bury]:—to close shut; b. dýrr eðr vindaugu, Grág. ii. 286; byrgja hús, Gret. 91 n. Ed.; Hallfredr byrðir húsit, Fms. ii. 83; b. sinn munni, to shut one's mouth, Bs. i. 786; í byrgdum kvíði sinnar móður, 655 xxvii. 10; metap. byrðr syndum, overwhelmed with sins, Greg. 41. 2. adding pre. aprt, inn, to shut; Grettir byrðir aprt húsit, Gret. l. c. MS. A. b. a garð, to shut a fence, Grág. ii. 283; b. aprt hlið á garði, id., Jb. 242; manni inni í húsnum, to shut a man up in a house, Grág. ii. 110, Sks. I. hvárki byrðr né bundinn, 656 C. 32. 3. metaph. to hide, veil, of face of God, the sun, or the like; sólin því ljóma sinn fékk byrðr, Pá. 44. 1; himna-ljósið var honum byrðr, 3. 2; byrg þig eigi fyrir minni græðni, Ps. lv. 2. 4. the phrase, b. e-n inni, to shut one in, out alla menn byrgir þú inni fyrir vitsmuna sakir, Fms. x. 247, xi. 31; b. úti, to leave one outside in the cold, and metaph. to prevent, preclude; úti váða, to prevent misþap, x. 418, Sks. 44, Mar. 656 A. 18; byrg hræðsluna, Al. 25. 5. reflex., Fas. ii. 281. II. [borg reflex. byrgjask, to be answerable for, vide ábyrgjask.

-byrja in compd úbyrja.

BYRJA, að. [Swed. berja; lost in Dan., which has replaced it begynde; Germ. beginnen; and probably also extinct in the mod. N. dialects, vide Ivar Aasen, who seems not to have heard the word; it is full use in Icel. and is a purely Scand. word; the root is the part. p. of bera A. II]:—to begin. I. in the phrase, b. mál e-s, to plead a cause, O. H. L. 5; ek skal byrja (support) þitt mál, sem ek kann, Fs. Fms. ii. 65; hann byrjaði hennar mál við Ólaf konung, x. 310; þ einum hundráðs-höfðingja þeim er byrjaði mál hans, Post. 645. 96; þ þ fram byrjat þitt erindi, 655 xxx. 13, Al. 159; this sense, however rare and obsolete.

II. to begin; b. ferð, to begin one's journey to start, Edda i, Fms. iv. 232, Eg. 106, Ld. 162; b. ræðu, to begin a speech, Sks. 238; b. e-t upp, to begin, Bs. i. 825; reflex., Rb. 210: the word not very freq. in old writers, who prefer the word hefja, incipere, hence v. haf, beginning; in mod. writers hefja is rather archaic, but byrja in full; and is used both as act., impers., and reflex.; Icel. say, sagan byrjar, sá byrjar, and sagan byrjast, all in the same sense. III. [bera A. I], mostly in pass. to be begotten, Lat. suscipi; Elias af hjúskap byrjaðr, G. 16; á þeim mánuðum er barn var byrjað, Grág. i. 340; á þeirri sk. nótt sem hann byrjaðisk, Stj. 176; sem þau hittusk á fjallinu Brynhildi Sigurðr ok hon (viz. the daughter Áslaug) var byrjuð, Fas. i. 257; h ertu bráðr af byrja þann er þeim hefir engin, 250 (in a verse).

IV. impers. with dat.: I. [bera C. III], to bebove, beeseen, be due; í konungs-syni byrjar, Fms. i. 81; hann gefr sílu várri slíkan mátt sem hann byrjar, Hom. 157; svá byrjaði (beboved) Christó að líða, Luke xxiv. 46; þat byrjar mér meir at hlýða Guði en mönnum, 623. 11; sem aðiljan byrjaði, Grág. i. 394; sem þeim byrjaði at manntali, i. e. in due proportion to their number, ii. 381; sem byrjar (as it beboves) hlýðnum syni þírlátum, Sks. 12; er helzt byrjar kaupmönnum at hafa, 52. 2. [⊕] [byrr], the phrase, e-m byrjar vel, illa, one gets a fair, foul, wind; þeim byrjaði vel, Eg. 69; honum byrjaði vel, 78, Eb. 8; byrjaði þeim vel um haustið, Fms. iv. 293; þeim byrjaði illa, Eg. 158.

byrjun, f. beginning.

byrja, að, [A. S. byrlejan and byrlian; whence the word is probably borrowed]—to wait upon, with dat., esp. to hand the ale at a banquet, [answering to bera öfl, Fs. 121]; stóð þar upp Snjófríð dóttir Svása, ok byrjaði ker mjaðar fullt kounugi, Fms. x. 379, Hkr. i. 102; hann setti annan mann til at b. sér, Post. 656 C. 32: metaph., hann byrjar optlaga eitr sinnar slægðar mannkyninu, Fms. ii. 137: to fill the cup, síðan byrjar hann í hornin, Fas. ii. 550: in mod. use, to mix a beverage, esp. in bad sense, by putting poison in it.

byrlari, a, m. [A. S. byrle], a cup-bearer, Fms. i. 291.

byr-leiði, n. a favourable course, Fms. x. 291, Sks. 175.

byr-létr, adj. gently blowing, Hkr. ii. 143.

byr-leysa, u, f. lack of fair wind, or a foul wind, Ann. 1392.

byrli, a, m. = byrlari, Fms. x. 302.

byr-ligr, adj. (-līga, adv.), promising a fair wind; því at ekki er byrligt, Sd. 174, in the phrase, blása byrlega, to blow fair for one; ekki b. draumr, a bad dream, Fas. i. 14.

byr-lítill, adj. of a light (but fair) breeze, Fms. iv. 297.

BYRR, gen. byrjar, nom. pl. byrir, acc. byri: [Swed.-Dan. bör; cp. usage of Gr. ópios]:—a fair wind; it is freq. used in pl., esp. in the impers. phrase, e-m gefr vel byri (acc. pl.), one gets a fair wind, rarely, and less correct, byr (acc. sing.), Nj. 10, Vápn. 9, but sing. Nj. 4, Eg.
38; byr gefr hann brögnum, Hdl. 3; með hinum beztum byrjum, Bs. i.
781; biða byrjar, Fms. i. 131; liggja til byrjar, to lie by for a fair wind, 3g. 183; byr rennr á, a fair breeze begins to blow; þá rann á byrr ok ígldu þeir, Nj. 135, Eg. 158; þá féll byrrinn, Eb. 8; þá tók byrr at taka, Eg. 390: allit. naut. phrases, blásandi byrr, blíðr byrr, beggja kauta byrr; hagstæðr byrr, fagr byrr, hægr, óðr byrr, Hm. 89; hrað-byrr, etc.: also metaph., hafa góðan, milkimi, lítinn byrr, to be well, much, little favoured: in poetry in many compds, byrjar drösuill, the horse of the wind, a ship; byr-skíð, byr-rann, a ship; byrr always denotes the wind in the sea. byrjar-gol, n. a fair breeze, Fms. ix. 21.

byrsta, t, [bursti], to furnish with bristles or spikes, Sks. 418; gulli byrstr, Fas. i. 184. 2. metaph. the phrase, b. sik or byrstask, to raise the bristles, to shew anger, Fms. ii. 174, Finnb. 248, Pass. 26. 1.

byr-sæll, adj. having good luck, fair wind, Fms. x. 314.

byr-vænigr, byrvænn, adj. promising a fair wind, Orku. 332, Fms. ii. 5.

BYSJA, [Dan. buse; Swed. busa = to gush], to gush, a defect. verb, occurs only twice or thrice, viz. in pres. sing. býss, Ó. H. (in a verse), busti (pret. sing.), gushed, of blood, Hkv. 2. 8; of tears, Edda (append.) 217: the infin. never occurs, and the word is never used in prose.

byssa, u, f. [Lat. pyxis], a box, Vm. 117, D. N.: mod. a gun (Germ. büchse).

bytna, að, [botn], to come to the bottom, Krók. 20 new Ed.: metaph.,

b. á e-m, to tell on or against one.

BYTTA, u, f. [Dan. bütte], a pail, small tub, K. þ. K. 82, Stj. 444, Fms. x. 54, Jm. 29, N. G. L. i. 327: of the bucket for baling a ship with, Fbr. 131, Grett. 95; hence byttu-austr, the old mode of pumping is defined, Fbr. and Grett. l. c.

byxa, t, to box, Bev. Fr.; byxing, f. boxing, Finnb. 344 (Engl. word).

BÝ, n. [Lat. apis; the Goth. word is not on record; A. S. beo; Engl. bee; O. H. G. pia; Germ. biene, and older form beie, Grimm i. 1367; Swed.-Dan. bi]:—a bee; the spelling in Icel. with ý is fixed by long usage, and by a rhyme in the Höfuðl., Jöfurr sveigði ý | flugu unda bý, where ý (a bow) and bý (bees) rhyme; because perhaps an etymology from bú floated before the mind, from the social habits of bees, Barl. 86; the simple bý is quite obsolete in Icel. which only uses the compd, bý-fluga, u, f. a 'bee-fly'; bee, Edda 12, Stj. 91, 210, etc.; bý-lygi, u. id., Bs. i. 210, Stj. 411.

byfur, f. pl. the feet, with a notion of awkwardness; rétta byfur, to stretch the legs out in an awkward manner; þar lá Kolfinnr son hennar, ok rétti byfur höltzi langar, Ísl. ii. 416: the passage Od. ix. 298—τανοσάμενος διὰ μύλων—Egilsson in his rhymed translation renders graphically, ok meðal búfjár byfur rétti.

býll, n. [ból], an abode, mostly in compds, á-býlli, etc.

býll, adj. [ból], living, in compds, ár-býll, harð-býll, þung-býll.

být, v. bar.

bý-skip, n. the ship of the bees, the air, sky, poet., Höfuðl. 17 (dub.)

BÝSN, n. [cp. A. S. bysen, bisen, which means example, whilst the Icel. word means] a wonder, a strange and portentous thing; commonly used in pl., urðu hverskonar býsn, 625. 42; þar sem þessi býsn (acc. pl.) bar fyrir, Fms. xi. 13; þetta eru stór býsn, 64; slíkt eru banvæn býsn, Fas. iii. 13 (in a verse); sing., Fms. xi. 10, 64: in mod. use fem. sing., Fb. i. 212, Pr. 76, 91; býsna-veðr, portentous weather, Fms. iii. 137; býsnavetr, a winter of portents, when many ghosts and goblins were about, Bs., Sturl. i. 115; býsna-sumar, in the same sense, Ann. 1203. In mod. use býsna- is prefixed to a great many words in the sense of pretty, tolerably, Germ. ziemlich; býsna-vel, b. góðr, langr, fjótr, pretty well, pretty good, etc.: in early writers the sense is much stronger.

býsna, að, to portend, bode; þetta býsnafrón ok sorg, Karl. 492; the proverb, býsna skal til batnaðar, i. e. things must be worse before they are better, Old Engl. 'when bale is highest, bote is highest,' Fms. v. 199, (spelt bisna, O. H. L.): er býsna skal at betr verði, x. 261.

býta, tt, [bútr], to deal out, give, with dat. of the thing; býtti Hrafn silfrinu, Fas. iii. 256: esp. býta út, or út býta, to give alms, Hebr. xiii.
16, Gal. vi. 6. β. to exchange, Dan. bytte; býttum við jörðum okkar, Dipl. i. 12, H. E. i. 561.

býti, n. exchange, barter, Krók. 65; býting, f. spending, Ann. 1408.

BÆÐI, [v. báðir, where in p. 54, col. 2, l. 7, the words 'rarely Norse' should be struck out], used adverbially, boð, Scot. 'baith,' with conjunctions connecting two parts of a sentence: a. bæði... ok, both... and;
bæði vitr ok frangjarn, both wise and bold, Nj. 6; b. blár ok digr, Fms.
vii. 162; vitandi bæði gott ok illt, knowing both good and evil, Stj. 145.
Gen. iii. 5; b. fyrir sína hönd ok annarra, Bs. i. 129; b. at viti ok at óðru, 127; b. at lærdómi, vitrleik, ok atgörvi, in learning, wisdom, and accomplishments, 130 (where the subdivision after bæði is triple); b. lönd ok kvíkfé, Ísl. ii. 61; mun nú vera roft bæði búlkinn ok annat, Fms. vi.
381; bæði var at hann kunnir betr en flestir menn aðrir, ok hafði betri færi á... Bs. i. 129; sometimes in inverse order, ok... bæði; hér og á hinnum bæði, Pass. 24. 7; fagr ok fátitt b., Hom. 117; undruðu ok hörmuðu b., 120. β. bæði... enda, where the latter part of the sentence, beginning with 'enda,' is of a somewhat disjunctive character, and can scarcely be literally rendered into English; it may denote irony or displeasure or the like, e. g. það er b. hann er vitr, enda veit hann af því, i. e. he is clever, no doubt, and knows it; b. er nú, jarl, at ek á yðr margan sóma at launa, enda vili þér nú hafa mik í hina mestu hættu, it is true enough, my lord, that I have received many good things from you, but now you put me in the greatest danger, i. e. you seem to intend to make me pay for it, Fb. i. 193: or it denotes that the one part of a sentence follows as a matter of course from the other, or gives the hidden reason;
b. mundi vera at engi mundi þora at etja, enda mundi engi hafa hest svá góðan, i. e. no one would dare to charge him, as there would hardly be any who had so good a horse, Nj. 89.

bægi-fótr, m. [bágr], 'lame-foot,' a cognom., Eb.; Egilsson renders ἀμπίρῆης (Od. viii. 349) by bægi-fótr.

bægging, f. thwarting, Finnb. 344.

bæginn, adj. cross-grained, Fms. iii. 95; bægni, f. peevishness; orð-bægnin, q. v.; mein-bægnin, pettish.

bægja, ð, (an old pret. bægi, Hault. 18), [bágr], with dat. to make one give way, push one back; tröll-konan bægir honum til fjallsins, Bs. i. 464;
b. skipi ór lægi, to push the ship from her moorings, Fms. vii. 114; b. vist sínni, to echange one's abode, remove, Eb. 252; þeim bægið veðr, of foul wind, Eg. 245; honum bægið veðr, ok bar hann til eyja þeirra er Syllingar heita, the weather drove him from his course, and he was carried to the islands called Scilly, Fms. i. 145. β. absol. to binder; ef eigi
b. naðsýnjar, Grág. i. 446. 2. metaph. to treat barsbly, oppress one, Bs. i. 550. 3. reflex. with the prep. við; b. við e-n, to quarrel; þá vill hann eigi við þá bægjask, Ld. 56; þá var við enga at bægjask (none to dispute against) nema í móti Guðs vilja væri, Bs. i. 128. β. bægjask til e-s, to contend about a thing, but with the notion of unfair play; betra er at vægjask til virðingar en b. til stór-vandræða, Fms.

vii. 25. γ. impers., bægisisk honum svá við, at... things went so crookedly for him, that... Grett. MS.

bækli, v. beyki; bæki-skógr, m. a beech-wood, Fms. xi. 224.

bæklingr, m. [bók], a 'bookling,' little book, Lat. libellus, Bs. i. 59.

bæla, d, I. [bál], to burn = bræla, in the allit. phrase bræna ok b., 671. 4, Fms. iv. 142, vi. 176; vide bræla, Fas. i. 4. II. [ból], to pen sheep and cattle during the night; reflex., dýr bælað í þeim stöðum, Greg. 68.

bæli, n. [ból], 1. in the Norse sense, a farm, dwelling, = býli, Gpl. 452. 2. in the Icel. sense, a den, Fas. ii. 231, of a vulture's nest; arnar-bæli, an ery, a freq. local name of farms in Icel., Landn.; drekabæli, orms-bæli, a dragon's lair, serpent's den, Edda; even used of the lair of an outlaw, Grett. 132 (Grettis-bæli), Ld. 250.

BÆN and bónn, f. [biða], prayer, request, boon; these two words are nearly identical in form, and sometimes used indiscriminately as to sense; but in most cases they are different, bæn having a deeper sense, prayer, bón, request, boon; we may say biða e-n bónnar, and biða e-n bænar, but the sense is different; only bænn can be used of prayer to God; göra e-t at bæn e-s, Fs. 38; er sú bænn allra vár, at... we all beg, that... Eg. 28; skaltú veita mér bænn þá er ek mun biða þik, Nj. 26; fella bænn at e-m, to pray one earnestly, Ísl. ii. 305. β. prayer to God, often in plur.; vera á bænum, to be at prayers; hon var löngum um nætr at kirkju á bænum sínnum, Ld. 328; hann heilir út bænnir fyrir dómsstól Krists, Hom. 13, 156; bænn ok ölmusugjafir, Bs. i. 370, Pass. 4. 22, 44, 17: the phrase, vera e-m góðr (illr) bæna (gen. pl.), to turn the ear (or a deaf ear) to one's prayers, Hom. (St.) 95; ver niðr nú svá bæna, sem þú vilt at Guð sé þér á dómsdegi, Orkn. 174; Drottinleg bænn, the Lord's Prayer; kveld-bænn, evening prayer; morgun-bæn, morning prayer; lesa bænir sínar, to say one's prayers, etc. COMPS: bæna-fullting, f. support of prayers, Fms. vi. 114.

bæna-hald, n. a holding of prayers, Landn. 111, Gpl. 41; bænahaldsmaðr, a man who prays to God, a religious man, Bs. i. 72, Hom. 154.

bæna-hús, n. a chapel, Grág. i. 459, Bs. i. 645; b. tollr, 647; a house of prayer, Matth. xxi. 13. bæna-staðr, m. entreaty, intercession, prayer; þat er b. minn til allrar alþýðu, Nj. 189; ek ætlaða, at þér munduð láta standa minn b. um einn mann, Fms. vi. 101; göra e-t fyrir bæmastað e-s, to do a thing because of one's intercession or prayer, Lv. 13; supplication, Bs. i. 740; með beztu manna ráði ok b., Gpl. 13. bænarbréf, n. a letter of entreaty, Ann. 1330; bóнар-bréf, 1392. bænarorð, n. pl. prayers, entreaties, Fs. 10, Fms. ii. 235, Sks. 515.

bæna, d, to pray, entreat one; bændi hann til at hann skyldi, Fms. x. 387; prestur sá er bændr er, requested, K. þ. K. 8, 40; því ætla ek at senda hann til keisarans sem hann bændi (asked) sjálf, Post. 645. 98, cp. Acts xxv. 25; grát-bæna, to pray 'greeting', i. e. with tears. β. bæna silk, (in mod. use) to cover the face with the bands in prayer.

bæna-heyrna, d, esp. theological, to bear one's prayer, N. T.

bæna-hús = bænahús, Pm. 41, Dipl. iii. 2, iv. 9, Vm. 78.

bæna-rækin, adj. diligent in prayer, Hkr. ii. 191.

BÆZER, bœer, or býr, gen. bæjar or byjar; gen. biar also occurs, esp. in Norse MSS. of the 14th century, Fb., but is rare and unclassical; pl. -ir, gen. -ja, dat. -jum. In Icel. people say bæ; in Norway bö; in Swed. and Dan. (always with y) by; the root word being bíia, bú; this word is very freq. in local names of towns and villages throughout the whole of Scandinavia; and wherever the Scandinavian tribes settled the name by or bö went along with them. In the map of Northern England the use of this word marks out the limits and extent of the Norse immigration, e. g. the name Kirkby or Kirby; about twenty or thirty such are found in English maps of the Northern and Midland Counties, denoting churches built by the Norse or Danish settlers, as Whitby, Grimsby, etc., cp. Kirkjubær in Icel. In Denmark and Sweden local names ending in -by are almost numberless. I. a town, village, this is the Norse, Swed., and Dan. notion; þeir brenna býi at köldum kolum, Fms. xi. 122; til bæjarins (of Nidarós), vii. 30; of Bergen, viii. 360, 438; Tunsberg, ix. 361; of the town residence of the earl of Orkney, Nj. 267; allit, borgir ok bæi, castles and towns, Ann. 1349, etc. etc.; bæjar-biskup, a town-bishop, Fms. vii. 32; bæjar-prestr, a town-priest, D. N.; bæjar-lögmaðr, a town-justice, id.; bæjar-lýðr, bæjar-lið, bæjar-menn, town's-people, Fms. viii. 38, 160, 210, Eg. 240, Bs. i. 78; bæjar-brenna, the burning of a town, Fms. x. 30; bæjar-bygd, a town-district, viii. 247; bæjar-gjald, a town-rate, N. G. L. i. 328; bæjar-sýsla, a town-office, Fms. vi. 109; bæjar-starf, id., Hkr. iii. 441; bæjar-seta, dwelling in town, Ld. 73, Isl. ii. 392.

II. a farm, landed estate, this is the Icel. notion, as that country has no towns; bæ; in Icel. answers to the Germ. 'hof,' Norweg. 'ból,' Dan. 'gaard,' denoting a farm, or farm-yard and buildings, or both together; hence the phrase, reisa, göra, setja bæ, efna til bæjar, to build the farmstead, Eb. 10, 26, 254, Ld. 96, 98, Fs. 26, Landn. 126, 127, Eg. 131, Gísl. 8, 28, Bs. i. 26, Þorst. hv. 35; byggja bæ, Bs. i. 60; the phrase, bær heitir . . . , a farm is called so and so, Isl. ii. 322, 323, 325, Ann. 1300, Hrafn. 22, Dropl. 5; the allit. phrase, bíta á bæ . . . , Þorst. hv. 37; the passages are numberless, and 'bær' has almost become synonymous with 'house and home'; and as it specially means 'the farm-buildings,' Icel. also say innan-bæjar, in-doors; utan-bæjar, out-of-doors; í bæ, within doors; milli bæjar ok stöðuls, K. þ. K. 78; milli bæja; bæ frá bæ, from house to house; á bæ og af bæ, at home and abroad; things belonging to a bæ, bæjar-dyr, the doors of the houses, the chief entrance; bæjar-hurð (janua); bæjar-veggr, the wall of the houses; bæjar-bust, the gable of the houses; bæjar-lakr, the home-spring, well; bæjar-hlað, the premises; bæjar-stétt, the pavement in the front of the houses; bæjar-leið, a furlong, a short distance as between two 'bæir'; bæjar-sund, passage between the houses; bæjar-hús, the home-stead, opp. to fjúrhús, etc., where cattle is kept, or barns and the like; fram-bær, the front part of the houses; torf-bær, timbr-bær, a 'bær' built of turf or timber; phrases denoting the 'bær' as hearth and home, hér sé Guð í bæ, God be in this house, a form of greeting, cp. Luke x. 5; bæjar-bragr, the customs or life in a house; nenna börn hvað á bæ er títt (a proverb).

bæra, d, [bera, báru], to move, stir, esp. reflex. to stir a limb, Bb. 3. 31; enginn sá hans varir bærest, no one saw his lips move.

bæri-ligr, adj. fit, seemly, Stj. 141.

bærr, adj. due, entitled to, cp. Germ. gebührend; the proverb, b. er hverr at ráða sínu, every one has a right to dispose of his own property, Isl. ii. 145; vera b. at dæma um e-t, to be a fit judge in a matter (a proverb); unbecoming, Ýt. 11.

bæsa, t, [báss], = bása, to drive cattle into stall, Gísl. 20; the saying, fyrr á gömlum uxanum at b. en kálfnum, Fms. vi. 28.

bæsingr, m., prop. one born in a báss (q. v.); hence, as a law term, the child of an outlawed mother; þat barn er ok eigi arfgengt (that child is also not entitled to inheritance), er sú kona getr er sek er orðin skógarmaðr, þó-at hon geti við bónda sínum úsekjum, ok heitir sá maðr bæsingr, Grág. i. 178. Is not the name Bastard, which first occurs as the surname of the Conqueror, simply a Norman corruption of this Scand. law term? The son of an outlawed father was called vargdropsi, q. v. 2 poët. the name of a sword, Edda (Gl.)

BÆTA, tt, [bót; Ulf. bótjan = βεταειν; Hel. bótian; A. S. bétan O. H. G. bōzan; Germ. büssen]:—to better, improve, amend, also to restore, repair, Nj. 163, Gpl. 411; b. aprt, to restore, Grág. ii. 336; b. aprt, to restore, atone for, Fms. ix. 43; b. at e-u, to repair, 307; bæta ráu sitt, to better one's condition, to marry, Nj. 2; theol. to better one's life Guð bætti honum af þessi sótt, God restored him to health, Fms. ix. 391 with gen. of the sickness, O. H. L. 84. β. to mend, put a patch on a garment.

2. reflex., e-m bætisk, one gets better, is restored to health; at föður hans bættisk helstríð, Landn. 146; absol., bættisk honum þegar, he got better at once, Bs. i. 318, 319, 325; with gen. bættisk Búa augna-verkjarins, Ísl. ii. 428 (rare); cp. heilsu-bót, recovery of health.

III. a law term, to pay wergild, the person slain in acc., the money in dat.; Hrafnkell bætti engan mann fé, i. e. H. paid no wergild whomsoever he slew, Hrafn. 4; ek vil engan mann fé b. 9; Styrr var mörg víg, en bætti engin (viz. víg), S. slew many men but paid for none, Eb. 54; bæta þá menn alla er þar létusk eðr fyri sárum urðu, 98; b. sakir (acc.) fé (dat.), Grág. ii. 269; the allit. law term, b. baugum, to pay wergild, 174; the amount of money in acc. to pay out, bætt heldr fé þat er þú ert sakaðr við hann, Fms. iii. 22; ok á hann eigi þat at b., he has not to pay that, Grág. ii. 168; b. öfundar bót, Gpl. 358; part. bætttr, Eb. 98, 246.

2 metaph. to redress, adjust; b. við e-n, or b. yfir við e-n, to give on redress, make good a wrong inflicted; hefir þú yfir bætt við mík en þetta bráðræði, Fms. ii. 25, xi. 434; also used in a religious sense, skaltu b. við Guð, er þú hefir svá mjök gengit af trú þinni, ii. 213 (yfir-bót repentance); b. sál, or b. fyrir sál sinni, to do for the health of the soul iv. 63, Fb. i. 345, Bs. i. 642 (in a verse); b. um e-t, to make a thing better (um-bót, bettering, improvement), Orkn. 442; reflex., ekki bættisk um, matters grow worse, Fms. ii. 53; b. við, to add to (við-bót, addition), Háv. 45.

3. part. pass. used as adj. in compar.; ok er eig at bætttra, þótt . . . , things are no better, though . . .; þykki mér Ólafur ekki at bættari, þótt . . . , i. e. it is no redress for Olave's death though . . ., Fas. ii. 410; er mér ekki sonr minn at bættari þótt Bolli s drepinu, my son's death is none the more atoned for though B. is slain Ld. 226. 4. part. act. as noun; betandi, pl. -endr, a law term, on who has to pay wergild, Grág. ii. 174, etc.

BÆXL, mod. bæxli, n. [bógr; the shoulder (Lat. armus) of a dragon whale, shark, or the like, Fms. vi. 351, Bret. 544. 16, Gullþ. 7.

BÖÐ, f., gen. böðvar, [A. S. beadu], a battle, only in poetry, in which it is used in a great many compts; hence come the pr. names Böðvarr Böðvildr, Böðmóðr, vide Lex. Poët.

böðull, m., dat. böðli, [Dan. böddel], an executioner, (mod. word.) böðvask, ad, dep. to rave, Hdm. 21.

BÖGGUR, m., dat. böggvi, an obsol. word, a bag; breiðr b., a big bag, i a metaph. sense, Glúm. (in a verse); the dimin. böggull, m. a small bag, i in freq. use as a nickname, Arn. S. Bs. i.

bögla, ad, to sbrivel, v. bagla.

BÖL, n., dat. bölli, gen. pl. bölvá, [cp. Goth. balva-vesei and balvein = βαλσας, κλάσις; A. S. balew; Engl. bale; Hel. balu; O. H. G. balu lost in mod. Germ. and Dan.]:—bale, misfortune; allit. phrases, bö and bót, 'bale' and 'bote'; bölvá bætr, Stor. 22; þegar böl er hest e bót næst, when bale is best, bote is nest; Morris, E. Engl. Spec. 100 svá skal böl bæta at bíða annat meira (a proverb), Grett. 123, Fbr. 193 böl er búskapr (a proverb).

böl-bæn, f. imprecation, Sks. 435, Anecd. 10.

böl-fengi, f. malice, O. H. L. 32.

böll-óttur, adj. ball-shaped, Sks. 634; b. eggskurn, Stj. 12; b. manna höfuð, Fms. v. 343, Rb. 466.

BÖLLR, m., gen. ballar, dat. bellí, [Engl. ball; O. H. G. balla]:—a ball, globe; the ball, in the game of cricket, Gísl. 26 (in a verse, A. D. 903), but hardly ever used, knútttr being the common word; a globe, Al. 18; b. jarðar, Sks. 205 B; b. sólar, id., v. 1; the front of a phalanx, bell svinfylktar fylkingar, 384 B; a small body of men, Lat. globus, Fms. viii. 406, where some MSS. read bjöllr, probably to avoid the ambiguity; peak, mountain, in the local name Ballar-á, a farm in the west of Iceland Eb.

2. anatom. the glans penis, Grág. ii. 16.

bölvá, ad, [Ulf. balujan = βαλανειν], to curse, with dat. or absol. Stj. 37, 199, Sks. 539, 549, Hom. 33.

bölv, n. swearing, (mod.) β. to swear, Sturl. iii. 239 bölván, f. a curse, Stj. 37, 483; swearing, Fax. 239, Hom. 86.

böl-viss, adj. [Ulf. balva-vesei, Hel. balu-veso, = diabolus], 'bale-wise, detestable', Hbl. 23; a nickname, Hkv.

BÖRGUR, m. [Dutch and Germ. barg; Engl. barrow], a barrow-hog Hd., Lex. Poët.

BÖRKUR, m., gen. barkar, dat. berki, bark, Stj. 177, Pr. 473, Ám. 17 börku (acc. pl.), N. G. L. i. 242; a pr. name of a man, Landn.

börtr, m. a kind of tree, Edda (Gl.), Lex. Poët. II. a son = burr.

böruðr, m., poët. an ox, Edda (Gl.).

böstl, f., pl. böstlar, arrows, Edda (Gl.), Lex. Poët.

C

C (cé), the third letter, has all along been wanting in Icel. The early Gothic Runes (Golden horn) use \llcorner for k, e. g. \mathfrak{M} for ek, ego; the later common Runes have no c. The Anglo-Saxon Runes follow the Gothic, and use c for k, as cén, a torcb.

A. SPELLING.—The rule given by the first Icel. grammarian, Thorodd (A. D. 1140), is curious; he says that he will follow the Scots in using c with all the vowels, as in Latin, and then makes c serve instead of k; but, though in other cases he makes the small capitals serve for double consonants, e. g. ubi, brat, men, hazar, dög, = ubbi, bratt, menn, etc., he admits k to mark a double c, and spells sök sake, but sök sank; lycia to sbüt, but lykja a knot; vaca to wake, but vaka vagari; þecia to thatch, but þekia to know. Thorodd gives as his reason that other consonants have different shapes as small or capital, but c is uniform, whereas he says that k suits well for a double c, being a Greek letter itself, and having a shape similar to a double c, namely, \llcorner ; this c or double c he calls ecc, but the single c he calls ce, Skálda 108. The second grammarian (about the end of the 12th century) only admits c as a final letter, ranking with ð, z, or æ, which are never used as initials: all these letters he calls 'sub-letters'; he thus writes karl, kona, kunna, but vöc, süc, tac. Such were the grammatical rules, but in practice they were never strictly followed. As the Anglo-Saxon, in imitation of the Latin, used c throughout for k, so the earliest Icel. MSS., influenced by the Anglo-Saxon or by MSS. written in Britain, made free use of it, and c and k appear indiscriminately; k is more frequent, but c is often used between two vowels or after a vowel, e. g. taca, lécu, vica, boc, etc. etc. In such cases, t and c (k) can often hardly be distinguished; and readings can sometimes be restored by bearing this in mind, e. g. in Bjarn. S. all our MSS. come from a single vellum MS. the passage 'létu heim at landinu' should be read 'lécu (léku) honum landmunir,' 16; 'sáttvarr' 'sacvarr,' i. e. sakvarr, 51; cp. also such readings as bikdælir instead of Hítidælir, Gull. 3; drickin = dritkinn, id. In Ad. 20 it is uncertain whether we are to read veclinga- or vetlinga-tös, probably the former.

B. FOREIGN WORDS.—Throughout the Middle Ages the spelling remained unsettled, but k gained ground, and at the time of the Reformation, when printing began, c was only kept to mark the double k, \llcorner (cut on one face), and in foreign proper names; but it was not admitted in appellatives such as kirkja, klaustr, klerkr, kór, kross, kalkr or kaleikr, church (Scot. kirk), cloister, clericus, choir, cross, calix, etc., or kista, kastali, kerti, keisari, kær, kærleiki, kyndill, kórona or krúna, teisi, kumpan, kompás, kaptuli, cista, castellum, cera, caesar (as ppell), carus, caritas, candela, corona, courtesy, company, compass, baptisr. All words of that kind are spelt as if they were indigenous. The name of Christ is usually in editions of the N. T. and Vidal. spelt Christus or Christur, but is always sounded as a native word Kristr or Kristur, gen. Kristis, dat. Kristi; in modern books it is also spelt so, and almost always in hymns and rhymes, ancient as well as modern, e. g. tríðsmenn þá höfðu krossfest Krist | skiptu í staði fjóra fyrst, Pass. 36. 1, 9, 1, 3, 10. 1, 14. 1, 15. 2, 16. 1, 49. 4; Postula kjöri Kristur þrjá, 41; tríðsmenn Krist úr kápu færðu, 30. 1; Framandi maðr mætti Kristi | hér á finna hvern það lystir, 30. 6, 46. 12. Icel. also spell Kristinn, Kristigjör, Christian; kristna, to christen, etc. β. in the middle of syllables c is also used in words of foreign origin, Páskar = Pascha, Passover; dreki = draco; leikmenn = laici; Sikley or Sikiley = Sicilia; Griklund or Grikkland = Greece. In modern books of the last fifty years \llcorner is turned into kk; and even C in proper names is rendered by K, except where it is sounded as S; thus Icel. spell Caesar, Cicero, Cyprus; or Sesar, Sisero, Syprus, Silisia—although even this may be seen in print of the last ten or twenty years—is a strange novelty. There is but one exception, viz. the proper name Cecilia, which, ever since the Reformation, has been spelt and pronounced Sesselja; where, however, the name occurs in old writers, e. g. the Sturl. i. 52 C, it is always spelt in the Latin form. Latin and foreign words are spelt with in some MSS. communis-bók, f. a missal, Vm. 52. concurrentis-öld, f. diés concurrentes, Rb. crucis-messa = kross-messa, K. Ɔ. K.

Ç A digraph cb = k is at times found in MSS., as michill = mikill, etc. C is used in nearly all MSS. to mark 100; the Arabian figures, however, occur for the first time in the Hauks-bók and the chief MSS. of the Njála (all of them MSS. of from the end of the 13th to the beginning of the 14th century), but were again disused till about the time of the Reformation, when they came into use along with print. An inverted c (\bar{c}) is sometimes in very early MSS. used as an abbreviation for con (kon), thus 5ügr = konugr, 5a = kona, 5or* = konor = konur; hence the curious blunder in the old Ed. of Páls. S., Bs. i. 140, viz. that bishop had to take charge of women and clergy instead of choir and clergy, the word cór of the MSS. being mistaken for 5or (konor). In MSS. of the 15th century c above the line is used as an abbreviation, e. g. tá = taka, tr = tekr, míll = mikill, etc.

D

D (dé) is the fourth letter of the alphabet; it is also written \mathfrak{D} δ (eð). The Gothic Runes have a special sign for the d, \mathfrak{D} or \mathfrak{DD} , namely, a double D turned together; this d is found on the Runic stone at Tunc, the Golden horn, and the Bracteats. The reason why this character was used seems to have been that the Latin d \mathfrak{D} was already employed to mark the th sound ($\mathfrak{Þ}$), which does not exist in Latin. The Anglo-Saxon Runes follow the Gothic; again, the common Scandinavian Runes have no d, but use the tenuis t, to mark both d and t.

A. PRONUNCIATION, etc.—The Icel. has a double d sound, one hard (d) and one soft (ð commonly called 'stungid' (cut dé')); the hard d is sounded as the Engl. d' in dale, day, dim, dark; the soft ð as the soft Engl. th in father, mother, brother, but is only used as a final or medial, though it occurs now and then in early MSS. to mark this sound at the beginning of words, e. g. ðar, ðinn, ðegar, but very rarely.

B. SPELLING.—In very early Icel. MSS. the soft d in the middle or end of words was represented by $\mathfrak{þ}$ (th); thus we read, bloþ, fapir, moþir, guþ, orþ, eymþ, seþr, dypþ, etc., blood...depth, etc. Even Thorodd does not know the form ð, which was borrowed from the A. S. at the end of the 12th century, and was made to serve for the soft th sound in the middle or end of words, $\mathfrak{þ}$ being only used at the beginning of syllables; but the old spelling with $\mathfrak{þ}$ in the middle and at the end of syllables long struggled against the Anglo-Saxon ð, and most old vellum MSS. use ð and $\mathfrak{þ}$ indiscriminately (bloþ and bloð); some use $\mathfrak{þ}$ as a rule, e. g. Cod. Upsal. (Ub.) of the Edda, written about A. D. 1300, Ed. Arna-Magn. ii. 250 sqq. At the beginning of the 14th century ð prevailed, but again lost its sway, and gave place to d, which marks both the hard and soft d sound in all MSS. from about A. D. 1350 sqq. Thereafter ð was unknown in Icel. print or writing till it was resumed in the Ed. of Njála A. D. 1772 (cp. also the introduction to the Syntagma de Baptismo, A. D. 1770), and was finally introduced by Rask in common Icel. writing about the beginning of this century; yet many old people still keep on writing d throughout (fadir, modir). On the other hand, Norse (Norwegian) MSS. (laws) never use a middle or final $\mathfrak{þ}$; and such words as oþr, gopr in a MS. are a sure mark of its Icel. origin.

C. CHANGES: I. assimilation: 1. ðd change into dd, as in the feminines breidd, vidd, sidd, from breiðr, viðr, síðr; pret. beiddi, leiddi, ræddi, hæddi, hlýddi, etc., from beida, ræða, hlýða, etc. 2. ðt into tt, adj. neut., gott, ótt, brátt, leitt, from góðr, óðr, bráðr, leiðr. 3. the Goth. zd, Germ. and Engl. rd, into dd in words such as rúdd = Goth. razda; oddr = Germ. ort; hodd = Engl. board, Goth. buzd; gaddr = Goth. gazds, etc. Those words, however, are few in number.

II. the initial $\mathfrak{þ}$ of a pronoun, if suffixed to the verb, changes into ð or d, and even t, e. g. far-ðu, gör-ðu, sjá-ðu, fá-ðu, bú-ðu, = far þú (imperat.), etc.; kalla-ðu, tala-ðu, = kalla þú, tala þú; or kon-ðu, leid-ðu, bíð-ðu, sýn-ðu, sen-ðu, = kom þú, leid þú, etc.; or t, hal-tu, vil-tu, skal-tu, ben-tu, hljót-tu, = hal þú, vilt þú, skalt þú, bend þú, hljót þú; and even so the plur. or dual—komi-ðið, haldi-ðið, ætti-ðið, vilid-ðið, göri-ðer, gangi-ðer, = komi þið...gangi þér; or following conjunctions, efað-ðu = ef að þú, síðan-ðu = síðan þú, áðren-ðu = áðr en þú.

III. change of d into ð: 1. d, whether radical or inflexive, is spelt and pronounced ð after a vowel and an r or f, e. g. blóð, þjóð, biðja, leið, nauð, hæð, brúðr, bæði, borð, orð, garðr, ferð, görd, bragð, lagði, hægð, hafði, höfðum (capitibus), etc. This is without regard to etymology, e. g. Goth. þinda (gens) and þjup (bonum) are equally pronounced and spelt 'þjóð'; Goth. daups and dæds, Icel. daudi and dáð; Goth. guþ (deus) and góds (bonus), Icel. guð, góðr; Goth. fadar, brupar, Icel. fáðir, bróðir, cp. Germ. vater, mutter, but bruder; Goth. vaurd and gards, Icel. orð, garðr; Engl. burden and birth, Icel. byrðr, burðr, etc. Again, in some parts of western Icel. rd, gd, and fd are pronounced as rd, gd, fd, ord, Sigurd, gerdu (fac), bragð (with a soft g, but hard d), hafði (with a soft f and hard d); marks of this may be found in old MSS., e. g. Cod. Reg. (Kb.) of Sæm. Edda. 2.

An inflexive d is sounded and spelt ð: a. after k, p, e. g. in pret. of verbs, steypði, gleyptði, klíptði, drúptði, gapði, glapði, steikði, rikiði, sekði, hrökði, hneykði, blekði, vakði, blakði, etc., from steypa, klípa, drúpa, gapa, glepa, steikja, riki, sekja, hrökva, hneykja, blekkja, veki, or vaka, etc.; and feminines, sekð, eykð, dypð, etc. β. after the liquids l, m, n in analogous cases, valði, dulði, hulði, deildi, and dæmði, sæmði, dreyndi, geymði, samði, framði, and vandði, brendi, etc., from dylja, deila, dreyma, seymja, venja, brema, etc.; feminines or nouns, sæmð, fremð, vandði (use), yunði (delight), anði (breatb), synd (sin): these forms are used constantly in very old MSS. (12th century, and into the 13th); but then they changed—ld, nd, rd into ld, nd, nd, and kð, pð into kt, pt, etc.

γ. after s (only on Runic stones; even the earliest Icel. MSS. spell st), e. g. raisp = reisti from reisa. In MSS. of the middle of that century, such as the O. H., Cod. Reg. of the Eddas and Grágás, the old forms are still the rule, but the modern occur now and then; in the Grágás in nineteen cases out of twenty spells sekð (culpa), but at times also 'sekt'; ld, pd were first abolished; the liquids kept the soft d till the end of the century, and ld, md, nd is still the rule in the Hauksbók; though even the chief vellum MS. of the Njála (Arna-Magn. no. 468) almost constantly uses the modern ld, md, nd. As to kt and pt, the case is peculiar; in early times the Icel. pronounced dýpð or dýpp etc. exactly as the English at present pronounce depth; but as the Icel. does not allow the concurrence of two different tenues, the modern pt and kt are only addressed to the eye; in fact, when d became t, the p and k were at once changed into f and g. The Icel. at present says dýft, segt, just as he spells September, October, but is forced to pronounce 'Seft,' 'Ogt.' The spelling in old MSS. gives sometimes a clear evidence as to the etymology of some contested words, e.g. the spelling cykð (q. v.) clearly shews that the word is not akin to Lat. octo, but is derived from auka (augere), because else it would have been formed like nótt, átta, dóttir, Lat. noct, octo, Gr. θυγάτηρ; so andi, synd, shew that the d in both cases is inflexive, not radical, and that au, su are the roots, cp. Gr. ἀνεμος and Germ. süben; but when editors or transcribers of Icel. MSS.—and even patriotic imitators of the old style—have extended the d to radical ld, nd, and write laud, band, hönd, valð, etc., they go too far and trespass against the law of the language. It is true that 'land' is in Icel. MSS. spelt 'lð', but the stroke is a mark of abbreviation, not of a soft d.

D. INTERCHANGE (vide p. 49): I. between Greek, Latin, and Scandinavian there are but few words to record, θυγάτηρ=dóttir, θήρ=dýr, θύρα=dýrr, θάνατος and θηήσκω=dá and deyta, θεός=diar, θαλλός=dalr (arcus), and perhaps θύω=dómur; Lat. truncus=draugr, trabere=draga.

II. between High German on the one hand, and Low German with Scandinavian on the other hand, a regular interchange has taken place analogous to that between Latin-Greek and Teutonic; viz. Scandin.-Engl. d, t, þ answer to H. G. t, z, d, e. g. Icel. dagr, Engl. day=H. G. tag; Icel. tenja, Engl. tame=H. G. zähmen; Icel. þing, Engl. thing=H. G. ding.

☞ In very early Icel. MSS. we find the old Latin form d, which sometimes occurs in the Kb. of the Sæm. Edda, but it is commonly ð, whence ð is formed by putting a stroke on the upper part, A. S. ð; this shews that the ð is in form a d, not a þ (tb); vide more on this subject in the introduction to þ: Thorodd calls the capital D edd, the d dé.

dadra, ad, d rounni, dat. to weedeed.

dafi, a, n. or dafar, f. pl. a dub. word, a sbaft (?), Akv. 4. 14.

dafna, ad, and damlá, with dat. to dabble with the oar, up and down, metaph. from churning, Krók. 59 C. damlá, u, f., is used of a small roll of butter just taken from the churn, það er ekki fyrsta damlan sem þú færð, Brúnn, Ísl. Þjóðs. ii. 124.

dafna, ad, to thrive well, a nursery term, used of babies. dafnan, f. thriving; döfnunar-barn, etc.

daga, ad, to dawn; eptir um morguninn er trautt var dagað, Eg. 360; þegar er hann sá at dagadi, Fms. v. 21; hvern daganda dag, Mar. (Fr.): impers., e-n dagar uppi, day dawns upon one, in the tales, said of hobgoblins, dwarfs, and giants, uppi ertu nú dvergr um dagaðr, nú skínn sói í sali, Alm. 36, cp. Hkv. Hjörv. 29, 30; en Bárðdælingar segja hana (acc. the giantess) hafi dagat uppi þá þau glímdu, Grett. 141: single stone pillars are freq. said in Icel. to be giants or witches turned into stone on being caught by daylight, and are called Karl, Kerling, vide Ísl. Þjóðs. i. 207 sqq.

dagan, dögum (dëging, Sturl. i. 83 C), f. dawn, daybreak; í dagan, Edda 24; en er kom at d., 29; litlu fyrir d., 30, O. H. L. 51; um morguninn í d., Fms. ix. 258; í dögum, Eg. 261; í öndverða d., Sturl. ii. 249.

dag-drykkja, u, f. a morning-draught, which was taken after the dagverðr, Orku. 276, Fas. iii. 42.

dag-far, n. a 'day-fare', journey, used in dat. in the phrase, fara dagfari ok náttfari, to travel day and night, Fms. i. 203; hann hafði farit norðan dagfari, in a single day's journey, ix. 513. 2. mod. and theol. the 'journey of life', daily course, conduct; hence dagfars-góðr, adj. good and gentle.

dag-fasta, u, f. fasting by day, K. þ. K. 106, Hom. 73.

dag-fátt, n. adj., in the phrase, verða d., to lose the daylight, to be overtaken by night, Fms. xi. 142, Rb. 376, Ver. 24.

dag-ferð, dag-för, f. a day's journey, Symb. 15, Fms. xi. 440, Stj. 65.

dag-ganga, u, f. a day's walk, Fas. iii. 643.

dag-geisli, a, m. a day-beam, Bjarn. 46, name given to a lady-love.

dag-langr, adj. [A. S. dæglang], all day long; d. erfiði, toil all day long, Sks. 42; daglangt, all this day long, for this day, Eg. 485, Fms. ii. 268.

dag-lát, n. pl. day-dreams, vide dreyma.

dag-leið, f. a day's journey, Fms. vii. 110, Hkr. i. 45; fara fullum dagleiðum, Grág. i. 48.

dag-lengis, adv. all day long, Korm. (in a verse), Karl. 481.

dag-ligr, adj. (-līga, adv.), daily, Fms. ix. 407, Sks. 42, Dipl. iii. 14, H. E. i. 432, Vm. 139.

dag-mál, n. (vide dagr), prop. 'day-meal', one of the divisions of the day, usually about 8 or 9 o'clock A. M.; the Lat. hora tertia is rendered by 'er vér köllum dagmál,' which we call d., Hom. 142; enn er ekki höit af dagmálum, Hom. (St.) 10. Acts ii. 15; in Glúm. 342 we are told that the young Glum was very lazy, and lay in bed till day-meal every morning, cp. also 343; Hrafn. 28 and O. H. L. 18—á einum morni milli rismála ok dagmála—where distinction is made between rismál (rising time) and dagmál, so as to make a separate dagsmark (q. v.) of each of them; and again, a distinction is made between 'midday' and dagmál, Ísl. ii. 334. The dagmál is thus midway between 'rising' and 'mid-day,' which accords well with the present use. The word is synonymous with dagverðarmál, breakfast-time, and denotes the hour when the ancient Icel. used to take their chief meal, opposed to náttmál, night-meal or supper-time, Fms. viii. 330; even the MSS. use dagmál and dagverðarmál indiscriminately; cp. also Sturl. iii. 4 C; Rb. 452 says that at full moon the ebb takes place 'at dagmálum.' To put the dagmál at 7.30 A. M., as Pál Vídalín does, seems neither to accord with the present use nor the passage in Glum or the eccl. hora tertia, which was the nearest hour answering to the Icel. calculation of the day. In Fb. i. 539 it is said that the sun set at 'eykð' (i. e. half-past three o'clock), but rose at 'dagmál,' which put the dagmál at 8.30 A. M. COMPS: dagmála-staðr, m. the place of d. in the horizon, Fb. i. dagmála-tíð, f. morning terce, 625. 176.

dag-messa, u, f. day-mass, morning terce, Hom. 41.

DAGR, m., irreg. dat. degi, pl. dagar: [the kindred word dægr with vowel change from o (dóg) indicates a lost root verb analogous to ala ól, cp. dalr and dælir; this word is common to all Teutonic dialects Goth. dags; A. S. dag; Engl. day; Swed.-Dan. dag; Germ. tag; the Lat. dies seems to be identical, although no interchange has taken place] —a day; in different senses: 1. the natural day := sayings referring to the day, at kveldi skal dag leyfa, at eventide shall the day be praised Hm. 80; allir dagar eiga kveld um síðir; mörg eru dags augu, vid auga; enginn dagr til enda trygg, no day can be trusted till its end; all dagr til stefnu, Grág. i. 395, 443, is a law phrase,—for summoning was lawful only if performed during the day; this phrase is also used metaph = 'plenty of time' or the like: popular phrases as to the daylight ar many—dagr rennr, or rennr upp, and kennr upp, the day rises, Bm. I dagr í austri, day in the east, where the daylight first appears; dagsbrún 'day's brow,' is the first streak of daylight, the metaphor taken from the human face; lýsir af degi, it brightens from the day, i. e. daylight is appearing; dagr ljómar, the day gleams; fyrir dag, before day; mó degi, undir dag, about daybreak; komið at degi, id., Fms. viii. 398 dagr á lopti, day in the sky; árla, snemma dags, early in the morning Pass. 15. 17; dagr um allt lopt, etc.; albjart dagr, hábjart d., full day broad daylight; hæstr dagr, high day; öndverðr d., the early day = forenoon, Am. 50; miðr dagr, midday, Grág. i. 413, 446, Sks. 217, 219 áliðinn dagr, late in the day, Fas. i. 313; hallandi dagr, declining day; a kveldi dags, síð dags, late in the day, Fms. i. 69. In the evening the da is said to set, hence dag-sett, dag-setr, and dagr setzt; in tales, ghosts ar spirits come out with nightfall, but dare not face the day; singing merr songs after nightfall is not safe, það kallast ekki Kristnum leyft að kveld þegar dagsett er, a ditty; Syrpuvers er mestr galdr er í fölginn, ok eigi e lofat at kveða eptir dagsetr, Fas. iii. 206, Ísl. Þjóðs. ii. 7, 8, the daylight is symbolical of what is true or clear as day, hence the word daganna, e satt sem dagr, q. v.

2. of different days; í dag, to-day, Grág. i. 10 18, Nj. 36, Ld. 76, Fms. vi. 151; í gær-dag, yesterday; í fyrra dag, the da before yesterday, Háv. 50; í hinna-fyrra dag, the third day; annars dag, Vgl. 23, Pass. 50. I; hindra dags, the binder day, the day after to-morrow, Hm. 109; dag eptir dag, day after day, Hkr. ii. 313; dag frá deg from day to day, Fms. ii. 230; hvern dag frá öðrum, id., Fms. viii. 182 annan dag frá öðrum, id., Eg. 277; um daginn, during the day; á dögumum the other day; nótt ok dag, night and day; liðlangan dag, the 'life-long day'; dögnum optar, more times than there are days, i. e. over and over again, Fms. x. 433; á deyjanda degi, on one's day of death, Grág. 402.

β. regn-dagr, a rainy day; sólskins-dagr, a sunny day; summa dagr, a summer day; vetrar-dagr, a winter day; háttis-dagr, a feast day feigns-dagr, a day of joy; dóms-dagr, the day of doom, judgment day, G 82, Fms. viii. 98; hamingju-dagr, heilla-dagr, a day of happiness; gleð dagr, id.; brúðkaups-dagr, bridal-day; burðar-dagr, a birth-day. 3. pl. days in the sense of times; aðrir dagar, Fms. i. 216; ek ætlaða ekli at þessir dagar mundu verða, sem nú eru orðinr, Nj. 171; góðir daga happy days, Fms. xi. 286, 270; sjá aldrei gláðan dag (sing), never see glad days.

β. á e-s dögum, um e-s daga eptir e-s daga, esp. of the lifetime or reign of kings, Fms.; but in Icel. also used of the lö; sögumadr, Jb. repeatedly; vera á dögum, to be alive; eptir minn dag, after my day, i. e. when I am dead. γ. calendar days, e. g. Hvít dagr, the White days, i. e. Whitsuntide; Hunda-dagar, the Dog days; Bana-dagr, Vincula Petri; Höfuð-dagr, Decap. Jobannis; Geisla-dag Epiphany; Imbru-dagar, Ember days; Gang-dagar, 'Gangng days,' Pagation days; Dýri-dagr, Corpus Christi; etc.

4. of the week days; the old names being Sunnu-d. or Drottins-d., Mána-d., Týs-d., Öðins-d., Þórs-d., Frjá-d., Laugar-d. or Þváttd. It is hard to understand how the Icel. should be the one Teut. people that have disused the old names of the week-days; but so it was, vide Jóns S. ch. 24; fyrir þau hann at cigna daga vítrum mönnum heiðnum, svá sem at kalla Týrsd-insdag, eðr Þórsdag, ok svá um alla vikudaga, etc., Bs. i. 237, cp. 165. The bishop John (died A. D. 1121) caused them to name the days as the church does (Feria secunda, etc.); viz. þriðj-d. or þriðju-d., Third-day = Tuesday, Rb. 44, K. þ. K. 100, Ísl. ii. 345; Fimti-d., Fifth-day = Thursday, Rb. 42, Grág. i. 146, 464, 372, ii. 248, Nj. 274; Föstu-d., First-day = Friday; Miðvíku-d., Midweek-day = Wednesday, was borrowed from the Germ. Mittwoch; throughout the 12th and 13th centuries, however, the old and new names were used indiscriminately. The question arises whether even the old names were not imported from abroad (England); certainly the Icel. of heathen times did not reckon by weeks; even the word week (vika) is probably of eccl. Latin origin (seculares recurrences). It is curious that the Scandinavian form of Friday, Icel. Frjádagur, mod. Swed.-Dan. Fredag, is A. S. in form; 'Frjá-', 're-', can hardly be explained but from A. S. Fréa-, and would be an irregular transition from the Norse form Frey. The transition of jú to mod. Swed.-Dan. e is quite regular, whereas Icel. ey (in Frey) would require the mod. Swed.-Dan. ö or u sound. Names of weeks are only mentioned in Icel. poems of the 11th century (Árnór, hvæt); but at the time of bishop John the reckoning by weeks was probably not fully established, and the names of the days were still new to the people.

5. The day is in Icel. divided according to the position of the sun above the horizon; these fixed traditional marks are called dags-mörk, day-marks, and are substitutes for the hours of modern times, viz. ris-mál or miðr-morgun, dag-mál, há-degi, mið-degi, niðr-mundi, nófn, miðr-aptan, nátt-mál, vide these words. The middle point of two day-marks is called jafn-nærri-báðum, in modern pronunciation ju-báðu, equally-near-both, the day-marks following in the genitive; as in Icel. a man asks, hvað er fram orðið, what is the time? and the answer is, jöfnubáðu miðsmorguns og dagmála, half-way between mid-morning and day-meal, or stund til (to) dagmála; hallandi dagmál, or stund af (from) dagmálum; jöfnubáðu hádegis og dagmála, about ten or half-ten o'clock, etc. Those day-marks are traditional in every farm, and of them no doubt date from the earliest settling of the country. Respecting the division of the day, vide Pál Vidal, s. v. Allr dagr til þess, Finns Johann., Horologium Island., Eyktamörk Íslenzk (published at the end of the Rb.), and a recent essay of Finn Magnússon, III. denoting a term, but only in compounds, dagi, a, m., where the weak form is used, cp. ein-dagi, mál-dagi, bar-dagi, skil-dagi, etc.

III. as a pr. name, Dagr, (freq.); in this sense the dat. is dag, not Dege, cp. Óðinn léði Dag (dat.) geirs síns, Sæm. 114. COMPS: dag-tal, n. a tale of days, Rb. 48. dags-brún, v. above. dags-gi, f. hallowedness of the day, Sturl. i. 29. dags-ljós, n. daylight, 266. dags-mark, v. above. dags-megin, n., at dags magni, all day, 623. 30. dags-munr, m. a day's difference; svá at d. dag, i. e. day by day, Stj.

g-ráð, n. [A. S. dagréd = daybreak], this word is rarely used, Eg. 174, Fms. i. 131; in the last passage it is borrowed from the poem ekla, (where it seems to be used in the A. S. sense; the poet speaks of a sortilege, and appears to say that the sortilege told him to fight at break, then he would gain the day); the passages in prose, however, do not take the word in the sense of early, in good time.

g-ríki, n. (dag-ríkt, n. adj., N. G. L. i. 342, 343, v. l.), in the sense, beta sem d. er til, of the breach of a Sunday or a holy day, to pay reding to 'the day's might', i. e. according to the time of the day at which the breach is committed, N. G. L. i. 342, 343, 348, 349; or does it mean 'the canonical importance' of the day (Fr.)?

g-róðr, m. a day's rowing, A. A. 272. g-sanna, u, f. true as day, Nj. 73, Fær. 169, Fas. i. 24, cp. Eb. 60. g-setr (dag-sátr, Sturl. iii. 185 C), n. 'day-setting,' nightfall; um d. nær dagsetri, Landn. 285; í d., Fms. v. 331, ix. 345; leidd til dagr, Gret. 111; d. skeið, Fms. ix. 383. dag-sett, n. adj. id., Háv. i. vide dagr.

g-sigling, f. a day's sailing, journey by sea, Rb. 482. g-skemt, f. a day's amusement, games, telling stories, or the like, i. 63 C. (dagskemt, gen. pl.) g-skjarr, adj. 'day-scare'd,' shunning daylight, poet. epithet of a fr. Ýt. 2.

g-slátta, u, f. a day's mowing, an Icel. acre field, measuring 900 square fathoms (Icel. fathom = about 2 yards), to be mown by a single man in a day, Dipl. v. 28, Ísl. ii. 349.

g-stingr, m. the 'day-sing,' daybreak, Greg. 57, (rare.) g-stjarna, u, f. the morning star, Lucifer, Al. 161, Sl. 39.

g-stund, f. day time, a whole day, K. þ. K. 6; dagstundur Leid, a meeting (i. e. meeting) lasting a day, Grág. i. 122:—elsewhere dagstund is an hour in the day time = stund dags.

g-stæddr, adj. fixed as to the day, Thom. 56, Fms. xi. 445. g-tíð, f. [A. S. dagtid], day-service, 673, 60, 625, 177, Sks. 19.

g-veizla, u, f. help to win the day, = liðveizla, Fas. iii. 336. g-verðr and dög-urðr, m., gen. ar, pl. ir, [Dan. davre], 'day-meal' the chief meal of the old Scandinavians, taken in the forenoon at the time of dagmál, opp. to nátturðr or náttverðr (mod. Dan. nadver).

supper; corresponding as to time with the mod. Engl. breakfast, as to the nature of the meal with the Engl. dinner. The old Scandinavians used to take a hearty meal before going to their work; cp. Tac. Germ. 22. An early and a hearty meal were synonymous words (vide árlegr); the old Hávamál advises men to go to the meeting 'washed and with full stomach' (þveginn ok mettr), but never to mind how bad their dress, shoes, or horse may be; and repeats the advice to take 'an early meal' even before visiting a friend, 32, cp. Hbl. 3. Several places in Icel. took their name from the settlers taking their first 'day-meal,' e. g. Dögurðar-nes, Dögurðar-á, Landn. 110, 111, cp. also Gísl. 12. The Gr. δεῖνον is rendered by dagverðr, Greg. 43, Matth. xxii. 4; but in the Icel. N. T. of 1540 sq. δεῖνον is constantly rendered by kveld-máltíð; eta dögurð, Landn. l. c., Nj. 175, Gísl. l. c.; sitja yfir dagverði, Eg. 564, 577, Ísl. ii. 336, Fms. iv. 337, ix. 30; dögurðar borð, a day-meal table, in the phrase, sitja at dögurðar borði, to sit at table, Fms. i. 40, vi. 411, Hkr. i. 153, iii. 157; dögurðar-mál and dögurðarmál-skeið, the day-meal time, time of the day-meal, Fms. viii. 330, v. l.; um morguninn at dagverðar máli, 443, Eg. 564, Edda 24, Hom. 91 (in pl.), O. H. L. 19. COMP: dagverðar-drykkja, f. = dagdrykkja, the drinking after dagverðr, Fas. iii. 530, Mag. 3.

dag-villr, adj. 'day-wild,' i. e. not knowing what day it is, K. Á. 190, N. G. L. i. 342.

dag-vöxtr, m. daily growth; in the phrase, vaxa dagvöxtum, to wax day by day, Finnb. 216, Eb. 318.

dag-þing, n. and dag-þingan, f. a conference, Aug. 1391; vera í d. við e-n, Fms. iii. 201, Bs. i. 882, freq. in Thom.

dag-þinga, að, to hold conference with one, D. N., Thom. (freq.) dala, að, to be dented; dalaði ekki né sprakk, Eg. 769, cp. Fas. iii. 12 (the verse).

dal-búi (dalbyggi, Sd. 214), a, m. a dweller in a dale, Gret. 141 A. dal-bygd, f. a dale-county, Stj. 380, Hkr. ii. 8.

dal-land, n. dale-ground, Grág. ii. 257. DALLR, m. a small tub, esp. for milk or curds; bæði byttur og dallar, Od. ix. 222, Snót 99.

dalmatika, u, f. a dalmatic, Stj., Fms. iii. 168, Vm. 2, 123. DALAR, s, m., old pl. dalar, acc. dala, Vsp. 19, 42, Hkv. 1. 46; the Sturl. C still uses the phrase, vestri í Dala; the mod. form (but also used in old writers) is dalir, acc. dali, Hkv. Hjörv. 28; old dat. sing. dali, Hallr í Haukadali, Íb. 14, 17; í þjórsárdali, í Örnólfsdali, 8, Hbl. 17; mod. dal; dali became obsolete even in old writers, except the earliest, as Ari: [Ulfr. dals = φάραγξ, Luke iii. 10, and βόθυνος, vi. 39; A. S. dal; Engl. dale; Germ. tal (thal); cp. also Goth. dalah = károw, and dala above; and up dal, up hill and down dale, is an old Dan. phrase:]—a dale; allit. phrase, djúpir dalir, deep dales, Hbl. l. c.; dali dögðotta, bedewed dales, Hkv. l. c.; the proverbial saying, láta dal mæta hóli, let dale meet hill, 'diamond cut diamond,' Ld. 134, Fms. iv. 225; dalr is used of a dent or hole in a skull, dalr er í huakka, Fas. iii. l. c. (in a verse): the word is much used in local names, Fagri-dalr, Fair-dale; Breið-dalr, Broad-dale; Djúpi-dalr, Deep-dale; Þver-dalr, Cross-dale; Langi-dalr, Lang-dale; Jökul-dalr, Glacier-dale, (cp. Langdale, Borrodale, Wensleydale, etc. in North. E.); 'Dale' is a freq. name of dale counties, Breidafjarðar-dalir, or Dalir simply, Landn.: Icel. speak of Dala-menn, 'Dales-men' (as in Engl. lake district); dala-fífl, a dale-fool, one brought up in a mean or despised dale, Fas. iii. 1 sqq.; the parts of a dale are distinguished, dals-bothn, the bottom of a dale, ii. 19; dals-öxl, the shoulder of a dale; dals-brún, the brow, edge of a dale; dals-hlíðar, the sides, slopes of a dale; dala-drög, n. pl. the head of a dale; dals-mynni, the mouth of a dale, Fms. viii. 57; dals-barmr, the 'dale-rim,' = dals-brún; dals-eyrar, the gravel beds spread by a stream over a dale, etc.:—in poetry, snakes are called dale-fisbes, dal-reyðr, dal-fiskr, dal-ginna, etc., Lex. Poët. [It is interesting to notice that patronymic words derived from 'dale' are not formed with an e (vowel change of a), but an æ, æ (vowel change of ó), Lax-dælir, Vatns-dælir, Hauk-dælir, Hít-dælir, Sýr-dæll, Svarf-dælir . . ., the men from Lax(ár)dalr, *Hit*sdalr, Haukadali, Hítardal, etc.; cp. the mod. Norse Dälen = man from a dale; this points to an obsolete root word analogous to ala, öl, bati, bót; vide the glossaries of names to the Sagas, esp. that to the Landn.] II. a dollar (mod.) = Germ.

Joachims-thaler, Joachims-thal being the place where the first dollars were coined.

dalr, m., gen. dalar, poet. a bow, Lex. Poët.; this word has a different inflexion, and seems to be of a different root from the above; hence in poetry the hand is called dal-naud, the need of (force applied to) the bow, and dal-töng, as the bow is bent by the hand. dal-verpi, n. a little dale, Nj. 132, Fms. vi. 136, Al. 41. damma, u, f. [domina], a dame, Fr. (for. and rare); hence in mod. use madama, madame. dammr, m. a dame, D. N. COMPS: damm-stokkr, m. a sluice. damm-stæði, n. a dam-yard, D. N. (for. and rare). damp, damp, m. [Germ. dampf], steam, (mod. word.) 2. a pr. name, Rm., Yngl. S.

dan, m. [dominus]. sir. D. N.: hence comes perhaps the mod. Icel. word of-dan, það er mér ofdan, 'tis too great a honour for me; else the word is quite out of use.

Dansk, adj., Danir, pl. Danes; Dan-mörk, f. Denmark, i. e. the mark, march, or border of the Danes; Dana-velði, n. the Danish empire; Dana-virki, n. the Danish wall, and many compts, vide Fms. xi. This adj. requires special notice, because of the phrase Dönsk tunga (the Danish tongue), the earliest recorded name of the common Scandinavian tongue. It must be borne in mind that the 'Danish' of the old Saga times applies not to the nation, but to the empire. According to the researches of the late historian P. A. Munch, the ancient Danish empire, at least at times, extended over almost all the countries bordering on the Skagerrac (Vik); hence a Dane became in Engl. synonymous with a Scandinavian; the language spoken by the Scandinavians was called Danish; and 'Dönsk tunga' is even used to denote Scandinavian extraction in the widest extent, vide Sighvat in Fms. iv. 73, Eg. ch. 51, Grág. ii. 71, 72. During the 11th and 12th centuries the name was much in use, but as the Danish hegemony in Scandinavia grew weaker, the name became obsolete, and Icel. writers of the 13th and 14th centuries began to use the name 'Norræna,' Norse tongue, from Norway their own mother country, and the nearest akin to Icel. in customs and idiom. 'Swedish' never occurs, because Icel. had little intercourse with that country, although the Scandinavian tongue was spoken there perhaps in a more antique form than in the sister countries. In the 15th century, when almost all connection with Scandinavia was broken off for nearly a century, the Norræna in its turn became an obsolete word, and was replaced by the present word 'Icelandic,' which kept its ground, because the language in the mean time underwent great changes on the Scandinavian continent. The Reformation, the translation of the Old and New Testaments into Icelandic (Oddr Gotskalksson, called the Wise, translated and published the N. T. in 1540, and bishop Gudbrand the whole Bible in 1584), a fresh growth of religious literature, hymns, sermons, and poetry (Hallgrímur Pétsson, Jón Vídalín), the regeneration of the old literature in the 17th and 18th centuries (Brynjólfur Sveinsson, Arní Magnússon, Þormóður Torfason),—all this put an end to the phrases Dönsk tunga and Norræna; and the last phrase is only used to denote obsolete grammatical forms or phrases, as opposed to the forms and phrases of the living language. The translators of the Bible often say 'vort Íslenzkt mál,' our Icelandic tongue, or 'vort móður mál,' our mother tongue; móður-málið mitt, Pass. 35. 9. The phrase 'Dönsk tunga' has given rise to a great many polemical antiquarian essays; the last and the best, by which this question may be regarded as settled, is that by Jon Sigurdsson in the preface to Lex. Poët.; ep. also that of Pál Vídalín in Skyfr. s. v., also published in Latin at the end of the old Ed. of Gunnl. Saga, 1775.

DANZ, mod. dans, n. a word of for. origin; [cp. mid. Lat. dansare; Fr. danser; Ital. danzare; Engl. dance; Germ. tanzen, tanzen.] This word is certainly not Teutonic, but of Roman or perhaps Breton origin: the Icel. or Scand. have no genuine word for dancing,—leika means 'to play' in general: the word itself (danza, danz, etc.) never occurs in the old Sagas or poetry, though popular amusements of every kind are described there; but about the end of the 11th century, when the Sagas of the bishops (Bs.) begin, we find danza in full use, accompanied by songs which are described as loose and amorous: the classical passage is Jóns S. (A. D. 1106–1121), ch. 13. Bs. i. 165, 166, and cp. Jóns S. by Gunnlaug, ch. 24. Bs. i. 237.—Leikr sá var kær mönnum ádr en hinn heilagi Jón varð biskup, at kveða skyldi karlaðr til konu í danz blautlig kvæði ok reggilig; ok kona til karlmanns mansöngs visur; þenna leik lét hann af taka ok bannaði styrkliga; mansöngs kvæði vildi hann eigi heyra né kveða láta, en þó fékk hann því eigi af komið með öllu. Some have thought that this refers to mythical (Eddic) poetry, but without reason and against the literal sense of the passage; the heathen heroic poems were certainly never used to accompany a dance; their flow and metre are a sufficient proof of that. In the Sturl. (Hist. of the 12th and 13th century) dancing is mentioned over and over again; and danz is used of popular ballads or songs of a satirical character (as those in Percy's ballads); flimt (loose song) and danz are synonymous words; the Sturl. has by chance preserved two ditties (one of A. D. 1221, running thus—Loptr liggir í Fyjum, bitr lunda bein | Sæmundr er á heidum, etr berin ein, Sturl. ii. 62, and one referring to the year 1264—Mínar eru sorgirnar þungar sem blý, Sturl. iii. 317) sufficient to shew the flow and metre, which are exactly the same as those of the mod. ballads, collected in the west of Icel. (Ögr) in the 17th century under the name of Fornkvæði, Old Songs, and now edited by Jon Sigurdsson and Svend Grundtvig. Danz and Fornkvæði are both of the same kind, and also identical with Engl. ballads, Dan. kæmpeviser. There are passages in Sturl. and Bs. referring to this subject—*færðu Breiðbælingar Lopt í flimtun ok gördum um hann danza marga, ok margskonar spott annat, Sturl. ii. 57, cp. 62; Danza-Berg, the nickname of a man (Sturl. ii), prob. for composing comic songs; danza-görð, composing comic songs; fylgðar-menn Kolbeins fórn með danza-görð, ... en er Brandr varð varr við flimtau þeirra, iii. 80; þá hrökti þórðr hestum undir sér, ok kvað danz þema við raust, 317.* β. α wake, Arna S. ch. 2; in Sturl. i. 23; at the banquet in Reykhólar, 111 the guests amused themselves by dancing, wrestling, and story-telling; var sleginn danz í stofu, ii. 117; í Víðvík var gleði mikil ok gott at ver þat var einn Drottins dag at þar var danz mikill; kom þar til fjöldi manna ok ríðr hann í Víðvík til danz, ok var þar at leik; ok dáuðu menn mj danz háum, iii. 258, 259; honum var kostur á boðinum hvat til gamans sky hafa, sögur eða danz um kveldit, 281;—the last reference refers to the 2 of January, 1258, which fell on a Sunday (or wake-day): in ballads a tales of the Middle Ages the word is freq. :—note the allit. phrase, dansi dunar, Ísl. Þjóðs. ii. 8: the phrases, stiga danz; ganga í danz; brúði danz, dansinn heyrta; dans vill hun heyrta, Fkv. ii. 7. Many of the burlesque, the mod. Icel. ballads are of great beauty, and no doubt many century older than the ballads to which they are affixed; they refer to lost melancholy, merriment, etc., e. g. Blítt lætur veröldin, fólnar fögr fold | lar er síðan mitt var yndið lagt í mold, i. 74; Ut ert þú við æginn blá, eg hér á Dröngum, | kalla eg löngum, kalla eg til þín löngum; Skín á skí sól og sumarið fríða, | dynur í velli er drengir í burtu ríða, 110; Ung leit eg hofmann í fögnum runni, | skal eg í hljóði dilla þeim mér um; Austan blakar laufið á þann linda, 129; Fagrar heyrða eg raddin við Niflunga heim; Fagrt syngr svanrinn um sumarlanga tíð, | þá n list að leika sér mín liljan fríð, ii. 52; Einum unna eg manninum, á með það var, | þó hlant eg mín harm að bera í leyndum stig, 94; Svann víða, svannurinn syngr víða, 22; Utan eptir firðinum, stíla fagrar fleysá er enginn glaður eptir annan þreyr, 110; Svo er mér illt og angars því veldur þú, | mig langar ekki í lundinn með þá jungfrú, Espol. A. 1549. The earliest ballads seem to have been devoted to these subjects only; of the two earliest specimens quoted in the Sturl. (above), one satirical, the other melancholy; the historical ballads seem to be of later growth: the bishops discontenanced the wakes and dancing (Bs. I. Sturl. iii.), but in vain: and no more telling proof can be given of drooping spirits of Icel. in the last century, than that dancing and wake ceased, after having been a popular amusement for seven hundred years. Eggert Glafsson in his poems still speaks of wakes, as an eyewitness in the west of Icel. (Vestfirðir) they lasted longer, but even there they died out about the time that Percy's ballads were published in England. The Fornkvæði or songs are the only Icel. poetry which often dispenses with the law of alliteration, which in other cases is the light and life of Icel. poetry; vide also hofmaðr, viki-vakar, etc. In the 15th century the rímur (metrical paraphrases of romances) were used as an accompaniment to the danz, höldar danza harla snart, ef heyrst vísan mín; hence original name man-söngur (maid-song), minne-sang, which forms the introduction to every rima or rhapsody; the metre and time of the rímur exactly those of ballads and well suited for dancing. An Icel. MS. of the 17th century, containing about seventy Icel. Fornkvæði, is in the B. Mus. no. 11,177; and another MS., containing about twenty such songs is in the Bodl. Libr. no. 130.

danza, mod. dansa, ad, to dance, Sk. 705, not in Sturl. and Bs., but use the phrase sá danz; the verb danza occurs for the first time in ballads and rímur—Ekki er dagr enn, vel d. vífn, Fkv. ii. 102.

danz-leikr, m. dancing, Sturl. i. 23.

dapi, a, m. a pool, Ivar Aasen: a nickname, Fms. viii.

DAPPR, adj., gen. rs. of a person, downcast, sad, Nj. 11, Ísl. ii. 2, 272, Band. 9: of an object, dreary, d. dagr, Am. 58; d. nætr, Sl. dópr heimkygni, Hbl. 4, Fms. x. 214: the proverb, fyrr er d. en dauð one droops before one dies, i. e. as long as there is life there is hope, daprþ höl, Pass. 44. 3; dópr dauðans þína, Bs. ii. 501; dópr augu, w. eyes, Vidal. i. 25; augn-dapr, weak-eyed; hence depra or augn-dapr, weak sight: a faint flame of a light is also called daprþ, tvö dópur sitt log, Jón Þorl. i. 146.

dapra, ad, to become faint, in swimming; e-m daprar sund, he begins sink, Njard. 374; more usually dep. daprasck, Fbr. 160, Fas. iii. 508.

dapr-eygr, adj. weak-sighted, Bjarn. 63.

dapr-ligr, adj. (-līga, adv.), dismal, sad; hnipin ok d., Ísl. ii. 10; kona d., a dreary looking woman, Sturl. ii. 212; d. ásjóna, a sad look, Fms. i. 262; d. draumar, dismal dreams, vi. 404.

darka, ad, to walk heavily, to trample, (a cant term.)

DARRAÐR, m., gen. ar, [A. S. deardr; Engl. dart; Fr. dard; Sw. dart];—a dart, Hkm. 2 (in the best MSS.), cp. DI, where vefr dardr simply means the web of spears; the common form in poetry is darr, pl. dörr, vide Lex. Poët., in mod. poetry dör, m., Úlf. i. 16, 4. 47. 61; the word is probably foreign and never occurs in prose. sort of peg, Edda (Gl.)

dasask, ad, [Swed. dasá], to become weary and exhausted, from de or bodily exertion, Bs. i. 442, Fer. 185, Fms. ii. 98, Orkn. (in a verse) Sturl. iii. 20, O. H. L. 16; dasadr, exhausted, weary, Ld. 380, Fas. ii. Fms. viii. 55, Bb. 3. 24.

DASI, a, m. (dasinn, adj., Lex. Poët.), a lazy fellow, Edda (C. Fms. vi. (in a verse).

datta, ad, to sink, of the heart, Fbr. 37, vide detta.

dauð-dagi, a, m. a mode of death, Ísl. ii. 220, Lv. 68, Fas. i. 88, Greg. dauð-dagr = dauðadagr, Bs. i. 643 auð-drúkkinn, part. dead-drunk, Fms. xi. 108, Orkn. 420.

 auð-förandi, part. death-bringing, 623. 26, Greg. 14.
 auð-hræddr, adj. frightened to death.
 AUÐI, a, m. [Ulf. daupus = θάνατος; A. S. deað; Engl. death; Germ. Swed. and Dan. død]:—death; the word is used in the strong form all Teut. dialects from Gothic to English, but in Icel. it is weak, even the earliest writers; though traces of a strong form (daudr, s or ar) found in the phrase til dauðs (to death) and in compds, as mann-dauðr; also Hm. 69, where dauðr seems to be a substantive not an adjective; rísk. 139 also writes dauðar-orð instead of dauða orð; an old song, Edda has Dvalins dauðs-drykkir = dauða-drykkir, i. e. the death-drink of the elf; the strong form also remains in such words as dauð-dagi, dauð-döddr, dauð-yfill, dauð-ligr, dauð-vána, which could not possibly be forms a weak dauði, Nj. 198; at dauða kominn, Fms. i. 32; d. fór á hann, 27; the references are numberless, though heathen proverbs and sayings prefer to use 'hel' or 'feigð', which were more antique, whereas dauði kills Christian ideas, or sometimes denotes the manner of death. 2. lic. mortification. COMPDS: dauða-blóð, n. 'death-blood,' gore, ix. dauða-bónd, n. pl. death-bonds, Greg. 48. dauða-dagr, death's day, Nj. 109, Stj. 168. dauða-dá, n. a death swoon. dauða-dæmr, m. death's doom, Sks. 736. dauða-drep, n. plague, Stj. 437. dauða-drukkinn, adj. dead-drunk, Fms. ix. 22. dauða-drykkir, m. a deadly draught, Fms. i. 8. dauða-dyrr, f. gates of death. dauða-dæmdr, adj. doomed to death, Bs. i. 222. dauða-gja, u, f. a 'death-fetch', an apparition boding one's death, Nj. 62, v. 1.; fyrgja. dauða-hræddr = dauðhræddr. dauða-kvöl, f. the death-pang, Mar. dauða-leit, f. searching for one as if dead. dauða-lit, m. colour of death, 623. 61. dauða-maðr, m. a man doomed to die, Fms. vii. 33; hafa e-n at dauðamanni, 656 A. I. 25, Eg. 416. dauða-mark, -merki, id, n. a sign of death (opp. to lífs-mark), medic. of the like, Nj. 154, 656 C. 32; a type of death, Hom. 108. dauða-sjúki, n. death-sickness, Bs. i. 616. dauða-orð (v. l. and better dauðar-f, f. from yrðr = urðr, weird, fate), n. death, 'death-weird,' Yt. 8. dauð-ráð, n. 'death-rede,' fatal counsel, Gisl. 35. dauða-rét, n. fly slander, Landn. 281. Dauða-sjór, m. the Dead Sea, Rb., Symb. dauða-skattir, m. tribute of death, Níðstr. 6. dauða-skellir, m. a blow, Bs. ii. 148. dauða-skuld, n. the debt of nature, 655 xxxii. dauða-slag, n. = dauðaskellir, Stj. 280. dauða-slig, n. deadly blow, a disease of horses, Bs. i. 389. dauða-snarar, u, f. snare of death, Hom. 144. dauða-steytr, m. [Dan. stød], = dauðaslag, Bs. 82. dauða-stríð, n. the death-struggle. dauða-stund, f. hour of death, Al. 163. dauða-svefn, n. a deadly swoon, fatal sleep, as of one fated to die, Fas. iii. 608; medic. cataplexis, also called fi, Fé. x. 43. dauða-sök, f. a cause for death, a deed deserving death, Fms. i. 48, iii. 20, vi. 383. dauða-tákn, n. a token of death, 66, cp. ll. xx. 226. dauða-teygjur, f. pl. the death-spasms, ix. dauða-útleðgð, f. penalty of death, Sturl. ii. 2. dauða-værni, n. a work deserving death, Isl. ii. 413. uð-leikr, m. mortality, Stj. 21, Greg. 17. uð-ligr, adj. deadly, Sks. 533, Hom. 52, Stj. 92, K. Á. 202, Fms. 37. uðr, adj. [Ulf. daups; A. S. deād; Engl. dead; Germ. tot; Dan. død; Grág. i. 140, Nj. 19; the phrase, verða d; to become dead, to die, 238, Jb. ch. 3, Am. 98; d. verðr hverr (a proverb), Fs. 114 (verse); falla niðr d, Fms. viii. 55; metaph. eccl., 623. 32, Hom. 79, xiv. A; dauð trúa, Greg. 13, James ii. 17, Pass. 4. 23. 2. inmate, in the law phrase dauft fé, K. Á. 204. β. medic. dead, of a 3. compds denoting manner of death, sæ-dauðr, vápn-dauðr, dauðr; sjálf-dauðr, of sheep or cattle, = svidda, q. v.: again, hálf-dauðr, deaf; al-dauðr, quite dead; stein-dauðr, stone-dead; the old writers prefer to use andaðr or látinn, and in mod. use dáinn is a gentler term, used of a deceased friend; dauðr sounds rude and is scarcely used except of animals; in like manner Germ. say abgelebt. dauð-vána, adj. ind., and dauð-vænn, adj., medic. sinking fast, when the hope of life is left, Grett. 155, Fms. vi. 31, H. E. i. 480. dauð-yfill, n. (cp. Goth. dauprúblis = ἐπιθανάτως, 1 Cor. iv. 9), a carelessness thing, Stj. 317 (Lv. xi. 38). uð-heyrask, ð, dep., d. við e-t, to turn a deaf ear to, Fms. xi. 134, n. 374. uð-heyrðr, adj. one who turns a deaf ear to, 655 xxxi, Fms. vi. 30. uð-ingi, a, m. a drone, sluggard. uð-leikr, m. deafness, stob, Fas. i. 7. uð-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), 'deaf-like,' lonely, dull, Eg. 202, 762, Lv. 2, Fms. vi. 404 (dismal). UFR, adj. [Gr. ὑψόλος; Goth. daubs = πρωρωμένος, Mark viii. 17; deaf; Engl. deaf; Germ. töub; Swed. döf; Dan. döv]:—deaf, 623. Uf-luke vii. 22: allit. phrase, daufr ok dumbi, deaf and dumb, Stj. 207; því sá er ekki mællir, d. sá er ekki heyrir, K. Á. 56; blindr eðr d, 504, Hom. 120. 2. metaph., Bs. i. 728. β. (mod.) without, uð-mikill, adj. sinking, Bs. ii. 23.

DAUNN, m. [Goth. dauns = δωμη; cp. Swed.-Dan. daunst; O. H. G. dauns]:—a smell, esp. a bad smell, Anecd. 8; illr d., Rb. 352; opp. to illmr (sweet smell), 623. 22; in Bb. 3. 27 used in a good sense. daunsa or daunsa (mod. daunsa), að, to smell at, esp. of cattle; gökk Glæsir (an ox) at honum ok daunsaði um hann, Fb. 320. dauñ-semð, f. = daunn, Mar. dauss, m. [mid. H. G. tuis; Fr. deux], the dice; kasta daus, to cast a die, Sturl. ii. 95. II. the rump, of cattle, Fas. ii. 510, cp. döf. DÁ, n. [the root word of deyja, dauðr]. 1. cataplexy: Icel. say, liggja í dái or sem í dái, to lie motionless, without stirring a limb and without feeling pain; hann vissi þá ekki til sín löngum, ok þótti þá sem hann lægi í dái, Bs. i. 336, Fas. ii. 235; falla í dái, to fall into a senseless state, Bs. i. 451. 2. it is medic. used of the relieving swoon, like the sleep which follows after strong paroxysms, Fé. ix. 204; it is different from auggvit (swoon) or brottfall (epilepsy). dá, ð, to admire, be charmed at, a word akin to the preceding, denoting a sense of fascination, a kind of entrancement (cp. dár); with acc., dái e-t, dáðu menn mjök danz hans, Sturl. iii. 259; dáðu þat allir, 625. 96, Konr. 59 (Fr.); but esp. and in present usage only dep., dást (mod. dúst) að e-u, Fms. ii. 192, xi. 429. dá- is esp. in mod. use prefixed to a great many adjectives and adverbs, denoting very; dá-góðr, very good; dá-vell, very well; dá-vænn, dá-fallegr, v. below; dá-fagr, very handsome; dá-lítill, in the west of Icel. pronounced duitið, duilitill, very little. DÁÐ, f. [Ulf. dáds, in misseds, = παράβασις, Germ. nissetbat, Engl. misdeed; A. S. dæd; Engl. deed; O. H. G. tat; mod. Germ. that; Dan. daad]:—deed; allit. phrase, drýgja dáð, to do a daring deed, Sturl. iii. 7, 10; dáð ok drengskapr, Baud. 10; cp. the compds ó-dæði, a misdeed; for-dæða, an evil-doer; the adverbial phrase, af sjúlls-dáðum, of one's own accord. β. valour; ef nokkur dáð er í þér, Fms. xi. 86, 623. 49; the word is not much in use, or merely poet. in compds as dáð-framr, dáð-fimr, dáð-gjarn, dáð-göfugr, dáð-kunnr, dáð-mildr, dáð-rakkr, dáð-sterkr, dáð-snell, dáð-vandr, etc., all of them 'epitheta ormantia,' bold, valiant, Lex. Poët., but none of them can be used in prose without affectation. dáði, a, m. a dainty, Snot 216. dáð-lauss, adj. deedless, lubberly, Ld. 236, Lv. 53; impotent, Fé. ix. 204. dáð-leysi, f. meanness, impotency, Grett. 131. dáð-leysingi, a, m. a good-for-naught, (fainéant), a lubber, Sturl. iii. 135. dáð-rakkr, adj. bold, Sks. 358. dáð-semi, dáð-samliga, v. dá-semi, etc. dáð-vandr, adj. virtuous, Sks. 486. dá-fallegr, adj. very pretty, Fas. iii. 3, v. 1. dáindis-, pretty, rather, as an adverb. prefix to adjectives and adverbs. dáinn (v. deyja), dead, deceased, (freq.) β. masc. the name of a dwarf, Edda (Gl.): cp. Dan. daane = to swoon. dá-la, adv. very, quite; ekki d., not quite, Bjarn. 42. dá-leikr, m. pl. (prop. charms), intimacy, Nj. 103. dá-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), [Dan. daarlig], bad; d. tré, Stj. 24; d. deyning, bad smell, 51; d. ferð, Ld. 324; d. kostr, Fms. i. 202; d. dæmi, Sks. 481; uretebed (of a person), Magn. 494, Stj. 157, 473. DÁLKR, m. [cp. mod. Germ. dolch, which word does not appear in Germ. till the 16th century (Grimm); Bohem. and Pol. tulich; mod. Dan. dolk]:—the pin in the cloaks (feldr) of the ancients, whence also called feldar-dálkr, Glúm. ch. 8, Korm. ch. 25, Fms. i. 180, Gisl. 55, Hkr. Hák. S. Góða ch. 18; cp. also the verse l. c., where the poet calls it feldar-stingr, cloak-pin, cp. Tac. Germ. ch. 17. 2. the vertebrae of a fish's tail; it is a child's game in Icel. to hold it up and ask, hvað eru margar árar úr þorði undir sporði? whilst the other has to guess how many joints there are, cp. the Ital. game morra, Lat. 'micare digitis.' β. a column in a book. dálpa, v. dafa. dá-læti, n. fondness, intimacy. dámadr, adj. flavoured, Sks. 164. dámgastr (proncd. dángast), að, to get seasoned; metaph. to thrive; hence, dámgan, döngun, f. thriving; dönguligr, adj., etc. dám-góðr, adj. well-flavoured, N. G. l. ii. 419. DÁMR, m. [perh. akin to the Germ. dampf], flavour; görði síðan af dām ekki góðan, Bs. i. 340; illr d., Konr. 57; the phrase, draga dām af e-u, to take a (bad) flavour from a thing; hver dregr dām af sínum sessu-nautum: Icel. also use a verb dáma, að, in the phrase, e-m dámar ekki e-t, i. e. to dislike, to loathe; a filthy person is called ó-dámr, etc. dánar-, a gen. form from dá or dáinn, in dánar-arfr, m. a law term, inheritance from one deceased, Hkr. iii. 222; dánar-bú, n. estate of one deceased; dánar-dagr, m. or dánar-dægr, n. day, hour of death, Fms. i. 219, Hs. verse 44 (where it nearly means the manner of death); dánar-fé, n. property of a person deceased, Grág. i. 209, Fms. vi. 392, cp. Dan. dannefæ, but in a different sense, of property which is claimed by no one, and therefore falls to the king. DÁR, n. scoff; in the allit. phrase, draga d. at e-m, to make game of one, Hkr. iii. 203; gys og dár, Pass. 14. 2. dár, adj. [dá], scarcely used except in the neut. dátt, in various phrases;

e-m verð dattu (or dattu um e-t), numbness comes to one, one is benumbed, 623. 10; við þau tíðendi varð honum svá d. sem hann væri steini lostinn, at those tidings he was as if he had been struck by a stone, Bs. i. 471. β. in phrases denoting a charm or fascination exercised over another, always of uncertain and fugitive nature (cp. dá, ð); góra sér dattu við e-n (v. dá-leikar), to become very familiar with one, Korn. 38; svá var dattu með þeim at . . . they so charmed one another that . . . Nj. 151; þá var nú í dattu efni komit, i. e. they came to be close friends, Sd. 138; varð mönnum dattu um þat, people were much charmed by it, Bjarn. 9, 20; cp. Hm. 50. γ. dár gleymsku-svefi, a benumbing sleep of forgetfulness, Pass. 4. II.

dára, að, to mock, make sport of, with acc., Fas. i. 9, Stj. 22, 165, 199, Grett. 139.

dári, a, m. [Germ. tor or thor; Dan. daare], a fool, buffoon, Fms. ix. 272; dára-samlegr, adj. foolish, Stj. 269; dára-skapr and dáruskapr, m. mockery, Fas. ii. 337, Grett. 108 A, 144.

dá-sama, að, to admire, Fms. vi. 57, Magn. 504; dásamandi, part., Fms. v. 239, Mar. 39; this word and the following are by mod. theol. writers much used of God, the grace of God.

dá-samligr, adj. (-liga, adv., Bs. i. 305), wonderful, glorious, Fms. x. 234, iv. 71; d. tákn, Bs. i. 325, Magn. 504, 532, Clem. 46.

dá-semd and dá-semi, f. glory, grace, Mar. 33, 68, Post. 188. dá-semðar-verk, n. work of glory; mikil eru dásemðar verkiu Drottins, great are the glorious works of the Lord, cp. Ps. cxi. 2.

dá-vænn, adj. very pretty, Fær. 157, Fas. ii. 343.

deging, f. dawn, Eluc., Sturl. i. 83 C.

deig, n. [Ulf. daigs, m. = φύραμα; A. S. dæg; Engl. dough; Germ. teig; Swed. deg] :—dough, Ann. 1337, Matth. xiii. 33, 1 Cor. v. 6–8, Gal. v. 9; the earliest trace of this word is the Goth. deigan, a strong verb by which Ulf. renders the Gr. πλάσσειν, as also ὀστράκιος by the part. digans, πλάσμα by gadik in Rom. ix. 20, and ἐπλάσθη by gadigans in 1 Tim. ii. 13; to this family belong the following Icel. words, deigr (moist), deigja, digna, deigla, dígull, the fundamental notion being plasticity: void the following.

deigja, u, f. a dairy-maid; this word is the humble mother of the Engl. lady, qs. la-dy (vide p. 76, s. v. braud), A. S. blaf-dige = bread-maid; cp. Norse bú-deigja (q. v.), Chaucer's dey (a maner dey), and West Engl. day-(or dey-) house, a dairy. The deigja in old Norse farms was the chief maid, but still a bondwoman, N. G. L. i. 70, H. E. i. 510; öll ertu d. dritin, Ls. 56, where it is curiously enough addressed to the daughter of Byggvir (bygg = barley), a handmaid of the gods; deigja seems to mean a baker-woman, and the word no doubt is akin to deig, dough, and Goth. deigan, to knead, the same person being originally both dairy-woman and baker to the farm: in Icel. the word is never used, but it survives in the Norse bu-deia, sæter-deia, agtar-deia, reid-deia (Ivar Aasen), and Swed. deja, = a dairy-maid.

deigja, u, f. wetness, damp.

deigla, u, f. a crucible, Germ. tiegel, v. dígull.

deigr, adj. 'doughy', damp, wet; Icel. say, vera d. í fætrna, to be wettish, less than vátr, wet, and more than rakr, damp. β. soft, of steel, and metaph. timid; d. brandr, Eb. 238, Þiðr. 79; deigan skal deigum bjóða (proverb), Háv. 40, Fms. i. 143 (in a verse), iii. 193, Pr. 173.

deigull = dígull, m.; deigul-mór, m. a sort of clay.

DEILA, d, [Goth. dailjan and ga-dailjan = μερίζων, μεταδιδόναι, διαίρειν, etc.; A. S. dealan; Engl. to deal; Germ. theilen; O. H. G. tailjan; Swed. dela; Dan. dèle.]

I. with acc. (never dat.), to deal, divide; the phrase, vilja bæði kjósa ok deila, will both choose and deal, of unfair dealing, a metaphor taken from partners, e. g. fishermen, where one makes the division into shares (deilir), and the others choose (kjósa) the shares they like best, Ld. 38; deildir hlutr, a dealt lot, i. e. share dealt or allotted to one, Grág. i. 243; d. e-m e-t, to allot one a thing, to deal out to one, ii. 294; deila dögurð, d. mat (in mod. usage skamtá), to deal out portions of food in a household, Isl. ii. 337; sér at þar var nanni matr deildir, Gisl. 47; þú kunnir aldregi d. mönnum mat, Ls. 46; þá er maðr á bröt heitinn ef honum er eigi deildir matr á múlum, Grág. i. 149; cp. the proverb, djarfr er hver um deildan verð; d. fé, Skm. 22; d. bauga, Rm. 20; d. e-t út, to deal out, give, Fms. xi. 434.

2. of places, to divide, bound; firðir deila, the firths are the boundaries, Grág. ii. 217; vatnsföll (rivers) d. til sjávar, Eg. 131; svá vitt sem vatnsföll deila til sjávar, Landn. 57, K. þ. K. 34.

β. used impers. as it seems; deilir norðr vatnsföllum, Isl. ii. 345; fjöll þau er vatnsföll deilir af milli héraða, the fells that divide the waters, form the water-sbed, between the counties, Grág. i. 432; þar er víkr deilir, Hlt.

3. metaph. to distinguish, discern; eptir þat sál, ok máttu þá d. ættir, after that the sun broke forth, and they could discern the airts (of heaven), Fb. i. 431, Fms. iv. 38; deila liti, to discern colours (lit-deili), hence the proverb, eigi deilir litr kosti (acc. pl.), colour (i. e. look, appearance) is no sure test, Nj. 78; metaph., d. vig, to act as umpire in a fight, tourney, or the like, Ls. 22; we ought perh. to read deila (not bera) tilt með tveim, 38.

4. various phrases, deila sér illan hlut af, to deal oneself a bad share in, to deal badly in a thing, Ld. 152: the phrase, e-t deilir máli (impers.), it goes for a great deal, is of great importance, Hs. 65, mod. usage skipta máli, miklu, etc.:

d. mál, to deal with a thing, Hom. 34; d. mál e-s, to deal speech, discuss or confer with one, Ó. H. 82 (in a verse); d. e-n málum, to deal speak, confer, with one, Krók. 36 C; d. orðspeki við e-n, to deal contend in learning with one, Vpm. 55; rúnar, Rm. 42; eiga v at d., to have to deal with a thing, Fms. viii. 288: the phrase, brotum, to deal piecemeal with a case, take a partial or false view of a thing, or is the metaphor taken from bad payment (in bauga-brot, Fb. 184; þeir hafa eigi deilt þetta mál brotum, i. e. they have a thing thoroughly, have not been mistaken, Konr. 52: to share in a thing ok kjótstykki, to share knife and meat, Grág., Isl. ii. 487; phrase, d. hug, to 'deal one's mind', pay attention to, with a not deep concern and affliction; heil vertu Sváva, hug skaltu d., thy heart thou cleave, Hkv. Hjörv. 40; deildusk hugir, svá at húskarlar héldu vatni, their minds were so distraught, that the house-carles could not bear weeping, Fms. vi. (in a verse); hence a hardened man is litill skapdeildar maðr, (Hugdeila, mind's concern, is the name of a of the 17th century): at þeir deildu enga úhæfu, that they should f dealing outrageously, Fms. i. 22; d. heiptir, to deal hatred, (poët.), Hkv. i. 41; d. afli, ofríki við e-n, to deal harshly and outrageously with one, Fms. i. 34; d. illyrðum, ill-deildum, to chide, abuse another, Háv. 37, Ld. 158.

II. neut. to be at feud, qu the saying, sjaldan veldr eim þegar tveir deila; deili gróm við þig i. 43; ek bað fögð d. við þau, Sighvat: d. til e-s, to quarrel for an Eg. 510; d. upp á e-n, to complain of one, Stj. 294. Exod. xvii. 2, chide ye with me?

β. impers., ef í þat deilir, if there be diss that point, Grág. ii. 125; ef í deilir með þeim, if they dissent, i. 58.

d. um e-t, to contend about a thing, as a law term; þeir deildu (they lawsuit) um jarðir, Fms. iv. 201; þeir deildu um landaskipti, 315 deildu um land þat er var . . . Landn. 125; þeir deildu um leysingja- 101: metaph., d. um stafu, to come to a close fight, Orkn. 232.

reflex. to spread, branch off; vatnsföll deilask milli héraða, Grág. i. svá víða sem hön (i. e. Christianity) deilisk um heim, Hom. 49.

meðan mér deilisk lífist til, as long as life be dealt (i. e. granted) m viii. 205; e-t deilisk af, a thing comes to pass, Hkr. iii. 55 (in a kölluð þeir, at lengi mundi vörn deilask af úti, that a long defence be dealt out, i. e. there would be a long struggle, Sturl. i. 59, cp. the afdailjan = to pay off; hugr deilisk (vide above); þat mun oss deilask, it will cost us dear, Am. 19.

deila, u, f. disagreement, a contest, often as a law term, law (laga-deila, þing-deila), Nj. 90, Fms. i. 68, iv. 119, 198, vi. 136, vi Sturl. i. 105, Eg. 367, Rd. 304, Ld. 204.

COMPDS: deilau- 101: metaph., d. um stafu, to come to a close fight, Orkn. 232.

deilu-mál, n. a quarrel, Sturl. 101: metaph., d. um stafu, to come to a close fight, Orkn. 232.

deilu-vænlig, adj. likely to lead to a quarrel, Eg. 725.

deild (deilþ, deilð), f. a deal, dole, share, Edda 147; fara at deil be parcelled out, Orkn. 88, Isl. ii. 337 (a portion of meat); góra d., a dole, N. G. L. i. 142; the phrase, fá illt ór deildum, to get a bad be worsted, Sighvat (in a verse).

2. dealings; harðar deild dealings, Fbr. (in a verse); sannar deildir, just dealings, Lex ill-deildir, ill dealings; grip-deildir, dealings of a robber, robbery deal, temper.

3. seldom used of fighting with weapons (N. L. 64), but freq. of a lawsuit (þing-deild), Nj. 138, 141, 86, 36, E. 73 Fms. vi. 361, viii. 268, Gpl. 475: the parliamentary phrase, leg í deild, to 'lay a case under division' in court (cp. leggja mál í 9), phrase which recalls to mind the English parliamentary phrases 'd and 'divide,' Sturl. i. 59; leggja mál til deildar, id., Laxd. 204 (N deilu).

β. cp. also local names, Deildar-tunga, -hvammr, -hjalli, Sturl. γ. in Icel. a boundary river is often called Deild or Deildar-lækir, etc.; or of other boundary places, Deildar-h etc.

δ. metaph., í aðra d., þriðju d., etc., secondly, thirdly, &c. 9, 21.

COMPDS: deildar-arfr, m. inheritance in shares, Grág deildar-lið, n. a strong body of men, so that some can be pt reserve, Fms. v. 14.

deildar-maðr, v. dældarmaðr.

deili, n. pl. marks, whereby to discern one thing (person) from a the sá þó öll d. á honum, all his features were visible, Fas. i. 29 metaph. phrase, kunna vita, deili á e-u (e-m), to know the man (thing) (man), i. e. to know it so as to discern it from another thin öll d. á, to know exactly; vita eingi d. á, to know nothing about, 18 Fas. ii. 113, Fms. v. 316.

deili-ker, n. a cup, Js. 78, cp. N. G. L. i. 211.

deiling, f. division, dealing.

deilir, m. a dealer, Lex. Poët.: arithm. divisor.

deili-steinm, m. a 'mark-stone, land-mark', D. N.

deill, m. [Germ. theil; Goth. dails; Engl. deal; Swed.-Dan. d D. N.; this word never occurs in old writers, and can scarcely be ad be in use at present. Icel. use the fem. deild and deila, vide abo dekr, n. [mid. Lat. dica], ten hides, B. K. 125. 2. [deck = press flirtation, finery.

dekret, n. a decree (Lat. word), Bs. i. Árna S.

dekstra, að, to coax for one; in phrases as, vertu ekki að d. l. m, hann vill láta d. sig (of spoilt children).

deli, a, m. a dog, (cant word.)

Dellingr, qs. deglingr, m. [dagr], Dayspring, the father of the Sun, Edda.
demant, m. diamond, (mod.) demba, d, with dat. to pour out.
demba, u, f. a pouring shower. β. a mist (= dumba), Ivar Aasen. demma, u, f. [dammr], to dam, D. N.; demning, f. damning, id. denging (dengð), Grág. ii. 338), f. the betting a scythe by hammering the edge, Grág. i. 200.
dengir, m. one who wets, a cognom., Fms. x. 219.
dengja, d, [Swed. dänga], to hammer and so wet a scythe; d. ljá, Grág. ii. 211.
dengsla, u, f. = denging.
dentinn, adj. dainty, Snót (Stef. Ól.) 212. depill, m., dat. depli, [depil = a pond, little pool, from dapi = a pool, Ivar Aasen], a spot, dot; hvítr, svartr d., O. H. L. 59: a dog with spots over the eyes is also called depill.
depla, að, d. augum, to blink with the eyes.
depra, u, f. [dapr], vide aug-depra or augn-tepra, p. 33.
der, n. the peak or shade of a cap.
des, f., gen. desjar, pl. desjar, = Scot. and North. E. dass or dess (a bay-rick), cp. also Gael. dais; menn eru við heygard þinn ok reyna desjarnar, Boll. 348; hey-des, a bay-class, Bs. 54, Sturl. i. 83, 196: it exists in local names as Desjar-myri in the east, Des-ey in the west of Icel.
des, n. [cp. Swed. desman], musk, in the compd des-hús, n. a smelling box for ladies to wear on the neck, of gold or ivory.
DETTA, pret. datt, 2nd pers. dazt, pl. dattu; part. dottinn; pres. dett; pret. subj. dytti:—to drop, fall; d. niðr dauðr, to drop down dead, Fms. iii. 132; of a bird when shot, 179; þeir tóku brandana jafnskótt sem ofan dattu, Nj. 201; spjótið datt ór hendi, El. 91; dattu þær ofan, they tumbled down, Fas. ii. 84; draga þá stundum upp, en láta stundum d., Karl. 161: to drop, die suddenly, sauðfénaðr datt niðr unnvörpum í megrð, Bs. i. 873; þau hafu nú niðr dattit í hor, the cattle dropped down from starvation, 875: to sink, of the heart, Fbr. 108: metaph., líf dettr ór e-m, the life drops out of one, Fms. iii. 214: denoting to come on suddenly, dauðinn dettr á, Al. 90; láttu niðr d., engu er nýtt, drop it, it is all false, Fs. 159: the phrases, e-m dettr e-t í hug, a thing drops into one's mind, i. e. one recollects it suddenly; d. ofan yfir e-n, to be overwhelmed, amazed; d. í stafi, to fall in pieces (as a tub without hoops), to be amazed: cp. datta, dotta. dett-hendr, adj. a kind of metre, Edda 124, 129: cp. Ht. 29.
dettr, m. the sound of a heavy body falling; heyra dettr, Fms. iv. 168.
dett-yrði, n. dropping unregarded words, Mirm.
DEYÐA, dd, [v. dauðr; Ulf. daupjan; Germ. töden; Swed. döda]:—to kill, put to death, with acc., Ld. 54, Nj. 158, Fms. ii. 270: allit., deydá illum dauða, to put to an ill death, Clem. 57; dræp ok deydandi, a law term, Germ. vogelfrei, Gpl. 137; dræp ok deyd, N. G. L. i. 351: metaph. (theol.), Fms. ii. 238; d. sik, to mortify one's lusts, Bs. i. 167.
DEYFA, ð, [v. daufr; Ulf. ga-daupjan; Germ. betäuben; Dan. döve; Swed. döfva]:—to make blunt; d. sverð, væpn, eggjar (of weapons blunted by the look of a wizard), Korm. 220, Gisl. 80, Isl. ii. 225; þær er d. sverð ok sefa, Sdm. 27, Eg. 509 (in a verse), Dropl. 36, Hm. 149, where this power is attributed to Odin himself. 2. to 'deave' (Scot. and North. E.), i. e. stupefy; medic., d. hönd, Fas. iii. 396: metaph. to soothe or stupefy, d. sakar, to soothe, Ghv. 2. 23; d. sefa, Sdm. l. c. II. = Goth. daupjan, Germ. taufen, to dip; d. í vatn, to dip in water, N. G. L. i. 339, 378, v. l.; vide dýfa. deyfð, f. (deyfa, u, f.), [Ulf. daubiþa], deafness, N. G. L. i. 228; numbness, having no savour.
DEYJA, pret. dó, 2nd pers. dótt, later dóst, pl. dó, mod. dóu; part. dáinn; pres. dey, 2nd pers. deyr (in mod. familiar use deyrð); pret. subj. dæi; in the south of Icel. people say dædi, inserting a spurious ð; old poems with neg. suffix, deyr-at, dó-at; a weak pret. form deydí (died) occurs in the Ann. 1400–1430, and was much used in biographies of later centuries, but is borrowed from Dan. döde, unclassical and unknown in the spoken tongue; Icel. always say dó: [the root is akin to dá, q. v., Gr. θάνατος, etc.; Ulf. uses a part. divans, by which he sometimes renders the Gr. θνήσκος, φθαρός; undivans = ἀθάνατος, ἀφθαρος; undivaneí = ἀθάνασία; but the Gr. θνήσκειν he renders not by divan but by gaviltan; Hel. uses döjan, but rarely; the A. S. seems not to know the word, but uses sviltan, whereas in Icel. svelta means starve, die of hunger; the Engl. perhaps borrowed the verb to die from the Scandin., whereas to starve (used by Chaucer = Germ. sterben) now means to die of hunger or cold]:—to die; deyr fé, deyja frændr, Hm. 76; hann dó af einri, 623, 27; er þat sögn manna, af hón haði af því dæit, Korm. 164; hann dó ór sárum, Fs. 120; þeir dó allir, Landu. 294; dó þar undir ellifu naut, Bs. i. 320; hann dó litlu síðarr, Fms. i. 108; þat áttu eptir sem erfiðast er, ok þat er at d., Nj. 56; betra er at d. með sæmd en lífa með skómm, Orkn. 28: the proverb, deyja verðr hverr um sinn, omnes una manet nox: the allit. phrase, á deyjanda degi, Ld. 106, Grág. ii. 207, Hkr. iii. 50: eccl., dauða deyja, Gen. iii. 3, Matth. xv. 4, 'let him die the death,' Engl. A. V.; d. góðum, illum dauða, to die a good, bad death, etc.: it sometimes has in it a curious sense of motion, hann kaus at d. í Mællifell, Landu. 192; þeir Selþórir frændr dó í Þórisbjörg, 78; trúði at hann mundi deyja í fjallit, Fb. 7 new Ed., v. l., where it means to die (i. e. pass by death) into the fell, i. e. they believed that after death they would pass into the fell; cp. hinnig deyja ór Helju halir, Vpm. 43. β. medic. to die, of a limb, Pr. 239. γ. of inanimate things; dáinn arfr, a law phrase, a dead inheritance, i. e. left to the heir, Gpl. 263; hence dánar-fé, dánar-arfr, q. v.

DEYNA, d, [daunn], to stink, 544. 39, Hom. 151, 623. 22, Stj. 91
deyning, f. a stink, bad smell, Stj. 51.
digla, að, to drip, prop. of a running at the nose (v. digull), Sd. 168: to drip, of wet clothes hung out, Konr. 32.
digna, að, to become moist (deigr): to lose temper (of steel), Nj. 203: metaph. to lose heart, Karl. 390, Ó. T. 20, Flóv. 44, Fas. iii. 540, G. H. M. ii. 712.
DIGR, adj., neut. digrt, [the Goth. probably had an adj. digrs; Ulf. renders áðþórnjs by digrei; Swed. diger; the Germ. dick is different, and answers to Icel. þjokkr, þykkir]:—stout, big; a pole is digr, a wall þykkir: the phrase, d. sem naut, big as an ox, Fb. 314; háir ok d., Anal. 79; d. fótr, Nj. 219; Ólafir Digri, Olave the Fat, Ó. H.; er kálfi var digrastr, Nj. 247; digrt men (monile), Fms. vi. 271; falr langr ok digr, Eg. 285; digrir fjótrar, Sks. 457; (hon) gókk digr með tveim, she was big with twins, Str. 16. β. irregularly = þykkir; d. panzari, Sturl. ii. 59; d. ok feit nautsída, a thick side of bacon, Fms. ii. 139. 2. metaph., göra sik digran, to puff oneself out, Bs. i. 719, Karl. 197; digr orð, big words, threats, Isl. ii. 330, Bs. i. 758. β. gram. deep, of a tune, sound, Skálda 177, Isl. ii. 467, v. l. digrask, að, to grow big, of a pregnant woman, Fms. xi. 53; d. í gerðum, id., Bárð. 173, Fb. i. 157: metaph. to make oneself big, d. ok dramba, Th. 11.
digr-barkliga, adv. 'big-throated,' haughtily, Finnþ. 252, Bs. i. 764.
digr-beinn, adj. big-legged, Fms. iv. 28.
digrð, f. bigness, stoutness (cp. lengd, hæð, breidd, þykkt), Fms. iii. 209.
digr-hálsaðr, adj. = háls-digr, big-necked, Þidr. 18.
digr-leikr, m. (-leiki, a, m.), bigness, Edda 20, Ann. 1345, Bs. ii. 167, 173: aspiration, Skálda 180.
digr-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), big, boastful, Bs. i. 728, Eg. 711, v. l. digr-nefjaðr, adj. = nef-digr, big-nosed, Sturl. iii. 111 C. digr-yrði, n. pl. big words, Stj. 461.
DIK, n. a run, leap; taka dik (taka undir sig d.), to take a spring, Bs. ii. 143: the word is probably foreign, but root uncertain; hence comes mið-dik, n., pronounced mið-bik, the middle of a thing; hún (i. e. the Reformation) hefir upphátt illt og efnislaust, mið-dikið máta-laust, og endann afskaplegan, Bs. ii. 313, a pastoral letter of the old popish bishop Ögmund, A. D. 1539.
dika, að, to run, (mod.)
dikt, n. composition in Latin, Látínu-dikt, Fms. iii. 163, Bs. i. 869, ii. 121; þat nýja dikt, 77: söngva-dikt, composition of songs, Sörla R. i. 5.
DIKTA, að, [Lat. dictere], to compose in Latin; Gunnlagur munkr er Látínu söguna diktað hefir, Bs. i. 215, 786; dikta ok skrifa bréf á Látínu; bréf skrifað ok diktað, 798; d. bækr, 79; d. vers, 655 xxxii. 17; d. röksemdir, Bs. i. 786: in old writers dikta is only used of Latin (not Icel.) compositions, but as these compositions were in an affected and artificial style, the word also got the sense of fiction, cp. Germ. dichten, dicbler = a poet, dichtung = poetry; mod. Dan. digter; Engl. dirty; in Icel. mostly with the notion of falsehood, not as in Germ. and mod. Dan. of fancy. 2. to romance, lie; logit eðr diktað, Stj. 40; diktaðu þar andsvör þau er eigi vóru sönn, 248; menn hugðu þetta ráð diktað (feigned), Bs. i. 757; sem fjandinn hafði diktað, Mar. (Fr.); Dóra þú lézt dikta ljóð, dári þig sérhver maðr, Vidal. (a ditty). diktan, f. composition in Latin, Bs. i. 798.
dikttr, m. a poem (rare), seldom used but as a name of several legendary poems of the 15th and 16th century, Ceciliiu-, etc.
dilk-fé, n. ewes together with their lambs, Bs. i. 719.
DILKR, m. a sucking lamb, Grett. 137, Þorst. St. 51, Grág. i. 417, ii. 307, in the last passage also of sucking pigs, calves or kids; kvíga (a 'quey' or young cow) með tvá dilka, Isl. ii. 401; in Icel. households the lambs are separated from the mother in June, this is called 'færa frá,' the time 'fráfæru,' the lamb 'fráfæru-lamb,' the lambs that are left with the mother all the summer are called 'dilkar' as opp. to 'fráfæru-lamb.' 2. metaph. the small folds all round a great sheepfold. β. the phrase, e-t dregr dilk eptir sér, it brings trouble in its train.
dilk-sauðr, m. a sheep with a lamb, Grág. i. 418.
dilk-sær, f. a ewe with a lamb, Grág. ii. 304.
dilla, að, with dat. to trill, lull; dillandi rödd, a sweet voice: dillindo, intersj. lullaby: dillari, a, m. a triller, of the nightingale; hjartans dansþúpi dillarinn, Jón Þorl. i. 131.
dimma, d, (but dimmaðisk, Fb. i. 91; dimmat, part., Mar.) :—to become dim; neut. or impers., um kveldit er d. tók, when it began to grow dark, Fms. viii. 305; dimmir af nótt, the night darkens, iii. 135: also of clouds, to grow dark (of a gale, storm); þá hvesti ok dimdi í fjörðum, Espol. Árb. 1768.

djöful-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), devilish, 623. 24, 625. 72, Fms. x. 289, 300, Barl. 149, Mar. 60. djöful-ödr, adj. 'devil-wud,' possessed, Orkn. 518, Clem. 51, N. T. djöful-ærr, adj. = djöfulödr, Mar. 656 B. 7. djörfung, f. [djarf], boldness, in a good sense, Fms. iv. 133, Pass. 40. 7: impudence, Fms. ii. 184, H. E. i. 503; cp. dirfö, dirfska.
 DÖÐI, a, m. [dauðr], deadness, insensibility.
 döðka, u, f. the bird tringa fusca, lækjar-döðra, Fél. i. 17, Edda (Gl.) döðna, ad, to become insensible, Anal. 196. döðr-kvíska, u, f. a kind of bird, Edda (Gl.)
 döfi, a, m. [daufr], medic. torpor, in the hands, feet, etc.,—handar-döfi, ta-döfi; as to the art, stein-döfi, anaesthesia; nála-döfi, 'needle-torpor,' pins and needles, Fél. ix. 205, 206: metaph. torpor, numbness, Stj. 97, om. 108.
 döfn, adj. dead, of a limb; d. er mér fótr minn, Vápn. 21: metaph. lousy, [Dan. doven], Al. 71.
 döfna, ad, [Goth. daubnan; Swed. domna], to become dead, of limbs; fnaði höndin, Fms. vi. 203, Stj. 296, 297: of water, flat, Sks. 165: metaph. the phrase, döfnar yfir e-u, the matter begins to die out, people cease to talk about it, Fms. x. 301, Bs. i. 348, Band. 4; hugr döfnar, mind gets heavy, Brandkr. 60.
 dögg, n. a pillow (?), in the phrase, ad sitja upp við dogg, to lie half erect bed, leaning the head upon a high pillow.
 dökk, dökkka, u, f. a windlass, Fms. x. 53. döppar, m., and döppa, u, f. a boss of metal, Þidr. 111, Karl. 550 (in saddle); of earrings, D. N. i. 321: (the last word is freq.)
 dörg-digull (dördingull), m. a small spider; araneus totus ater splendus, filo demissorio, Eggert Itin. 609; also called fiski-karl, fisher-carle; the word is no doubt to be spelt dörg-digull, i. e. angling spider; for popular lore as to the dördigull vide Ísl. Þjóðs. ii. 547, 548: the small dör's web is called högmö, q. v. dörg, f. an angler's tackle, rod and line, etc., for trout or small fish; er réru tveir á báti með dorgar sínar at smá-fiski, Sæm. Gm. (introd.), 32; land-dorgar, the land of dorg, the sea, Edda 66; dorgar-skot, a kind of fishing implement, D. N. iii. 201; cp. dorga.
 dörga, ad, to fish with a dorg: in mod. use dorg is only used of fishing through holes in the ice; metaph. Icel. also say, d. við e-t, to go angling a thing, go dangling after it.
 dörmá, ad, [Lat. dormire], to doze.
 dörníkar, m. pl. [from Dornik in Flanders], a kind of water-tight boots, Jón Þorl.
 dörr, a, m. a weiber.
 dötta, ad, (dott, n.), to nod from sleep; dötr, m. a nodder, Háv. 44.
 dölg (dölg), n. [A. S. dolgr = vulnus; O. H. G. tolg], direful enmity, only in poetry in compds, as dölg-brandr, -eisa, -ljós, the fire, embers, light of the d., = sword; dölg-lið, the ale of the d., i. e. blood; dölg-linnr, d. snake, i. e. spear; dölg-svala, the battle-swallow, i. e. the shaft; ring wounds are called dölg-spor, Hkv. 2. 40.
 dölg-ligr, adj. fiendish, Finn. 326.
 dölg-maðr, m. = dölg, Hkv. 2. 49 (Ed. dölgar mæ).
 DÖLGR (dölgr), m. [Ulf. renders χρωφειλέτης, Luke vii. 41, by gisskula; and δαιεσιότης, id., by dullgabitj]:—a fiend; dauðir dölgar, Skv. 2. 49—verða dölgari allir á nútíttum dauðir dölgar mæ, en daga ljósa—used synonyms to 'devil,' djöfull, Fms. iii. 200, vi. 143, 72 (of a giant); þar sat dölgur í háseti, mikill ok illingr (of witches), Fms. ii. 184; svartir dölgar, Karl. 525; sögðu at sá d. væri kominn í dýna er þeim þætti eigi dæll viðfangs, Grett. 127; söku-dölgur, a criminal; vide dylgja. dölli, a, m. [döle, Ivar Aasen; cp. Engl. dull], a drudge, Edda (Gl.) dölpur, m. a sort of dress, Edda (Gl.) 232.
 dölpungur, m. the larva of a caterpillar, Björn. dömandi, a, m., pl. dömóndr, [A. S. dómenid], a judge, Fas. ii. 32, Grág. 17, 65, 79, Nj., N. G. L. i. ii, Eg. ch. 57, Stj. 378 sqq.; as to the Icel. judges cp. Grág. þ. þ. ch. 1, 6, and numberless passages in the laws and Sagas.
 dömari, a, m. [Dan. dommer; Swed. domare], a judge, this is the common form instead of dömandi, Edda 93, K. Á. 202, Sks. 472 B, Pass. 27. 5, 10; dömara-sæti, n. judgment-seat, Sks. 480 B; Dömara-bók, f. the book of judges: used besides in many compds, lands-dómari, chief judge, of the law, Matth. xxvii. 27, Pass. 25. 1; yfir-dómari, undir-dómari, etc.
 dömfé, n. a fee or payment fixed by sentence, D. N. dömfesta, u, f. submitting to subpoena, N. G. L. i. 22, 221.
 dömflogi, a, m. a law term, a runaway from court, used either of the defendant or judge if they do not appear in court, or quit the court, or rise in court, without leave; in which case the judge forfeits his case, and the plaintiff his case; defined N. G. L. i. 23, 220.
 dömr-ingr, m. 'doom-ring,' 'judgment-ring'; (cp. also vó-bönd, the sacred bounds or bar): the courts of heathen times were surrounded by dömrings, about a bow-shot from the centre where the benches were placed; no evil-doer might enter this hallowed ring, or commit an act of violence within it; if he did so, he was called a vargr í vénum (as in sanctis); the Engl. law term 'bar' answers to this old word, cp.

Gr. δρῶφρακτοί, Lat. cancelli; the Goth. staua, = court and judge, properly means a staff, bar; the bar was, according to Eg. l. c., a pole of hazel-wood, hesti-stengr; classical passages referring to this,—þar sér em dömr-hring þann, er menn vóru dæmdir í til blóts, í þeim hring stendr þórs steinn, etc., Eb. ch. 10; þar stendr em þórs steinn . . . ok þar 'hjá' (better) er sá dömr-hringr er (in ubiq) menn skyldi til blóts dæma, Landn. 98; another classical passage is Eg. ch. 57 beginning; cp. also Fas. iii. Gaur. S. ch. 7, Edda 10, though the 'ring' is not expressly mentioned in these last two passages: hann gengr í dömr-hringinn ok setzk niðr, Band. 6; en þeir eigu at risa ór dömunum ok sitja í dömr-hring innau meðan um þá sök er dæmt, Grág. i. 78, 26: in early heathen times this sacred circle was formed by a ring of stones, cp. dömr-steinar: no doubt some of the so-called Celtic or Druidical stone circles are relics of these public courts, e. g. the Stones of Stennis in the Orkneys; cp. Scott's last note to the Pirate, referring to this subject: even in later times, when the thing was obsolete, the name still remained.
 dömr-hús, n. the 'house of doom,' court-house, Skv. 784; the idea is foreign, though the word is native: the old courts and meetings were always held in the open air.
 dömr-kirkja, u, f. [Germ. dom-kirche, from Lat. domus], a cathedral, (mod.)
 dömr-leggja, lagði, a law term, to lay before a court, Dipl. iii. 13.
 dömr-nefna, n, f. the nomination of judges in the Icel. court, described in Íb. ch. 5; in parliament the goðar (priests) had the right to appoint the judges, Grág. i. 25; þeir (viz. the priests) skyldu dömfefna eiga á þingum, Fms. iii. 106.
 DÖMR, m. [Goth. dóms, which occurs once, but not in Ulf., who only uses the word in compds, and renders κρίσις and κρίσις by staua; A. S. dóm; Engl. doom and the termin. -dom; O. H. G. tom; known in Germ. only from the termin. -tum (-tubum)]. I. a court of judgment, the body of judges, or the 'court' itself; the Icel. law of the Commonwealth distinguishes between several bodies of judges; in parliament there were Fjórðungs-dómar, 'Quarter Courts,' one for each of the political quarters of the country, Breiðfirðinga-d. or Vestfirðinga-d. for the West, Rangæinga-d. for the South, Eyfirðinga-d. or Norðlendinga-d. for the North, and Austfirðinga-d. for the East; these courts were instituted by Thord Gellir A. D. 964; at a later date a fifth High Court, called Fimtar-dómur, the Fifth Court, was erected about A. D. 1004; vide Nj. ch. 98, Íb. ch. 8, Grág., esp. þ. þ. in the first chapters, and many passages in the Sagas, esp. Nj., Sturl.; and of mod. authors, Konrad Maurer in his essay, Die Entstehung des Icel. Staates, Ed. 1852, Dasent's Introd. to Burnt Njal;—the treatise of Maurer is an indispensable guide in matters of the Fimtar-dómur. There are other courts on record, e. g. dyra-dómur, a court at the door of the defendant, vide Eb. ch. 18 and N. G. L.; nú skal dóm setja fyrir durum verjanda, en eigi á bak húsi; hann (viz. the plaintiff) skal setja dóm sinn eigi nær húsi en svá, at verjandi (the defender) megi setja sinn dóm milli dura ok dóms hans ok aka hlassi viðar milli dóms ok dura (vide dæma), N. G. L. i. 22: technical law-phrases as to the courts, setja dóm, to set the court, let the judges take their seats; dömur fara út, the courts 'fare out', i. e. open; færa út dóm, döma-útfærsla, i. e. the opening of the courts, Grág. i. 27,—the judges went out in a body in procession and took their seats; ryðja dóm, to challenge the court, Nj.; ganga at dómi, to go into court; nefna dóm, to name the judges (dömfefna); sitja í dómi, to sit in court; mál ferr í dóm, a case goes into court; hleypa upp dómi, to break up the court by force; bera fú í dóm, to bribe the court; dóms-aflapan, vide aflapan;—for all these phrases, vide Grág., þ. þ. in the first chapters, Nj., esp. ch. 140 sqq., Eg. ch. 57, N. G. L. i, Gpl. This sense is now almost obsolete, but it remains in the Manx demster and Scot. doomster. II. doom, judgment, sentence, and this may be the original sense; dóms-atkvæði, dóms-orð, and dóms-uppsaga mean doom, sentence, as pronounced by the presiding judge, Nj., H. E. ii. 115, Skv. 159, Band. 6, Grág. i. 3, 83; döma-dagr, doomsday, the day of judgment; Norna-dómur, the doom of the Norns, their weird, fate, Yt. 23, Fm. 11; skapa-dómur, id. β. judgment, opinion. III. denoting state, condition, age, in words such as heidín-dómur, Kristín-dómur, the beaten, Christian age, faith; konung-dómur, a kingdom; biskups-dómur, a bishopric, etc.; hefja ör heidnum dómi, to lift out of beathendom, baptize, Sighvat. 2; helgir dómar, relics, Bs., H. E., Grág. ii. 165, Fms. i. 230, v. 143, Gpl. 70:—but helgidómur, Old Engl. halidom, Germ. heiligtum: leynd d., mystery, μυστήριον of the N. T.; leynda dóma himmarikis, Matth. xiii. 11; þenna leyndan dóm, Rom. xi. 25; sjáid, ad eg segi yðr leyndan dóm, 1 Cor. xv. 51. 3. in many compds = Engl. -dom, -hood, -head; Guð-dómur, Godhead; manndómur, manhood, etc.
 dömr-rof, n. disregard of judgment, Grág. i. 87, cp. Gpl. 21.
 dömr-ruðning, f. a challenging of judges, Grág. i. 27.
 dömr-seta, u, f. sitting in court, judgment, Skv. 638, 641. dömr-setning, f. opening the court, N. G. L. i. 220.
 dömr-staðr, m. court, tribunal, Grág. i. 448, ii. 405, Edda 10.
 dömr-staurr, m. a court bar, properly court rails, but used in N. G. L. i. 220 of select men who stand outside and pronounce an opinion on the case, dóm-stefna (-stemna), u, f. a citing, summoning, Grág. i. 448.

 dóm-steinarn, m. pl.; court-stones, court-ring, Sturl. i. 31, vide dómhringr.
 dóm-stóll, m. the judgment-seat, John xix. 13, Sks. 622, 637, Hom. 46, Fms. x. 443.

dóm-sæti, n. = dómstóll, Sks. 488, 606.

dóm-sætr, adj., in the phrases, vera d., N. G. L. i. 84; eiga dómsætt, to be qualified to sit in a court, a lawful judge, Grág. i. 64.

dóm-varzla, u, f. guarding a court, Grág. i. 65. dómvörslu-maðr, m. a man who guards the court, a javelin-man, Grág. i. c.

DÓNI, a, m. (and compds dóna-legr, -skapr, -háttr); this is a college word, by which the students of the old colleges at Skalholt and Hólar called outsiders as opposed to collegians, like the Philister of Germ. universities: it is still used: from Span. don, through the E. Engl. done, ('In þi dysch sette not þi sponne, noþer on þe brynke, as uelernyd done,' = einsög ólárdör dóni, as an illiterate clown (used mockingly), Bodl. Ashm. MSS. no. 61, about A. D. 1500, Boko of Curtesy, E. Engl. Text Society, 1868.)

dós, f. [cp. Engl. dose, Dan. daase], a small box, snuff-box, (mod. word.)

dótt, n. [North. E. doit], trumpetry, trifles, (cant word.)

DÓTTIR, f., gen. dat. acc. dóttur, plur. dætr, later dætr or dætur; gen. dætra, dat. dætrum; the Icel. keeps a single t throughout in the plur., whereas Swed. and Dan. have döttre; dætrr also occurs in Sks. B. (a Norse MS.), and at least once or twice in poetry, cp. the rhyme, Ægis dætr ok tættu, Edda (Ed. A. M.) i. 324; and Hlé's dætrr, Skálda 198: [Gr. θύγάτρ; Ulf. daughtar; A. S. dogbtor; Engl. daughter; Swed. dotter; Dan. datter; O. H. G. tohtar; Germ. tochter; the Greek has a short v, and the Goth. has au, answering to Gr. o; the diphthongal ó and the double t in the Scand. is only caused by the suppression of the middle consonant gb]:—a daughter; hann átti dóttur eina er Unnr hét, Nj. i.; þóra dóttir Sigurðar Orms í auga; þorgerðr dóttir þorsteins ens Rauða, 2; Höskuldur átti sér dóttur er Hallgerðr hét, id.; er illt at eiga dádlausa sonu, ok víst ætla ek yör til þess betr felda at þér vært dætr föðurs yðvars ok værit giptar, Ld. 236; gott skaplyndi hefðit þér þá fengit, ef þér værit dætr einhver þína, 216; nú veit ek at þú ert d. en ekki sonr, er þú þorir eigi at verja frændr þína, Háv. 43. If suffixed to a name, -dóttir denotes a woman, -son a man, e.g. þorsteinn Egils-son, but his sister þorgerðr Egils-dóttir; Halldórr Ólafs-son, but Halldóra Ólafs-dóttir, vide the Index of Names to Landn., the Sagas, etc.: this custom, in early times common to all Teut. people, is still in almost exclusive use in Icel., where a lady keeps her name all her life, whether married or not: einga-dóttir, only daughter; sonar-dóttir, son's daughter; dóttur-dóttir, a daughter's daughter, a granddaughter, Grág. i. 171; dóttur-maðr, a son-in-law, Germ. eidam, Fms. ix. 249, Grág. i. 175: the waves are poet. called Ránar-dætr, Hlé's-dætr, Ægis-dætr, the daughters of Ran, etc., Edda; the Sun is daughter of Onar, and, on the mother's side, of Night, Edda; the Sun is daughter of Mundil-fari, 7. 2. Dóttá is a fem. pr. name in Denmark, prob. akin to daughter, Fms. vi.

drabba, að, (drabb, n., drabbari, a, m.), to 'drab,' to dirty.

draf, n. draff, husks, N. G. L. iii. nos. 2, 8, Luke xv. 16.

drafa, að, to talk thick; það drafaði í honum, of a drunken person.

drafa, þiðr. 116, v. l., 205, 289, from the M. H. G. drabe or darabe, = ibereby, which the Icel. translator did not understand.

drafi, n. tattle, Fas. iii. 423.

drafi, a, m. curdled milk when cooked, Grett. (in a verse); rauð-seyddr d., a red-cooked d., a dainty.

drafna, að, d. sundr, to become rotten as druff, Fas. iii. 325, 451.

drag, n. [draga], in compds as in drag, a bow-shot, of distance: spec. a soft slope or valley, í hverri laut ok dragi, Árm. ii. 94: in pl. drög, the watercourse down a valley, dals-drög, dala-drög; Gljufrár-drög, Pm. 46; Kálfadal-drög, id.; fjalla-drög. β. sing. the iron rim on the keel of a boat or a sledge: the metaph. phrase, leggja drag undir e-t, to lay the keel under a thing, i. e. to encourage it, Eb. 20. γ. a lining, in erna-drög, Bév. 16 (Fr.) δ. Icel. also say, leggja drög fyrir e-t, to lay a drag (net) for a thing, i. e. to take some preparatory steps for a thing. ε. metric term, a supernumerary, additional line to a stanza, Edda (Ht.) 124, Fms. vi. 347.

draga, u, f., vide drögur.

DRAGA, pret. dró, pl. drögu; part. dreginn; pres. dreg; pret. subj. drægi: [Lat. trahere; Ulf. dragan, but only once or twice, = ἐπιωπέειν in 2 Tim. iv. 3; Hel. dragan = portare, ferre (freq.); A. S. dragan; Germ. tragen; the Engl. distinguishes between to drag and draw, whence the derived words to draggle, trail, drawl; Swed. draga; the Danes have drage, but nearly obliterated except in the special sense to travel,—otherwise they have trække, formed from the mod. Germ. tragen]:—to draw, drag, carry, pull.

A. Act., with acc. I. to drag, carry, pull; hann dró þau öll út, Nj. 131; djöfla þá er yör munu d. til eilífra kvala, 273; d. heim við, to drag the logs home, 53; d. sauði, to pick sheep out of a fold, Bs. i. 646, Eb. 106; d. skip fram, to launch a ship; d. upp, to draw her up, drag her ashore, Grág. ii. 433; dró þorgils eptir sér fiskinn, Fs. 129; Egill dró at sér skipit, E. pulled the ship close up to himself, Eg. 221, 306; dró hann þá af grunnum, Fms. vii. 264; hann hafði dregit (pulled) hött siðan yfir hjálm, Eg. 375, cp. Ad. 3; d. fót, skóklæði af e-m, to draw clothes, shoes; þá var dregin af (stripped off) hosa líkinu, Fms. viii.; dró hann hana á hönd sér, he pulled it on his hand, Eg. 378; d. hri hönd sér, to put a ring on one's hand, 306; (hann) tók kulhringr dró (pulled) á blóðrefilinn, id.: phrases, er við ramman geill at d., pull a rope against the strong man, i. e. to cope with the mighty, Fm 107, Nj. 10.—the metaphor from a game; d. árar, to pull the oars, ii. 180, Grett. 125 A: absol. to pull, ok drögu skjótt eptir, they pulled up to them, Gullþ. 24, Krök. 52: metaph., um margar íþrótti hann fast eptir Ólafi, in many accomplishments he pressed hard Olave, Fms. iii. 17: d. boga, to draw the bow, x. 362, but more benda (bend) boga: d., or d. upp segl, to hoist the sails, Eg. 93, Fm 21, x. 349, Orkn. 260: d. fiska, or simply draga (Luke v. 7), to fish a book, to pull up fish with a line (hence nsk-dráttur, dráttur, fisk Fms. iv. 89, Hým. 21, 23, Fs. 129, Landn. 36, Fas. ii. 31; d. drátt, v. 4; d. net, to fish with a drag-net; also absol., draga á (on or in) river), to drag a river; hence the metaphor, d. langa nótt at e-u, = longue ambages, Nj. 139: d. steina, to grind in a hand-mill, S. Gs. 15: d. bust ör nefi e-m, vide bust: d. anda, to draw breath öndina um barkann, id., (andar-dráttur, drawing breath); d. tönn, to a tooth.

2. phrases mostly metaph.; d. seim, prop. to draw metaph. to read or talk with a drawling tone; d. nasir af e-u, to a thing, Ísl. ii. 136; d. dóm af e-u, to draw flavour from; draga dæ e-u, or d. e-t til dæmis, to draw an example from a thing, Stj. I. Nj. 65; d. þýðu eðr samræði til e-s, to draw towards, feel sympathy for, Sks. 358; d. grun á e-t, to suspect, Sturl.; d. spott, skaup, gys: at e-u, to hold a thing up to ridicule, Bs. i. 647; d. á síkuld ok d. to assume the air of... 655 xi. 3; d. á sík ofbeldi ok dramb, Fms. vi. d. e-n á tálur, to deceive one, metaphor from leading into a trap, x. 17; d. vél at e-m, to deceive one, draw a person into wiles, Nj. Skv. i. 33; d. á vetr, to get one's sheep and cattle through the w. Hrafnkell dró á vetr kálf ok kið hin firstu misseri, Hrafn. 22, cp. (anbinden, and in mod. Icel. usage setja á vetr; d. nafn af e-m, to derive the name from, Eb. 126 (App.) new Ed.; the phrase, (hann: ekki) fleiri ár yfir höfuð d., more years should not pass over his head, must die, þóðr.

II. to draw a picture; kross lét hann enni á öllum hjálmum með bleiku, Fms. iv. 96; þa dró Tjörvi lík þeirra á kamarsvegg, Landn. 247; var dregit á skjöldinn leo með Ld. 78, Fr. 428; í þann tíma sem hann dregr (draws) klæða-földi fólðs, Mar. (Fr.): d. til stafs (mod.), to draw the letters, of children trying to write; d. fjöðr yfir e-t, a metaph. phrase, to draw a pen c through, to hide, cloak a thing: gramm. to mark a vowel with a star a long vowel open to a short one is thus called 'dreginn'; hljóðstaf tvenna grein, at þeir sé styttrir (short) eða dregnir (drawn, marked a stroke), ok er því betr dregit yfir þann staf er seint skal at kveða: ári Ari, ér er, mínu minni, Skálda 171: to measure, in the pl. draga kvarða við vaðmál, Grág. i. 497, 498; draga lérept, N. G. 323.

III. to line clothes, etc.; treyja var dregin utan ok inn rauðu silk, Flov. 19. IV. metaph. to delay; hann dró svá sit at... Sturl. iii. 13; hann dró um þat eugan hlut, he made no subtle Hkr. ii. 157; Halldórr dró þá heldr fyrir þeim, H. then delayed th Ld. 322; vil ek ekki lengr d. þetta fyrir þér, 284; vil ek þessi var láta d. fyrir mér lengr, Eb. 130.

V. with prepp. af, at, á, frá, saman, sundr, etc., answering to the Lat. attrahere, abstrahere, trahere, detrahere, distrahere, contrahere, etc.; d. at líð, to collect troc saman her, id., Eg. 172, 269, Nj. 127; d. at föng, to collect stores 259: metaph., þá dró at honum sóttin, the sickness drew nearer to l grew worse, Grett. 119; d. af e-m, to take off, to disparage a person vi. 287; d. af við e-n, ok mun héðan af ekki af dregit við oss, w not be neglected, stinted, Bjarn. 54: mathem. term, to subtract, Rl d. fram, to bring forward, promote; d. fram þræla, Fms. x. 421, í Eg. 254; skil ek þat, at þat man mína kosti hér fram d. (it i my greatest help here), at þú átt ekki vald á mér; d. fram kaupn make money, Fms. vi. 8; d. saman, to draw together, collect, join, 18, Nj. 65, 76; d. sundr, to draw asunder, disjoin; d. e-t á, to in (á-dráttur) drag eigi á þat, Sturl. iii. 110; d. undan, to escape; segli við ok drögu undan, Fms. iv. 201; nú lægir segl þeirra ok nú undan oss, v. 11: metaph. to delay, Uspakr dró þó undan allt tti Nj. 272; hirdin á þetta at svá mjök var undan dregit, Fms. i. (undan-dráttur, delay); hví dregr þú undan at bjóða mér til þín, 326, Fms. ix. 251, Pass. 16. 13: mathem., d. rót undan, to extract Alg. 366; d. upp, to draw a picture (upp-dráttur, a drawing); to f. Edda 1; to pull out of the snow, Eg. 546; d. út, to extract, drö 655 xxxii. 2; d. undir sik, to draw under oneself, to embezzle, l Fms. vii. 128; d. upp akkeri, to weigh anchor, Jb. 403; d. upp boist sail, vide above; ljós brann í stofunni ok var dregit upp, 142; þar brann ljós ok var dregit upp, en myrkt hit neðra, ii. 23: er mönnum var í sæti skipat vöru log upp dregin í stofunni, 82: herbergis sveinarnir drögu upp skriðljósinn, Fas. iii. 530, cp. Gísl. 2:—in the old halls the lamps (torches) were hoisted up and d order to make the light fainter or stronger; d. e-n til e-s, to dr wards a thing; mikit dregr mik til þess, Fs. 9; engi ofkæti dregr mik til þessarar ferðar, i. e. it is not by my own choice that I undertake this journey, Fms. ix. 352; slíkt dró hann til vinsældar, this furthered his popularity, vii. 175, Sks. 443 B; mun hann slíkt til d., it will move, influence him, Nj. 210; ef hann dragi ekki til, if he was not concerned, 24.

2. draga til is used absol. or ellipt., denoting the course of fate, and many of the following phrases are almost impers.; nema til verdra dragi, unless matters turn out worse, Nj. 175; búið, dragi til þess sem vera vill, that. fata evenient, 185; ef honum vill þetta til dauða d., if this draw his death, prove fatal to him, 103, Grett. 114; þat samband þeirra er þeim dregr báðum til bana, which will be fatal to both of them, Nj. 135; vanda varð þat fram at koma sem til dró, Isl. ii. 263; sagði Kveldulífr at (then) mundi þar til draga sem honum hafði fyrir boðat, Eg. 75; dró til vanda með þeim Rúti ok Unni, it was the old story over again, Nj. 2; dró til vanda um tal þeirra, 129; at hér mundi til mikillar úgíptu draga um kaup þessi, that little mischief would arise from this bargain, 10; dró þá enn til sundrþykki með þeim Svium, the old feud with the Swedes began over again, Fms. x. 161; ok er úvist til hvers um dregr, s. 6; svá er þat, segir Runólfr, ef ekki dregr til, unless some unforeseen things happen, Nj. 75; hön kvad eigi úlíkligt at til mikils drægi um, Isl. ii. 19; þá dró nú til hvártveggja, Bret.; hence til-drög, n. pl. cause.

B. IMPERS. I. of clouds, shade, darkness, to be drawn before thing as a veil; dimmu (acc.) þykir á draga ráðit Odds, it looked as if doom were drawing-over Odd's affairs, Band. 10; ok er i tók at draga úrinar (acc.), it began to draw into showers, i. e. clouds began to gather, Fms. iii. 206; often ellipt., hratt stundum fyrir en stundum dró frá, clouds drew sometimes over, sometimes off, of the moon wading through them, Grett. 114; dregr fyrir sól, [a veil] draws over the sun, he is hid clouds; ský vónarleysu döpur drjúgum dró fyrir mína gleði-sól, Bb. 2. 9; egr á gleði biskups, [clouds] drew over the bishop's gladness, it was eclipsed, Bs. ii. 79; eclipsis heitir er fyrir dregr sól eðr tungl, it is called an eclipse when [a veil] draws over the sun or moon, 1812. 4; tunglskin á ljóst, en stundum dró fyrir, the moonshine was clear, and in turn [a veil] drew over it, Nj. 118; þá sá lítið af tungli ljóst ok dró ymist til eðr á, Isl. ii. 463; þat gerðisk, at á dregr tunglit, ok verðr eclipsis, Al. 4.

2. in various connections; dró yðr (acc.) undir hrakningina, eu (acc.) undan, you were drawn into a thrashing (i. e. got one), but we escaped, Nj. 141; hann (acc.) dró undan sem nauðulílgast, he had a narrow escape, Fms. ix. 392; absol., a noun or personal pronoun in acc. being understood, lítt dró enn undan við þik, there was little power of raving out of thy reach, i. e. thy blow did its work right well, Nj. 199, 55; hvárki dró sundr né saman með þeim, of two running a dead heat; metaph. phrases, mun annarsstadar meira slóða (acc.) draga, ere will be elsewhere a greater trial left, i. e. the consequences will be ill worse elsewhere, 54; saman dró hugi þeirra, their hearts were drawn together, of a loving pair, Bárð. 271; saman dró kaupmála með þeim, they struck a bargain, literally the bargain was drawn tight, Nj. 10; hann hreinsar þat skjótt þóat nokkt inn (acc.) hafi á oss dregit af mneyti (although we have been a little infected by the contact with) unarlegs síðferðis, Fms. ii. 261; allt slafir (acc.) dró af Hafri, i. e. H. came quite mute, Grett. (in a verse); in a temp. sense, til þess er dró at egi, till the day drew nigh, Fms. x. 138; þá er dró at miðri nótt, Grett. 10; þá er dregr at Jólum, Yule drew nigh, Fbr. 138; dregr at hjaldri, e bataille-bour drawas nigh, Fms. vi. (in a verse); dró at því (the time drew nigh), at hann var banvæn, Eg. 126; of sickness, hunger, or the like, to sink, be overcome by, svá dregr at mér af elli, svengd ok þorsta, . . . Fms. iii. 96; nú þykki mér sem fast dragi at þér, thou art sinking fast, Fas. ii. 221; ok er lokid var kvæðinn dregr at Oddi fast, O. was sinking fast, 321; of other things, tók þá at d. fast at heyjum hans, his rock was very low, Fms. iii. 208; þoku dregr upp, a fog draws on, Fms. 97 (in a verse), but ok taki sú þoka (nom.) fyrir at d. norðrljósit, ks. 211 (better þá þoku, acc.)

C. REFLEX. to draw oneself, move; ef menn dragask til föruneysis þeirra (join them) úbedit, Grág. ii. 270; Sigvaldi dragask út frá flotanum, i. draws away from the fleet, Fms. xi. 140; ofmjök dragask lentir menn saman, i. e. the barons drew far too forward, vii. 22; hyski drósk á flóttu, they drew away to flight, Fms. vi. (in a verse); skeiðr drógusk at vígi, the ships drew on to battle, iii. 4 (in a verse); dragask undir = draga undir sik, to take a thing to oneself, Grág. ii. 150; dragask á hendr e-m, drógusk opt þeir menn á hendr honum er úskilamenn vóru, Sturl. i. 136; dragask e-n á hendr, hann kvad þess enga ván, at hann dragisk þá á hendr, ii. 120; dragask aprt á leið, to remain behind, Rb. 108; dragask á, to recede, of the tide, 438; dragask saman, to draw back, draw together, be collected, Fms. i. 25, Bs. i. 134; e-m dragask þennigar, Fms. vi. 9; d. undan, to be delayed, x. 251; the phrase, herr, líð dregsk e-m, the troops draw together, of a levy, i. 94, vii. 176, Eg. 277; dragask á legg, to grow up, Hkr. iii. 108; sem aldr hans ok vitsmunir drógusk fram, increased, Fms. vi. 7; þegar honum drósk aldr, when he grew up, Fs. 9; dragask á legg, to grow into a man; dragask við e-t, to become discouraged, Fms. viii. 65; d. vel, illa, to do well, ill, Fs. 146; þu er þu þu, be worn out, exhausted, drósk þá líðit mjök af kulda, Sturl. iii. 20; drósk hestr hans, ii. 75; part. dreginn, drawn, pinched, starved, hestar mjök dregnir, Fms. ix. 276; gördisk fénaðr dreginn mjök, drawn, thin, iii. 208; stöð þar í heykleggi einu ok dregit at öllu megin, a tapering bayrick, Háv. 53; of sickness, Herra Andrés lagðisk sjúkr, ok er hann var dreginn mjök, Fms. ix. 276. β. recipr., þau drógusk um einn gullhring, they fought, pulled, Fas. iii. 387. From the reflex. probably originates, by dropping the reflex. suffix, the mod. Swed. and Dan. at draga = to go, esp. of troops or a body of men; in old writers the active form hardly ever occurs in this sense (the reading drógu in the verse Fms. iii. 4 is no doubt false); and in mod. usage it is equally unknown in Icel., except maybe in allit. phrases as, e. g. út á djúpid hann Oddr dró, Snót 229 new Ed.; to Icel. ears draga in this sense sounds strange; even the reflex. form is seldom used in a dignified sense; vide the references above.

draga, u, f., only in pl. drögur, timber carried on horseback and trailing along the ground, Glúm. 368; dragua-hross, a drag-horse, 369; metric. term, a sort of anadiplosis, when a stanza begins with the last word of the preceding one, Edda (Ht.) 126, Skálda 191.

dragi, a, m. a trail or long line of laden borses or carts, Bjarn. 36; cp. heim-dragi, a loiterer, Lex. Poët.

drag-kyrtill, m. a trailing kirtle or gown, Fms. vi. 440, viii. 336.

drag-loka, u, f. a bolt; metaph. a loiterer, Finnb. 300.

drag-máll, adj. drawing, Fas. i. 382.

dragna, að, [Engl. drain], intrans. to drag, trail along, Fas. iii. 525, Sturl. ii. 49; Skíði d. eptir, Sd. 169; hann dragnar síðan heim at búrinu, Háv. 54; hafði losnað amarr þvengriun, ok dragnaði skúfrinn, Eb. 220; reflex., Fas. ii. 497.

drag-nál, f. a bodkin, Fas. iii. 621.

drag-net, n. a drag-net, opp. to lag-net, a laying-net.

drag-reip, n. a 'draw-rope,' balyard, Bs. i. 276, Edda (Gl.), Fms. vi. 303.

dragsa, að, = dragna, Karl. 147, 554.

drag-síðr, adj. trailing behind, of a gown, Eg. 702.

dralla, að, (drall, n.), qs. dragla, to loiter, (slang word.)

DRAMB, n. I. prop. a roll of fat on the neck of fat men or beasts, hnakka-dramb, huakka-drembi, cp. drambr, m. a knot in charcoal or logwood; hence II. metaph. arrogance, Nj. 47; ofbeldi ok drambr, Fms. vii. 20. β. pomp, Fms. x. 232; drambs-fullr, adj. arrogant, Hom. 151, Fms. x. 222; drambs-maðr, m. a baughty, pompous person, Fms. x. 254, Hkr. ii. 288.

dramba, að, to be baughty, pompous, Flóv. 29, Hom. 135; d. í virðingu, 656 C. II; d. yfir e-m, Greg. 22, Niðrst. 7; d. yfir sér, to boast, Fas. i. 36; d. í móti e-u, Fms. xi. 111.

dramb-hosur, f. pl. a sort of 'court-breeches,' Fms. vi. 440.

dramb-lauss, adj. (-leysi, n.), unpresuming, Bs. i. 275.

dramb-látr, adj. baughty, Greg. 24, Hom. 7, Fas. i. 89, Luke i. 51, Pass. 35. 7.

dramb-læti, n. pride, Fas. i. 18, Str. 81.

dramb-samliga, adv. (-ligr, adj.), baughtily, Hkr. iii. 244, Sks. 451.

dramb-samr, adj. baughty, Sks. 701, Fas. i. 49, Pass. 21. 7.

dramb-semi, f. baughtiness, H. E. i. 519, Al. 153.

dramb-vísi, f. = drambssemi, Str. 82.

dramb-viss, adj. = drambsamr, Hom. 152, Karl. 135.

dramb-yrði, n. pl. baughty language, Sks. 558.

DRANGR, m. a lonely up-standing rock, Dipl. v. 23; kletta-drangr, fjall-drangr, etc., freq. in Icel., vide Eggert Itin. 497; many places take their names from these basalt rocks, Drangar (pl.), Drang-ey, Dranga-vík, Dranga-jökull, etc.; in popular lore these rocks were thought to be giants turned into stones, Isl. þjóðs.

drang-steinn, m. = drangr, Greg. 62, Bs. i. 346, Mar. 93 (Fr.)

drasa, u, f. [dros], prattle; drösu ok lygi, Anecd. 14; drösur (pl.) ok hegónlig orð, 78; hence the mod. drösla or drusla, u, f. a vulgar ditty.

drasill, drösull, m., poët. a borse, cp. Ygg-drasill, vide Lex. Poët.

dratta, að, (qs. dragta), to trail or walk like a cow, Fas. ii. 128, i. 484; Homer's ειλίτρος is rendered by drattandi.

draug-hentir, n. adj. a sort of metre, Edda (Ht.) 137; a supernumerary syllable being added to every line, this syllable seems to have been called draugr, a plug or log.

DRAUGR, m. [Lat. truncus is perhaps akin]: I. a dry log, Edda (Gl.); this sense, however, only occurs in old poets, in compds such as el-draugr, ben-d., hiri-d., her-d., óðal-d., jó-d., gervi-d., in poetical circumlocutions of a man, cp. Edda 68, 85.

II. metaph. in prose (as it is now used), a ghost, spirit, esp. the dead inhabitant of a cairn was called draugr, Ld. 326, Fms. iii. 200, Bs. i. 256, Stj. 492. I Sam. xxviii. 15, Róm. 186, 217, Orkn. 210 (in a verse), Fas. (Hervar. S.) i. 436-438, Hkv. 2. 49, Isl. (Harð. S.) ii. 47 (in a verse); it also occurs in the verse on the Runic stone in Schonen, quoted and explained in Rafn Antiq. Orient. 178, but it is uncertain whether it is here used in the first or second sense.

β. a sluggard, a drone who walks about as a ghost; draugs-ligr, adj.; drauga-skapr, m.; draugast, að, to walk about like a ghost. γ. metric., vide draught above. COMPS: draugadrottinn, m. the lord of ghosts, is one of the names of Odin, Hkr. i. 11. drauga-fé, n. boards in cairns or tombs, Fas. ii. 368. drauga-gangr, m. a gang of ghosts. drauga-sögur, f. pl. ghost stories in nursery tales, for a collection of such, vide Ísl. Þjóðs. i. 222-354.

draum-kona, u, f. a 'dream-woman,' a spirit in dreams, Gísl. 41, Þorst. Síðu H. 185.

draum-maðr, m. a man who appears to another in a dream, Fms. ii. 230, viii. 107: a dreamer, Stj. 193. Gen. xxxvii. 19.

draum-örar, f. pl. (now m. pl.), dream-phantasies, Fas. iii. 79.

DRAUMR, m. [A. S. dream; Hel. dróm; Engl. dream; Swed. Dan. dröm; Germ. traum; Matth. i. and ii, and by a singular mishap Matth. xxvii. 19, are lost in Ulf., so that we are unable to say how he rendered the Gr. ὄναρ—the A. S. uses dream only in the sense of joy, music, and dreamer—a harper, musician, and expresses draumr, Engl. dream, by sveofnas,—even the Ormul. has dræm = a sound; so that the Engl. dream seems to have got its present sense from the Scand. On the other hand, the Scand. have draum in the proper sense in their earliest poems of the heathen age, ballad draumar, Vtkv. i; Hvat er þat drauma, Em. i; it is used so by Bragi Gamli (9th century), Edda 78 (in a verse); cp. draum-þing, Hkv. 2. 48, whilst the A. S. sense of song is entirely strange to Icel.: it is true that svefnar (pl.) now and then occurs in old poets = Lat. somnium, but this may be either from A. S. influence or only as a poetical synonyme. Which of the two senses is the primitive and which the metaph. ?]—a dream. Many old sayings refer to draumr,—vakandi d., a day dream, waking dream, like the Gr. ὄναρ; von er vakandi draumr, hope is a waking dream, or von er vakanda manns d.; ekki er mark at draumum, dreams are not worth noticing, Sturl. ii. 217; opt er ljótr d. fyrir litlu, Bs. ii. 225. Icel. say, marka drauma, to believe in dreams, Sturl. ii. 131; segja e-m draum, to tell one's dream to another, Nj. 35; ráða draum, to read (interpret) a dream, Fms. iv. 381, x. 270, xi. 3; draumr rætisk, the dream proves true, or (rarely) draum (acc.) ræsir, id., Bret.; vakna við vándan (eigi góðan) draum, to wake from a bad dream, of a sudden, violent awakening, Fms. iii. 125, ix. 339, Stj. 394. Judg. viii. 21, 22; vakna af draumi, to waken from a dream; dreyma draum, to dream a dream; láta e-n njóta draums, to let one enjoy his dream, not wake him: gen. draums is used adverb. in the phrase, e-m er draums, one is benumbed, dreamy; stóð hann upp ok fylgði englinum, ok hugði sér draums vera, Post. 656 C; draums kved ek þér vera, Hkv. Hjörv. 19; þótti honum sjálfum sem draums hefði honum verit, O. H. L. 81; hence comes the mod. e-m er drums, of stupid insensibility. Passages referring to dreams—Hkr. Hálf. S. ch. 7, Am. 14. 25, Edda 36, 1b. ch. 4, Nj. ch. 134, Ld. ch. 33, Gunnl. S. ch. 2, 13, Harð. S. ch. 6, Lv. ch. 21 (very interesting), Gísl. ch. 13, 24 sqq., Glúm. ch. 9, 21, Þorst. Síðu H., Vápn. 21, Bjarn. 49, Fbr. ch. 16, 37, Þorl. S. ch. 7, Sturl. i. 200, 225, ii. 9, 99, 190, 206-216, iii. 251-254, 272, Rafús S. ch. 7, 14, Laur. S. ch. 2, 65, Svrr. S. ch. 1, 2, 5, 42, Fms. vi. 199, 225, 312, 403, 404, vii. 162, Jónsv. S. ch. 2, etc. etc. compds: drauma-maðr, m. a great dreamer, Gísl. 41. drauma-ráðning, f. the reading of dreams, Anal. 177. drauma-skrimsl, n. a dream monster, phantasm, Fas. ii. 414. drauma-vetr, m., Gísl. 63.

draum-skrök, n. a dream phantasm, Ld. 122.

draum-spakr, adj. skilled in interpreting dreams, Fms. vi. 361.

draum-speki, f. skill in interpreting dreams, Fms. iv. 30.

draum-spekingr, m. a skilful interpreter of dreams, Stj. 491. I Sam. xxviii. 3.

draum-stoli, adj. (cp. vit-stola), a 'dream-stolen' man, i. e. one who never dreams,—the ancients thought this a disease; þat er ekki mauns eðli at hann dreymi aldri, Fms. vi. 199, cp. also Hkr. i. 71.

draum-þing, n. dream-meeting, poet. sleep, Hkv. 2. 49.

DRÁK, u, f. (draka, u, f., Thom. l. c., mod. rák, f.), a streak; lá eptir ein blóð-drák í léreptinu, . . . fagra heilsu barnsins ok blóð-drákina, Bs. ii. 170; hafði hann þá blóðrás merkiligasta, at ein draka (drák) gékk af hægra veg hanns kinnis í skakk um þvert andlitid á vinstri kinninni, ok með því sama marki vitradist hann síðan mörgum mönnum, Thom. 356; ein raub blóðdrög, MS. Holm. no. 17 (Fr.), vide drög; rák is at present a very freq. word in Icel., but is hardly found in old writers; the identity of these two words cannot be doubted.

dráp, n. [drepa], slaughter, Eg. 222, Fms. v. 235, etc.; mann-dráp, man-slaughter, bomicide.

DRÁPA, u, f. a heroic, laudatory poem; this word is probably derived from drepa, to strike, i. e. to strike the chords of an instrument, vide drepa A. I., as poems were at early times accompanied by instrumental music: the drápas were usually composed in the so-called 'dróttkvætt' metre, q. v., and were much in fashion from the 10th to the 12th or even to the 13th century, but esp. flourished at the end of the 10th and during the 11th; the earliest poems of this kind on record are of the end of the 9th century: even poems in honour of gods, Christ, the holy cross, saints, etc. are called drápur if composed in the proper metre; but most of them are in honour of kings, earls, princes, or eminent men, vide Skáldatal. A drápa usually consisted of three parts, upp-haf introduction, stef or stefjámál the burden or middle part interpolated with artificial burdens, whence the name stefja-drápa, and lastly slæmr or peroration; according to the length, a drápa is tvítug or a poet twenty stanzas, sextug or sixty stanzas, and so on; it is called erfi- if in praise of a deceased man, mansöngs-drápa (Germ. minne- addressed to a lady-love, etc.; as to metre, we have tog-drápa, hryr drápa, etc.; drápa is sometimes distinguished from flokkir, a less literary and shorter poem without burdens, Fms. vi. 391; hví ortir þú um konunginn, eðr þótti þér hann ekki drápunnar verðr, Ísl. ii. 237 the classical passage Knytl. S. ch. 19. Passages in the Sagas referring to the delivery of these poems are very numerous, e. g. Gunnl. S. ch. Eg. ch. 62, 63 (Höfuð-lausn), 80 (Sonatorek and Arinbjarnar-d.), 81 (drápa), Ld. ch. 29 (Hús-drápa), Hallfr. S. ch. 6, 11, Bjarn. 6, 39, iii. 65, v. 173-175, Knytl. S. l. c., O. H. L. ch. 60, 61, Har. S. (Fms. vi.) ch. 24, 66, 110 (the interesting story of Stuf the Bó Skáldat. 252, 268, Fb. iii. 241, 242, Hkr. i. 185, 186; the last on r is Sturl. iii. 303-306, referring to A. D. 1263, cp. also Sturl. ii. 56; of these poems derive their name from the king or person in v honour they were composed, e. g. Ólafsd-, Knúts-d. (king Ca Eiriks-d., etc., vide Fms. xii. s. v. kvæði, or Jónsvíkinga-d., Íslen- d., the name of a laudatory poem addressed to the Icelandic people referring to other subjects, as Vell-ekla (want of gold), Hafgerðin Landn. 106, or Kross-d., Róða-d. (the Holy Rood), etc. Mythical care, e. g. Ragnars-d., Haustlöng, Hús-d. compds: drápu-mál lausnit for a d., viz. a love song (mansöngs-d.), which songs were f den, F. 87. drápu-stúfr, m. a nickname for a poetaster, Landn. 1 dráp-gjarn, adj. blood-thirsty, Sks. 89.

dráp-veðr, n. a furious, destructive gale, Lv. 59.

DRÆTTIR, m., gen. ar, dat. drættir, pl. drættir, acc. dráttu and tti [draga, cp. Engl. draught]:—pulling, Jm. i: metaph. hesitation, F 11: a draught, of fishing (fiski-dráttir), but esp. of a drag-net, Luke DREGG, f., gen. sning, and nom. pl. dreggjarr, dregs, lees; þeg og skulu dreggjarrar af súpa, Ps. lxxv. 8, Fas. ii. 26: metaph., N. G. L. i. dregill, m., dimiut., dat. dregli, a ribbon, Nj. 214, Hkr. i. 320, 20, O. H. L. 65, H. E. ii. 113; dregla-lið = dreglat lið, soldiers' decorations with ribbons, Fb. ii. 337,—a reference to the custom of neophytes baptism wearing a white ribbon round their heads.

dregla, ad. to lace, furnish with a ribbon, Sturl. iii. 218.

dreif, f. scattering; á dreif, id.; á víð ok dreif, scattered at Grönd. 166. 2. a chain; haukr bundinn í gull-dreifum, and þ iun komst hvergi þviat dreifarnar héldu honum, E. (Fr.)

DREIFA, ð, [Ulf. draibjan; v. drifa], to scatter, disperse, with dreifðu þér þá öllu líðinu, Nj. 207, Hkr. i. 250; er þú dreifð mjök frá þér fjölmenni því er . . . Fms. viii. 182: metaph. to drive hug e-s, Hom. 38: with the notion of violence, to scatter, Post. 6 14: to strew, taft dukt ok dreif á sárit, Próver 471: to sprinkle, d. Fms. i. 262, Ísl. ii. 403, Barl. 185: adding acc. of the person, e. blóði, to bedabble with blood, Am. 19; ok dreifir þá með blóðim 78.

β. with acc. to disperse, dissolve; dreifdum vér Guðs óvini 655 xxxii; vóru dreifð öll beim hans, 623. 33 (very rarely).

reflex. to be spread out, Eg. 530; of the branches of a tree, Edda 10 dreifask (gramm.), words are derived from Skálda 205.

dreifing, f. scattering, diffusing, Stj. 244, H. E. i. 500.

dreift, n. adj. 'adrift,' scattered, in the phrase, fara d., of troc march in loose order, Fms. i. 71, v. 56; dreifara, viii. 213.

dreita, tt, [dríta], in the phrase, d. e-n inni, to lock one up so tha forced to do his business within doors (a disgrace), Sturl. i. 198, Ld. 20

DREKI, a, m. [from the Gr. δράκων; Lat. draco; A. S. draca; m. drache; Engl. dragon; Swed. drake; Dan. drage]:—a dragon, A 656 A, Gullþ. ch. 4; this word, which undoubtedly is of f origin, is however very old; it occurs in Vsp. 65 (there is no rea suspect the genuineness of this verse); it is most freq. used by po the 10th and 11th centuries, and is especially used of ships of war ing a dragon's head as beaks, Fms. ii. 179, 182, 217, 303, iv. 354, v. 314, 360, vii. 51, 109, 248, x. 36, 77, 204-206, xi. 45, 375, the constellation Scorpion, Kb. 408.

2. naut. a small a compds: dreka-hamr, m. the slough of a dragon, Fas. ii. 378. d. höfuð, n. a dragon's head as a ship's beak, Eg. 42, Hkr. iii. 94. d. líki, n. the shape of a dragon, Niðrst. i. dreka-merki, n. the a of a dragon, Karl. 351; the constellation Scorpio is also called Spörð-merki. The language distinguishes between flug-dreki, the flying a of the tales, and spörð-dreki, a tailed dragon, i. e. a scorpion.

drekka, u, f. drink, beverage, Edda 48: a banquet, N. G. L. i. 9 13; cp. Ægis-drekka, the banquet at Ægir, Edda.

DREKKA, pret. drakk, pl. drukku; sup. drukkitt; pres. drekk subj. drykki; [Ulf. drigan; A. S. drinkan; Engl. drink; O. G. trinkan; M. H. G. trinken; Dan. drikke; Swed. dricka]:—to drin beverage or feast in acc.; d. mjöd, Hm. 18; mungát, öl, Fms. vii. Hm. 82; d. full, minni (a toast), Eg. 552, Fms. vi. 442; d. h. drain, drink off a born, a cup, Hkr. i. 35; síðan tók Kolskeggr eina af miði fulla ok drakk, Nj. 43; d. drykk, to drink a draught xi. 233; eptir þat tók Þórir kalkann ok drakk af tvá drykki, Gu. 7 þú skalt d. af tvá drykki, id.; d. brjóst (acc.), to suck (v. brjóst-dr

Mar. 656 A. 23, cp. Gpl. 504. β. to bold a feast, the feast in acc.; d. Jól, Fms. vi. 100, Fagrsk. 4 (in the poem of Hornklofi); d. veizlu, Nj. 11; d. brullaup, Fms. xi. 88; d. erfi, Nj. 167. γ. denoting the mode of drinking; d. ein-meningu, to drink one to one, Eg. 551; d. tví-meningu, to drink two to two, id.; d. fast, to drink hard, Eb. 184; d. úmælt, to drink without measure (cp. múl-drykkja), Fms. iii. 18; d. til e-s, to drink to a person, Eg. 552, Sturl. iii. 305, Bs. i. 848, 798; d. á e-n, id., Fms. iv. 333, vi. 442 (cp. ú-drykkja); d. e-n af stokki, to drink one under the table, iv. 167; d. frá sér vit, to drink one's wits away, ix. 339, Hm. 11; the allit. phrase, d. ok dæma, to drink and chatter, Rm. 29; adding the prepp. af, ór, to drink off a cup; d. af dýra hornum, Fms. vi. 442, Eg. 206, 207; absol. to drink, bold a feast, Eg. 43. δ. impers. (vide á-drykkir) of a ship, to ship a sea, metaph., Al. 139. ε. recipr., drekkask á, to drink to one another, Hkr. ii. 249, N. G. L. i. 211, Js. 78. 2. part. pass. drukkinn, drunken, tipsy, Eb. 154, Fms. i. 59, Eg. 52.

drekk-hlaðinn, part. 'drencb-loaden,' a ship laden till she sinks. drekkja, t and ð, [Ulf. dragkjan; Engl. drench], to drown, with dat., Edda (pref.) 144, Fms. iii. 28, Fas. ii. 35; metaph. to swamp, Fms. x. 395; with acc., Hom. 154 (rarely): reflex. to be submerged, Fms. xi. 66. drembi-liga, adv. (-ligr, adj.), haughtily, Fms. vi. 155, x. 237, Nj. 78, Fas. i. 39; cp. rembiligr.

drengi-liga, adv. brave, bravely, Korm. 238, Nj. 180, 258, Ld. 206. drengi-ligr, adj. brave, valiant, Ld. 272, Fms. vii. 105, xi. 57; generous, vi. 96, Nj. 73, Boll. 348.

drengja, d. a naut, term, to bind fast, haul taut to a pole (drengir); taka akkeri ok d. við ása, Fms. vii. 54; d. með köðlum, 82.

dreng-leysi, n. want of generosity, unmanliness, Stj. 396.

dreng-lundaðr and -lyndr, adj. noble-minded, Hkr. i. 327, Nj. 30, Fms. ii. 220; hógværr ok drenglyndr, gentle-minded and high-minded, Nj. 30 (of Njal).

dreng-maðr, m. a bachelor, opp. to bóndi, N. G. L. i. 21, 98: a stout doughty man, Lex. Poët.

dreng-mannliga, adv. (-ligr, adj.), bravely, doughtily, Nj. 78, v. l. dreng-menska, u, f. boldness, Fas. i. 404.

DRENGR, m., pl. ir, gen. drengs, pl. drengir, on Runic stones drengjar; this is a most curious word, and exclusively Scandinavian; it occurs in the A. S. poem Byrnios, but is there undoubtedly borrowed from the Danes, as this poem is not very old. 1. the earliest form was probably drangr, q. v., a rock or pillar, which sense still remains in Edda (Gl.) and in the compd ás-drengr, cp. Ivar Aasen; it also remains in the verb drengja. 2. it then metaphorically came to denote a young unmarried man, a bachelor, A. S. bagestald, N. H. G. bagestolz; drengir heita ungrir menn ok búlausir, Edda 107; ungr d., a youth, 623, 22, Post. 656 C. 32, Edda 35; drengir, a youth, Stj. 409; hveirrar ættar ertú d., 465; (hence the mod. Dan. sense of a boy); far-d., a sailor.

3. hence came the usual sense, a bold, valiant, worthy man, and in this sense it is most freq. in all periods of the language. Drengir is a standing word in the Swed. and Dan. Runic monuments, góðr drengr, drengir harða góðr, denoting a good, brave, gallant man, a bold and gentle heart; lagði þú hverfr fram sitt skip sem d. var ok skap hafði til, Fms. vi. 315; drengir heita vaskir menn ok batnandi, Edda 107; hraustr d., a gallant d., Ld. 50; d. fullr, a bluff, outspoken man, Ísl. ii. 363; göfuligr d., Bær. 12; d. góðr, noble-minded; auðigr at fé ok d. góðr, Fms. vi. 356; hann var einn beztir d. ok hófsmádr um allt, Ld. 100; drengir góðr ok örigrir í öllu, Nj. 30; ekki þyki mér þú sterkr, en drengir ertú góðr, thou art not strong, but thou art a good fellow, Lv. 109; drengs dáð, a derring do, the deed of a drengir, Fbr. 90 (in a verse); also used of a lady, kvæmskórungir mikill ok d. góðr ok nokkurt skaphörð, Nj. 30 (of Bergthóra); allra kvænna grimmost ok skaphörðust ok (bat) d. góðr þar sem vel skyldi vera, 147 (of Hildi-guanna) the phrases, lítill d., a small dreng, or, d. at verri, denoting a disgraced man, Nj. 68; at kalla þik ekki at verri dreng, to call thee a dreng none the less for that, Ld. 42; drengir en eigi dáðleysingar, 'drengrs' and no lubbers, Sturl. iii. 135; drengir and niðingir are opposed, N. G. L. ii. 420; at Hallgrödr yrði þeim mestr drengir, greatest helper, prop. Nj. 76; at þú mættir drenginn af verða sem beztir, that thou couldst get the greatest credit from it, Gisl. 48: the phrase, hafa drengir í serk, to have a man (i. e. a stout, bold heart) in one's serk, in one's breast, Fms. ix. 381; in addressing, góðr d., my dear fellow, Eg. 407; cp. 'et quod ipsi in posterum vocarentur Drengrs,' Du Cange (in a letter of William the Conqueror).

comps: drengja-móðir, f. a mother of heroes, a cognom., Hdl. 18. drengja-val, n. chosen, gallant men, Fas. i. 73, 304. drengs-aðal, n. the nature of a d., Km. 23. drengs-bót, f. what makes a man the better d., Fms. ii. 276, vi. 107, Karl. 120. drengs-bragð, n. the deed of a d., brave deed, Sturl. ii. 84.

dreng-skapr, m., gen. ar, courage, high-mindedness; the phrase, falla með drengskap, to fall sword in hand, Fms. ii. 42; vit ok d., xi. 112; deyjja með drengskap, opp. to lífa með skómum, v. 136; þínur drengskap (manliness) skal ek víð bregða, Nj. 13; allit., dáð ok d.; með lítum drengskap, cowardly, Fms. viii. 29; má þat verða til drengskapar, Ísl. ii. 366; drengskapar-raun, trial of d., Sturl. ii. 52.

drep, n. [A. S. drepe; Germ. treff], a smart, blow; the legal bearing of this word is defined Grág. Vsl. ch. 10-13; wound and 'drep' are distinguished—þat ero sár er þar blæðir sem á kom, en drep ef annars-staðar blæðir, ch. 51, cp. N. G. L. i. 69, 164, Eb. ch. 23; trail, vide dögg. 2. slaying, killing, = dráup, Grág. Vsl. ch. 111. 3. plague, pest, = drep-sótt, Stj. 546, Bret. 46, Sks. 731 B: a malignant disease, N. G. L. i. 145; metaph., Al. 86. 4. medic. mortification, gangrene, Fms. iii. 184, ix. 36, Bs. i. 346, Fcl. ix. 207.

DREPA, pret. drap, 2nd pers. drapt, mod. drapst, pl. drápu; pret. subj. dræpi; part. dreptir; pres. drep; with the suff. neg. pret. drap-a, Orkn.: [A. S. drepan; Dan. drabe; Swed. dräpa; O. H. G. trefan; mod. Germ. treffen, whence the mod. Dan. treffe, in the sense to hit; Ulf. uses slaban and staujan, but never dripan; in Engl. the word is lost.]

A. WITH ACC., OR ABSOL. högg (a blow) or the like being understood, to strike, beat: I. act. of music, to strike the chords, (cp. phrases such as, slá danz, to strike up for a dance; slagr is battle and poem, Trolla-slagr and Gýgjar-slagr are names of poems); hann tók hörpu sína ok drap strengi (struck the strings) til slags, Stj. 458 (hence drápa, a song); d. e-n vendi, to strike with a rod, Skm. 26; to knock, d. á dyrr, or d. högg á dyrr, to knock at a door, Nj. 150; síðan gengu þau heim bæði ok drápu á dyrr, 153; drápu þar á dyrr, Sturl. iii. 154; metaph., d. á e-t, to touch slightly on a matter; d. botu ör keraldí, to knock the bottom out of a jar, Fms. xi. 34; d. járn, to beat iron (a blacksmith's term) with a sledge-hammer, Grett. 129, cp. drep-sleggia. 2. esp. with the sense of violence, to knock, strike; áfallit hafði drept hann inn í báttum, Bs. i. 422; at eigi drepir þú mik í djúp, that thou knockest me not into the deep, Post. 656 B. 9; herða klett drep ek þér hálsi af, Ls. 57. β. as a law term, to smite, strike; ef maðr drepr (smites) mann, ok varðar þat skóggang, Grág. ii. 116; eigu menn eigi at standa fyrir þeim manni er dreptir hefir annan, id.; ef maðr drepr mann svá at þeim brotna, 14; nú vænist sá maðr því er drap, at . . . 15; þat er drep ef þein brotna, ok verðr sá úæll til dómis er dreptir hefir, 16; nú vænist hinn þvi, at hann hafir drept hann, 19. γ. the phrases, d. e-n til heljar, Grág. ii. 161, or d. til dauðs, to smite to death; Jósuá drap til dauða alla þjóð Anakim, Stj. 456; d. í hel, id., Hbl. 27; hence 3. metaph. or ellipt. to kill, put to death, cp. Lat. caedere, Engl. smite; eigi er manni skylt at d. skógarmann, þótt . . . Grág. ii. 162; skulu vér nú fara at honum ok d. hann, Nj. 205; þar varð illa með þeim þvi at Ásgrimir drap Gaut, 39; til þess at d. Grim, Eg. 114; tóku þeir af eignum jarla konungs en drápu sumu, Fms. i. 6; er dreptir hafði fóstra hans . . . eigi hefir at d. svá fríðan svein . . . d. skyldi hverr manni er hann údæmðan vá, 80; konung drápuum fyrstan, Am. 97; drap hann (smote with the hammer) hina öldnu jötna systur, þkv. 32; d. mátti Freyr hann með hendi sinni, Edda 23. β. in a game (of chess), to take a piece; þá drap jarl af honum riddara, Fms. iv. 366; tafsins er hann hafði drept, vi. 29; Hvítserkr hélt töfl einni er hann hafði drept, Fas. i. 285. γ. adding prepp. af, niðr, to slaughter, kill off; þótt hirdmenn þínir sé drepir niðr sem svín, Fms. vii. 243; d. af, to slaughter (cattle); yxni fimm, ok d. af, Ísl. ii. 330; láttu mik d. af þenna lýð, Post. 656 B. 9. 4. metaph. phrases; d. e-m skúta, to taunt, charge one with; áfelli þat er konungur drap oss skúta um, Fms. iv. 310; hjarta drepr stall, the heart knocks as it were against a block of stone from fear, Hkr. ii. 360, Orkn., Fbr. 36 (hence stall-drept hjarta, a 'block-beating' faint heart); d. upp eld, to strike fire, Fms. iv. 338; d. sik ór dróma, to throw off the fetter, Edda 19; d. e-t undir sik, to knock or drag down, skaltú standa hjá er sjandi sá drepr mik undir sik, Grett. 126, 101 A: d. slóð, to make a slot or sleuth (trail); d. kyrtlamir slóðina, the cloaks trailed along the ground so as to leave a track, Gisl. 154; to trail or make a track of droves or deer, Lex. Poët.: d. e-t út, to divulge a thing (in a bad sense), Fms. vi. 208; d. yfir e-t, to bide, suppress, drap hann brátt yfir (he soon mastered) harm sinn, Bs. i. 140 (hence yfir-drep, hypocrisy, i. e. cloaking).

II. reflex., dreppak, to perish, die, esp. of beasts; fé hans drapsk aldrei af megrð ok drephriðum, Eb. 150; drapsk allt hans fólk, Fms. v. 250. 2. recipr. to put one another to death; þá dreppask bræðr fyrir ágirni sakar, Edda 40; nú dreppask menn (smite one another), er sérask eðr vegask, Grág. ii. 92; ef menn d. um naetr, Fms. vii. 206; er sjálfir bárusk vápn á ok drápusk, viii. 53; en er bændr fundu at þeir drápusk sjálfir, 68; dreppask niðr á leið fram, Ld. 238; dreppask menn fyrir, to kill one another's men, Fms. vii. 177; góðisk af því sjandskapr með þeim Steinólfi svá at þeir drápusk þar (menn?) fyrir, Gullþ. 14.

III. impers., dreple honum aldregi ský (acc.) í augu, his eyes never get clouded, of the eagle flying in the face of the sun, Hom. 47; ofrkappit (acc.) drepr fyrir þeim (their big spirits break down) þegar hamingjan brestr, Fms. vi. 155; drap þó heldr í fyrir honum, be rather grew worse, i. e. his eyes grew weaker, Bjarn. 59; nú drepr ór hljóð (acc.) fyrst ór konunginum, the king became silent at once, Fms. xi. 115; stall drepr ór hjarta e-s, Fbr. 36 (vide above, I. 4); ofan drap flaugina (acc.), the flaug was knocked down, Bs. i. 422; regn drepr í gögnum e-t, the rain beats through the thatch or cover, Fagrsk. 123 (in a verse). β. in mod. usage, drepa is even used in the sense to drip (= drjúpa), e. g. þak, hús drepr, the thatch, house lets water through.

B. WITH DAT.: I. denoting gentle movement; in many cases the dat. seems to be only instrumental:

1. of the limbs; hendi drap á kampa, be put his hand to his beard, Hðm. 21; d. fæti (fótum), to stumble, prop. to strike with the foot, Nj. 112, Fas. ii. 558, Bs. i. 742, Hom. 110, Greit. 120; d. fæti í e-t, to stumble against, 103; d. fæti við e-t, id., Fas. ii. 558; d. höfði, to droop, nod with the head; drap í gras höfði, (the horse) drooped with the head, let it fall, Gkv. 2. 5; d. niðr höfði, id., Nj. 32; Egill sat svá opt, at hann drap höfðinu niðr í feld sinn (from sorrow), Eg. 322, O. H. L. 45 (for shame); d. fingri í munn sér, to put the finger into the mouth, Edda 74; fingri drap í munninn sinn (of a child), the words of a ditty; d. hendi til e-s, or við e-m, to give one a slap with the hand (inst. dat.), Nj. 27; hence metaph., d. hendi við e-u, to wave away with the hand, to refuse a kind offer, Bs. i. 636; d. hendi við boðnu gulli, Al. 75: the phrase, d. hendi við sóma sínum, cp. Al. 162.

2. to tuck up the sleeves or skirts of a garment; d. skautum (upp), Fms. vii. 297; hann hafði dreipit upp skautunum, Lv. 85; hann hafði dreipit upp fyrir blöðunum undir beltíð, Eb. 226; Sigurðr drap blöðunum undir beltí sér, Orkn. 474; d. hári undir beltí sér, to tuck the hair under the belt (of a lady), hárit tók ofan á bringuna ok drap hón (viz. því) undir beltí sér, Nj. 24; hafði hár svá níkít, at hann drap undir beltí sér, 272.

III. to dip; d. skeggi í Breiðafjörð niðr, to dip the beard in the Breiðafjörð, i. e. to be drowned, Ld. 316; d. hendi, or fingri í vatni, to dip the hand, finger into water (vide above); d. barni í vatni, to dip a baby into water, i. e. to baptize, K. þ. K. 10: the phrase, d. feskri í kál, to dip bacon into kale broth, Fas. iii. 381; nú taka þeir hafströkur tver, ok d. þeim í sýrukerin, Gisl. 7.

β. the phrase, d. e-u, of wax, lime, butter, or the like, to daub, plaster, fill up with; þú skalt taka vax ok d. því í eyru fórnunna þinna, Od. xii. 77; síðan drap eg því í eyru á öllum skipverjum, 177; vaxið er eg hafði drepið í eyru þeim, 200; d. smjörri í láti, to fill a box with butter.

γ. metaph. phrases; d. dul á e-t, to throw a veil over, Hkr. ii. 140, in mod. usage, draga dulur á e-t: the phrase, d. í skörðin (the tongue understood), to talk indistinctly, from loss of teeth; d. orði, dómi á e-t, to talk, reason, judge of a thing, Fms. ix. 500; d. huldú á, to hide, cloak, keep secret, xi. 106; d. e-u á dreif, prop. to 'throw adrift, 'throw aside, i. e. think little of a thing, þessu var á dreif dreipit, it was busbed up, Orkn. 248; áðr hafði níjúk verið á dreif dreipit um mál Bjarnar (there had been much mystery about Björn), hvárt hann var lífs eðr eigi, sagði annarr þat logit, en annarr sagði satt, i. e. no one knew anything for certain, Bjarn. 20; en eigi varð vísan á dreif dreipin (the song was not thrown aside or kept secret) ok kom til eynna Birni, 32; drápu öllu á dreif um þessa fyrirætlan, busbed it all up, Eg. 49; d. í egg e-u, prop. to bate the edge of a thing, to turn a deaf ear to, Orkn. 188, metaphor from blunting the edge of a weapon.

δ. d. e-u niðr, to suppress a thing (unjustly); d. niðr konungs rétti, N. G. L. i. 73; d. niðr sæmd e-s, to pull down a person's reputation, Boll. 346; d. niðr lítu orði, to keep down a bad report, suppress it, Nj. 21; d. niðr máli, to quash a lawsuit, 33; dreipit svá niðr herörinni, Fins. iv. 207.

ε. d. glaumi, gleði, teiti e-s, to spoil one's joy, Lex. Poët.; d. kosti e-s, to destroy one's happiness, Am. 69; impers., drap þá brátt kosti, the cheer was soon gone, Rm. 98.

drephrið, f. a killing snow storm, Eb. 150.

dreppill, m., in kuatt-dreppill, a bat, in the game of cricket.

drepp-ráð, n. pl. a law term (cp. áljóts-ráð, sár-ráð, bana-ráð, fjör-ráð), an intended affray or assault, Grág. ii. 116, 117, Vsl. ch. 75.

drepp-samligr, adj. deadly, destructive, Stj. 71.

drepp-sleggja, u, f. a sledge-hammer, Eg. 272.

drepp-sótt, f. a plague, pest, Ver. 21, Rb. 478.

drepp-sóttir, part. plague-stricken, Bs. ii. 33.

drettingr, m. [dratta], a loiterer, a cognom., Sturl. i. 89.

DREYMA, d and ð, poet. obsol. pret. reflex. dreymdunk; [draumr; A. S. dryman = psallere; Hel. drömian = jubilar; Eng. dream; Germ. träumen; Dan. drømme; Swed. drömma] :—to dream; in Icel. impers. and with a double acc., that of the dreamer and the dream or person appearing; thus, mik dreymdi draum, mik dreymdi mann, etc.; þat dreymdi mik, Nj. 95; hvat hefir þik dreymt, id.; hinn veg d. mik þó, 53; hann kvað sík dreymt hafa Hákon jarl (acc.), 122; dreymt hefir mik mart í vetr, Ld. 126; enn dreymdi hann enu þriðja draum, Fms. xi. 8; or poet., draum dreymdunk = draum dreymdi mik, I dreamt a dream, Bjarn. 49; or with 'at' with subj., hann (acc.) dreymdi þat, at hann væri at lögbergi, lb. ch. 4, cp. 385; konung dreymdi aldri, the king never had a dream, Hkr. i. 171; the phrase, at dreyma fyrir daglátunum, esp. of light merry dreams at daybreak, which people in Icel. consider a sign of good health, Fél. ix.

β. pers., the appearance in nom., (rare), sá maðr (nom.) dreymir mik jafnan, Fs. 98; dreymdi Svein þórr heldr ófyrnigligr, Fms. ii. 162; þat er fyrir eldi er járn (nom. pl.) dreyma, Gkv. 2. 38; um vetrinn vóru dreymdir draumar margir, Bs. i. 497; vide draumr.

DREYPA, t and ð, [drjúpa, draup], to drop, put a drop of fluid, wine, medicine, etc., into the mouth of one sick, fainting, and the like, the fluid in dat.; d. e-u á e-t, or í munn em; hann dreypir vígðu vatni í munn henni, Bs. i. 199; at hann dreypi vatni á tungu mína, Greg. 23. Luke xvi. 24; d. vini á e-n (of fainting), Fas. iii. 508, 571; hann dreypiti á konuna þar til at hon raknaði við, ii. 151: to dip, at hann dreypi í vatn enum minsta fingri sínum, Greg. 22. Luke xvi. 24, w. the N. T. of 1540 sqq. has, at hann 'dreipi' hinu fremsta síns fingri í vatni, dreyra, ð, to bleed, ooze (of blood from a slight wound), always a. or neut.; þótti mér dreyra ór hlutunum, Ld. 126; ok dreyrði ór í unum, Fb. i. 67; eigi dreyrði ór hvífinum, Fms. ii. 272; hann rélfófa sér krossmark svá at dreyrði, so that blood flowed, v. 185; dreyrt blóð, new-bleed blood, Þiðr. 199.

dreyr-blandinn, part. bleut, mixed with blood, Lex. Poët.

dreyr-fáðr (-fár), part. blood-stained, Hkv. Hjörv. 9, Lex. Poët.

dreyr-gjarn, adj. blood-thirsty, dreary, Al. 31.

DREYRI and drøri, a, m. [as to the root, cp. Goth. drjúsan draus, = to drop, fall, a verb analogous to frjósa, fraus, and fróri; strong verb is lost in the Icel., only the weak dreyra is used; A. S. dreigore; O. H. G. trōr :—are A. S. drēbrig, Engl. dreary, from the root, in a metaph. sense?]:—blood, esp. gore, properly blood oozing out of the wound; vekja e-m dreyra, to bleed one, Fms. vii. 145; nú vökva þeir sér blóð, ok láta renna saman dreyra sinn, Gisl. 11; m. d., human blood, Fms. xi. 233; the phrase, rauðr sem dreymi, = dark red, red as blood, i. e. dark red, v. 127; rauðr d., Vsp. 33; allit. er etr hold mitt ok drekkir dreyra minn, 625. 195; dreyrinn dundi dreyrhold gushed, Pass. 23. 3; poet. phrases, dals d., jarðar d., the blood of the dales, earth, rivers, Lex. Poët.; Kvásis d., the blood of K., poetry, la COMP. DREYRA-RUNNING, part. splattered with blood, Fms. vii. 89.

DREYRIG, dreyrigr (drøyrigr, Ýt. 5, 11), adj. [cp. Engl. dreary, C. traurig]:—bloody, gory; uncontr., dreyruga, Al. 41; dreyruga húfa, 64, 151; dreyruga benja, Bragi: contr., dreyrigan mæki, Ýt. 11; dr steinu, Sb. 58; dreyrgra darra, Jd. 9.

dreyr-rauðr, adj. blood-red, Eg. 113, Fms. vii. 145.

dreyr-stafir, m. pl. dreary, bloody runes, Sl. 40.

DREYSSA, að, [drussi], d. sik, to vaunt oneself foolishly, Pass. i. 1.

DRIF, n. [drifa], driven snow; hvítt sem d., Fms. iv. 372, v. l. foaming sea, sjór var hvít fyrir drifi, Bs. ii. 116. COMPS: d. a stormr, m., drifa-veðr, n. a strong storm.

drif-hvítr and drift-hvítr, adj. white as driven snow, Karl. naut., leggja til drifs, to lie adrift.

drift, dript, f. a snow-drift; þar var snjár í driptum, Sturl. hvítt sem drift, white as driven snow, Ó. H. 170.

DRIT, n. (mod. dritr, m.), [Engl. dirt, cp. dríta], dirt, esp. of fugla-d., dúfna-d., Stj. 620. 2 Kings vi. 25; síðan tekr hann fugla þiðr. 79, v. l.: local names, Drit-skær, Eb. ch. 4; Drit-vík, Bárð. nicknames, Drit-kinn, Gullþ.; Drit-ljóð, Fms. ix; Drit-loki, Sturl. i. DRIFA, pret. dreif, pl. driuf; pres. driuf; pret. subj. driif; driifinn: [Ulf. dreiban = ἐκβάλλειν; A. S. drifan; Engl. drive; O. triban; mod. Germ. treiben; Swed. drifva; Dan. drive, all in a trans. sense = to drive.] I. to drive like spray, either pers. or in.

with dat. or even neut.; þá kemr áfall mikit . . . ok dreif yfir búinn Bs. i. 422; laudri dreif á lypting útan, the spray drove over the top Fms. vi. (in a verse); hence metaph. phrases, láta yfir d., to let before wind and wave, Ísl. ii. 461; or even reflex., láta yfir drifask, to let drive or drift away, let go, give in; rán ok útleigðir manna er eigi létu driufask, Fb. i. 70; þat dugir á enga leið, at láti yfir drifask, Bs. ii. 51; ok er þó þat ráð, at láta eigi fyrir drifask, Karl. 386, 452: allit. phrase, drifa á dagana, e. g. mart hefir driift á dagana many things (splashes) have bappened; driifinn döggu, besprent við Vtkv. 5: naut., róa drifanda, to pull so that the spray splashes about bard, Fms. viii. 263, 431: to drift, of a snow storm or the like, tr drifandum kvistum, a tree with the branches full of snow, Sks. 49; ve var drifanda, it snowed, Sturl. iii. 50, Ó. H. 85; þegar dreif í Löginn krímu there fell soft snow in the Lake, i. e. it began to sleet, Fms. v. 19; þá driift snær ór öllum áttum, Edda 40: metaph. of missiles, to sbo at flakes of snow, borgarmenn láta þegar d. skot á þá, Al. 11; láta vápu á þá, Fb. i. 135.

II. neut. to crowd, throng; þá driift mannþjóldi mikill til strandar, a great crowd rushed down to the shore 76; tóku menn þá at d. brott frá hertoganum, the men began to desert away from the duke, Fms. ix. 531; dreif allt fólk á hans fund, all people rushed to see him, i. 21, iv. 105; d. á dyrr, to rush to the door 19.

III. to perform; eiga e-t at d., to have a thing to perform, Gpl. 15, 16; en í annan stað á ek at d. mikinn vanda, I am in a strait, Fms. i. 221; d. leik, to play, Fas. i. 37: the sense to d. expel, so common in all other Teut. dialects, hardly occurs in old v. and sounds foreign even now; the proverb, með illu skal illt út dr sig, to exert oneself, etc., (cant phrases.)

drifa, u, f. a fall of snow, sleet; fjúk ok d., Bs. i. 185; veðr va ok d., Fms. v. 341; skotvápn flugu svá þykkt sem d., i. 45; um gördi á drifu-él blautu, Orkn. 414; kom þá drifu-él mikit, ok myrkt, Fms. ix. 23.

dríli, n. a petty heap of peat or the like, hence metaph. dríldin petty; dríldni, f. pettiness.

DRÍTA, pret. dreit, dritu, drittinn, to dirty, cacare; hann sögð drita á alla þá er við hann áttu af hrópi sínu, Sturl. ii. 39; þar dritin, dirty, Ls. 56.

drjóli, a, m. a drone, (cant word.) drjóni, a, m. an ox, Edda (Gl.) II. [Swed. drönare], a drone. drjúg-deildir, part. substantial, Sturl. i. 166.
 drjúg-genginn, part. taking long to walk or pass, of a road, Lex. Poët.
 drjúg-látr, adj. wanton.
 drjúg-liga, drjúg-liga, adv. with an air of importance; láta d., Fms. ii. 145, Nj. 76.

drjúg-ligr, adj. substantial, solid, Sks. 382.
 drjúg-mæltr, adj. long-winded in speaking, Greg. 39; neut., Vígl. 24.
 DRJÚGR, adj., compar. drjúgari, superl. drjúgastr; in mod. use more freq. drýgri, drýgstr, solid, substantial; the phrase, verða drjúgari or drjúgastr, to get the better or best of it, to prove the better (of two champions); varð þórir þeirra drjúgari, Bárð. 170; þú, Kári, munt þeim öllum drjúgari verða, Ib., K. 2.; wilt outdo them all, Nj. 171; hvárir þar mundi drjúgari verða, Ld. 222; þótti þeim, sem hann myndi drjúgastr, Bárð. 170; hverr yðar drjúgastr (strongest) er höfðingjanna, Ísl. ii. 165, Grett. 151. β. the neut. drjúgt and drjúgum is used as adv. in great numbers, much; Kolskeggr vá drjúgt menn, Kolskegg slew men in numbers, Nj. 108; þaðan af nuntu d. spekjask, 677. 12; vegr Gunnarr drjúgum menn, Nj. 96; lá þá drjúgum í fyrir þeim, Hrafn. 27: almost, nearly, drjúgum allr, almost all, Fms. ix. 318; drjúgum allra manna virðing, Bret. 38; drjúgum hverr bóndi, Landn. (Mant.) 330; drjúgum dauðr af kulda, Fms. ix. 467; drjúgan (acc. masc.) as adv., id., Fb. i. 304, Karl. 246, 181 (Fr.): the proverb, þat er drjúgt sem drýpr, i. e. many drops make a flood; þar var drjúgt ríchna, a good many people, Bs. i. 536. 2. substantial, lasting, rich, ample, [Swed. dryg, Dan. drøj], in compds as, drjúg-virkir, vinnu-d., one who works slowly but surely; ráða-d., hamingju-d., etc. β. saving, blanda agnar við brauð, . . . til þess at þá sé drjúgari fæzlan en ádr, Sks. 321; til þess at rit verði minna, ok bókfleir drjúgara, i. e. to save parchment, Skálda 168; at jafndrjúg verði sagan ok Jóln, that the story shall last as long as Yule, Fms. vi. 355.

DRJÚPA, pret. draup, pl. drupu; subj. drypi; sup. dropit; pres. drýp; [Engl. drip; Germ. traufen; Dan. drøppe]:—to drip; blóð drýpr, Fms. x. 366; drupu þá ór blóðdropar, 625. 98; svá at bráðnaði ok draup, Edda 4: absol., þá sveittisk róðan helga, svá at draup á altarit ofan, Fms. viii. 247; þóróflr kvað d. smjör af hverju strá, Landn. 31. β. to let in rain, of houses or things not water-tight; öll hlaðan draup, Fms. ix. 234; ok tóku húsin at drjúpa, Gisl. 22.

drökr, m., one MS. wrongly drokr, [cp. Dan. drag, Engl. drudge], a drudge, Edda (Gl.)

drölla, að, [drjóli], Old Engl. to droil, i. e. loiter, (cant word.)
 dröpi, a, m. [A. S. dropa; Engl. drop; Swed. droppe; Germ. tropfen; Dan. draabe], a drop, Ld. 328, H. E. i. 488. compds: dropa-lauss, adj. water-tight, Gbl. 331. dropa-rúm, n. a dripping-place, from the eaves, Gbl. 433. dropa-tali, n., i dropa-tali, in drops, drop by drop.
 dros, f. [A. S. dræas; Ulf. drus = πρῶσις; Swed. drosse = a heap of corn; cp. also the Dan. drysse], dross, poet., in the compd ál-m-dros, the dross of the bow, the arrows, Lex. Poët.

drög, f. (drogi, a, m., Edda (Ub.) 277), = drák, Rb. 478, 480; sásk drög & himni björt sem tungl, Ann. 1334; blóð-drög, a streak of blood, Thom. (Fr.) 2. a jade.

drómi, a, m. [cp. Swed. drum = thrums], the fetter by which the Fenrir (Wolf) was fettered, Edda 19; used in the phrase, keyra í dróma, to tie 'neck and beels'; Drottinn í dróma keyrðr, Pass. 6. 10; keyrði hann saman í dróma, Úlf. 7. 134.

drómundur, m. a kind of ship of war (for. word), [Gr. δρῶμων; mid. Lat. dromon; O. H. G. drabemond], Orkn. 358 sqq., Fms. vii. 2: a nickname, Grett.

drós, f. [cp. It. druda = a sweetbearf], poet. a girl; drósir heita þær er kylrátar eru, Edda 108, Fas. iii. 618, Al. 70, 152.

DRÓTT, f. I. the sill or beam above a door, also a door-post (dyra-drótt). II. household, people, Vþm. 24, (inn-drótt, sal-drótt, Lex. Poët.); dyggvar dróttir, good, trusty people, Vsp. 63; dverga d., the dwarf-people, g; d. Írskarr þjóðar, the Irish people; Engla d., English persons, etc., Lex. Poët.; lí drótt, all people, Hkv. 2. 48; twenty people make a drótt, Edda 108. 2. esp. the king's body-guard; cp. Goth. ga-draubis, by which word Ulf. renders the Gr. στρατιώτης (drjúgan, pret. draub = στρατεύειν); A. S. drighit; the Scandinavian drótt thus answers to the comitatus of Tacitus, Germ. ch. 13, 14, in the Saga time called 'hírd'. Drótt is obsolete in prose, but occurs in Hkr. Yngl. S. ch. 20.—ádr voru þeir (viz. the kings) dróttnar kallaðir, en konur þeirra dróttningar, en drótt hírdsvéitin: poet., víg-drótt, her-d., fólk-d., hjálm-d., etc., warriors. III. a fem. pr. name, Yngl. S. ch. 20; cp. drós.

dróttá, að, d. e-u at e-m, to bring to one's door-post, i. e. impute to one.

dróttin-hollr, adj. faithful to one's master, Fms. vi. 401.

dróttin-lauss, adj. without a master, Fms. iii. 13.

dróttin-ligr, adj. lord-like, of the Lord, Bs. i. 171, Stj.; Drottinleg bæ, the Lord's Prayer, Mar., Hom. 26; d. dæmi, 656 A. 24.

dróttinn, mod. dróttinn, but in old poetry always rhymed with an o, e. g. flóttstyggr—dróttinn, Sighvat; dat. dróttini or drottui, pl. dróttnar or drottnar, etc.; [A. S. drighien; Hel. drubtin = dominus]:—the master of a 'drótt' or household, a lord, master; the proverb, dyrt er dróttins orð, e. g. strong is the master's word, Bs. i. 484, Al. 128, Ld. 212; þræll eða d., Hom. 29; Josep fékk svá mikla virðing af dróttini sínum, 625. 16, Grág. ii. 86; þrjú dróttna átti hann í þessi herleiðingu, Fms. x. 224; eigi er þrællinn æðri enn dróttinninn, Post. 656. 37, cp. John xv. 20; en þó eta hundar af molum þeim sem detta af borðum drottua þeirra, Matth. xv. 27; verit lýðugir yðrum líkamligum drottum, Ephes. vi. 5; in mod. usage this sense remains in prose in the compd lánar-dróttinn, q. v. β. old name for a king, Hkr. Yngl. S. ch. 20 (vide drótt).

γ. as a name of beaten priests; þat eru diar kallaðir eðr dróttnar, Hkr. Yngl. S. ch. 2. 2. the Lord, which also is the standing phrase in mod. usage, in the Bible, sermons, hymns, ever since the Reformation; lofaðr sé Drottinn, Nj. 165; af miskun Drottins, Mar. 656 A. 6; greiðit Dróttins gótur, 625. 90; Christr Drottinn, Grág. ii. 167; áin gráts var Dróttinn fæddr, Rb. 332; Drottinn sagði mínum Drottni, Matth. xxii. 44; elska skaltú Drottinn Guð þinn, 37; Dróttinn Guð Abrahams, Luke xx. 37, xxiv. 34; hefi eg eigi séð Dróttinn vorn Jesum Christum, eruð þér ekki mitt verk í Drottni? I Cor. ix. 1, 5, 14, x. 21, 22, 26, 28, 30, xi. 10, 19, 22, 25, 26, 28, 31, xii. 3, 5, etc. etc. compds: Drottins-dagr, m. the Lord's day, K. þ. K. 68, Rb. 112, 655 iii, Sturl. iii. 37, 159, 226, Nj. 165; Drottinsdaga hald, ballowing the Lord's day, Nj. 165; Dróttinsdags nótt, Saturday night, 194; Dróttinsdaga veidr, K. þ. K. 85. Drottins-kveld, u. Sunday evening, Fms. ix. 19. Drottins-myrgin, m. Sunday morning, Sturl. iii. 37. Drottins-nótt, f. Sunday night, Fms. vii. 187.

dróttin-svik, n. pl. treason towards a lord or master, Hkr. ii. 132, Sks. 571, Hom. 23 (Judas).

dróttin-svikari (-sviki), a, m. a traitor to his master, Nj. 260, K. Á. 60.

drótt-kvæðr, adj. (-kvæði, n.), in the heroic metre, the metre used in the drápas (q. v.) or poems which were recited before a king and the king's men (drótt), whence the name probably comes; dróttkvæðr is opp. to kvíðu-háttir, the epic, narrative metre, and ljóða-háttir, the metre of didactic poems or poems in the form of dialogues, Edda (Ht.).

drótt-lát, f. adj. beloved by the bousehold, gentle, epithet of a queen, Am. 10.

drótt-megir, m. pl. men, people, Vþm. 11, 12.

dróttina or drottina, að, [Ulf. draubtinön = στρατεύεσθαι], to rule, govern, bold sway; d. yfir e-m, to rule over one, Stj. 396, Fms. viii. 242; with dat., þó lætr hann þat eigi d. huga sínum, Greg. 32; at oss drottini eigi dauði síðan, Niðrst. 8; fyllit jörðina, stjórnit henni ok drottini, 21. dróttman or drottman, f. sway, rule, 625. 5, Stj. 20, H. E. i. 502; drottununar-gjarn, adj. ambitious; drottununar-girní, f. ambition.

dróttnari, a, m. a ruler, Stj. 20.

dróttning and drottning, f. a mistress; þræll sá er vegr at dróttni (master) sínum eðr dróttningu (mistress), Grág. ii. 86 (vide above); ef þræll verðr sekr skógarmadr um víg dróttins síns eðr dróttningar, 161; drottning hans girntisk hann, Ver. 16. Gen. xxxix. 7; this sense is quite obsolete except in old law phrases and translations. 2. a queen, common to all Scandinavians, Swed. drotning, Dan. drønning, whereas drottinn = king is obsolete, Hkr. Yngl. S. ch. 20, Fms. i. 99, vi. 439, Sks. 468; the instances are endless. compds: drottningar-efni, n. a future queen, Fas. iii. 456. drottningar-maðr, m. a queen's husband, a prince consort, Nj. 5, v. l. drottningar-nafn, n. the title of queen, Fms. i. 101.

dróttseti, a, m. a steward at the king's table; this word occurs in various forms throughout the Saxon parts of Germany, Holland, Belgium, Friesland, Brabant, etc. Du Cange records a 'drossardus Brabantiae'; it is in mid. Lat. spelt drossatus, Germ. and Saxon drost, land-drost, reichs-drost (drozerus regni), Fris. drusta, vide Grimm; the Dutch prefer the form drossardus: in the court of the king of Norway the office of dróttseti is not heard of before the beginning of the 12th century (the passage Bs. i. 37 is monkish and of late composition), and is there a kind of bead-cook or steward at the king's table, who was to be elected from the king's skutilsveinar; d. spurði hvat til matar skyldi búa, he d. asked the king what meat they should dress, Fms. vii. 159 (about A. D. 1125), ix. 249, x. 147; d. ok skenkjari, N. G. L. ii. 413, 415; cp. also Hírdskrá (N. G. L. l. c.) ch. 26, Fms. x. 100 refers to the drost of the German emperor. In the 14th century the dróttseti became a high officer in Sweden and Denmark. The derivation from drótt and seti (seti can only mean a sitter, not one who makes to sit, cp. land-seti, a land-sitter, a tenant) is dubious; the Norse word may be an etymologising imitation of the mid. Lat. drossatus.

drukna, að, [drukninn, drekka], to be drowned, Nj. 59.

druknan, f. being drowned, death by drowning, Ld. 58, Orkn. 246, Ann. 1260, 1026.

drumbr, m. a log of dry or rotten wood, Fms. viii. 184; drumba, u, f. a cognom., Rm.

drungi, a, m., medic. heaviness, fulness in the head. drunga-legr, adj.

drunur, f. pl. [drynja], a rattling, thundering, Dan. drøn.

drussi, a, m. a drone; þú d. (ἀφρων), I Cor. xv. 36.

DRÚPA, t or ð, to droop (from sorrow), different from drjúpa, to drip; drúpa is in Icel. an almost obsolete word, in old poets and writers esp. used in a metaph. sense; at the death of a dear person, the country, hills, mountains are said to droop; svá drúpir nú Danmörk, sem dauðr sé Knútr sonr minn, Fms. i. 118; svá þótti drúpa Ísland eptir fráfall Gizurar biskups, sem Rómaborgar ríki eptir fráfall Gregorí páfa, Bs. i. 71; Ari prestr hinn Fróði segir hve mjök várt land drúpir eptir fráfall Gizurar biskups, 145; staðirinn í Skálholti drúpti mjök eptir fráfall hins sæla Þorláks biskups, 301; drúpir Höfði dauðr er þengill, hlæja hlíðar við Hallsteini, Landn. 224 (in a verse); hnípði drótt ok drúpdí fold, Lex. Poët.; drúpir örn yfir, Gm. 10; Vinga meidr (the gallows) drúpir á nesi, Hlt.; en Skæreið í Skírings-sal of brynjúlfs beinum drúpir, Ýt. 22; hans mun dráp um drúpa, dýrmennis mér kenna, Sighvat; kuátu hvarms af harmi hnúppúpur mér d., my bead drooped from grief, Eg. (in a verse); drúpdú dólgráar, the swords drooped (to drink blood), Hkm. 2: in mod. usage drjúpa and drúpa are confounded, avi, hve má eg aumr þræll, angraðr niðr drjúpa, Pass. 41. 4.

DRÚPR, m. drooping spirits, coldness; ok þó at þar hefði orðit nokkurr d. með þeim, þá . . ., Fms. xi. 76.

drykk-fátt, n. adj. short of drink, Hkr. iii. 117.

drykkja, u, f. [drukinn], a drinking-bout, carousal, banquet; sitja við drykkju, Eg. 88; var veizla hin bezta, ok d. mikil inni í stofunni, 205; at þeim veizlum er drykkju voru, Bs. i. 394; matmála í milli ef eigi voru alþýðu-drykkju, a public banquet, l. c.; göra d., to make a banquet, Og. 27; þá var ár mikit ok drykkju miklar, Ó. H. 71; þar var öld-d. ok fast drukkit, Eb. 184, cp. Flóam. S. ch. 2; taka til drykkju, to take to drinking, Fms. ii. 266; drykkja (banquet) skyldi vera at hvárra-veggja, Gisl. 27; tóku menn til drykkju um kveldit, 28; hafa sand-d., to have a carouse, Grett. ch. 8; Jóla boð ok sam-drykkjur, Ó. H. ch. 95, cp. 33, 34, 131, Eg. ch. 11, 44; á-drykkja, q. v., Har. S. Harðr. ch. 23, Fms. vii. 203, cp. Orkn. ch. 33, 34, 70, 101, 104, Svær. S. ch. 36, 98, 103, 104, Fagrsk. ch. 11, 219, 220: the ancients drank hard, 'diem noctemque continuare potando nulli probrum,' Tac. Germ. ch. 11: with kings the drinking (dag-drykkja, q. v.) began immediately after the day-meal, vide the references above; the words of Tacitus, 'tum (viz. after breakfast) ad negotia, nec minus saepe ad convivia, procedunt armati,' l. c., are therefore true enough, Edda (Gg.) ch. 39, 46; the phrase, þreyta drykkju (cp. kapp-d., a drinking match), Edda 32. The Icelanders of the Saga time seem to have been of much more abstemious habits than their Norse kinsmen of the same time, and drinking is scarcely mentioned but at public banquets; the Sturlunga time is worse, but only those who had been abroad are mentioned as strong drinkers (cp. Arons S. ch. 19); cp. also a treatise of the end of the 12th century, named De professione Danorum, ch. 11—'in cunctis illius regni (i. e. Norway) civitatis uniformis consuetudo sed vitiosa inolevit, scilicet jugis ebrietatis,' etc. 2. = beverage = drykk (rare), Egill bað fá sér drykkju, Eg. 107. COMPS: drykkju-borð, n. a drinking-table, Fms. xi. 2. drykkju-föng, n. pl. drinkables, Sturl. iii. 289. drykkju-lítill, adj. sober, Bs. i. 275. drykkju-maðr, m. a great drinker, Fms. vii. 175, viii. 238, Edda 32. drykkju-mál, n. drinking at meal time, Anal. 195, Fas. ii. 266. drykkju-rútr, m. a drunkard. drykkju-skapr, m. bard drinking-drunkness, Fms. iii. 191, Ann. 1389. drykkju-skáli, a, m. a banquet ball, Orkn. 244, Fms. i. 299. drykkju-stofa, u, f. = drykkjuskáli, Fms. vii. 147, Eg. 553. drykkju-stútr, m. a drinking-can, Bs. i. 877.

drykkja, ðr, part. drunk, Rb. iii. 384, Karl.

drykk-langr, adj., in the phrase, drykklanga stund, just a moment, a measure of time whilst one drinks a draught.

drykk-lauss, adj. (-leysi, f.), without drink, Bs. i. 822, Finnb. 234, K. Á. 34.

drykk, jar, m., pl. ir, [A. S. drinc; Engl. drink; Germ. trunk; Dan. drink]:—drink, beverage, Fms. xi. 108, 233; eiga drykk ok sess við e-n, Eg. 95; a draught, Edda 32, 48; hvat hafa Einherjar at drykk? 24; vatns-d., a draught of water, id.; svala-d., þorsta-d., a thirst-draught; muntu nú eigi sparask til eins drykkjar, one draught more, 32; þreyta á drykkim, to take a deep draught, id.; drekka í tveimr, þrennr . . . drykkjum, to drain in two, three . . . draughts, id.; undarliga mundi mér þykkja ef þvillikr drykkir væri svá litlir kalladrir, id. β. sonr ubey, proncd. drukkr, Krók. 64; freq. in western Icel. COMPS: drykkjar-bolli, a, m. a drinking-bowl, Mart. 119. drykkjar-föng, n. pl. drinkables. drykkjar-horn, n. a drinking-horn, Fr. drykkjar-ker, n. a drinking-cup, Greg. 50, Sks. 725, Stj. 486. drykkjar-kostur, m. drinking-beer, Vm. 56.

drykk-sæll, adj. lucky in drink or brewing, Bs. 108.

dryllr, m. a nickname, Fms. i; drylla, u, f., Snót 184; also spelt with u, proluvis alvi, (vulgar.)

drymba, u, f. a kind of stockings (?), Art. (Parcevals S.)

DRYNJA, drundi, pres. dryn, to roar. This root word is common to Goth., Scandinv., Fris., and Dutch; for Ulf. drunjus = φρόγγος, Rom. x. 18, is a sufficient proof; in Swed. we have dröna, and drön neut.; Dan. dröne and drön; Dutch dreunen; North. E. to drone, as a cow; Fris. dröne; the mod. High Germ. dröhnen was, in the 17th century, borrowed from Low Germ. In old Icel. no instance happens to be record, except dryn-rann in Gsp. 23. Fas. i. 480; in mod. usage freq. enough, and the absence in old writers seems to be accident; draugr dimmr og magr, drundi í björgum undir, Snót 226, a ditt Stefan Olafsson; drynja and dynja are different in sense, drynja den roaring, dynja gushing; þá heyrði hilmir hátt við kletta drafnar d. dunur þungar, of the roaring surf, Od. (poët.) v. 401.

drynr, m. pl. [Dan. and Swed. drön], roaring; drunur, f., vide at dryn-rann, n., poët. 'the roaring inn of drink,' a drinking-born, Fas. c. drysil, dusil, a term of contempt, paltry, in the COMPS dry-djöfull, m. a petty, paltry devil, devilkin, Fms. iii. 201, in the am. ghost story, opp. to the big inmates of hell. drysil-hross (dusil), n. a paltry horse, Isl. iii. 333. drysil-menni, n. a petty man, Edda (Gl.)

DRÝGJA, ð, [drjúgr; A. S. dréogan = to endure; North. E. and to dree = to endure, suffer]:—to commit, perpetrate, mostly in a bad sense, synd, to commit a sin, K. Á. 202; d. glæp, id.; d. hórdóm, to commit a sin, Sks. 340; þú skalt ekki hórdóm d., thou shalt not commit a sin; d. misræðu við konu, id., Grág. i. 338; d. hernað, to promise, ii. 79; d. ílsku, Orkn. 32: it is a standing phrase in eccl. or sacred wr. N. T., Pass., Vidal.: in a good sense only in a few phrases as the all-d. Sturl. iii. 7; or in poets or bad old prose; orlög d., A. S. orlög dre (cp. the North. E. to dree one's weird = to abide one's fate), to try luck, Kvk. 1, cp. also the Germ. tales, in die welt geben; d. hlýðni, 675; d. mammiga náttúru, to pay the debt of nature, 447; d. e-s to comply with one's wishes, Bær. 14.—the last three passages are prose. β. to make to keep longer, to lengthen, Bs. ii. 173, Bb. 3.

drægr, adj. that which can be pulled against.

dræmt, n. adj. [from draumr?], slowly, Ösv.

dræplingr, m., dimin. [drápa], a paltry drápa, Hkr. ii. 82, Fms. xi. 2.

dræpr, adj. who may be killed with impunity, N. G. L. i. 82, Grág. Nj. 111.

DRÖFN, f., gen. drafnar, pl. drafnir, [akin to dréfarj], spots, s-like spots; hence dröfnóttur, adj. spotted; raun-d., bláf-d., etc., red-spotted; poët. the foaming sea is called dröfn, Edda.

drösla, ad. to roam about; cp. drasill, dröslal.

dubba (dybbja), ad. (for word), to dub a knight; nú hefir þú d. mik til riddara, Bær. 5, 18, Fms. x. 109, Karl. 193; to arm, dress, 464. 1 Sam. xvii. 38; upp dubbadr, dressed in full dress, Finnb. 220 sik, to trim oneself, Fms. vi. 208.

dubban, f. dubbing a knight, Karl. 222.

dubl (dufl), n. double, Alg. 366 (mathem.) β. gambling, Gpl. Grett. (in a verse). II. naut. a buoy.

dubla, dufla, ad. [dubla = a coin, Du Cange], to gamble, Gpl. 1. dublari, a, m. a gambler, Róm. 161.

DUGA, pret. dugði; pres. dugi; sup. dugat; imperat. dugi þú, dugðu; [A. S. dugan; Scot. and North. E. to dow; O. H. G. tugan; C. taugen; Dan. due; Swed. duga; Engl. do, in phrases such as, that will —to help, aid, with dat.; dugi þú mér Hvíta-Kristr, Fs. 101; d. frá sinum, Post. 658 C. 19; ok vill eigi d. henni, will not support her, i. 368; hann dugði heidnum mönnum, 655 iii. 4: with the notion suffice, þat er þér man d., which will do for thee, Nj. 13; hefir o dugat þessi átrúnaðr, this faith has done well for us, Fms. i. 34; þat d. minum hesti, it will do for my horse, Mag.: the proverb, fr svá illt at cinu-gi dugi, cp. the Engl. 'tis an ill wind that blows no good,' Al. 46, Hm. 134; mun þér eigi þat d. at sofa hér, it will do (is not safe) for thee to sleep here, Fms. v. 307; adding prepp. at, til, to succour, lend help, en Gislí fór at d. þeim við, Gisl. 2; þeir nú at þeim mönnum er lífs var ván, Finnb. 316, cp. at-dug; hún dugir eigi verr til enn einhverr karlmadr, Fb. i. 533; impers. dugir e-t, it does well, becometh, becomes; hún dugir mér illa (vel), (Fr.), Hkv. 1. 45; þó myndi mér enn vel d. (it would do well for ef ek fengja at drekka, Isl. ii. 369. β. absol. or even neut. to profess, do one's best; dugi þú enn, help! Fms. ii. 75; dugði hverr mátti, every one did his best, viii. 139; dugi nú hverr sem drengr; mundi þá eigi nauðsyn at d. sem drengilegast, ix. 509; denoting: force, vel síðaðir menn ok jafnan vel dugat, best men and who have done well, Eg. 96; d. í þurft e-s, Hom. 47. γ. to suffice, be s. enough; ef þitt æði dugir, if thy wit does suffice, Vpm. 20, 22; ef d., if the witnesses do, i. e. fail not, N. G. L. i. 136; dugði veðr it l. the weather did well.

dugandi- or dugandis-, as a prefix to nouns, denoting doughty, maðr (dugand-maðr, Fms. viii. 104), a doughty man, Dipl. i. 3, 456, Rd. 260, Róm. 137.

dugan-ligr, adj. doughty, Ýt. 15.

DUGGA, u, f. a 'dogger,' small (Dutch or Engl.) fishing vessel, 1413, where it is reported that thirty English 'fiski-duggur' came from Icel. that summer; (hence the Engl. Dogger-bank):—duggur, m. the crew of a dugga, D. N. ii. 651. 2. a lazy dogged fellow, (Gl.), Trist. (Fr.)

dug-lauss, adj. (-leysi, n.), good for nothing, Þórð. 47 (Ed. 18) dugnaðr, ar, m. doughtiness, valour, aid, assistance; biðja e-n sér dugnaðar, to ask one's help, 655 v. 1, Ísl. ii. 262, 293; veita e-m dugnað, give help to one, Fms. v. 259; skyrturnar d., the virtue of the kirtle, as. iii. 441; in pl., Greg. COMPDS: dugnaðar-maðr, m. an aider, help in need, 656 A. Fms. vi. 118, Fas. iii. 181: a honest bard-working man (mod.) dugnaðar-stigr, m. the path of virtue, Hom. 14. dugr, m. pl. ir, [North. E. do], doughtiness, strength of soul and body, ms. viii. 411; aldri er d. í þér, thou art good for nothing, Grett. 24 v. Ed.

DUL, f. [dylja]. I. prop. concealment, in phrases, með dul, secretly, Bård. 168; drepa dul á e-t, to conceal, Hkr. ii. 140; and in the COMPDS dular-búnaðr, m. a disguise, Fms. vi. 61; dular-kufl, m. a cloak used for a disguise, Grett. 139 A.

II. metaph. self-conceit, pride, in phrases as, dul ok vil, pride and wilfulness, Skálda 163, Sl. 34; la sér þú dul, to be so conceited, Finnb. 282; atlsk mikla dul, Fas. ii. 1; dul ok dramb, 655 xi. 3; mikinn dul (masc.), Þórð. MS. (wrongly) i. e. phrase, ganga fram í dul, to go forth in one's conceit, Hm. 78, (mod., nga fram í þeirri dulunni); proverb, maðr verðr ðælskr af dul, conceit makes an envious, moody man, Hm. 56; dul þin, Band. (MS.) 13.

dula, u, f. a worn strip of cloth. dula, ð, (cp. dylja), a law term, to deny, with gen., N. G. L. i. 93, 94, o: with subj., Js. 77: absol., 83.

dul-eiðr and dular-eiðr, m. [Swed. duls-ed], a law term, an oath of denial, Gpl. 199, Js. 58.

dul-hötr, m. a disguise-hood, hood used for a disguise, Fms. x. 383; ek dulhött (MS. wrongly djarfhött) um ðökkva skör, Ad. 3.

dul-klæði, n. disguise, Fas. ii. 441.

dul-kofri, a, m. = dulhötr, (v. kofri).

dulnaðr, m. = dul, Fr.

dulr, adj. silent, close; the phrase, ganga duls e-s, to be unaware of a thing, Fms. v. 265.

dul-ræmmi, f. stubborn self-conceit, Sks. 536 B. dul-ræna, u, f. id., v. l. dul-samr, adj. self-conceited, Stj. 122.

dulsi, a, m., poet. a dwarf, Ýt. 2.

dul-vígr, n. a law term, secret manslaughter, = laun-vigr, not so strong murder, Gpl. 150.

dumba, u, f. a mist; cp. the mod. dumbungr, m. a dark, misty,omy sky. dumbungs-veðr, m. gloomy weather. In the east of dumba is the bran of oats when ground, Fél. ii. 155; in Edda (Gl.) is even mentioned as a sort of seed; hamm (the wizard) hristi cinn ca, ok þar ör fykr ein dumba svört (black powder like mist) . . . blés ör vindi miklum móti dumbunni, svá at hon fauk aprt í augu á mns mōnum, svá þeir urðu þegar blindir, Fas. iii. 338. dumbr, m. also occurs as a name of a giant, the misty; the Polar Sea is called mbs-haf = the Misty, Foggy Sea, cp. Bård. ch. 1; cp. also Gr. τῆφος, haz, which probably are kindred words.

dumbi, adj. dumb; dauf ok dumba skurdgöð, Stj. 207, K. Á. 56.

dumbótrr, adj. of dark misty colour (of cows).

UMBR, adj. [Ulf. dumb = κωφός; A. S. dumb; Engl. dumb; O. H. G. id; Germ. dum = stupid, whence Dan. dum; Gr. τυφλός and τυφός are dred words, the fundamental notion being dusty, clouded]:—dumb, C. 34; dumbir ok daufr, 623. 57: gramm. a mute letter, Skálda 176. Norway dumme or domme means a peg inside doors or gates.

dumpa, að, [Ivar Aasen dump = a gust; Dan. dumpe], to thump, Lv. (ár. λεγ.)

UNA, að, (cp. dynja), to thunder, give a hollow rusing sound; dunar gignium, Edda 30; svá skal danzinn duna, Ísl. Þjóðs. (of daucing).

una, esp. pl. dunur, f. a rushing, thundering noise, Eb. 174, Fms. iii. 1; hence the Dan. for-den, qs. Thor-dön, the din of Thor, i. e. thunder, supposed to be the noise of the god Thor in his wain.

unda, að, to dally, Bb. I. 9.

un-henda, u, f. (-hendr, adj.), a sort of metre, having four anadictes, Edda (Ht.) 124, 128.

unn, m. a band, gang, drove; ganga í e-m duni, to march in one band, S. l. iii. 185 C; sauða-dunn, a drove of sheep, Sd. 164: a number of is called dunn, Edda 108.

unna, u, f. the wild duck, Edda (Gl.), cp. Engl. dun.

UPT, m., better duft, [it properly means the powder of flowers or like; so duft in Germ. means a sweet smell as from flowers; in olders duft is rare, dust (q. v.) freq.]; in mod. use duft is almost obsolete and as these two words can hardly be distinguished in old MSS.

(ere ft and st look like one another), the transcribers have often substituted duft, where the old MS. has dust: again, dufta (a verb) is never used, but only dusta: duft is probably a foreign South-Teutonic word; Swedish uses only the more homely sounding ång, vide ang]:—

dufr, d. ok aska, Stj. 204, Sks. 211, Magn. 448: botan. pollen; dupt; dupti, a, m. the stamen of a flower; dupt-knappr, m. the anther; dupt- dr, m. the filament, Hjalt.

du-ra, v. dyrr.

du-gr, m. [dvergr], a sulky fellow. durgrs-legr, adj. sulky.

du-ra-legr, adj. sulky, rude. durna-skapr, m., etc.

ðurnir, m. a dwarf, Ýt. 2: metaph. a sulky man.

durtr, m. = durgr. durts-legr, adj. sulky, rude.

dur-vörðr, m. a door-keeper, Eg. 409, Fms. ii. 160.

dusil, v. drysil.

dusla, að, to bustle, be busy, Njarð. 368, (cant word.)

DUST, n. [A. S. dust; Engl. dust], dust, Fms. v. 82, 324, xi. 12, Stj. 336. Num. xxiii. 10, Greg. 98: flowers ground to dust, Fr. 471, 472, 474, 475.

dust, n. [Dan. dyst; Swed. dust], a tilt; halt eitt d. með mik, Karl. 72; d. ok turniment, Fr.

dusta, að, to dust.

dustera, að, to tilt, fight, Bev. (Fr.)

dusti, a, m. a grain of dust; cugi d. saurs, 656 A. ii. 8.

dúða, að, to swathe (in clothes).

dúði, a, m. swaddling clothes.

DÚFA, u, f., gen. pl. dúfna; [Goth. dubo; A. S. dwa; Engl. dove; Dan. due; Swed. dufva; O. H. G. tuba; Germ. taube]:—a dove, Stj. 111, Hom. 57, 65, Al. 168: as a term of affection, my dove. 2. poet. a wave, one of the daughters of Ran, Edda. COMPDS: dúfu-ligr, adj. dove-like, 655 xxxii. 7. dúfu-nef, n. a cognom. 'dove-nob, dove-beak, Landn. dúfu-ungi, a, m. the young of a dove, Mar. 656, Stj. 317.

dúka, að, to cover with a cloth, Fas. iii. 187, 373.

dúk-lauss, adj. without a cloth, Pm. 108.

DÚKR, m. [Engl. duck; Swed. duk; Dan. du; Germ. tuch]:—any cloth or texture, Bård. 160; vaðmáls-d., lin-d., etc., a cloak of wadmal, linen, etc.; a carpet, Fms. ix. 219: tapstry in a church, fimm dúkka ok tvá þar í búna, annarr með rautt silki, Vm. 77, vide altaris-dúkr, 20: a neck-kerchief of a lady, dúkr á hálsi, Rm. 16. β. a table-cloth (borðdúkr) as to the ancient Scandin. custom of covering the table with a cloth, vide esp. Nj. ch. 117, Bs. i. 475, Guðm. S. ch. 43; and for still earlier times the old heathen poem Rm., where Móðir, the yeoman's good-wife, covers the table with a 'marked' (i. e. stitched) white linen cloth, 28; whilst Edda, the old bondman's good-wife, puts the food on an uncovered table (verse 4); by a mishap the transcriber of Ob. (the only MS. wherein this poem is preserved) has skipped over a verse in the second line of verse 17, so that we are unable to say how Amma, the husbandman's good-wife, dressed her table: the proverb, eptir dúk og disk, i. e. post festum.

γ. a towel; at banquets a servant went round to the guests in turn bearing a basin and a towel on the shoulder, Lv. ch. 13; to be served first was a mark of honour; cp. also Nj. l. c., Har. S. Harðr. ch. 79 (the Danish king and the old woman); a napkin, Blas. 45, 655 xvii. 5: belonging to the priest's vestment, Pm. 133; d. ok corporale, Vm. 154, Stj. Gen. xxiv. 65 (a veil).

dúk-slitr, n. rags of a d., Vm. 77.

dún-beðr, m. a bed of down-clothes, D. N. (Fr.)

dún-grind, f. a frame whereon to clean eider-down.

dún-hægindi, n. a pillow or bolster of down, D. N.

dún-klæði, n. pl. bedclothes of eider-down, Js. 78, Sturl. iii. 108, Bs. i. 802.

DÚNN (dýnn, Mart. 126), m. [Dutch dune; Engl. down; Swed. and Dan. dun; Germ. dunn is prob. of Saxon or Dutch origin, as the d remains unchanged]:—down; taka dún ok dýna, N. G. L. i. 334; esp. used of bedclothes of down; the word occurs in the old heathen poem Gs., sofi hann á duni, 5; blautasti d., Mart. l. c.; á duni ok á guð-vefi, Fms. x. 379; vöttu (pillows) duns fulla, a verse of Hornklofi. In Icel. 'dún' is chiefly used of eider-down, which word is undoubtedly of Icel. origin, Fr. édre-don, Germ. eder-don or eider-dunn; the syllable er is the Icel. gen. ædar-dún, from nom. ædr (the name of the eider duck), acc. ædi, gen. ædar. The eider-down, now so important as an article of trade, is never mentioned in old Icel. writers or laws; they only speak of the eggs (egg-ver). The English, during their trade with Icel. in the 15th century, seem first to have brought the name and article into foreign markets. At first it was bought in a rough state; Bogi Benediktsson in Feðga-æfi 11 records that a certain Jón í Brokey (born 1584), after having been in England, was the first who taught the Icel. to clean the down—var hann líka sá fyrsti hér vestra sem tók að hreinsa ædar-dún . . . en áðr (i. e. during the English and Hanseatic trade in Icel.) seldist óhreinsaðr dún eptir Búa-lögum. Icel. say, hreinsa dún, hræla dún. The Danes say, have dún på hagen, to have down on the chin.

dún-tekja, u, f. gathering eider-down.

dúra, að, to nap, Skálda 163.

DÚRR, m. a nap, slumber, Hom. 116, O. H. L. 80: in mod. usage in such phrases as, milli dúra; sofa góðan, veran, durr.

DÚS (dos, Björn), n. [Norse dus], a lull, dead calm, in the proverb, opt kömr æðregra ór dusi, a lull is often followed by a heavy shower, Eb. (in a verse).

dúsa, u, f. a sugar-teat for babies to suck.

dúsa, að, prob. to doze, Og. 18.

dvala, u, f. [Dan. dvale], = dvöl, Fr.

dvala, að, to delay, with dat.; at dvala ekki förimni, Fms. xi. 22;

ef ér dvalit ferðinni, 115; dvalar hann ekki brotferðinni, Fb. ii. 147; muna nú Helgi hjörþing (hjörþingi or -þingum, better) dvala, Hkv. 1. 49: with infin., Kjartan það þú ekki dvala, Ld. 176.

dval-samr, adj. dilatatory, Stj. 122; e-m verðr dvalsamt, one is delayed, Gret. 80, Fbr. 136.

DVELJA, dvaldi, dvalði; pres. dvel; part. dvalðr, dvalinn; sup. dvalit; [A.S. dveljan; Engl. dwell; O. H. G. tuelan; Swed. dvaljas; Dan. dvale]:—to 'dwell', delay, with acc.; d. för, ferð, to keep back, delay, Grág. ii. 385, Ísl. ii. 266; því dvalða ek dauða þinn, Blas. 47; d. dóm (a law term), to defer judgment, Grág. i. 67; d. ráð fyrir konu, to put off a woman's marriage, 307; at þat dveli garðlagit, ii. 332; gátu þeir hann eptir dvalit, they managed to keep him back, Fms. vii. 169; d. e-n frá e-u, to keep one from doing a thing, Jb. 380; dvelr mik engi hlutr, at ek geng ekki ..., i. e. I will go at once, Fms. ii. 37: the proverb, mart um dvelr þann er um morgin sefr, Hm. 58: absol., dvaldi þat fyrir ferð þeirra, that caused delay, Njard. 374. 2. in neut. sense = dveljask, to tarry, cp. Engl. to dwell on a thing; ok vildu eigi dvelja, ok eigi biða Óláfs konungs, Fms. iv. 118. 3. with acc. of time, to wait, abide; konungr dvaldi mestan hluta sumars á Hálógalandi, Fms. iv. 233; d. af stundir, to kill time, Band. 8; d. stund e-s, to hold one up, Karl. 62.

II. reflex. to stop oneself, i. e. to stay, make a stay; myndi þar dveljask um hrið, Nj. 122; ok er þeir höfðu þar dvalisk til þess er ..., Eg. 28; dvaldisk þar um hrið, 59; ok er konungr hafðr dvalsk þar um hrið, Fms. viii. 428: d. at e-u, to tarry over a thing, D. I. i. 223. 2. the phrase, e-dvelsk, one is kept, loses time by a thing; dvaldisk þeim þar lengi, Eg. 230; dvaldisk þeim þar at því, in (doing) that they lost much time, Nj. 241. 3. with pass. notion; sá dagr mun dveljask, that day will not soon come, will come late, Ld. 174; dveljask mannu stundirnar, the hours will be taken up, it will take many hours, it will grow late before all is told, Edda 15; ef þat dvelsk, at ek koina eigi hingat, if I should be hindered from coming, Fms. xi. 51: to tarry, er ek hefi svá lengi dvalisk at sækja yðvarn fund, Ld. 32.

DVERGR, m. [A.S. dveorg; Engl. dwarf; Germ. (irreg.) zwerg; Swed. dverg]:—a dwarf; and the genesis of the dwarfs vide Vsp. 6–16, Edda 9: in mod. Icel. lore dwarfs disappear, but remain in local names, as Dverga-steinn, cp. the Dwarf Stone in Scott's Pirate, and in several words and phrases: from the belief that the dwarfs lived in rocks, an echo is called dverg-mál, n. (-máli, m.), dwarf-talk, Al. 35, 37, Fas. iii. 369; and dverg-mála, ad, to echo: from the skill of the dwarfs in metal-working, a skilful man is called dverg-hagr, adj. (skilled as a dwarf), or dvergr, a dwarf in his art; dverga-smíði, n. dwarf's-work, i. e. all works of rare art, such as the famous or enchanted swords of antiquity, Hervar S. ch. 2, Fas. i. 514, ii. 463–466 (Ásmund. S.), Gisl. 80: crystal and prismatic stones are in Norway called either dwarf's-work or 'dwarfy-stones', as people believe that they are worked out by the dwarfs in the depths of the earth: botan., dverga-sóleyg, f. ramunculus glacialis, Hjalt. β. from its dwarfed shape, a dog without a tail is in Icel. called dvergr or dverg-hundur, m., Clar.: short pillars which support the beams and rafters in a house are called 'dvergar,' this sense occurs as early as Hom. (St.) 65, and is still in use in some parts of Icel.: the four dwarfs, East, West, North, South, are in the Edda the bearers of heaven, Edda 5. γ. ornaments in a lady's dress worn on the shoulder are called 'dvergar,' Rm. 16; smokkr á bringu, dúkr á hálsi, dvergar á öxlum, prob. a kind of brooch. For COMPS vide above.

DVÍNA or dvína (in old writers even dvena), ad, [North. E. dwynne], to dwindle, pine away; þá dvenar tómr maðr, Hom. 26; dvínar allr þroti (of a tumor), Sks. 235; lét hann eigi dvína kveðandina, Fms. v. 174; þaðan í frá sögðu menn at dvínaði líðveizla Sæmundar við Þorgrím, Sturl. i. 171; görir nú eigi at dvína við, it will not do to saunter, Karl. 380; dvína munda ek láta ferðina, I would let the travelling cease, Fs. 172; heit dvínuðu Heina, their bragging dwindled away, Lex. Poët. In early times this word was probably sounded with an i (short), which may be inferred from the form dvena; and the word was rather common, and occurs rarely. In later times it was ennobled by the frequent use made of it in Pass., and with altered inflexion, viz. an i throughout, the pres. indic. either strong, dvín, or weak, dvínar; thus, hér þegar mannlígg hjálpin dvín, Pass. 44. 12; görvöll þá heimsins gleðin dvín, 41. 8; þá æfin lífsins dvín, 36. 10; but holds megn og kraptir dvínar, 44. 1; dvínar og dregst í hlú, 47. 4: infin., sjón og heyrn tekr ad dvína, 41. 10.

dvöl, f., gen. dvalar, old pl. dvalar, mod. dvalir, [cp. 'dwelling' = delay, Engl. Ballads], a short stay, stop; dvalir ok náttstadi, Stj. 294; eiga dvöl, to stop, Nj. 181; afhvarf manna ok dvalar (acc. pl.), Ld. 204; meðan þessi dvöl (pause) var, Fms. xi. 135: delay, iv. 179; bera til dvala, to cause delay, Fas. iii. 543—used once as neut. pl., urðu dvöl dægna, Am. 102. β. gramm. quantity, Skálda 175.

dyðrill or dyrdöll, m., a nickname, seems to mean a tail, = mod. dindill, Fms. i. 186, ii. 253, 279; cp. daðra, to weedeel.

DYGD, f. [A.S. dugud = doughtiness, valour; O. H. G. tugad; Germ. tugend; Swed. dygd; Dan. dyd]:—virtue, probity, only used in a moral metaph. sense; the original sense [from duga, q. v.] of valour, strengt, which prevails in the A. S., is quite obsolete; trúa e-m til dygðar um e-t, to trust in one's integrity, Fs. 121 (of a judge); fyrir sakir þinnar dyðrility, Fms. vi. 58; líð ok d. (help and faithful service) góðs dregis, fyrir sína dygd, for his faithfulness, vii. 158. β. in mod. eccl. v. the Lat. virtus is rendered by dygd, Vídal., Pass., etc.; ó-dygd, w. ness. γ. virtue, of an inanimate thing, of a tree, Stj. 256. co dygðar-lauss, adj. wicked, K. Á. 230: bad, 24. dygðar-lei faithlessness, wickedness, Stj. 487, Bs. i. 40. dygðar-maðr, trusty man, Gret. 147 A. dygðar-verk, n. faithful work, Mar. d. dugnaðr.

dygðugr, adj. 'doughty, faithful, trusty'; d. þjónusta, Fas. i. 9 maðr, Gret. 143 A, Th. 12: efficient, having virtue in them, of inanimate things, Stj. 99, 215. β. in mod. eccl. writers, virtuous, good.

dyggiligr, adj. faithful, Stj. 108.

dygg-leikr, m. faithfulness, H. E. ii. 66, Fms. viii. 29.

dyggiliga and dyggiliga, adv. faithfully, trustily, Stj. 9, 152, iii. 115, 138, Bs. i. 40.

dyggr, adj., mostly with v if followed by a vowel, e.g. dyggvar, dypp superl. dyggvastr, compar. dyggvari, but sometimes the v is dropped faithful, trusty; dyggvar dróttir, worthy, good people, Vsp. 63; trúir, Fms. x. 233; d. ok drengileg meðferð, vi. 96; dyggra ok d. manna, Stj. 121; enn dyggvasti hirðmaðr, Magn. 484; reynda ek enn dyggvasta í öllum hlutum, Fms. i. 69; dyggvastr ok drottin-h. Hkr. iii. 150; but dyggvastr, Fms. vi. 401, l. c.; ú-dyggr, faithless. mod. usage esp. as epithet of a faithful servant, d. þjón, dygt hjú; d. hjú, a bad servant, etc.: of inanimate things, dyggir ávextir, Stj. 1.

DYKR (mod. dyknr, with an inserted n), m. a cracking, snoring; varð af því d. mikill, it gave a great crack, Gret. 96 A, c. Ed.; heyrðu þeir dyki mikla, Bárð. 32 new Ed.; mikill dykr, A. 76 dunur ok dyknir, Fas. iii. 412 (paper MS.); varð þat svá mikill dykr nauts-búk fleugnur væri kastað niðr á gólfitt, Eb. 220 (new Ed.) dyknr, Gret. 178 new Ed.

dyl-dúkr, m. a veil, B. K. 83.

dylgjur, f. pl. [dólg], suppressed enmity, finding vent in menaces, insinuations, and the like; vóru þá dylgjur miklar með þeim, Eb. 22; dylgjur miklar þat er eptir var þingsins, Band. 13; vóru þá e. miklar millum þeirra allra, Sturl. i. 196.

DYLIJA, pret. duldi and dulði, part. duldr, dulíðr, Fms. ii. 97; Fb. i. 11 (Hdl. 7), Fs. 97 (MS. Arna-Magn. no. 132); [Swed. dölja 'dólg']:—to conceal, hide, with acc. of the person, gen. of the thing concealed; d. e-s, to disavow, deny, dissemble; ætla ek því alla (þá) kunnar at dylja þessa ráða, they can hardly deny it, Eg. 49; þórir dr. ekki, 173; Eysteininn duldi ok þeirra orða fyrir sik, E. said he had not such a thing, Fms. ix. 329; þó duldu þeir ekki illvirki sinna, they not their guilt, confessed it, Sks. 583; with following subj., en allir at né eitt vissi til Hrapps, all dissembled, Nj. 133; en ef umboðsma (disavows), at hann hafir við umboði tekið, Gpl. 375. II. re. conceal, hide oneself; ok kendi brátt ... þó at hann dyldisk, Fms. i. ok fékk hann svá dulzk fyrir honum, at eigi vissi jarl ..., he hid him (thoughts) so well, that ..., viii. 16; at þat sé flugmenn, ok vill (disguise themselves) undir múnka búnaði, vi. 188. 2. metz. við e-t, to conceal for oneself; þurfu vér eigi at dyljask við, at v. 1; megu þeir þá eigi við dyljask, at ek hefi drept hann, Gret. en Sveinn duldisk við þat, S. sbrank from believing it, Orkn. 298 dyljum ek við (I don't disavow) skuldeika okkra, Ld. 40; en dylsk við (disavows) þingfesti þess manns, Grág. i. 23; trúit þe meðan þér megist við dyljask, believe it not as long as you can disc. i. e. till you get full evidence, Fms. ix. 477: dyljask í e-u; Eiríkr k. þarf nú ekki at d. í því, at ..., king E. cannot conceal it for i. that ..., Eg. 424, Þiðr. 118, 191, 196.

III. part. pass. the vera (Enga) dulíðr (duldr, dulinn) e-s, or vera d. at e-u, to be un. to be kept in ignorance of a thing; hefir hon verið alls þessa dul. 33; en at þú gangir lengr dulíðr þess er skylt er at vita, thou it shouldst be longer ignorant of things which all people ought to know, Edda 13; veit engi ætt mína, ok ganga þess allir duldrir, Fms. v. dulinn ertú Hyndla, H., thou art mistaken, Hdl. 7; ok ertú ok dulinn at honum, herra, thou, my lord, art too much mistaken ad i. c. trustest him too well, Fs. 97, cp. Fms. ii. 57: the phrase, gengr, dult, is hidden, kept secret.

dylma, d. [Dan. dulme]; d. yfir e-t, to be careless or indifferent about a thing, Fr.; dylminn, part. careless, indifferent, Stj. 122.

dymbill-dagar, m. pl. the 'dumb-bell days', i. e. the three days, Easter; hence dymbildaga-vika, u, f. [Swed. dymmel-vecka dimmel-uge], Passion week, Bs. i. 71, Fms. x. 72, H. E. i. 491, Sturl. during the dymbildagar the bells in Icel. were rung with a woodpecker called dymbill, m.; a dymbill is often mentioned among the inv. of Icel. churches of the 14th century, e.g. kirkja á dymbill, Vm. it is, however, likely that the word dymbill itself is simply deriv. the Engl. dumb-bell, as in the Roman church the bells were d. muffled in the Passion week: Björn (Lex.) mentions that in the before his time people used to strike the time to a dance with the It was also an old Icel. custom that the father of a house inflicted a chastisement on his children and household on Good Friday for the sins of the past year, gently or strongly as they had been obedient or not; hence the popular phrase, líðr að dymbildögum, or koma dymbildagar, = the dimmel-days are nigh, i. e. the day of reckoning will surely come; cp. H. E. iv. 180, 181 (note).

dymbil-nótt, f. the three nights next before Easter, Vm. 144.

dyn-bjalla, u, f. a tinkling bell, Grett. 129.

dýndr, adj. = dunhendr, Bs. ii. 103 (in a verse).

DYNGJA, u, f. a lady's bower, in old Icel. dwellings, Eg. 159, Nj. 66, Bjam. 68, Rd. 270, Korm. 10, Fs. 88, Gísl. 15; in those passages it is different from 'stofa,' and seems to have been a detached apartment: [as to the root, cp. A. S. dyng, O. H. G. tunc, Engl. dungeon; — the common sense prob. being that both the bower and the dungeon were secluded chambers in the inner part of the house or castle]:—Trolladyngjur, a mountain in Icel., a bower of giantesses. 2. a beap, dung, Dan. dyngte, (mod.)

DYNJA, dundi; pres. dyn, dunið; [cp. A. S. dynnan; Engl. din; the Icel. word is irregular in regard to the interchange of consonants; for the Lat. tonare, Engl. thunder, Germ. donner would properly answer to Icel. þynja, a word which does not exist]:—to gush, shower, pour, of rain, with the additional notion of sound; dundi ákaft regn ór lofti, Stj. 594. 1 Kings xviii. 45; of blood, blóð er dundi or sárum Drottins, 656 A. I. 31, Pass. 23. 3; dundi þá blóðit um hann alan, Nj. 176: of air quivering and earth quaking, Haustl. 14, Vtkv. 3: of rain and storm, teypir-dögg gördi, ok vatnsflóð kom, og vindar blésu og dundu á húsinu, Matth. vii. 25, 27; dýnjandi logi, Ýt. 6, Mar. 2. metaph. to pour, shower, like hail; Otkell lætr þegar d. stefnuna, O. let the summons shower down, Nj. 176: of weapons, dundu á þá vápnin, the weapons showered upon them, Fms. viii. 126; spjótin dundu á þeim, xi. 334: the phrase, þynja á, of misfortune; eigi var mér ván, at skjótara mundi á dýnja, ii. 125; hvat sem á dýnr, wabatever so happens. 3. metaph. also of men, to pour on or march in a body with a din; dundu jarlar undan, ex. Poët.; dýnja í böð, to march to battle, Sighvat; dýnja þeir þá fram þingit, Lv. 31; konungs menn dýnja þegar á hæla þeim, Al. 11.

dýnr, m. pl. ír, [A. S. dyn; Engl. din; Swed. dän; Dan. dön], a din; eigi d. verðr af hlaupi kattarins, noiseless are the cat's steps, Edda 19; þeir eda þrymr, dýnr eda dunn, Skálda 169; d. ok drestr, Bær. 15: urarching as troops, ride mikinn dýn, to ride with mickle din (of horsemen galloping), Ísl. ii. 333: the phrase, koma e-m dýn fyrir dýr, to make a din before one's door, take one by surprise, Fms. viii. 60, 189; gera sem bestan dýn, to make the greatest noise, 403: in pl., heyrði Gangleri dýni tilka, Edda 44.

dýn-ákot, n. a sbot making a din, but harmless, Fms. v. 198.

dýnta, t, to dint.

dýnta, m., dýnta, f., dýntill, m. a dint, a cognom., Fms.; vide dyttir.

dýrgja, u, f. [durgr], a dwarf woman, a bag, þjal. Jón. 17.

dýrgja, ð, to fish with a dorg, = dorga, þiðr. 91.

dýri-gætt, f. a door-frame, Sd. 158, Odd. 16.

dýri-stafr (mod. dýru-), m. a door-post, Stj. 279, Exod. xii. 7, Sd. 53, Grett. 121, Ver. 21, Sturl. ii. 49.

DÝRR, n. or f. pl., in mod. usage always fem., and often so in old writers; sometimes even in old MSS.: neut. with the article; dýrrin with double r (of dýrrin, Eb. 42 new Ed., Stj. 520, Edda 29, Nj. 198): fem. dýrrar; aðrar dýrr, Fms. iv. 220, 221; dýrr byrgðar, Stj. 40; einar dýrr, Sturl. i. 189; dýr opnar, id. (but dýrrin, id., one line below, perhaps wrongly by the transcriber): in most cases, however, the gender of the gen. and dat. cannot be discerned: there is hardly any instance of its neuter use if joined to an adjective; thus, in Njala we read, gengu dýr þá inn allir ok skipubúsk í dýrrin (neut.); but only four lines below, þokkukar væri laundýr á: hversu margar dýrr eru á Valhöll eda hversu margar, Edda 25; but settisk þórr í dýrrin, 29: in old writers the gen. and dat. are spelt with u, dura, durum, and that they were so pronounced may be seen from Skálda 163—þegar gestrinn kveðr 'dura,' þá skyldi eigi skýndina 'dúra'; cp. also Grág. ii. 194, Fms. iv. 221, viii. 161, Gm. 23, Sturl. iii. 218, Edda 25, Landn. 231; but dyra, dýrum, Ísl. ii. 342 (rare): in mod. usage y throughout (spelt dyra, dýrum, pronounced as i):—[Gr. dyra; Goth. daur, neut., and dauro, fem.; A. S. duru; Old Engl. dore or door; Dan. dør; Swed. dörr; Germ. thüre; the root vowel is short in Gr. and Goth. as well as the Scandins.]:—a door, viz. the opening (hurð is Lat. janua); karl-dýrr, branda-d., úti-d., leyni-d., and-d., jahús-d., Sturl. iii. 218; synztu-d., id.; úti-dýrr enn syðri, 185; súbr-tu, 186; syðri-d., 190; skála-d. nýrðri, 187; kvenna-skála-d., 188; í þessum dýrum er skálar mættusk, 189; and-dýri hit syðra, 218; sund-d. = súbr-dýr (?), ii. 106; stofu-d., 181; dýrshöfuðs-d., i. 106, a door over which a stag's head is placed. COMPS: dura-dómr, m., vide dómr.

dýra-gætti = dýrigætti. dúra-stafr = dýristafr. dúra-stoð, f. a door-post, N. G. L. i. 55.

dúra-umbuningr, m. a door-frame, Grett. 129.

dúra-veggur, m. a door-jamb, Sturl. i. 178. dúra-vörðr, m. a door-keeper, Sks. 289.

dýra-drótt, f. a door-sill, vide drótt.

dýr-skið, n. = dýrigætti (?), D. N.

DÝS, f., gen. sing. nom. pl. dýsjar, [Dan. dös and dysse], a cairn, less than haugr, Ld. 152, Eb. 172, 176, Dropl. 9, Fas. i. 438 (in a verse), Hbl. 45, Þórð. 73; kunnbl-dys, Gg. 1.

dýsja, að, [Dan. dysse = to bide], to bury in a cairn, heap stones over a witch, criminal, or the like, never used of a proper burying, Eb. 172, Grett. 112, Fms. v. 222, Landn. 107.

dýtta, tt, [Engl. dint], to meddle: recipr., þér höfðut til dýtzt, Stj. 510: in mod. usage, dýtta að e-u, to varnish.

dýttir, m. a dint, a nickname, Fms. ii. 67; hnakka-d., a 'neck-dint,' i. e. a sbot by a bolt in the nape of the neck, Orkn. 416 (in a verse); the hnakka-dyz of the MS. is = dýttis, as vaz = vatnis, braz = bratts.

DÝT, n. a bog, Sturl. iii. 50, Gpl. 393, Róm. 259.

dýflizla, dýfliza, u, f. a dark dungeon, Al. 94, Fms. i. 258, iii. 89, vi. 164, Eluc. 12, 42, Sks. 457, þiðr. 63, Grett. 158, Fagrsk. 111: [no doubt a foreign word, perhaps from 'diabolus' = the dungeon of hell.]

DÝFA, ð, [cp. Goth. dauffjan = Βαπτίζω; O. H. G. tauffjan; Germ. taufen; Dan. døbe; A. S. dyppan, akin to djúpr; cp. also dúfa, a billow; all these words are akin, but the Engl. dive is the same word]:—to dip, with dat.; d. e-m í vatni, to dip one into water, Hom. 139, K. Á. 6, cp. N. G. L. i. 339; d. sér, to dive: the word is now freq., but rare in old writers, who preferred drepa; in Germ. etc. it is only used in the sense of christening = baptizare, prop. to dip into water, but never so in the Icel., which renders baptize by skíra.

dýfa, u, f. dipping in.

DÝJA (mod. dúa), dúði, to shake, quiver, of spears or the like; d. frókrur, dórr, to shake spears, fight, Rm. 32, Fms. vi. (in a verse); d. skór, to shake the locks, þkv. 1; hann dúði spjótið inn í dýrnar, Sturl. iii. 218, Ld. 278: in mod. usage, það dúir undir, of boggy ground that shakes under the feet.

dýna, u, f. [dún], a down-bed, feather-bed, a pillow or bolster, Fms. iii. 125, vi. 279, ix. 26, x. 186, Dipl. iii. 4, Bs. ii. 167, Lex. Poët. 2.

boggy ground, Dropl. 26, v. 1.

dýna, ð, to cover, belay with down, N. G. L. i. 334.

dýpi, n. [djúpr; Ulf. djupei; Germ. tiefe], depth.

dýpka, að, to become deeper, deepen.

dýpt (and dýpð), f. [Goth. djuþipa], depth, Clem. 33, Bs. i. 209.

DÝR, n. [Gr. θήρ; Ulf. dýs = θηριον, Mark i. 13, 1 Cor. xv. 32; A. S. deor; Engl. deer; Germ. thier; Swed.-Dan. dýr]:—an animal, beast: α. excluding birds, dýr ok fuglar, Edda 144 (pref.); fuglar, dýr eðr sækvikindi, Skálda 170; dýrum (wild beasts) eda fuglum, Grág. ii. 89. β. used of wild beasts, as bears, Nj. 35, Grett. 101, Glúm. 330, Fs. 146 (þjarn-dýra): in Icel. esp. the fox, Dropl. 27, Bs. ii. 137, the fox being there the only beast of prey, hence dýr-bit; úarga-dýr, the lion; villi-d., a wild beast. γ. used esp. of hunting deer, the deer of the forest, as in Engl. deer, the hart, etc., Hkv. 2. 36, N. G. L. i. 46, Str. 3, Fas. iii. 4, þiðr. 228-238; hrein-d., the reindeer; rauð-d., the red deer.

dýra-bogi, a, m. a trap to catch foxes. dýra-garðr, m. a yard or inclosure to catch wild beasts, Gpl. 456. dýra-gröf, f. a pit to catch wild beasts, Gpl. 456, 457. dýra-kjöt, n. the flesh of animals, Stj. 8. dýra-rödd, f. the voice of beasts, Skálda 170. dýra-skinn, n. the skin of wild beasts, Fas. iii. 124. dýra-veiðar, f. pl. deer-hunting, þiðr. l. c., 655 x. 2, Gpl. 447. dýrs-belgr, m. a beast's skin, Fas. ii. 518 (of a bear). dýrs-horn, n. a deer's horn used for a drinking cup, Eg. 306, 307, 551, Edda 82. dýrs-höfuð, n. the head of a deer, Sturl. i. 106.

dýr-bit, n. 'deer-bite,' of the worrying of lambs by a fox, Bs. i. 587.

DÝRD, f. [Engl. dearth], glory; himinríkis d., the glory of heaven, Fms. v. 143, 230, Fær. 137, 625, 163, Fms. v. 216 (a glorious miracle): in pl., 623, 32, Eluc. 47; tóm d., vain-glory, 655 xxvi. 3; in N. T. and eccl. writers since the Reformation this word is much in use; the dóða of the N. T. is usually rendered by dýrd. COMPS: dýrðar-dagr, m. a day of glory, Hom. 90, Fms. ii. 142. dýrðar-fullr, adj. full of glory, Fms. ii. 199, vii. 89. Dýrðar-konungr, m. the King of Glory (Christ), Niðst. 4. dýrðar-kóróna, u, f. a crown of glory, Magn. 502, Pass. 25. 11. dýrðar-maðr, m. a glorious man, Hkr. iii. 250, Bs. i. 90. dýrðar-samliga, adv. and -ligr, adj. glorious, Stj. 288, 655 xxxii. 17, Fms. iv. 32, Stj. 34. dýrðar-staðr, m. a glorious place, Ver. 3. dýrðar-söngur, m. a song of glory.

dýr-gildir, adj. dearly paid for, Fms. vi. 106.

dýr-gripur, m. a jewel, treasure, a thing of great value, Eg. 4, 55, 179, Orkn. 354.

dýr-hundur, m. a deer-bound, esp. a fox-bound, Eb. 216.

dýrka (and dýrka), að, with acc. to worship, Stj. 103: to glorify, Ver. 6; d. Drottinn Guð þinn, Stj. 458; d. Guðs orð, 655 C. 15; d. kenning postulanna, 14: to celebrate, d. þenna dag, Hom. 8: to exalt, nú er tíð Drottinn, sú er þú d. oss ambáttir þínar, Blas. 47; ek em Guð sá er þik dýrkada'k, ok mun ek enn d. þik. 50; hann dýrkadi válaðan, Greg. 24; d. e-n með e-n, Fms. x. 315; d. e-n, to pray one reverentially; hón kastar sér fram á gólfitt, dýrkadi hann, svá segjandi, Stj. 522. 2 Sam. xiv. 4; hence the common Icel. phrase, vertu ekki að d. hann, don't beag (coax) him. 2. reflex. to magnify oneself; þá mundu Gýðingar dýrkask í sjálfum sér, Stj. 392; hirð eigi þú maðr at d. í krafti þinum, þou man, glory not in thy strength, Hom. 8; sú er dýrkask, kvað Paulus postuli, dýrkisk hann með Guði, 23; in pass. sense, Fms. xi. 415; dýrkaðisk þolinmæði réttlátra, Hom. 49; verit ér þolinmóðir litla stund, at ér dýrkisk, 623. 32. In N. T. and mod. eccl. writers the Gr. δοξάζειν is sometimes rendered by dýrka, e. g. Matth. v. 16.

dýrkan, f. worship, adoration, 623, 11; veita goðum d., 655. 1: in pl., Stj. 54; glorifying, dýrkan andar ok líkama, 50; afguða-d., skurð-guða-d., idolatry.

dýr-kálfr, m. a deer-calf, Hkv. 2. 36.
dýr-kálkr, m. a dub. reading (of a horse), Glúm. 356.
dýr-keyptr, part. dearly bought, Fbr. 56 new Ed.

dýr-lagðr, part. dearly rated, Ld. 30.

dýr-leikr, m. (-leiki, a, m.), deariness, Dipl. ii. 5.

dýr-ligr, adj. (-lign, adv.), glorious, Fms. iv. 82, vii. 85, x. 223, xi. 51, Eg. 478; d. veizla, Bs. i. 133; d. matræð, 139.

dýrtingr (dýrðlingr), Hom. 115, Bs. i. 202, Fms. i. 227), m. [A. S. deorling; Engl. darling]:—a saint, holy man; Guðs d., Ver. 1, Fms. iv. 227, 232, v. 214, Bs. i. (freq.)

dýr-menni, n. a glorious man, Lex. Poët.

dýr-mætr, adj. precious, Stj. 180, 204, Fas. i. 455, Sks. 183.

DÝRR, adj., compar. dýrri, superl. dýrstr, mod. more freq. dýrari, dýrastr; dýrðztum, Fb. i. 211; [Ulf. does not use this word, but renders εὔριμος etc. by reiks or sværs; A. S. deore; Engl. dear; Dan. and Swed. dyr; O. H. G. tiuri; Germ. theuer]:—dear: 1. of price, of such and such a price: referring to the weregild, at sú maðr sé vel dýrr, Hrafn. 9; fésætt svá mikla, at engi maðr hafi dýrri verit hér á landi em Höskuldr, i. e. that there has never before been paid so big a weregild as for Höskuldr, Nj. 189; munu þat margir ætla at hann muni dýrstr gerr af þeim mönnum er hér hafa látizt, 250; dýrr munnð Hafliði allr, Sturl. i. 47: of other things, ek met hana dýrra en aðrar, I put her at a higher price than the rest, Ld. 30; hversu dýr skal sjá kona, how much is she to cost? id.; kaupa dýru verði, to buy dearly, at a high price; þér eruð dýru verði keyptir, 1 Cor. vi. 20.

2. precious, costly, bókinna dýru, Fms. vii. 156; skjöldinn þann inn dýrr, Eg. 698; enn Dýri dagr, vide dagr, Ann. 1373, Mar. 96; eigi var annarr (gripir) dýrri í Noregi, Fas. ii. 65; því betr sem gull er dýrra en silfr, Ld. 126; dýrar hallir, lordly halls, Rm. 45; enn dýri mjöðr, the nectar, the godly mead, viz. the poetical mead of the gods, Hm. 106; hence dýr-gripir, a jewel. β. as a metrical term; enn Dýri háttir, the artificial metre, Edda 131; hence the phrase, kveða dýrt, to write in an artificial metre; dýrr bragr, bragar-háttir, an artificial air, tune, opp. to a plain one. γ. ó-dýrr, common, Lex. Poët., mod. cheap: fjöl-d., glorious, and many other poët. compds: the proverb, dýrt er drottins orð, vide dróttinn. δ. of high worth, worthy; en dýra drottning María, Mar. 18; Abraham er kallaðr dýrstr (the worthiest) allra höfuðfædra, Ver. 12; skatna dýrstr, the best of men, Edda, Ht. 82; Jón Loptsson, er dýrstr maðr er á landi þessu, Sturl. i. 105; at því er at gæta við hversu dýran mann (noble, worthy man) þú átt málaferil, 33; af hinum dýrnum höfðingjum, Fb. l. c.: dýrr is not used in Icel. in the exact Engl. sense of beloved.

dýr-skinn, n. a deer-skin, N. G. L. iii. ch. 47.

dýr-tíð, n. a time of dearth, famine, N. T.

dægi-ligr, adj. [Dan. deilig], fair, (mod. and rare.)
dægn (dœgn), n. [Swed. dagn; Dan. døgn], = dægr, q. v., N. G. L. i. 335, Skálda 190; this form is very rare.

DÆGR (dœgr), n. [dagr; in Dan. døgn means the natural day = 24 hours, and answers to Icel. sólar-hingr, whereas Icel. dægr usually means both night and day, so that one day makes two dægr]: hence dægramót or dægra-skipti, n., denotes the twilight in morning and evening, Hom. 41, Sks. 218; í degi dægr tvau, í dægri stundir tólf, in a day two dægr, in a dægr twelve hours, Rb. 6; þau (Day and Night) skulu ríða á hverjum tveim dægum umhverfis jörðina, Edda 7; tuttuðu ok fjórar stundir skulu vera í tveimr dægum, Sks. 54; hann sigldi á átta dægum til þess er hann tók Eyjar á Íslandi, and below, ek skildumk fyrir fjórum nóttum (viz. Sunday to Thursday) við Ólaf konung Haraldsson, Fms. iv. 280; þeir voru þrjú dægr í leitinni, Nj. 265; á hverju dægri, Grág. ii. 169; á *dægri*num, 360; tvau dægr, Fb. i. 539; þrjú d., 431; skipti þat mörgum dægum, id.—in all these passages the sense seems clearly to be as above.

2. in some few cases it seems to be used of the astronomical day = 24 hours, or the Danish døgn; such is the case with the interesting passage Landn. i. ch. 1; the journey between Iceland and Ireland is here reckoned as five dægr, between Norway and Iceland seven, between Iceland and Greenland four, and to the deserts of Greenland (the east coast) one, etc.: sjau dægra sigling, fjögura d. sigling, fimm dægra haf, i. e. a sail of six, four, five dægr, Landn. 25, 26. COMPS: dægra-far, n. the division of day and night, Sks. 26, Fms. iv. 381. dægra-stytting, f., in the phrase, til dægra styttingar, to shorten the time, of pastime, Fas. iii. 39. dægra-tal, n. day-tale, calculation of time, Rb. 488: sam-dægris (sam-dœgnis, O. H. L. 86), adv. the same day; also sam-dægrs: jafn-dægr or jafn-dægri, equinoctial time.

dægr-sigling, f. a day's sail, Landn. 26.

dæl (dœl), f. [dæl, dól], a little dale, Nj. 253, Sd. 173, Sturl. ii. 100 C; of fjaldala ok *dæl*ar, Greg. 59.

dæla, u, f.

I. a small dale, Sturl. ii. 100 (Ed.)

II. a term, a contrivance to serve the purpose of a ship's pump, Edda (1) hence dælu-austr, m. emptying a ship by a dæla, Fbr. 131, Grett dælu-ker, n. a kind of bucket: hann bað þrælinn færa sér í d. þ hann kallaði sjó, Landn. 251; hence the metaph. phrase, láta dæla ganga, to pour out incessantly, chatter without ceasing, Grett. 98. ancients cannot well have known the pump; but as dælu-austr is distinguished from byttu-austr, where the buckets were handed up, so seems to have been a kind of groove through which the bilge water made to run out into the sea instead of emptying every bucket by lifting it overboard: in Norse dæla means a groove-formed trough, earthen trench, and the like, D. N. iv. 751, Ivar Aasen s. v. dæla, p. 75.

dæld, f. = dæl, Fms. x. 319.

dæld, f. [á], gentleness, in the compd dældar-maðr (dældar-mor v. l.), m. a gentle, easy man, Ld. 68, 276.

dælir (dæll, sing.), m. pl. dales-men, O. H. L. 23; mostly in compounds Lax-dælir, Vatns-dælir, Sýr-dælir, Svarf-dælir, Fljóts-dælir, etc., the from Laxeydale, Waterdale, etc.

dæll, adj. gentle, familiar, forbearing; this word is no doubt ak deila (qs. deill), i. e. one who is easy 'to deal with'; vertu nú dæl (i. e. peace, be gentle) meðan ek em brautur, Nj. 52; ekki þóttu ek nú dæll h. I was not good to deal with at home, Fms. xi. 51; ekki d. viðfang easy to deal with, Grett. 127; dæll (easy, affable) öllu lands fólk, (184; engum þótti dæll at segja konungi hersögu, Fms. i. 41; þ eigi svá dæll (easy) at taka Sigurð jarl af lífdögum sem at drepa ki kálf, 53; þótti þeim dælla at taka þat er flaut laust, v. 262; þó sem dæll mundi til at kalla, er ungr konungur réð fyrir ríki, Eg. the phrases, göra sér dæll við e-n, to put oneself on a free, familiar ing towards one; Þóror gördi sér d. við þau þorvald ok Guðrún 134; ek mun nú gera mí dæll um ráðagörv við þik, I will take liberty to give thee straightforward advice, Nj. 216; hann gördi sí þá dæll, Grett. 144; mun dæll við mik þykja, ef þú ert eigi í för, the pay me little heed, unless thou art with me, Lv. 37; þótti vera spott ok grár við alla þá er honum þótti sér dæll við, rude and taunting at all whom he thought his match to deal with, Bjarn. 3: proverb, d. heima hvat, at home anything will do, Hm. 5.

dæl-leikr, m. (-leiki, a, m.), familiarity, often with the note over great freedom, easy dealing; mjök kennir nú dælleika af hendi . . . er svá vándr dúkr er undir diskum þínum, Bs. i. 475; fyrri leika sakir, Sks. 553; til þeirra dælleika, 482; gör allt í dælleikum make no ceremony with us (the king's words to his host), Fms. vi. hann (Moses) var svá í dælleikum við Guð, M. was in such familiarity with God, Ver. 23: affability, condescension, mildi ok dælleika, Fn 535, v. l. (of a duke); ú-dæll, overbearing; inn-dæll, delightful.

dællig-leikr (-leiki), m. = dælleikr, Sks. 482, 553, v. l., Sturl. i. 21

dæl-ligr, adj. [hence Dan. deilig], genteel, fine to look at, Edda 58.

= dæll, familiar, Al. 33.

dælska, u, f. familiarity. β. idle talk, nonsense, Edda 110, Karl. 7. dælskr, adj. [ó], belonging to a dale, mostly in compds: Breið-dælskr, dull, Sturl. i. 112 C. β. [Engl. dull], moody, dull; dælskr af dul, Hm. 56; d. fólskr, impertinent, foolish, Fms. iv. 205.

DÆMA, d or ð, [dómr; Ulf. dōman; A. S. dēman; Engl. deem (as in demister); O. H. G. tomjan]; lost in mod. Germ.; Swed. dömma; dömmen]:—a law term, to give judgment, pass sentence; d. mál, to give judgment in a case, Nj. 56, Eg. 417; hvat sem at dæma er, þorst. 5. lét dæma vörnina, caused judgment to be given on the part of the defendant reference to a curious Norse custom, by which both plaintiff and defendant pleaded before different courts, which had finally to adjust the sentence according to rules varying with the circumstances), Nj. 240: d. deceit, to pass sentence, Fms. xi. 246; d. rangan dóm, Sks. 109 B: the fine etc. in acc., d. fé, útleðgr, seðr, to pass sentence to a fine, outlawry, payment, etc., Grág. i. 320; útleðgr þær er á alþingi eru dæmðar, 3; fé dæmð á heimili þess er sótt er, 320; á þá at dæmð féit þ, then the money is to pass (by sentence) to them, 378; dæma einu fé, to fix a term for payment, 3; d. lög, to pass a lawful sentence, xi. 224; d. af, to make void, Sks. 11: d. um e-t, to judge of a thing, 625. 60: with acc. of the person, d. e-n skógarmann, to proclaim an outlaw, Nj. 240; d. sýknan, sekan, etc.: adding dat. of the person, d. e-m e-t, to adjudge a thing to one; d. e-m fé, or the like; even, e-m dóm, to deal a sentence out to one, Fms. xi. l. c.: adding prep. fé af e-m, to give judgment against his claim, Bs. ii. 91; but usually, d. e-n af e-n, to declare one to have forfeited; the instans Grág., N. G. L., and the Sagas are almost endless. β. to 'deem,' give opinion, judge.

II. to chatter, talk, mostly in poetry; esp. allit. phrase, drekka ok d., vide Lex. Poët. and drekka; en er þeir dæmi hluti at d., when they were talking of those things, 623. 55. dæmi, n., usually in pl., [dómr]. 1. an example, case; dæmi, a hard fate, Hkv. 2. 2; úlfa d., the case (doings) of wolves, 30; kvenna d., womanish example, behaving like a woman, þorst. 52; at mér verði vargins d., Band. (MS.) 35; in plur., form dæmi o foreldra sinna (cp. the Germ. weistümer, altertümer), old tal and atoms of their forefathers, Fagrsk. ch. 219; þessi dæmi (i. e. verses) öll i kveðin um þenna atburð, Mork. 114; þó hafa mörg dæmi orðið ormeskju, many things have happened in olden times, O. H. 73 (margs Fms. iv. 172, less correctly), cp. dæmi-saga; spekingur at viti ok at a fróðr, lögum ok dænum (old lore, tales), mannfræði ok ættfræði, Is. vii. 102; Ari prestir hinn fróði, er mörg d. spakleg hefir saman töld, i. 145, cp. also Barl. 47, 73, 112; hence fá-dæmi, an unexampled, tentious thing; eins dæmi in the proverb, eins dæmin er vest, viz. singular, unexampled fate is the worst: used even of pictures, a story presented by drawing, Pm. 122: gramm. a citation, proof, nú skal láta þra dæmin, now let us hear the proofs, Edda 49; þessi dæmi (those precedences) ok nóg önnur, Anecd. 6, 15, 18, 21; draga dæmi af bókum, s. 468. β. example, generally; djarfir in d. eru til, Fms. iv. 311; a dæmi til e-s, Róm. 234; umfram d., ór dænum, unexampled, portous, Stj. 143, Fms. i. 214, viii. 52; svá sem til dæmis at taka, to take example, Mar. 40, Bs. ii. 116; hence the mod. adverb, til dæmis (commonly written short t. d. = e. g.), for example; sem d. innask, Fagrsk. 9, Barl. 50; meir en til dæma, beyond example, Stj. 87, 167, 179. γ. example for imitation (eptir-dæmi, example); eptir dænum Kristinna Anna, Fms. v. 319; eptir þínum dænum, Niðsr. 4; d. dæmi af e-u, take example by it, Greg. 134. δ. judgment, only in compds sjálf-dæmi, rétt-dæmi, justice, etc. COMPDS: dæma-fátt, n. adj. most unexampled. dæma-fróðr, adj. wise in old lore, Fms. iv. 89. dæma-lauss, adj. unexampled, Stj. 391. dæma-maðr, m. a man to imitated, Greg. 12.

dæming, f. judgment, Grág. i. 235, Skálda 211. dæmi-saga, u, f. a fable, parable; in old eccl. translations, the parable the N. T. is rendered by 'dæmisaga,' Greg. 22; but in mod. versions writers since 1540 a distinction is made, and dæmisögur are fables, of Aesop, Reynard, or the like; whereas the parables of the N. T. are led 'eptir-liking'; heyrir mik ok mína dæmisögu, Stj. 399. Judges ix. 7: öld saw, Fms. vii. 102, v. l.: a proverb, Stj. 560. I Kings iv. 32, (rare.) dæmi-stóll, m. the judgment seat, 623, 12, 13, 73, 625, 79.

dæsa, t. to utter a deep groan, Sturl. ii. 154: reflex, to lose breath from exhaustion, Sks. 231: part. dæstr, exhausted, breathless, Grett. 98. ÖP, f., pl. dafar, the rump, Scot. doup; hér yfir skipnum uppi mættusk in ok höfuðið dýrsins (of a bear), Fas. ii. 172, while 510 has dausin; Norse dov = rump, Ivar Aasen. 2. a kind of spear, Edda (Gl.), v. 4, 14. II. [cp. dafna, and Swed. däffen = moist], suck (?) metaph. rest, in the poet. phrase, var döf, sweet rest; niilli Belindar sta-kúluna biúð hefi eg þór vara döf, Grönd. 67; hreppa vara döf, et rest (of one dead), Feðga-æfi, 83 (in a verse).

ÖGG, f., old gen. döggar, Korm., Sks. 606, Fms. ii. 278, mod. gar; old pl. döggar, Vsp. 19, Vpm. 45; mod. daggr, Sks. 40; dat. g, döggu, Vtkv. 5, 656 A. 18: [A. S. deaw; Engl. dew; Germ. thau; and Swed. dug]:—dew; nátt-dögg, night-dew; morgunn-dögg, morn-dew, Vpm. 45, Hkv. Hjörv. 28. COMPD: (mod. daggar-, old döggar-), döggar-drep, n. a dew-track, Fms. ii. l. c.

dög-fall, n. dew-fall, Stj. 17. dög-litr, adj. dew-besprinkled, Hkv. 2. 41. dögöttr, adj. bedewed, Hkv. 1. 46. dög-skór, m. [Swed. dopsko], the tip or chape of a sheath, etc., Fas. i. 6. Gulþ. 47, Gisl. 115.

dög-slöð, f. the slot or track left in the dew, Gisl. 67. dögva, að or ð, to bedew; pres. döggar, Stj. 73, 397; hon dögvaði, Drottins, 655 xxxi. 2; á morni hverjum döggarvi hann jörðina af dropum sínum, Edda 7; dögðu andlit sín í tárnum, 623, 58; d. hjörtu ma, Skálda 210, Hom. 45.

dögvan, f. bedewing, Stj. 14. döglingr, m., poet. a king, descendant of king Dag, Edda 105, Hd. 2. mockingly, a draggle-tail, Sturl. i. 62. dögundur, v. dagan, dagverðr. dökk, dókð, f. [dock], a pit, pool, Gpl. 393, Mart. 107. dökk-blár, adj. dark blue, Sturl. ii. 212. dökk-brúnaðr, adj. dark brown, Fas. i. 172. dökk-grænn, adj. dark green, Stj. 62. dökk-hárr, adj. dark haired, Hkr. iii. 281. dökk-jarpr, adj. dark auburn, Ld. 274. dökk-litaðr, adj. dark coloured, Sturl. ii. 212, Fms. vii. 239. dökkna, að, to darken, Fms. i. 216, x. 284, Fas. iii. 12.

ÖKKK, adj., acc. dökkvan etc., with v inserted, [Swed.-Dan. dunke], Rb. 108; ský dökkt ok dimt, Fms. xi. 136; dökkvir hjálmar, vi. 1; dökkt yfirbragð, i. 97; d. á hár, lark of hair, Nj. 39; dökkvan ma, Sks. 229; compar., dökkvara djöf, 203; dökkvir villustigar, i. 138.

dökk-rauðr, adj. dark red, Þiðr. 178. dökkva, ð, to darken; eigi dökktusk angu hans, Stj. 348. Deut. xxxiv. þá er dökkvir skilning, 626 C. 33; impers., dökkvir þik, andskoti, thou in darkness? 623, 31; dag (acc.) dökði, the day darkened, Skálda (a verse). dökkvi, a, m. a dark spot, Fas. iii. 560.

E

E (a), the fifth letter, is in the old Gothic and Anglo-Saxon Runes represented by M, being in Anglo-Saxon called 'eob'; the common Scandinavian Runes have no character for e, but mark it either ia or i, and, still later, |, with a knob in the middle ('stungium lss' Φ).

A. PRONUNCIATION, etc.—The Icel. e is sounded as English a in same, take, and in modern printed books is only used in radical syllables without regard to etymology; but there is sufficient evidence that in early times in Icel. the e had a double sound, one long, like the Italian e or English a (long), the other short, like e in English wet. These two sounds are etymologically different; the first is of comparatively late growth and derived from a by vowel change or otherwise; it is therefore in kindred languages (Swed., Germ.) often spelt ä, so as to indicate its origin from the mother-letter a: the other e is much older, nearly akin to i, being related to that letter as o to u. Grimm suggests that e is derived from i as o from u (only admitting a, i, u as primitive vowels), but in the Icel. at least e and o are in spelling as old as i or u, and seem to be primitive. The Runes in Tune and on the Golden horn have special marks for e and o. At the time of Ari and Thorodd the two seem to have been distinguished in Icel. The latter grammarian uses a special sign for each; he proposes to represent the long sound (Engl. a) by æ (commonly ρ), adding (as he says) the bight of a to the body of e, to express a sound intermediate between ä and e; he therefore would have written tæk (I take), vænja, tænja (to tame), but eðr, en, ef, etc., Skálda 161–163; in the unique vellum MS. (and in Edd.) the characters are not given correctly, as transcriber and editors did not fully understand the bearing of the author's words. About 700 years later, Jacob Grínum (without knowing the Icel. grammarian or the spelling of MSS. not then edited) recalled the old double e sound to life, guided by the analogy of other Teutonic languages. He proposed to represent a (the ρ of Thorodd) by e, and the genuine e by ë. He (Gram. i. 281–284) drew out a list of words founded on the supposed etymology, and kept this distinction wherever he spelt Icel. words. It is curious to observe the difference between Grimm's artificial list of words and the phonetic spelling in some MSS.; there are especially two MSS., both of them Norse, which are remarkable for their distinction of the two sounds, the long e being spelt with æ, the short with e: these MSS. are the O. H. L., published from a vellum MS. Ups. De la Gard. no. 8, written in Norway at the beginning of the 13th century, and edited by C. R. Unger; the second, small fragments of Norse law MSS., published in N. G. L. ii. 501–515 and i. 339 sqq. Some words compiled from them are as follow: I. æ: the verbs, bæra, blækkja, ærja, æggja, færgja, hængja, glæðja, hæfja, hætja (to barry), kvæðja, læggja, sægja, sælja, sætja, strængja, væðja (to bail), værja, etc.; bænda, brænna (brændi), bræsta, æfla, æfna (Swed. änna), fælla (to fell), frægna, gægna, hæmna (= hæfna), hverfa (to turn), kæmna, mætta, næmna (Swed. nänna), rænna (to let run), ræfsa, spænna, stænna (stafi), tælja, værða (to become), værka, vækra (vakt), þværa: nouns, bæn, a wound (but ben, N. G. L. iii. 388); bærr, a berry; bæðr, a bed; bælg; bærsærkr; bælti, a belt; dæpill; drængr, a man; drægg; ækkja, a widow; andi, end; ældr, fire; æmni (= æfni = Swed. änna); æmbætti (Germ. amt); ældri (in for-ældri, forefathers, Germ. ältern); ælja, a concubine; ærendi, an errand; ærendr, exanimis; ængill, an angel; ærmr, a sleeve (armr); ærvi, ærfingi, ærð (ærfr); ænni, the forehead; ærtog (a coin); æng, a meadow (ang = a sweet smell); Ærlingr (a pr. name); ærki-, Engl. arch- (ἀρχτ-); ærvedi, toil, and ærvedi, toilsome; ægg, an edge; fæðgar (faðir); fælmtr (falma); færð (fara); frælsi (frjals); hæl, bell; hælvti; hælla, a stone; hælir, a cave; hærta, a lord; hærtr, troops; hær-biúðir; hærnaðr; hæræð, a county (but hæræð in N. G. L. i. 344 sqq.); hærðar, shoulders; kæffi (Swed. kafle); kær, a jar; kælda (kaldr), a well; kætill, a kettle; fætill; kvæð, evening; kværfa (to turn); lægg, a leg; mærki, a mark; mærgð (margr); nægu, mægin, main; mærr, a mare; næf, nose; næss, a ness; ræfill, tapestry; rækkja, a bed; sækt, sake; skægg, beard; skællibrögð; skæpna, a creature (skapa, Dan. skæbne); sværd, a sword; sæmna, sound; væfr, weaving; væfr (but verk better, N. G. L. i. 339 sqq., cp. virkr); væstr, the west; værk, a trick; vætr, the winter (but vittr or vittr better, N. G. L. ii. 509); vær (in sel-vær); værd, a meal; þængill, a king; þækja, thatch; þægn, thane; Ængland, England; Ænsktr, English; Ænglændingar, the English (Angli); Tæmps, the Thames, etc.: datives, dægi, hændi, vændi, vælli, hætti (hötttr), bæki (balkr): adjectives, compar. and superl., fræmir, fræmstr; skæmir; skæmstr; ældri, ælztr; lengri, lengstr; hættri, bæztri; værri, værstr; hældri, hælztr; sækr, guilty; værd, due; fæginn; hælgt, boly; bærr, bare; stærkr, stark, etc.: prepositions, hænni, hæumar (hann); tvægga, duorum; hværr, ubo; ængim, none; ækki, nothing (but also engi, which is better), etc.: particles, æftir, after; væl, well; ælligar, or: inflexive syllables, -sæmd (-samr); -ændi; -speki, wisdom, etc.: the diphthongs æi and æy = ie and ey, læita, bæita, hæyta, æyta, etc.

II. e: the pronouns and particles, eda, or; ek, ego; emi, still; en, but; sem, whicb; ef, if; með, with; meðan, while; meðal, between; nema, nisi; snemma, early; cr, is, and eru, are: em, I am; þessi, this; þetta, that; sex, six; sek, mek, þek, sometimes instead of sik, mik, þik: nouns, elgr, an elk; sef, sib; brekka, brink; veðr, weather; nevi, a kinsman (Lat. nepos); nevi, a neave, fist; segl, a sail (cp. segla); vetr, a wight; selr, a seal; net, a net; nes, a ness; el, a gale; messa, a mass (Lat. missa); hestr, a horse; prest, a priest; þegn (O. H. L. 47); vegr, a way, honour; sel and setr, shielings; veröld, the world; vesöld, misery: verbs, gera, to 'gar,' to do; drepa, to kill; bera, to bear; bresta, to burst; gefa, to give; geta, to get; meta, to measure; kveða, to say; drekka, to drink; stela, to steal; vera, to be; mega, must; nema, to take; eta, to eat; vega, to weigh; reka, to drive; skera, to cut: participles and supines from þiggja, liggja, biðja, sitja, þegit, legit, þedit, setið: preterites as, hengu, gengu, fengu (Germ. gingen, fingen); greru, reru, snuru (from gróa, róa, snúa): e if sounded as é, e. g. lét, blés, lét, rétt, léttr; even in the words, hér, here; mér, sér, þér, mihi, sibi, tibi; neðan (niðr), hegat (= buc); héðan, hence: adjectives, mestr, flestr, þrennr, etc.: inflexions, -legr, -ly; -lega, -ly; -neskja, -neskr (cp. Germ. -isch); in the articles or the verbal inflexions, -en, -et, -er, -esk, etc. The e is often used against the etymology, as dreki, dragon; menn, men (from maðr). In some other Norse MSS. the two sounds are marked, but so inaccurately that they are almost useless, e. g. the chief MS. of the Barl. S.; but in other MSS. there is hardly an attempt at distinction. The list above is mainly but not strictly in accordance with the etymology, as phonetical peculiarities come in; yet the etymology is the groundwork, modified by the final consonants: both old spelling and modern pronunciation are of value in finding a word's etymology, e. g. the spelling drængr indicates that it comes from drangr; hæræð and hær, troops (but her, here), shew that hæræð (hæræð) is to be derived from hærr (herr), exercitus, and not from her (hér), etc. The Icel. idiom soon lost the short e sound in radical syllables, and the long e sound (like the Italian e) prevailed throughout; there was then no more need for two signs, and e prevailed, without regard to etymology. Some few MSS., however, are curious for using æ almost throughout in radical syllables, and thus distinguish between the e in roots and the e in inflexions (vide B below); as an example see the Arna-Magn. no. 748, containing an abridgement of the Edda and Skálda and poems published in the edition of 1852, vol. ii. pp. 397-494; cp. also Vegtamskviða, published by Möbius in Sæm. Edda, pp. 255, 256, from the same MS.; this MS. uses æ in radical syllables, but e or i in inflexions. It is clear that when this MS. was written (at the latter part of the 13th century) the Icel. pronunciation was already the same as at present. In some other MSS. e and æ, and e and e now and then appear mixed up, till at last the thing was settled in accordance with the living tongue, so that the spelling and sound went on together, and æ (or é) was only used to mark the diphthong; vide introduction to Æ.

B. SPELLING of e and i in inflexions.—The Germans, Swedes, Danes, English, and Dutch all express the i sound in inflexional syllables by e, not i, as in Engl. father, mother, brother, taken, bidden, heaven, kettle; or in Germ., e. g. batte, möchte, sollte, lange, bruder, mutter, soltest, himmel, etc.: in the earliest times of Icel. literature also it is almost certain that e was used throughout: Ari probably signed his name Are (en ek heiter Are, lb. fine): Thorodd, too, seems to have followed the same rule, as we may infer from several things in his treatise, e. g. the words framer and frú mér, which would be unintelligible unless we suppose him to have written framer, not framir: even the name of Snorri is twice spelt Snorre in the Reykholts-máldagi, probably written by one of his clerks. Some old vellum fragments may be found with the e only; but even in the oldest extant, i is used now and then. The reason is clear, viz. that the Icel. never admits the long e in inflexive syllables, and in roots it never admits the short e, consequently the same sign would not do both for roots and inflexions; hende, velle, gefe have each two vowel sounds; therefore the short i was admitted in inflexions; yet in most MSS. both e and i are used indiscriminately, e. g. fadir and fader, tími and time, manni and manne, kominn and komenn, komið and komet, höndin and hönden, fjallit and fjallet; even those that use i admit e if following ð or d, e. g. vide, bæðe, liðe, lande, but fjalli, vatni. As the spelling was partly influenced from abroad, the e even gained ground, and at the time of the Reformation, when printing became common, it was reassumed throughout, and remained so for nearly 230 years, when (about A. D. 1770-1780) i was reinstated and e expelled in all inflexions, as being inconsistent with the spelling and ambiguous; but the sound has undoubtedly remained unchanged from the time of Ari up to the present time: the English father, mother, German vater, mutter, and Icel. fadir are, as to the inflexion, sounded exactly alike.

C. INTERCHANGE of e and i.—The adjectival syllable -ligr, -liga, is in MSS. spelt either -ligr or -legr; in modern pronunciation and spelling always -legr, -lega (Engl. -ly). β. In a few root words e has taken the place of i, as in verðr, qs. virðr (food); brenna, qs. brinna; þrennr and þrimr; tvenna and tvinna; ef, efa, efi, = if, ifa, ifi; einbunri and eibunri (born): e has taken the place of ø in such words as lneutr (nuts) from hnot, older form hnøtr: so also iu eðli and öðli; efrí efstr from öfrí öfstr:

e and the derived ja make different words, as berg and bjarg, fjall, bergr and bjargar, etc.

D. DIPHTHONGS: I. ei answers to Goth. ai, A. S. ā, ei, Engl. ō (oa or the like); in Danish frequently expressed by Swedish and Northern English the diphthong is turned into a plain e which, however, represent the same sound: Goth. stains, A. S. stān sten, North. E. stane. The o sound is English-Saxon; the a sound E. Scandinavian; thus the forms, bone, oak, oath, broad, one, crown, none, no, may be called English-Saxon, from A. S. bām, bān, et, North. E. and Scottish bame, bane, aik, aith, braid, ain, mair, nai be called English-Scandinavian: cp. Swed. bem, ben, ek, ed, bred, en, beinr, bein, eik, eidr, breidr, einn, meir, neinn, nei; cp. also Icel. Swed. blek, North. E. blake, etc. The Runic stones mark the ei wi or i simply, e. g. stin or stain. Old Norse and Icel. MSS. frequent ei give ai. II. ey is in modern usage sounded as ei, and distinguished in writing; in old times a distinction was made ei between ei and ey. Norse MSS. almost always spell öy, and in I. it is to the present time sounded accordingly, e. g. öyra, = Icel. sounded nearly as in English toil: the ey is properly a vowel ch: au: ey frequently answers to an English e (ea) sound, as heyra, t eyra, ear; dreyma, to dream; leysa, to lease. In very old MS. Íb. (ai in the Ed. is a wrong reading from au in the MS.), au even spelt alike (au or au), though sounded differently. In some ey is also used where it is not etymological, viz. instead of ø or ö, words as hreyqva, seyqva, steyqva, deyrvan, greyri, geyra, seyni, hrökva, sökva, . . . greri or gróri, syni, e. g. the Cod. Reg. of Sæm the Rafns S. Bs. i. 639 sqq.

E. é is sounded almost as English ye (or ya); it is produced, by an absorption of consonants, in words as rétt, léttr, þétt, sétt rétta, cp. Germ. recht, Engl. right; Germ. leicht, Engl. light: o kné, tré, hlé, sé (Icel. fé = Engl. fee, Goth. faibu, Lat. pecus), etc. by a lost reduplication in the preterites, féll, grét, réð, lét, blés, hékk, lék, fékk, from falla, gráta, etc.; in some old MSS. t replaced by ie, e. g. in the Hulda Arna-Magn. no. 66 fol. we re liet, hiet, griet, gieck, liek, cp. mod. Germ. fiel, biess, liess, etc.; pe these cases é was sounded a little differently, almost as a bisyllable, in such words as the pronouns vér, þér or ér (you), mér, sér, þé the particles hér (here), héðan (hence), hérað, véll, éll. 4. e sounded after g and k, and often spelt ie in MSS., gieta, giefra, kiefra this sound is, however, better attributed to g and k being aspir Thorodd and the earliest MSS. é is marked with ' just like the o or diphthongal vowels; but the accent was subsequently remove and é are undistinguished in most MSS.: again, in the 15th transcribers began to write ie or ee (mier or meer). In printed b to about 1770 the ie prevailed, then e, and lastly (about 1786) e 5th and 6th vols. of Féll.: é is an innovation of Rask, and is many, but mátt, drátt, and rétt, slétt, etc. are etymological tical, though the sound of é is somewhat peculiar: the spelling j a novelty, and being etymologically wrong (except in 2 above) iot be recommended.

Ebreskr, adj. Hebrew, Skálda 161, 167, Stj. 26. Ebreskr Hebrew tongue, Ver. II, Ann. (H.) 14.

eð, a particle, vide er.

eðal, noble, in compds, borrowed from Germ. and rare.

EDDA, u. f. a great-grandmother, Rm. 2, 4; móðir (mother) amma (grandmother), þriðja edda (the third is edda), Edda 10 sense is obsolete.

II. metaph. the name of the book Edda by Snorri Sturluson, and containing old mythological lore and artificial rules for verse making. The ancients only applied it to the work of Snorri; it is uncertain whether he himself called it occurs for the first time in the inscription to one of the MSS. viz. the Ub., written about fifty or sixty years after Snorri's death þessi heitir Edda, hann hefir saman setta Snorri Sturluson er hætti sem hér er skipat (viz. consisting of three parts, Gyfja Skáldskaparmál, and Háttatal), Edda ii. 250 (Ed. Arna-Magn.); i bók þeirri er Edda heitir, at sá maðr sem Ægir hét spurði Bú 532 (MS. of the 14th century); hann (viz. Snorri) samansetti put together the Edda, Ann. 1241 (in a paper MS., but probably *As the Skáldskaparmál (Ars Poëtica) forms the chief part of the teaching the old artificial poetical circumlocutions (kenningar), terms and diction, and the mythical tales on which they were the Edda became a sort of handbook of poets, and therefore gradually to mean the ancient artificial poetry as opposed to the plain poetry contained in hymns and sacred poems; it, however, applies to alliteration or other principles of Icel. poetry: reglur í list of Edda, Gd. (by Arngrim) verse 2, Lil. 96, Nikulás d. 1. rules the art of Edda, Gd. (by Arni) 79;—all poems of the 14th The poets of the 15th century frequently mention the Edda in t duction to their Rímur or Rhapsodies, a favourite kind of poetry and the following time, Reginalds R. i. I, Áns R. 7. 2, Sturlgs R. Sigurðar Þögla R. 5. 4, Rímur af Ill Verra og Vest, 4, 3, Jarln*

4, 5, 11, 3, Dínus R. 2. 4, Konraðs R. 7. 5;—all these in vellum and greater part of them belonging to the 15th century. Poets of the 16th century (before 1612), Róllants R. 9. 6, 12. 1, Pontus R. (by Magnús Jóni, died 1591), Valdimars R., Ester R. 2. 2, 6. 3, Sýraks R. 1. 2, 6. 2, 12. 1, 2, from the first half of the 17th century, Grett. R., Flores R. 3. 9, 2, Króka Refs R. 1. 7, Lykla Pétrs R. 4. 2, 12. 1, Apollonius R. 3, Flovents R. 6. 3, Sjö Meistara R. 1. 7, 2. 1, 3. 8;—all in MS. In these many other references, the poets speak of the art, skill, ruses, or, if they are in that mood, the obscure puerilities and empty phrases of the ada, the artificial phraseology as taught and expounded by Snorri; and wherever the name occurs (previous to the year 1643) it only refers to Snorri's book, and such is still the use of the word in Icel.; hence compounds such as Eddu-lauss, adj. void of Eddic art; Eddu-borinn, part. very full of Eddic phrases; Eddu-kenningar, f. pl. Eddic circumlocutions, Kötlu Draumr 85, e. g. when the head is called the 'sword of metal,' the sword the 'fire or torch of Odin,' etc.; Eddu-kendr = ludborinn; Eddu-bagr, adj. a bungler in the Eddic art, etc. The Icel. top Brynjólf Sveinsson in the year 1643 discovered the old mythological poems, and, led by a fanciful and erroneous suggestion, he gave to that book the name of Sæmundar Edda, the Edda of Sæmund; hence originate modern terms the Old or Poetical and New or Prose Edda; in foreign languages Eddic has been ever since used in the sense of plain and artless, such as is contained in these poems, opposed to the artificial, which they call Scaldic (Skald being Icel. for a poet); but this has no foundation in old writers or tradition. Further explanation of this subject may be seen in Ersch and Gruber's Encyclopedia, s. v. Graagaas.

EDIK, n. [from Lat. acidum or acetum; A. S. eed; Germ. essig; edik];—vinegar (qs. acidum vini); the word is modern in Icel., borrowed from Danish, and probably first used in Math. xxvii. 48; edik galli blandað, Pass. 33. 1, 2.

EFLA (eyðla, O. H. L. 27), u. f. [old Swed. yðbla], a viper, Hkr. 1. 3.

EFLA, in compds [from Germ. edel-, Dan. ædel-], noble, Pass. 48. 6, (rare mod.)

ÖLLI, n., akin to and derived from óðal, q. v.; old MSS. also always the form öðli (eyðli, D. I. l. c.), Fms. x. 301, Hom. 47. 118, Greg. 48. 1. L. 86, Eluc. 16, Hkr. i. 225, Hbl. 9. Bs. i. 335, 342; öðli is more modern, but öðli is still preserved: 1. nature; männligt e., human nature or character, 623. 19, Eb. 110, Fms. x. 301; náttúrligt e., human nature, Mag. (Fr.); vera í e. sínu, to be in one's own nature or frame of mind, Fs. 59; eptir e., natural, ordinary, Fms. iii. 118; móti e., against e., extraordinary; með líkindum ok e., Edda 69; undrúðusk er jörðin [yrfin ok fuglarnir höfðu saman e. í sumum hlutum, 144 (pref.)]; öðli náttúra (natúra) are used synonymously, id.; engla öðli, the nature of angels, Eluc. 16; arnar öðli, the eagle's nature, Hom. 47; allt mánna öðli, Greg. 48; öðrlez (= öðllis) skepna, O. H. L. 86. 2. birth, extraction, in the alliterative phrases, ætt ok öðli, Fms. i. 149; þar var Valskr (Welsb) at ætt ok öðli, vii. 56; Danskr at öðli, Daniðskir, Hom. 118; nafn ok öðli, name and family, Hbl. 9: the phrase, da-öðli, for ever and ever, D. I. i. 266: in mod. usage, frá álda öðli, from the birth of time, from the beginning, only used of 'past time'; þan. 'fra Arildstid' is probably a corruption of the same phrase. 3.

ÖFNA, Lat. letus, Mar. 156. COMPS: öðlis-fræði, f. physic, (mod.) öðlis-hættir, m. pl. constitution, Bb. 2. 14. öðlis-skapan, n. and öðlis-skepna, u. f. one's nature, Fms. v. 216, Hom. 123. ÖÐLUBORINN, part. noble-born, well-born, Hkr. ii. 135. ÖÐLIGR, adj. (-liga, adv.), natural, proper. ÖÐLINGR, m. = öðlingr, poet. an 'etheling'. ÖÐLINGS, adj., probably corrupt, as a viper (?), Hdl. 45. ÖÐUR or öða, which is the more freq. form in mod. use, conj., [Goth. au; A. S. oððe; Engl. or; Germ. oder];—or: joining two nouns, or adjectives, hold edr blóð, heitr öða káldr, illr öða góðr, etc., esp. of the pronouns annaðhvárt, hvárt, eitþer; héraðsæktir e. utanferðir, 89; slikr vetr öða verri, Ísl. ii. 138; kaupmenn e. formeinu, Fms. i. 1. Blálandi öðr Arabia, Bb. 468; kirkjum öðr klaustrum, H. E. i. 1. Skógum öðr í öðrum fylsum, Fms. iv. 384; skjóta e. kasta, leggva e. leggja, Sks. 430; fyrr e. síðar, sooner or later, Hkr. ii. 1.

ÖÐUR in comparison of two unlike things, the two things are connected with the disjunctive öð instead of the copulative ok, where the latter may use and, e. g. the proverb, sitt er hvað gefa öðr görfileiki, a difference between luck and wit; er úglíkt at hafa með sér góða öðr ok hrausta öðr einhleypinga, Ísl. ii. 325; úglíkr er þessi öða hinn þessi is unlike and the first one, Mar. (Fr.); mun nokkurt allíkt, kaup Bersa öðr stuldir Þórarins, i. e. can one compare the valour and the thievishness of Þorarin? Korm. 142. ÖÐUR after a comparative, or even, sonner; ek em eigi verri riddari en Salomon konungur, okkurri betri, I am no worse a knight than king S., nay, rather somewhat better, Þidr. 161; eigi síðr, ... öðr nokkrum mun heldr, not less, rather a little more, Barl. 97; öðrwise, else,—ella, lykt skalt landvera fyrir sumarmáli, öðr. . . , N. G. L. ii. 106 (rare): ellipt = enn, meta hvárt þau sé meiri, öðr hennar föng sé, Js. 61. ÖÐUR denoting a query, exclamation, abrupt sentence, or the like, as Engl. or, what, but; ek heiti Auðgisl, öðr er tíu Hallfróðr, my name is A., or art thou Hallfróðr? Fms. ii. 80; ek heiti Öundur, ... öða hvert ætt þit at fara, but whither do you think of going? 81; nú vil ek gera at skapi þínu, öðr hvar skulum vit á leita? Nj. 3; sagði, at þeir mundi vera menn stórlátir, öðr hvat þeir mundi fyrir ætlask, Eg. 17; öðr með hverjum föstu nordan? Finnb. 256; vituð ér enn, öðr hvat? Vsp. 22, 31, 38, 39.

ÖÐUR, adv. still, yet, older form instead of 'enn,' only in poetry; öðr of sér, öðr still þá to see, i. e. the next thing is ..., Haustl. 14; stöð öðr í hausi, stood, i. e. remains, still in his head, 19.

ÖÐUR, A. neut. subst., older form if, Barl. 114, 124, Hkv. l. c., Vellekla l. c., Hkv. Hjörv. 33;—doubt, used in plur., hver sé if, what doubt can there be? Vellekla: it still remains in the phrase, mér er til efs, I doubt; en þar sem ef er á, wherever it is doubtful, K. Á. 28; hvervetna þar sem ef er á nokkuru máli, 204; ekki er til efs, at þeir menn ríða at grindhlöi, it cannot be doubted, that ..., Lv. 19; samílig til efs, dubiously good, rather bad, Vm. 55; utan ef, without doubt, Fms. vii. 37, Stj. 421; fyrir utan allt ef, H. E. i. 519, Barl. l. c.

ÖÐUR conj. [Goth. ibai; A. S. and Scot. gif; Engl. if; O. H. G. ifu; Germ. ob; lost in Swed. and Dan.];—if, in case; en ef þit eigit erlingja, Nj. 3; *ef eigi (unless) væri jafnhugaðr sem ek em, 264; ef þú átt þrjár orrostur við Magnús konung, Fms. vi. 178; ef hann er varmr, if he is warm, 655 xxx. 1: very freq. as a law term = in case that, Grág., N. G. L.; en ef þeir gjalda eigi, þá, i. 127; en ef (MS. en) þeir vilja eigi festa, id. ÖÐUR in poetry often with subj. (as in Engl.); inn þú bjóð, ef Eiríkr sé, if it be Eric, bid him come in, Em. 1; nálgastu mik, ef þú megir, if thou may'st, Gm. 53; vega þú gakk, ef þú reidr sér, if thou be wroth, Ls. 15; *ef Gunnars missi, Akv. 11; ef hann at yðr lygi, Am. 31; ef sér geta mætti, Hm. 4; heilindi sitt ef maðr hafa nái (better than náir), 67; ellipt. passages where 'if' is omitted, but the subj. retained, v. Lex. Poët.; skór er skapaðr illa öðr skapt sé rangt (= ef skapt sé rangt), Hm. 127; but indic. sometimes occurs, ef hann freginn er, 30; ef þitt æði dugir (indic.) ok þú Vafþrúðnir vitir (subj.), Vþm. 20: in prose the subj. is rare, and only in peculiar cases, e. g. nú munu vér á þá hættu leggja, ef (if, i. e. granted, supposed that) ek ráða ok binda ek við hann vináttu, Fms. iv. 82; ok bæta um þat, ef konunginum hafi yfirgeft, xi. 283; þat var háttir Erlings, ef úvinir hans kæmi fyrir hann, vii. 319; en skotið á þá, ef þeir færi nær meginlandi, viii. 419; ef ek lifi ok mega ká ráða, Edda 34.

ÖÐUR conj. if, whether, Germ. ob, with indic. or subj.; sjá nú, ef Jakob leysir hann af þessum böndum, 655 xxx. 3; þá spyr Frigg, ef sú kona vissi, then Frigg asks, if the woman knew, Edda 37; hann kom opt á mál við konung, ef hann mundi vilja bæta Þórólfr, Eg. 106; Egill spurði, ef hann vildi upp ór gröfinni, 234; at Bölverki þeir spurðu, ef hann væri með böndum kominn, Hm. 109; hitt vil ek fyrst vita, ef þú fróðr sér, Vþm. 6; vittu ef þú hjálpir, see if thou canst help, Og. 5:—this sense is now obsolete, and 'hvárt' (hvort) is used instead.

ÖÐUR, adv. in old writers usually spelt with i, ifa; efa occurs in Nj. 207, Hkr. ii. 326, Sks. 153, Stj. 256, Fms. ii. 42, iii. 115, vi. 184, Al. 43, Grett. 110 A, Bs. ii. 169, etc.; in mod. usage always with e:—to doubt, with acc.; engi ifar þat, Fms. x. 319: the phrase, efa sik, to besitate, Grett. l. c.; skulu þér eigi e. yðr (doubt), at ... Nj. 307: used as neut. to feel a doubt, ifi þér nokkut, at, Fms. v. 38, Hkr. l. c., 623. 33; ifa (efa) um e-t, to doubt about a thing, Hkr. i. 223, Grág. ii. 47. Fms. ii. 283, v. 37, vi. 184. 2. reflex., efask (ifask) í e-u, to doubt or besitate in a thing; í því má engi maðr ifask, at ..., Sks. 272 B; ekki efumk ek í því, 153, Stj. l. c.; Freysteinn efaðisk í hvárt ..., F. was in doubt, whether ..., Fms. iii. 115; *þér efisk í um þeirra almátt, ii. 42: efask um e-t, to doubt about a thing, x. 392; hvárt ifisk ér um ok hræðisk, Níðrst. 2. ÖÐUR absol. to doubt, besitate, Str. 22; statt upp ok ifask alls ekki, Hom. 119. ÖÐUR with gen., efask e-s, to change one's mind in a matter, Grág. i. 312, 313.*

ÖÐUR, ifan, f. (almost always with i; efan, H. E. l. c.), doubt, besitation, Barl. 149, H. E. i. 396, Bær. 14, Hom. 23. COMP: efanar-lauss, adj. undoubted, Stj., 655 xxvii. 2: neut. as adv. undoubtedly, Fms. ix. 347. El. 2, Str. 35, K. A. 202.

ÖÐUR, efan-laust, n. adj. undoubtedly, Hom. 15 (spelt ifan).

ÖÐUR, efan-leikr, m. doubtfulness, Skálda 188.

ÖÐUR, efan-ligr (ifan-ligr), adj. doubtful, Skálda 188, Ld. 58, Fms. x. 317, 369 (in the last two passages spelt with i).

ÖÐUR, efa, m., in old writers almost always if:—doubt, Greg. 37, Fms. iii. 8, x. 392, Hkr. i. 223; vera ifa, to be in doubt, Mar. 17; enn er eptir ifi í hug minum, 623. 26; án ifa (efa), without doubt, Fms. x. 336, Skálda 210: suspicion, Fms. x. 260. COMPS: efan-lauss (ifan-lauss), adj. undoubted, clear, Nj. 87: neut. as adv. undoubtedly, Grág. ii. 189. ÖÐUR, efa-lausligr, adj. id., Bs. i. 263. ÖÐUR, efa-samr, ifað-samr, efað-samligr, adj. doubtful, Al. 5, Stj. 172. ÖÐUR, efa-samliga, adv. doubtfully, Bs. ii. 153. ÖÐUR, efa-semð and efa-semi, f. doubt, Bs. i. 272. ÖÐUR, efa-sök, f. a doubtful case, Grág. i. 73.

ÖÐUR, EFJA, u. f. [Swed. äffa], mud, ooze, Fms. vi. 164, Hrafn. 26. ÖÐUR, EFLA, d. [af and afi]; to strengthen: I. act., to make strong, build; efa veggja, to build walls, 655 xxv. 1; létu þeir efa at nyju Danavirki, they restored the Danish wall, Fms. i. 121. β. to found, raise, endow; efa stað, kirkju, to endow or raise a church, bisbopric, Barl. 65, Fms. iv. 110; e. bui, to set up one's house, Band. (MS.) 3; milit., e. her, lið, to raise troops, Fms. v. 279; e. flokk, to raise a party, 140; e. öfrið, to raise a rebellion, make war, xi. 268; e. e-n, to aid, side with one, in a fight or lawsuit; efdi Dofri hann síðan til ríkis í Noregi, Bård. 164; ok hét honum líðveizlu sínni at hann skyldi e. Steinar, Eg. 722; e. e-n til rangs máls, to help one in a wrong case, Js. 8; Danir höfðu þá herrana eftir upp á Svíaríki, Fms. x. 50; það liðit e. sik, Fagrsk. ch. 179. γ. to perform solemnly; e. heit, to make a vow, Gísl. 90; e. blót, to perform a sacrifice, Nj. 158; e. at brullaupi, to hold a wedding, Fms. ix. 21; poët., e. dáð (dáð efiir, a hero); e. tafl, to play a game, Orkn. (in a verse), Lex. Poët. δ. neut. to be able; sem vér efum ok orkum, Stj. 149; sem þú efiir ok orkar, id., 186, (rare.)

II. reflex. to grow strong; hversu staðirn hefir efið ok magnask, Bs. i. 59; hann fann at mótstöðuminn hans efiðusk, grew strong; eflask at her, liði, to gather, raise troops, Gísl. 7, Fms. i. 199, vii. 23; síðan var efiðr (raised) flokkur í móti honum, iv. 140; eflask til ríkis, to win a kingdom, get a kingdom by force of arms, Bård. 165; eflask við e-n (poët.) = mægjask, to marry into one's family, Hdl. 15.

ef-lauss and if-lauss, adj. undoubted, Greg. 25, Mart. 121, Fas. ii. 539. efling, f. growth, increase in strength and wealth, Bret., Greg. 43; strength, help, assistance, Glúm. 346, 347, Ld. 88, Hkr. iii. 185, Mork. 128.

efiir, m. a helper, promoter, Lex. Poët.

EFNA, d. (að, Nj. 189, Fms. ix. 453, xi. 286), [Swed. änna; A. S. efnan, efnan, = to perform]—to perform, chiefly to fulfil a vow or the terms agreed upon; e. orð sín, to keep one's word, Fms. i. 4; þat efiðr Gunnarr, Nj. 45; þat skal ek e. sem ek hét þar um, Fms. i. 217; e. sætt, to fulfil an agreement, Nj. 258; Ólafur efiir vel við ambáttina, Olave behaved well to the bandmaid, Ld. 156. β. reflex. to turn out so and so, come to a certain issue; efiðisk þat ok vel, Nj. 72; þat efiðisk (better efiðisk) opt illa, it comes to a bad end, 189.

II. efna, að, to prepare for a thing, make arrangements; ekki er þess getið at hann efiðaði til um fégjaldit, Fms. xi. 286; hann efiðaði þar til vetrsetu, x. 1; þeir efiðu til vetrsetu í Oslo, iv. 453; þar hafði Ólafur konungur efiðat til kaupstaðar, king O. had there founded a town, iv. 93; efiðaði Ólafur konungur þá til ágætrar veizlu, king O. made a great feast, ii. 133; þeir Ingjaldr efið þar seid, Ingjaldr made a great sacrifice, feast, Fs. 19.

efnaðr, adj. rich, having ample means.

efnd, f. fulfilment of a pledge, promise, Sturl. iii. 170, Fms. vi. 29, vii. 121.

EFNI, n. [Swed. änne = stuff, materia, and Dan. ævne = achievement]: —a stuff, originally like Lat. materia, timber; and so the stuff or material out of which a thing is wrought; auðskæf mæðrar e., Ad. 16; at allir hlutir væri smíðaðir af nokkru efi, that all things were wrought (created) of some stuff, Edda 147 (pref.); skapa af engu efi, to create from nothing (of God), Fms. i. 304; efi (materials) til garðbóta, Grág. ii. 263, Sks. 287 (of a cloth); ek em görr af ústyrku efi, I am made of frail stuff, 543, Barl. 140, Stj. 17, 67; smíðar-efni, materials; efi-tré, a block, tree; efi í ljá, orf, etc., or of any piece fitted as materials.

β. in a personal sense; manns-efni, a promising young man; karls-efni, a thorough man, a nickname, Landu.; the proverb, engi veit hvar sæls manns efi sitr, of youths of whom no one can tell what may be hidden in them; þegn e. = manns-efni, Stor. 11; gott manns-e., goit bónda-e., promising to be an able man; and on the other hand, ónytt, illt manns-e., in whom there is nothing. γ. merely in temp. sense, applied to persons designate or elect; konungs-e., a crown prince; biskups-e., a bishop-elect; brúðar-e., a bride-elect; konu-e., one's future wife.

δ. a subject, of a story, book, or the like, Lat. argumentum, plot; yrkis e., Íd. 11; e. kvæða, a plot, subject for poetry; sögu-e., a subject for tales or history; in old writers it rarely occurs exactly in this sense: the contents of a written thing, bréfs-e., efi í bók; hence efnis-laust, adj. void, empty writing; efnis-leysa, u, f. emptiness in writing; Björn hafði ort flim um þóðr, en þau vóru þar efi í, at . . ., but that was the subject of the poem, that . . ., Bjarn. 42; þótti mönnum þar mikit um, hversu mikil efi þar vóru til seld, i. e. people thought the tale interesting, Ld. 200; eigi með sönnu efi, falsely, with untrue statements, Sturl. iii. 305; hvárt efi þeir höfðu í um rögut, how they had made (mixed) their lies up, Eg. 59; meir en efi sé til seld, i. e. (related) more than what was true, the tale was overdone, Bs. i. 137; talar af sama efi (subject) sem fyrrum, Fms. ix. 252.

2. metaph. a matter, affair; til sanninda um sagt e., Dipl. i. 8; segir konungi frá öllu þessu e., Sturl. i. 3; er þat merkjanda í þessu e., Rb. 250; fátt er betr látið enn efi eru til (a proverb), few things are reported better than they really are, Band. 2; fyrir hvert efi, for this reason. β. a cause, reason; látask báðir af því e., both died from this cause, Ísl. ii. 197; með hverju e. Sturla hefði þessa fórt, what was the reason of S.'s doing so? Sturl. ii. 132; gleði e., sorgar e., matter of joy, sorrow, etc.; the proverb, en hvert mál, er maðr skal dæma, verðr at líta á tilgörd með efnum (causes), Eg. 417; fyrir þat efi (for that reason) keypti hann landit, Hrafn. 22, H. E. i. 471; en þetta efi (cause) fundu þeir til, Sks. 311. γ. a state, condition, affair; Rútr sagði allt e. sitt, Nj. 4; í úvænt efi, a bopeless state, Band. (MS.) 13, Ísl. ii. 225; ek veit eigi görla efi Gunnlaugs, I know not how Gunlaug's matters stand, Helgi kvæð eigi þat efi, at láta lausan þjóf sjólkunnigan, H. so it would never do, to let a thief and wizard go, Sturl. i. 62; ef þú efi, if that be so, Grág. i. 76; sér, hvers efi í eru, be saw how stood, Band. (MS.) 11; sagði hver efi í vóru, said how matters, Nj. 99; mér þykir sem málu várum sé komið í únytt efi, 150; munu líl efi í, some mischief may have happened, Fs. 144; þungt e., Karl. 402, Bs. i. 815; e-t gengr, kemr svá til efnis, þá and so, Mar. (Fr.); skipta sitt líf í betra e., to repent, id.; þera til bappen, Pr. 410.

3. plur. means, ability; minni nytjammenn af efnum en hann, Sturl. i. 126; eptir sínum efnum, to the best ability, Hom. 123; ok bjoggusk um eptir þeim efnum sem þeir h Orkn. 360; sjá þér núkkud ráð (possibillity) eðr efi vár (means) grunar mik, at þórorlíf muni eigi görr kunna at sjá efi sín, i. e. that Tb. will overrate his own means, power, Eg. 76; þá væri þat í vóru máli, it would be a chance for us, Fms. ix. 239; þar vó efi önnur, there was no other chance, xi. 144; nú eru þess eigi that be impossible, Grág. ii. 140; hér eru engin efi til þess at e svikja hann, i. e. I will by no means deceive him, it is out of the that I should do so, Eg. 60.

β. in mod. usage, means, property COMPS: efnafæð, f. want of means, Bs. i. 457. efnalaust, wanting means. efnaleysi, n. want of means, Hrafn. 5. lítill, adj. poor; vera vel við efi, to be a well-to-do man. skortir, m. shortness of means, Bs. i. 525.

efni-ligr, adj. (-ligr, adv.), hopeful, promising, e. g. of a yo. 39, Eg. 147, 509, Fms. i. 17, v. 263, Orkn. 202; efniligt ráð issue, Fms. xi. 21; söguð allt hit efniligasta, made a flattering ep. ix. 488; ekki efniligt, not advisable, Sturl. i. 186.

efni-mark, n. a sign, 732. 17.

efning, f. keeping (= efnid), Grág. i. 316.

efni-tré, n. a block, timber, Gísl. 146, Fas. ii. 210, Stj. 618, Mo.

EFRI, compar.; EFSTR, superl.; older form öfri, Hkr. Ó. H. ch. 248 (in a verse), Greg. 42, N. G. L. i. 10, 384, Íb. 5, H. öfstr, Fms. x. 394, 686 C. 2, Ls. 50, 51, Hbl. 18, Edda 115, 116, compar. and superl. without the positive [as Lat. superior, superiore], but formed from the root syllable 'of-', cf. apar, of. 1 mod. MSS. therefore mostly spell with ö, a vowel change of o; 1 form, as well as that of most MSS., is with e, efri, efstr, Am. 23.

I. the upper, higher; the phrase, þera efa skjöld, the higher shield, i. e. carry the day, Fms. x. 394 (MS. æira); neðri = upper, at Mosfelli enu öfra, Íb. 5; the adverb. phrase denoting the upper or inland road, opp. to the shore; allt hit e. Eg. 58; sumir fóru til efra til Þríhyrnings-hálsa, Nj. 207; hitra Upplönd, Fms. i. 22; by land, opp. to the sea, Hkr. ii. 8; of part of a building, opp. to fremri or þar part nearest the door in the air, opp. to the earth, Sks. 115; superl. efiðr, the bind, liðr, the bindermost joint, 623. 32; neut. efiðr as adv. highest most, efið á stólpanum, 655 xxv. 2. β. metaph. superior, í öllum öfri er, Greg. 43.

II. the latter, last part:

á efra aldri, in the decline of life, Eg. 4; inn öfri, the latter, opp. N. G. L. i. 342; efi hluti sumars, in the decline of summer, Ólafs-messa hin öfri (= síðari), the latter (i. e. second) day of (viz. Aug. 3), opp. to Ólafs-messa fyrri (July 29), N. G. L. i. dómr, the last judgment, Stj. 58; öfsti dómr, id., 686 l. c.; e. the last week of Lent = the Passion week, Orkn. 386, Mar. 78; Paska, the last day in Easter, N. G. L. i. 348; efiða bæ, the la 623, 50; þeim gef ek erni efnum bráðir, Fas. i. 429 (in a verse), sinni, for the last time, 227; þó vér ritim hana öfri en að 116.

2. loc., where aptari and aptastr or eptri and epts common words; fyrstr and efiðr are opposed, foremost and last, Ls. 1. c.; sá fyrstr er efiðr gekk inn, Grág. i. 32.

EFSA, t, [cp. Swed. efsing = thrum, stump], to cut; e. e-m síl, to one's head off, Sighvat, (án. ley.)

egðir, m., poët. an eagle.

Egðskr, adj. from Agðir, a county in Norway, Fms., Landu.

EGG, n. [A. S. æg; Engl. egg; Swed. ägg; Dan. æg; Ger. egg, Eg. 152, Grág. ii. 346; arnar-e., æðar-e., álptar-e., hrafnis-kriur-e., etc., an eagle's egg, eider duck's, swan's, raven's, etc., also, höggorms egg, a snake's egg: eggja-hvíta, f. the white egg, eggja-rauda, f. or eggja-blómi, m. the yolk; verpa eggjum, to ligggja á eggjum, to sit on eggs, brood; koma, skrifa ör egg, of to come out of the egg, Fagrsk. 4 (in a verse); ein egg er glæð stropað þálf-baðað, ungað þáttað; vind-egg, a wind-egg, á fúl-egg, a rotten egg; vera lostinn fíln egg, proverb of a sad looking fellow that looks as if one had pelled him with rotten 39 (in a verse); fullt hús matar og finnst hvergi dyrnar describing an egg; but fullt hús drykkjar og finnst hvergi dy berry: eggja-fata, f. a bucket in which to gather eggs: eggj an 'egg-cake', omelet: eggja-leit, f. a gathering of eggs, etc. EGG, f., gen. sing. and nom. pl. eggjar, old dat. eggju, [Lat. acies; A. S. egg; Engl. edge; Hel. eggja; lost in Ger;

g; Dan. æg]:—an edge, Eg. 181, 183, Nj. 136: the phrase, með oddi eggju, with point and edge, i. e. by force of arms, with might and main, O. H. ch. 33, Grág. ii. 13, Nj. 149, 625, 34; oddr ok egg, 'cut and rust,' Hom. 33; drepa í egg, to blunt: as the old swords of the Scandinavians were double-edged (only the sax had a single edge), egg is freq. used in pl.; takattu á eggjum, eitr er í báðum, touch not the edges, poison in both of them, Fas. i. 522 (in a verse); the phrase, deya eggjar, vide yfa: the sword is in poetry called eggjum-skarpr, m. with sharp edges; and the blade, tongue of the bill, Lex. Poët.; sverðs-eggjar, sword; knífs-egg, óxar-egg, the edge of a knife, axe. 2. metaph., the ridge of a mountain, Hkr. ii. 44; reisa á egg, to set (a ne) on its edge, opp. to the flat side, Edda 40: eggja-broddr, m. an red spike, Fms. x. 355.

egg-bitinn, part. bitten, smitten by an edge, Bs. i. 644.

egg-dauðr, adj. slain by the edge of the sword, Lex. Poët.

egg-elningr, adj. having an ell-long edge (of a scythe), Grág. i. 501.

egg-farvegr, m. the print of an edge, Þórd. 54 new Ed.

egg-fránn, adj. sharp-edged, Lex. Poët.

egg-hvass, adj. sharp, Lex. Poët.

eggjng, f. an eggging on; eggjngar-fífl, n., v.l. for eggjunar-fífl, 52.

eggja, að, to egg on, incite, goad, with acc. of the person, gen. of the thing; (e. e-n e-s) and er þá eggjaði hins vesta verks, Nj. 213; allmjökntu eggjaðr hafa verið þessa verks, Fs. 8; e. lið, a milit. term, to outrage, cheer troops just before battle, Fms. v. 73; proverb, illt er at tilbígjarnan, 'tis not good to egg on an overbearing man, Grett. 91; nún á e-t, to egg one on to do a thing, Nj. 21, Pass. 22. 9: absol., er gráta á annari stundu er eggja á annari, Þorst. St. 52. 2. reflex., nún at eggjask, to yield to another's eggging on; eigi mun konungr láta at njask um öll niðingsverk þín, Eg. 415; Haraldr konungr lét er eggjask, ts. xi. 23; eggjask upp á e-n, to thrust oneself upon one, provoke one, m. 120: recipr. to egg one another on in a battle, eggjuðusk nú fast nirtveggju, Nj. 245.

eggjan (eggjun), f. an eggging on, Fms. v. 75, vii. 260, Eg. 473, 623.

COMPS: eggjunar-fífl, n. a fool, a cat's paw, Nj. 52; vide þingar-fífl, eggjunar-orð, n. pl. eggging words, Fms. ii. 290, viii. 219.

eggjari, a, m. an eggger on, inciter, Barl. 52.

egg-leikr, m., poet. the play of edges, battle, Gkv. 2. 31.

egg-móðr, adj., poet. epithet of the slain in a battle-field; e. valr, um by the sword, Hðm. 31, Gm. 53; no doubt from má, to mow, not in móðr, weary.

egg-skurnr, n. (mod. egg-skurmr, m.), an egg-shell, Edda 12, Stj. 10.

egg-sléttir, adj. 'edge-plain', i. e. quite plain, of a meadow to be mown.

egg-steinnr, m. an edged, sharp stone, Edda (Ub.) 290.

egg-teinnr, m. 'edge-rim', one of the two rims running along the ancient swords, with a hollow between them; blánadr 'amarr' eggteinninnu, Nj. 1; svá at fal báða eggteina, the blade sank so deep that both edge-rims were hidden, 125, Ísl. ii. 55, Fas. ii. 415; ritadr gullstöfum fram eptir eggnum, of the sword of Charlemagne, Karl. 178.

egg-tíð, n. 'egg-tide', the egg-season (May), Edda 103.

egg-ver, n. 'egg-field', a place where the eggs of wild fowl are gathered quantities (cp. sel-ver, sild-ver, álpta-ver), Grág. ii. 263, 338, Jb. 217, 42: gathering eggs = varp, Bs. i. 350; eggvers-hólmi = varphólmi, 1.

egg-völur, m. the slope on the edge (as of scissors), Fbr. 142, Bs. ii. 94.

egg-punnr, adj. ibin-edged; e. óx, Ann. 1362.

eggþakr, adj. Egyptian; Egyptaland, n. Egypt, Al., Fms., etc.

GNÁ, d, [agn], to bait, with dat. of the bait, Edda 154, Hým. 22: prey for which the bait is set either in acc., e. örriða, to bait for trout, hvat; e. veiði, to set bait for the prey, Sturl. i. 18; or in mod. use, e. r fisk: even used, e. neti (better acc.), to cast a net, Fms. ii. 140; e. rur, gildru, Mar. passim; egnd suara, Grett. (in a verse). 2.

graph, to provoke, Sks. 232, Fas. i. 39; reiði Drottins þá uppegnd er, s. 40. 3.

gning, f. = eggjan; egningar-kviðr, m. a kind of verdict, v. kviðr.

I and ey (cp. also æ), adv. [cp. Gr. aíov; Lat. aevum; Goth. aivus = niy, everlasting time: hence are derived the O. H. G. eva, A. S. æ, eo, in the metaph. sense of law (the law being symbolical of what is lasting), which word still remains in the mod. Germ. ebe = marriage; hence the mod. Germ. echt = genuine, mod. Dan. ægte, mod. Icel. ekta, (Grimm)]:—ever; the phrase, ei ok ei, or ey ok ey, for ever and ever; gott ey gömlum mönnum, gott ey ungunum mönnum, Landn. 45; angis muntu hafa þau ei ok ei, Hom. 15, Al. 120; hans ríki stendr þú ei, 160; Guðs ei lífanda, Blas. 43: the proverbs, ey sér til gyldis f. Hm. 146; ey gettr kvíkr kíi, 69; ey lýsir mön af mari, Vþm. 12; það hún halda, Hkv. 1. 4; ey var mér týlja, Akv. 27; lífa ey, Hm. 15; er ok ey eða ei þat er aldrei þýrt, Skúlda 172; ei at vera, 677. 3.

ains sama var ey at ætla, Bs. i. 108. II. [Dan. ei, Swed. ej], not, properly a contraction from ei-gi, in the MSS. freq. spelt ei or ey is often used in mod. writers, but not in speech; it is also used now then in Edd. of old writers, though it is doubtful whether it is there genuine. 2. ey in a negative sense; ey manni, no man, Vþm. 55; vide eyvit.

EIÐ, n. an isthmus, neck of land; mjótt e., Eg. 129; rastarlangt eið, Fms. ix. 402; hence the names of places, Satíris-eið, the Mull of Cantire, Orkn. 152; Skalp-eið, Scalpa (in Orkney), 244; Eíðar (a farm), Eíðaskógr (in Sweden), Eíða-fjörðr, Eíðs-berg, Eíðs-vágr, Eíðs-völlum (in Norway), Eíð = Aith (in Shetland).

EIÐA, u, f. [Ulf. aípei; Finn. aiti], a mother, Edda 108; an obsolete word, which only occurs once or twice in old poetry; perhaps akin to edda, q. v.

eið-bróðir, m. an oath-brother, confederate, Fms. ix. 294, Bær. 16: metaph., arnar e., the oath-brother of the eagle, the raven, Fagrsk 4 (in a verse).

eið-bundinn, part. bound by oath, Hkr. iii. 26.

eið-byggjar, m. pl. inhabitants of an isthmus, Fms. viii. 194.

eið-fall, n. a law term, failing in one's oath, Grág. ii. 22, Glúm. 387, K. þ. K. 146.

eið-falli, a, m. one who fails in an oath, N. G. L. i. 431.

eið-færa, ð, a law term, to charge one with a thing by an oath, Grág. i. 244, 245, Sturl. iii. 98, (in a case of alimentation.)

eið-færing and eið-færsla, f. charging by an oath, Grág. i. 235, 244, 245.

eið-færr, adj. able, competent to take an oath, Fb. i. 555.

eið-hjálp, f. a Norse law term, 'oath-help', metaph. last help, issue; svá er, segir Þórarinn, ok er þó nokkur í eiðhjálpin, Band. (MS.) 16, H. E. i. 407, v. l.

eið-laust, u, adj. without an oath, K. þ. K. 72.

EIÐR, m. [Ulf. aírs; A. S. æð; Engl. oath; North. E. aith; Swed. ed; Dan. eed; Germ. eid]:—an oath; vinna eið, but also sverja eið, to take an oath, to swear, Glúm. 387, Nj. 36, Grág., Sdm. 23; ganga til eiða, to proceed to the taking an oath, Nj., Grág.; eiðar, orð ok sari, Vsp. 30; fullr e., a full, just oath, Grett. 161; rjúfa eið, to break an oath (eið-rofi); perjury is mein-særi, rarely mein-eiðr (Swed.-Dan. men-ed, Germ. mein-eid); eiðar úserir, false, equivocal oaths, Sks. 358; hence the proverb, lítið skýldi í eiði úsert, with the notion that few oaths can bear a close scrutiny, Grett. 161; trúnaðar-e., hollustu-e., an oath of fealty, allegiance: cp. the curious passages in Sturl. i. 66 and iii. 2, 3; dýr eiðr, a solemn oath; sáluhjálpar-e., sverja dýran sáluhjálpar-eið, to swear an oath of salvation (i. e. as I wish to be saved). In the Norse law a man was discharged upon the joint oath of himself and a certain number of men (oath-belpers, compurgators, or oath-volunteers); oaths therefore are distinguished by the number of compurgators,—in grave cases of felony (treason etc.), tylptar-e., an oath of twelve; in slighter cases of felony, séttrar-e., an oath of six, (in N. G. L. i. 56, ch. 133, 'vj á hvára hönd' is clearly a false reading instead of 'iij,' three on each side, cp. Jb. þb. ch. 20); grímu-eiðr, a mask oath, a kind of séttrar-e.; lýfritrar-e., an oath of three; and lastly, ein-eiðr or eins-eiði, an oath of one, admissible only in slight cases, e. g. a debt not above an ounce; whence the old law proverb, eigi verðr einm eiðr alla, a single oath is no evidence for all cases), Sigvatr, Fms. iv. 375, v. l., Bjarn. 22, Nj. 13: other kinds of oaths, dular-e., an oath of denial; jafnaðar-e., an oath of equity, for a man in paying his fine had to take an oath that, if he were plaintiff himself, he would think the decision a fair one: vide N. G. L. i. 56, 254-256, 394, Jb. and Js. in many passages. In the Icel. law of the Commonwealth, oaths of compurgators are hardly mentioned, the kviðr or verdict of neighbours taking their place; the passage Glúm. ch. 24, 25 is almost unique and of an extraordinary character, cp. Sir Edmund Head's remarks on these passages in his notes to the Saga, p. 119, cp. also Sturl. iii. 2; but after the union with Norway the Norse procedure was partly introduced into Icel.; yet the Js. ch. 49 tries to guard against the abuse of oaths of compurgators, which led men to swear to a fact they did not know. As to the Icel. Commonwealth, it is chiefly to be noticed that any one who had to perform a public duty (lög-skil) in court or parliament, as judge, pleader, neighbour, witness, etc., had to take an oath that he would perform his duty according to right and law (baug-eiðr ring-oath, bók-eiðr gospel-oath, lög-eiðr lawful-oath), the wording of which oath is preserved in Landn. (Mantissa) 335, cp. Þórd. S. (Ed. 1860) p. 94, Band. (MS.) COMPS: eiða-brigði, n. breach of oath, Band. 6. eiða-fulting, n. an oath help, Fas. ii. 204. eiða-konur, f. pl. women as compurgators, Grett. 161. eiða-liði, n. men ready to take an oath, Eg. 503, referring to Norway, the men elected to an oath of twelve. eiða-mál, n. an oath affair, Sturl. iii. 2. eiða-sekt, f. a fine for an (unlawful) oath, N. G. L. i. 211. eiða-tak, n. giving security for an oath, bail, N. G. L. i. 314, 321. II. a pr. name, Landn.

eið-rof, n. breach of an oath, perjury, K. Á. 148.

eið-rofi (eið-rofa), a, m. a perjurer, violator of an oath, Fms. viii. 387, K. Á. 148, N. G. L. i. 152, 429, Edda 43.

Eið-sifjar, m. pl. 'Oath-sibs', the name of a confederation of kinglets in southern Norway: whence the name Eiðsifja-lög, n. pl. a collection of laws in N. G. L. i. The word is differently spelt, Heiðsifjar, Heiðsævi, etc. But the syllable eið- may be derived from eið, an isthmus, because their parliament was held on an isthmus, Eid, now called Eidsvold; vide Munch.

eið-spjall, n. delivery of an oath, in the Icel. law phrase, hlyða til eiðspjalls e-s, to listen to one's oath, Nj., Grág. i. 39, 76, etc.

eið-stafa, ad. to say the oath formula for another to repeat, D. N.

eið-stafir, m. the form or wording of an oath; sverja með þessum eiðstaf, Gpl. 7, Fms. iv. 53, viii. 150, x. 418.

eið-svari, a, m. a confederate, one bound by oath, Nj. 192: a liegeman bound by a hollustu-e., Orkn. 106, Fms. v. 44 (Hkr. ii. 333).

eið-særr, adj. such that it may be sworn to, absolutely true, Eg. 347 (in a verse, MS.; Ed. auðsært).

eið-unning, f. the taking an oath, Grág. i. 57.

eið-vandr, adj. 'oath-fast', religious as to an oath, Lex. Poët.

eið-varr, adj. cautious (conscientious) as to an oath, Ísl. ii. 98.

eið-vinning, f. = eiðunning, K. þ. K. 156.

eið-vætti, n. testimony on oath, Jb. 448.

EIGA, pret. átti; pret. subj. ætti, pres. eigi; pres. ind. á, 2nd pers. átt (irreg. eigr, Dipl. v. 24), pl. eignum, 3rd pers. pl. old form eigu, mod. eiga; imperat. eig and eiðu; sup. átt; with suffixed neg. pres. ind. 1st pers. ák-at, 2nd pers. átt-attu; pret. subj. ættim-a: [Gr. ἔχω; Goth. aigan; A. S. āgan; Hel. ēgan; O. H. G. eigan; Swed. äga; Dan. eje; Engl. to owe and own, of which the former etymologically answers to 'eiga,' the latter to 'eigna']:—to have, possess.

A. Acr. I. denoting ownership, to possess: I. in a proper sense; allt þat góz sem þeir eiga eðr eigandi verða, D. N. i. 80; hann eigr hálfá fjörðna, Dipl. v. 24; Björn hljóp þá á skútu er hann átti, Eb. 6; Starkaðr átti hest góðan, Nj. 89; þau áttu gnótt í bú, 257; hón á allan árf eptir mik, 3; áttí hón auð fjár, Ld. 20; ef annar maðr ferr með goðorð en sá er á, Grág. i. 159; annat vápnit, ok á þat þorbjörn, en þorgeaur á þetta, Ísl. ii. 341; eignir þær er fadir hans hafði átt, Eb. 4; í ríki því er Dana konungar höfðu átt þar lengi, Fms. xi. 301, Rb. 494, Eb. 54, 118, 256, 328, Sturl. ii. 60, Eg. 118; e. saman, to own in common, Grág. i. 199; ef tveir menn eiga bú saman, ii. 44; e. skuld (at e-m), to be in debt, Engl. to owe; ef er hann átti engar skuldir, if he owed no debts, i. 128; þar til átti honum (owed him) meistari þorgeirr ok þá mörk, D. N. iv. 288 (Fr.); e. fé undir e-m, to be one's creditor, Nj. 101; in mod. usage, e. fé hjá e-m, or ellipt., e. hjá e-m. 2. in a special sense; a. eiga konu, to have her to wife; hann átti Gró, Eb. 16; hann átti Ynghvild, 3; þorgerðr er (acc.) átti Vigfúss, . . . Geirriðr er (acc.) átti Þórlófr, 18; hann gekk at eiga þóru, he married Thora, id.; þuríði hafði hann ádr átta, Thorida had been his first wife, 42; enga vil ek þessa e., I will not marry any of these, Nj. 22; Björn átti þá konu er Valgerðr hét, 213, 257; fadir Hróðnyjar er átti Þorstein, Landn. 90; Ásdís átti síðar Skúli, S. was A.'s second husband, 88; þorgerðr er átti Önundur sjón, 89; Vigdís er átti þorbjörn enn digri, 87; Árnþrúðr er átti Þórir hersir, 66; Húngerðr er átti Svertingr, 61, 86, and in numberless passages: old writers hardly ever say that the wife owns her husband—the passages in Edda 109 (vide elja) and Nj. 52 (til lítils kemr mér at eiga hinn vaskasta mann á Íslandi) are extraordinary—owing to the primitive notion of the husband's 'jus possessionis' (cp. brúðkaup); but in mod. usage 'eiga' is used indiscriminately of both wife and husband; Icel. even say, in a recipr. sense, eigest, to own one another, to be married; þau áttust, they married; hann vildi ekki at þau ættist, hann bannaði þeim að eigest, he forbade them to marry:—to the ancients such a phrase was almost unknown, and occurs for the first time in K. Á. 114. β. eiga börn, to have children, of both parents; áttu þau Jófríðr tíu börn, J. and her husband had ten bairns, Eg. 708; hann átti dóttur eina er Unnr hét, Nj. 1; þau Þorstein ok Unnr áttu son er Stein hét, Eb. 10, Nj. 91, 257; áttu þau Þórhildr þrjá sonu, 30; e. móður, föður, to have a mother, father, Eb. 98; vænti ek ok, at þú eigr illan föður, id. γ. the phrase, e. heima, to have a home; þeir áttu heima austr í Mörk, Nj. 55; því at ek tek eigi heim í kveld, þar sem ek á heima út á Íslandi, 275; in mod. usage = to live, abide, in regard to place, cp. the questions put to a stranger, hvad heitir maðrinn? hvar áttu heima? used in a wider sense than búá. δ. eiga sér, to have, cp. 'havde sig' in Dan. ballads; Höskuldr átti sér dóttur er Hallgerðr hét, Nj. 3; ef hann á sér í vá veru, Hm. 25, (freq. in mod. use). 3. without strict notion of possession; e. vini, óvini, to have friends, enemies, Nj. 101; hverja líðveizlu skal ek þar e. er þú ert, what help can I reckon upon from thee? 100; e. ván e-s, to have hope of a thing, to reckon upon, 210; e. til, to have left; ekki eigu it annat til (there is nothing left for you) nema at biðja postulann, Jóh. 623, 22; in mod. usage e. til means to own, to have left; hann á ekkert til, he is void of means, needy; eiga góða kosti fjár, to be in good circumstances, Ísl. ii. 322; e. vald á e-u, to have within one's power, Nj. 265; the phrase, e. hlut at e-u, or e. hlut í e-u, to have a share, be concerned with; eptir þat átti hann hlut at við mótstöðumenn Gunnars, 101, 120; þar er þú ættir hlut at, where thou wast concerned, 119; mik uggr at hér muni eigi gefu-menn hlut í e., 179; hence ellipt., e. í e-u, to be engaged in, chiefly of strife, adversity, or the like; thus, e. í stríði, fátækt, baráttu, to live, be deep in struggle, want, battle, etc. II. denoting duty, right, due, obligation: 1. to be bound, etc.; þeir menn er fylgd áttu með konungi, the men who owed following to (i. e. were bound to the king's person, Fms. vii. 240; á ek þar fyrir at sjá, I am bound to that, Eg. 318; Tylptar-kviðr átti um at skilja, Eb. 48; þeir hvárt Njáli þætti nokkut e. at lýsa vigsök Gunnars, Nj. 117; n Sigvaldi, now is thy turn, now ought thou, Fms. xi. 109, Fs. 121 eigu (men ought) at spyrja at þingfesti, Grág. i. 19; þá á þar einskis meta, that verdict ought to be void, 59; þá á maðr á (c) út hér er ómagán á (who ought) fram at færa, 270; ef sá maðr þer jamnarga sem þeir eigu, as many as they ought to have, ii. 270; þá á maðr fé sitt, . . . þá á hann þat at fúnda, . . . þá á hann at gefgjafir, i. 202:—'eiga' and 'skal' are often in the law used indistinctly, but properly 'ought' states the moral, 'shall' the legal object—elska skalt þú föður þinn og móður, þú skalt ekki stela, which would be misplaced; sometimes it is merely permissive, gefa vingjafir at sér lifanda, er hann vill, a man 'may' wilst in life beg his friends, if he will, id.; maðr á at gefa barni sínu laungetnu t ef hann vill, fyrir ráð skaparfa sinna, er eigi meira nema erfingr; man 'may' bequeath to the amount of twelve ounces to his illegit child without leave of the lawful heir, etc., 203; ef þat á til at that is to happen, Fas. i. 11. 2. denoting claim, right, to entitled to, chiefly in law phrases; e. dóm, sakir, to own the case the lawful prosecutor; ok á sá þeirra sakir, er . . . Grág. i. 10; þeir eigi at lögum, or if they be not entitled to it, 94; e. mál á have a charge against one, Nj. 105; e. rétt á e-u, to own a right, rétt á á henni, who has a right to her, K. Á. 16; þeir sögðu þótti slíkr maðr mikinn rétt á sér e., such a man had a strong claim to redress, Nj. 105; hence the phrase, eiga óngan rétt á sé cannot claim redress for personal injury; þá eigu þeir eigi rétt á they have no claim to redress whatever, Grág. i. 261; e. sök, sá e-u, to have a charge against; þat er hann átti óngva sök á, saka-staði þar er hann þótti á eiga, 166; kalla Vermund eigi (n) selja sik, said V. had no right to sell them, Eb. 116; hence usage, eiga denotes what is fit and right, þú átt ekki að góra . . . ough not; eg ætti ekki, I ought not; in old writers eiga is strictly used in this sense, but denotes the legal rather than the right.

β. eiga fé at e-m (mod. e. hjá e-m), to be one's creditor, 90, 405, Band. 1 C: metaph. to deserve from one, ok áttu annar Nj. 113; e. gjafir at e-m, 213; in a bad sense, kváðusk mil þráni, they had much against Thrain, 138. γ. the law phrase, e. fært, to have the right to return, of a temporary exile, Nj. 251; skyli eigi e. fært út hingat, Grág. i. 119; ok á eigi þingreit allowed to go to the parliament, ii. 17; e. vigt, Grág., etc. II ing dealings or transactions between men (in a meeting, fight, the like), to keep, bold; þætti mér ráðliga at vér ættim einn fir Nj. 150; e. orrustu við e-n, to fight a battle, Fms. i. 5, Eg. 7; við e-n, to exchange blows, 297; e. vápna-viðskipti, id., Fms. ii. handsöl at e-u, to shake bands, make a bargain, x. 248; e. ráð to consult, hold a conference with, Nj. 127; e. tal við e-n, to converse with one, 129; e. mál við e-n, id., Grág. i. 10; e. fund, i. meeting, Nj. 158; e. þing, samkvámu, stefnu, to hold a meeting, þetta haust áttu menn rétt (a kind of meeting) fjölmenna, Eb. kaupstefnu, to hold a market, exchange, 56; e. féranðsóm, Grág. e. gott saman, to live well together, in peace and goodwill, Ld. 8; illt við e-n, to deal ill with, quarrel with, Nj. 98; e. búisfirir intercourse with neighbours, Njarð. 366; e. drykkju við e-n, cup-mate, Eg. 253; e. við e-n, to deal with one; ekki á ek þik, this is no business between thee and me, Nj. 93; gott vil að alla menn e., I would live in goodwill with all, 47; e. við e-n one; eignum verð ekki við þá elligar (in a hostile sense), else I us provoke them, 42; eðr hvárt vilst í Helgi e. við Lýting einn hans báða, 154; brátt fundu þeir, at þeir áttu þar eigi við sin m Ld. 64; Glúmr kváð hann ekki þurfa at e. við sik, G. said head need to meddle with him, Glúm. 338; e. um að vera, to be concerned ekki er við menn um at e., Nj. 97; þar sem við vini mína e., where my friends are concerned, 52; við færi er þá um at e. f eir einn, there are fewer to deal with, to fight, if K. be alone, 4; brögðotta áttu nú um, Fms. v. 263; ætla ek at oss mun léttar e. um við Svein einn, iv. 80; Sveinn svarar, at þeir áttu við ofri e., that they had to deal with odds, 165. β. almost as an verb; e. skilt (skiltit), to have stipulated; hafa gripina svá sem skilt, Fms. iv. 160; þat átta ek skiltit við þik, ii. 93; sem F skilt, iv. 31; e. mælt, of oral agreement; sem við áttum mælt n xi. 40; þá vil ek þat mælt e., 124; in mod. usage e. skiltit deserve, eg á ekki þetta skiltit af hér, etc. γ. sometimes used in getting; við því átti Búi eigi gert, B. could not guard against the 117, cp. xi. 109—also, e. bágt, to be in a strait, poor, sickly; to have at one's disposal, Eb. 254. IV. to have to do; leifr eigi (not) e. at því at spotta, Eb. 224; e. hendr sínar at þarja, have to defend one's own bands, to act in self-defence, Nj. 4; varlaunað, to stand in debt to one, 181; e. um vandæði at h, to in a strait, Eb. 108; e. erindi, to have an errand to run, 250;

etu um þetta at tala, when they had to talk, were talking, of this, Stj. 91; e. ríkis at gæta, to have the care of the kingdom, Nj. 126; en þó á hverki at telja við þik mægðir né frændsemi, i. e. I am no relation to thee, 213; ok ætti þeir við annan at deila fyrst, 111; e. níkið at vinna, to be much engaged, bard at work, 97; e. e-þ eptir, to have left a thing undone, 56; e. fó, ferð, to have a journey to take, 11, 12; hann útti þar at heimta, 261; e. eptir mik at mæla, 88. 2. metaph. in the phrases, e. mikít (lítit) 'at' sér, or 'undir' sér, to have much (or little) in one's power; margir menn, þeir er mikít þóttusk at sér e., Sturl. i. 64; en þú við margna menn, svá at þú eigr allt undir þér, go with many men, that thou hast the whole matter in thy hands, Ld. 250; en ávalt átta nokkuð undir mér, Vigl. 33; kann vera at hann eigi mikít undir sér, as. i. 37; eignum heldr undir oss (better keep it in our own hands), en þinga í greipar þeim mæðginum, Fs. 37; sem þeir, er ekki eigu undir sér, who are helpless and weak, Þorst. St. 55; e. þykisk hann nokkuð að sér, i. e. he bears himself very proudly, Grett. 122; þetta ráð vil ek undir sonum mínum e., I will leave the matter in my sons' hands, Valla L. 22; e. líf sitt undir e-m, to have one's life in another's hands, Grett. 154; en ek nú senda eptir mönnum, ok e. eigi undir ójófnuði hans, and send him not, 110; hence in mod. usage, e. undir e-u, to risk; eg þori ekki að e. undir því, I dare not risk it: e. saman, to have or own common; the saying, það á ekki saman nema nafnið, it has nothing at the name in common; rautt gull ok bleikt gull á ekki saman nema ífn eitt, Fms. v. 346: the proverb, þeygi á saman gamalt og ungt, líf. 3. 44; e. skap saman, to agree well; kemr þú þér því vel við allgerði, at it eigit meir skap saman, you are quite of one mind, Nj. 66; egi veit ek hvárt við eignum heill saman, I know not whether we shall have luck, i. e. whether we shall live happy, together, 3. β. to deal with one another (sam-eign); er vér skulum svá miklu úgefau saman e., at we are to have so much mischief between us, Nj. 201; e. e-þ yfir höfði, have a thing hanging over one's head, Sks. 742. V. to agree with, to fit, to suit one: 1. with acc., það á ekki við mig, it suits me not, it agrees not with me. 2. with dat., medic. to agree, heal, the sickness in dat., thus the proverb, margt á við mörgu, cp. 'similia similibus curantur,' Vidal. ii. 109. 3. absol. to apply to; at hann yldi eigi trúa lágum manni raudskeggjuðum, því at meistarinn átti átt, the description suited to the master, Fms. xi. 433; þat muntu ætla, ek munu e. hinn bleika uxann, that the dun ox means me, Vápn. 21. B. REFLEX, in a reciprocal sense, in the phrase, eigask við, to deal with one another, chiefly to fight; en er þeir höfðu langa hríd við átzk, when they had fought a long time, Eb. 238, 74; eigask við deildir, to be gaged in strife, 246; áttusk þeir höggva-víðskipti við, they came to a close fight, Fms. i. 38; áttusk þeir fá högg við, ádr . . . , they had a short fight before . . . Eg. 297; fátt áttusk þeir við þjóstoðlr ok þorvaldr, bostof and Þborvald had little to do with one another, kept aloof from each other, Nj. 18; var nú kyrt þann dag, svá at þeir áttusk ekki við, at day passed quietly, so that they came not to a quarrel, 222. β. to array, vide above (A. I. 2).

EIGA, u, f. ownership, property; þá er af hans e., Grág. ii. 304, Gþl. 12; alla eigu sína (al-eiga), Nj. 11; eiga í eignum (mod. eigu sinni), own, possess, Fms. vii. 156, 280; kasta eigu sinni á, to take in possession, Eg. 335. COMPD: eigu-ligr, adj. worth having, precious, Fms. 294, v. 260, Sks. 606, Sturl. i. 2.

EIGANDI, pl. EIGENDR, part. possessor, owner, Grág. i. 419, 420, 623, 21. EIGI, sometimes (though rarely) EGI, or even contracted EI, adv. (vide 2, p. 117); [the negative eigi is particular to the Scandin., mod. Dan. Swed. e.]—not. Old Icel. writers usually make a distinction between EKI, neut. adj. = nullum, nihil, and EIGI, non; but in mod. usage EKI is, as adv., taken the place of EIGI (whilst EKKERT is used as the neut. adj.), e. EKKI GÓÐR, EKKI VEL, where the oldest writers use EIGI GÓÐR, EIGI VEL; the use of EKKI is, however, very old and freq. used, e. g. in the Njála, and even in as old a vellum MS. as the Miracle-book (Bs. i.); in most cases EKKI and EIGI are difficult to distinguish, because of the contraction MSS. (vide ei); editors commonly print EIGI—that old poets used EKI, not EKKI, may be seen from rhymes such as EIGI varð ens EIGJA, Fms. 420; vide the negative -gi.

EIGIN, n. [Ulf. aiġin = ovstia], one's own, of property; sitt EIGIN, his own, J. 448; girnask annars EIGINS, Hom. 54, Fms. ix. 453, v. l., Grág. ii. 91 (rare), vide EIGN. II. a seed, Edda (Gl.); cp. the Norse iend = the first sprouts of corn, Ivar Aasen.

EIGIN-BÓNDI, m. one's own husband, K. Á. 122, 655 xxxi. 3.

EIGIN-BRÓÐR, f. one's own bride, Lex. Poët.

EIGIN-BYGD, f. one's own county, Fms. ii. 185.

EIGIN-DÓTTIR, f. one's own daughter, Stj. 516.

EIGIN-GIPT, f. part. one's own wife, H. E. ii. 111.

EIGIN-GIPTASK, dep. to marry, Bs. ii. 167.

EIGIN-GIRND and EIGIN-GIRNI, f. selfishness, Stj. 134, Fas. i. 306.

EIGIN-GJARNLIGR and EIGIN-GJARN, adj. selfish, Sks. 528.

EIGIN-HÚSFRÚ, f. one's own housewife, Stj. 251.

EIGIN-KONA, u, f. one's own wife, Eg. 342, Grág. i. 376, K. Á. 122, us. vii. 306, x. 265, Sturl. ii. 197.

EIGIN-KVÁNGAÐR and EIGIN-KVÆNTR, part. lawfully married, 671 B. 17, Sturl. i. 226.

EIGIN-KYN, n. 'own-kind, peculiarity', Stj. 22.

EIGIN-LEIKR (-leiki), m. peculiarity, quality, Skálda 174.

EIGIN-LIGR, adj. (-liga, adv. properly). one's own, Fms. v. 232, x. 230, Magn. 496, K. Á. 432; gramm., e. nafn, a proper name, Skálda 185.

EIGIN-MAÐR, m. one's own wedded husband, K. Á. 136, Titus i. 6.

EIGINN, adj. [A. S. āgen; Engl. own; North. E. ain; Germ. eigen; Swed.-Dan. egen]:—own, one's own; this word is in mod. usage indecl. in case and number, only marking the gender, e. g. mín, minnar, mínum EIGIN . . . , but mitt EIGIÐ, etc.; old writers use a full declension, til EIGINNAR konu, K. Á. 110; EIGNA konu, Str. 20; sínum EIGNUM bróður, Hom. 158; spýju sína EIGNA, 149; í sínu EIGNU fóstrlandi, Stj. 103; fyrir sínum EIGNUM sonum, 240; hafa at EIGNUM manni, one's own husband, Fagrsk. 10; EIGINNAR konu barni, 13.

EIGIN-ORÐ, n. as a law term, ownership, possession, Grág. i. 417, ii. 259, Ó. H. 98; fú at EIGINORÐI, to get into possession, Eg. 511. 2. metaph. a wedding, betrothal, Korm. 74, Grág. i. 162, 174, 310, Vigl. 20.

EIGIN-SPÚSA, f. = EIGINKONA, Str., (for. word.)

EIGIN-TUNGA, u, f. one's own native tongue, Edda 153 (pref.)

EIGN, f. property, possession, patrimony; ríki þessu er ek kalla mína EIGN, Fms. i. 201; fú til EIGNAR, to get, Stj. 484; kasta sinni EIGN á e-þ, to take into possession, Fms. iv. 238, Eg. 466. β. chiefly in pl. estates, landed property, opp. to lausafé or movable; hann átti EIGNIR í Vik austr, Eg. 466, K. Á. 84; sing., en ef EIGN (a landed estate) er í þegnildri, Gþl. 131; EIGNIR eða lausafé, N. G. L. i. 121; EIGNIR er hann tektr, 122. COMPDS: EIGNA-LAUSS, adj. without estates, Fagrsk. 33. EIGNAR-BÚR, n. one's own barn, N. G. L. i. 383. EIGNAR-HLUTI, m. private share, property, Dipl. ii. 6: part of an estate, Bs. i. 762. EIGNAR-JÖRÐ, f. a patrimony, landed inheritance, Bs. ii. 11. EIGNAR-KONA, f. = EIGINKONA, Fms. x. 152, K. Á. 136. EIGNAR-LÝÐR, n. one's own people, Stj. EIGNAR-LÝRITTR, m., vide lýrittr, Grág. ii. 204. EIGNAR-MAÐR, m. an owner, possessor, Jb. 371, Dipl. v. 9. EIGNAR-MARK, n. a mark of ownership (on cattle), Jb. 121. EIGNAR-NAFN, n. a proper name, Stj. 258, Fms. xi. 444. EIGNAR-SKIPTI, n. (mod. Dan. mageskifte), exchange of land, Jb. 192, D. N. EIGNAR-VITNI (-vætti), n. a witness of ownership, Jb. 191.

EIGNA, að; e. e-m e-þ, to attribute to one, Stj. 25, Grett. 147 A, Fms. v. 277; to dedicate, name after one, mikít hof ok EIGNAT þór, i. 294; kirkju ok e. hinum helga Kolumba, Landn. 43; EIGNA daga vitrum mönnum heiðnum, Bs. i. 237; EIGNA sér, to declare a thing to be one's own property; fé munu ok EIGNIR ykkir Helgu, say that you and Helga are the owners, Nj. 257; e. sér land, to take land into one's own hands, Fms. v. 168; the proverb, sér EIGNAR smalamadr fé, þó unga eigi hann kindina, the shepherd calls the flock his own, though he owns not a sheep. 2. reflex. to get, become the owner of, Grág. i. 4, Nj. 94, Fms. i. 28, iv. 79, Edda 145 (pref.): part. EIGNAÐR, having possession, Fms. iv. 23, v. l.

EI-GÓÐR, adj. 'ever-good, dear, beloved', a nickname, Fms.

EIGRA, að, to walk heavily, denoting pain from age or debility, Fas. ii. 130 (in a verse), now freq.

EIGU-LIGR (EIGUR-LIGR, Barl. 205), vide EIGA.

EIK, gen. EIKAR, pl. EIKR, [O. H. G. eik; Germ. eiche; A. S. ác; Engl. oak; North. E. aik; Swed. ek; Dan. eg]:—an oak, Skálda 151. 2. used in Icel. (where are no trees) in the general sense of tree, Lat. arbor; and wherever found it is a sure test of Icel. authorship; brotna EIKMAR fyrir því, Fb. i. 133; í skóg við EIK eina, Fs. 69; hann reist á honum kváðinn ok leiddi hann um EIK, Nj. 275, Fms. xi. 9, 12 (Jómsv. S.). (an 'oak' with apples); átu hverjar aðrar því EIKMAR með skyndi, Nám. 2. 98; 'saeplus ventis agitur ingens pinus' (of Horace) is by Stefan Ólafsson rendered, opt vindar 'eik' þjá ef að hún er njög há, Snót 87; but in the oldest proverbs the sense is probably that of OAK, e. g. þat hefir ek er af annari skefr, cp. one man's meat, another man's poison, Hbl. 22, Grett. 53 new Ed.; or, þá verðr EIK at fúga sem undir skal búa, Eg. 520;—this last proverb seems to refer to an old custom of building houses under an old oak as a holy tree.

EIKI, n. oak timber, Lex. Poët.

EIKI-ÁSS, m. an oak beam, El. 12.

EIKI-KYLFA, f. an oak club, Lex. Poët.

EIKI-KÖSTR, m. a pile of oak-wood, Gh. 20.

EIKINN, adj. savage (of a bull), freq. in mod. use; in Skm. 17, 18 it is used of wild-fire. II. oaken, Edda i. 430 (in a verse).

EIKI-SKÓGR, m. an oak-shaw, oak-wood, Fms. vi. 426, xi. 224.

EIKI-STOBBI, a, m. the stump of an oak, Flóv.

EIKI-STOKKR, m. an oak-stock, Fms. vii. 37.

EIKI-SÚLA, u, f. an oaken column, Róm. 148.

EIKI-TINDAÐR, part. with oaken pegs, Sks. 418.

EIKI-VÖDR, m. an oak-wood, Sks. 415.

EIKI-VÖNDR, m. a twig of an oak-tree, Sks. 416.

EIKJA, u, f. [eikja, Ivar Aasen], a small ferry-boat, Hbl. 7, Fms. iv. 185, viii. 37, N. G. L. i. 239, 243; for Bs. i. 674 vide EYKR.

EI-LIGR, adj. eternal, 677. 2. 3. (rare.) ei-lifð, f. everlasting life, eternity, Mar., (freq. in mod. use.) ei-lif, n. = eilifð, Barl. 76, 93.

 ei-lifleikr, m. eternity, Stj. 8. ei-lifiga, adv. to eternity, Fms. i. 202, Fb. i. 322, Eluc. 3, Fær. 137, 655 xxxii. 10, N. T. ei-lifligr, adj. everlasting, eternal, N. T. ei-lifr, adj. everlasting, eternal, 625, 188, Fms. i. 75, K. Á. 228, N. T.; at eilifu, for ever and ever, Niðrst. 8, Hkr. i. 19.
 ei-litill, adj. 'ever-little,' very little.
 EIMR, m. and eimi, a, m. [this word may be akin to O. H. G. átam; Germ. atbem; Fris. etbma, adema, omma; A. S. ádm.—a Scand. contracted form would be sounded eim; Dan. em; Norse æm, Ivar Aasen]: —reek, vapour, from fire or embers, different to gufa, steam from boiling; eimr ok reykr, Stj. 58; e. ok aldmari, vapour and fire, Vsp. 57; eimr hratt, vapour gushed out, Orkn. (in a verse); eimr skant hrími, the vapour sent forth soot, Lex. Poët.: (when the poets (Edda Gl.) call fire eimr, this can only be in a metaphorical sense; the sword is poët. called eimnir, m. reeking (with blood).) β . in mod. usage eimr is also used of sound, a faint sound, tune; fyrir sönglistar sætan eim, Bb. I. 4.
 ei-muni (and ey-muni), a, m. an ever-memorable thing; þat er þeim eimuni, they will never forget, Fms. iv. 249; þat man þer eymuni, thou wilt never forget it, Bjarn. 25 (in a verse); eymuni hinn mikli (name of a very severe winter), Ann. 1291. β . nickname of a Dan. king, the ever-beloved, Fms. xi; vide ein-muni.
 eim-yrja, u, f. [Dan. æmmer; Ivar Aasen eimor], embers; in allit. phrases, eldr ok e., Fms. iii. 180, Fas. ii. 75 (in a verse), or eisa ok e.; hann var borinn í eimyrju, Greg. 57; akin to eimr, qs. eim-myryja, a quantity of eimr, q. v.
 EIN- in compds denoting only, or only one in an intensive sense, vide the following words.
 ein-angr, m., Lat. angustiae, a narrow passage: metaph. a great strait; the proverb, margr verðr vaskr í einangrinum, þótt lítt sé vaskir þess á milli, many a man is bold in perils, though . . ., Eb. 60; útileitinnu (unprovoking) en öruggir í einangri, but bold if put in a strait, Grett. 120.
 ein-angra, að, to put one in a strait, drive into a corner, Stj. 71.
 einarð-liga, adv. firmly, Fms. ix. 509, v. l.: beartily, 625, 195; vel ok e., well and beartily, Fms. x. 35; eigi mjök e., not very beartily, 99.
 einarð-ligr, adj. firm, trusty looking, Fms. ii. 39.
 ein-arðr (qs. ein-hardr), adj. firm, and metaph. honest, sincere; einörð trú, firm belief, Hom. 38, 159; röskr maðr ok e., a bold and trusty man, Nj. 223; e. ok skelegr, firm and undaunted, Sturl. iii. 217; djarfr ok e., daring and bold, Fms. iv. 204; faithful, trusty, ix. 256, opposed to tvi-drægr.
 II. single; einörð sæng, a single bed, D. N. ii. 94 (Fr.); bæta einörðum rétti, to pay a single fine, N. G. L. i. 69, 71,—this sense is Norse and obsolete and rarely occurs in Icel. writers; einart þak, a single thatch, Ld. 280; en hann slitr af sér böndin eigi seinna en einarðan vef, Stj. 416. Judges xv. 12 ('like a tbread', A. V.)
 einart, mod. einatt, or even einlagt, adv. incessantly; gékk annart maðr út en annart inn einart, one went out and another in incessantly, Fms. iv. 261; sitja einart við drykk, xi. 366; mærin grét einart, the girl 'grat sore,' kept on weeping, Eg. 481; fylgja e., to follow on one's heels, 371; Ögmundur var e. (always) með Karli, Sd. 171; sóttusk e. í ákafa, Isl. ii. 268; hann ferr einart (straightly, directly) til himna-rikis, Hom. 159; hogginn má eigi e. uppi verja, a bow must not be ever bent, 623, 19; lá þó allr herrinn Dana ok Svía einart í skotmáli, Fms. ii. 313.
 ein-asta, adv. only, solely, Sks. 439; in mod. usage also adj. indecl.
 ein-bakaðr, part. once-baked, Stj. 279.
 ein-bani, a, m., poët. the only, i. e. the great, slayer, Hým. 22, Hkm. 3.
 ein-baugr, m., a single ring, opp. to tvi-baugr, a double ring.
 ein-beittr, adj. resolute.
 ein-berni, mod. ein-birni, n. [barn], the only bairn, only heir, Grág. ii. 183, Eg. 25, 83.
 ein-berr, adj. sheer, pure.
 ein-beygðr, part. (cp. baugr II. 4.) in the phrase, e. kostr, dire necessity, only chance, Hkr. ii. 172, Orkn. 58.
 ein-bjargi (ein-bjarga), adj. able to help oneself, Bs. i. 328.
 ein-bregða, brá, to braid a single knot.
 ein-breiðr, adj. of a single breadth, half a yard broad, of stuff, opp. to tvi-breiðr, N. G. L. iii. 114.
 ein-búi, a, m., a single dweller, Eg. 109.
 ein-bæli (ein-býli), n. [ból], a single household, opp. to tvi-býli, Fms. iv. 93, Fagrsk. 57.
 ein-daga, að, to fix a day for pay or the like, with acc.; e. fé, þing, brullaup, etc., Grág. i. 102, 266, 391, Gpl. 212.
 ein-dagi, a, m., a term for pay or any other duty to be done, Grág. i. 3, 383, Fms. v. 278, N. G. L. i. 7, 27, 83.
 ein-dreginn, part., e. vili, decided, firm will.
 ein-drægmi, f. (ein-drægr, adj.), unanimity, harmony, Ephes. iv. 3.
 ein-dæll, mod. and more freq. inn-dæll, adj., prop. very easy: metaph. agreeable, Fas. ii. 492; vide inn-dæll.
 ein-dæmi, n. a law term. the right to be an absolute, sole umpire or judge in a case, Sturl. ii. 2, Fms. ii. 11, O. H. L. 36; cp. sjálf-dæmi, a single example, Sks. 649; an unexampled thing, cp. the proverb dæminu eru verst, Grett. 93 A, vide dæmi; cp. also endemí.

 ein-eggjaðr, part. one-edged, Stj. 383. ein-eiði, n. (eins-eiðr, m., K. Á. 150, Gpl. 25), a single oat (eiðr), Gpl. 196, 361, K. p. K. 42, Jb. 119, 120, 123, 126, 443, pa.
 ein-eigis, adv. with sole ownership, D. N. ein-eign, f. sole ownership, D. N. ein-elti, n. the singler one out.
 ein-eygðr (ein-eygr), adj. one-eyed, Bárð. 178, Fas. i. 379.
 ein-falda, að, to 'single,' address with 'thou', Sks. 303.
 ein-faldleikr (ein-faldleiki), m. simplicity, Stj. 34, 44, Hom.
 ein-faldliga, adv. simply, Stj. 60, K. Á. 224; specialty, sing Skálda 190, Alg. 354.
 ein-faldligr, adj. simple, singular, Skálda 190. ein-faldr, adj., prop. having 'one fold', Lat. simplex, simple, Vm. 135; metaph. simple, plain, of men or things, Bs. ii. 39, 147 49, Hkr. iii. 97, Fas. i. 76; simple, silly, (mod.) ein-farir, f. pl. walking alone, Hkr. ii. 106; fara einförum, w notion of melancholy, (freq.)
 ein-feldr, part. [fella], resolute, bent on one thing, Ísl. ii. 36. ein-fyndr, adj., as finder entitled to the whole, N. G. L. ii. 146, i or belonging only to the finder, id. l. 13, 14.
 ein-færr, adj. able to do for oneself, Fas. ii. 113, Glúm. 344. ein-fætingr, m. a one-legged man, Rb. 344, cp. Þorf. Karl. 43 ein-fætt, adj. one-legged, Grett. 87.
 EINGA- [from einigr; Ulf. ainaba; A. S. ánga; Germ. einig single; only used in compds: einga-barn, n. an only bairn, Ba þiðr. 130, Sturl. ii. 197, Bar. 14. einga-brúðr, f. the only bride, Lex. Poët. (the Church, the bride of Christ). einga-dóttir, n. an only daughter, Fas. i. (in a verse), Stj. 407. Judges xi. 34, Þiðr Fas. i. 76. einga-dróttinn, m. the only Lord, Hom. 74. sauðr, m. an only sheep, Stj. 516, 2 Sam. xii. 4. einga-sonr only son, Mar. 43, Gg. 2, Karl. 209. einga-vinr, m. an only bosom friend, Nj. 77. In mod. usage einka- (q. v.) is used instead of einga-, which is an obsolete form; and even in old MSS. both occur, e. g. Stj. (l. c), v. l.: Þiðr. 130 spells 'einka-', and it even in old vellums as 623, p. 41; einka-sonr, Luke vii. 12. ein-ganga, u, f. = einfarar, N. G. L. iii. 36: eingöngu, as adv. ein-getinn, part., eccl. only begotten, Clem. 40, Sks. 604 (of C. EINGI, einginn, in old writers more freq. spelt 'eng' (which with the mod. pronunciation), engi, enginn, qs. einn-gi from eiu and the negative suffix -gi.—none.
 A. THE FORMS vary greatly: 1. The adjective is declined as the suffix left indeclinable; obsolete forms are, dat. eino-gi or (nulli), æghishjálmur bergr einugi, Fm. 17; einugi feti framir, no further, Ls. I; svá illr at einugi dugi, Hm. 134; in old laws, e. svarar einugi, Grág. (þ. þ.) i. 22; acc. sing. engi, engi manni, l. 37; engi frið, Hm. 15; engi jötun (acc.), Vpm. 2; engi eyjars Fas. i. 433 (in a verse); also in prose, engi manni, O. H. 68; engi 33, 34; engi liðsmanna, 36, Mork. passim; engi knútt fékk han ok engi álanddennu hreitit, Edda 29. 2. the -gi changes to adjective termination -igr; gen. sing. fem. einigrar, Hom. 22, Po 73; dat. sing. fem. einigr, Hom. 17; acc. sing. fem. einiga, Fas (in a verse); nom. pl. einigr, Jd. i; fem. einigar, Grág. i. 354; einigra, Post. 73; dat. einigum: this obsolete declension is chiefly the sense of any, vide below. 3. declined as the pronom. ad or nekverr (= nokkur); dat. sing. fem. engarri; gen. pl. aungvarr ix. 46, Stj. 70; dat. sing. fem. aungvarri, Mork. 187; hereto belong the mod. neut. sing. ekkert. 4. the word is declined as the adj. with a final v; nom. fem. sing. öng sorg (no sorrow), Hm. 94; nom. öngur or aung, Skv. 2, 26, Nj. 117 (in a verse), Fms. vi. 42 (Sigvatr (Vellekla), etc. 5. adding -an, -n to the negative suffix, thus e. fem. engin, neut. pl. eingin (or enginn, engin); in the other cases disappears. Out of these various and fragmentary forms sprang the modern form in old and modern writings, which is chiefly made up of 4, and 5: old writers prefer nom. engi or eingi, but modern only einginn or enginn; gen. sing. masc. neut. eingis, einskis or einkis (Grág. i. 163; einskis, 25 C), engis or eingis, Eg. 74, 714, 655 xx; einkis, Fms. x. 409; in mod. usage einskis and einkis are both used but eingis obsolete: neut. sing. ekki assimilated = eit-ki or eit mod. usage ekkert, a form clearly originating from 3 above, but however, never occurs in old MSS.—Fms. iii. 75, Landn. (Mant Gpl. 343 (cp. N. G. L. ii. 110), are all paper MSS.—and only in those from the end of the 15th century, but is common ever that time; the N. T. in the Ed. of 1540 spelt ekkirt: in the nor. old writers mostly use eingi or engi alike for masc. and fem. (eing eingi kona), whereas modern writers only use einginn, eingin (cp. eing eingin kona); this form also occurs in old MSS., though e. g. engin hafði þess gáð, Stj. 6; einginn karlmaðr, 206; eingin a Fms. v. 318; eingin hey, Ísl. ii. 138; chiefly in MSS. of the 14th centuries: acc. sing. masc. engan or öngan is in MSS. much commoner than eingi (engi), see above, e. g. engan háská, Fms. ii. 322; fyrir engan man, Gpl. 532, etc.: in the other cases the spelling and pronunciation are at variance. Editions and mod. writers usually spell engra, engrar, engri, engum, engu, engan, enga, engir, engar, but these forms are pronounced throughout with ö or au, öngra, öngrar, öngri, öngum or öngvum, öngu or öngvu, öngan or öngvan, önga or öngva, öngir or öngvir, öngar or öngvar; that this is no mod. innovation is amply borne out by some of the best vellum MSS., e. g. Arna-Magn. 468, O. H., Fb., Mork.; öngum manni, Nj. 82; öngri munuð, 10; öngvar sakir, 94; önga fúrkapi, 52; aungu vætta, Stj. 208; öngvan þef, 7; öngu nýtr, Fb. i. 284, 365; öngvan hlut, 166; öngum, 25; aungum várum bræðra, 63; avngir, O. H. 184; öngva, 146; öngu, 184 (freq.); avnga menn, Isl. ii. 349 (Heið. S. MS. Holm.); öngvir diskar, 337; öngum, Grág. i. 27; avngver menn, Bs. i. 337 (Miracle-book); öngom, 346, 347; önga björg, 349; en sér öngu at una, Hm. 95, Mork. passim, etc.: these forms are clearly derived from á above. [The word is exclusively Scandin.; Dan. ingen, neut. intet; Swed. ingen, inga, intet; Ivar Aasen ingjen, neut. inkje.]

B. THE SENSE: I. 'not one'; used as adj. with a subst. none, no, not any; þeir vissu sér eingis ötta ván, Eg. 74; man hann einigrar (=ongrar) ömbunar vætta af Guði, Post. 73, and in numberless cases.

2. used absol. (Lat. nemo) as subst. none, naught; ekki er mér at eigna af þessu verki, Fms. ii. 101; enda vírðask einkis vætti þau er þeir bera, Grág. i. 25; enginn konungs manna, Fms. i. 104; ok lét þá ekki (naught) hafa af föðurarfi sínum, Eg. 25; eingi þeirra, Skálda 165; fur hann var enskis örvænt, Isl. ii. 326; en svarar engu, Ld. 202; at öngu, for naught, Fms. iv. 317; öngum þeim er síðarr kemr, Grág. i. 27; þá skal engi veidda, none of them, ii. 338; eingi einn, n. k. Fms. v. 139; sem engin veit fyrri gert hafa verit, K. Á. 28; ekki skorti þá (ekkert, Ed. from paper MS.), Fms. iii. 75.

β. neut. ekki with gen. pl. in a personal sense, ekki manna, 'naught of men,' = engir menn or enginn maðr, no man, not a single man, O. H.; ekki vætta, naught, Fms. viii. 78; öngu vætta, naught (dat.), xi. 90; ekki skipa, not a single ship, etc. (freq. in old writers): einskis-konar, adv. in nouise, Sks. 713; engan-vegin, adv. noways.

3. neut. ekki is freq. used as adv. = eingi, q. v., Edda 20, Fms. ii. 81, vii. 120, xi. 22, Grág. i. 206, Eg. 23. II. any; this sense is rare and obsolete, and probably also etymologically different from the preceding (cp. A. S. ánig): a. after negative; á hón eingi at selja fjárheimtingar sínar, né sakar einigar, Grág. i. 354; er eigi saurgisk i einigri líkamis úhræinsun, Hom. 17; hvat em engi segir, Þiðr. 178; aldrei skalt þú þat heyrna né engi annarra, 128; aldri fyrir i engri herferð, 29; má eigi þar fyrri undir búa eingi sá er tempraðan blóstað vill hafa, Sks. 45 new Ed.; né ömurr eingi, Skálda (Thorodd) 165; því at hann má hvárki vaxa né þverra, né á engi veg kapask i sínu at kvæði, 166; eingi skal maðr gildra í mörku annars til minngra dyra, N. G. L. i. 242.

β. after a comparative; þrettísfirri n ekki annat kvikendi, Mar.; þiðari ok feiri en engi maðr annarr, Stj. 34; sémilegri en engan tíma fyrir hafði hann verit, 196; um þat fram = framar en engi hans frænda hefir haft fyrir hánum, Fagrsk. 11.

ein-girni, n. [gam], single-threaded yarn.

ein-hagi and ein-agi, a, m. a piece of ladies' dress, Edda (Gl.), Bjarn. 12 (in a verse).

ein-hama and ein-hamr, adj. 'one-shaped,' as equivalent in the phrase éigi e., 'not single-shaped,' a werewolf; it is also used with berserkr, q. v.; ein háttir er þeirra manna sem eigi eru einhamir . . . er af þeim gengr erseks-gangrinn, Eb. 136; þrándr var kallaðr eingi e. (Tbrand was bought to be a werewolf), meðan hann var heidinn, en þá tók af flestum rölskap er skíróðr vóru, 306; þykkir sem hann hafi eingi síðan dyggilega verit, Fb. i. 260; því at þú ert eingi e., Isl. ii. 29; without a preceding éigi (less correctly), at hann hafi sterkastr verit . . . sá er e. hefir erit i. e. of those who were not berserkers, Fb. i. 524, Fas. ii. 261; cp. amr, hamramr, hamremi, hamask, etc.

ein-hendis, adv. straight, off-hand, Bs. i. 13 (in a verse).

ein-hendr, adj. single-banded, Edda 17, Landn. 186.

Ein-herjar, m. pl. the 'only' or great champions, the dead warriors in álhalla; about this mythological word vide Edda (Gg.) 23-25, Em. 1, Jkm. 16, Gm. 23, Vfm. 40, 41; i. sing. voc. einheri, thou great champion! (of Thor), Ls. 60; the name Einarr is properly = einheri; cp. einarrðr old, einörð valour, all kindred words.

ein-hjal, n. secret gossip, O. T. 2.

ein-hleypi, n., einhleypis-maðr, m. = einhleypingr, Gpl. 94.

ein-hleypingr, m. one who goes alone, hence a vagabond or person without bearib or home (cp. Scot. landlouper), Hrafn. 13; e. félausir, Vj. 398, Judges ix. 4 ('vain and light persons,' A. V.). ein-hleyptr, adj. a single man without fixed household, unmarried, K. Á. 26, N. G. L. i. 142; opp. to biandi, 26.

ein-hlitr, adj. [hlita], trusting to oneself alone, self-confident, not needing the help of another; vera sér e. i. e-u, Eb. 90, Orkn. 283; láta sér e. einhlit, to think it enough, rest satisfied, Fms. iv. 78; þat var mælt e. hón létu mik eingi einhlitan, it was said that she was untrue to me (a phemism), Sturl. i. 44; svá mundi þá, ef hón hefði bónda sinn einhlitan gjört, Dropl. 9; vera e. um e-t, to have to decide a thing; eigi em ek e. um svör þessa máls, ok vil ek ráðask um við móður hennar, Isl. ii. 159.

ein-huga, að, to make up one's mind, Fs. 18.

ein-hverfa, ð, to decide upon, determine, with acc., Fms. v. 39.

ein-hverfr, adj. determined, Sturl. i. 213.

ein-hverr, v. einn.

ein-hyrndr, adj. having one horn, Stj. 69.

ein-hyrningr, m. 'one-born,' a unicorn, Karl. 386.

ein-hæfr, adj. only fit for one thing.

einigr, v. eingi.

einíng, f. unity, Hom. 55, Ver. 46, Fms. i. 281, Sks. 604.

EINIR, m. [Swed. en], juniper, Edda (Gl.), Stj. 396, Hjalt. einir-ber, n. berries of the juniper, Hjalt. einir-lauf, n. leaves of the juniper, Björn.

ein-járnungur, m. all of one piece of iron, e. g. a knife, Krök. 40.

einka, að, to appoint for a peculiar use; hann einkaði til þess eitt hús, Sks. 622; hlutr einkaðr kirkjunní, H. E. i. 258; ok var þar til einkaðr Guðmundr prestur, Bs. i. 452; to dedicate, Karl. 301.

EINKA- (rarely einkar-), in compps denoting, I. special, personal, particular: einka-gjöf, f. a special gift, Lex. Pöet. einka-gríð, n. special truce, N. G. L. i. 417. einka-gripr, m. a special family heir-loom, Glúm. 339; bæði rúnar ok e., runes and tokens, Fms. vi. 274. einka-hlutr, m. a special, particular, personal thing, 625.

195. einka-jartein, f. a special token, Skálda 167. einka-leyfi, n. a law term, an especial leave, Grág. i. 364, ii. 491, 492; (mod.) a privilege. einka-lof, n. id., Grág. i. 6. einka-lækning, f. an especial remedy, Hom. einka-maðr, m. a person of special rank, a dignitary, Sks. 271, N. G. L. i. 4.

einka-mál, n. pl. a special, personal agreement, treaty, Eg. 37, Fagrsk. 179, Fms. i. 23, ii. 290; binda sætt eittum ok einka-málum, vii. 282; a privilege, e. ok réttarbætr, Bs. i. 699, Js. 47, Játv. 8. einkar-öðli (einka-öðli), n. especial nature, Skálda 171, 677. 3. einkar-nafn, n. a special name, proper name, Edda 108. einka-skriptargangr, m. a special confession, Hom. 74. einka-sæla, u, f. happiness, beatitude, Greg. 18.

einka-vinr, m. a particular friend, Bárð. 173, Nj. 77, v. l., Orkn. 448, (vide einga-vinr).

II. only: einka-dóttir, -barn, -sonr, etc., vide einga-above.

einkan-liga, adv. especially, particularly, Fms. i. 20, 191, K. Á. 216, 230, Bs. i. 771.

einkan-ligr, adj. especial, Stj. 6, H. E. i. 502, 655 xxxii. 8; extraordinary, Bs. ii. 18, 159, 170.

ein-kanna, að, = einka, to attribute, N. G. L. ii.

ein-kanna- in einkanna-hlutr, m. an especial thing, Fms. vii. 120.

einkar- prefixed to adjectives or adverbs = Scot. unco = especially, greatly, very; e. vel, very well, Fms. xi. 18; e. fagr, very fine, beautiful, ii. 300; e. skjótt, with great speed, Eg. 354; e. traudr, very unwilling, Fms. xi. 98; e. mjök, very much, viii. 186; e. litill, very small, Fbr. 99 new Ed.; cp. Lex. Pöet., (very freq. in mod. use.)

ein-kenna, d, to mark, signalise, Stj. Josh. ii. 18, Hkr. iii. 264, v. l.

ein-kenniligr, adj. especial, particular, Str. 3, 39.

ein-kenning, f. distinction, Karl. 288.

ein-kili, m. [cp. Swed. kela; Dan. kjele = to fondle], a fondling, Edda (Gl.); hence einkilju-legr, adj. fondled, spoiled, Björn.

ein-kleyfr, adj. clear, unequivocal, Hkr. iii. 203, v. l.

einkum, dat. used as adv. 'unco,' chiefly, especially, Landn. 282, Fms. xi. 25, viii. 102, Fs. 21, K. p. K. 162. 2. = einkar, very; e. göð, Hom. 111; e. vel, 655 xxx. 7; e. litíð, Sks. 188; e. bezt, Mork. 79. 3. particularly, Fms. xi. 45, 127.

ein-kunn, f. a mark, sign, Grág. i. 414, 415, ii. 303, Hkr. iii. 364.

ein-kunna, að, = einkenna, Grág. ii. 345.

ein-kynna, t, = einkenna, esp. of marking sheep or cattle, to brand or mark their ears, Grág. i. 414, 415, ii. 303, 348.

ein-lagi, adj., vera, gerask e. um e-t, to act alone in a thing, Ld. 266, Fms. iv. 87.

ein-lát, n. pl. 'letting alone,' deserting one's wife, Grág. i. 178.

ein-leikit, part. neut., in the phrase, það er ekki e., of an uncanny thing, not by fair means.

ein-leitr, adj. singular, odd, particular, Mar.

ein-litr, adj. of one colour, Stj. 45, H. E. i. 492, Rd. 251.

ein-lyndr, adj. odd, strange, stubborn, Nj. 184, Sks. 435.

ein-lægni, f. sincerity, earnestness.

ein-lægr and einlægr-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), sincere.

ein-læti, n. = einlát, Hkr. i. 245.

ein-man, n. solitude, in the phrase, i einmani; nú ef maðr býr í einmani öðrum mönnum fjarri, in solitude, far from other men, N. G. L. i. 340; nú er maðr staddr í einmani, 343.

ein-mani (ein-mana), adj. solitary, alone, lonely; e. svá langt frá öðrum mönnum, Fas. i. 48, iii. 227; with the notion of a helpless, orphan state, þóttisk hann nú mjök e., left alone, Nj. 260; þar þú ert kominnu hér e. (single-banded), Fbr. 154; ungr ok e., young and friendless, Fms. viii. 3; hversu e. (how bereft) margir fara, Sl. 48.

ein-máll, adj. one-sided in speech, Skálda 164.

ein-mánuður, m. the 'single month,' i. e. the last month of the winter, thirty days long, beginning on the Tuesday between the 9th and 15th of March (old style), Grág. i. 166, Edda 103, Rb. 516. compd: ein-mánaðar-samkváma, u. f. a meeting held (in northern and eastern Iceland) at the beginning of the Einmanad, mentioned in Sturl. iii. 311, Lv. 65, Vápn. (Ný Fél. xxi. 124), Jb. 301, Fs. 67.

ein-mennigr, m., drekka e., to toss off a bumper at one draught, Eg. 551.

ein-mitt, n. adj. as adv. just, exactly.

ein-muna, adj. 'alone remembered,' memorable, always in a good sense; e. blíðr, exceedingly mild; e. veðr, fine weather, cp. einuni.

ein-munaligr, qs. ein-manaligr, adj. lonely.

ein-mæli, n. private talk or conference, Eg. 54, 741, Nj. 10, Sks. 363, Fms. i. 204, iv. 123, 303; common talk, var þat allra manna e., Fagrsk. 179.

ein-mæling, f. = einmælt, Mar. 155.

ein-mælis, adv. once a day, N. G. L. i. 359.

ein-mælt, n. adj. [mál = meal], one meal a day; eta, matask e., Fms. viii. 447; fasta e., K. þ. K. 102.

ein-mæltr, part. spoken by all, Fms. ix. 501, Eg. 514, Eb. 310.

EINN, adj. pl. einir, acc. sing. einn, but also einan, esp. in the sense al-einan etc.; [Gr. εἷς, ἕν, Lat. unus, and early Lat. oinos; Ulf. ains; A. S. an; Engl. one, in E. Engl. pronounced like stone, bone; Scot. ane; Swed. en; Dan. een]—one.

A. Cardinal number, one; einn, tveir, þrír . . . , opp. to báðir, fleiri, etc.; einum eðr fleirum, Grág. i. 108; eina sök eðr fleiri, 78; unnu báðir einn, Fas. i. 515; einum ok einum, one by one, ii. 252; tveir menn veðmæltu um einn grip, Grág. i. 412.

2. In old poems it is used as an ordinal number; Urð hétu eina, aðra Verðandi, Vsp. 20; segðu þat eina eina . . . , opp. to þat it annat, Vp.m. 20; hjálpr heitir eitt, help ranks first, Hm. 147, Vkv. 2; but this use is quite obsolete.

3. With the notion of sameness, one and the same (unus et idem); í einu húsi, in the same house, Grág. ii. 42; ein ero lög um, hvárt sem ero naut eðr sauðir, i. 422; allt á eina leið, all one way, Fms. ii. 315; til einnar gistingar báðir, vii. 274; í einu brjósti, Alm. 36; allr einn, the very same, Nj. 213.

II. Indefinite, a, au, a certain one; einn vetr, a winter, Fms. i. 57; einn dag, x. 11, Fas. i. 514; eitt kveld, Ld. 38; einn hinn versti maðr, Fær. 91; Breiðligr einn, a man from Broaddale, Sturl. ii. 249; einn vinr Þóris, a certain friend of Thorir, Fms. vi. 277; einn as the indefinite article is hardly found in old writers; and though it is freq. in the Bible, sermons, hymns, etc., since the Reformation, it was no doubt borrowed from the German, and has never been naturalised.

β. about, before numbers; ein tvau hundruð vaðmála, about two hundred pieces, Sks. 30; einar fimm þúsúdir, about three thousand, Al. III, —obsolete, in mod. usage hérum-bil or the like.

III. alone, Gr. μόνος, Lat. solus, used both in sing. and plur.; Guðrún skyldi ein ráða, Ld. 132; Hallr tók ein upp fang, 38; láta einn; láttu mig Drottinn einan ekki, Pass. 34. 11; as a law term, to let one's wife alone, þá lét hann eina Guðrúnu, Fms. x. 324 (cp. einlát); Gunnar mundi vera einn heima, Nj. i. 13; sjá einn hlutr, that one thing only, 112; þau einn tíðendi (plur.), only such news, 242.

β. if put after the noun, einn denotes, only, but, sheer, and is almost adverb.; segja þetta prett einn, a mere trick, Sturl. ii. 249; raufar einar, all in holes, Nj. 176; urðu borðin í blóði einn, the tables were bedabbled with blood all over, 270, Ó. H. 116; öll orðin at hvöllum einum, all turned into wabales, Fas. i. 372; gabb eitt ok háð, sheer mockery, Sks. 247; orð ein, mere words, Nj. 123; igangs-klæði ein, Eg. 75; vín eitt, wine only, Gm. 19; heiptyrði ein, Fm. 9; hamingjur einar, Vp.m. 49; ofsamenu einir, Ld. 158; þá nótt eina, for that one night, N. G. L. i. 240; also after an adj., litíð eina, only a little, Stj. 177; þat eina, er hann ætti sjálfir, Eg. 47, Fms. v. 303; nema góðs eina, naught but good, Eg. 63; fútt eitt, few only, but few; vilt eitt, but what is agreeable, Hm. 125; mikitt eitt skala manni gefa, a proverb, 'small gifts shew great love,' 51; sá einn, er . . . , be only, who . . . , 17; satt eitt, sooth only, Fm. 9; the sense differs according as the adj. is placed before or after the noun, einn Guð, the One God; but, Guð einn, God only, none but God.

IV. plur. in a distributive sense, single; ein gjöld, a single weregild, opp. to tvönn, þrenn, fern, double, triple, quadruple, Grág. ii. 232; thus Icel. say, einir sokkar, skór, veltingar, a pair of socks, shoes, gloves; einar brækr, a pair of breeches; also with nouns which have only plur., e. g. ein, tvönn, þrenn Jól, one, two, three Christ-masses (Yules); einar (tveugar) dyrr, a single . . . door; eina Páska, one Easter.

V. gen. pl. einna is used in an intensive sense; einna manna bezt, best of all single men, Fms. ix. 258; í mesta lagi einna manna, foremost of all single men, Bjarn. 65; fútt er svá einna hluta, at órvent sé at hitti annat slíkt, Ó. H. 75.

β. ellipt. manna, hluta, or the like being omitted, einna becomes almost an adverbial phrase, by far, exceedingly; at engi viti einna mikligi görr (= einna manna), that no one (no single man) shall know it much better, Grág. i. 2; einna verst, by far the worst, Orkn. 162, Nj. 38; einna sízt, by far the least, least of all, Fms. i. 37; einna mest verðr, Ld. 8; er einna var ríkast, who was the mightiest of all, Fms. i. 297; engan rétt einna meir kunnan at göra (= einna rétta meir), Sks. 22; engi er einna hvastar (= e. manna), there is none so mighty but he may find his match, Hm. 63; in mod. usage einna, joined with a superlative, is used adverbially, e. beztr, e. fljót, the best, the fleetest, but in a somewhat depreciatory sense.

used adverb.: 1. gen. sing. eins, a. eins ok, as, as if; einn varri hann með öllu óttaless, Hkr. iii. 275; allt eins ok (just as) ralar metja með tungu, Stj. 392.

β. likewise, in the same way; mikill var þat er þær sögð einn báðar, Landn. (Hb.) 320; this use of ei is very rare in old writers, but freq. in mod. use; in the spoken language at least 'eins' (= as) has almost replaced the old 'sem.' γ. only; er ek áðr spurtt til eins, Fms. iv. 139 (rare).

δ. at eins, only, but, Gr. 235; vel at eins, ironically, well enough, Ld. 248; eigi at eins, not, Fms. i. 266; með sinum at eins kostnaði, vii. 184; því at eins, only in case, Nj. 228; þar at eins, Ísl. ii. 400; allt eins, not the less for that, in mod. use, just as (vide allr A. V. 5).

2. dat. at einu = at údaður at einu, Ld. 242; því at einu = því at eins, Fms. iv. 195; þat einu er rétt . . . , Grág. i. 164; svá at einu, id., Nj. 103; sá eykr sínar at einu, be but adds to his sins, Hom. 157; allt at einu, all the same, Ísl. ii. 216, v. l.: af því einu, only because, Mork. 140.

B. Joined to another pronominal adj. or adv.:

I. hverr, adj. pron., in old writers usually in two words and with a d. declension (see below), but now and then (and in mod. usage always a single word, einn being indecl.; einhverja (acc. f.), Hbl. 30; einhver (dat. sing.), Hm. 122, Fms. x. 71; einhverjo héraði, Al. 98, Nj. 2; hverra (gen.), Fms. iv. 75; einhverir (nom. pl.), viii. 202; ein einhverir, etc.: the form einn-hverr is peculiar, keeping the gen. i. through all the cases, nom. einshverr, N. G. L. i. 6; acc. einshverja 156, 655 xxxii. 18, Gpl. 135; dat. einshverjum, Stj. 22, 442, 448; form seems to be chiefly Norse, is very rare in old writers, and now obsolete; neut. sing. eitthvert, Vm. 73, or eitthvat, Stj. 442, the usage makes a distinction, and uses eitthvert only as adj., eitthv subst.:

1. each one, each single one; maðr er einn hverr, Edda þær eru svá margar, at ein hver má vel endask, Eg. 414; ór þeirra fjór sem ór einum hverjum öðrum, lb. ch. 5; skal einn hverr (each) nefna sér vátta, Grág. i. 74; jafmikinn arf sem einn hverr (each) hans, Sturl. ii. 77; fátt er svá herra einhverra hluta, of any single, Fms. iv. 175.

β. joined to a superl. it strengthens the sense; ágr maðr einn hverr, one of the very first men, Nj. 282; vinsælastr hö einhverr, bigly popular, Fms. vii. 4; einhver drengilegust vor 515.

2. in an indefinite sense, some, somebody, a certain one; hvert ríki, Sks. 350; eina hverja nótt, some night, 686 B. 4; eit sinn, once, sometime, Sturl. i. 77, Nj. 79; einhverju sinni, id., 2; ein dag, some day, Fms. v. 177, Ísl. ii. 212; eina hverja þessa tíð, about time, N. G. L. i. 355; til einnar herrar stefnu, to some meeting, 354; eins-hverja hluti, Stj. 156; með eins-hverjum sveini, 442; at einni manni vert, at hlýða prests-messu nývgíðs hinn fyrstu, heldr en þess messu einhverri, Bs. i. 131.

β. used as subst.; einn hverr var þ anna, Fms. i. 34; einn hvern manna hans, Eg. 258; einhverr í hv dal, Ld. 258, Nj. 192.

γ. einhverr-staðar (eins-hverr-staðar, vii. 84), adv. somewhere, Grett. 130, Fms. iv. 57, Sd. 181.

einn-saman, adj. 'one together' (vide einsamall), i. e. quite einn maðrinn lífir ekki af einu-saman brauði, Matth. iv. 4; með einni-samni syni, með einni-saman sinni þefan, Stj. 93; ef útleðgr fara saman, if it be solely a matter of outlay (fine), Grág. i. 103; ef þú eitt-saman, ii. 10: of a woman, vera eigi ein-saman, to be not alone with a child, Fms. iii. 109.

III. with other words; ein ýmissir, 'one and sundry,' various, mixed, Stj. 88, 204; eina hlý ýmissa, Fb. i. 191.

β. hverr ok einn, 'each and one,' every one, (H. E. i. 393, Rb. 492; fyrir hvern mun ok einn, Fas. i. 396; ok sér-hverr, one and all.

δ. einn sér, apart, for oneself, Múspells-synir hafa einir sér fylking, Edda 41; einn sér, sole, F. 308; sér einir, Sturl. ii. 53; metaph. singular, peculiar, ein var h í lýðsku, Fs. 30.

e. sér-hverr, adj. every one, q. v.: eins-kona of one kind, Skálda 165; mod. indef. of a certain kind, a kind of; kostar, adv. particularly, Ísl. ii. 322, Mork. 81.

ζ. né einn, n. none; in old writers usually so, but now and then contracted (q. v.), and in mod. usage always so; né eina sekð, Grág. i. 136; úhréint, Stj. 409; né einu sinni, not once, Fms. xi. 13; né eins, single thing, 112; né eina herferð, vii. 28.

η. fáir einir, only in mod. usage in one word; nom. fáeinir, dat. fáeinum, gen. fá ein-stakr, single, q. v.: al-einn, alone, q. v.: ein-mana, q. v. (C. μόνος): einum-megin, adv. on one side, Nj. 248 (vide vegr).

einn-nefna, d. to appoint specially, Grág. i. 111.

einn-ig (einn-eg, einn-og, einn-ug), in mod. pronunciation MSS. of the 15th century einninn or einniginn (qs. einn v. adv. [from einn and vegr, qs. einn veg; cp. hvernig, bow; þannig hinuig, otherwise];—in the same way, likewise, also; the subst. n. still seen in the phrase, á einneg, in the same manner, 686 B. 12. (St.) 64; ek vil sjá hvernog þú markar þinn hlut, at eigi mark einnog báðir, Hkr. iii. 59; eigi þóttu öllum einnug, Ísl. ii. 352; Svartsson einnig (likewise), Sturl. i. 103; einniginn Ölver, Ó. li Fas. iii. 470; fylgir honum ok einninn sá kappi, Fas. i. 419; lét einninn synjga í kirkju, Bs. (Laur. S.) ein-nætttr, adj. one night old, Sturl. i. 174, Hm. 85. ein-ráðit, sup. hafa e., to have resolved, made up one's mind, Greg. 60, Eg. 424, Fms. ii. 266, v. 44, Orkn. 34: masc., Mork. 84.

ein-ráðr, adj. self-willed, Ld. 314, Fms. xi. 246, Fas. ii. 113, Bjarn. 70.
ein-reikull, adj. straying alone, Bs. i. 243.
ein-rendr, part. having a single stripe (of cloth), Nj. 96, v. l.
Ein-riði, a, m., pr. name, also Einnd-riði, mod. Indriði, but freq. in good MSS. spelt ein-, Mork., Ó. H., Orkn.; it properly means the great rider. β. nickname of Thor the god of thunder from his driving in the clouds, Edda (Gl.); cp. reið, thunder.
ein-rúm, n. a privy; i einrúmi, privately.
ein-ræði, n. self-will, obstinacy, Fms. ii. 254, Ld. 4, 188, Mork. 83.
ein-rænigr, adj. singular, strange, odd, Fms. vi. 217.
ein-rænn, adj. of singular temper, self-willed, Eg. 573, Fms. ii. 154, iii. 202, Bs. i. 144, in the last passage probably a false reading, = einvænn.
ein-samall, adj., einsömull, einsamatl, pl. einsamlir, etc., alone, rarely, in old writers, who use einn same in two words, and it only occurs in later MSS., Fas. i. 91, iii. 469 (paper MSS.)
ein-seta, u, f. bermitage, Hom. 26, Mart. 125. COMPS: einsetu-kona, u, f. a female anchorite, Bs. i. 478, Ld. 332, Hkr. i. 316. einsetu-lif, n, and einsetu-lifnaðr, m. the life of an anchorite, Bs. i. 204, Stj. 154, 158. einsetu-maðr, m. an anchorite, Fms. i. 145. einsetu-munkr, m. a hermit, Greg. 70, 655 iii. 4. ein-setja, setti; e. sér, to resolve firmly.
ein-skapan, f. the right to fix one's own terms, Orkn. 214, Fms. xi. 24.
ein-skepta, u, f. stuff woven with a single weft, a kind of flannel.
ein-skilt, n. adj. taken aside for a private purpose, (Fr.)
ein-skipa, adj. with a single ship, Fms. ii. 5, vii. 214, ix. 499.
ein-skjirr, adj. quite clear; e. veðr, Njarð. 374.
ein-skjaldar, gen. as adv. under one shield, acting together, Fms. ix. 249.
ein-skora, að; e. hug sinn, to make one's mind up, Bær. 11.
ein-skærigr, adj. pure; e. rúdd, a pure voice, Thom. 151.
ein-skærr, adj. pure; e. náð, pure grace.
ein-sköpuðr, m. a sole judge or umpire, Lex. Poët.
eins-ligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), alone, by oneself, Sks. 2: singly, Fms. i. 139, Stj. 184: especial, Magn. 512: gramm. singular, Skálda 185, 191.
ein-staka, adj. single, isolated (with the notion of few, now and then, here and there); e. víg, Fms. xi. 99; e. slög ok skeinur, Háv. 50; e. kossar, Fb. i. 304; e. visur, extemporised ditties (hence staka, a ditty), Fbr. 69.
ein-stakr, adj. = einstaka. β. mod. famous, notorious, chiefly in a bad sense; e. armingi, sviðingr, þjófr, galdramaðr, etc.
ein-stapi, a, m. a kind of fern, pteris aquilina, Str. 45.
ein-stigi, a, m. a single path, so narrow that only one can pass, Eg. 576, 577, 583, Fær. 267, Rð. 246, 247, Fms. ii. 110, viii. 49.
ein-strengja, d, to resolve firmly, Fms. iii. 49: reflex. to grow bold, ix. 50.
ein-stæðingr, m. an orphaned (bereft) person. einstæðings-skapr, m. a state of bereavement.
ein-stæðr, adj. left alone, bereaved, widowed, Hðm. 5. ein-sýnn, adj. = eineygr, one-eyed, Fas. i. 41, Fms. ii. 138, x. 301. β. at einsýnu, clearly, evidently, Hom. 5.
ein-sætt, n. adj. evident, what clearly ought to be done; e-t er e., i. e. that and nothing else is to be done; ok er þér e. at þjóna eigi lengr fjanda, Fms. ii. 39, 124, vi. 154, 242, vii. 19, 25, 27, Boll. 342, Orkn. 408.
ein-tal, n. private conversation, Nj. 103, Fms. i. 205, iv. 145, 308, vi. 11, vii. 103, Mork. 176.
ein-talat, part., verða e-t um e-t, to speak of nothing but that, Ísl. ii. 245.
ein-teiti, adj. quite merry, in high spirits, Eg. 526, Fms. iv. 167.
ein-tómi, adj. at one's ease, undisturbed, Orkn. 266.
ein-tómis, adv. alone.
ein-tómtr, adj. sole, alone, sheer.
ein-trjánungr, m. made of one piece of wood, Karl. 96, v. l.
ein-vala, adj. ind. chosen, excellent (Lat. egregius); e. kappi, a great champion, Stj. 512; e. ker, a chosen vessel, of a saint, Orkn. 226, Bs. ii. 148; e. lið, chosen, picked troops, Fær. 79, Stj. 480; e. maðr, a choice man, Blas. 37; e. riðdri, a fine horseman, Stj. 450.
ein-vald, n. monarchy, sovereignty, Stj. 499; koma einvaldi á landit, to make the country (i. e. the Icel. Commonwealth) submit to the monarch, Fms. ix. 435; tiundi vetr einvalds hans, the tenth year of his reign, x. 161. COMPS: einvalds-höfðingi, a, m. a monarch, Ann. 492. einvalds-konungur, m. an absolute king, Fms. i. 4, Eg. 6, 118, 263. einvalds-riki, n. an empire, Stj. 576, Fms. i. 19.
ein-valdi, a, m. and ein-valdr, s, m. a monarch, Fms. i. 2, iv. 126, Eg. 6, Fb. i. 40.
ein-valinn = eivalna, Bs. ii. 70, 183.
ein-veldi, n. = eivald.
ein-verðugr, adj. = einvirðugligr, (Fr.)
ein-vili, a, m. self-will, Fms. x. 418. ein-virðing, f. one's own choice, Bs. ii. 46, H. E. i. 523.
ein-virðis, adv. in particular, Mar. 49, 139.
ein-virðuliga, adv. (-ligr, adj.), especially, Lv. 37, H. E. i. 518.
ein-virkri, also ein-yrkri, a, m. [verk], a single worker, one who works single-banded, a poor husbandman that has no servants; the einyrki is reckoned partly as bóndi, and not cottager; he could serve as a neighbour (búi) in case of his property amounting to two cows' value per head of his household (wife and children), Grág. i. 145, defined in ii. 42, 43: the Norse sense of the word, Gþl. 438, cp. Jb. 184: in N. G. L. i. 199 distinction is made between bændr, einhleypingar, and einyrkjar.

ein-vist, f. in the phrase, vera einvistum, to live alone, 625, 88, Bs. ii. 45.

ein-vígi, n. [A. S. úvrig], a single combat; distinction is made between the hölmganga (q. v.) and einvígi, the rules of einvígi being plain, cp. the curious passage in Korm. 84; Edda 18, Nj. 33, Fms. vii. 229. COMPD: einvígis-maðr, m. one who fights in single combat, Fms. x. 88.

ein-voldugr, adj. absolute, Fs. 17.

ein-vænn, adj. [ván]; medic., liggja e., to lie in a hopeless state, to be sinking fast, Bs. i. 353; hón hafði aldri orðit einvænni, her life had never been in greater danger, id.; fylgði bæði svefnleysi ok matleysi, ok þótti hann þá einvænn vera, and they thought he was in a hopeless state, 144, (Ed. einvænn, which no doubt is a misspelling in the MS.)

ein-vörðum, adv. specially, D. N., Sks. 787.

ein-pykkur, adj. (ein-pykkni, f.), stubborn, self-willed, Fb. i. 543.

ein-æri, n. [ár], a term of one year, D. N.

ein-ærr, adj. lasting one year, D. N.

ein-æti, n. pl.; e. einætum, to eat 'off-hand,' Glúm. 340, cp. Edm. Head's Transl. 24.

ein-örð, mod. einurð (Norse form einardr), f. [einardr], frankness, boldness, fairness; vit ok e., Fms. ix. 333; ef þú vilst heldr trú líta . . . en e., rather to believe a lie than simple truth, Eg. 63; e. ok viúntta, frankness and friendship, Ísl. ii. 234; þá munu þér ætla, at sú muni eigi e. til hafa við at ganga, that be has not the fairness (boldness) to confess, Ld. 172, Fms. ii. 32; ni vilju vér sýna e. várrar frásagnar, we will shew the fairness of our story, viii. 48. β. faith, fidelity; at engi skjoplisti i einurðinni (fidelity) við annan, Ó. H. 61; að landfólkit mundi smáit frá einurðinni við konung, 177; fáir munu nú vera i Noregi þeir er einurð sinni haldi nú við mik, 194. γ. in mod. usage, einurð means frankness, as opp. to shyness; thus einardar-lauss, adj. = sby: einardar-leysi, u. shyness: einardar-litill, adj. rather sby, whereas in old writers these words mean faithless or irresolute; verða einardar fát, to fail in courage, Nj. 208; einardar-lauss, wavering, Al. 71, Sks. 357, N. G. L. ii. 420: einardar-maðr, m. a steadfast, trusty man, Sturl. ii. 64: einardar-skortr, m. = einurðarleysi, Nj. 208, v. l.

EIR, f. [Lat. aes; Goth. aiz; A. S. ær; Engl. ore; O. H. G. er; Hel. erin; Germ. erz]:—brass, Stj. 340, 656, 7, Greg. 80, Hkr. i. 265, Fms. x. 284. COMPS denoting brazen, of brass: eir-altari, m. a brazen altar, Stj. eir-baugr, m. a brazen ring, Fb. i. 370. eir-hestr, m. a brazen horse, Merl. eir-hjálmr, n. a brazen helmet, Stj. 461. eir-keittill, m. a brass kettle, Grág. i. 504, Eg. 396. eir-kross, m. a brazen cross, Vm. 49. eir-kyrtill, m. a brazen cloak (used for torment), Blas. 46, 655, 14. eir-lampi, a, m. a brass lamp, Jm. 2. eir-ormr, m. a brazen serpent, Stj. 333. Numb. xxi. 9. eir-penningr, m. a penny of brass, Post. 645, 78. eir-skjöldr, m. a brazen shield, Stj. 461, I Sam. xvii. 6. eir-stólpi, a, m. a pillar of brass, Stj. 564. eir-teinn, m. a wire of brass, Fms. ii. 129. eir-uxi, a, m. an ox of brass (image), Stj. 2 Kings. xvi. 17.

EIR, f. peace, clemency; this word occurs several times in old poetry (Kormak), but not in prose, cp. Lex. Poët., and in COMPS: eirar-samr (eir-samr), adj. mild; eirar-lauss and eirar-vanr, adj. merciless, martial. II. one of the beaten goddesses, Edda.

eira, ð, [A. S. árian = parcere], to spare, with dat.; hafa allir hlutir unnit eida at e. Baldri (not to hurt Balder), Edda 37; hann eirði öngu hvárki i orðum né verkum, be spared naught either in word or work, Nj. 184, Fms. vii. 312; at þeir skyldu e. konum ok kirkjum, spare women and churches, Sturl. iii. 40; e. undan e-u, to yield; höfum vér lengi undan eirt fjandskap yðrum, Ld. 204; kvað hann þá ekki mundu tjá at letja sík, kvaðsk lengi hafa undan eirt, Fms. vii. 244; ok meir þykkjumk vér undan eira, Sturl. i. 72; eptir þetta riða þeir Ögnumdr i brott, ok eirir hann undan þá enn fyrst, iii. 103. β. impers., e-m eirir e-t illa, it displeases one, i. e. to feel ill at rest with a thing; illa eirði mér fall þitt, Flóv. 29; Eiriki konungur eirði þetta stórilla, Fms. i. 19; honum eirir illa ef hann hefir eigi sitt mál, Ísl. ii. 236; Bergi eirði hit versta, Fs. 53; eira vel (ironically), to be well pleased, meira efni hefir hann til eldingar en honum megi vel eira inni at vera, 45: to do for one, vitum hve oss eiri öl þat er Bárðr of signði, let us see how Bárð's draught will agree with us, Eg. ch. 44 (in a verse); Egill fann, at honum mundi ekki svá búit eira, E. felt that this would not do, Eg. 552. In mod. usage, eira means to feel at rest (= una), of a man or beast who is restless or runs from one place to another,—it is said 'ham eirir hvergi,' be can nowhere rest; the other senses are obsolete.

eira, u, f. rest, = eirð.

eirð, f. clemency, mercy, Fms. ix. 36, v. l., Hkr. iii. 257, Gullp. 48, O. H. L. 40. 2. mod. rest, quietness; pl. ú-eirðir, uproar, tumult.

eirinn, adj. forbearing, Bs. i. 766: ó-eirinn, overbearing, mod. restless.

eir-ligr, adj. brazen, Stj. 377.

EISA, u, f. [Swed. üssia; Norse eisa and esja], glowing embers, Edda (Gl.), esp. in the allit. phrase, eisa ok eimyrja.

eisa, ad, in the phrase, e. eldum, to shower down embers, Fas. ii. 469; poët., ganga eisandi, to go dashing through the waves, of a ship, Hkv. i. 2; láta skeiðr e., id., Sighvat; vargr hafs eisar, the sea-wolf (the ship) goes dashing, Edda (in a verse); eisandi uðr, foaming waves, Bs. i. 483 (in a verse), vide Lex. Poët.

eiskald, n., poët. the beard, Edda (Gl.), Lex. Poët.: in pl., eisköld, Fm. 27. eiskra, ad, to roar or foam, rage; gékk hon útar ok innar eptir gólfinu eiskraudi, Isl. ii. 338; görvir at eiskra, enraged, Hdm. 11; hann eiskraði þá mjök ok hélt við berserksgang, Fas. i. 524; eiskraði sítt í berserkjunum, 425; in mod. usage, það iskrar í honum, it roars within him, of suppressed rage.

EISTA, n., gen. pl. eistna, a testicle, Sturl. ii. 182, Fas. ii. 342, Bs. i. 615, Fb. ii. 161; sels-eista, a nickname, Fbr.

EITILL, m. a nodule in stone, iron, or the like; hence the saying, harðr sem e., 'hard as a flint', poët. name of a giant, Edda (Gl.)

eitla, ad, in the phrase, eitla augum, 'to set the face as a flint', Skv. 230 B.

EITR, n., gen. eitrs, [A. S. átor; O. H. G. eitar; Dan. ædder; Old Engl. atter-cop; the spider is in A. S. átor-coppa, whence Dan. ædder-kop = cup of poison]:—poison, Bær. 15, Fms. vi. 166, viii. 303, Edda 155 (pref.), Al. 49, Fas. i. 522 (in a verse).

eitra, ad, to poison, Ann. 1360: part. eitradr, empoisoned.

eitr-á, f. a poisonous stream, Edda 42.

eitr-blandaðr (eitr-blandinn), part. poisoned, Rb. 358.

eitr-blástr, m. inflammation from poison, Bs. ii. 95, 157.

eitr-bólginm, part. swollen with poison, Greg. 79.

eitr-dalr, m. dales with rivers of poison, Vsp. 42.

eitr-drep, n. deadly poison, mortification, Stj. 97.

eitr-dropi, a, m. a drop of poison, Vsp. 44.

eitr-drykk, m. a poisoned draught, Fas. iii. 392.

eitr-eggjaðr, part. having a poisoned edge, Fms. iii. 78.

eitr-fár, adj. glittering (of poison), venomous (of snakes), Edda (Gl.)

eitr-fluga, f. a venomous insect, Bs. ii. 183.

eitr-fullr, adj. full of poison, Magn. 470.

eitr-herðr, part. tempered in poison (of steel), Bret.

eitr-kaldr, adj. deadly cold, Lex. Poët.

eitr-kveisa, f. venomous sore, a nickname, Fms.

eitr-kvikendi, n. a poisonous animal, Skv. 88, Stj. 253, Al. i. 623, 26.

eitr-kvikja, u, f. poisonous yeast, Edda 3.

eitr-ligr, adj. poisonous, Stj. 91.

eitr-maðkr, m. a venomous maggot, Stj. 97.

eitr-naðra, a, u, f. a poisonous adder.

eitr-ormr, m. a viper, Stj. 37, 96, Rb. 344, Fms. vi. 164.

eitr-tandraðr, adj. = eitrfár, Al. 168.

EK, pers. pron., mod. eg, proncd. ég or jég; eg occurs as early as in MSS. of the 15th century, Arna-Magu. 556 A; jak, Fms. x. 287, cp. the mod. Swed. form and the mod. Icel. jég; old poets make it rhyme with ek, as, Halldórr ok ek | höfum engi þrek, Korm. 154 (in a verse), cp. Ld. 108; [Ulf. ik, but ek on the Golden horn and on the stone in Tune; A. S. ic; Engl. I; Germ. ich; old Swed. jak, mod. jag; Dan. jeg; cp. Lat. ego, Gr. ἐγώ]—I, Nj. 10, 30, 132, etc.

2. in poetry and old prose a pronominal 'k or 'g is suffixed to the verb; em'k búinn annan í at nefna, Grág. i. 103; ek em'k, 623, 56, Blas. 41, Mork. 89, 94, 99, 104, Vpm. 8, Ls. 14, Ad. 1, Post. 645-33; jók'k, 'I eked' (added), Íb. (pref.); vas'k þar fjórtán vetr, ch. 9; þá er ek var'k á bænum, Blas. 40, Hm. 12; ek það'k, Post. 645, 54; ek kom'k, Skm. 18; ek sit'k, Mork. 168; ek finn'k, 141; ek nam'k, 73; sá'k, 75; ek sé'k (video), 103, 168, Fms. xi. 110; mun'k at ek, Mork. 50; svá ek vind'k, Hm. 156; ok rit'k á þessa lund, Skálda (Thorodd) 166; sjá'k (sim), Mork. 183; g before k becomes by assimilation k, e. g. hyk'k = hygg'k, Skm. 5; the pronominal k is inserted between the suffixed negative and the verb, ek skal'k-a, hef'k-a, mon'k-a, sá'k-a, má'k-a, veit'k-a, or skal'k-a ek, hef'k-a ek, etc.; even a double k after a diphthong, siá'kk (sim), Mork. 89, 134, but chiefly in poetry with the suffixed negative, e. g. ek sé'kk-a: this form is obsolete, whereas the suffixed g (or k) in bisyllables or after a vowel is more freq.; svá at ek fæ'k eigi leyzt mik, Edda 20; er ek vilda'g helzt, Fms. xi. 146; eigi munda'k trúa, Edda 32; ef ek lifi ok mega'k ráða, 34; þá hafða'k bundit með gresjarni, id.; sem önga frægd muna'k af hljóta, 20; sýnda'k bæði þeim ok Sæmundi, Íb. (pref.); þá er ek var heima heyrða'k sagt, Edda 81; er ek æva kenna'g, Hm. 164; draums ætli'g þér, Hdl. 7; þorða'g, Ad. 1; ræka'g, matta'g, Stor. 8; skýt ek ok ræ'k (ræ'g, v. l.), Fms. vi. 170 (in a verse); líkara at ek vitja'g hingat þessa heita, Eg. 319; næða'k (or næða'g), if I could reach, Eb. 70 (in a verse); at ek nenni þá menn alla ok beiði'g, Grág. ii. 317; vilja'k, I will, Ht. i.; þviat ek ætla'g, O. H. 59; ok náða'k svá öllu ríki þeirra, 74; þviat ek trú'k yðr bezt, 88; ek setta'k, Mork. 62; flytta'k, 94; geri'k, heyrða'k, 36; mæli'g, 39; ek vetti'g, 175; tefli'g, 186; setta'g, lagða'g, id.; vilda'g, 193; vide Lex. Poët. and the word '-at' [p. 2]; sometimes a double pronoun occurs, g and k, mátti'g-a'k, Og. 32; þjargi'g-a'k, Hm. 153; stöðvi'g-a'k, 151; hversu ek má'k, Fms. vi. vide Lex. Poët. and Frump. 228 sqq.

B. DAT. AND ACC. are from a different root:—dat. mér, [Ulf. Germ. mir; lost in Dan.], Nj. 10, etc. etc.; acc. mik, mod. mig, which form occurs even in MSS. at the beginning of the 14th century, Hauks-bók: mek occurs now and then in MSS., e. g. O. H. L., N. G. Skv. B, else it is rare and obsolete, Al. 42, O. H. 107, [Ulf. mi; S. me; Engl. me; Germ. mich; Dan. mig.] As the word is so common, we shall only mention the use of mik which is special to the Scandinavian tongue, viz. its use as a verbal suffix. The ancients had a do form for the reflexive; for 1st pers. -mk, i. e. mik suffixed to the pluri verb; for the 3rd pers. -sk, i. e. sik suffixed to sing. and plur. al thus, ek (vör) þykkjast, I (we) seem to myself (ourselves); but þykkisk, he seems to himself; þeir þykkjast, they seem to themselves: -nk was later changed into -mz, or -mst of editions and mod. use; but is a grammatical decay, as if both -mst and -st (þykkjast and þykkist) from the same reflex. sik.

1. the subject may be another person (plur. or sing.) and the personal pronoun mik suffixed as object to verb, a kind of middle voice found in very old poems, and where it is freq. it is a test of antiquity; in prose it is quite obsolete: jötna stóðum'k yfir ok undir, the ways of giants (i. e. precipices) stood c and beneath me, Hm. 106; er lögðum'k arm yfir, the lass who laid arms round me, 108; mögr hétum'k fögru, my son promised me, Egil; hilmir budum'k löð (acc.), the king gave me leave, i. e. báð sing, Höfuðl. 2; úlfis bagi gáfum'k íþrótt, the wolf's foe (Odin) me the art (poetry), Stor. 23; Ragnarr gáfum'k reiðar mána, R. gav me the shield, Bragi; þat erum'k sýnt, it is shewn to me, id.; stóndum'k fyrir yndi, the lass blights my joy, Kormak; hugr tjáðum'k, eou helped me, Egil; snertum'k harmr við hjarta, grief touches me to the L. Landn.; stóndum'k til hjarta hjör, the sword pierces me to the L. Fm. 1; feldr brennum'k, my cloak catches fire, Gm. 1; draum dreum'k, I dreamed a dream; grimt várum'k hlið, the gap (breach) terrible to me, Stor. 6; hálf ván féllum'k, half my hope failed me, feldar-drápa; heidnir rekkr hnekkum'k, the heathen men turned me Sighvat; disir hvötum'k at, the 'disir' booted us, Hdm. 29; gumi um'k at vígi, the man made us fight, id.; lyst várum'k, it list me, 74; very common is erum'k, 'tis to me (us); erum'k ván, I (we) bo expect; mjök erum'k tregt tungu at hræra, 'tis hard for me to moa tongue, i. e. the tongue cleaves to my mouth, Stor. 1, 17, Ad. 16. sometimes oneself is the subject, freq. in prose and poetry, either in depe verbs or as reflex. or recipr.; at vit skilim'k sáttir, O. H. 119; a komim'k, that we shall come, 85; finnum'k hér þá, 108; ef vér finni 111; ek skildum'k við Ólaf konung, 126; ef ek komum'k í braut, 1 sigrom'k, if I gain the victory, 206; æðrom'k, 214; ef ek öndum'k þyk, Eg. 127; ek berum'k, I bear myself, Grág. ii. 57, Mork. passim þykkjum'k, þóttum'k, ráðum'k, látum'k, setjum'k, hjóðum'k, skildu kveljum'k, etc., = ek þykkisk, þóttisk, ræðsk, letsk, setsk, þjóðsk, ski kvelsk, etc.: even at the present day the forms eg þykkjumst, þótt are often used in writing; in other words the suffix -mst (-mk) is al obsolete.

β. the obsolete interjection er mik = I am; vel er well is me (= 'bless me!'), O. H. L. 71; æ er mik, ab me! 64; ken mik, I am known, 66; with a reflex. notion, hvat er mik at því, is that to me? Skv. i. 28; er mik þat undir frétt þeirri, that is my r for asking, Grág. i. 19;—this 'er mik' is clearly the remains of th erum'k.

C. DUAL AND PLUR. also from a different root: 1. dual, mod. við, a Norse form mit also occurs, Al. 170, 171, [cp. mi, Aasen]:—we two; gen. and dat. from a different root, okkar okkr, [cp. Goth. iggqis; A. S. inc and incer; O. H. G. ineb and in; Ivar Aasen dikke and dykk]:—our. 2. plur.: a. nom. er, and vær, the last form now obsolete, [Goth. veis; A. S. and Engl. Germ. wir; Dan. vi]:—we. β. gen. vár, mod. vor, Eg. 524, viii. 213, 398, etc. γ. dat. and acc. oss, [Goth. uns (acc.), (dat.); A. S. us; Germ. uns; Swed. oss; Dan. os]:—us; it need be noticed that in mod. familiar usage the dual—við, okkr, okkar taken the place of the plural, vér, oss; but that in written book forms vér, oss are still in freq. use, except in light or familiar style writers, on the other hand, made a clear distinction both in speech and writing.

EKJA, u, f. [aka], a carting, carrying in a cart; tóku þá sum til ekju, en sumir hlöðu heyinu, Eb. 260; cp. Swed. åska, vide áss [p. 2].

COMP. : ekju-vegr, m. a cart-road, D. N.

EKKI, a, m. [akin to öngr, Lat. angustus], as a medic. term, a wulvsive sobbing, caused by the repression of tears, Fé. lx. 208, Hkv. 7. Skv. i. 20, Gisl. 64 (in a verse), Rafn S. (in a verse), Am. 44, Hk. (in a verse of Sighvat), Stor. 2, where we ought to read, því at stendr höfugligr í (not 'ór') hyggju stað, because a heavy sobbing oppresses, stifles my breast; angrs ok ekka, Stj. 428, (freq.)

ekki, adv. not, vide eingi.

ekkill, m. a widower, akin to the preceding; freq. in mod. use; no reference from an old writer is on record seems to be a accident. II. poet. name of a sea-king, Edda (Gl.): botan., Ekkilsjurt, Acbillaea L., Bb. 3. 75.

ekkja, u, f. [Swed. enka and Dan. enke shew that the root consonants are nk; this word is peculiar to the Scand. tongue; even Ulf. renders χῆρα by vidow, which is the Lat. vidua]:—a widow, Grág. i. 108, 306, Blas. 21, Bs. ii. 161, Fas. i. 223. COMPDS: ekkju-búnaðr, m. widow's weeds, Stj. 197. ekkju-dómr, m. widowhood, Stj. 197. ekkju-nafn, n. a widow's name, widowhood, Fas. i. 223, Am. 98 (MS. ekkju-nam clearly a false reading = namn). ekkju-skapr, m. widowhood, Fms. x. 433. ekkju-sonr, m. a widow's son, 656 A. ii. In Edda 108 there is a distinction between hæll, a widow whose husband is slain, and ekkja, the widow of one who died a natural death; hæll is merely a poet. word and obsolete, but ekkja is in full use. In old poetry ekkja is used = a lass, girl, cp. Lapp. ekka = Lat. mulier; cp. also Lex. Poët.

ekla, u, f. dearbt, want, Sks. 218, v. l.; Vell-ekla, Dearbt of Gold, the name of a poem, Hkr.; suml-e, scarcity of drink, Eg. (in a verse); the word is rare in old writers, but still in use in Icel., e. g. hey-e, scarcity of hay; matar-e, dearbt of meat; vinnu-fólks-e, scarcity of servants.

ekla, adv. scarcely; þeir Helgi tóku e. til matar um kveldit, konungr spurði hvárt þeir væri sjúkri, Fms. v. 317 (Åm. ley.)

EKRA, u, f. [from akr, p. 10], an acre, corn-field, Landn. 125, Al. 52, N. G. L. i. 217, Stj. 400. Judges ix. 32.

ektar- and ekta-, [Germ. echt], adj. genuine, mod. (vide ei). β. wedded; taka til ekta, to marry: chiefly used in COMPDS, ekta-maðr, m. a husband; ekta-skapr, m. matrimony, etc.; ektar-kona, u, f. a wedded wife, occurs in D. N. i. 591, (mod.)

ÉL, n., spelt el, Edda (Kb.) 72, Fms. xi. 136; él, Hom. 109; gen. dat. pl. éla, élum; mod. élja, éljum, inserting g; [cp. Dan. iling]:—a snow-shower; the proverb, él el linna um síðir, every 'él' comes to an end; él eitt mun vera, ok skyldi langt til annars slíks, Nj. 200; þá gördi él mikit ok illviðri, Fms. i. 175; élum ok hreggi, x. 135, xi. 136, 137; drífu-él, Orkn. 414; meðan él dró á, 396; í éli einnar stundar, 656 B. 12; él augna (poët.), tears, Edda 72. β. metaph. a shock, uproar, Hom. 109: a hot fight, ok verðr et harðasta él, Fms. xi. 32. élja-drög, n. pl. (qs. élja-drög, f. ?), streaks of snow-showers seen far off, etc.

elda, d, mod. also ad, [eldr], to light, kindle a fire, with dat. of the fuel; e. viði, Grág. ii. 211, 338; ef þeir e. gördum, grindum eðr and-virki, Gpl. 422: absol., at vér eldim úsarpiliga í Hvammi, Sturl. i. 67: to heat, warm, þá skulu þeir e. hús at manntali, Jb. 225; e. ofn, Hkr. iii. 115: metaph., elda hug e-s, to kindle one's mind, Hom. 107; ek skal yðra húd e. knálga með klungrum (make you smart), Stj. 395; e. vita, to kindle a beacon, Orkn. 264; en þó eldi hér lengi af með þeim bræðrum, the spark of resentment was long felt among the brothers, Lv. 34; e. járn, to forge iron, Rkv.: the phrase, elda grátt silfr, to be bad friends, is a metaphor taken from smelting drossy silver that cannot stand the fire; þeir Stóráfr eldu löngum grátt silfr, en stundum voru með þeim blíðskapur, Fb. i. 522. 2. to cook, or gener. to expose to a light fire.

II. reflex. to be kindled; má vera at eldisk hér langr óþokki af, it may be that long ill-feeling will be kindled therefrom, Lv. 50.

eldask, d, [aldr], to grow old; eldisk árgalinn nú, Fms. vi. 251; er þá tók mjök at eldask, viii. 108; hann tekr nú at eldask (MS. öldask) mjök, xi. 51; ek finn at ek eldumk, en þverr kraptrinn, Orkn. 464; þeir hrymask eigi né eldask, Rb. 346. β. part. eldr, old, worn by age; Gíslí kvaðsk eldr vera mjök frá úfríði, Sturl. iii. 10: equivocal is the phrase, eldir at ráðum ok at þrotum komnir (in the dream of king Sverrir), Fms. viii. 108, cp. Orkn. ch. 34. γ. impers. in the phrase, nótt (acc.) eldir, the night grows old (cp. elding); þá er nótt eldir, Fas. i. 147.

eld-bakaðr, part. baked on embers, Stj. 595. 1 Kings xix. 6.

eld-beri, a, m. a brassier, lantern, H. E. ii. 107, Pm. 26, 73, Jm. 12, Vm. 164; eldbera-ker, id., Pm. 106.

eld-borg, f. a volcanic crag, vide borg.

eld-bruni, a, m. fire, conflagration, D. N.

eld-böllr, m. a fire-ball, Dipl. v. 18.

eld-fimr, adj. inflammable, easily catching fire, Sks. 427.

eld-fjall, n. a fire-hill, volcano.

eld-færi, n. pl. an apparatus for striking fire, tinder-box, Jb. 145.

eld-gamall, adj. [from Dan. ældgammel = Icel. elli-gamall], stone old, (mod. word.)

eld-glæringar, f, pl. 'fire-glare,' seen in darkness.

eld-gos, n. 'fire-gush,' a volcanic eruption.

eld-gróf and eld-gröf, f. a 'fire-groove,' Ísl. ii. 405, 417, Eb. 272, v. l.

eld-gýgr, m. a crater.

eld-gögn, n. pl. cooking-vessels, D. N.

eld-heitr, adj. hot as fire.

eld-hraun, n. a 'fire-field,' lava-field.

eld-hús (elda-hús, Eg. 397, 603, Sturl. iii. 219, Gpl. 344), n. the 'fire-house,' i. e. the ball or parlour, one of the chief rooms in ancient dwellings, where the fire was kept up, used synonymously with eldaskáli, but opp. to stofa, the ladies' room: stofa, eldhús, búr, Grág. i. 459; stofu-hurð, búr-hurð, eldahús-hurð, Gpl. 344, H. E. i. 495; eldhús eðr stofur, Grág. i. 468; ganga milli stofu ok eldhúss, Fbr. 164; cp. Gísl.

14, 15, 97, (Mant.) 324, Eb. ch. 52, vide new Ed. 98, v. l. I, 3, 4; gökk þorgæðr þegar inn í eldahús, Eg. 603; eldhúss dyrr, Lv. 89, l. d. 54, Sturl. iii. 218, 219; eldhúss-skot, n. id., cp. Eg. 397; eldhús-hurð, f. the burden of an e., N. G. L. i. 38, Gpl. l. c.; eldhús-fift, n. a 'fire-side stool,' an idiot who sits all day by the fire, Fas. ii. 114; in Sturl. iii. 219 eldahús and skáli seem to be used differently. β. it may also be used of any room having a hearth and fire, eldahús . . . var þat brott frá öðrum húsum, Eg. 203; and even of a kitchen, 238, cp. Nj. 75. In mod. usage eldhús only means a kitchen.

eldi (elpi, Grág.), n. [ala], feeding, maintenance, Grág. i. 117, 143: the person maintained, 236: in mod. usage esp. of keeping another's lambs, sheep, in winter, hence lambs-eldi, 'lambs-keep,' an obligation on every householder to feed a lamb for the priest in winter; elda-skildagi, m. the time when the lambs are sent back (middle of May); the phrase, skila úr eldum, to send back (lambs): eldis-hestur, m. a horse kept in stall, opp. to útígangs-hestur. 2. a thing born; mislit eldi, Stj. 179. Gen. xxxi. 8; e. þat er fram fer af kvíði konunnar, 656 B. 7; skaltú þiggja þat af Guði at hann gefi þér gott eldi, Mar. 3, 6, 19; komask frá e. sinu, to be delivered of a child, Fas. iii. 276; cp. upp-eldi, breeding.

eldi-brandr, m. fire-wood, fuel, Grág. ii. 261, Fms. ii. 82, viii. 358, v. l., Fbr. 97: a fire-brand, Stj. 402, Fs. 45, Þiðr. 332, Grett. 117: metaph., Post. 645. 84.

eldi-ligr, adj. elderly, Fas. i. 120, Mag. 5.

elding, f. firing, fuel, Scot. elding, Grág. ii. 338, 358, Fs. 45; eldingar-steinar, (bituminous?) stones to make a fire, Karl. 18: smelting metals, gull er stenzk e., gold which resists the heat of the crucible, Grág. i. 501; cp. elda grátt silfr. II. lightning, also in plur., Fms. x. 30, xi. 136, Fas. i. 372, Sks. 229, Stj. 300, Al. 41: eldinga-flug, n. a flash of lightning, Rb. 102: eldinga-mánaðr, m. the lightning month, id.

elding, f. [aldr], the 'eld' or old age of the night, the last or third part of the night; allt frá eldingu ok til miðs aptans, Hrafn. 7; vakti þórhildr upp sína menn þegar í elding, Fms. ii. 231; í elding nætr, vii. 214; kómu í elding nætr á Jadar, Ó. H. 117. The ancients divided the night into three equal parts, of which the last was called either ótta (q. v.) or elding, (þá er þriðjungur lífr nætr, i. e. where the third part of the night is left): the mod. usage is, það er farið að elda apt, it begins to rekindle; and apt-elding, rekindling, as though 'daybreak' were from fire 'eldr'; but in old writers 'apt' is never joined to these words (Anal. 193 is taken from a paper MS., cp. Fb. iii. 405, l. 6); the phrase elding 'nætr' also shews that the word refers not to daylight, but to night, and means the last part of the night, opp. to midnight, mið-nætti.

eldi-skíð, m. a log of fire-wood, Fs. 6, Þiðr. 262; loganda c., a fire-brand, Stj. 413.

eldi-stokkr, m. a log of fire-wood, Glím. 338.

eldi-torf, n. turf for firing, Ísl. ii. 112, Dipl. v. 23, Bs. ii. 135.

eldi-víðr, m. fire-wood, Fms. ii. 82, vii. 97, K. Þ. K. 90: but, as Icel. is barren of trees, eldiviðr means fuel in general, peat, etc., Orkn. 16; torf-skurð svá sem hann þarf til eldivíðar, digging peat for fuel, Vm. COMPDS: eldiviðar-fátt, n. adj. wanting fuel, Fbr. 97. eldiviðar-lauss, adj. short of fuel. eldiviðar-loysi, n. want of fire-wood (fuel), Fms. vi. 146, Stj. 150. eldiviðar-stika, u, f. a stick of fire-wood, Stj. 268.

eld-ker, n. = eldberi, Am. 5.

eld-knöttur, m. a fire-ball.

eld-kvøykja, v, f. kindling fire, Nj. 194: metaph., 625. 74, Mork. 7.

eld-ligr (elligr, Al. 65), adv. fiery, of fire, Greg. 19, Niðrst. 6, Fas. iii. 414, Sks. 208, Rb. 442, Stj. 98.

eld-neyti, n. fuel, Gpl. 369.

eld-næmr, adj. easily catching fire, Sks. 427, Fms. xi. 34, Mork. 7.

ELDR, m., gen. ellds, also spelt elz, [a word that may be taken as a test of Scand. races; Dan. ild; Swed. ild; for the Teut. nations use the word feuer, fire, which is wanting in Scand., though used by old Icel. poets, who probably borrowed it from A. S.; on the other hand, Ulf. constantly renders nūþ by fon, Icel. funi, q. v.; in A. S. poetry and in Hel. úled = incendiary occurs a few times, and ulan = Lat. urere (Greim and Schmeller); Rask suggests a Finn. origin]:—fire. In cold climates fire and life go together; hence the proverb, eldr er bezt með yta sonum, ok sólar sýn, fire is best among the sons of men, and the sight of the sun, Hm. 67: in reference to the healing power of fire, eldr tekr við sóttum, fire consumes (cures) fevers, 138; sú er eldrinn heitastr er á sjálfum brennr, Grett. 136 new Ed.: allit., e. né járn, fire nor iron, Edda 82; hvárki egg né eld, 162; eldr (sparks of fire) hraut or sverðum þeirra, Flóv. 29; e. þótti af hrjóta er vápinu kómu saman, Sturl. iii. 187, vide Fms. i. 292, vi. 153, vii. 338 (MS. ell), viii. 74, 202, x. 29, Nj. 74, Eluc. 19, 625. 178. β. the eruption of a volcano, Bs. i. 803, 804; jarð-eldr, 'earth-fire', subterranean fire. COMPDS: elds-bruni, a, m. burning of fire, Stj. elds-daunn, m. smell of fire, Finnb. 242. elds-gangr, m. the raging of fire, Fms. i. 128, x. 29, Sturl. iii. 132, Bs. i. 327, Orkn. 368, 458, Sks. 141. elds-glór, n. glare of fire, Fas. iii. 471. elds-gneisti, a, m. a spark of fire, Greg. 74. elds-gólf, n. a hearth-floor, N. G. L. i. 256. elds-gögn, n. pl. materials for firing, Vm.

177. elds-hiti, a. m. fiery heat, Fms. x. 379. elds-kveykja, f. = eldkveikja, Greg. 77. elds-litr, n. orbs of fire, Nj. 194, Rb. 336. elds-líki, n. a likeness, shape of fire, Clem. 30, Rb. 388. elds-ljós, n. fire-light, Fms. ix. 49. elds-logi, a. m. a flame, Stj. 414. elds-matr, n. food of fire, Th. 19. elds-neyti, n. pl. fuel, Band. 10, Fms. ix. 339, Fas. i. 84. elds-stólpi, a. m. a pillar of fire, Stj. 326. elds-uppkvama, u. f. the eruption of a volcano, Landn. 269, Bs. i. 148, 498. elds-vélar, f. pl. fire devices, Flóv. 43. elds-vimr, m. 'fire-whims, flickering fire, of the aurora borealis, fire-gleam', Sks. 203. elds-virki, n. a tinder-box, Fms. vii. 225, Orkn. 208, Band. 30. II. esp. in plur. a fire on the hearth; the proverbs, við eld skal öll drekka, by the fireside sbalt thou drink ale, Hm. 82; allir eldar brenna út um sóiur, all fires (beacons) burn out at last (of the death of an aged man); allit, eldr á arni (vide arinn). In the old halls in Scandinavia an oblong hearth was built in the middle of the hall, and the fires kindled were called langeldar, long fires, with an opening in the thatch called ljórfi for a chimney; the benches in the hall were ranged on both sides of the langeldar, vide Edda 82 (the hall of king Adils); hence the phrase, bera öll um eld, to band the ale round the fire, viz. to one's cup fellow on the opposite bench, Fagrsk. ch. 219, Grett. ch. 10, new Ed. p. 23; elda-skálar vóru stórir á bæjum, sátu menn við langelda á öptnum, þá vóru bór settr fyrir menn fyrir (innan MS. Holm.), sváfu menn upp (út MS. Holm.) frá eldunum, Kristni S. ch. 2; þá vóru görvir eldar stórir eptir endilöngum skálanum, sem í þann tíma var títt, at drekka öll við eld, Bs. i. 42; cp. Orkn., eldar vóru á gólfnu, on the floor, ch. 18, where the fire seems to have been made in a pit (vide eldróf) in the middle of the floor, cp. also kipti honum upp at pallinum, vide bakeldr: again, at the evening and morning meals people gathered round the 'meal-fires' (mál-eldar), hence the phrases, sitja við elda, to sit at the fire; vóru görfir máleldar hvort kveld í elda-skála sem síðr var til, sátu menn löngum við eldana áðr menn gengu til matar, Eb. ch. 52: máleldr, the 'meal-fire' or the small fire, is distinguished from langeldr, the great fire, 276; þat var í þann tíma er þeir Snorri sátu við málelda (yfir málborði, v. l.), Nj. ch. 8; höfðu menn orðit vátir ok vóru görvir máleldar (langeldar, v. l.), Nj. ch. 8; ok er skálabúinn var mettr sat hann við eld, Fs. 6; snýr at dyrum, er menn sátu við langelda (in the evening), Korm. ch. 15; um kveldit er menn sátu við elda, Orkn. 448: the phrase, sitja milli elda, to sit between two fires, to be in a strait, vide Gm. compps: elda-hús, n., vide eldhús. elda-skáli, a. m. = eldhús, Eb. l. c., Grett. l. c., cp. Eb. 170; einn laugaraptan sat Helga í elda-skála, Ísl. ii. 274; hafði hann lagzt niðr í elda-skála eptir dagverð, Gísl. 97; þrándr hafði látið góra elda mikla í elda-skála, Fær. 183; ekki lagðisk Ormr í elda-skála, Fb. i. 521, Eg. 238. elda-skára, u. f. (elda-skári, a. m., Lex. Run.), a 'fire-rake, poker', Nj. 236. elds-görð, f. making fire, Fs. 45. III. a beacon, bale-fire, Gs. 18. IV. in old poetry the fire of wounds or of Odin = weapons, the fire of the sea = gold; hauga-eldar, magical fire in old cairns; maur-ildi, a glow-worm; hrævar-eldr, a Will o' the wisp, ignis fatuus. V. as a prefix to pr. names, Eld-grimr, Eld-járn, Eld-rið, etc.: in names of places it denotes volcanic ground, Eld-borg, eld-fjall, eld-gjá, etc. eld-rauðr, adj. fiery-red. eld-sókn, f. fetching fire, Grett. 89. eld-stokkr, m. a burning beam, Nj. 202. eld-stó, f. pl. stóar, a 'fire-stove, hearth', Bárð. 2 new Ed., Nj. 236, Fb. iii. 446, Fas. ii. 115, Mork. 9; sitja við eldstó móður sinnar, Fs. 6. eld-súrr, adj. hot as fire, of vinegar or the like. eld-sætr, adj. always sitting by the fireside, as a spoiled boy; Oddr var eldsætr í zsku ok seinlegr ok kallaðr kolbátr, Landn. 235 (Hb.); Grimr var mikill ok eldsætr, ok þótti vera nær afglapi, Gullþ. 14, Krók. 33 (Ed. eldsæti), Fas. ii. 112 (Ed. eldsættinn). eld-tinna, u. f. a flint stone, Fas. i. 447. ELFR, f. gen. elfar, acc. dat. elfi, a pr. name of the three rivers called Elbe, Lat. Albis, viz. Gaut-Elfr, the Elb of the Gauts (a Scand. people) = the River Götba of the present time; Sax-E., the Elb of the Saxons, the Elbe; Raum-E., the Elb of the Raums (a people in Norway), i. e. the present Glommen and Wormen, Bær. 3, Nj. 42, Fms. i. 6, ii. 128, iii. 40, iv. 121, ix. 350, 393, 401, x. 292; Elfar-bakki, the bank of one of these Elbes, Bær. 3, Fms. ix. 269, 274; Elfinar-bakki, Fms. i. 195, of the river Ochil in Scotland, is a false reading = Ekkjals-bakki, vide Orkn. 12. compps: Elfar-grímar, m. pl. dwellers on the banks of the Götba, Fms. vii. 17, 19, 321. Elfar-kvislir, f. pl. the arms of the Götba, Fms. i. 7, iv. 9, ix. 274; used of the mouths of the Nile, Edda 148 (pref.). Elfar-sker, n. pl. the Skerries at the mouth of the Götba, Fms., Fas.; cp. álfir, p. 42. 2. meton. used of any great river, (rare in Icel. but freq. in mod. Dan.) Elfskr, adj. a dweller on one of the Elbe rivers, Landn., Fms. ii. 252. elgja, ð, to belch. ELGR, m., gen. elgs or elgjar, [Lat. alces; O. H. G. elab; Engl. elk], an elk, Gpl. 449, Fms. viii. 31, Fas. i. 54; elgja-gröf, f. an elk pit, a hunting term, D. N.; elgja-veiðr, f. hunting elks, Gpl. 448; elgjar-galgi, a. m., poet. 'elks-gallow, the ice, as elks were hunted on the ice, Stor. 153 but some explain the phrase = tree, cp. Caes. Bell. Gall. vi. 27. deep pools of half-melted ice; akin to glga, ylgr.

elg-skógr, m. a forest with elks, Gpl. 449. eligr, adj. [Swed. elig], vile, Hom. 151; e. ambátt, a poor handmaid, Stj. 484. 1 Sam. xxv. 24; afteitt eðr elikt, vile and refuse, 456. IS xv. 9; illr ok e., Hb. 31: it is probably akin to el-, Germ. elend, v. aulandi, p. 34.

Eli-vágar, m. pl. the Ice-waves, a mythol. name, Edda. ELJA, u. f. a concubine, as opp. to a wedded wife; this word is eik-akin to eljan in the sense of zeal, jealousy, or to the word eligr, as if women were often captives of war and handmaids; cp. the case Melkorka, Ld., cp. also Gen. xxi. 10:—the word is defined in E 109.—þær konur eru eljur, er einn mann eigu, those women are ca 'eljur, who are wives of one man; státtu upp þr binginum frá elju mi Nj. 153; er elja hennar görði henni jafnan skapraun, Stj. 428. IS i. 6 ('and her adversary also provoked her sore, of the two wives Elkanah); systur konu þinnar skaltú eigi taka til elju hennar, Stj.; Lev. xviii. 18: in poetry the earth is called the elja of Rinda, on Odin's wives, Fms. vi. (in a verse): this word points to the reme time; the sole passage where it occurs in an Icel. hist. work is (above), where it is wrongly used, the wedded wife being called the by the concubine; cp. arin-elja.

ELJAN, f. (in mod. usage elja, u. f.), [Ulf. aljan = ζῆλος; cp. ellian; Hel. ellan], endurance, energy; eljun ok styrk annarra ma Fms. vii. 228; heilsu ok eljun, 277; afl ok eljun, Fas. i. (in a ver atferð ok eljun, Ld. 318; ok fari þar e. eptir ok öll tilræði, F compps: eljanar-lauss, adj. [ellennless, Ormul.], weak, feeble, Al. Fbr. 157. eljunar-leysi, n. weakness, want of energy, Fms. iv. eljunar-maðr, m. an energetic man, Fms. iv. 163, viii. 447. mod. usage elju-lauss, adj., elju-leysi, n., with the notion of impatie hann hefir enga elju á e-u, be is too restless to perform anything.

eljara-gletta, u. f. [cp. elja], pertness, sauciness, Skýr. 53 (pref.) elju-ðnir, m. the hall of Hela, Edda (Gl.)

él-kaldr, adj. ice-cold, epithet of a stream, Ýt. 23. ELLA, adv., in Norse laws freq. ellar, and so in Fms. vi. 214, vii 115, etc.; in mod. Icel. usage ellegar; elligar, Ó. H., Grág., Mo passim, etc., which seems to be the original form, qs. ell-vegar, 'o ways', cp. þann-ig, hinn-ig, einn-ig; ella, though it is the usual i in the MSS., would be an apocopated form, the r being dropt: [J. elles; Engl. else; Swed. eljest; cp. Lat. alius, Gr. ἄλλος]:—else, a wise; er yðr nú annat-hvárt til at leggja í brott þegar, ella þúisk við sem skjótast, Nj. 44; en þann þeirra e. er réttari er, Grág. i. en ella jamt skerða sem at skuldadómi, 84; ella liggir á þér víti, Fm 27; hann hét vináttu sinni ef þessu vildi játa en elligar afarkostum, C 141; ella menn ek láta drepa þik, Nj. 74; eða—ella, or—else, Fms 196 (in a verse); eða heit hvers manns niðingr ella, or else be calle 'niting' of every man, Nj. 176; eða dreip hann ella, Fms. xi. 100; stökki hann af eignum sínum ellar, vii. 17.

ELLI, f. indecl. [Dan. ælde], 'eld, old age'; the saying, öllum ir elli á kné komit, old age has brought all on their knees, cp. the tal Edda 33, 34, where the old giantess Elli wrestles with Thor, when poetry she is called 'the antagonist of Thor', Eg. (in a verse); engi ir 34 orðit . . . , at eigi komi ellin öllum til falls, Edda 34; fyrir elli se Eg. 107; eigi er þat síor en elli . . . Nj. 171. compps: elli-be m., in the mythol. phrase, kasta e., to cast the 'slough of age,' t young again, Mag. 3, (freq.) elli-bjúgr, adj. bowed down b age, Mag. elli-dagar, m. pl. old days, Stj. 190, Sks. 458. elli-dauðr, adj. dead (dying) from old age, Nj. 58, Fms. i. 117, Edda elli-dómr, m. old age, Stj. 192. elli-gamall, adj. exceeding old, Stj. 190, Sks. 92, Al. 3. elli-glöpp, n. pl. dotage from old age, F 421. elli-hamr = ellibelgr (of serpents shedding their slough), Stj elli-hruar, adj. tottering from old age, Stj. 432. elli-hæru pl. the hoariness of age, Stj. 214. elli-karl, m. an old carle, pl. 164. elli-lyf, f. medicine to bar old age, elixir vitae, (myth) Haustl. 9, cp. Edda 63. elli-móðr, adj. worn, weary from age, Ld Landn. 117. elli-sjúkr, adj. sick from age, þiðr. 30. elli-sto n. pl. the stay of old age. elli-tíð, f. time of old age, Hom. 13. elli-va n. pl. wavering from age, decrepitude, Bret. 162 (of king Lear); in 756 (the verse), the old poet said, vals heftik vafur eli = elli-vafur; the comparison with the passage in Bret. is decisive, and the explanatio Lex. Poët. s. v. vafur is undoubtedly wrong. elli-vam, n. the bei dotard, Bret. 162. elli-þokka, a. m. looking old; hratt hón a ellipokka, Stj. 627. 2 Kings ix. 30 (of the old queen Jezebel).

elliði, a. m. a kind of ship with a big poop, Edda (Gl.), Fas. i. hence Ellidiða-ey, f. the name of an island, from its resemblance to the old-fashioned ships, Landn., Eb.; elliði, a. m. a farm, Korm.; elli-grimr, m., pr. name of a man, Landn., Nj.

ellifti, mod. ellefti, ord. numb. the eleventh, Landn. 199, Fms 412.

elliflu, mod. elleflu, ord. numb., the Goth. ainlif; A. S. ellefne; I. eleven; Germ. elf; Swed. elfva; Dan. elleve:—'lif' is an obsolete denoting ten, so that 'eleven, twelve' are formed just like thirteen, fourteen, etc.

él-ligr, adj. [él], stormy, Vápu. 51.

ellri (eldri), compar. elder, and ellstr (eldstr), superl. eldest; vide gamall.

elma, u, f. [almr], a branch, twig, Mar. 183.

-eln, adj. in compds, tví-e-, þrí-e-, etc., two, three . . . ells long.

elna, að, [cp. Goth. aljanan; A. S. eljan = aenulari], to wax, grow, a medic. term, in the phrases, sótt elnar á hendr e-m, the fever grows upon one's hands, i. e. becomes worse; en sótt elnaði á hendr Gizuri biskupi, Bs. i. 69; þá elnaði sótt á hendr Kveldúlf, en er dró at því at hann var þanvænn, etc., Eg. 126; e-m elnar sótt, id.; ok elnar honum sóttin, Band. 14; in Lophthænu elnaði sóttin (of a woman in labour), Fas. ii. 162; sótt elnaði við Lophthænu, 504.

elptr, f. = álpt, a swan, Str. 52, 62, etc.

elrir, m., and elri, n. the alder-tree, Lat. alnus, A. S. alor, aler, Germ. erle, Edda (Gl.), Ó. H. 250, Fbr. 10.

elska, að, to love, love dearly, with acc.; elskaðr sem sá er framast elskaði sannan Guð, Fs. 80; konungur elskaði Hákon meir en nokkrum annan mann, Fms. i. 17; Birkibeinar elskuðu því meir sveinnum, sem . . . ix. 244; halt vel trú þína ok elska Guð, ii. 255; Hrafnkell elskaði ekki annat goð meir enn Frey, Hrafn. 4; kona þess hins ríka manns elskaði Jóseph, Sks. 455; hann sá at Guð elskaði David (acc.), 708; ok er svá auðr svá sem hann er elskaðr til, 442. 2. reflex., elskask at e-m, to grow fond of; þorkell var lengi með jarlinum ok elskaðisk at honum, Fms. iv. 217 ('elskaði' at jarli, act., Ó. H. 93, is scarcely right). β.

recipr. to love one another; höfðu þau Jón elskask frá barnæsku, Bs. i. 282; þessir ungu menn elskask sín í millum mjök hjartanliga, 655 xxxii. 20. Icel. have a playful rhyme referring to lovers, running thus—elskar hann (hún) mig, | af öllu hjarta, | ofrheitt || harla lítið | og ekki neitt, which calls to mind the scene in Goethe's Faust, where Gretchen plucks off the petals of the flower with the words, lieb mich—nicht—lieb mich—nicht.

ELSKA, u, f. (ælska, Barl. 6, O. H. L.). [this word is peculiar to the Scandiu. races; it is probably derived from él and an inflexive sk, and properly means storm, whence metaph. passion; the Swedes and Danes have not the single word, but älskog and elskov, qs. elsk-hogr; Icel. elskugi or elskogi]:—love; með Guðs elsku ok náungs, Hom. 48; sáfa elsku á e-m, to love one, Bs. i. 36; mikla elsku hafði jarl á konungs yni, Fms. ix. 242; við höfum lengi saman haldit okkarr elsku, vii. 140; vá mikla ást sem þú hefir á hinum digra manni ok elsku við hann lagt, v. 182. compds: elsku-band, n. a bond of love, Mar. elsku-bragð, n. a deed of love, Mar. 220. elsku-fullr, adj. full of love, Barl. 79. elsku-geð, n. a loving kindness, Pass. 30. 11. elsku-gras, n. love's flower, vide brönnugrös s. v. brana, p. 76. elsku-lauss, adj. careless, and elsku-leysi, n. want of love, Lex. Poët. elsku-merki, n. a love token. elsku-semi, f. lovingness. elsku-váttir, m. a love token. Elska never occurs as a verb or noun in old heathen poets; Amor is the first poet on record who uses it; old writers prefer using st; with Christianity, and esp. since the Reformation, it gained ground; γαράω of the N. T. is usually rendered by elska (to love) and ἀγάπη by lska (love) or kærleiki (charity); so, mann-elska, humanity, kindness.

elskandi, part. a lover, Greg. 30.

elskan-liga, adv. lovingly, 655 xxxii. 17.

elskan-ligr, adj. beloved, N. T.

elskari, a, m. a lover, Barl. 88, 187, Karl. 545, Mar. 197. (rare.)

elsk-hugi or elsk-ogi, a, m. [Swed. älskog; Dan. elskov], love, Edda 1; vináttu ok elskhuga, Stj. 8; ástíð ok e., 130, Bev. 8 (Fr.); elskugi (elskugi), Barl. 6: a sweetheart, minn sæti herra ok ágætr elskugi (my love), Fb. i. 514.

elskr, adj., in the phrase, e. at e-m, fondly attached to one, fond of one, of the attachment of children, or to children; hann var elskr at gli, be loved the boy Egil, Eg. 187; Egill (the father) unni honum mik, var Böðvarr (the child) ok e. at honum, 599; also used of animals, ok svá elskir hvárir at öðrum, at hvár rann eptir öðrum, two reeds that never left one another, Nj. 81; hann (the ox) er mjök elskr at mér, Fms. iii. 132; hence mann-elskr, of pet lambs or tamed animals not never used of cats, dogs, or animals that are constant companions of (an); heima-e., home-loving, one who never leaves the hearth, Fs. 4.

elsku-liga, adv. lovingly, heartily, Fms. i. 140.

elsku-ligr, adj. loving; e. alvara, warm affection, Fms. iii. 63, K. Á. 22; var, beloved, þitt e. andlit, 655 xxxii. 7; e. sonr, Th. 7; var henni mjök elskr, Fms. i. 81; ἀγαπητός of the N. T. is usually rendered by elskuligr.

el-skúr, f. a snow-shower, Sks. 227.

ELTA, t, to chase, with acc.; þeir eltu einn hjört, Flóv. 27; elta dýr spori, Barl. 199; e. saudi, to run after sheep, in order to fetch them back, Nj. 27, Korm. 28 (in a verse); eltu þjálfá, Hbl. 39; þeir höfðu þ. af skipum Tryggva konung, they had driven king T. from his ships, Fms. i. 37; Styrkarr elti þá suðr í Karmusund, ix. 54; hljópu á land upp þ. eltu þá, iv. 304, Gullþ. 21; e. öxu með vendi, to drive cattle with a yoke, Karl. 471. β. reflex. to pursue one eagerly; eltask eptir e-m, Fms. ix. 305; Icel. now say, eltask við e-n, e.g. of catching a horse, sheep, when grazing wild in an open field. II. to knead, work; elta leir, to mix lime, Stj. 247, cp. Exod. i. 14.

2. a tanner's term; e. skinn, to tan a hide, i. e. rub, scratch it, so as to make it soft; ek skal yðra húla étt með klungrum, Stj. 395. Judges viii. 7; elt skinn, tanned hide; óelt skinn, rough hide, (freq.) 3. = velta, to overbrow, in the Runic phrase, at rita sa varpi es ailti stau þansi epa heþan dragi, Rafn 188, 194.

elting, f., chiefly in pl. pursuing, chasing, Fms. vii. 128, 294, Fs. 50. II. botan., proncd. elking, [Swed. ältgras], spearwort, equisetum vulgare, arvense, Björn.

eltur, f. pl. pursuing, Fms. vii. 407, viii. 406, Róm. 276.

Embla (in Ub. spelt Emla), u, f. a mythol. word, which only occurs in Vsp. 17; and hence in Edda (where it is said that the gods found two lifeless trees, the askr (ash) and the embla; of the ash they made man, of the embla woman), it is a question what kind of tree the embla was; some suggest a metathesis, qs. emla from almr, elm, but the compound emblu-askr, in one of Egil's poems, seems to shew that the embla was in some way related to the ash.

embætta, tt, mod. að, to attend, wait upon, with dat.; e. gestum, to wait upon guests; kann vera at Guð yðvart sé á málstefnu, eðr eigi gestum at e., Stj. 593. 1 Kings xviii. 27; eigi samnýttir hon, heldr e. hon, she ate not with the people, but waited on them, 655 xxxi A. 3; e. fé, to serve the cattle, to milk, Ísl. ii. 334, 482. 2. eccl. to say mass, to celebrate the eucharist, D. N. β. in mod. usage since the Reformation, to officiate as a clergyman.

embætti (embuð, Anecd. 38), n. [Germ. amt; Dan. embede; as to the root vide ambátt, p. 19], service, office; bjóða e-m af e., to depose one from office, Bs. i. 550; Guðs e., Hom. 121, 160, Stj. 613. 2 Kings iv. 13; mikit e., hard work, a great task, Hom. 153; veita e-m e., to serve one, Fms. viii. 332, 406; bindask i e-s e., to enter one's service, Sks. 357; fremja e., to perform a service, Bs. i. 426; Guðligt e., holy service, Fms. ii. 198; heilagt skírnar e., holy baptism, i. 148; officiating at mass, D. N. 2. in mod. use, a. divine service, answering to 'mass' in the Roman church; fyrir, eptir e., before, after service. β. in a secular sense, [Germ. amt, Dan. embede], a public office. compds:

embættis-færr, adj. able to perform one's duties, Ann. 1332. embættis-görð, f. officiating (of a clergyman), Bs. i. 811. embættis-lauss, adv. holding no office (of a priest), Sturl. ii. 118. embættis-maðr, m. a minister (priest), Hom. 119, Sks. 162, Fms. v. 146; in mod. use, embættismaðr, -lauss, etc. (= Germ. beamter, Dan. embedsman) mean an officer, chiefly in a secular sense.

emendera, að, to amend (Lat. word), Fb. i. 517.

EMJA, að, to bowl, Fms. vi. 150, x. 383, Fas. i. 213, 656 B. 10, Fagrsk. 8.

emjan, f. bowling, Fs. 44.

EN, disjunctive conj.; in MSS. spelt either en or enn, [a particle peculiar to the Scandiu.; in Danish men; in Swedish both men, änn, and endast; Norse enn and also men, Ivar Aasen]:—but; en ef hann hefir, þá . . . but if he has, then . . . Grág. i. 261; en ef menn gefa þeim mat, id.; en heima mun ek sitja, but I will stay at home, Fms. vi. 100; en fjöldi féll, but a great many fell, Fas. ii. 514; eyrum hlýðir en augum skoðar, Hm. 7; en ekki eigu annarra manna orð, Grág. i. 84, 99, 171; en Skiðbládnir skipa, en jóa Sleipnir, en hunda garmr, Gm. 44; en ör sveita sjár, en ór þeimum björg, Vþm. 21; and passim. It is even used with a slight conjunctive sense; þykki mér sem því munu úhægt saman at koma, kappi þínu ok dirð 'en' skaplyndi konungs, metbinks it will be hard to make the two things go together, thy vehemence and rashness 'and' (on the other hand) the temper of the king, Eg. 521; ek kann ráðum Gunnhildar 'en' kappsemd Egils, I know the devices of Gunnhilda 'and' (on the other hand) Egil's eagerness, 257; used in narratives to begin a sentence, merely denoting the progress of the tale, much the same as 'and,' cp. the use of and III, p. 33; thus in Ýt. some verses begin with 'en,'—En dagskjarr . . . 2, 3, 14, 23; En Gunnlaugr grimman tamði, Hlt.; En Hróalds á höfuðbáðmi, Ad. 19, without any disjunctive notion.

EN, temporal adv., better spelt enn, [prob. akin to enndr and eðr, q. v.]:—yet, still; þú hefir eigi (not yet) heyrða kenning Drottins, Mar. 656 A. ii. 14; vildi hann enn svá, Fms. i. 11; at hann mundi enn svá góra, vi. 100; þá ríkir hann enn fyrir mik, Al. 29; til betri tína en (þau) enn (still) er kominn, Sks. 596 B. 2. before a comparative; enn síðarr, still later, N. G. L. i. 94; enn betr, still better; enn fyrr, still later; enn verri, still worse; enn æðri, still worthier; enn hærr, still higher; enn firt, still further off; enn nær, still nearer; enn heldr, still more, Sks. 304; separated from the comparative, enn vóru fleiri dætr Haralds, the daughters of H. were still more, i. e. H. had more daughters yet, Fms. i. 5. β. curious is the use of en (usually spelt inn or inn) in old poems, viz. before a comparative, where in prose the 'en' can be left out without impairing the sense; thus, hélt-a in lengr rúmi, be kept not his place longer, i. e. ran away, Am. 58; ráð en lengr dvelja, to delay no longer, 61; menn in sælli, a happier man, Skv. 3. 18; né in mætri mægð, worthier affinity, id.; mann in hardara = hardara mann, a bardier man, Hbl. 14; nenia þú in snotrari sér, unless thou art wiser, Vfm. 7; drekka in meira mjöð, to drink more mead; bita en breiðara, to bite broader, i. e. eat with better appetite, Þkv. 25; þars þætti skáld in verri, where poets were kept in less honour, Jomsv. S. (in a verse); né in heldr, neither; né hests in heldr, neither for his horse, Hm. 60; nú in heldr hugðir sem var Högni, neither are ye minded as H., Gh. 3, Sdm. 36, Hkv. I. 12, Skv. I. 21; in prose, eigi in heldr ætla ek, pat. . . neither do I think, that . . ., Nj. 219.

3. to boot, further, moreover; bolíoxar ok enn ambóð nokkur, pole-axes and some tools to boot, Dipl. v. 18; ok þat enn, at, and that still more, that, Róm. 302; Ingibjörg hét enn dóttir Haralds, Ingeburg was further Harold's daughter, Fms. i. 5.

EN or enn, conj., written an in very old MSS., e. g. Hom., Greg., Eluc., but in the great bulk of MSS. en is the standing form, both ancient and modern; [formed by anacope, by dropping the initial þ; Ulf. þanub; A. S. þaune; Engl. than; Hel. than; O. H. G. dannu; Germ. dann, but here almost replaced by 'als'; Swed. änn; Dan. end; Norse enn, Ivar Aasen; the anacope is entirely Scandiu.]:—than, Lat. quam; heldr faðir an móðir, more father than mother, Eluc. 5; bjartari an sóll, brighter than the sun, 45, 52; meira an aðrir, more than others, Greg. 51; víðara an áðr, wider than before, id.; betr an þegja, better than being silent, 96; æðri au þetta, Eluc. 51; annat an annat, one thing rather than another, 50; ljósara an nú, 44; heldr an vér, 17; annat an dauðan, 15; meira an Guð, 13; fyr au, 6; annat an þú ert, 59; framarr an þeir hafa, id.; framarr an vesa, 60; heldr an færi eðr færi, Hom. 45; heldr an, 63; betra er þagat an mælt, 96; helgari an annarra manna, 126; framarr au sin, 135, etc.; cp. Frump. 158–163; 'eu' however occurs in Hom. 126.

II. the form 'en' (or 'enn') occurs passim, Grág. i. 173, ii. 13, Al. 29, Sks. 596 B, N. G. L. i. 32, etc. etc.

The particle en differs in sense when placed before or after the comparative; if before, it means still; if after, than; thus, fyrr enn, áðr enn, before, Lat. priusquam, but enn fyrr, still earlier, sooner; enn heldr, still more, but heldr enn, rather than; enn betr, still better, but betr enn, better than; enn síðar, still later, but síðar enn, later than, etc. Again, there is a difference of sense, when neither en is a comparative; en ef, but if; ef enn, if still, etc.

EN is now and then in MSS., esp. Norse, used = er, ef, q. v., but this is a mere peculiarity or false spelling: 1. when; mér vórum í hjá en (= er) þeir, when they, D. N. i. 271; til þess en = til þess er, 81.

2. as a relat. particle, which; sú hin ríka frú en (which), Str.; mína dóttur en allra meyjja er fegrst, my daughter who is the fairest of all women, Þiðr. 249; á því en hann hefir fingit, Al. 145; sú ótti en, 107; en sungin er, which is sung, Hom. 41; but hvárt en er, whether, N. G. L. i. 349.

3. = ef, if, [cp. Old Engl. an]; sælar væri sálurnar, en þær vissi, if they knew, Al. 114; en þeir vildi = ef þeir vildi, 118; en vér færim = ef vér færim, 120, esp. freq. in D. N. (vide Fr.) Very rare in Icel. writings or good MSS., e. g. en ek hefi með Guðs miskum (i. e. er ek hefi), as I have, because I have, Bs. i. 59, Hung. ch. 1; vide er.

ENDA, a copul. conj. with a slight notion of cause or even disjunction: [the use of this copulative is commonly regarded as a test word to distinguish the Scandiu. and the Saxon-Germ.; the A. S. ende, Engl. and, Hel. end, Germ. und being represented by Scandiu. auk, ok, or og; whereas the disjunctive particle is in Scandiu. en, enn, or even enda, answering to the Engl., A. S., and Germ. aber, but; the Gothic is neutral, unless jab, by which Ulf. renders kaí, be = auk, ok:—this difference, however, is more apparent than real; for the Icel. 'enda' is probably identical with the Germ. and Saxon und, and: in most passages it has a distinct copulative sense, but with something more than this]:—and, etc.

I. with subj., a standing phrase in the law, connecting the latter clause of a conditional premiss, if so and so, and if . . ., and again if . . .; or it may be rendered, and in case that, and supposing that, or the like. The following references will make it plainer; ef goðinn er um sóttur, enda hafi hann öðrum manni í hönd selt . . . þá skal hann ok sekja . . . if a suit lies against the priest, 'and' he has named a proxy, then the suit lies also against him (viz. the proxy), Grág. i. 95; ef skip hverfr ok sé eigi til spurt á þrim vetrum, enda sé spurt ef þeim löndum öllum er vár tunga er á, þá . . . if a ship disappears without being heard of for three years, 'and' inquiry has been made from all the countries where 'our tongue' is spoken, then . . ., 218; ef goðinn gerr eigi nemna féránsdóm, enda sé hann at lögum beiddr . . . þá varðar goðannum fjörbaugsgarð, if the priest name not the court of féran, 'and' has been lawfully requested thereto, then he is liable to the lesser outlawry, 94; nú hefir maðr sveinbaran fram fært í æsku, enda verði sá maðr veginn síðan, þá . . . if a man has brought a boy up in his youth, 'and in case that' he (the boy) be slain, then . . ., 281; ef maðr færir meybaru fram . . . enda beri svá at . . . ok (then) skal sá maðr . . . id.; ef menn selja ómaga sinn af landi héðan, ok eigi við verði, enda verði þeir ómagar færðir út hingat síðan, þá . . ., 274; hvervetna þess er vegnar sakir standa úbættar á milli manna, enda vili menn sættast á þau mál . . . þá . . . ii. 20; ef sá maðr var veginn er á (who has) vist með konu, enda sé þar þingheyndir nokkur . . . þá . . ., 74; þat vóru lög, ef þrælur væri dreppnir fyrir manni, enda (and in case that) væri eigi færð þrælgjöldin fyrir hina þriðju þá . . ., Eg. 723, cp. Eb. 222; þótt maðr færi fram eltri mann, kar konu, í barnæsku, enda (and in case that) berisk réttari síðan um menn, þá skal . . ., 281; ef þú þorir, enda sér þú nokkut at manni þou darest, 'and supposing that' thou art something of a man, F. i. 170; segja má ek honum tíðendin ef þú vilt, enda vekir þú hann, supposing that' thou wilt awake him, Fms. iv. 170; en þeir eru skinnmenn réttir er með hvárigum föru heiman visir vitendur, enda (and vildi þeir svá skilja þá, Grág. ii. 114; enda fylgi þeir hvárigum í (supposing they), id.; hvat til berr er þú veizt úorðna hluti, enda sé eigi spámaðr, supposing that thou art a prophet, Fms. i. 333. rarely with indic.; ef kona elr börn með óheimilum manni, enda gef fé um, hún á eigi . . ., Eb. 225.

II. even, even if, usually indic.; kona á sakir þær allar ef hún vill reiðask við, enda komi (if) eigi fram lofordit, Grág. i. 338: in single sentences, þá skal segja búum sínum til, enda á þingi, even in parliament, ii. 351; phrase, e. svá (even so), eigi þau handsólf hennar at haldask, enda svi er. i. 334; enda er þó rétt virðing þeirra, ef . . . and their taxati even (also) lawful, if . . ., 209; in mod. usage very freq. in this (=even).

III. denoting that a thing follows from the pre- and consequently, and of course, and then, or the like, and for, freq. in prose with indic.; man ek eigi optar heimta þetta fé, verða þér aldri at liði síðan, I shall not call for this debt any 'and also' lend thee help never more, Vápn. 18; ef þeir eru eigi fé fimn, enda eigi færi, if they are not more than five, and also not, Grág. i. 38; enda eigu menn þá at taka annan lögsögumann ef vilja þeir shall then elect another speaker if they choose, 4; enda skulur þá leysa þik, and then of course we shall loose thee, Edda 20; v. honum skóggang, enda verðr hann þar óheilagr, and of course o even, and to boot, Grág. ii. 114; skal hann segja til þess á mótum, enda varðar honum þá eigi við lög, i. 343; á sá sök er á, enda verðr sá jamt sekr um mautnina sem aðrir menn, 432; þá þá hvárr er vill, enda skal lögsögumaðr . . ., 10; enda á hann k segja lögleigor á féit, ef hann vill þat heldr, 217; trúi ek honum betr en (than) öðrum, enda skal ek þessu ráða, and besides I will this myself, Eg. 731; sýnisk þat jafnan at ek em féggjarn, enda svá enn, it is well known that I am a money-loving man, and will be too in this case, Nj. 102; beið ek af því þinna atkvæða mun öllum þat best gegna, I waited for thy decision, and (as) da be the best for all of us, 78; er þat ok líkast at þér sækit með enda munu þeir svá verja, and so will they do in their turn, 227; gerðr var fengsóm ok stórlynd, enda (and on the other hand) kallaði alls þess er aðrir áttu í nánd, 18; mikit má konungs gæfa um hluti, enda mun mikill frami fáski í ferðinni ef vel tekst, Fms. iv. 29; Ólver var málsnjallr ok máldjarfr, e. var hann vitr maðr, 235; mik mun ek halda til þess at þú þrjótr lög þin, enda eru þau eigi l. ef . . . neither are they broken, if . . ., Fb. i. 173, Mork. 81.

2. notion of disjunction, and yet; eigi nenni ek at hafa þat saman, a Högna, enda drepa bróður hans, I cannot bear to do both, help and yet kill his brother, Nj. 145; er þér töldut Grænland vera vel land, enda er þat þó fullt af jökluum ok frosti, that you call Gre a mild climate, and yet it is full of frost and ice, Sks. 209 B.

3. ellipt. in an abrupt sentence, without a preceding premiss; enda t öxi þína, and now take thy axe (implying that I can no longer p thee), Nj. 58; enda þarf hér mikils við, 94; maðrinn segir, end höfuðit af bolnum, the man continued, —nay, the head flew off the Ld. 290: even in some passages one MS. uses 'enda,' another 'ok' skorti nú ekki, enda var drengilega eptir sótt (ok var drengilega ept v. l.), Fms. viii. 357; cp. Fb. iii. 258, l. 16, and Mork. 7, l. 15: sometimes uses 'ok' exactly in the sense of enda, ef maðr selr óma af landi brott, 'ok' verði hinn aptreki er við tók, þá . . . Grág. i. 5.

ENDA, d, (enda, ad, Fs. 8, Ld. 50, Bs. i. 865; mod. usage distin. between enda ad, to end, finish, and enda t, to fulfil):—to end, an end; ok endi þar líf sitt, Fms. i. 297; af ráðinn ok endaðr, F endaðir sínu valdi, Bs. i. 865.

2. metaph. to bring to an end, perform a promise or the like; þá sýslu er hann endi eigi, work w did not perform, Grág. ii. 267; þótti Heinekrki biskupi Gizurr eigi við konung þat sem hann hafði heitið, Fms. x. 51; enda þeir t Páll postuli mælti, Hom. 135; hefir þú komit ok ent þat er þú Niðr. 8.

III. reflex. to end, come to an end; reiði maðr endisk á einu angabragði, 656 A. ii. 17; er svá hefjask upp eigi endisk, 656 B. 3; þá endisk sá enn mikli höfðingskapr Dana ke Fms. xi. 205; þær endask ok byrjask jafnfram ávalt, Rb. 232. to last out; ok endisk þá allt á sumar fram, Nj. 18; meðan mér föng til, Eg. 66; en honum endisk eigi til þess lífs, Bs. i. 77; veizlor endusk eigi fyrir fjölmennis sakir, Hkr. ii. 92; ok end þetta hóti lengst, Gisl. 50; meðan ek endusk til, as long as I live, Fms. iv. 292.

3. to end well, do; enda mun þat fám t vel endask at syuja mér mægðar, Isl. ii. 215; ek veit, at þat má eigi endask, ef . . . Rd. 311; ok öngum skyldi öðrum hans kapp hafa þetta uenia þér, Fas. i. 104; segir honum eigi ella endask

ms. iv. 143. III. impers. in the phrase, sögu endar, endar þar gu frá honum, it ends the tale, i. e. the tale is ended, Ld. 50: in mod. age Icel. can say, saga endar, sögu endar, and saga endast, bere the story ends.

endemi and endimi, n. pl. an abomination, scandal, shame, esp. in exclamations; sé undr ok endemi! Niðrst. 6; ok þykir nauðsyn, at gi verði þau e. í, Fms. xi. 27; nú eru slíkt mikil e., vii. 36; heyr á endemi, bear the abomination! for shame! heyr á firu ok e., 21. ii. 1; heyr á e., segir Hallgerðr, þú gerir þik góðan, Nj. 74; vissum vér gi vánir slíkra véla ok endema, Blas. 46; mörg e. tóku menn þá til mánu, Bs. i. 62; hér lýstr í e., segir hann, Fms. xi. 94. endemisnaðr, m. a monster, Fs. 38. The etym. is doubtful, either = ein-dæmi, that is unexampled, or rather from dæmr and the prefix and-; endemi always used in a very bad sense; the passage Fms. v. 206—veiztu ef u e. (=wonder) eru sönn, at konungrinn sé heilagr hjá okkr—is an exception and perhaps incorrect.

ENDI, a, m., and endir, s, m. [Ulf. andéis = τῆλος; A. S. ende; Engl. end; O. H. G. enti; Germ. ende; Swed. ände; Dan. endé]:—the end, conclusion; as in the proverbs, endirinn skyldi í upphafi skoða, Lat. idquid incipias respice finem; allt er gott ef endirinn er góðr, all's well if it ends well; sjá fyrir enda á e-u, to see the end of a thing (how it will end); göra fyrir enda á e-u (a weaver's term), to bring to an end, Fret. 100 new Ed.; leysa e-m illan (góðan) enda (a weaver's term), to bring to an ill (good) end, Korm. 164 (in a verse); mun cinn endir str vera um þá úgíptu, it will all come to one end, Glil. 82; binda enda á e-t, to fulfill, finish, Snót 169; göra enda á, to bring to an end, pl. i. 6; vera á enda, to be at an end, Fms. xi. 427 (to be at one's wit's end); standask á endum, Nj. 111; allt með endum, adv. from end to end, x. Poët.; til annars endans, Nj. 176; öðrum endanum, Eg. 91; dyrr áðum endum, Fms. iv. 220; at sínum enda hvárir, Grág. ii. 48; til bla jarðar, 656 B. 4; endanum (with the article), 655 xxxii; til enda, the end of life, Nj. 39; endir líkams, Hom. 103; upphaf ok endir, 6; engi endir, 157; hér skal nú ok endir á verða, it shall come to an end, Nj. 145; sá varð endir á, at . . . , that was the end of it, that . . ., Fas. 514; annar endir hersins, Fms. ix. 353; hinn neðri endir, Sks. 167 B. 1. COMPS: enda-dagr, m. (enda-dægr, n.), the last day, day of death, Bs. viii. 93, x. 388, Sks. 355, Fas. i. 223. enda-fjöl, f. a gable f. Pr. 413. enda-knútr, m. the 'end-knot', final issue. endalauss, adj. endless, Fms. v. 343, Sks. 617, Hom. 87. enda-lok, n. and enda-lykt, f. the end, conclusion, Finnþ. 248, Fbr. 29, Hom. 2, Fms. iii. 163, v. 343, Stj. 20, 49. enda-mark, n. the end, limit, E. ii. 70, Fms. v. 343. enda-merki, n. id., D. N. enda-mjórr, n. thine at the end, tapering, in the phrase, lát eigi verða endamjótt e-n, to treat one well to the end; Icel. say, e-t verðr enda-sleppt, n. it has an abrupt end, etc. enda-þarmr, m. the great gut, Pr. 473.

endi-land, n. borders, confines, Stj. 406, 531, 546. endi-langr, adj. 'end-long', from one end to another; eptir endilangri ríkinni, Eg. 58; með endilöngum bekkjum, along the benches, Nj. 220; saga fyrir endilangan Noreg, 368, Fms. iv. 319, Grett. 97: as adverb. ases, 'endwise', opp. to 'across', at endilöngum skipum, Fms. vii. 94; endilangan, Stj. 290; um endilangt, Bs. i. 644; at endilöngu, El. 32. endi-lauss, adj. endless, Hom. 87. endi-leysa, u, f. nonsense, 'without end or aim', Fms. vi. 375. endi-liga, adv. finally, Stj. 225, Fms. ix. 355, v. 1. endi-ligr, adj. final, Stj. 110, Dipl. ii. 11, Bs. i. 8. endi-lok, n. pl. the end, conclusion, 625, 172. endi-mark, n. esp. pl. a boundary, confine, Grág. ii. 166, Hom. 48, 275, 345, Sks. 338, Dipl. ii. 4, Pm. 92: a limit, end, Hom. 52, Skálda 4, Gpl. 44, Sks. 272 B, Fms. ii. 89, H. E. i. 466. endi-merki, n. (and endi-mörk, f.) = endimark, Sks. 207, 338 B. ending, f. ending, termination, Fms. v. 225, Vigl. 16. endir, v. endi.

end-langt, adj. = endilangr, Grág. ii. 257, Vkv. 7. ENDR, adv. [cp. Lat. ante]. I. in times of yore, erst, formerly, very freq. in old poetry, Am. i. Ad. 3, Ýt. 12, 13, Eg. 751 (in a verse), vide Lex. Poët.; in prose very rare, or only in the phrase, endr r löngu, a long time ago, Fas. iii. 250, 347; cp. eðr. 2. in the phrases, endr annan veg en endr = now one way, now another, 677. 2; endr sínum, mod. endrum og sínum, from time to time, now and then, Sks. 207; endr ok stundum, id., 703 B. endra-nær and endrar-nær, adv. other times, otherwise; bæði þá ok endra-nær, Bs. i. 533; sem jafnan endra-nær, as always else, 526, 538; sem ávalt endra-nær, Fas. ii. 144; endrum sama hætti sem e., Rb. 28; en þat er endra-nær, at . . . , but else, . . . , Fms. viii. 410. II. again; svá kom Óðins sunn endr á þri, þkv. 32. Mostly as prefix to nouns and verbs, answering to Lat. chiefly in a biblical and theological sense, esp. after the Reformation.

endr-borinn, part. born again, Sæm. 118, Sturl. iii. 269, Fas. iii. 68. endr-bót, f. making good again, repentance, Hom. 41. endr-búa, bjó, to restore, 655 xiii B. 3. endr-bæta, tt, to repair, restore, 671. 3, 655 A. 13: reflex., 625. 69, 625. ii. 212, Greg. 34, Stj. 53, 228, 632.

endr-bæting, f. restitution, restoration, Stj. 52, 632, 625. 69. endr-bætingr, m. a thing repaired, patchwork, N. G. L. i. 75. endr-fórna, f. an offering, presenting again, Stj. 49. endr-fórna, ad, to offer, present again, Stj. 49. endr-fæða, dd, to regenerate, Hom. 154, i Peter i. 3. endr-fæðing, f. regeneration, Matth. xix. 28. endr-gefa, part. those who give again, Hm. 40. endr-geta, gat, to bear (give birth to) again; sonu þína sem Heilög Kristni endrgat, 623. 28; endrgetinn fyrir vatn ok Helgan Anda, Hom. 55, Fms. iii. 166; endrgetinn af vatni ok Helgum Anda, Hom. 3: reflex. to be born again, Post. 656 B. 11, Niðrst. 104. endr-getnaðr, m. the being born again, Niðrst. 104. endr-getning, f. = endrgetnaðr, 655 vi. 2, Titus iii. 5. endr-gjalda, galt, to reward, Mar. 175, Bs. ii. 25, Rom. xii. 19. endr-gjaldari, a, m. a rewarder, Heb. xi. 6. endr-græða, dd, to heal again, Barl. 148. endr-göra, ð, to restore, reconstruct, K. Á. 28. endr-hreinsa, ad, to purify again, Hom. (St.) endr-hræra, ð, to move again, Barl. 130. endr-kaupa, t, to redeem, 2 Peter ii. 1. endr-laginn, part. replaced, Skv. 3. 65. endr-lauss, f. redemption, Luke xxi. 28, i Cor. i. 30; this and the following two words were scarcely used before the Reformation. Endr-laussnari, a, m. the Redeemer, Job xix. 25, etc. endr-leysa, t, to redeem, Matth. xvi. 26, Luke xxiv. 21. endr-lifna, ad, to come to life again, Stj. 221, Greg. 58, Luke xv. 32. endr-lifga, ad, to call to life again, Stj. 30. endr-lifgan, f. a refreshing, revival, Acts iii. 19. endr-minnask, t, dep. to remember, call to mind, Stj. 23, 40, 51. endr-minning, f. remembrance, recollection, Hom. 9, Skálda 204. endr-mæðing, f. tribulation, Stj. 49. endr-mæla, t, to repeat, Matth. vii. 2. endr-mæling, n. repetition, Sturl. iii. 71 C. endr-nýja, ad, to renew, repeat, Fms. ix. 248, 499, Jb. 156, K. Á. 28: impers., Eb. 278: reflex. to grow again, Str. endr-nýjung, f. renovation, renewing, Titus iii. 5. endr-næra, ð, to refresh, Matth. xi. 28, Rom. xv. 32, 2 Cor. vii. 13. endr-næring, f. refreshing. endr-reisa, t, to raise again, Fms. x. 276. endr-rjóða, adj. ind. downcast, forlorn; Ketill kvað þá mjök e., K. said that they were much cast down, disheartened, Fas. ii. 16, Fspl. 12; it occurs only in these two passages, see a note of Dr. Scheving to Fspl. l. c., where he says that the word still survives in the east of Icel.

endr-semja, samði, to recompose, renew, Bs. i. 735. endr-skapa, ad, to create anew, Eluc. 52, Str. 52. endr-skikka, ad, to restore, Acts iii. 21. endr-taka, tók, to retake, Stj. 29. endr-tryggja, ð, to reconcile, Bs. i. 686. endr-vinda, vatt, to turn back (of things), Orkn. 202. endr-þaga, u, f. retribution, Hm. 4. ENG, f., pl. engjar, (spelt æng, O. H. L.), [Dan. eng; Swed. äng; A. S. ing, found in local names in North. E., as Ings, Broad Ing]:—a meadow; opp. to akr, in the allit. phrase, akr né eng, Grág. i. 407, Hrafn. 21, Gpl. 136, 360, K. Þ. K. 90; í enginni, Stj. 193; veitti hann lækinn á eng sína, Landn. 145; hálfis mánaðar eng, half a month's meadow-land, Dipl. ii. 12: in pl. engjar is in Icel. used of the outlying lands, opp. to tínn, the home-field, and hagi, the pasturage, vide Grett. ch. 50; engjar manna, Grág. ii. 264; þótt fé gangi í engjar, 233: used in many compps: engja-brigð, f. the escheatage of an eng, Grág. ii. 277. engja-grasnautn, f. right of grazing, making bay in the eng, Vm. 48. engja-heyr, n. bay of the eng, = út-heyr, 'out-field hay,' opp. to taða, bay from the well-matured home-field. engja-merki, m. marks, borders of the eng, Grág. ii. 219. engja-skipti, n. division of the eng, Grág. ii. 259. engja-sláttr, m. the time of mowing the eng, in August, opp. to túna-sláttr, mowing of the home-field, in July. engja-vinna, f. and engja-verk, n. making bay in the eng. engja-vöxtir, m. meadow-produce, Jb. 146. engi, n. (= eng), meadow-land, a meadow, Grág. i. 123, ii. 264, Háv. 51. COMPS: engis-höfn, f. possession of a meadow, Grág. ii. 274. engis-lé, m. a scythe to mow a meadow, Korm. 4 (in a verse), (engissler, MS.); this seems to be the correct reading of the passage. engismaðr, m. the owner of a meadow, Grág. ii. 289. engi-búi, a, m. a neighbour who has to appear in an engiódmr. engi-dalr, m. a meadow-valley, Stj. 163. engi-dómr (or engja-dómr), m. a court to decide the possession of a meadow, sitting on the spot, Grág. (L. þ. ch. 17) ii. 269 sqq. ENGILL, m. [Gr. ἄγγελος; Lat. eccl. angelus]: hence in the Teut. dialects, Goth. aggilus; A. S. and Germ. engel; Engl. angel]:—an angel, Rb. 78, Nj. 157, 625. 4, N. T., Pass., Vidal., etc.; englar, höfundar englar, veldis-englar, Hom. 133; engils andlit, 623. 55. COMPS: englafylki, n. a host of angels, Stj., Hom. 133, Fms. v. 340, Mar. 656 A. 8.

engla-líð, n. a bost of angels, Greg. 37, Hom. 49, 154. engla-líf, n. life of angels, Hom. 16. engla-mjöl, n. 'angel-meal', i.e. mannna, Stj. 145. engla-sveit, f. a bost of angels, Hom. 154. engla-sýn, f. a vision of angels, 625, 84.

engil-ligr, adj. angelical, Stj. 4, Niðrst. 4. Engilskr, adj. English, D. N. (freq. but mod., vide Enskr). engi-markt, n. the boundary of a meadow, Grág. ii. 233, 237. engi-skipti, n. = engja-skipti; engiskiptis-búi, m. = engi-búi, Grág. ii. 276.

engi-spretta, u, f. [Swed. grässboppa; Dan. græsboffe], a grass-hopper, locust, Matth. iii. 4, Exod. x.

engi-teigr, m. a piece of meadow-land, Grág. ii. 259, Eg. 745, Vm. 15. engi-verk, n. meadow work, Eb. 150; = engja-sláttir; um e., during the time of mowing the meadows, Grág. i. 149, K. þ. K. 136.

engi-vöxtr, m. meadow-produce, Grág. ii. 287. engja, ð, [Gr. ἄγχω; Lat. ango; Germ. engen], to press tight, compress; engdr (vexed) með ufríði, Str.: with dat., hón engvir honum (makes him anxious, vexes him), ok angrar, id.: the mod. phrase, engja sig (or engjask), Swed. wrida sig, = to writhe with pain, chiefly used of a worm.

engja, u, f. and enging, f. [Germ. enge], narrowness (rare): medic., garn-engja, constriction of the bowels.

eng-liga, adv. narrowly; vera e. staddr, to be in a strait, Str. Englis-maðr (Engils-maðr), m. an Englishman, Fms. v, Fas. iii. 354.

ENGR, adj. [Lat. angustus; Goth. aggvus; A. S. enge; Germ. eng], narrow, close; i engri gæzlu, in close watch, Str.; vide öng.

enn, art. the, = hinn. enn, v. en.

enna, adv. [en with a demonstrative -na], in the phrase, eigi enna, not yet or not forsooth! Glúm. 378, Fms. vi. 360, viii. 119.

ENNI, n. [a word peculiar to the Scandins.; Swed. änne, but usually in mod. Swed. and Dan. panna or pande; root uncertain]:—the forebead; þó spratt honum sveiti i enni, Nj. 68, Pr. 471; um þvert ennit, Fms. i. 178; also brot, metaph. a steep crag, precipice, Landn., Eb.

enni-brattr, adj. having a straight forebead, Sd. 146. enni-breidr, adj. having a broad forebead, Eg. 304, Fms. v. 238.

enni-dúkr, m. a fillet worn round the head by heathen priests at sacrificial ceremonies, Lat. vittae, Kormak (ἄπ. λειγ.).

enni-leðr, n. the skin of the forebead of animals, Fas. i. 80. enni-snaudr, adj. having a low forebead, Fms. vii. 343.

enni-spænr, m. pl. [cp. Swed. ännespan = bead-wreath, ornament], carved work, such as dragon-heads on old ships of war, both fore and aft, Fms. v. 304, vi. 120, viii. 197, Orkn. 332, Fas. iii. 113.

enni-svell, n. boulders of ice, Sturl. i. 61. Enska, u, f. the English tongue, Skálda 161.

ENSKR, adj. English, Grág. i. 504, Eg. 517; Enskir menn, m. Englishmen, Fms., Orkn., Hkr.

EPJA, u, f. [ap], chilliness, Björn. EPLL, n. [A. S. æppel; Engl. apple; Swed. äple; Dan. æble; O. H. G. apbol; mod. Germ. apfel]:—an apple, Fms. xi. 9, Rb. 346; it occurs even in old poems, Skm. 19, 20; cp. Edda 17, the apples of Idunna, of which the gods ate and became young again, cp. also Völs. S. ch. 2; Heljar e., the apple of death, Ísl. ii. 351 (in a verse). COMPS: epla-át, n. eating of an apple, Stj. 40. epla-garðr, m. [Dan. abildgaard], an 'apple-yard', orchard, Glp. 144, Vigl. 17. epla-kyn, n. 'apple-kind', Stj. 175. epla-stöng, f. an apple-stalk, a cognom., Fms. viii.

epli-berandi, part. apple-bearing, Stj. 14. eplóttir, adj. = apal-grár, q. v., Karl. 306, 334.

EPTIR, better spelt eftir, in common pronunciation ettir, a prep. with dat. and acc. and also used as adv. or ellipt. without a case; an older form ept or eft only occurs in poetry, Skm. 39, 41, Yt. 2, Edda 91 (in a verse); ept víg, Hkr. i. 349 (in a verse), iii. 50 (Arnór); [cp. Goth. afar; Runic stone in Tune, after; A. S. aft; Engl. after, aft; Swed.-Dan. efter]:—after.

A. WITH DAT., loc.; with verbs denoting following, pursuing, or the like; hann reið e. þeim, Eg. 149; hann bar merkit eptir honum, he bore the standard after him, 297; róa e. þeim, to pull after them, Ld. 118; þegar e. Kára, on the heels of Kari, Nj. 202; varð ekki e. honum gengit, none went after him, 270. β. with the notion to fetch; senda e. e-m, to send after one, Eb. 22, Nj. 78, Fms. i. 2; ríða í Hornafjörð e. fé yðru, ride to H. after your things, Nj. 63. γ. ellipt., viljum vér eigi e. fara, we will not follow after them, Eb. 242; ek mun hlaupta þegar e., Nj. 202. 2. metaph., α. with verbs denoting to look, stare, lita, sjá, gá, horfa, mæna, etc. e. e-u, to stare, look after a thing while departing, Ísl. ii. 261; leita, stjarna, fréttu etc. e. e-u, to ask, 'speak, seek after a thing, Nj. 75, Eg. 155, 686, Fms. i. 71, x. 148, etc. β. segja e. e-m, to tell tales, report behind one's back in a bad sense, 623, 62; þó at ek segða eigi óhapp eptir tengda-mönnum mínum, Sturl. i. 66; sjá e. e-u, to look after, miss a thing, Nj. 75; leggja hug e. e-u, to mind a thing, Ísl. ii. 426; taka e., to mind, mark a thing; ganga e. e-u, to retain a thing, Fms. x. 5. γ. verbs denoting to expect; bíða, vænta e. e-u, to expect, wait for a thing; vaka e. e-m, to sit up waiting for one, but va e-m, to sit up nursing or watching one, cp. Fas. ii. 535.

denoting along, in the direction of a track, road, or the like; hálsinum, down the bill, Fms. iii. 192; út e. firði, stood out aloft, Nj. 37; innar e. höllinni, Nj. 270; upp e. dal, Eb. 232; dalnum, Nj. 34; ofan e. eyrunum, 143; upp e. eyrunum, 85; í búðinni, 165; út e. þverténu, 202; ofan e. reykinum, Eb. 23. e. Skeiðum, 224; inn e. Álptafirði, id.; innar e. ísum, 236; inn e. 316; út e. ísum, 236; út e. Hafsbótum, Orkn. 1; e. endilöng one end to another, Fms. x. 16; e. miðju, along the middle, vii. 89.

metaph. after, according to; e. því sem vera ætti, Ld. 66; e. síð ok lögum, Fms. i. 81; e. þinum förtölum, ii. 32; hann leiddisk höllum hennar, he was led by her persuasion, v. 30; gékk allt e. þó all turned out as he had dreamed, Fms. ii. 231; e. minni vísan, i. 71 denoting proportion, comparison; þó eigi e. því sem faðir hans not like his father, Eg. 702; fátt magna e. því sem hann var very men in comparison to what he used to have, Sturl. ii. 253; þat var ó þar færi aðrar e., people said that the rest was of one piece, Ld. 168 with verbs denoting imitation, indulgence, longing after, etc.; holdi sínu, to live after the flesh, Hom. 25; lífa e. Guði, 73; lífti follow after me, Blas. 45; láta e. e-m, to indulge one; mæla e. take one's part, Nj. 26; breyta e. e-m, to imitate; dæma e. e-m, a sentence for one, 150; fylgja e. e-m, to follow after one, N. T.; e. e-m, to mimic one's voice and gesture, as a juggler; mun ek gera sem þér gerit fyrir, I will do after just as you do before, hann mælti e. (he repeated the words) ok stefndi rangt, 35; leika to follow one's lead; telja e., to grudge; langa e., to long after xxii. 15. δ. kalla, heita e. e-m, to name a child after one; Hákon eptir föður sínum Hákonu, Fms. i. 14; kallaðr e. Mýr móður-þóður sínum, Ld. 108; Ícel. now make a distinction, heita í á e-m, of a living person, and heita e. e-m, of one deceased.

denoting behind; fundusk e. þeim Írskar bækr, Irish books which they had left behind, Landn. (pref.), Fms. xi. 410; drá blindan e. sér, vi. 323; bera e-t e. sér, to drag behind one; hann séir hestinn, he led the horse after him, Eg. 766. β. as an adv. eigi hins verra e. ván er slikt ferr fyrir, what worse can come after such things went before? Nj. 34. 2. but chiefly ellipt. or látta e., to leave behind, Sturl. i. 60; sitja e., to sit, stay behind, 66; bíða e., to stay behind; vera e., Grett. 36 new Ed., Bs. i. 21 e., to stay behind, remain, be left, Fms. ii. 231, vi. 248; dvelja; delay, stop, Sturl. ii. 253; leggja e., to lay behind, but leggja e. behind, i. e. be left, Karl. 439; eiga e., to have to do, Nj. 56; verðr e., if naught remain behind, Rb. 126; skammt get ek e. þú I guess that little is left of thy life, Nj. 182; þau bjöggu þar remained, stayed there, 25.

B. WITH ACC., TEMP. after; vetri e. fall Ólafs, Eb. (fine) vetrum e. dráp Eadmundar konungs . . . , vetrum e. andlát Grego- þurð Christi, Ib. 18; e. fall jarls, Eg. 297; e. verk þessi, Nj. immediately after, vár kom e. vetr, spring came after winter, Í hvern dag e. annan, one day after another, Hom. 158; ár e. ár, y-ear, Rb. 292; dag e. dag, day after day, Fms. ii. 231; e. þetta, after that, Lat. deinde, deinceps, Nj. 151, Eb. 58, Bs. i. 5, e. þingit, after the meeting, Eb. 108; e. sattu Eyrbyggja, 252.

denoting succession, inheritance, remembrance, etc.; eptir in this frequent on the Runic stones, to the memory of, after; hón á ar mik, Nj. 3; tekit í arf e. föður þinn, inherited after thy father 256; ef skapabændr eru eigi til e. bauga, i. e. to receive the Grág. ii. 184; þeir er sektar-fé eigu at taka e. þik, Nj. 230; tók dóttir e. föður sínu, took the kingdom after his father, Fms. i. 2; tók lögsögja e. þórarinn, Þorkel took the speakership after Þor ch. 5, cp. ch. 8, 10; metaph., vita þá skómm e. sik, to know thyself [will be] after one, i. e. leave such a bad report, Ld. 222; skaði m. menn slika, there is a great loss in such men, Eg. 93; hann fastaði e. son sinn, he fasted the lenten fast after his son's death, Sturl. 23. . . e. genginn guma, a son to succeed his deceased father, a 7. mæla e. en, or eiga vígsmál (eptir-mál) e. e-n, to conduct the one if slain, Nj. 254 (freq.), hence eptir-mál; eptir víg Arnar konur til erfðar ok aðilar, Eb. 194; i hefnd e. e-n, to revenge death, Nj. 118; heimta gjöld e. menn sína, to claim wergild, 199. β. the phrase, vera e. sig, to be weary after great exertion. used as adv. after; síðan e. á öðrum degi, on the second day Hom. 116; síðan e., Lat. deinceps, Fms. x. 210; um várit e. t. after, Eb. 125 new Ed.; annat sumar e., the second summer after annat haust e., Eb. 184; annan dag e., the second day after, Nj. daginn e., the day after, Fms. vii. 153, Bs. i. 21; næsta mánu 126. β. by placing the adverb. prep. at the beginning the sense different, later; e. um várit, later during the spring, Eb. 98.

used adverb. with the relat. particles er, at; e. er, Lat. postquam i. 10; e. at, id., K. þ. K. 32. β. eptir á, afterward; the prov. (mod. eptir á) koma ósvinnum ráð í hug, the fool is wise too late til herbergis þess, er konungur var inni (viz. í), he went to the house that the king was in, Ó. H. 160, Fb. iii. 251; dyrr þær, er ganga mátti upp á húsið (viz. gegnum, through), the doors through which one could walk up to the house, Eg. 421; ór þeim ættum er mér þóttu fuglarnir fljúga (viz. ór), the airt (quarter) that I thought the birds flew from, Ísl. ii. 196; yfir þeim manni, er Mörðr hafði sök sína fram sagt (viz. yfir), the man over whose head (to whom) Mord had pleaded his suit, Nj. 242; þrjú þing, þau er menn ætluðu (viz. á), three parliaments, in (during) which men thought . . ., 71; nær borg þeirri, er konungur sat (viz. í), near the town the king resided in, Eg. 287; Montakassin, er dyrkast Benedictus, Monte Cassino, where B. is worshipped, Fms. xi. 415; þeir hafa nú látið líf sitt fyrir skömmu, er mér þykir eigi vert at lífa (viz. eptir), they, whom me thinks it is not worth while to oulive, 150; fara eptir með hunda, er þeir vóru vanir at spyryja þá upp (viz. með), er undan hljópusk, they pursued with bounds, that they were wont to pick up fugitives with, i. c. with blood-bounds, v. 145; þat er í þrem stöðum, er dauðum má sök gefa (viz. í), it is in three places that a man can be slain with impunity, N. G. L. i. 62; þat er í einum stað, er maðr hittir (viz. í), it is in one place that . . ., id.

III. A demonstrative pron. may be added to the relat. particule, e. g. er þeirra = quorum, er þeim = quibus, er hans, er hennar = cujus; but this is chiefly used in old translations from Lat., being rarely found in original writings; þann konung, er undir honum eru skatt-konungar, that king under whom vassals serve, Edda 93; ekkja heitir sú, er búandi hennar (whose husband) varð sótt-dauðr; hæll er sú kona kölluð er búandi hennar er veginn, 108; sú sam-stafa, er raddar-staf hennar er náttúrliga skammr, that syllable, the vowel of which is naturally short, Skálda 179; sá maðr, er hann vil, that man who wishes, Grág. i. 19; sá maðr, er hann skal fasta, 36; nema ein Guðrún, er hún æva grét, G. that never wealed, Gh. 40; þess manns, er hann girnisk, Hom. 54; sæl er sú bygghlaða . . . er ór þeirri . . . felix est illud borreum . . . unde . . ., Hom. 15; engi er hærrí spaki en sú, er í þeirri . . . nulla melior est sapientia quam ea, quæ . . ., 28; varðveita bodórð hans, fyrir þann er vér erum skapaðir, ejusque mandata custodire, per quem creati sumus, 28; harða göfugr er hátt höfsemi, fyrir þá er saman stendr . . . nobilis virtus est valde temperantia, per quam . . ., id.; elskendum Guð þann er svá mælti, Deum diligentibus qui ait, id.; skírn Græðara várs, er í þeirri, 56; er á þeim = in quibus, 52: rare in mod. writers, enginn kann að játa eðr iðrast réttilega þeirrar syndar, er hann þekkir ekki stærð hennar og ílsku, Vídal. i. 226.

IV. in the 14th century, the relat. pron. hverr was admitted, but by adding the particule er; yet it has never prevailed, and no relative pronoun is used in Icel. (except that this pronoun occurs in the N. T. and sermons, e. g. Luke xi. 1, whose blood Pilate had mingled, is rendered hverra blóði Pilatus hafði blandað; an old translator would have said, er P. hafði blandað blóði þeirra) hvern er þeir erfðu, M. K. 156; hverjar er hún lauk mér, id.; af hverju er hann megri marka, Stj. 114; hvat er tákna mundi, Fms. xi. 12.

V. the few following instances are rare and curious, er þú, er ek, er mér, er hún; and are analogous to the Germ. der ich, der du, I that, thou that; in Hm. l. c. 'er' is almost a superfluous enclitic, eyvitar fyrna er maðr annan skal, Hm. 93; sáttir þínar er ek vil snemma hafa, Alm. 7; ójafnt skipta er þú mundir, Hbl. 25; þrjár hafðar er ek hefi, Fsm. 50; auði frá er mér ætluð var, sandi orpu sæng, Sl. 49; lauga-vatn er mér leiddast var eitt allra hluta, 50; ærr eru Loki, er þú ytra telr, Ls. 29, cp. 21, Og. 12, Hkv. 2. 32; tröll, er þik bita eigi járn, Ísl. ii. 364. This want of a proper relat. pron. has probably preserved Icel. prose from foreign influences; in rendering Lat. or mod. Germ. into Icel. almost every sentence must be altered and broken up in order to make it vernacular.

B. Conj. and adv. joined with a demonstrative particule, where, when:

1. loc., þar er, there where = ubi; þar er hvárki sé akr né eng, Grág. i. 123; hvervetna þess, er, N. G. L. passim. 2. temp. when; ok er, and when; en er, but when; þá er, then when; þar til er, until, etc., passim; annan dag, er menn genu, Nj. 3; brá þeim mjök við, er þau sá hann, 68; sjaldan fór þá svá, er vel vildi, Ld. 290; ok í því er þórgils, and in the nick of time when Th., id.; þá lét í hamrinum sem er (as when) reið gengr, Ísl. ii. 434; næst er vér kómmum, next when we came, Eg. 287; þá er vér, when we, id. II. conj. that (vide 'at' II, p. 29); þat er (is) mitt ráð er (that) þú kallar til tals, Eg. 540; ok þat, er hann ætlar, Nj. 7; ok fansk þat á öllu, er (that) hon þóttisk vargefin, 17; en þessi er (is) frásögn til þess, er (that) þeir vóru Heljar-skinn kallaðir, Sturl. i. 1; ok finna honum þá sök, er (en MS.) hann hafði verið, that he had been, Fms. vii. 331; af hverju er hann megri marka, from which he may infer, Stj. 135; hvárt er (en MS.) er (is) ung eða gamall, either that he is young or old, N. G. L. i. 349; spurði hann at, hvárt er, asked him whether, Barl. 92; mikill skaði, er slíkr maðr, that such a man, Fms. vi. 15; hlægligt mér þat þykir, er (that) þú þinn harm tínr, Am. 53; er þér gengsk illa, that it goes ill with thee, 53, 89; hins viltú geta, er (that) vit Hrungrin deildum, Hbl. 15. 2. denoting cause; er dóttir mín er hörd í skapi, for that my daughter is hard of heart, Nj. 17. 3. þegar er, although, Skálda 164. 3. þegar er, as soon as, when, Fms. iv. 95, cp. þegar's above; alls er þú ert, for that thou art, i. 305; síðan er, since, after that, Grág. i. 135; en síðan er Freyr hafði heygðr verið, Hkr. (pref.); but without 'er', N. G. L. i. 344; the earliest and best MSS. distinction is made between eptir er (postquam) þegar er (quum), meðan er (dum), síðan er (postquam), and on the hand eptir (post), þegar (jam), meðan (interdum), síðan (post, de cp. meðan's, síðan's, þegar's, above; but in most old MSS. and the particule is left out, often, no doubt, merely from inaccuracy MSS., or even in the editions, (in MSS. 'er' is almost always spelt easily overlooked); again, in mod. usage the particule 'at, að', is used as equivalent to 'er', meðan að, whilst; síðan að, since that; þegar postquam, (vide 'at' V, p. 29.)

ER, 3rd pers. pres. is, vide vera. ER, pl. and it, dual, spelt ier, Ó. H. 147 (twice), 205, 216 (1 227; [Goth. jus = v̅usis; A. S. ge; Engl. ye, you; Germ. ibr; Dan. J];—ye, you. That ér and not þér is the old form is clear from alliteration of old poems and the spelling of old MSS.: allit., ér; allir eða vinna, Skv. i. 37; it (σφω) munut alla eða vinna, 31; ér jarlar eiki-köstinn, Gh. 20; lífit einir ér þátta ættar minnar, H. æðra óðal en ér hafit, Rm. 45 (MS. wrongly þér); ér sjáid undir yðvars Græðara blæða, Lb. 44 (a poem of the beginning of the 13th century). It is often spelt so in Kb. of Sæm.; hvers biðit ér, Hkv þó þykkisk ér, Skv. 3. 36; börðusk ér bræðr ungir, Am. 93; er glíkir, Gh. 3; ef it, id.; en ér heyrst hafit, Hým. 38; þá er (uð) ye, Ls. 51; er it heim komit, Skv. i. 42; ér knáttuð, Edda 10 (verse); in very old MSS. (12th century) no other form was ever used er, 623. 24; þat er (that which ye) heyrst, 656 A. 2. 15; ér bra minnisk ér, ye brelbren, remember ye, 7; treystisk ér, 623. 32; í eigi ér, 48. In MSS. of the middle of the 13th century the old fo occurs, e. g. Ó. H., ér hafit, 52; ér skolu, 216; þegar ér ko soon as ye come, 67; sem ér mynit, 119; ér hafit, 141; til hver erot, that ye are, 151; ef ér vilit heldr, 166; ér erot allir, ye are; er er er kunnut, 196; sem ier vilit, 205; sem ér vituð, as ye know ef ér vilit, 208; þeim ér er senduð, those that ye sent, 211; the Hei (MS. of the same time)—unz ér, (Ísl. ii.) 333; ef ér þurfut, 345; farit, 346 (twice); allz ér erut, id.; er ér komið, as ye come, id. sex, but ye six, 347; ok ér, and ye, 361; ér hafit þrasamliga, 36 it fedgar, 364; Jómsvík. S.—ef ér, (Fms. xi.) 115, 123; Mork. 9., 98, 103, 106, passim. It even occurs now and then in Njála (Arna 468)—ér erut, ye are, 223; hverrar líðveizlu ér þykkisk mest þurt ér ertuð hann, Skálda 171; Farið-a ér, fare ye not, Hkr. i. (in a It is still more freq. after a dental ð, t, þ; in old MSS. that give ð it runs thus—vituð ér, hafit ér, skoluþ ér, meguþ ér, lífiþ ér, ye, have ye, shall ye, may ye, live ye, etc.; hence originates by diæresis the regular Icel. form þér, common both to old and mod. Icel. vide þú, where the other forms will be explained.

ERÐI, n. [akin to arð], a heavy balk of timber, Grett. 125 the phrase, þungt sem erði, heavy as a balk. erenda, d, to perform an errand, Vigl. 29. erendi, etc., v. eyrendi.

erfa, ð, with acc. to honour with a funeral feast, cp. the Irish 'wake' him, Eg. 606; síðan lét Egill e. sonu sína epti síðvenju, 644, Fms. i. 161, xi. 67. 2. to inherit, N. T. a writers. 3. metaph. in the phrase, e. e-t við e-n, to bear long to grumble.

ERFD, f. [Germ. erbe], inheritance; for the etymology vide a law distinguishes between frænd-erfd, family inheritance, and alien inheritance, N. G. L. ii. 146; within the frænd-erfd the law thirteen degrees of kin, Gpl. 232-242, N. G. L. i. 49, Jb. 128 sqq. i. 170 sqq.: special kinds of 'út-erfd' are, brand-erfd (q. v.), g skip-erfd, gjaf-erfd, land-erfd, féлага-erfd, líta-erfd, leysings-erfd, i. 206; again, in mod. usage erfd implies the notion of a family, erfd, út-arfar are used of distant kinsfolk, inheritance in a differ or the like; vide Grág., Nj., and the Sagas freq. 3. inberiting sian, Gpl. 48-55. conjps. erfða-bálkr, m. the section of inheritance, Ann. 1273. erfða-einkunn, f. an hereditary (on cattle), Grág. ii. 304. erfða-fé, n. an heirloom, inheritance i. 206. erfða-goðorrð, n. hereditary priesthood, Sturl. i. 198. land, n. patrimony, land of inheritance, Stj. 50, 66, Orkn. 126, 224, vi. 20. erfða-maðr, m. an heir, Js. 38. erfða-ma-erfða-einkunn, Grág. i. 422, 423. erfða-mál, n. a law suit inheritance, Nj. 6, 92. erfða-partr, m. share of inheritance, erfða-skipan, f. a law, ordinance of inheritance, N. G. L. i. 49. staðr, m. hereditary estates, used in a special sense of church c held by lay impropiators, vide Arna S., Bs. i. 794. erfða-ti section of law respecting inheritance, Gpl. 55. erfða-úmagi a, m. erfða-úmagi, n. [Dan. arveføl], a funeral feast, N. G. L. i. 432. erfi, n. a wake, funeral feast, Nj. 167, Fms. i. 161, xi. 68, Ld. 275, Rb. 344, N. G. L. i. 391, Am. 83, Gh. 8. For the sumptuous feasts of antiquity, vide esp. Landn. 3. 10, where the guests w than fourteen hundred, Ld. ch. 26, 27; var nú drukkit allir brullaup Ólafs ok erfi Unnar, ch. 7, Flóam. S. ch. 2, Jómsv. S. ch. 21

COMPDS: erfis-drykkja, u, f. a funeral feast, Pass. 49. 16. erfis-görð, f. = erfi, Fms. xi. 69.

erfiða or erviða, að, [Goth. arbaiðjan = komān; early Germ. erbeiten; mod. Germ. arbeiten; mod. Dan. arbeide is borrowed from Germ.] :—to toil, labour, Edda 149 (pref.), 677. 11; allir þér sem erviðið og þunga eruð laðin, Matth. xi. 28; metaph., e. e-m, to cause one toil and trouble, s. i. 726; trans., e. jörðina, to till the earth, Stj. 30; impers., sóttar-far ans erfiðaði, his illness grew worse, Fms. x. 147. In the Icel. N. T. it sometimes used in the same passages which have arbaiðjan in Ulf., e. g. eldr hefi eg miklu meir erfiðað en allir þeir aðrir, I Cor. xv. 10; öllum eim sem styrkja til og erfiða, xvi. 16; að eg hafi til einskis erfiðað hjá þér, Gal. iv. 11; heldr erfiði og afli með höndum, Ephes. iv. 28; hvar vrir eg erfiða og stríði, Col. i. 29; þá sem erfiða meðal yðar, I Thess. v. 2; því at til þess hins sama erfiðum vér einnig, I Tim. iv. 10; in 2 Tim. 6, the Icel. text has 'sá sem akrinn erjar.'

erfið-örægr, adj. difficult, Sturl. iii. 271.

erfiði or erviði (erfiðaði, N. G. L. i. 391; ærfuð, id. l. 10), n. [Ulf. arbaiðs = κώμας; A. S. earfoð; O. H. G. arapeit; mod. Germ. arbeit, which shews that mod. Dan. arbeide and Swed. arbete are borrowed from the Germ.; lost in Engl. The etymology of this word is uncertain; the Icel. notion is to derive it from er-priv. and viða = vinna, to work, but it scarcely right; Grimm, s. v. arbeit, suggests it to be akin to Lat. labor; Max Müller refers it to the root AR, to plough, Science of Language, p. 258, 2d Ed.; but arfiði (Björn, p. 41) instead of erfiði is a fictitious form, and the statement that in old Norse or Icel. it means ploughing rests only on a fancy of old Björn (Dict. l. c.), to which he was probably led by the similarity between Lat. arvum to Germ. and mod. Dan. arbeit, arbeide: in fact the Icel., ancient or modern, conveys no such notion; even in the Icel. heathen poems the word is used exactly in the present sense, which again is the same as in Ulf.]:—toil, labour, and metaph. toil, trouble; the allit. phrase, e. er eigi eyrendi, toil but no errand, i. e. lost labour, sv. 10, 11, Hkv. Hjörv. 5; vil ok e., toil and trouble (of travelling), bl. 58, Skálda 163; kváðusk hafa haft mikitt e. ok öngu á leið komið, s. v. 21, Post. 645, 58, Sks. 235, v. l., N. G. L. l. c. 2. metaph. stress, suffering; drygja e., to 'dree' distress, Gm. 35 (heathen poem), in N. G. L. i. 391 this phrase is used of a priest officiating; hungur, testi, e., Hom. 160: in pl., meðr mörgum erfiðum er á hana leggjask, i. 51: an old poet (Arnor) calls the heaven the erfiði of the dwarfs, the dverg. In the Icel. N. T. erfiði is often used in the very same passages as in Ulf., thus—yðvart e. er eigi önytt í Drottini, I Cor. xv. 58; erfiði, í vökum, í föstu, 2 Cor. vi. 5; og hrósum oss eigi fram yfir elingu í annarlegu erfiði, x. 15; og vort e. yrði til önyttis, I Thess. iii. cp. Ulf. l. c.

β. medic. asthma, difficulty in breathing; brjóst-erfiði, trouble breathing. COMPDS: erfiðis-ðauði, a, m. a painful, hard death, sv. xxxiii. 17. erfiðis-laun, n. pl. a recompense for labour or suffering, Nidrst. 5, Fms. vi. 149, Barl. 95. erfiðis-léttir, m. a reliever of labour, Stj. 19. erfiðis-munir, m. pl. toils, exertion, Bárð. 180, Fas. 402, Fb. i. 280. erfiðis-nauð, f. servitude, grinding labour, Stj. 7, 265. erfiðis-samr, adj. toilsome, Stj. 32. erfiðis-semi, f. l. erfiðis-verk, n. hard work, Stj. 263, 264.

erfið-leiki, m. bardship, difficult.

erfið-liga, adv. with pain and toil; er hann sótti e. til hans, he strove to get up to him, Edda 60; e-t horfir e., looks hard, Nj. 139; a e. við e-n, to treat one harshly, Fas. ii. 96; at skipi þessu farisk e., at his ship will fare ill, make a bad voyage, vi. 376; varð mér þar viðligast um, there I met with the greatest difficulties, Nj. 163. erfið-ligr, adj. toilsome, difficult, adverse; margir hlutir e. ok þungir, adverse and heavy, Fms. viii. 31, Sks. 235.

erfið-lifi, n. a life of toil, 655 viii. 2.

erfiðr, adj. toilsome, hard, difficult; ok var af því honum erfiðt búit, heavy, troublesome household, Bs. i. 63; erfiða ferð hafa þeir fengit e., they have made a hard journey for us, Fms. v. 22; Guðrún var þá á gripa-kaupum, G. was travelling (extravagant) in buying finery, 134; e-m verðr e-t erfiðt, one has a difficulty about the thing, Fms. 54.

β. bard, unyielding; var Flosi erfiðr, en aðrir þó erfiðri klín, F. was hard, but others much harder, Nj. 186, 187; jarl var lengi erfiðr, the earl long remained inexorable, 271; ek var yðr þá erfiðr, 9.

γ. bard breathing; ok er hann vaknaði var honum erfiðt orðit, en he awoke he drew a deep breath, after a bad dream, Isl. ii. 194; erfiðisk Helgi, því at honum var orðit erfiðt, H. rested, because he was exhausted (from walking), Dropl. 22; þó honum væri málið erfiðt, though spoke with difficulty (of a sick person), Bs. i. 110. δ. var þess orðar (the more difficult) sem..., Fas. i. 81: so in the phrase, e-m tír erfiðt, one has hard work, Bs. i. 555, Nj. 117; erfiðt mun þeim ta at ganga í móti giptu þinni, 171.

erfið-drápa, u, f. a funeral poem, Fbr. 16, Fms. vi. 198, v. 64.

erfið-samligr, adj. (-liga, adv.), toilsome, hard, 677. 10.

erfið-vinnr, adj. hard to work, Grett. 114 A.

erfið-flokkur, m. a short funeral poem, Fms. vi. 117.

erfið-kvæði, n. a funeral poem, = erfiðrápa, Eg. 605.

erfið-áingi, ja, m., (arfingi, Fms. ix. 328, Gpl. 287), pl. erfingjar, [arb-ingjas (pl.), Runic stone in Tune; Ulf. renders κληρονόμος by arbjá or arbinunja; Dan. arving; Swed. arvinge]:—an heir, Grág. i. 217, Eg. 25, Nj. 3, 656 C. 36, Fms. l. c., etc. etc. erfingja-lauss, adj. without heirs, Fms. v. 298, x. 307.

erfi-veizla, u, f. a funeral banquet, Bs. i. 837.

erfi-vörðr, m. [A. S. erfeveord], an heir, poet., Gh. 14, Akv. 12, cp. the emendation of Bugge to Skv. 3. 60.

erfi-öl, n. [Dan. arveøl], a wake, funeral feast, N. G. L. i. 14.

ERGA, n., Gael. word, answering to the Scot. shiel or shieling; upp um dalinn þar sem var erg nokkut, þat köllu vér setr = der som vaar noget erg, det kalde vi sætter (in the Danish transl.), Orkn. 448 (Addit.), cp. local names in Caithness, e. g. Ásgrims-erg, Orkn. 458.

ERGI, f. [argr], lewdness, lust; ergi, æði ok óþola, Skm. 36, Fas. iii. 390; e. keisara dóttur, Bær. 15, El. 10; gilsku ok e. ok hórðom, Barl. 138; wickedness, með e. ok skelmiskap, Gll. 31, Yngl. S. ch. 7: in mod. usage ergja, f., means greediness for money or the like; the rare sense of moodiness is quite mod., and borrowed from Germ. through Dan.

ergjask, ð, dep. to become a coward, only in the proverb, svá ergisk hverr sem eldisk, Hrafn. 25, Fms. iii. 192, iv. 346.

erill, m. [erja], a fuss, bustle.

ERJA, arði, pres. er, sup. arit; mod. pres. erjar, erjaði, 2 Tim. ii. 6; [A. S. erjan; Old Engl. to ear; cp. Lat. arar, Gr. ἀροῦν]:—to plough; þrælarnir skyldi erja, Landn. 35, v. l., cp. Fms. i. 240; eitt nes þat fyrirbaud hann at e., löngum tíma eptir örðu menn hlut af nesinu, Bs. i. 293; þér hafit arit með minni kvígu, Stj. 412: in the saying, veint sá man erja, he will be slow to put his hand to the plough, will be good for nothing, Glúm. 341. β. metaph. to scratch; hann lætr e. skóum um legginn útan, O. H. L. 45; kom blóðrefillinn í enni Ketils ok arði niðr um nefit, Fas. ii. 126.

erjur, f. pl. brawl, fuss, quarrels.

ERKI-, [Gr. ἀρχι; Engl. arch-, etc.] I. eccl. arch-, in compds: erki-biskup, m. an archbishop, Gpl. 263, Fms. i. 106, N. G. L. i. 166. erkibiskups-dæmi and erkibiskups-ríki, n. archbishopric, Fms. xi. 392, vii. 300, x. 88, 155; e. stóll, an archiepiscopal seat, Rb. 422. erki-biskupligr, adj. archiepiscopal, Bs. Laur. S., Th. 12. erki-djákn, m. an archdeacon, Fms. ix. 325, xi. 416, 625, 45, Stj. 299. erki-prestr, m. an archpriest, Bs. i. 173, Stj. 299. erki-stóll, m. an archiepiscopal seat, Symb. 28, Fms. iv. 155. II. = great, portentous; erki-býsn, f. portent, Bs. i. 423.

erlendask, d, to go into exile, Stj. III, but in 162 spelt ör-erlending, f. [Germ. elende], an exile, Stj. 223.

erlendis, adv. abroad, in a foreign land, Grág. i. 167, Gpl. 148, K. þ. K. 158; e. drep, committing manslaughter in a foreign land, Grág. ii. 142; e. víg, a manslaughter committed abroad, i. 183.

ERLENDER, adj., ör-lendr, Gpl. 148, [Hel. elilendi = a foreigner; Germ. elende], foreign, Grág. i. 217, Sks. 462; the spelling with er- and ör- is less correct than el- or ell-, cp. aulandi, p. 34. II. m. a pr. name, Orkn.

Erlingr, m. a pr. name; prop. a dimin. of jarl, an earl.

erm-lauss, adj. arm-less, sleeve-less, Fms. vii. 21, Sturl. iii. 219.

ERMI, f., mod. ermi, dat. and acc. ermi, pl. ermar, [armr], an arm, sleeve, Fms. v. 207, vi. 349, xi. 332, Nj. 35, Clem. 54, Landn. 147: so in the saying, lofa upp í ermina á sér, to make promises in one's sleeve, i. c. to promise without meaning to keep one's word. COMPDS: erma-örög, n. pl. sleeve-linings, Bret. erma-kápa, u, f. a cape with sleeves, Band. 5. erma-kjós, f. the armpit, 656 C. 28. erma-langr, adj. with long sleeves, Fas. ii. 343. erma-lauss, adj. sleeve-less, Fms. xi. 272, Sks. 406. erma-stuttr, adj. with short sleeves. erma-viðr, adj. with wide sleeves. erma-þröngr, adj. with tight sleeves.

Ermskr, adj. Armenian, K. þ. K. 74, lb. 13, Fas. iii. 326.

erm-stúka, u, f. a short sleeve, Karl.

ERN, adj. brisk, vigorous, Bs. i. 655, Fms. v. 300; hence Erna, u, f. a pr. name, Rm. 36, Bs. i. 32, v. l.

ern-ligr, adj. of brisk, stout appearance, Nj. 183, Eb.

erpi, n. a sort of wood, Al. 165.

erri-ligr, adj. = ernligr, Fms. iii. 222, Eb. 94 new Ed.

erring, f. a brisk, hard struggle, Fbr. (in a verse).

errinn, adj. = ern, Lex. Poët.; fjöl-e., very brisk and bold, Hallfred.

ERTA, t, to taunt, tease, with acc., Rd. 302, Hkr. iii. 130, Skálda 171, Fms. vi. 323; er eigi gott at e. illt skap, a saying, Mirn.: reflex., ertask við e-n, to tease one, Fms. ix. 506.

erting, f. teasing, provoking, Lv. 26; engi ertinga-maðr, a man who stands no nonsense, Eg. 417.

ertinn, adj. taunting; ertni, f. a taunting temper.

ERTLA, u, f., pronounced erla or atla, [arta], the wagtail, motacilla alba, now called Mariáta or lin-erla.

ERTR, f. pl. [early Germ. erbeiz; mod. Germ. erbs; Dutch erwt or ert; Dan. ært; Swed. ärter]:—peas; the Scand. word is probably borrowed from Dutch or Fris. and occurs in the 13th century; in old writers the r is kept throughout, ertr, ertrnar, Stj. 161; ertrum (dat.), 655 xxxiii. 4; ertra (gen.), Gpl. 544; ertra-akr, a pea-field, id.; ertra- reitr, a bed of peas, N. G. L. ii. 172; ertra-vellingr, Stj. 160, 161, Gen. xxv. 29: in mod. usage it is declined erta, u, f., gen. pl. ertna, ertum, etc. es, older form of er.

ESJA, u, f. a kind of clay, freq. in Norway in that sense, vide Ivar Aasen; the name of the mountain Esja in Icel. no doubt derives its name from this clay, which is here found in abundance, Eggert Itin, ch. 21; hence Esju-berg, n. name of a farm, Landn., [eisa, and even Germ. esse, Dan. esse, Swed. assa are kindred words.]

EsK-hytingr, m. one from the farm EsKibolt, Sturl. ii. 145. eski, n. [askr], an ashen box, Edda 17, 21, Fms. ii. 254, Fas. i. 237, Ísl. ii. 79; mod. spelt askja, and used of any small box.

eski-mær, f. a lady's maid, Gm. (pref.) eskingr, m. [aska], ashes or fine snow driven by a gale, Bárð. 20 new Ed.

eski-stöng, f. an aspen pole, Róm. 232.

ESPA, að, to exasperate, irritate, probably = to make one shake like an aspen, Vidal.

espi, n. aspen wood (vide ösp), hence Espí-hóll, m. a farm, Landn.; Esphælingar, m. the men from E., id.

espingr, m. [Swed. esping], a ship's boat, Fr.

ess, n. [for. word; old Swed. örs], a steed, Fms. x. 139, Fas. iii. 471, 582, much used in romances.

ETA, pronc. éta; pret. át, pl. átu; pres. et, pronc. iet, Greg. 82; part. etið; pret. subj. æti; imperat. et; [Lat. edere; Gr. ἔδω; Ulf. etan; A. S. and Hel. etan; Engl. eat; O. H. G. ezan; mod. Germ. essen; Swed. äta; Dan. æde]:—to eat, Grág. ii. 347; sem þú mátt vel e., Nj. 75; e. dagverð, Ld. 10; þar's ek hafða eitt etið, Hm. 66; e. kjöt, Greg. l. c.; at engi er hér sú inni er skjótara skal eta mat sinn en eg, Edda 31 (hence fljót-ætinn, sein-ætinn, rash or slow eating); át hvártveggj sem tíðast, id.; Logi hafði ok etið slátr allt, id.; et mat þinn, tröll, Fas. iii. 179.

